Thurs., April 8.—"They forsook all, and followed Him." "Peter followed afar off." "Then all the disciples forsook Him and fled." "Ye did run well; who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth?"—Luke v. 11; Matt. xiii. 58, 59.

Fri. 9.—"Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." "Noah began to be an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard, and he drank of the wine, and was drunken." "At the time when kings go forth to battle, David sent Joab, and his servants with him...but David tarried still at Jerusalem." "The thing that David had done displeased the Lord."—Matt. xxvi. 41; Gen. ix. 20, 21; 2 Sam. xi. 1, 27.

Sat. 10.—"Oh that I were, as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me, when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness." "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you."—Job xxix. 2, 3; Jer. iii. 14.

Sun. 11.—"I have loved thee with an everlasting love." "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; abide ye in my love." "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thy help."—Jer. xxxi. 3; John xv. 9; Hosea xiii. 9.

Mon. 12.—"Is Ephraim my dear son, is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still... I will surely have mercy upon him." "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely."—Jer. xxxi. 20; Hosea xiv. 4.

Tues. 13.—"I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, and when thou art converted [restored], strengthen thy brethren." "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation, and uphold me with Thy free Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors Thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto Thee."—Luke xxii. 32; Psa. li. 12.

Wed. 14.—"Have I been a wilderness unto Israel, a land of darkness?" "I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord, because they call thee an Out-cast." "He restoreth my soul."—Jer. ii. 31; xxx. 17; Psa. xxxiii. 3.

"MANY WATERS CANNOT QUENCH LOVE."—CANT. viii. 7.

GIRLS' MISSION-SCHOOL IN JAFFA.—We have received last year's report of this Mission, now of twelve years' standing, and one which has been productive of much blessing in that land, hallowed by the most sacred events and associations. Pressure on our space will not permit of our giving extracts, but copies of the interesting report may be had and many inquiries answered, by applying to the secretary of the Mission, Miss L. W. Stone, Brith House, Torquay. We would direct our readers' attention to an advertisement in another column respecting the Mission.

Ask that on the return of the latter to Brussels in May, the pastors of Belgium may receive a large blessing.

—For a gentleman, whose mind and body are weakened by softening of the brain, that his faith fail not.—For a young believer about to undertake a Sunday-school class.—For three ladies going out next month as missionaries to Zanzibar, that their work may be blessed and their lives preserved in this tropical and unhealthy climate. CONVERSIONS.—For a father of a large, very young family, who has brought much trouble on them by evil and intemperate habits.—For my two brothers and sisters.—For three uncles and a cousin.—For four men, one has a praying wife, another praying parents, and the other two a Christian daughter and niece; all are looking out for the blessing, but very disheartened.—For my father and brother.—For my father, that he may speedily be brought to the feet of Jesus.—That a young man, a professing Christian, whose struggles against a besetting sin have hitherto proved unavailing, may be thoroughly converted. He is almost ready to despair.—For one in consumption, not likely to recover, that she may have an assurance of her salvation through Jesus.—For my brother, about to sail for India.

The Christian.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND HEAVEN.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

DAN. II. 44.

THE history of man is the history of a Kingdom lost and regained, but in its recovery raised to a higher plane, and established upon a foundation as stable as before it was insecure. When God made man in his own image, He made a king, bidding him "increase and multiply and replenish the earth, and have dominion over the beast of the earth, and the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea." But at the first temptation Adam believed and obeyed the serpent, and thus delivered unto Satan (Luke iv. 6) the dominion which he had received from God, and Satan became the prince of this world (John xii. 31; xiv. 30; Eph. ii. 2). Satan's nature was imparted to the now fallen creature, and from Cain downward men have been born children of the wicked one, who was a murderer from the beginning, who is a liar, and the father of it.

God, in the second millennium after the creation, destroyed the world by the flood, because the earth was filled with violence; all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth; the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. Then God restored to man the dominion he had lost; and in much the same words as He had used to Adam, He conferred the kingdom upon Noah and his sons, saying, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth. And the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered" (Gen. ix. 1, 2). But scarcely had Noah left the ark, than he fell more shamefully even than Adam had done. Thus the dominion was again lost, and the new earth began to be replenished, not by a kingly but by a vanquished family. Disobedience and slavery go together; obeying God, man rules; committing sin, he becomes the servant of sin. The end of Noah's dispensation was the tower of Babel; instead of spreading abroad and replenishing the earth, men thought to build a tower unto heaven, to make themselves a name.

Out of the scattered nations God called Abram, to be the beginning of a great nation, and the progenitor of kings: "I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee." They who are to rule must first learn to serve and to suffer, and therefore four hundred years of bondage are given, to prepare the seed of Abraham to be a Kingdom of priests, and a holy nation (Exod. xix. 6). But man, even though he come out of the loins of Abraham, God's friend, is a born slave of sin, and cannot retain the royal dignity. Israel proves a stiffnecked race, and after centuries of provocation, the chosen people, the royal generation, are carried captive to Babylon, and the Times of the Gentiles are begun.

Absolute power is committed to Nebuchadnezzar, by God to whom power belongeth; but the axe boasts itself against Him that heweth therewith; the saw magnifies itself against Him that useth it; the rod shakes itself against Him that lifts it up; the staff lifts up itself as if it were something more than wood (Isa. x. 15). Nebuchadnezzar set up an image of himself, whereto all people, and nations, and languages, at his command fell down in worship; and, forgetting the warning he had received from heaven, walking in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon, he spake, and said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" Among the beasts, for seven years, he reaped the penalty of his pride, until he had learned that the heavens do rule. But the lesson is lost on his successors. They rule not in the fear of God. Gentile monarchy, though it have a head of gold, has feet of iron mixed with clay; and all these, the gold, the silver, the brass, the iron, and the miry clay, being of the earth earthy, shall be broken to pieces together, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors.

Such, at the end of four thousand years, was the history of man, and of the dominion with which God had entrusted him. Now a Little Stone is cut out of the mountain of humanity without hand; Jesus, the Seed of the woman, yet not of human paternity, but by the operation of the Holy Ghost, is born a King in Bethlehem. At first a Little Stone, He must increase, until his Kingdom fills the whole earth. From the time of his birth there are two kingdoms in the world—the kingdom of man, which has passed over from Israel to the Gentiles, and is now in its fourth stage, the Roman Empire; and the Kingdom of the heavens, the Kingdom of God, which is revealed yet hidden in Jesus, the Son of Man, the Son of God. The Heavenly Kingdom does not at once destroy the worldly kingdom, but grows up within it, yet not of it, destined at length to consume and destroy it unto the end.

In the days of Christ, the people of Israel were looking for and expecting deliverance from the Roman yoke, through the establishment of the promised Kingdom of God. Thus Simeon waited for the consolation of Israel; Anna and many more were looking for redemption in Jerusalem; Herod hoped to have destroyed the Child that was born King of the Jews; Nathanael, an Israelite indeed, at once recognized and acknowledged Him to be the Son of God, the King of Israel; the Pharisees demanded of Him when the Kingdom of God should come; the sons of Zebedee asked to sit, one on his right hand, the other on his left, in his Kingdom; the Transfiguration was a vision of the Kingdom of God in power; Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, waited for the Kingdom of God; and Nicodemus, who came to Jesus by night, was evidently occupied with the same expectation; John the Baptist, stumbled by the little progress Jesus was making toward an earthly throne, sent to ask, "Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?" As He drew nigh to Jerusalem for the last time, the people thought that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear; and when He came to the city, they set Him on the ass's colt, and spread their garments in the way, and cried, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord!" Pilate delivered Him to the people's will, because they would not have Him for their King; the crowd around the cross said, "If He be the King of Israel, let Him come down;" the thief prayed, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest in thy Kingdom;" and the last question which his disciples asked Him before He ascended was, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?"

The idea of a Kingdom runs through the whole Scriptures. The first proclamation of the Gospel by John the Baptist and by Christ is, "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." And the last record in the Acts of the Apostles is the fact that Paul dwelt two whole years in Rome (the seat of the world-kingdom), in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

The idea of the Kingdom, whether latent or expressed, is a fundamental element in all the Epistles, and in the Revelation it shines forth like the sun in the firmament.

It has already been remarked that the Kingdom has not only been recovered to man, but raised to a higher plane, and established upon a more secure foundation. It has been raised to resurrection ground, and those who are counted worthy of it are those who have been born again, those who have been content to lose their life in this world, that they may find it unto life eternal. The principles of this Kingdom are not only contrary to but subversive of those on which the kingdoms of this world are founded. Such terms as, "The Gospel of the grace of God," "The Gospel of God," "The Gospel of Christ," etc., are some of its various and manifold aspects. But these and other parts of this great subject must be considered in future papers, if God permit.

"KEEP ME WHITE."

A HYMN FOR THOSE WHO ARE CONSECRATED TO THE LORD.

Blessed Jesus, Thou art mine,
All I have is wholly Thine;
Thou dost dwell within my heart,
Thou dost reign in every part:
Blessed Jesus, keep me white,
Keep me walking in the light.

I am safe within the fold,
All my cares on Thee are rolled,
I enjoy the sweetest rest,
For I'm leaning on Thy breast:
Blessed Jesus, keep me white,
Keep me walking in the light.

'Tis the happiest place to be,
In the heavenlies with Thee;
I have found the highest seat,
For I'm sitting at Thy feet:
Blessed Jesus, keep me white,
Keep me walking in the light.

Humbly at Thy feet I bow,
Put Thy yoke upon me now;
Keep me trusting on Thine arm,
Free from sin, and safe from harm:
Blessed Jesus, keep me white,
Keep me walking in the light.

Precious Jesus, day by day,
Keep me in the holy way;
Keep my mind in perfect peace;
Every day my faith increase:
Blessed Jesus, keep me white,
Keep me walking in the light.

PROSPECTS IN SPAIN.

My dear Brother,—I have long been desiring to write to you again, as we greatly need and value the prayers and interest of the Lord's people in everything that concerns the gospel in Spain.

We are frequently asked what result has the recent change had upon the missions. Speaking for ourselves and the work in our hands, we thankfully answer that we practically know no difference; schools, meetings, mothers' meetings, house-to-house visits, tract circulation and distribution, all go on as before, some branches with more outward success than ever. The news from Barcelona is to the same effect. The first Sunday or so after the revolution some of the chapels were unusually full, probably because many, thinking they would of course be closed, desired to hear for themselves before it should be too late; but from that time everything has gone on regularly. For this we give thanks to God.

Of the future who shall say what may be? Nothing continues long the same in this country. We may have more liberty, or the intolerance of the Church may prevail on the Government to lessen what we have, or take it away. We do well to pray much about it, while it is a cause of gratitude we are able still to do so much.

I referred to our immediate work; I think a few particulars may be interesting, then I must close. Two years ago Mr. Faithfull, now in England to recruit his broken health, began a mission in Chamberi, the northern district of Madrid, for the most part a very poor, low neighbourhood. The Lord gave blessing, so that it was thought well to take better and more central premises; last August a very suitable place was taken in a most public position where several roads meet. The large boards with gospel texts are read by hundreds who may never enter. The new premises enabled us to concentrate the work, there being space for three schools, chapel and class room, etc. It was perhaps too much to expect that, taking such a stand, the enemy should let us alone. For a long time the roughs annoyed us in every possible way, but many of them heard words whereby they may yet be saved, and now for a long while our meetings have been quiet, though much smaller than at first. Those whom the Lord had blessed came into church fellowship, and still continue. One brother does much in the distribution of tracts; he selects the most fashionable promenade and distributes amongst those who have just arrived in their carriages; he meets with particular favour. His wife and daughter, also in fellowship, take two tract districts, going once a week to change the books; this morning I find they are thinking of beginning a third. Others help in the Sunday-school. One is now a Bible-woman and is doing well—received in almost every house she calls at.

The schools, the expenses of which Mr. Müller and Mr. Wright of Bristol kindly meet, comprise boys, girls, and infants, with their teachers, in three separate rooms with distinct entrances. The Lord has blessed us with very suitable teachers, and the number of children is ever increasing; there are now, in all, nearly 150. Our Sunday-school would cheer you I know; last Lord's-day ninety-two children and ten teachers. Let me ask prayer for the young, that the Holy Ghost may work among these precious souls.

The mothers'-meeting established by Mr. and Mrs. Faithfull, now counts sixty on the book, and enables many a poor woman to provide garments for herself and children. As in England they pay by instalments, but here we also make a reduction on the cost price of the materials. Several ladies take part, and the afternoon is pleasant as well as profitable. Some of the women come to the preachings also.

We have recently begun with a school in the district we live in. Mr. Müller willingly took the expense of this also. It is a beginning. Already there are a few girls. Much has been done in a private way in this Barrio by many beloved servants of Christ; we trust the more public work will have the Lord's blessing. If in any work one feels the force of the apostle's words, "Our sufficiency is of God," it is in this; for He only can save. A harder soil never, perhaps, existed. We are nothing, and less than nothing, yet can become mighty through God. Prayer in the ever-blessed name of Jesus does bring blessing on every work of faith and labour of love; continue, then, to pray for Spain, that Jesus may be glorified. ALBERT R. FENN.

THE MORALS OF TRADE.

Several correspondents write, thanking us heartily for having opened our columns to the discussion of this important subject. Their communications contain many details, which make it still more obvious that the matter is one which demands prayerful and candid consideration.

It must not, however, be forgotten that purchasers as well as vendors are equally responsible for the bona fides of a transaction, and that, were there less grinding on the one side, there would be more liberality on the other. We hear a good deal in business about "bargains," but are they not often one-sided and delusive arrangements, much more advantageous to the seller than the buyer? Why not be content to sell at a fair profit, and buy at a fair price?

We give a few brief extracts from the letters received, which will sufficiently indicate the feeling which exists in the minds of many Christian people. But while we give these details as illustrations, we must not hope in a Conference, either in print or otherwise, to deal with aught but principles.

(a) "I trust that God will graciously incline Mr. Moody and other evangelists to give a practical tendency to their prayers and addresses in this great season of revival. The lives of the converts will be dragged into the mire, and we made laughing-stocks, if these men and women do not show a high moral standard in every-day life. I have often said that my daily shopping was my daily punishment, owing to the falsehoods that one encounters. It is distressing to witness the terror which prevails in some houses of business among the young men and young women, who feel that they are being watched continually by a superintendent, who is walking up and down, and listening to all they say. It is as much as their place is worth to speak the truth, and say distinctly to a customer, 'No; we have not the article you require.' Again and again have I seen a blush come on the cheek as the lie has been told. A young man, on his death-bed, said to a clergyman who visited him, 'I have this weighing on my conscience, that I have so often said that fish was fresh when it was not. They come and say, "Is that fish fresh?" by which I know they mean, "Is it to-day's fish?" I often said, "Yes," when it was yesterday's; for I knew my master would dismiss me at once if I told the truth.' I trust that Mr. Moody may be led to take up this great and pressing question, and tell the people plainly that God hates whatever 'maketh a lie,' and that no liar can enter the golden city."

(b) "Tradesmen often say that 'honesty is the best policy,' but all do not practise it. Hence that wonderful and saddening elasticity of conscience, that much-to-be-regretted laxity of principles, which exist in the commercial world. Better results may be looked for when they shall have been made to understand that 'Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come' (1 Tim. iv. 8), and that all needful things shall be added unto those who first seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness (Matt. vi. 33)."

The "false-bill" system and commissions to buyers are certainly immoral transactions. From various instances of the latter we give one as an illustration.

(c) "A civil engineer, a chapel deacon, about to specify some goods which I sell, sends his private address card, on which is written, 'I suppose usual commission.'"

Another writes:—

(d) "I know of many instances where, by at once repudiating trade customs, men have ultimately been successful in business."

The writer of this last remark uses his experience as an argument for letting matters remain as they are; we should see in it an evidence of the need for conference; for there are many Christians who are afraid to take a determined stand. If a Conference should lead to a clearer perception that the righteous God loveth righteousness, and to a consequent determination at once to repudiate all that conscience does not and cannot sanction, the object of the writer of the first article upon this subject would soon be accomplished.

(e) "All that we have to do as Christians is to practise the morality of the Bible in our business."

This writer also deprecates conference on this subject.

But do all Christians practise the morality of the Bible in business, and in many other departments? If not, should not some united effort be made to bring about a change so important as this?

Christian brethren, let us examine ourselves, testing each action by the Bible precepts; and may God the Holy Spirit so enlighten our understandings, that we shall know how to deal with this subject! Do we, as Christians, exercise self-denial in our business? (Mark viii. 34). Do we fearlessly, and at all costs, throw open the office-window "toward Jerusalem," and spend the mid-day hour at the throne of grace, as Daniel, one of the busiest men of God this world has seen, did? (Dan. vi. 10). Are we willing to distribute our possessions? (Luke iii. 11; xii. 33; xviii. 22). When by misfortune a poor debtor "has nothing to pay," do we frankly forgive him (Luke vii. 41—43), or hand him over to the solicitor. Are all our communications "Yea, yea; nay, nay? For whatsoever is worse than these cometh of evil" (Matt. v. 37; James v. 12). Do we pay earnest heed to the words of Jesus, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them?" (Matt. vii. 12). Is all our conversation "without covetousness," and are we content with such things as we have? (Heb. xiii. 5). Or do we use "flattering words as a cloak of covetousness"? (1 Thess. ii. 5). Has "the love of money" (1 Tim. vi. 10) any place in our dealings? Let us answer these questions, brethren, in the sight of God, and we shall see the Morals of Trade rise towards the level of their standard, and in all things our light shall so shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, shall glorify our Father which is in heaven.

AWAKENING AT CHARLEMONT.

Dear Sir,—Your readers will rejoice to hear of a spiritual awakening which has taken place in this parish. During the winter, special services were held in one of my school-houses, about three miles from the village. About three weeks ago, after much prayer, I commenced these afresh, and as we had been very earnestly seeking a revival of religion in our midst, I gave to those assembled an account of the work of God which I had seen and heard of in other places. After an earnest exhortation from 1 Tim. i. 15, the Lord was graciously pleased to own his word, and a precious revival began, which has been spreading among us ever since. That evening six precious souls were enabled to behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. The numbers attending our meetings have been increasing each evening. From fifty to sixty have in the space of a fortnight been translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son; while the Lord's dear children have been much refreshed and strengthened. Truly God has been very gracious to us. Oh may his mercy lead us to put fuller trust in Him for future blessings!

FREE CIRCULATION OF "THE CHRISTIAN."—A Christian friend sends us an order to forward two dozen copies or so of THE CHRISTIAN, for gratuitous circulation in a town in Scotland in which he is interested, for the next two months. The insertion of this fact may incite other of our wealthier readers to follow his example. We continually receive gratifying testimony from many parts of the world as to the stimulus given to Christian life and effort by our weekly reports of the Lord's working in our midst.

REVIVAL IN RUSSIA.

Probably few of your readers will have thought of a revival in the Greek Church, but still fewer will have expected it almost exclusively in the highest classes of society, amongst the noble "after the flesh." It is therefore so much the more rejoicing to state that, just where the work of God was least known, it has been manifested in the brightest manner, thus proving practically the word of the Lord, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth."

About a year ago, Lord Radstock paid a visit to St. Petersburg, and preached the gospel to those conversant with the English language. The journals, armed with the power of the press, strenuously but vainly sought to turn aside the edge of the truth by declaiming loudly against it, condemning especially the fact that many of the Russian aristocracy went to listen to this foreign nobleman. Nevertheless, the enemy did not succeed in frustrating the efforts made by the Lord's servant; for many received the word in a good soil, and proved soon by their practical conduct and conversation that they had really passed from death unto life. Some who formerly moved in the most fashionable circles of society, seeking their pleasure in the world, have completely broken with it, and submitted to the government of Him "who has called them out of darkness into his marvellous light." Through preaching and writing, they seek to spread, in town and country, the glad tidings of God's remedy for sin. Some, through grace, are led to tell the Old Old Story to the working-classes, and others, especially ladies, call from time to time at the prisons, to preach the gospel to the poor criminals. In short, there seems to be a general desire on the part of all to find occupation in the Lord's service.

A Christian publication, The Russian Workman, the first of its kind which has ever appeared in Russia, has just been issued. It is an illustrated journal, for which Mr. Smithies, of Paternoster-row, London, has gratuitously furnished the plates, and its chief purpose is to convey the gospel message in simple language.

Although all who have been recently converted belong to the Greek Church, from which, according to the laws of the State, they cannot separate, yet, in practical walk and doctrine, they eclipse the testimony of many Christians brought up in more favourable circumstances. Several meetings and conversations, in which I had the joy of taking part, gave ample evidence of this, and unmistakable proofs of a desire to seek closer acquaintance with the revealed mind of God. My inquiries as to Christian relationship and standing were met by the reply, "Our religion is Christ. In Him we are complete. In Him we have forgiveness of sins and eternal life. He is our peace, our righteousness, our sanctification, and redemption. It is our privilege to show forth the riches of Christ."

And now, dear reader, the evidence of God's truth being wide-spread, as far as the east is from the west, and the testimony of his grace clear and unmistakable, whether in Russia or in England, let me ask you solemnly, Can you fall in as a witness for Christ in these days of increasing evil? But first as to the momentous question, Have you really and individually measured the immensity of God's love for you, as shown out in wondrous colours at Calvary? Have you known the value of that empty tomb, the power of a risen Christ, the joy springing from that word, "Peace be unto you"? If not, "Awake, O sleeper, and call upon thy God," for the night is far spent and the day is at hand, when in all the power and majesty becoming the risen and glorified Man, He shall come with ten thousands of his saints, taking vengeance on them that know not God. "STREAMS IN THE SOUTH."—II.

An interesting work has been going on for some time in especially among the young, many of whom are now rejoicing in Christ their Saviour. I was privileged in conducting one service only, at Bitton-street Chapel, the building where Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, first commenced his God-glorifying work and ministry in England, fruit of which remains to the present day. From thence I went to CREWKERNE.

Great expectations were entertained by the Christians of real blessing to follow the twelve services arranged for me to hold during the four days. Earnest prayer had been made to God, and already a noise had been heard, and a shaking among the dry bones. From the first the meetings were crowded, the largest building in the town being inadequate for the numbers flocking night after night. The word was with power, both to saint and sinner, some of whom came in from the surrounding villages and hamlets, and returned with their souls filled with the love of Christ, to tell their neighbours and friends what great things the Lord had done for them.

was the next town I visited, having been there four months previously, when it pleased the Lord so abundantly to pour out of his Spirit. My heart was greatly cheered in beholding "the patient continuance in well doing" of most of the young converts, some of whom were actively engaged in the Master's vineyard. I held nine services there, which were times of refreshing and feeding for the lambs, and also of encouragement for the dear workers. Several who had been awakened on the occasion of my former visit now professed decision for Christ. From thence I went, by invitation from all the Nonconformist ministers, to the town of where united noon-day meetings for prayer had been held for some time, and an earnest cry going up from many hearts for showers of blessing to fall on the valley of dry bones. Beholding thus the unity and love manifested by the various ministers and their congregations, I was very sanguine as to results. The spacious and handsome Town-hall was engaged for eight services. The morning and afternoon meetings being held in the Friends' Meeting-house, kindly and willingly lent for the purpose. The hall was comfortably filled the first evening, but as the interest deepened and widened, it became crowded, notwithstanding rain and snow storms. On the Lord's-day afternoon and evening it was reported that 2000 were in hearing, whilst several hundreds had to leave the doors. The strength and wisdom of the willing helpers were severely taxed in dealing with the many anxious and inquiring souls who night after night availed themselves of the anteroom at the back of the platform, until it became too small, when we were obliged to use the large hall for the purpose, and often it has been near eleven o'clock ere we could separate. Eternity alone will reveal the full results of that one week of evangelistic work in Bridgewater. All glory to God's worthy name!

SHERBORNE

was the next town on my list, where preparations had been made for three services a-day for four days, in the Town-hall. This building was soon too small for the hundreds who flocked to hear the old, old story, so that we were obliged to hold the last service in the new Wesleyan school-room, which accommodates about twice the number. We have reason to believe that not only was the spiritual life of God's children quickened, but some precious souls born for glory. Similar scenes were witnessed at where I laboured in the Town-hall for four days, at the close of which some at least of the many hundreds who had attentively listened to the word could say for the first time, "The Lord is my strength and song, and is become my salvation!" J. A. VICARY.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE.—We are requested to state that the Mildmay Park Conference is fixed for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, June 23, 24, and 25, with preliminary prayer-meetings, as usual, on the preceding Monday and Tuesday.

THE BASLE CONFERENCE.

BY CHEYNE BRADY.

A mighty wave of blessing is now passing over Europe. The fire is kindled on the Continent at last. At Oxford Theo. Monod was so stirred up that he gave himself to the work in France. Wherever he went with the simple earnest exhortations to a "life more abundant," the Spirit of God breathed on the assembled pastors and people imparting "life eternal" to sinners, and "life more abundant" to believers. I have met several pastors who attended these meetings, and can testify to the holy calm and fervent spiritual zeal vividly portrayed in their life and appearance.

One beloved pastor, with a face beaming with spiritual fire, described how he acted on his return to his sphere of labour. "For twenty years," said he, "the National Church pastors and I have been opposing one another, quarrelling about our respective churches; as soon as I reached home after the Montmeyran meetings I called on them, held out the right hand of fellowship, confessed my error, and besought them to kneel down with me and pray that God would enable us for the future to forget our differences and work together for his cause. They were overcome, and we knelt together and commenced to labour as far as we could in concert."

As soon as it was reported that Mr. R. Pearsall Smith had been invited to Berlin, numbers of large towns on the Continent were stirred up to claim his presence. Of the marvellous blessing at Berlin I can only speak from hearsay, but from the highest personages at the Court to the lowliest follower of the Lamb, soul cravings were satisfied.

It has been my privilege to have attended the meetings at Basle, one of the chief towns of Switzerland. Not long since it was a difficult matter in continental towns to gather an audience for a preaching on a special occasion. This present week we have witnessed in Basle every day, and at all hours of the day, numbers assembling for prayer and exhortation, and every evening in the week, St. Peter's Church and the large hall of the Union House have both been crowded to overflowing with anxious hearers.

What means this unusual throng?

There are no world-renowned orators, no stirring addresses, no extraordinary excitement. Simple announcements were made that a series of meetings would be held from the 4th to the 11th of April, every day, from 7 to 8 in the morning, then from 9 to 10.30; again in the afternoon from 2 to 3.30, and from 4.30 to 6; to conclude each night with services from 8 to 9.30.

Such a series of meetings has never been held heretofore in Basle, and to the wonder of most, they have been literally crammed with anxious listeners. The subjects announced were the revival of true religion, and the practical experience of true Christian holiness.

The principal clergy of Switzerland have taken part in these meetings. The audience were mostly German, but Mr. R. P. Smith had the benefit of excellent interpreters. Dr. Bædeker travels with him and interprets admirably, and on several occasions one of the most eminent laymen in Switzerland, a Counsellor of State, has interpreted for him with great animation.

The churches generally have experienced great restoration. Among the believers there is the calm entrance into the rest of faith, the vitalizing of doctrine long held in theory, the power of spiritual religion instead of the lifelessness of formalism. Prejudices are being removed; while many misrepresent the views propounded, and many cavil at what they conceive to be erroneous, none can deny the blessing received by thousands, the solemn fact of the Holy Spirit's manifestation stares them in the face.

All honour to honest opposition. Earnest opposers generally have misconceptions and misapprehensions, while one cannot but deplore wilful misrepresentation. A stout opponent to what he honestly considers erroneous is sure to become a firm supporter when his vision is cleared, when mists of misapprehension are dispelled. For example, I myself for years past yearned after a closer walk with God, and eagerly scanned the writings of Mr. R. P. Smith and others on, "Holiness through Faith." Here thought I, is what I am seeking. There was much I could and did receive, but also many passages I could not reconcile with the Word of God. I carefully compared these views with those of Pelagius, Oberlin, and Wesley, and came to the conclusion that they were very similar, so I prepared for the press a MS., pointing out the errors I perceived, and joining in the cry against "Perfectionism."

Through the good hand of God, however, we were led all the way from the Pyrenees to Oxford, where I resolved to hear and judge more particularly. I had my MS. with me, and at first fought shy of Mr. Smith. To my amazement I found day by day that I had quite missed his meaning and misapprehended his views, and while I still see passages in his work which I would wish to be altered, I found that he was bringing before believers the very thing my soul panted for, namely, a walk of faith, a life of trust, a daily, hourly, nay, momentary dependence on the power of the Holy Ghost, and realization of the presence of God in the soul.

"Unutterable!" is the only word that can express my feelings at the ten days' Conference at Oxford. It was the second revelation of God to my soul (the first being at my spiritual birth thirteen years before).

Could I continue to cavil at imperfect expressions? No; when I record such blessing, I found it in the Scripture, I saw it in the Lord Jesus, I read it in Romaine, Marshall, and other orthodox divines, and I only desire that it may be brought before believers in scriptural language and thought.

Invitations by letter and deputations of ministers continually besiege Mr. Smith, imploring him to visit various important centres of thought on the Continent. He cannot possibly accept all, although he travels by night, and takes five or six meetings a day. From Basle he proceeds to Zurich, thence to Stuttgart, Carlsruhe, Heidelberg, Frankfurt, Elberfeld, etc.

May the Lord go before his face!

[We have also received from Rev. G. Palmer Davies, B.A., a deeply interesting account of Mr. Pearsall Smith's meetings in Berlin, which will appear in our Double Number next week.]

GOOD WORK IN ROTHERHITHE.

For some two years past there has been a special effort made to reach the young people and children attending no place of worship in the neighbourhood of Rotherhithe. The blessing of God has rested on the labours of his servants, and in about six months some twenty or thirty youthful hearts were given to the Saviour. By degrees, however, the parents of the children and other friends began to flock to the services, the character of which was necessarily somewhat changed. During the summer, open-air services were held outside the main gate of Southwark Park, crowds gathered week after week, and souls were born to God. Many conversions are known to have taken place, and many other people are now under conviction of sin.

Circumstances render it impossible to carry on the services longer in the Congregational Chapel, as hitherto, and no other building in the vicinity can be secured; and it is greatly desired by those engaged in the work to purchase or hire a piece of market-garden ground in the neighbourhood, and erect a corrugated iron building, to use as a mission-hall, so that the present work may not fall to the ground in so densely populated a locality. Help to this end will be thankfully received and acknowledged by S. Golding, 12, Rokeby-road, New Cross; or by S. Trevor Francis, 36, Treasillian-road, Upper Lewisham-road, S.E.

THE GOSPEL IN THE OPEN-AIR.—Our esteemed brother and correspondent, Dr. Cranage, Old Hall, Wellington, Salop, writes:—"Our band of labourers in the vineyard, led by that devoted servant of God, George Heath, late of the London City Mission, who is helping us for a few weeks, has commenced open-air work in earnest. Will you allow me a little space to appeal for tracts, little books, and cards for distribution? We want at least 100,000. There was most blessed work on the Wrekin on Good Friday. Many, we trust, were found of Jesus."

LORD'S-DAY MORNINGS AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

BY DR. CULROSS, HIGHBURY.

Among the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the Agricultural Hall, were four on Sabbath mornings, which in various respects stand out from the rest. The hour of meeting was eight o'clock; the numbers present ranged from ten thousand upwards, and consisted of professedly Christian people, interested in some department of Christian work—ministers, evangelists, city missionaries, Sabbath-school teachers, tract distributors, and so forth—the whole of North London being represented. A quiet fervour was manifested throughout. As the services began, the bright sun shone in upon the assembly; on the last morning the sunshine coming after a night of gracious rain.

The aim was not to preach Christ to the unconverted, nor to open up Christian doctrine to believers, but to brighten and freshen Christian hearts, and to stimulate and guide in Christian work, for the ingathering of souls to the Saviour. It does not surprise one to learn that such meetings are the most fruitful in spiritual results, as they are among the most delightful, of all. Underlying all the addresses, and audible in all the "sacred songs," was this thought, that in order to reach the countless thousands of Christless souls around, Christ's own people must be kindled into a true enthusiasm. I do not attempt to give any report or synopsis of the addresses, or to pick out quaint and memorable sayings; but would simply note some of the ideas which inspired and ran through them, in the order in which they arranged themselves in my memory. For the most part, they are among the blessed commonplaces of the New Testament, but they came as fresh from the heart as if they had never been uttered before, and came with great power and persuasiveness.

The first thought I would name, running through these morning addresses was this, that our work must be based on God's work. We are nothing; our energy is nothing, nor our earnestness, nor anything else in ourselves; it is just as it was with Paul and Apollos, "So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." Our true power lies in letting God use us in his own way. We can set no limit to what He will accomplish through us, if we do but yield ourselves simply and unfeigningly to his will. He stands by the man who trusts Him.

If we are to work for Christ, in the conversion of others, it must be out of a joyful experience of his salvation. In this matter the joy of the Lord is our strength. This was the strength of the early Church. It is wonderful how often their joy is spoken of, directly and indirectly, in the New Testament, and how it is connected with the progress of the gospel. Those who received the word on the day of Pentecost received it gladly; they did eat their meat with gladness: when Philip gathered in a harvest of souls in Samaria there was great joy in that city; the Ethiopian eunuch, believing, went on his way rejoicing; the Philippian jailer rejoiced, and so did all his house; the Thessalonians received the word with joy in the Holy Ghost; and so it is all through the record of primitive Christianity. Why should not we be as joyous as they were? Which of all the sources of joy is dried up or in the least diminished? Christian work is not rightly done unless it is done with joy in the Holy Ghost. To be made glad by the gospel ourselves is in part the secret of commending it to others. A fuller, simpler trust in Jesus, throwing ourselves in all things unfeigningly upon Him, would carry joy in it; and this joy in turn would carry power. I am sure these morning meetings were fitted to revive Christian joy, and must have done so.

The talents which the Lord bestows upon his people for Christian service are very varied. It is not merely that there is a difference in amount, five, two, and one; there is also a difference in kind. In the human body there are many members, and all members have not the same office; it is not all ear, nor all eye, nor all hand; so (as Paul tells us in 1 Cor. xii.) it is in the Christian Church. There must be a full recognition of this variety of gift and talent if Christ's work is to be done in its entirety, and a simple-hearted contentment on the part of each of us with what the Lord has made us and fitted us for doing.

Whatever be our talent, it is to be consecrated to the Lord—with a consecration which means holiness. The brass is to be consecrated as well as the gold, the one talent as well as the five, the foot as well as the tongue or the brain. When we enter into the Lord's mind in this matter, we shall count nothing too little, nothing beneath our dignity; nor on the other side shall we count anything too great and difficult that is laid to our hand. None do so little for Christ as those who are frightened at difficulties—except it be those who are always waiting for something great to do. Life slips past, and they accomplish nothing. They would make splendid martyrs—they would burn well—but the opportunity never comes. Whereas, they who use their talents, whether five or one, in doing just what the Lord lays to their hand, are honoured to do much, and their talents grow even beyond what they could have imagined possible.

There is great need of personal effort in spreading the gospel, dealing with men not merely in masses and multitudes, but one by one. A great deal depends on this. To omit it is not simply to leave a large blank in Christian service, but is to neutralize to some extent the preaching of the word. It were a bad day for Christ's cause if no gatherings of men could be secured; it is not less bad when personal effort is neglected and omitted. No hired service, however excellent, can take its place. No missionary or Bible-woman can be our proxy. We must be missionary and Bible-woman ourselves. Everyone knows somebody to whom he has special access, divinely given, such as no one else in the whole world has; we can use freedom with him such as none but ourselves can use. False shame hinders our taking advantage of the access which God has given us; so does lukewarmness. Both these evil things must be got rid of. And they are best got rid of by undertaking the work at once. Instead of saying to yourself, The time is not yet; the time for dealing with this friend, just put on your hat and go and see him at once. And when once you have tasted the joy there is in personal effort, you will need no spur to urge you on.

For such personal effort, we require to get rid of the fear of man—the fear of what others will think and say. There are plenty of people who do very well so long as they have friends to keep them company. There are others who can be singular for singularity's sake—who have a kind of pride in it, because it brings them a certain distinction; but we want those who can be singular in the very simplicity and fearlessness of their surrender to the will of the Lord—men after the fashion of Daniel—who do whatsoever Christ bids them, and then quietly and meekly accept the consequences.

Once more, for an outer life there must be an inner life. We must find time for personal intercourse with God, as Daniel did, who, with the care of a great empire resting upon him, and "those hundred and twenty rascals to look after besides," kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before his God. A church full of activity without prayerfulness resembles those gardens which children make on the sea-sand, sticking in twigs and flowers without any root, that speedily wither. There is no endurance in any activity that is not rooted in God.

These morning addresses were broad and rich and manly in Christian thought. Without attempting to preserve Mr. Moody's order or to repeat his words, I have in these rough jottings merely taken down a series of ideas from the hooks on which I hung them in the course of the meetings. Other hearers may have gained much more. I am fully persuaded that God has greatly blessed these gatherings, and will yet bless them more.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

Many of the requests on Tuesday (6th) were of special interest, and after being read as aforetime by Mr. Hogg, they were gathered up and presented to the Lord in words of most earnest entreaty by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness. He especially prayed for God's blessing on the services in the East-end (which is the scene of his varied and successful labours), where "there is so much open and unblushing profligacy," and that many wandering ones might be brought back to the fold.

Mr. Moody spoke of the "three bad cases," recorded in Mark v.—the demoniac, the woman with the issue of blood, and the ruler's daughter—all of which were cured by the great Physician. He had power over devils, disease, and death. The burden of his discourse was—no sinner, however vile and sunk in the mire or death of sin, is beyond the reach of his healing power. The power of God to save is not to be limited; let us rather put it to the test, and God will honour our faith. Mr. Moody told of a case at the Agricultural Hall the previous night. One who was touched by the truth she had heard was asked by a worker to go to the inquiry-room, and all at once she said, "I do not need to go; I am saved." "When?" "As the last prayer was being offered in the hall," and added, "I wish my brothers and sisters were converted."

"The great Physician," with its inimitable refrain—sung alike in heaven and on earth—gave the audience an opportunity of endorsing Mr. Moody's words as to the power of Christ to save.

The meeting being thrown open, "Showman Charlie," who was converted in Glasgow during Mr. Moody's visit there, gave some of his history, and said if God could cleanse a blaspheming, drunken showman, He could cleanse anybody.

Rev. J. E. Cracknell, of South Shields, testified to the permanent nature of the work begun during the two weeks' stay of the evangelists in that town.

Mr. Moody read, at Wednesday's meeting, extracts from letters he had received, telling of the conversion of friends and others through the special services. Incidentally, he remarked that a great many Christians seemed to live in Doubting Castle. We had need to read "The Pilgrim's Progress" oftener. There were more Doubting Castles in England than any other kind. He then made some most practical remarks on the passage, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord." No matter what it is, or how heavy it is, if it is really a burden, Jesus will bear it—has borne it.

Mr. Moody now and then expresses a feeling of preference for some particular hymn, and, in connection with this subject, he had a word of praise for "I left it all with Jesus." Mr. Sankey sang that other hymn, very appropriate to the occasion, "Go, bury thy sorrow."

Mr. C. Cooke, of Hyde-park Hall, told of the young ladies in a neighbouring school, who had attended the meetings at Islington, and afterwards been conversed with in the inquiry-room, with this result, that he had, on speaking to them afterwards, been unable to find one who did not appear to be resting in Christ.

Mr. Radcliffe said he had a burden he wished the audience to help him to cast upon the Lord. Many people were attributing to the singing of Mr. Sankey and the preaching of Mr. Moody the success of the movement, apart from the Spirit of God. He was rejoiced that Mr. Moody had started the prayer-meeting at seven o'clock. He entreated the praying people of London to envelop the Agricultural Hall with prayer, whether they stayed at home, or whether they went to the meeting. God would send an answer from heaven, and would let it be seen that it was not the singing or the preaching, but the mighty power of the Spirit of God, that was doing the work. Let Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and all the other instruments, be put out of sight, and let us go to God our Father in the name of Jesus, and He would bless the labours of his servants more than ever. This was a crisis in the history of London and the world, and doors were everywhere being opened to the entrance of the word of God. Let there be confidence in God, to whom this great city was as but a little village.

Mr. Moody's address at the meeting on Thursday was very suggestive. Following the line of thought embodied in his address of the day before, he gave as his subject, "Christ as our Rock." Many, he said, were building their hopes of heaven on their feelings—a sandy foundation. That was the reason why they had so little peace and joy.

The "Rock" occurs first in Exod. xvii. 6, "Behold I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb, and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink." In this Rock the Trinity is concealed. "I will stand before thee there on the rock." Jehovah was on the Rock; the Rock was a type of Christ; out of the Rock came water, the emblem of the Holy Ghost.

The last time the Rock is spoken of is when Paul quotes this very verse (1 Cor. x. 4), "For they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ." Christ is the Alpha and the Omega.

Another thing. Right in the middle of the Bible—some one told me it was the middle verse, but I do not know that it is true—we have the Rock again. Isa. xxvi. 4, "Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength," or, as it is in the margin, "Jehovah is the Rock of Ages." Jesus at the beginning, the middle, and the end.

We may tremble, but the Rock never trembles; if we are on this Rock, we are safe for time and eternity. The last words of David, the man of God, were, "The Lord is my Rock and my Fortress, and my Deliverer."

In Judges we read that when Samson took up the jawbone of an ass, he had come down from the top of the rock; that is where he got his strength. David's three mighty men, when they broke through the lines of the Philistines, started from the rock. If we get our strength from Christ, we are strong; if we turn away from the Rock, we are weak, and have power neither with God nor man.

Psa. lxi. 2, "Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I." I thought, coming down here to-day, there is a prayer we can all unite in—that God would take us away from our feelings and our fears. God wants us to get up out of the mists and fogs of this world; then our peace and joy will flow on like a river.

Mr. Sankey suitably followed with "The Higher Rock," for the first time in our hearing. The simple, yet gladsome, tones of the music well accord with the hymn. The audience chimed in heartily in the chorus—

"In the higher Rock I'm trusting, Restful, peaceful, saved and free;
'Tis the tested Rock of Ages,
Its dear shadow shelters me."

After prayer by Mr. W. Forbes, Mr. Sankey, and Mr. Weatherley, Admiral Fishbourne spoke of the continued success of the house-to-house visitation, and urged the personal responsibility resting on every Christian at the present time.

The Rev. J. Macartney, of Ohio, quoted the dictum of Signor Gavazzi, that good works were the natural element of the Christian, just as air was that of the bird, and water that of the fish. He had just been at the anniversary meeting of the revival movement in Glasgow, where he heard a leading Scotch divine say that the happiest, blithest Christians in all Scotland were those who had been most deeply engaged in the evangelistic work. He gave an instance connected with the recent women's temperance crusade in Ohio to the same effect.

Another case of conversion resulting from the visitation, told by Mr. Paton, and the doxology, brought the well-spent hour to a close.

Friday was the last day of Mr. Moody's appearance at Exeter Hall. Mr. Sankey was absent.

The numerous requests for prayer were mingled with some notes of praise for blessing received.

Mr. Moody's closing address from the now familiar reading-desk was on "Obstacles." He said there might be some present who were returning to their homes in the country, and who still kept away from Christ on account of some fancied obstacle that stood in the way. Taking the story of Zaccheus for a text, he pointed out the obstacles with which that rich publican had to contend. He was an outcast from society; he had to leave his old companions; he was rich—that was an obstacle with many. He had to give up his business, or to carry it on on a different principle. It was almost as difficult for a publican to be saved in those days as it was now; indeed his business was hardly so bad. Again, he was a little man, and that was against him. But he was in earnest, and all these obstacles were surmounted. He received Christ joyfully; "and I never," said Mr. Moody, "heard of any one receiving Christ in any other way."

Mr. Moody then touched upon the reality of Zaccheus's conversion, as evidenced by his acts of restitution. He could imagine the publican next morning calling his clerks together, and instructing them to overhaul his books for the last five years, in order to find out whom he had wronged in his tax-collecting; then he would ask them to multiply the various sums by four, and send a cheque for the amount without delay. He hoped there would be some Zaccheus in London who would be converted soon, and begin to make restitution of the money that had been wrongfully taken away from the poor widows and the fatherless children.

The closing half hour was mainly spent in prayer.

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

As we have given below a somewhat detailed account of the closing meeting at the Agricultural Hall, our space will only permit us to allude to the earlier meetings of the week. It being the last week of the regular ministrations of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, increased anxiety has been manifested to attend the services, and many have been turned away from the doors on several occasions. Mr. Moody's addresses and Mr. Sankey's sermons in song produced their wonted effect, and many have asked, "What must I do to be saved?" On Monday evening, Mr. Moody's subject was, "No room for Christ in the inn," and he showed how the world was still the same in its rejection of the Saviour. On Tuesday evening, he spoke on "Love"; Wednesday and Thursday evenings were devoted to a striking exposition of the doctrine of "The Blood," as revealed in the Old and New Testaments.

There are times when one feels how inadequate are words to represent or reproduce events, especially when these events pertain to matters spiritual. Such is the feeling that oppresses us as we seek to write of the meeting of Friday evening in the Agricultural Hall—the closing service of the series conducted there by Messrs. Moody and Sankey during the last month.

It was a fitting termination to a solemn and eventful season of divine presence and power. Never before has the vast hall appeared so vast; never before has it been so thronged, from platform to topmost gallery, as then; never before in our experience has there seemed to prevail throughout the audience so large a spirit of expectation; never before have the prayers of the Christians present forced themselves into audible response to the appeals and invitations of the speaker; never before, we think, has the preacher been so lost in his theme, and so effective in his treatment of it; never before has the singer opened his mouth in more sweetly tender and persuasive tones; never before has the Spirit of God seemed to brood over the hushed yet eager multitude; and never before, we trust, has the recording angel been so busy writing in the book of life the names of those who laid down their hitherto rebellious hearts at the feet of Jesus, while they listened to the melting tale of His ever wondrous "compassion."

At the call of Mr. Moody, and led by Mr. Sankey, the great congregation united to—

"Sing of His mighty love, mighty to save."

Then the soul-breathings of the praying part of the congregation were expressed by the Rev. Marcus Rainsford, in language of such directness, beauty, and trustful simplicity that we are constrained to depart from reporting routine, and print his words. As they are read, may the petitions they convey rise anew to high heaven; may some be moved to pray who have never prayed till now; and may the prayer thus bring down a multiplied blessing:—

"Glorious and adorable Father, we bless and magnify thy name for what our eyes do see, and for what our ears do hear. Glory thy Son Jesus in our midst to-night! As in old times, may the place be shaken, and may we be all filled with the Holy Ghost! May thy servant have the unction from the Holy One, enabling him so to speak that the Lord Jesus and his truth may be fully proclaimed. Descend in power upon the souls of those who are to hear, and grant that every one may be brought to Jesus this night—those that know Him with increased joy, and those that know Him not with heavenly love and simple faith. Thou hast said, Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it; give us all who have faith in Thee to put Thee to the test at this time, and to prove Thee if Thou wilt not pour down upon us such a blessing that it shall overflow all our needs and all our fears. For the Lord Jesus' sake bring every soul in this building to Thyself. Let the poor, seeking ones, who have come into this building to-night, find the Lord Jesus Christ; let the poor mourners who have come here be comforted in the Lord Jesus Christ; let the poor empty ones to-night be filled with the fullness of the Lord Jesus Christ; overflow and fill us till we want no more.

"O Lord! we cannot address Thee at this time without thanking Thee. We thank Thee for bringing the people together; we thank Thee for the faithful message, and for the faithful messenger—for the gospel sung, and for the gospel preached. We do not forget that when the Lord was first proclaimed as coming down amongst us, the gospel was sung on earth, and we would repeat the song to-night, 'Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, goodwill toward men.'

"O Father, grant to every one of us to-night who is called by thy name, that with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we may all be changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord! And as we gaze, may the descending blood-drops fall on us, consecrating us, in heart, and soul, and energy, to the service of Him 'who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich.' We ask it for his glory's sake. Amen."

That oft-told tale of

"The ninety-and-nine that safely lay In the shelter of the fold;"

and the one that was

"Out on the hills away, Far off from the gates of gold,"

was told once more by Mr. Sankey, who first of all prayed, in language soft and low, that God would grant him a tender heart while he sang, and that some stray sheep might, through the singing, be brought back to "the shelter of the fold." The tenderness he craved for seemed to pervade his rich, full voice, and this eminently "gospel song" was felt to be a powerful plea for the wondrous love of Christ, and one that must have been hard to resist.

If Mr. Moody's address that followed was still more powerful, it was only because he had a longer time granted him to unfold his message. His theme was one worthy of that or of any occasion—"Christ's compassion." In developing it, he seemed almost to excel himself; and as the great and far-spreading throng of immortal beings sat silent, and intent on catching the fervid utterances of the preacher on this most solemn and yet joyful of subjects, it must have been felt by every sympathetic heart that the issues of such an hour were beyond human thought.

"If the Son of God were here in person," said the speaker, "and standing in my place, his heart would be moved with compassion as He looked into your faces, and into your hearts. He knows the real sorrow and heartfelt agony that is represented in this assembly. But there are none so bruised as to be beyond his healing power.

"If I were an artist, I would like to draw some pictures to-night." It is no flattery to say that there are few artists like Mr. Moody in drawing pictures, as far as language can draw them. He proceeded with rapid yet clear and bold touches to draw a succession of New Testament scenes, "life-size," illustrative of the Saviour's compassion. Taking the lowest corner of the canvas, he presented the hungry multitude that followed Him, and how He had compassion on their bodily want, giving them to eat. Next came the poor outcast leper, whose case was made very real to one's comprehension, and the loving words of Jesus, "I will; be thou clean." We pity such a man as the leper, but is not every sinner's condition a thousand times worse? Hear the wail of agony that goes up from this earth cursed by sin! O sin-sick soul, come to Christ! He will have compassion on you to-night.

The next picture, painted with more marvellous reality still, was the raising of the widow's son at Nain. "There is not a widow here," added Mr. Moody, "but Christ knows your sorrow and trouble. He is just the Friend you need."

Again the brush was applied to the canvas, and the story of the man who fell among thieves appeared to the mind's eye of the hearers. The priest and the Levite have many successors who, when they see the poor drunkard reeling down the street, perhaps exclaim, "Poor fellow!" and pass by on the other side. Not so the good Samaritan. How unlike we are to the Son of God! Young man, if you have come to London and fallen among bad companions, who have left you wounded and bleeding, to-night Christ will have compassion upon you. He will take you from the very dung-hill, and translate into his kingdom above, if you will only let Him.

"I would like to draw another scene, one of the most touching recorded in the Bible." It is almost needless to say this was the history of the prodigal son, and the faithful tenderness with which it was told could not be conveyed to the printed page. "How many," said Mr. Moody, "have found in London 'the far country.'" Then he described the "short and merry" (?) life of the prodigal boy in the metropolis, and how his old companions would cast him off when his money was exhausted, calling him a fool—which he was. Oh! poor backslider! you had better come home. Mr. Moody's description of the father watching and waiting for the return of the wanderer no doubt touched very deeply the heart of many a parent in the house.

"Christ weeping over Jerusalem" was the picture that followed, and then came that strange interview between the persecuting Saul and the persecuted Saviour. Instead of striking down the miserable persecutor, as we should have done, Christ was moved with compassion towards him. "If there is a persecutor here," said the speaker, with a lump in his throat, "I want to ask you, Why persecute Jesus? You never received anything from Him but kindness and love; is there any reason why your heart should be turned against Him? For the life of me, I cannot see why men and women should not love Christ." Here came a most touching and appropriate incident by way of illustration. A little girl, being told that such and such a man was an infidel, and having had the meaning of the word explained to her, met the man one day coming out of the post-office with his letters. She ran up to him, and, in her artless way, put the query, "Why don't you love Jesus?" He tried to escape from his little questioner, but twice she repeated the startling query. It haunted him at work and at home, and when he went to bed, the very pillow seemed to echo the question, "Why don't you love Jesus?" He rose to search the Bible for some contradiction which might afford reasonable grounds for answering the question, but every page spoke of the Saviour's love. He gave up the vain attempt, and, before the sun rose, the infidel was in the kingdom of God. Another illustration from the life of Abraham Lincoln moved many in the great audience to tears, and yet another of a mother's love to her dying soldier boy, and the almost magical effect of the touch of her hand on his sleeping brow surely brought home to every heart a very real sense of the compassion and saving power of Christ.

Mr. Moody, at the close of his address, prayed with great importunity, and in accents of deepest emotion, that God would visit every soul in his audience; and while the hymn, "Just as I am," was being sung, the great throng separated, many to go to the inquiry-room, others to the men's meeting in St. Mary's Hall, some to their homes, while a large number gathered round the platform, to join in prayer for God's blessing to rest on this most solemn and ever-to-be-remembered service.

SERVICE FOR CHILDREN.

The special service on the afternoon of Tuesday week for the children connected with Reformatories, Refuges, Orphan Houses, etc., in and near London, was most successful, and Mr. Charles and his assistants must have felt well rewarded for their exertions in gathering the young folks together.

The central part of the large area of the Agricultural Hall was reserved for the children who came—to the number of between 3000 and 4000—by various modes of conveyance from their respective Homes, and other institutions. As we looked down from the platform, the spectacle both saddened and cheered us. It was sad to think that many of these little ones were afflicted with some physical deformity, and sadder still to think that not a few owed their presence in the meeting to the fact that they had at some time committed a breach of the law.

With respect to the first class, it was cheering to think that their souls at any rate were being cared for, and in the case of the reformatory children, we were gratified to hear from one in a position to know, that in one institution 90 per cent. at least were thoroughly and permanently reclaimed from evil ways. The whole scene reminded us of a huge bouquet of fresh fair flowers, the neatly-dressed girls, with their straw hats, looking like so many snow-white lilies; while the shoe-black boys, with their scarlet attire, might have been compared to a big bunch of radiant poppies. The afternoon sun shone brightly through the glass roof, and they looked as happy and well-behaved a collection of earth's choicest flowers as we have ever seen.

Some men can speak well to grown-up people, but not to children; some can do the opposite. Mr. Moody can do both. Mr. Sankey's hymns have been stigmatized as "childish;" Mr. Dale has effectually disposed of that objection, and the fact is established beyond doubt or dispute that these sweet, simple "gospel songs" attract and move both old and young. It was fine to hear these children, all of them born to trouble and suffering, sing so heartily and so well the hymns chosen. They must have practised diligently, and, in one particular case, when the girls sang alone, the harmony of the treble and alto parts was beautifully rendered. Mr. Sankey's solos were evidently a source of great delight.

Mr. Moody did not attempt any connected kind of discourse; he sought rather by a series of well-chosen questions of the most elementary, yet essentially important character, to draw out the knowledge possessed by the children and apply it to their understandings and hearts. They answered so well and so promptly that he awarded to them a well deserved compliment. His anecdotes were suited to the capacity of his youthful audience, and were likely to nail home the truth.

It was a very pleasant hour for those more immediately concerned, as well as the rest of the congregation that filled up every part of the big building, and we trust many good and lasting impressions were made on these young hearts. The day was no doubt a red letter one to them, and will afford them much food for childish prattle, as well as more serious thought for a long time to come.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

Mr. Henry Drummond, who has conducted these meetings in most of the large towns visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey with wonderful success, has now taken the lead of the nine to ten p.m. meeting in St. Mary's Hall. He brings to the work a large and varied experience, besides which, he is, in the literal sense of the word, a young man, and gifted by God with many qualifications for this special work. He rules over the meeting with a firm yet gentle hand, and possesses the happy knack of putting every one quite at his ease, and making him feel he is one of a circle of friends met for the common welfare. Some of the meetings during the past week have been full of interest, and much important testimony has been elicited. It is desired, if possible, to encourage the young converts to state briefly the circumstances of their conversion. This serves a three-fold purpose. It affords them an easy opportunity of confessing Christ before their fellows, which is as much an element in healthy spiritual life as faith itself. It is an encouragement to others to do likewise, and serves to remove any difficulties that may linger in the minds of the babes in Christ, who at these times are numerous. Another, and perhaps the most important object to be gained is, that not a few who go to the meeting careless and indifferent are pricked in their hearts by hearing these simple, sometimes trembling, but none the less telling experience of these young men and lads. Under Mr. Drummond's fostering care we trust this effort to reach the thousands of young men of London will widen and deepen till, like a broad and sweeping river, it becomes the bearer of blessing to many far and near. We would earnestly advise our readers to use their influence with young men to secure their attendance.

A SCEPTIC SAVED.

The following is from a manufacturer in the City, who has been deeply interested in these meetings:—

I send you a sample of this glorious work of God. This case can be vouched for by many independent witnesses, many of them business men. Last week, on the night when the text was, "Son, remember," a young, but violent and very determined sceptic, of about the age of twenty, came into the men's meeting, and gathered around him a small crowd, who were all opposing him. Of course, this was apparently very unfair and unequal, but then it was prompted by the extreme language the young man employed, and by his erratic statements, such as, God would not be so wicked as to send him to hell; he served God as faithfully as any one; he was sure there was no hell; he needed no salvation; was no sinner; Satan did not exist; he knew as much about ethics, etc., as any one—the usual line of statement and expression in vogue with sceptics. The phrenologist he did believe in; he had examined his head and told him he was of a sceptical tendency, and would always be so, therefore God was to blame for the views he held, as they resulted from physical formation, etc. In fact, he appeared to be equal for any emergency, like a young lion. He was left, and many told him he would be prayed for; I for one, and doubtless many others, held him up at the throne of grace at home, and the event, if forgotten by man, was not so by God.

A week passed, and on Tuesday night of last week in the young men's meeting our sceptical young friend appeared; and with a view to prevent him infusing any of the poison of Satan into young quickened souls, I drew near, not, however, intending to speak unless required. But who can describe the marvels of divine grace? I found it had subdued the lion, altered his nature, and had made him into a lamb. He told me God's Spirit had been dealing with him. He had come to make caricatures of scenes he had witnessed, and, of course, I thought it possible his present profession might be a disguised attempt to create a scene for a picture; but investigation convinced me to the contrary. I found his soul had been arrested about Thursday, and in his distress he sought relief in the inquiry-room. A clergyman became instrumental in removing many difficulties, and the exercised soul could hold out no longer. He went home and threw himself down before God, and then, like Jacob, wrestled in prayer till he found deliverance by believing in Jesus. He has since been a meek and humble, yet a rejoicing soul, approaching God as a loving and reconciled Father through Christ. I communicate this to you because I deem it to be a very striking case. Like Saul of Tarsus, the enemy of the cross is now saying, tremblingly and astonished, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

On Friday night, at the young men's meeting, this young man rose and stated the circumstances of his conversion, and was listened to with breathless interest. He closed with words to this effect, "Now, like Thomas, I say to Jesus, My Lord and my God." We afterwards learned from him that he had been brought up as a Ritualist; when he was thirteen the clergyman became a Roman Catholic, and he followed him; but the result of five years of Romanism was to turn him from religion altogether and to make him an infidel. He added that he believed Ritualism was doing more than anything else to make young men infidels. He knew many who were once devoted Ritualists, but are now utter sceptics.

The next confession after this was from a young lad who had been conversed with on the previous night. The friend who spoke to him said that, "him that cometh to Him, Jesus will in nowise cast out." "I offered myself to Jesus," said the dear boy, "and I knew that when I offered myself He would not cast me out." The calm self-possession and the measured words of this young lad bore witness to all who heard his brief confession to the reality of the change.

This young men's meeting is already, and promises to become still more, one of the most interesting and important features of the work.

OPENING SERVICES IN THE EAST-END.

Another step in the great work of evangelizing London was taken on Thursday afternoon, when the opening service was held in the large building erected in the East-end, called Bow-road Hall. The hall, erected solely for the purpose of these special meetings, has been built on the model of Bingley Hall, Birmingham, and has been seated for 9000 persons, with standing room for, perhaps, 1000 more. There were from 4000 to 5000 present at the meeting on Thursday afternoon for Christian workers, and altogether the proceedings were of the most hopeful description. The acoustics of the hall, as far as one could judge, are as nearly perfect as possible, and will no doubt be a considerable element in the success of the meetings.

At the appointed hour, Messrs. Moody and Sankey appeared on the large platform, which was well filled with local clergy, ministers, and others, as well as the choir.

The service was opened by singing the 100th Psalm, and Rev. Joseph Bardsley offered prayer for God's rich blessing on the labours in the East-end.

The rousing and appropriate hymn, "Work, for the night is coming," being sung with spirit (everybody is willing to sing, but not always so willing to work), Mr. Moody read part of Josh. i. and Isa. vi., and Mr. Sankey sang, "Here am I, send me."

Mr. Moody then proceeded with his address, which was based on the words in Mark xiii. 34, "To every man his work." It does not say, "To every man some work," or a work, but his work. He understood the passage to mean that every man, woman, and child has been called into the vineyard, and that all have got a work to do. Away back in the counsels of eternity God had laid out the work for every one of his children; and if we do not do our work, we must answer for it. No man can do another man's work. "I have found out," said Mr. Moody, "that those who know what their work is, and are doing it, are the happiest people in the world. We have come down to the East-end to labour for a few weeks, and we want to see all the Christian people doing their work. If each one build over against his own house—'all at it, and always at it'—we shall revolutionize the East-end in a few weeks. Some one said to me the other day, 'The Lord always uses those that are nearest at hand.' If we had two or three thousand Christians here, seeing eye to eye, as one man, what wonderful things God would do! I have great faith for this part of London; I expect great things. Not only throughout London, but all Christendom, prayers are going up to God for London. If the Christian people will pray that the power of God may rest on the singer and the speaker, and get their eyes away from man, and up to God, a blessing shall rest on these meetings, and hundreds of souls shall be saved. Let us not limit the power of the Holy One of Israel; let us ask for and expect great things."

Mr. Moody then enumerated some of the qualifications necessary for successful work, such as courage, perseverance, a true estimate of the worth of a soul, and quenchless love. His illustrations seemed to tell on the hearers with wonderful effect, and at times moved them to tears.

After Mr. Moody had given notice of further addresses to workers, so as to get them warmed up, that they could not help but work, Mr. Sankey sang "Scatter seeds of kindness," and the first meeting in the East-end of London dispersed into the busy outside world.

We pray and trust that this hall, in the coming weeks, may be the birthplace of many a soul from among the teeming population of this part of the metropolis.

A service for Christian workers was held on Friday afternoon, and a gospel address given by Mr. Moody on Saturday evening. Mr. Sankey was also present.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS, BOW-ROAD HALL.

"Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Thy daily stage of duty run;
Shake off dull sloth, and early rise,
To pay thy morning sacrifice."

If Messrs. Moody and Sankey should remain long in London, their Sunday morning services would at all events accomplish, in the case of many Christians, the shaking off the "dull sloth," which is apt to creep over the soul as well as the body on the morning of the day of rest. There may be two sides to this question, but it will not be denied that many Sunday mornings are squandered in an unprofitable and inexcusable way. Our American brethren are teaching us a lesson which we would do well to learn.

Sunday morning last dawned cloudy and damp, and there may be more connection between our physical and our spiritual atmosphere than we are accustomed to think. Whether it was the soft spring rain, or whether "Christian workers" are less numerous in the crowded East-end than in the North, we cannot say, but the first eight o'clock morning meeting in Bow-road Hall did not approach in size, by half, the gatherings that assembled on like occasions at the Agricultural Hall. There were probably between 5000 and 6000 present.

If the audience was smaller than customary, the good things provided for them by our evangelist brethren were not reduced either in quality or quantity.

Mr. Moody read the parable of the talents, and afterwards spoke from the words, "To every man according to his several ability." His terse and pointed exhortations to use the talents we possess in order to get others, seemed to produce much effect. He denounced half-heartedness as "the curse of the Church," and entreated his hearers to be in earnest in their work. As illustrations of what could be done if the mind was bent on doing it, he told us of a Belfast man of business who was so anxious for the salvation of his family, that he forsook his calling for the time, and took up his temporary residence in Dublin, where the special services were being held. There he remained with his family till he had good reason to believe that they had all been converted. Another instance given by Mr. Moody was that of a lady in London, who has a class of thirty-two young ladies. She went to the Agricultural Hall, took notes of the addresses, and went and redelivered them to her class. One day last week, as she was preaching, she could not stand it any longer; she broke down, and they all broke down together. As the result, twenty of her class professed faith in Christ. She had made up her mind she would not let this special season pass without being blessed, and the Lord had blessed her. Such exhortations and such examples of zeal could not fail to stir the heart and quicken the energies of all who listened.

Mr. Sankey sang, with great beauty of expression and modulation, "Go work in my vineyard," and at the close a verse of "Here am I; send me."

The afternoon service for women was, humanly speaking, a most successful one. The fine hall (which now looks better than at the opening service) was not quite filled with women, and the vacant space was allotted to part of the crowds of men that besieged the doors. The quietude of the service was somewhat disturbed by a constant attempt on the part of some of the audience to leave the building. For the sake of the thousands who wish to stay throughout the short service, as well as for the sake of the speaker, we hope those who cannot spare an hour will stay away.

Mr. Moody preached "the gospel" from the words, "Go ye into all the world," etc. He pressed home the message with reiterated force and tenderness, putting before his congregation the certain alternatives of rejection or acceptance. So straight and sure did the message go home, that his appeal to the anxious ones to rise, though slowly responded to at first, ultimately brought to their feet a large proportion of the females in the hall. With some trouble the general audience was dismissed, while the hundreds who remained behind were lovingly urged to believe the good news and live. As there is no inquiry-room available at present, the hall itself has to be used for the purpose.

The evening hour saw another crowded concourse of men. If the East-end people are not careful, they will earn the reputation of being restless and even disorderly. Before Mr. Sankey began to sing "The Ninety and Nine," which he did with that touching pathos and realism he always throws into the rendering of it, numbers of the young men and lads had made for the doors, and it took some time and no little trouble to gain Mr. Sankey a perfectly still audience.

Mr. Moody, from the text of the afternoon, preached virtually the same discourse, with even greater and more persuasive power. He extracted from the audience a confession that God was both able and willing to save them, and that eternal life was a pure gift, which could not be obtained if so much as the little finger was lifted to secure it. This admission was at once met with the question—"Why don't you take it then?" He referred to the women's service in the afternoon, and said he had reason to believe that fifteen to twenty of them had then and there received Christ as their Saviour. Many remained to the second meeting, and the first Sunday's services in the East-end were an earnest of abundant fruits to be gathered during these coming weeks.

The singing of the choir deserves mention. They have been admirably trained; they sing with great expression, precision, and distinctness of enunciation, and their rendering of the various hymns sung before Messrs. Moody and Sankey appeared, was such as to cherish the hope that in the course of these services not a few hearts will be touched and transformed by hearing the truth so sweetly and feelingly sung.

AGRICULTURAL HALL, SUNDAY EVENING.

The Sunday evening service was held at eight instead of seven, in order not to interfere with the usual attendance at church and chapel. The body of the hall was well filled, but no one was allowed to enter the galleries. At the commencement of the service a degree of unsettlement and fluctuation was observable in the audience, evidently among those who were there not to listen to the voice of God, but of a man whose name gathers such crowds around him.

Shortly after eight, a considerable rush of those coming in from places of worship, filled the platform and reserved seats, and ere long the Rev. W. Taylor had a deep hold on the attention of the congregation. His address was a very searching one, on the words, "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?" and at the close he sung, unaccompanied by any instrument, a thrilling solo, every other line sending forth the irresistible appeal, "Why will ye die?" The silence was perfect, and on the platform and those parts of the hall within view, unusual and deep emotion was manifest. A prompt invitation to the inquiry-room followed, and Mr. Taylor addressed the "seekers" who stood round him in a large circle; more individual dealing following later.

The service was a most impressive one, and we thank God for such a coadjutor with Mr. Moody in the work, now we trust only opening in the North of London.

Mr. Taylor's preaching is not of an ordinary kind, and since God uses all instrumentality, we believe He will reach souls through the very point of contrast in the manner—though not in the matter—of the message delivered. Mr. Taylor ploughs deep into the stiff soil of the human heart; he holds up the law of God as not only holy, just, and good, but tender and loving. He presents God as a Father, and yet as a mighty Sovereign, and death as the result of sin in a physical and natural way, as well as the expression of God's hatred of it. He appeals to reason and heart alike, though in the earlier part of his discourse to the reason especially; and as he closed his address, the unsaved present must have felt that they had no inch of ground they could ever again deem reliable; they were left without alternative—to postpone or refuse and die the second death, or to surrender entirely to Him who has no pleasure in the death of the wicked.

NOON MEETING AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

On Monday last the first noon meeting was held in this large building. The area and three of the four galleries were filled. After the hymn, "Rejoice and be glad" had been sung, the requests for praise and prayer, the former greatly predominating, were read by Wm. Graham, Esq., M.P., and Canon Conway led in prayer.

Mr. Moody, as his wont is on Mondays, spoke on "Praise," which he said was the occupation of heaven. If we praised more we should get more blessing. He said they had not come to dedicate the Opera House, but to ask God to fill it with his presence and save many souls. If we wished to please God, let us speak well of his Son. Having read a passage in Revelation where the redeemed sing Hallelujah, he said, Why should not heaven and earth join hands in praising and exalting God's name?

After singing another hymn Mr. Sankey spoke of the great blessing that had attended the meetings yesterday in the East-end, making special reference to the subduing effect of the singing before the meetings commenced.

A gentleman from a Sunday-school in Chelsea told of from 60 to 70 conversions at their children's meeting, the day before.

Rev. T. Richardson, of Stepney, also expressed the thanks of the East-end Christians for the work of yesterday, and gave some striking cases of conversion; he had some thirty cases in his own note-book alone, of inquirers whose names he had taken.

Mr. Paton gave the case of a lady who attended several meetings at the Agricultural Hall, and afterwards found peace in the quiet of her own room. Yesterday she took her son of twelve to the East-end Hall, where the little fellow found Christ.

Mr. Hogg said, to show the stability of the work, that three years ago, he took his class of young men to hear Mr. Moody, at Chelsea, and with the exception of a dozen or so, all the class, numbering sixty or seventy, were still leading a consistent Christian life; after which Mr. Sankey sang, "I have entered the valley of blessing so sweet," with fine effect, the audience joining in the chorus.

Just as the meeting was about to close, Mr. Moody read a telegram from Liverpool, stating that the young men's meeting there yesterday was the largest and best they had seen. Mr. Moody then prayed fervently for a blessing on the work among the young men, and the meeting was closed by the benediction, pronounced by Rev. W. Haslam. The noon meetings will be held in future at Her Majesty's Theatre.

SCOTLAND.—AFTER MANY DAYS.

BY MISS KELMAN.

Nine months have now passed since Messrs. Moody and Sankey held their memorable meetings in Tain. A wide-spread and most interesting revival of religion followed. The Rev. Mr. Grant, assisted by other ministers, conducted evangelistic meetings every evening for a number of weeks, and at these meetings so many inquirers remained to be spoken with that it was found impossible to converse with them all singly, and they had to be addressed in groups. Among those who took part in dealing with inquirers, it was very interesting to see an aged elder who had borne the heat and burden of many a long day, but who, animated by the cheering sight around him, buckled on his armour anew, and night after night continued earnestly directing anxious souls to the Saviour.

During the winter months, meetings have been held on an average three nights a week, and there has been a very largely-attended evangelistic meeting every Sunday evening. A Bible-reading in the Free Church schoolhouse on Thursday evenings is also well attended. At this meeting passages are read by persons in any part of the room, and a few remarks are made on the verses read. This exercise is found to be very enjoyable and profitable.

The Young Men's Christian Association, which was organized after Mr. Moody's visit, is in a most flourishing condition. The membership is increasing, and a number of the young men are enthusiastic workers as Sunday-school teachers, visitors, etc.

The depth and reality of the work in Tain were very clearly shown during the recent communion season. The number of applicants for admission to the Lord's table was very large, and the fitness, as regards both knowledge and daily life, of those seeking admission to church membership was very encouraging to ministers and other workers.

Cottage-meetings are held in order to reach a class who are unable to go to church, old and infirm people. Here solo singing is found to be a most valuable auxiliary. "The old, old story," told in song, finding a ready entrance to the hearts of those poor, afflicted ones.

Much benefit has been derived from hearing of the progress of the blessed work in other places, and many an earnest prayer ascends to the God of all grace on behalf of the labourers who are sowing the seed in that mighty field.

TRALEE, KERRY.—It may interest some of your readers to hear that a most interesting Mission was held in Tralee last week, the first of the kind ever held there. Much prayer had been offered by many of God's people that a great awakening might follow these blessed services. The missionaries were the Rev. A. Daunt, the Rev. J. S. Fletcher, the Rev. T. Wallace, from Dublin; and the Rev. F. G. Wynne, from Kilkenny. There were three services daily, morning and evening in the large church, where Christ was fully preached, Mr. Fletcher showing that we should be "doers of the word, not hearers only." On the following day, Mr. Wynne besought sinners to give themselves "unto Himself;" Mr. Daunt to have "Jesus only" for our all in all. In the afternoons, in the schoolroom, a meeting for prayer was held, the subject each day specially related to prayer. The room was crowded, and each day the numbers increased. The Mission was closed by a most solemnizing address from Mr. Wallace on the words, "Where art thou?" A Mission was so new a thing in Tralee that many in the first instance came from curiosity, but we have reason to believe that souls there found Christ and peace. Roman Catholics were also present. The work now has to be followed up by the people of God here, and that seems to be the desire of the various ministers, so that fruit may abound. M. S.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

LONDON AND THE COUNTRY TOWNS.

Mr. Moody's preachings are now in the North, East, and West of London, and the visitors are working in all the four quarters of the metropolis with joy—many of them really gathering in the spoil. Think also of the many able ministers, missionaries, Bible-women, and other Christian workers, and then think, is anything now so much needed as the loving unanimity extolled thirty years ago by the Rev. Wm. Arthur in his "Tongue of Fire," and emphasized 1800 years before that in the early paragraphs of the doings of the apostles, by the oft-repeated expression, "one accord," "one accord."

A telegram came in with cheer from one of the large towns where Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours were much blessed, that its united committee have determined to institute house-to-house visitation.

Another large town writes that ministers of its different denominations have met with their united communicants, in a great meeting of over 2000, by ticket, and have adjourned to meet again similarly, but for practical effort, and we trust the result will be forthwith the carrying of the gospel to the whole population by house-to-house visitation and other means.]

Many other places write for Mr. Moody's leaflet, and the instructions * used in London for house-to-house visitation—whilst great is still the need in London and the country for more visitors. They should, however, be the very best qualified men and women the churches have—far better too few than too many.

One gentleman in London, who declined to help on account of many engagements, recommended an association to be formed in every church of those members who would agree to spend two hours out of the twenty-four in prayer, meditation, etc., alone with God. Shall we not profit by his loving exhortation? Is there not in this day of calling for outward labour a needs-be to keep in mind that we must pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth the labourers, for the harvest is plenteous, and then his bidding to them will be: "Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Matt. vi. 6.

* The London leaflet may be obtained from Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, direct, for 7s. 6d. per 1000, or by post, paid, 9s. per 1000; or the leaflet may be ordered through any bookseller, at 7s. 6d. per 1000. If a less number is desired, 500 can be had for 3s. 9d., or post-paid for 4s. 6d. But sample packets, containing several copies, with instructions, may be had for six stamps, and, except in the case of these sample packets, no smaller number than 500 will be sold.

MEETINGS AT LLANSANTFFRAID.—Mr. Hinde Smith has been inaugurating Union Temperance-meetings of Churchmen and Dissenters at Llansantffraid, Montgomeryshire. The meetings were most impressive and influential. It is a great happiness to those who have held the "fort" in this neighbourhood for so many barren years to find tokens of a coming shower of blessing.

RESCUE THE PERISHING.—In the providence of God, I was led to visit the North Eastern Hospital for Children, 327, Hackney-road, and was much gratified to see the bright, happy, contented faces of the dear little ones in the midst of much bodily suffering, and to find their physical necessities are not only being tenderly cared for and ministered to, but their young hearts are also being drawn out to the Saviour. In an interesting conversation with the matron, she said, "Our aim is to lead the dear children to Christ while caring for their bodies." On making inquiry about the number which could be accommodated, I was grieved to find one ward is at present closed owing to the lack of funds. This sad fact so oppressed me, as hundreds of needy cases have to be denied admission in consequence, that I feel constrained to ask that you will grant space in the columns of your valuable paper for this letter, whereby the needs of this deserving charity may be made known. And may the Lord move many hearts to consider its urgent requirements, and to minister of their substance. "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."—Faithfully yours,

SABBATH MORNING BREAKFASTS FOR THE POOR.

The first breakfast-meeting was held on the last Sabbath morning of December, and there were about 150 present. Since that time the attendance has gone on constantly increasing, and last Sabbath week the numbers who crowded into the hall were over 500, men, women, and children, to whom were dispensed the hot tea, bread, and sandwiches, of which the breakfast consists. The gathering, though comprising a great number of young people and children, is also largely made up of men and women. One of the most touching sights is to see the children, as they place their tea and bread on the seat before them, and kneel while they eat their breakfast. Little children, with faces too often begrimed with dirt, and which no loving hand seems that morning to have touched, with clothes all too scanty or loosely hung to keep out the sharp and withering east wind. Growing lads and girls, glad, perhaps, to come for the sake of the tea, gladder still to find themselves amidst the warmth and comfort and cheer of the meeting, and to hear the sweet and touching hymns. Women and men with sin and sorrow scarring and darkening almost every feature of their face.

It has been said that friends who have gone in to see the meeting are at first quite broken down at the sight. It could scarcely have been believed that in a large and flourishing town like this, with so many Christian and benevolent agencies all around, the breakfast could have swept up such an amount of misery and destitution as is presented every Sabbath morning.

The meeting, which begins at eight o'clock, is continued about an hour, and besides the breakfast, there are prayers, singing by the choir, solos, reading of the Scriptures, and, towards the close, a brief, pointed, and earnest address. The attention manifested during the hymn-singing and address is very remarkable; it would seem, indeed, as if those who were present were hearing the glad tidings of great joy almost for the first time.

The breakfast has been commenced and hitherto carried on by a noble band of Christian workers, young men and women, and one very pleasing feature is that very many of those who, from Sabbath to Sabbath, give their hearty and energetic assistance, are the fruits of the awakening of last year.

Contributions are readily coming in to maintain the material provision made, and a feeling of satisfaction is everywhere manifest that a great want is being met, and that a most necessitous and almost hopeless class are reached and influenced by the glad tidings of salvation. Arrangements have further been made to gather up as far as possible the results of this effort. A committee of ladies are to visit at their homes those whose names have been given in, and who may wish to be visited.

As may naturally be supposed, special prominence has been given to temperance, and opportunities are afforded for those who may wish to take the pledge. For this purpose a meeting has been started on Saturday evenings, designed to combine evangelistic and temperance work, and it is cheering to add that some who took the pledge at or as the result of the first Sabbath breakfast, have steadily kept to their resolution. Whatever may be said as to many who are unworthy taking advantage of all this effort and help, we confidently believe that to hundreds, the kindly Christian sympathy, the earnest, loving words, the simple presentation of our blessed Redeemer's compassion and love for the lost, will prove an unspeakable blessing.

Among the diverse agencies which have sprung up in our midst for reaching the unhappy, the wretched, and the depraved, amid all the tokens round about us of a more deep, intense, and practical spiritual life, certainly this open door and open table on the Sabbath morning for all who come, is not the least. It may not be a permanent institution, but out of it and in connection with it will doubtless grow a wider and more expansive charity still, until the moral waste of our great communities be reached and covered and blessed.

LORD RADSTOCK IN RUSSIA.—We have received a request for praise for blessing in St. Petersburg. "Lord Radstock finds that those who were brought to the Lord last year have not only been kept by the power of God, but that in many instances they have been made a blessing to others. He also earnestly begs for continued prayer."

CITY MISSIONARIES TO FOREIGNERS.

On Friday morning Mr. SMITHIES gathered by invitation to breakfast at Ling's Temperance Hotel, South-street, Finsbury, twenty-seven city missionaries engaged amongst the foreigners in London. The following are some of the most interesting reports that were given:—

Mr. BOTTINE, a German, had been three years labouring among the German sugar-bakers and tailors in Whitechapel. Of the latter many belong to the "Bradlaugh class." On one occasion he was told, "We want no Bible, no king; and if I were not afraid of the law, I would kill you to-day." But this missionary had found much encouragement amidst much of the reverse. He had established a German mothers'-meeting, and mentioned some cases of men and women having been led to Christ.

Mr. GILLMAN had been recently appointed to visit Spanish and Portuguese sailors, who are Roman Catholics, and have nothing to read, nor any desire, but they will sit and listen. He had visited a murderous-looking red vessel, the "Murillo," which ran down the "Northfleet," but now had changed her name. On board of her, amidst ridicule and contempt, he had found a lad who asked for "Andreas Dunn," and a New Testament, and who told him that he visited the Protestant chapel in Seville.

Mr. SMITHIES here exhibited some Illustrated Wall Papers, in various tongues, including three just completed, in languages spoken in India. It is impossible to conceive whereunto the results of this simple method of preaching the gospel in foreign tongues will grow.

Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE said he had had some experience in speaking to foreigners through an interpreter, and the gospel could be clearly made known in this way. He said that if a requisition were sent to Mr. Moody by foreigners themselves, so that a sufficient number could be got together (Mr. Sawell suggested, in the Pavilion Theatre), he thought Mr. Moody would accept their invitation to preach to them through an interpreter. Mr. Radcliffe closed with solemn exhortation to work for God, and not to please man; and to believe and expect great things in this extraordinary time of visitation. Be nothing, and by faith subdue kingdoms.

Mr. GREENOWSKI, a Jew, missionary among his own people in the neighbourhood of Petticoat-lane, spoke of his difficulties and encouragements. The Jews were afraid of each other, and came, now, like Nicodemus, in the dark, to visit the Christian teacher. When converted, they must leave their district. When they hear the New Testament, they get a new light upon the Old; they wonder to find that Christians value the Old Testament, and are able to "bring forth the Old because of the New."

Capt. COSTER, of the Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, told of the libraries of interesting illustrated books which they supply to ships. Last year they received £60, subscribed by sailors as a thankoffering. A very interesting case of conversion, through reading two of these books, was related. It was added by Mr. Rennie, that the London City Mission also had 200 libraries on board ships.

Mr. LUMSDEN, connected with the Sailor's Institute, who, for twenty-seven years, had been engaged among seamen, told of the value of these libraries, and also of his visits to foreign sailors in the boarding-houses in Ratcliff Highway. One most interesting case of a Zulu, to whom a Swedish missionary in his own country had given a hymn-book, and taught him the love of Jesus. This young man has now become a student at Mr. Grattan Guinness's Training Institute, and hopes to go home to teach the gospel to his own countrymen. Mr. Lumsden had found the past year the most fruitful of his life. There had been remarkable blessing among the fishermen of Lowestoft, where he spent six weeks with Mr. Johnson, the devoted sailors' missionary there. They knew of some forty who had found the Lord.

Mr. RENNIE, who superintends the work of the City Mission in the East-end, said that its chief interest lay in its personal character. We work in the trenches. The great and blessed meetings now being held open the way for this personal ministry, but the result will not last unless the public preaching is followed up by common daily instruction. A gentleman employing 600 men in a factory in the East-end, pays half the salary of a missionary, who visits the men during their dinner hour. These men are never at home, and this is the only way of reaching them.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN said that the effect of the great movement now in our midst should be not to absorb all our interest, but to strengthen and increase every existing agency. If one thing more than another seemed to be pressing upon Mr. Moody's mind, it was the necessity and blessedness of individual dealing; and he says he has discovered the solution to the problem, "How to reach the masses?" by every Christian speaking to others. Men must be saved one by one, and Christians, one by one, are God's means of accomplishing the work in which God delights.

Mr. RICHARD ALLEN, alluding to the difficulty of reaching men, was delighted to meet with them in the factories where they worked. In Dublin the visit of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had supplied a ready theme for conversation about eternal things, in trains, trams, omnibuses, everywhere.

Mr. BROWN, labouring among foreigners in Soho, introduced himself as a disappointed man, but with a happy inconsistency went on to tell a remarkable story of a mother in London who wanted to get her daughter out of a Continental convent. Means were supplied; she crossed the Channel, and succeeded in bringing her to London. The girl was, however, a bigoted Romanist. She obtained a situation in Dublin, went to hear Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and found Jesus. She was at once severed from her worship of the Virgin, and altogether and at once lost her old religion. Mr. Brown also told of an old French lady who came to ask him about Purgatory. He read with her John iii. 16. The dear old soul drank it in word by word—"God loved me—sent his Son—I believe—shall not perish—have everlasting life. Dame! Very pretty—go to heaven, and no Purgatory on the way!" Being reminded of his disappointedness, Mr. Brown said that he had no suitable room in which to carry on his work, and he did not find the results of receiving the gospel were so marked and satisfactory amongst foreigners as English. But this was explained by their less advantageous antecedents. They have been born and bred in darkness, while in England there is gospel light. Mr. Brown added that anyone who wants to meet men may find them by scores, from one to two o'clock, outside factory-gates, and places where they work, and may speak to them in groups of thirty or forty, if he has courage to do so.

GOSPEL BOOKS AND TRACTS.

For some months past I have been supplying sample packets of gospel tracts and books to all who have applied through THE CHRISTIAN, frequently supplementing them with a larger parcel in cases where there has appeared a real interest in this branch of service for God. I have scores of letters telling of souls being saved and of blessing received through the reading of these silent messengers.

Numbers of God's people are now applying to know if I can procure them a selection of the best books and tracts; so much so, that I feel the necessity of practically meeting the want, many willing workers not knowing where to apply for a general assortment.

I now propose sending out a shilling sample packet, of the best selection possible of all publishers, and have made arrangements with the Carlisle colporteur to supply, at cost price, any one who applies. Any Christian who knows of tracts or small books that are being specially owned of God would greatly oblige by forwarding me a specimen copy so that such may be added to the packet.

By enclosing twelve postage-stamps, any applicant will have a sample packet forwarded, from which further selection can be made, and the order sent; or if the selection be left in my hands, I shall be most happy to make up the amount of remittance with those which I know are being blessed to the conversion and edification of souls. MEETINGS FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A correspondent, writing on the subject of the wide-spread efforts now carried on on behalf of young men, earnestly urges the claims of our young women. Will the Lord's people consider the subject, and seek direct counsel from God about it, that so, if any steps should be taken to establish such work, it may not be superficial or spasmodic, but steady, tender, and successful labour "in the Lord"?

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—From the queries and suggestions in your columns and other indications, there is rich promise of a vigorous season of open-air preaching in London imminent. To secure greater unity and comprehensiveness in the good work, may I ask those of your readers who are occupying stations and needing workers, as well as those wishing to assist in preaching, to communicate with the Open-air Mission, 111, Buckingham-street, W.C. J. KIRK, Secretary.

TWO DAYS' CONVENTION IN LONDON.

A Convention is intended to be held in the Agricultural Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday, May 5 and 6. As this will most likely be the last Convention held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey during their stay in England, a large attendance of ministers and Christians of the United Kingdom is invited and expected. Among the subjects under discussion will be, "The Influence of Revivals on Morals," and "The Necessity of the Inquiry-room, and How to Work it."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE EXPOSITOR. Hodder and Stoughton.—This magazine continues to carry out the promise of the earlier numbers. Among the varied contents of the April number is a fresh and striking rendering of the word, "Neither be ye of doubtful mind," by the Editor.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST. Hodder and Stoughton.—Mr. Dale follows up his paper in the March number on Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey (which appeared in our columns), by another entitled, "The Revivalists and the Ministry," the object of which is to show that, instead of being a cause of discouragement to the regular pastorate, the success of the evangelists ought to be a ground of rejoicing and strengthening in their work.

OUR OWN FIRESIDE, DAY OF DAYS, and HOME WORDS, under the editorship of Rev. C. Bullock, hold on their way with, we hope, an increasing circulation.

FROM EGYPT TO CANAAN; OR, FROM BONDAGE TO REST. By T. J. HUGHES, of the Children's Special Service Mission. Haughton and Co.—Our dear friend, Mr. Hughes, has embodied in a book thoughts which have been already blessed to many from his own lips. Though these valuable expositions of Scripture were originally notes for the use of a Bible-class, we are sure the writer will not regret having given them greater publicity. The history of Israel, which was a prophecy of the history of every child of God up to the year of grace 1875, is divided into the three stages of "Redemption," "Wilderness Experience," and "Rest." In the first section the important subject of the Passover, as given in Exodus xiii. is handled in a detailed and practical manner, each verse being taken separately, and the precious truth brought to bear on the daily life of the child of God. Though dealing with a favourite subject of writers and speakers, there is a freshness and a savour of Christ in the book, which will, we believe, secure a good circulation, and as opening up a portion of God's Word specially adapted to the needs of those entering on the redeemed life and wilderness experience. There are some books on which a special blessing rests, even beyond their apparent excellence, because they have been steeped in prayer, and we think that this is one of them. We heartily commend it to the numerous young converts who are now being gathered into the Church of Christ.

JAMAICA.—CUBAN REFUGEES.—My friend the Rev. J. Radcliffe, Minister of the Presbyterian (Established) Church in Kingston, Jamaica, writes me:—"I think you can help me. We have a great number of Cuban refugees here. They had formed themselves into an evangelical congregation, under the care of the Rev. Ramon Monsalvatge, who, once a Spanish monk, became a convert to Protestantism, and was ordained by the Presbytery of New York. These people meet as a congregation for a Spanish service, but last Sunday there were thirty-one of them at the sacrament with us. Now, is not this a great movement? Can you help me by looking out for and forwarding to me a number of catechisms, or such like works, wherein are brought out the distinctive principles of Protestantism, distinct from Episcopacy or Presbytery? Look about, and do what you can." I have looked out, and spoken to friends, clerical and lay, but as yet without result. I venture to ask your aid, by making the need known. I will gladly be the recipient of any works, and undertake to forward them to Jamaica.

GERMANS AND THE LORD'S-DAY.—I have been requested by some members of the German Society for the Promotion of a Better Observance of the Lord's-day, to write an article for a German periodical on English and Scotch Sabbath-keeping. Will any Christian friends be kind enough to give me some information on this subject, especially naming the provisions of the Legislature respecting the running of trains and other means of locomotion, hours for buying and selling, public-houses, etc.—Yours sincerely in Christ, F. W. REINMUTH.

Spring Garden, Conference Hall, Midway, N.

BRIGHTON.—I am pleased to inform you that our mission-work still goes forward in Brighton and vicinity, with many tokens of the divine approval. We have many veritable cases of conversion to God among the worst classes of the community, whose conduct, conversation, life, etc., are now all that can be desired. In the once famous billiard and dancing saloon in Broad-street souls are being won for Jesus. The room in Russel-street, a baker's shop, bakehouse, etc., made into a mission-hall—mentioned, I think, in my last—is situated in the centre of Ritualistic and Popish influence. Already the poor people of the neighbourhood are interested, and some, I trust, converted—as far, at least, as human judgment can discern. Meanwhile, I want to get sound literature into the hands of the people. I have mapped out the districts, and ladies are at work rescuing the fallen and degraded, whose misery and tears often melt our hearts. My first meeting of the Women's Mission was held on March 31. I am hoping to get 100 women every Thursday, to talk plainly to them, and try to get the poor things to hate debt, dirt, and drink, and also to point them to a Saviour of sinners. £10 or £15 would work wonders just now in those different departments alluded to.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN unite with me in praising God for his converting power in a Bible-class, for which prayer was asked some time since?

PRAYER.—For our charlain.—A Sabbath-school scholar having met with an accident, his teacher desires prayer, that his life may be spared, that he may become a true Christian, and follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. His parents are publicans, and living without God.—For a backslider, that she may be aroused from deadness of soul, and quickened into newness of life.—For cottage-meetings for mothers and daughters.

PLACES.—For a blessing on special meetings for the preaching of the gospel in the town of Midhurst, Sussex, commencing April 14.—For Atherstone.—For a great outpouring of the Spirit on the Moravians at Fulneck, during the prayer-meetings commencing April 11, that apathetic Christians may become active workers among backsliders and unconverted.—For the English in Constantinople, that the blessing which is now in England may come to them, and that a small service for children held on Sunday afternoons may prosper, so that blessing may soon be seen.—For Greenlaw, Berwickshire.—For a town in Norfolk.—For Banbury, Oxfordshire, a town of 13,000 inhabitants, greatly needing spiritual awakening.—For a series of special services at South Creake, Norfolk, from April 18 to 25, conducted by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy.—For great blessing on the special services to be held at Southampton, beginning on the 12th of April.—For Acton, and for special evangelistic services there, to be carried on this spring.—For a village in Somersetshire, where evangelistic meetings are to be held.—For Galashiels.—For a great blessing upon the coming week's services at Ashbourne, to be conducted by William Taylor, the navy.—For a conference at Croydon on the conversion of the young, on Monday, April 19.—For meetings in Lenton, Notts, May 2 to 8, by Mr. J. Wood, of the Evangelization Society.—For blessing on the circulation of the "London Leaflet" in the country.—For eight days' Mission at St. Paul's, Newport, from 18th to 25th inst.

CONVERSIONS.—For the only son of a Christian widow.—For a rich man at Croydon, that his substance may be laid at the feet of Jesus. Also for the conversion of six clerks in a mercantile house.—For a beloved sister, whose besetting sin is a love of drink.—For a father, two brothers, and a sister.—For a brother, an only son, who is in danger of becoming a confirmed drunkard.—For my husband, and three sons, and a daughter, who think they are believers because they believe in a general Saviour.—For my darling mother.—For a dear adopted, aged parent, that he may have faith given to enable him to lay hold on Christ.—For a class of lads, some of whom are anxious, in Bournemouth.—For a young man in the last stage of consumption.—For a scoffer at religion.—For a mother, a backslider, and her two daughters.—For my poor dear son, a sailor, only twenty-three, but very thoughtless, wild, and ungodly. He is at present laid up in a hospital abroad with a fractured thigh, and, in infinite mercy, was spared from being killed on the spot.—For an aunt, professing to be a Christian, but living in strife and wickedness. Also for an uncle, quite a stranger to godliness.—For an old lady of seventy-five, ill from bronchitis, unconverted.—For one lamentably self-deceived, that his eyes may be opened to see himself, and to see Jesus.—A pardoned sinner earnestly craves prayer for her five children, thirteen brothers and sisters, and seventeen nephews and nieces.—For an aged father and relatives, rejecters of Christ.—For my mother and brothers.

The Christian.

RECRUITS TO THE FRONT! WHY?

WE are much encouraged to see by your paper that efforts are being put forth to get those lately converted to gird themselves at once for definite work for the Lord. That this is a true and scriptural plan, and the one most likely to keep converts near the Lord, there cannot be much doubt.

"Satan finds some mischief still has, alas! often and often proved too true in the career of many of the Lord's dear children. That in some places the overwhelming needs of the heathen world should be urged upon those just turned from darkness to light, is a matter calculated to cheer and encourage the hearts of all, especially those already in the foreign field.

The continual call to young converts to give themselves to foreign mission work is, however, suggestive of other thoughts which I would recommend to the prayerful attention of your older Christian readers.

Is there not a danger that many mature Christians are so eagerly seeking to get young converts to offer themselves for missionary work that they are forgetting their own personal obligation in the matter? May not some be inclined to forget the power and worth of exhortation, backed by example, over mere exhortation? Is there not a danger, in short, of shirking our own responsibilities while eagerly urging home the responsibilities of others?

The thought has occurred to some of us that the forefront of the battle is the place for veterans. Fancy, if you can, the old Iron Duke meeting the flower of the French army with the cry, "Up! Recruits, and at them!" There is no doubt that if he had been so iron-hearted as to issue this order, the recruits would have done their duty; but the veterans of the army would have felt for ever disgraced. They could not have rested satisfied.

In the case of a forlorn hope, all who volunteer are accepted, and rightly so. There is no room to pick and choose. If the veterans will not do their duty, then by all means let the recruits—the very rawest—come forward, and prove their armour in the conflict. But in this nineteenth century, is it possible that missionary work is considered a forlorn hope? After all that the Lord has accomplished, is the Church so much asleep, so unmindful of her Lord's command, that she considers it a hopeless cause, so that instead of giving the work into the hands of her most experienced and proved workers, she is satisfied to let her feeblest converts go forth to meet the devil in his strongholds? All who do thus obediently go forth, are blessed, and the Lord gives strength according to their need; but what about the veterans? Where are the leaders of the Lord's host?

Very many are seriously asking, "Can it be possible that ALL the elect are in London—in England—the United Kingdoms—or even in Europe? Can it be possible that the men of mark and ability are ALL needed at home? Can it be in all cases a call from God that leaves the great mass of humanity to perish?" The God-man said, "Go ye into all the world." Is not one of the purposes for which the Church exists in the earth almost virtually ignored?

It must be that Christians do not consider the matter, or we should have churches sending forth their ablest and most tried men, even those they love best; and because they love them, and know their worth, giving them freely for work among the heathen.

Suppose, for instance, that, some Sunday morning, Mr. Spurgeon's accustomed place in the Tabernacle were vacant, and, when inquiries were made, it was found that, deeply moved by the need of the heathen world, he had made arrangements that the work should be carried on by some of the many able men that he has gathered round him (as it will be when the Lord takes him home to his rest), and started for some heathen country; that not only had he gone himself, but that he had taken a few of his best students with him, determined to aid them by his experience and counsel, and to give up the remainder of his life for the good of those who would never read or hear of his sermons, unless he went himself to preach to them. When, in a few months' time, letters reached home, bearing say the China postmark, how the five or six thousand members of his church would eagerly look for intelligence! How they would pray! How they would continually think of the need of that land whose claims had been thus so forcibly brought before them! There would be few of those five or six thousand who would not eagerly look for Mr. Spurgeon's letters, although missionary reports may now be very dry reading to some of them. At least one body of Christians in London would get in time to believe that, in this one country of China, millions are dying without God. In their case, at least, missionary work would be removed from the visionary to the practical standpoint; and, if history does not lie, the blessing resulting to the mother church would be incalculable.

Or suppose that Dr. Landels—whose missionary speeches are proverbially rousing and inspiring—instead of being heard in Exeter Hall, were heard from the centre of some of the vast provinces of this land, urging the claims of the perishing on the attention of those who know and love him, can we doubt that, in a large circle of the Church, the missionary fire would be kindled, and great prayer and great effort would be almost infallibly the result?

The Malakoffs and Redans of Satan's kingdom will only be successfully stormed when the leaders in God's army learn the potency of the little word, "COME." We might take instances from each and every section of the Church of Christ in London, or any other large city, but it is not necessary. We mention names at all merely for the sake of illustrating a train of thought which might fairly claim the attention of the fathers in the churches at home, and not by any means daring to decide that such a course would be right in the case of those mentioned.

Let, then, our cry be, "VETERANS TO THE FRONT!" And if there be need to exhort young converts on the subject of missionary work, let it not be so much "Go, go, GO!" but rather the words of the greatest merely human missionary, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ."—Yours in gospel oonds,
J. McC.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

MR. MOODY has just made a fresh appeal in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle for more labourers for the house-to-house visitation. Both superintendents and visitors are needed. They require, of course, to be recommended by some minister or Christian person well known, and inquiries should be made at the office, 48, Gt. Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

Some visitors appear to get far less attention than others. In such cases, should we not have heart-searching, and inquire, Did we get the victory before starting in our own closet alone with God? Is it the indifference of the people, or our indifference to entering into the holiest, in full assurance of faith? Let us help one another to go into this presence for ourselves, for all our brethren, and for all London.

Two visitors called on an atheist. He would have none of their message, or of Mr. Moody's leaflet. A Christian man outside saw that they had been sent away, and urged them to go again, whilst he prayed for them. They did so, and then what a change! He took the leaflet, and was soon in tears.

Decided conversions are reported, and it is interesting to see how other agencies blend with the visitors. In one case, of a dying consumptive, they got a minister to follow up, and he was blessed in the man's conversion. In another the city missionary's labours were blended with their own, and the person was brought to rest on the Saviour.

Sometimes the work seems to be begun at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, and completed by the visitation; and in many cases opposed ones are induced to go and hear them, or some other minister; and so are, we trust, led to Christ.

One replied to the visitors after she had been blessed in two visits, "I am so happy; thank God you ever came to my house. Frequently I have been in a state of utter despair; but now, thank God, all is changed. My husband remarks my joyful looks."

In another case, a gruff father was opposed to them and to the meetings of Mr. Moody and Sankey, but he was softened by their attention to his children, and they induced him to go and hear, and a life's prejudices are gone, and the man has joined a Bible-class.

A superintendent reports:—"At present I have eleven decided children of the Lord as visitors in my district, and it is a great pleasure to hear them one and all pour out their hearts in prayer together for London. Though they were strangers to each other before, still there is such a liberty given them, and the more they go on in the work, the happier they are, and they would not give it up on any account. These are the men and women we want! In very few instances have there been any refusals, and almost all have received them courteously. My visitors belong to, I think, six different sections of the Church, yet all are of one accord, and I look for great results. About sixteen houses a-day were on an average visited at first; but this was found too many. I hope in another week or so to take on another district. We are all persuaded it is of the Lord. Some of the visitors were timid at first; but not so now. I strongly insist on the couples always commencing their work by united prayer."

In Liverpool and in Manchester the Medical Missionaries, Dr. Owles and Dr. Ziemann, were heartily co-operating with the house-to-house visitation. In London, the visitation would be sadly lacking in what the Lord enjoined unless it became a great blessing to the sick, lame, blind, and especially to the deaf and dumb, and thousands of needy ones. In Manchester, ladies sang to them sweetly and softly. Where are the sweet, soft singers of London? Are not the flowers of this spring-time given to gladden the hearts of the weary, aged, and sick? Yea, ten thousand loving-kindnesses, some gentle and sweet, and some substantial, are needed. And where are the prayers of faith spoken of by James (v. 15)? See how the Lord's loving-kindnesses convinced the people. They were beyond measure astonished, saying, "He hath done all things well. He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak" (Mark vii. 37). REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

THE PASTORS' COLLEGE.

Last week, the anniversary meeting of the Pastors' College, Metropolitan Tabernacle, was held in the new College buildings at the back of Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, at Newington. About 200 ladies and gentlemen sat down to tea, after which a meeting was held in the College chapel, under the chairmanship of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P.

Mr. Spurgeon, in presenting the report, gave a general sketch of the origin and progress of the work of the College. In remarking upon the necessity of the College, he said there were many friends who did not like to see these colleges, but when they heard a man banish the letter "h" from 'ouse, 'ome, and 'eaven, he did not like it either. It was one thing to take a certain young man and send him to an institution where he should be made fit for a minister, and it was quite another thing to say to a young man who had been preaching the gospel for two or three years, and whom God had set his seal upon, "Come to us, and we will give you such instruction as will enable you to address your congregations without shocking them by ungrammatical expressions." They only took young men who had been called to the ministry, and their object was not to make great scholars of them, or to enable them to take degrees. The only degree they cared about was that of "winning of souls." Their system was not that of residence. The brethren lodged out with various members of the church, and there were great advantages connected with that. The separateness of abode kept them in contact with Christian households, and occasionally they might be disturbed at their studies by the cries of children, which was a good thing for them, as it would serve to remind them that they were still among the children of men, and were not so sublimely elevated by becoming students as to be put out by little troubles. He gave a very gratifying account of the financial state of the College.

Mr. Morley, who was warmly greeted, said he was there, in the first place, as an expression of the hearty affection and sympathy for their pastor. When he came there he left all sense of denominational difference at the door. They all regarded with deep interest and thankfulness the work Mr. Spurgeon was carrying on. He was thankful as an Englishman for the existence of that great establishment; he referred to the Tabernacle as well as the College. As a resident in London, who had been born in London, and who had watched the increase of its population, he was often appalled by the thought of how the population was to be reached. As treasurer of the Home Missionary Society, he could testify to the fact that in very many districts the young men from the Tabernacle College were preaching Christ, and were exhibiting a very deep sympathy with the spiritual condition of the people. It had been said that Messrs. Moody and Sankey did not reach the lowest strata of society. He believed they were stirring up the Christian life in London, and were making Christian people reflect on what a very serious thing it was to profess to be a Christian, and that there were responsibilities and obligations, as well as privileges, belonging to the name. He thought that clergymen were receiving an immense stimulus from these distinguished men, who were making Christians as such to feel that they were no longer to depend on colleges or pulpits or professional ministers, but must exercise a ministry themselves upon those with whom they were brought into contact.—Daily News.

GRACE.

ADDRESS BY MR. MOODY AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, MARKET, ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON LAST.

I want to call your attention to the word "Grace." It is one of the words in the English language that is very little understood. I have seldom found an inquirer who really understood the meaning of the word. When we talk to the anxious, almost the first thing they say is that they are not worthy. These are the very ones with whom the Lord deals in grace. The word grace means, "undeserved mercy," "unmerited favour." I think it would do us good sometimes to go to the dictionary and find out the meaning of those words we hear in church four or five times in every sermon. I have no doubt I heard the word a thousand times before I knew the meaning of it. The very meaning of the word throws a flood of light into the soul. As long as men try to make out that they are worthy to receive anything from God, they will never get a crumb from God's table. But the moment a man takes his place as a poor miserable unworthy wretch, then God can deal in grace with him.

In the first place, let us find out that has been flowing so freely for the last 1800 years, and of which so many have drunk and lived. Men are very anxious just now to find out the source of the Nile; my friends, it is a good deal more important to find out the source of this wonderful stream of grace.

Turn with me to John i. 14. "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us... full of grace and truth." There never was but one man in this world who was "full of grace and truth;" that was the Man Christ Jesus, the God-Man. He was so full of grace that when the poor woman who had the issue of blood touched his garment, grace flowed right out, and she was healed. If there is any poor sin-sick soul here to-day, if you will only come into contact with Him, you can be saved this very minute. There will be virtue coming forth from Him that will heal you.

Verse 17. "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." No one was ever saved by the law. It was never given to save us by; it never did, and never can, save any one. It was given to show man his need of grace.

Rom. v. 15. "For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many." Some one has spoken of the great mystery of sin coming into the world, and our dear friend and labourer in the vineyard—and I think a man who has been used of God as much as any I have met in Scotland (Dr. Bonar)—says it is a greater mystery still, that the Son of God came down to earth and bore the brunt of it. He tasted death for us, and took our sins away; He became the source of grace and also the channel for the blessing of God to flow in.

I Cor. i. 3, 4. "Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ." The thought that I want to bring out here is, that it is

A FREE GIFT.

God gave Him up freely for us all; and if it is a gift, then we must receive it as a gift. Men talk about grace, but I don't think that in our dealings with each other we know much about it. Suppose I go to the Bank, and borrow £1000 for thirty days, they make me give them my note of hand, which reads something like this: "Thirty days after date, I promise to pay," etc. They give me "three days of grace," as it is called, but they make me pay interest for it. And if I do not pay, they will sell my goods, in order that they may be paid. Why, there is no grace in it at all. If it was grace, they would give me principal and interest too; that is grace. But that is about all men know of grace; it is about as near as they get to it. But the God of all grace gives us freely—gives us all, without money and without price.

Look at Matt. xxi. 28—32. The great truth taught here is, that those who believed the gospel were saved. The publicans and harlots, the vilest men and women who lived while Christ was on earth, all who would come and take the grace that was offered to them, would be saved. The whole Jewish nation just stumbled upon this one thing, self-righteousness. As I tried to prove the other day, is this miserable self-righteousness. I would to God He would strip us of every rag of it to-day. Those Jews went about to establish their own righteousness. They said, "We are of the seed of Abraham; we believe in Moses and the law. We are a good deal better than the nations round about us!" And Christ could not deal in grace with them at all. They were very religious men; in fact, they were the most religious people of the day. They went to all the services, and made long prayers, and yet Christ says to them boldly, "The publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." Why? Because they repented, and took salvation as a free gift.

THE GREATEST ENEMY WE HAVE

It is so now. Very often, when you go to preach to people, they begin to draw their filthy rags of self-righteousness about them, and they say, "Oh yes; that is very good for drunkards and thieves, but not for the like of us. We are educated people; we are refined; we go to church every Sunday; we say our prayers." But that is all. They have all the forms, but not the living Christ. Here is a poor, miserable, fallen one, who takes salvation as a gift, and she is saved, just because she takes it as a gift. That is the lesson taught to us here—one of the hardest lessons we can learn. A great many are trying to work their way into the kingdom of God. A man said he had been forty-two years learning three things—first, that he could do nothing towards his salvation; second, that God did not require him to do anything; and, third, that Christ had done it all Himself.

The self-righteous men and women do not believe that. Many of you will say, "What kind of doctrine is it that that American is preaching?" A man went down to the East-end last Sunday night to hear me preach. I was trying to convince them that salvation was a free gift. He said to the friend who took him down, "It was a very strange doctrine to preach, that a man could be saved so easily, and without doing anything." But if I understand my Bible, it is "to him that worketh not, but believeth." These are the very things that are keeping men out of the kingdom of God. When Christ died on the cross, He said, "It is finished," and He meant what He said. All we have to do is to take salvation as a gift.

Yes, but you say, What about the passage where it says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling"? Well, you must have it before you can work it out. If I say to my boy, "You are going to Paris; here is £1000 for you; see that you take care of it." He would say, "But I must have it before I can take care of it." Or if I ask him to work out a piece of land, and to till it, and care for it; I must first give him the piece of land.

Turn to Mark vii. 24. "And from thence He arose and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into a house, and would have no man know it; but He could not be hid." He was so full of grace and truth that it would flow out. When a man is full of grace and truth, he can't be hid.

of itself; you do not have to make it shine. "For a certain woman, etc.—it is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it unto the dogs." Dogs! If that woman had been like a great many at the present day, she would have been greatly offended. "What! you call me a Gentile dog! I know of some of the seed of Abraham who live down in my neighbourhood, a good deal worse than I am. There is a Jewish woman next door does a good many things I would not do. To be sure I am a Gentile; but I am a good deal better than a good many Jews." That is the way many women speak now; the result is, they never get the blessing. What did this woman do? "She answered and said, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." She took her place as a poor miserable dog. Anything, so that she should get the blessing she asked for. My friends, a crumb from God's table is a thousand times better than all the devil ever gave you. She took her place at his feet, and He said unto her, "For this saying, go thy way, the devil is gone out of thy daughter." She got more than she asked for; she only asked a crumb, and she got a whole loaf. You will find that all through the three years Christ was down here, He was trying to teach the Jews but they never understood it. Here was a poor woman who came and put herself in the place of a poor, miserable, lost one, who wanted a favour from Him. And how quickly He granted it! I will challenge you to find any man or woman who ever came to Christ, and made out that they were unworthy, but He blessed them at once.

Turn to the 7th chapter of Luke, there you have the same lesson. "When He had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, He entered into Capernaum. And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick and ready to die." You know how, when people are in distress, and burdened, then they go to the Lord and cry unto Him. "And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto Him the elders of the Jews, beseeching Him that He would come and heal his servant. And when they came to Jesus, they besought Him instantly, saying that he was worthy for whom He should do this: for he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue." It is the same old story that we hear now. This man was worthy because he had built them a synagogue. So today they say, "Oh yes, he is a very good man; he built a church; of course he will get to heaven. He built a cathedral not long ago, and endowed colleges and seminaries." They don't say

HOW HE MADE THE MONEY.

Perhaps it was by distilling whiskey and ruining men's souls. But nevertheless, he is worthy; the Lord is under obligations to him.

That a man should give away large sums of money may be very good in its place, but if it means that a man is not to take the gift of God as a poor beggar, it all goes for nought. God won't accept it. A lady told me she did not believe what I teach, that we are saved for nothing. She had an uncle who had given a great deal of money, and endowed schools, and built churches; and, although he was not a Christian, and did not make any profession; although he did not believe in Christ as a Saviour, she believed he had a right to demand a seat in heaven." She was more honest than a good many people. If they don't say it right out, they believe they have a right to demand a seat in heaven. So those Jews asked Jesus to leave his work and go instantly, as this centurion was worthy, and had built them a synagogue.

Jesus went with them. It seemed as if He was going to do what they wished. But, bear in mind, the Lord knew a good deal more about the centurion than the Jews did. "Lord, trouble not thyself, for I am not worthy that Thou shouldst enter under my roof." The centurion tells a different story about himself, and he knew his own heart better than the Jews did. There was faith and humility for you! "Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee, but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed." When a man speaks well of himself, no one else will speak very well of him. But when a man has got to know the true state of his own heart, he will not be talking about how worthy he is. He feels he is a poor, miserable, vile wretch, and down in the dust he comes; then God can meet him. "I say unto you I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." This centurion did not belong to the seed of Abraham; here the Lord found another poor Gentile outside of the house of Israel who understood what grace was. And He turned to these Jews and just held him up to them and preached the gospel. Here is a man who understood what he must do to find favour with the Lord. God could deal in grace with him, and He blessed him there. He got all he asked for. And so, my friends, if you want to be saved, make out that you are not worthy. Do not come as the Pharisee we were talking of yesterday, and say how good you are, and how righteous you are. But the moment you come to God as a poor, miserable, lost sinner, you can take salvation as a gift.

I want to prove to you from Scripture, and I think I can, that we are SAVED WITHOUT WORKS.

I know how people cling to the doctrine of salvation by works. I know some of you will go away, and say I have been preaching false doctrine. Let us turn to the law and the testimony. If I do not preach according to the Word of God, do not believe a word I say; but if it is according to this Word, I have a right to demand that you believe it. England professes to believe the Bible, and England has done more for the Bible than all the other nations of the earth. I believe that is why God has blessed England so; and every Englishman ought to stand by the Word of God. I am glad to see so many of you bringing your Bibles with you.

Eph. ii. 8. "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." There is no chance for boasting, or for a man to work his way up to heaven. A Scotchman said it took two to convert him. How was that? It took the Lord and himself. What did he do? He fought against God all he could, and God did all the rest. Yes, God does it all. I never saw a man who could say that he had ever done anything towards his own salvation.

2 Tim. i. 9. "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Not according to our works. He calls on men to come, works or no works. They don't come in at all; our works don't help towards our salvation.

Rom. xi. 6. "If by grace, then is it no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace." Don't you see, if it is grace, if it is a gift, then it cannot be by works. I hire a man to dig in my garden for a day, and at its close I give him eight shillings; the man has earned it. He goes home, and his wife says, "Where did you get that money?" He says, "I worked for it." But suppose another man comes to me and says, "I have been sick for the last six weeks, and unable to work; my family are suffering for want of food," and I give him eight shillings. The one is a gift; the other is not. Now God is a Sovereign; He is not down here selling salvation—offering you salvation if you will pay something for it. What can you offer to the King of kings? What have you got that God will accept? Nothing but your sins.

Suppose some great wealthy sovereign, such as the Queen of England, should offer you some valuable present, and you did not like to take it without making some acknowledgment; and suppose you were to offer the Queen a penny for her present. What a ridiculous idea—offering Her Majesty a penny! My friends, it would be a great deal better to do that than to try and offer God anything to save you. If He saves you, it will be as a sovereign. He will be under no obligation, but He will give salvation right out of his heart. He wants to give it to every soul here to-day. The question is, will you have it or reject it?

I can imagine some of you say, "I don't think a person can be saved without being baptized and partaking of the Lord's Supper." God forbid that I should say anything against any church ordinances; they are all right in their own place. But I want to say, and I want you to understand that have nothing to do with salvation as a gift. We must first of all be saved before we begin to work; after that you can work day and night. You cannot work too hard then; but you must work from the cross, not towards it. As long as you are working to be saved, you are trying to add something to the finished work of Jesus. My friends, keep your hands off the cross. If God is satisfied, surely you ought to be satisfied. Salvation is distinct and separate from all church ordinances. The last man whom Christ saved before He expired on the cross was that poor thief. He had a nail through each of his hands; he could not work for his salvation. He had a great nail through both his feet; he could not run on any errands for the Lord. When he had the use of his feet, they were swift to shed blood; and when he had the use of his hands, they were doing the devil's service. He could not have been baptized; there was not a man in Judea who would have baptized him. As he hung there by the Saviour's side, he cried out, "Lord, remember me." That prayer was right to the point. I hope there will be some who will make that prayer to-day. Don't be looking round to see how it suits your neighbours; take it home to yourself. To-day let the prayer go up from your hearts, "Lord, remember me." No one gets salvation till they come down to this point. That prayer fell on the ears of the Son of God, and immediately there came the answer, "This day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." Christ snatched him from the jaws of death, from the grasp of the devil, and took him into Paradise with Him. He was never baptized, nor partook of the Lord's Supper. Perhaps he could not even see Christ; but he could hear Him when He prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Perhaps he thought to himself, "I want an interest in that prayer," and he cried out, "Lord, remember me." He only asked to be remembered, but Christ took him into Paradise with Him. He was not ashamed to walk arm-in-arm with the poor thief through Paradise. If there is a poor, lost sinner here to-day, Christ is able and willing to save you; He will save you now, if you will let Him. He wants to save you now.

The gift of salvation is offered to you to-day, without money and without price. What are you going to do with it?

IT WILL BE A TERRIBLE THING

for any one to go down to hell from England, the land of an open Bible, that speaks of the free gift—a land where the gospel is proclaimed more faithfully than in most other parts of the world. My friends, your hell will be two hells. To-day, while God is offering you this gift, is pressing it upon you, open your heart and say, "Come in, blessed Saviour, come in. Thou God of all grace, take up thy abode in my heart!" and He will come.

One more passage before I close. Tit. ii. 11. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men." Hath appeared to all men. I do not see what a man is going to say, if he goes down to death without salvation. That verse will blaze out before the throne of God. If men are lost, it will be because they spurn the gift of God. Did you ever stop to think

WHAT IT COST GOD TO REDEEM US?

To be sure, salvation is as free as the very air, but it cost God the Son of his bosom. Look at that scene at Calvary, the Son of God dying there, and God looking down from heaven. Nay, He refused to look upon Him. He turned away his face. There He was, smitten for you and me. "God gave Him up freely for us all." What shall we do with Him? We must do one of two things—receive Him or reject Him. If we reject Him,

He will reject us. If we receive Him here, He will receive us yonder. If we make room for Him here, He will make room for us in the many mansions. He will remember us when we come into that world of light, if we will only receive Him here.

WHAT WILL YOU DO WITH CHRIST?

Just receive Him as He is offered to you. If I should say, "If any one here would like this Bible, I will make them a present of it," there is no man or woman here but could rise and come forward and take it. That little boy, that little girl, that aged mother, could do it. Let me tell you, the gift of God is offered just as freely. Will you have Him? It seems to me the grace of God ought to break every heart here to-day.

I was talking to a mother in the inquiry-room the other night, and she said God would not forgive her. "Are you sure?" I said. "Yes, He will not forgive me because I am such a sinner;" and she was weeping bitterly. I said, "Are you a mother?" "I am." "Well, supposing you had got a prodigal child, who had run away from home. If he should come back at midnight and knock at the door, and you should hear his voice, and go to the door, and he should say, 'Mother, I have done wrong, but now I have come home to ask you to forgive me; will you forgive me?' What would you do? Would you push him out and lock the door?" "Oh no, I would be very glad to get him back." "Well, do you think you are more merciful than your God? Do you think God is not willing to save you?" She brushed away the tears, and she said, "Is that it?" Down she went on her knees; her tears were wiped away, and she went away with her face lit up at the thought that Christ was her Saviour.

Will you receive or reject Him to-day?

HENRY VARLEY IN NEW YORK.

Our beloved brother is still in New York. Last Sunday, being unable to have Barnum's Hippodrome, he preached in the Skating Rink. There were about five to six thousand present. The Christians in New York are mightily stirred by his preaching, so that the most striking feature of his work is, that he sets believers to work to bring others to hear the gospel. Another event is the opening of the most recently built, and, at the same time, one of the largest, Episcopal churches in this city to Mr. Varley, and the enthusiastic co-operation given him by its apostolic rector, Dr. Stephen H. Tyng. Mr. Varley proposes to stay in New York until Sunday, April 11, when we hope he will take a much-needed rest before visiting Boston, whither he goes next in response to an almost unanimous invitation from the pastors of that city.

Our brother is meeting with persistent criticism, especially from some leading ministers "conspicuous for their absence."

FAREWELL MEETING TO REV. W. E. AND MRS. BOARDMAN.—A meeting for instruction on scriptural holiness, and to bid adieu to the Rev. W. E. and Mrs. Boardman, who are taking their final leave of England, will be held (D.V.) on Tuesday, April 27, at the Cannon-street Hotel, from 3.30 to 9 P.M., with an interval for refreshments. We have no doubt that many of our readers, who have been benefited by these dear and devoted Christians, will be glad to embrace this last opportunity of meeting them.

HYDE PARK HALL.—Meetings have been held here for more than twelve months by Mr. Charles Cook. The hall has been enlarged at considerable expense, and room made for 140 additional chairs. Encouraging letters have been received from numbers who have been converted, both in the park and in the hall. Scarcely a week passes without such letters being received. The annual rental of the hall is £90, and Mr. Cook appeals to believers for their sympathy and prayers. The work in the park is arduous, on account of the numbers of infidels who oppose. Mr. F. A. Bevan, Lord Congleton, and Mr. C. Underwood, to whom the efforts here are well known, have rendered valuable assistance.

THE DEMONIC.

(MARK V. 6, 7.)

ADDRESS BY REV. W. TAYLOR, OF CALIFORNIA, AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

I want to call your attention to the deplorable condition of this man, and how he got out of it. He was evidently a very powerful man, physically. He had many friends—at least, he had friends, whether many or few. The Lord Jesus speaks of his friends, and was acquainted with them. He may have had a praying mother; possibly a good father. He may have had a wife and children. We do not know, but still we know that he had friends who were greatly interested in him, and much distressed on account of his deplorable state. He did not reach that state just at once, but by gradations, which were grievous to his friends, and finally he became an outlaw, and an outcast, and a dangerous man. You see him ranging the hills and valleys of Gadara, a terror to the neighbourhood. They tried to arrest him. No doubt the police of that day were put on his track, and now you see him running up the hill and they after him. Down into the hollow, across a gully, over a hedge, and round a pond, and on, on, on. Now they seize him. They have got him down, and you see the blacksmith coming with great chains, and a hammer; they “double in” on him there, and put these chains round his arms, and rivet them tightly, then they bring great iron bars and fasten them on his legs. They thought that now surely they had got him, and were doubtless just making arrangements to take him off and put him in some place where he could do no further damage, when a circumstance occurs to astonish them. He rends these chains asunder, and bit by bit he wrenches the iron from off his legs, tearing his own flesh, and making the police run for their lives. Then they get a stronger force and start in pursuit of him again, catching him, and putting him in chains, but the violent man casts them from him, and this is repeated many times. The Saviour tells us that he had often been bound, but that was the result every time.

He must have had wonderful physical power of a demoniacal kind, which entered into his muscle and gave him more than mortal energy. So no man could bind him or tame him—a hopeless case. Oh! what a deplorable state to be in, to be possessed by devils—a legion of devils—ten regiments of them. How wonderful is the capacity of the human soul, designed to be a habitation of God through the Spirit, but when God is out there is room for a legion of devils to get in. What a dreadful state! Do you say, “Thank the Lord, we do not have them in these days?” I wonder if we do not. You say, “I never saw any.” No, indeed, you never saw any pains, never saw any diseases, and yet they are material, no doubt. So are these fallen spirits—not one, but many. There is one great prince of the power of the air, called emphatically The Devil. He commands the power of the air, that power numbering millions, doubtless, of fallen angels, corrupted and ruined by sin; and because of man’s assimilation to and alliance with them, and rebellion against God, it is a part of man’s punishment, and a part of his discipline, to be subjected to the power of devils, while he rebels against God. Will you say, “I do not think we have got any devils in these days?” Indeed! What is the meaning of that bunch of keys that I see? Something wrong at your house. Have you got the door locked? Look within; look about anywhere; in every direction, you will see the proofs. You don’t see the devils, but you see the effects.

You see a man taken with the cholera. Every muscle is contracted, he is suffering the most intense agony. What is the matter? The doctor says he has got the cholera. Did you ever see it? Who ever saw it? It is an invisible thing, and yet it desolates whole cities sometimes. You see its effects, and you know it. Behold; what is the meaning of these effects?

If people are so bad as we see they are; guilty of such an innumerable line of sins as disgrace the race and curse the world; if man, according to his own account, is so bad as that, then we do not need any devils. You make yourselves as bad as we are accustomed to regard you with your moral dispositions, your heart is bad, and though we do not, as I say, need devils, yet it is a lamentable fact that they exist now. The whole of the carnal world lies in the power of the wicked one, taken captive by the devil at his will. “Don’t believe there is any,” says one. Then your judgment approves the law of God, does it not? You consent that the law of God is good, and that you ought to obey God, and if you are entirely free as you would claim to be, then stand up in your loyal, free manhood, and say, “I will never sin again. I will show that I am not under the power of sin and devils. I will do right.” Try your hand at it. You have tried it a hundred times, as I did myself. You have tried to quit sinning, and yet you find that there is an invisible mysterious power that controls you. I tell you, it is the devil. You say, “He doesn’t drive me as he did that man who wandered amongst the tombs.” Oh, no. If he drove you as he drove that man, he would drive you to Christ.

I was visiting a lunatic asylum in Melbourne some years ago, the superintendent of which is a godly man. He said to me, that some of the most desperate cases they had in charge, in their lucid moments, had been instructed of God and led to Christ, and had got all right at once. The fact is, that as soon as the devils were got out of them they became sane. A great many of such cases may be attributed to other causes; but do we realize how many are attributable to this? The devil knows that man is a religious being, and must have a religion of some sort. In heathen countries where they have not the light, he gives them a religion that will be most insulting to God and most debasing to man. He gives him a dirty stone to which he bows down, saying, “This is my God;” but in enlightened countries his policy is to furnish every man with a religion as nearly like the real thing as possible. He would have you all belong to some church. The devil is ashamed of a man who won’t join some church, and the more ceremony you attach to it the better, only you must stop short of submitting to God and receiving Christ. Most of Satan’s subjects are religious. Even those who openly profess infidelity are vying with Christians in outward good works.

Yet, deplorable as was the case of this man, there was probably in his case, as you see, more hope than for these pious servants of Satan who think it all right with them. The great feature in this man’s case was, that he found out how deplorable was the condition he was in, and then looked for the remedy. What was the remedy in this case? The only remedy for all such cases. You see him standing there in the tombs. You see the great scars on his arms, and the wounds that are upon his legs, which are rent and bleeding. You see the blood running down his temples. He is so wretched a man that he has tried to commit suicide, for he has cut himself with stones. Glancing from him your eye falls on the smooth Sea of Galilee, and you see a little ship approaching, and you watch it as it nears the eastern shore. Out goes her anchor, and a little party descends from her. Soon there is a great commotion. The people are running from every direction to the spot. Heralds announce the arrival of a great one, and now you see the people coming from all the villages surrounding Gadara, bringing their sick, their lame, their blind, their halt, their deaf and their dumb, and you hear the tidings that Jesus of Nazareth has come. This man among the tombs stands and listens, and says: “Oh! surely, that is the Man who casts out devils. Oh! if I could only get to Jesus; He would deliver me from these devils.” He looked, he reasoned, and he decided to go to Jesus. He ran. You see him going down the hill. He sees Jesus afar off, but as he nears Him the crowd begin to separate. They give him, in the popular phraseology, “a wide berth.” They were terrified. Very likely they thought he was going to attack the Lord Jesus. Possibly that was the idea of the devils that were in this man. There had been so many cast out in Galilee, that they might have thought, by attacking Jesus in a legion, they might have stood some chance. But the poor fellow got the start of them, and running right up to Jesus, he fell at his feet and worshipped Him. His prayer is not recorded, but he, no doubt, prayed as other poor sinners did; "Oh! Jesus, Thou art the man to cast out devils. Oh! Jesus, deliver me from my tremendous oppression."

There is the penitent. But hark! What do the devils do; they have caught up to him, and they make him cry, "What have I to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of the Most High. I adjure Thee that Thou torment me not." Do you call him a penitent? Nay, rather, you say that he must be drunk. Ah! the Lord Jesus knew he was a penitent, and understood his case. There is in this narrative a lesson for us all—nay many lessons, and though they may be made very brief by me to-night, they are yet very essential.

You see, first, the deplorable state of that man in his sins when in the power of the devils; how utterly helpless he is; and remember, that every sinner here is just as helpless as he was. You see, secondly, the attraction of God's awakening Spirit that comes to us in our utter helplessness and wretchedness, and inspires, beneath the ribs of evil, the throes of a new life, and enkindles the desire to come to Christ. Under the influence of these feelings he looked, he reasoned, he decided to come to Jesus, he ran and he fell at his feet and worshipped Him. Now you see, in the third place, the repellent power of the carnal nature, and of the Satanic agency under the influence of which he puts in that rebutting plea, "What have I do with Thee, Thou Son of the Most High God. I adjure Thee that Thou torment me not." This is apparently a direct contradiction.

That is a lesson for you to learn, because every poor sinner, in coming to Christ, encounters this very thing, if not to the same extent—the same repellent power animating his own nature, and the Satanic agency. No sinner ever got to Christ, I apprehend, who did not encounter this; and that is just the thing that you do not understand, because you feel such darkness and hardness, and such wicked thoughts in your mind and such a storing up of enmity to God and good people, that you say, "I cannot come to Jesus feeling that way; if I could get rid of this hardness, this dreadful darkness; if I could only feel differently, then I would come." That is the way the devil cheats you. Suppose that man had reasoned thus: would he have come to Christ? He could not get the consent of the devils to go to Christ. The only thing was for him to come just as he was, with all his hardness of heart and wickedness—accept God and believe in Jesus Christ. That is the only way in which you can come, my friend. No other way.

A man came to me one day and said, "I feel I have a great many devils in me. I am sure I cannot get them all out at once, so I mean to crush them one at a time." "My friend," I said, "you will never get them out on that principle. If the Lord Jesus Christ undertakes the work He will have them all out in a moment;" and that brings me to the next point, viz., the promptness with which the Lord Jesus Christ undertakes such a case, and the despatch with which He delivers such a soul. How long did it take Him to get rid of ten regiments of devils? The poor sinner surrendered himself and with all his devils, he accepted Christ; he did not get relief first. And perhaps it is the same with you here. You are praying for relief instead of receiving relief: praying for deliverance instead of accepting the Deliverer. Do not cease to pray, but pray as a means to an end. The thing is to submit as you are—hard and dark, with all your devils—and accept Christ. This man received Christ with a legion in him. That is the way he got them out. By faith he received Christ, and the Lord Jesus despatched the devils very quickly. He surrendered and received Christ, and the Saviour said to the devils, "Come out of him," and every devil leaped and cleared out of his heart in a second. Indeed, they were frightened, for they thought that Jesus would send them down into the pit, and begged earnestly He would not.

Now these are important lessons for you to study. Then will you submit to-night? My unsaved brother, will you consent to be delivered to-night from your sins and from the power of the devil? Now, remember, the Lord Jesus is here. The devils are invisible and the Deliverer is invisible. The devils are real and your sins are real, and as the devils are invisible so also are your sins invisible. The sins that come out are merely little evidences, or outward indications, of the horrible sins that are within. Not one in a hundred gets out. The disease is invisible in your soul, and the devils are invisible, but none the less real. Christ is invisible, but none the less real also. The diseases of your soul are present, and the Deliverer is present. He is here to-night, will you receive Him?

Where will these devils lead you to? Look back into the past. What dreadful disgrace have they not brought you into? What horrible complications! What dreadful darkness and hardness! What deplorable scepticism! I will tell you more. Satan is leading you down the broad way to destruction. He is leading you through the excesses of your own appetites and mental affections. You do not know it, but I warn you it is so, and if you doubt it, just turn about; determine that you will not travel along your present road any longer, and you will feel as the atheist did who came to hear the gospel, and went back convinced, saying, "If there is a God then He made me, and He must be interested in my fate: if He made my ears, He must hear; and I will speak to Him. For the first time in my life I went and knelt down to pray, and I had no sooner got on my knees than I was convinced there was a devil trying to prevent me." If you doubt it, I say again, try it. While you are going on quietly in the current of your carnal nature, you do not feel the force and pressure of the Satanic agency; but just tack about, just turn to go in the other direction, and you will find it out.

It is a pitiable thing for men and women—British men and women, who boast of their liberty, and justly so—I say it is a pitiable thing for them to be slaves of Satan, is it not? I remember when I was preaching in Canada West, some years ago, at a camp meeting, that I explained the horrible bondage of the sinner in his sins, and said, "God is here to deliver you, and anybody may prove that. Any honest sinner may prove that God does not set you to study mysterious things, but to examine the facts of the case, and hearken to his invitation, and prove Him and see. Come and prove it! Who will prove it?" Up sprang a fine-looking man, a magistrate, whom I came to know afterwards, and he said, "I will!" He had a hard struggle, for he was very dark, and his complications were very great. He did not get relief that afternoon, but the night of the same day, at the next service, he was again on his knees before God, waiting, in earnest, importunate prayer, for grace to submit to and accept Christ. By-and-by, after about an hour (not that it is necessary to take so long, for it just takes as long as you are in coming to the point of surrender), he found peace and acceptance, and then, with a beaming face, I heard him exclaim, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name. He has forgiven all my iniquities, He has healed all my diseases; He has redeemed my soul from death. Thank God, I have got liberty now." The next morning he rose before a large congregation, and said, "Friends, I have always boasted that I was a free Briton, but yesterday afternoon I found out that I was a poor slave—the most degraded slave in the world—a slave to the worst of all masters—a slave to the devil. But, thank God, I was last night enabled to come to my great Deliverer; I surrendered to Him; I received Him, and became a free man, emancipated from the slavery of sin and the thralldom of the devil. This morning I am a free man. I breathe to-day the air of freedom as I never did before, and though none the less a Briton am a free man in Christ, God is my Father; Christ is my Saviour and Deliverer," and so he went on his way rejoicing.

I stayed all night with him on a subsequent occasion, and he said that in spite of continued struggles of the Wicked One, the Lord Jesus had preserved him daily. Just so is it with us. Any man may come to hearken to God's words and yield to the truth of God's Spirit, surrender himself, and accept Christ. Will you do it?

Oh! what a dreadful thing to die in your sins. These devils are just waiting on you. They do not want to press you too much. They just want to tow you along. A traveller saw a great number of pigs walking after a man, and said, "I wonder what causes those pigs to go after him." "Don't you see a little pouch by his side?" was the reply. "Yes." "Well, every now and then he drops a pea or two from it, and so he is leading them to the slaughter." And so Satan is leading you, my unsaved friends. He is throwing out his little inducements—throwing out peas, and leading you into his slaughter-house. The case is just like that of a man in Baltimore. An intimate friend of his, a banker, was converted, and became anxious that he should submit to God as well. "Oh, no," said F—, "I will wait and see the effect on you." The banker in every respect lived a consistent life, and showed that he was a new man in Christ Jesus. Mr. F— was often very much awakened, but he put his good impressions off, and said, "I will think about it," and so he kept thinking about it till Satan wound him up. His understanding became darkened, his conscience seared, and his heart callous, so that he was utterly past feeling. And then he came down to death, and when he was dying he said, "Oh! take them away." "What is there? We see nothing." "Oh! yes: they are devils; I see them now. They are just around my bed; they are waiting to drag my soul down to hell. Oh! can't you protect me, and take them away." "Oh," said the attendants, "you're not in your right mind." "Yes I am; I know you all, and I know that I am dying in my sins. I have rejected Christ. I have left myself in the hands of devils till they have destroyed me, and they are waiting now to drag my soul down to hell. Can you do nothing for me? What can you do? I see them." "We don't see them," said his friends. "But I do." His soul's vision was opening, and if your soul's vision were opened you could see them lurking about you like so many snakes. The vision would be a startling one!

If you, my saved brother, had your soul-vision opened you could see the angels from heaven waiting to bear you to your sainted mother. The soul-vision of Dives was opened, and he saw Lazarus in Abraham's bosom. It was a very powerful vision that which could see out of the depths of hell, and recognize Lazarus at that distance. Sometimes this soul-vision opens when the world is disappearing from view. Good people sometimes see angels, and bad people the spirits of the lost. This man of whom I am speaking saw these wretched devils that had been enslaving him and leading him away from God, and dragging him down to hell. Now, don't risk it, my friends. If a man told you, just as you were retiring to rest, "I saw a cobra (one of the most deadly snakes of the East) in your bed," what would you say? Would you say, "Oh, never mind, I'll risk it for one night," regarding an animal whose sting is certain death five minutes after it is given? Would you say, "I'll turn in and hope he won't bite me to-night; I'll try and be quiet, and risk it?" Would you say so? I do not think we could get you to go to bed there. I think you would have to be assured that the cobra was out before you stepped in.

Now the cobra can only kill the body, but these wretched serpents of hell are more deadly than it, for they can kill the soul. Are you going to get into bed with them to-night? Are you going to let them coil about you? God bless you, my unsaved brother, in any attempt you may make to get them out. I cannot get them out from you; no man or angel can do it. No one can do it but the Lord Jesus, who both can and will, for it is His business. He ejected a legion from this man. Some people have fewer devils than others. Mary Magdalene had only seven, but whatever number you have you may get them out to-night. Will you come to Christ or will you just fold your arms and sleep with these devils, and let them quietly drag you down to hell? God pity and help you to submit to-night. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

FOR THE YOUNG.

LETTER FROM A SCHOOLGIRL ON MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MEETINGS.

Two weeks ago, we gave our readers a few extracts from a letter written by a schoolgirl to her mother on this subject. We then added that "Little Emily," as she calls herself, had since been to the meetings, and we now give our young readers some extracts from her next letter to her parent, and we are sure both they and our older readers will peruse them with pleasure, and we trust, with profit. We should be glad to receive the impressions of others of our young friends about this great movement. They would, no doubt, prove interesting and instructive. Of course the letters must be the bona fide productions of the writers. We can personally vouch for the letters written by "Little Emily," as we know the writer, and have copied from the originals.

"My dear Mother,—I told you in my last I should not rest until I had been to hear the great revivalists. I have been, not once only, but three times, and am more than ever convinced of the greatness and nobleness of their work. You should see the multitudes, with eager faces, watching for the gates to open and admit them. One would suppose some wonderful operatic or dramatic performance was thrown open to the public—a performance that could never be witnessed again—instead of the singing of a few sweet hymns of praise, together with some earnest words about Jesus Christ, and his great love for sinners. Yes, dear mother, Mr. Moody is really in earnest. I wish you could hear him, and judge for yourself.

"We arrived at the hall about 1.20 (this was my second attendance), and were admitted by ticket to the front gallery, from which we witnessed the children comprising the various charitable institutions in and around London assemble. What a glorious sight to see their happy, cheerful faces! Even the poor cripples seemed to forget their affliction, and to enjoy the privilege of being brought out on such an occasion. I think they felt their souls were being cared for as well as their poor, helpless bodies. The reserved seats were given to these poor suffering ones; this was very thoughtful and kind. It would have done your heart good to see how orderly and well-behaved this vast number was.

"And when Mr. Moody asked whether they believed God loved them, they answered 'Yes' so heartily. Again he asked, 'How do you know God loves you?' The answer was, 'Because He gave his only Son to die for us.' Mr. Moody again asked, 'Are you sure?' 'Yes, sir.' He then called for texts to prove that God loves children, and several were given.

"Then the singing was glorious. You should have heard first the girls, and then the boys, and afterwards the whole of the vast assembly, join softly in the choruses. Mr. Sankey sang a solo very beautifully, and at four p.m. a most impressive and delightful meeting was brought to a close.

"Seven of our number returned home, seven remained to the evening service; your Little Emily was amongst those who remained, and can assure you she thoroughly enjoyed it. Mr. Moody talked about God's everlasting love to his people, until one could but wish every one really knew what it was to experience the great love of God. I could have remained hours longer, and would love to attend every meeting. The singing is so sweet, reminding one of the land of perfect song, and filling one with longing desires to know and feel what it is to be there. I thought of Dr. B—— in his eternal, happy home; and although so sorry to lose him, could not wish him back here in this sinful world.

"We waited outside the gate for nearly two hours before we gained admission; we were, however, repaid for our patience by getting front seats in the gallery, where we heard every word beautifully.

"We passed the time from 4.30 to 6.30 in joining in the singing of the beautiful, familiar hymns, and this made the time appear very short.

"I am more satisfied now that I have heard and seen for myself what is being done, and believe really London and all the ends of the earth will have to thank God for this day.

"In conclusion, let me ask you to go and hear for yourself, as I am perfectly sure you would not regret it.—Your affectionate child, "EMILY."

MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON MEETINGS, HAYMARKET.

TUESDAY, APRIL 13.

"Sweet hour of prayer," was the opening song, and after the requests had been read by Mr. W. Graham, M.P., the meeting was led in prayer by Rev. D. McColl, of Wandsworth.

Mr. Moody read the story of the transfiguration, as recorded in the 9th chapter of Luke, to whom, he said, we are indebted for a knowledge of what was the subject of conversation at that wonderful conference. They did not speak about modern improvement and culture, so much thought of in these days; but about "the decease he was to accomplish at Jerusalem." It seemed as if that was the great event of time and eternity. At this most important of all the councils ever held on earth, there were the representatives of the Law, the Prophets, and the coming Church. Mr. Moody mentioned the striking fact that on the only three occasions when God spoke to his Son audibly from heaven, as far as recorded, it was with regard to his death. Let us make much of the death of Christ; let us preach "Christ, and Him crucified." Simply to preach the life and example of Christ will never save a dying world. If that was the theme that occupied the minds of these great ones, surely it ought to occupy ours.

I went one day, said Mr. Moody, to hear a man preach, and I was greatly disappointed; he preached simply about the death of Christ, and I thought I was going to hear something new. I was the guest of an aged pilgrim, and as he was engaged talking to a friend, I went home by myself. When I got there, I found them seated round the table, talking about the death of Jesus Christ, just as if it had happened in the city they lived in, and as they spoke about it, the tears trickled down their cheeks. I felt rebuked to see these two old men talking about Christ's death; it had not lost its power over their souls; it was fresh. May we never forget what Christ has done for us; may we never get tired of the old, old story. In season and out of season, let us speak much of the death of Christ; let us love and serve Him.

Mr. Moody prayed, his voice anon faltering with emotion, that the precious blood of Christ might be more precious than ever. "As we look at our lives we are ashamed of ourselves." In words of affectionate solicitude he commended to God Mr. Taylor in the North, and Mr. Blackwood in the West, while he and his colleague were busy in the East.

Mr. Sankey sang the solo part of "Give me the wings of faith to rise," while the audience assisted in the chorus, which partly repeated in the softest pianissimo, sounds very sweetly. A brief season of earnest prayer filled up the hour.

WEDNESDAY, 14TH.

Among the requests for prayer were those "For forty young men"; "For one who disbelieves in the efficacy of prayer himself." Praise was also returned by two ladies for their conversion; and by a teacher for the conversion of four members of his Bible-class.

Mr. Moody read the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican. It was, he said, the old story of Cain and Abel, of Esau and Jacob, of the elder brother and the prodigal. The worst enemy a Christian has is himself, his self-righteousness. In the Pharisee's prayer there are thirty-four words, and five of these capital P's. All the time he was talking about himself, and his prayer, which was no prayer at all, never got higher than his head. It would have been better if he had stopped at the end of the first four words, "God, I thank thee."

The publican's prayer was contained in seven words, yet there was more in it than in many of our prayers half-an-hour long. "God be merciful to me a sinner." Mercy belongs to God; sin to us. The publican put himself in the right place, and he went down to his house, not only pardoned but justified. He came as a sinner to God and God blessed him.

After Mr. Sankey had sung that sweet hymn, "Pass me not, O gentle Saviour,"

Mr. Radcliffe related an instance of the conversion of a dying person in the East-end, through the joint efforts of one of the house-to-house visitors and a city missionary. He said the people not yet visited in the North, and also the people in the West were absolutely waiting to be called on, and wondering what they would say to the visitors. Last Sunday morning, at Exeter Hall, forty of the Christians present at the meeting went out to the streets close by, and returned with numbers of people to the service. He urged one hundred of the Christian men and women to go out an hour before the evening meeting in the Agricultural Hall, and bring in the people to hear Mr. Taylor. A telegram had reached him stating that the whole of Dublin was to be visited—a much more difficult place to visit than London. The stay of the evangelists was passing away; let them all be up and at the work at once.

The Rev. Mr. Howie, of Glasgow, said they were beginning there to find out that they wanted, not a periodical, but a continuous outpouring of the Holy Spirit. He compared the recent movement in Glasgow to the lifting of vessels to a higher level when passing through the locks of a canal, by the water being poured in from the upper part of the canal. But it was difficult to keep up to the higher level, there was such a strange leakage always going on. He urged the Christians of London to embrace the present opportunity for all to come forward and help in personal effort.

Mr. Sankey told of a Christian lady in the North of London who, seeing a funeral leave the next house, thought it a favourable time for her to do something for Christ. She went in, found the husband had been carried to the grave, and the widow with her maid were left alone. She induced the widow to attend the Agricultural Hall services, where she went to the inquiry-room, and was spoken to by Mr. Sankey. He asked all to learn a lesson from the lady, and go to seek out those who are in darkness and sorrow, and begin at their own door.

Mr. Sankey having sung "Scatter seeds of kindness," which he said had been much blessed at other times, the Rev. H. Fox, of Westminster, prayed, and pronounced the benediction.

THURSDAY, 15TH.

At the noon meeting to-day, Admiral Sir Crawford Caffin read the following extracts from a letter he had just received from a friend in Liverpool, respecting the continuance of the work there:—

"I have, during the last few days, had the pleasure of seeing much of the revival work here, as I have done two or three times previously. There is no question of its reality, breadth, and permanence; all classes of society have been affected by it. I have spoken with many respectable and educated men, who have come savingly under its influence, although its most observable effects are with the humbler classes.

"It is very impressive to attend the large gatherings, wholly of men, who, after the regular evangelistic service carried on nightly, adjourn to a disused circus, to the number of 600 or 800, where short addresses are given, and the converts relate their experience, and exhort each other to faithfulness, and the undecided present to decision. Prejudice against this apparently exciting sort of religion disappears as one sees man after man rise, and in strong, homely, but earnest language, tell the story of his awakening and conversion. Large numbers of rough lads are amongst those present, and the prayers of these fellows for their companions are sometimes very touching. Artisans and clerks are in considerable proportion, and not a few gentlemen add their testimony to the blessing they have received from Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours, and the subsequent services in the hall, in which immense congregations still nightly assemble.

"The inquiry-room is still well filled, and working-men, themselves recently brought to the Saviour, bring their shopmates to be spoken to by more experienced Christians. Three or four sailors were among those who spoke in the men's after-meetings last night; and it was really very refreshing to see these fine fellows stand up, and tell openly what Jesus had done for them."

FRIDAY, 16TH.

Punctual to the hour, Messrs. Moody and Sankey appeared at the Haymarket, notwithstanding that the service at the Tabernacle had just closed. After singing, "Oh bliss of the purified!" the requests were read, and included four requests for backsliders; two from drunkards; two from septsics; from a Roman Catholic, for himself; for the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns at a hospital; for the Rev. C. D. Marston, that he might be restored to health, and service for the Lord; and for Mr. Macleod Wylie, of Weston-super-Mare, who is very ill.

Rev. Dr. Brock led the meeting in prayer, and the 72nd hymn, "No condemnation," was sung to the good old strains of "Evan."

Mr. Moody read part of Isa. lv. There is no life, said Mr. Moody, without water; and the water of life was free to all. The trouble is, we are not thirsty for this living, pure water. The other day he saw a bread-cart, setting forth that the bread was pure, and a milk-cart to the same effect; so he could say the bread and milk of the gospel was pure. As the water flows freely out of a fountain, whether people drink or not, so the gospel stream was open to all. Mr. Moody contrasted the condition of two farms in California—one that was irrigated with water, and was ever green; and the other, not irrigated, was dry and parched. So it was with many churches. "Oh for a draught of water from my father's well!" was the cry of a dying man on the Tennessee River, when he had tasted of the impure water of that stream. That ought to be the cry of every Christian.

The congregation then sang with spirit,

"Jesus the water of life will give—Freely, freely, freely."

Rev. H. G. Guinness said the most wonderful fact in connection with the living water was when it flowed from the body of Christ. The second time water came out of the rock for the children of Israel, Moses was commanded only to speak to the rock; it had been smitten before. Moses disobeyed, and smote the rock twice, yet the water flowed forth freely. One distinguishing blessing of Israel was the presence of God with them; this was the secret of the success of the present movement.

A gentleman on the platform gave an incident of a boy who died singing, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and related some interesting experience in the inquiry-room.

"Go bury thy sorrow" had been the medium of much blessing in one case.

Mr. Radcliffe asked and offered prayer for a blessing on the service just held at the Tabernacle, especially in the case of the large number of ministers who were present, and would soon be scattered throughout the country. He also prayed specially for the district round the Haymarket.

After some prayer, a reverend gentleman on the platform said that, on the previous evening, he had met three young girls in the inquiry-room. One of them, from Cornwall, had been going to class at a Wesleyan chapel for five years, and nobody had spoken to her about her soul all that time. He believed there were hundreds and thousands in our congregations in the same condition.

Mr. James Balfour, of Edinburgh, said he was at the noon meeting there the day before, and the most earnest petition presented was that London at this time might be made a wonder in the earth.

The hallowed and profitable hour was brought to a close by Mr. Sankey singing that glorious gospel song, "Wondrous love," the audience joining softly in the refrain.

BIBLE-READINGS AT THE HAYMARKET.

We remember hearing Mr. Moody say, with legitimate satisfaction, at a meeting in Liverpool, that one of the strongest proofs, to his mind, of the divine character of this religious movement was the fact that, whenever and wherever a Bible-reading was announced there was sure to be a crowded house. It was very clear to his mind that the devil would never prompt thousands of people to meet for the study of the Word of God. Very good logic, we think.

Mr. Moody said this before he began his work in London, but he could tell the same tale here with equal truth. The noon prayer-meetings at the Haymarket have not been crowded, though very large, and the fact has naturally disturbed Mr. Moody, who, being a man of faith and prayer, would wish all his fellow Christians to be the same. But there has been no need for him to urge the people to attend the Bible readings in the afternoon. The tickets have been all taken up in an incredibly short space of time, and if these meetings are to be continued long we shall not be surprised to see the announcement usually made in connection with meetings of a different sort—"Seats booked a month in advance." The construction of the building is such that the whole of the interior can be taken in at a glance from the stage—platform we ought perhaps to say—and the vast sea of heads stretching from the floor to the topmost gallery which merges in the ceiling, really presents a wonderful sight. The interest of Thursday's afternoon meeting was heightened by the presence in one of the boxes of the Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Duchess of Sutherland and others. Her Royal Highness seemed to take a deep and lively interest in the whole service, and remained to its close. Without making too much of the circumstance, we feel deeply thankful that "the mother of our kings to be," who possesses such influence in some circles of society, and who, at all events, fills her exalted position with singular grace and outward propriety, has sufficient interest in the work of the evangelists to go and hear for herself. We pray God, who ruleth among the kings and queens of the earth, to make her visit to the Bible-reading fraught with untold blessing to herself and to this nation.

On Tuesday and Wednesday Mr. Moody's subject was "The Holy Ghost." His addresses were a full exposition of the scriptural teaching concerning the person and work of the Spirit. He said the subject was one very much neglected, and, indeed, he went so far as to express an opinion that the gift of the Holy Ghost had been mislaid by the Church and well nigh lost sight of. He held the bestowal of this gift to be a distinct and subsequent thing to conversion. He showed how great and continuous was the need for the outpouring of the Spirit, and we are sure his earnest words of teaching and of exhortation will be laid to heart by many, if not all of the thousands of his auditors.

Thursday and Friday were set aside to the exposition of "Grace." His Thursday afternoon address, delivered in the presence of his royal visitor, we have reproduced fully in other columns. It is brimful of the gospel. The second address on the same subject was, if possible, more attractive and powerful than that of the day before.

These afternoon meetings in the Haymarket are continued during this week, but all the tickets, we believe, were appropriated on Saturday last.

EVENING MEETINGS AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA HOUSE, HAYMARKET.

Meetings have been held in this place every evening during the past week, except Monday, the addresses being given by Mr. Stevenson Blackwood. The attendance has steadily increased from the first meeting, when about 1500 persons were present. This is in some measure due to the recruiting party, headed by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who on Wednesday, after a short preliminary meeting for prayer, went out into the streets half-an-hour before the commencement of the service, to "compel the people to come in." That success is attending their effort is evident from the improved attendance; but Mr. Radcliffe is desirous of increasing the number of the band so employed, and would be glad to receive volunteers.

On Wednesday the service was commenced by singing, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Before the last verse was sung, Mr. Blackwood asked the audience to pause, and think of the thought expressed therein—"Too late, too late, will be the cry." "In fact," observed he, "we will not sing it; the words are too solemn to be sung in a mixed audience. Read the verse, and think of it."

After prayer had been offered, Mr. Blackwood remarked it was a cheering thing to sing about heaven, but the question was, should we ever get there? There were several very solemn passages which were not preached upon so often as they might be, but which point out the way to get to heaven, and what kind of company will be there. God has recorded it in the form of question and answer.

Psalms xv. and xxiv., and Isaiah xxxiii. 14-18, were then read by Mr. Blackwood. In all these passages God distinctly asked the question, "Who shall ascend into the holy hill of Zion?" i.e., "Who shall reach heaven?" Immediately after we have the answers again plainly enunciated. It says distinctly, "Those who lead the holy life." The points to which he urged particular attention were, that God must have a pure life, as heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people, and next how to obtain that preparedness.

We could not obtain it through our own filthy rags of righteousness, but only through the righteousness of God's only Son, Jesus Christ. He pressed upon all to remember that God could not break his word, and that only the pure could inherit eternal life. This purity could only be found through the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin.

He concluded his address by an earnest appeal to the unseparated present, to receive there and then, the gift of God, and to rely upon Christ alone for their soul's eternal welfare.

After each evening's service inquiry-meetings have been held, which have not been without results.

The services on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings were increasingly interesting, but our space will not permit us to give a more detailed report.

The addresses this week will be delivered by the Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D. Service held every evening, except Saturday, to commence at eight.

BOW-ROAD HALL.

The proceedings of Sunday were followed on Monday evening by a prayer-meeting of all denominations, which was very cheerfully attended; there were more than four thousand present, although neither Mr. Moody or Mr. Sankey were there. The rector of Stepney, Mr. Bardaley (who inaugurated the services with prayer), presided over the meeting, and the address was delivered by the Rev. John Kennedy of Stepney Meeting. It is much to be regretted that the harmony has been disturbed by a most untimely discussion of the question of "Baptismal Regeneration" in the East-end papers. Surely these brethren might have followed the example set them in the Agricultural Hall, where a well-known opponent of infidelity instantly declined a public and sneering challenge to debate on the ground of unfitness of time and place.

The services on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings showed how ready and willing the Lord is to hear and answer prayer. On both evenings Mr. Moody preached, and Mr. Sankey sang to audiences that stretched the capacity of the huge building to the utmost, and still left disappointed multitudes without. Mr. Moody's subject was, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost,"—a compendium of the whole Scripture from beginning to end in fifteen words of one syllable each. It is remarkable how many of the most glorious truths and passages of God's Word are also composed of the simplest words. Mr. Moody's usual facility of dramatic illustration was displayed on both evenings; to some extent to an unappreciative audience, many of whom annoyed the speaker and hearers by leaving during the addresses. On the second evening, the pressure of the crowd without broke the door down, and the inflow of the multitude stopped Mr. Moody's discourse. Accepting the inevitable, he coolly gave out the 10th hymn, which was sung while the incomers were quieted and placed. He then resumed his discourse; and at the close, as on the previous evening, many hundreds arose to be prayed for. All these were skilfully marked as lawful prey by the Lord's watching ones near them, and were engaged in conversation after prayer. The net result of the second evening was about 300, who remained when all but themselves were dismissed.

On Thursday and Friday evening the address was given by the Rev. W. Howie, of Glasgow (whom Mr. Moody, in announcing, described as a son of thunder), and on Thursday Mr. Sankey sang at the Agricultural Hall at the commencement of the service, and at Bow-road Hall at the end. There were from three to four thousand present on Thursday evening, when Mr. Howie preached on "Zaccheus," taking the especial words, "Make haste and come down." The discussion was very powerful, earnest, and effective; and about two hundred and fifty inquirers remained after the first service was ended.

There were not more than half as many present on Friday evening; the hall was terribly dismal and cold, only partially lighted, and much disappointment was felt at the non-appearance of Mr. Sankey, who was announced to be present, but did not appear. Mr. Howie spoke of "Nicodemus" in the various phases of character exhibited by him; in the course of his remarks narrating the conversion of his own father in 1859, who had been an elder of a church for some years, but had not been really brought unto the light. The well-known words, "Born once, die twice; born twice, die once," were used of the Lord for his conversion to Himself. The discourse lasted for an hour, and the whole service forty-five minutes more, and a very short time after the blessing was pronounced there were not a score of people remaining in the hall.

It was announced before closing that Mr. Moody would hold a service on the following (Saturday) evening at eight o'clock, when wives were recommended to get their marketing done, and husbands to give them money for that purpose earlier than usual.

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

It will be obvious that any one who attempts singly to follow in the wake of Messrs. Moody and Sankey has, humanly speaking, a very difficult task for him. The absence of the solo singer eliminates a great majority of the curious part of the crowd, and Mr. Moody's unusual and striking mode of address also puts most speakers who follow him at a disadvantage. It will not, therefore, be wondered at, that the earlier meetings of last week were thinly attended comparatively speaking. Still a couple of thousand people is no mean audience, and Rev. W. Taylor, who conducted the services on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of last week, presented the truths of salvation in an equally striking if less popular style than Mr. Moody. If the results of his powerful and persuasive addresses have not been so immediately visible as in Mr. Moody's case, it seems to us that the fault lies with the audience and not with the preacher. We give at length in another column Mr. Taylor's address of Tuesday week. It treats of a subject which we think is apt to be forgotten—the real existence and manifestation of the powers of evil. Is it not one of the most successful devices of the devil to instil into minds a doubt, sometimes amounting to a disbelief, in his personal existence and working?

Thursday and Friday evenings brought back Messrs. Moody and Sankey to the scene of their former labours, and with them the attendant crowds. It is needless to give the order of the services in detail; it is enough to say that the experience of many former evenings was realized. There was the same intense energy and earnestness on the preacher's part; the same pathos and power to arouse the deepest emotions of the heart on the part of the singer; there was, too, the same breathless interest displayed by the audience, and at the close, the same ready response to Mr. Moody's appeals, showing that many hearts had been pricked, and many slumbering consciences aroused. There was, as a result, much solid and earnest dealing with inquirers, and not a few recruits enlisted in the ranks of the Redeemer's army.

On Thursday evening, Mr. Moody repeated, with variations, his address on "Grace," given in the afternoon of the day, at the West-end. We have noticed that the evening meetings somehow assume a more business-like aspect, and are apparently more fruitful than those in the afternoon; and this may be said of the two services at which the address on "Grace" was delivered. We do not stay to inquire the reason or reasons, but simply record a patent fact.

On Friday evening, Mr. Moody told, for the first time in London, his marvellously realistic and indescribable story of the passion, death, resurrection, and ascension of the Saviour. As he trod, in imagination, the via dolorosa, and pictured, with fulness of detail, the central scene of this world's eventful history, carrying his hearers with him in an unusually marked degree, his voice quivered with emotion, and at times his feelings nearly stopped the flow of his narrative. Surely the slain of the Lord were many, if appearances are not a treacherous guide, and there was felt to be a large fulfilment of the prophetic words of the Lord himself, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."

Mr. Sankey sang, "O Christ, what burdens bowed thy head!" with a tenderness and appreciation most befitting such a subject as the divine tragedy of the cross.

At the commencement of the address, Mr. Moody said: "I do not know that I have ever felt so solemn in standing before an audience as I do before this audience to-night. Since I have come on this platform, I have been told of a man who was in this hall on Friday night last—a week ago to-night. He was led by the Spirit of God into the inquiry-room; there I talked with him, and there he professed to have found peace. He went home, was taken sick, and on Wednesday he died. To-night he lies in his coffin, and has left behind him a widow and five children. I may be speaking to-night to some one who will be laid in their coffin a week from to-night; may God help me to be faithful! He besought the prayers of all the Christians while he proceeded, as we have stated, to unfold the tale that is so beautifully expressed in that favourite hymn—

"Oh 'twas love, 'twas wondrous love,
The love of God to me,
That brought my Saviour from above,
To die on Calvary."

SUNDAY, 18TH.

The afternoon and evening services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Aitken, of Liverpool. Mr. Aitken is well known to the London public, and to our readers generally, as a most successful preacher of the gospel. Mr. Moody said of him the other evening that there was no more successful evangelist in the kingdom; and if once a man hears Mr. Aitken preach, he will have no difficulty in believing that Mr. Moody was using no extravagant language.

We hardly know how to write of his addresses on Sunday afternoon and evening. Mr. Aitken seems to us, in a most wonderful degree, to unite in himself the peculiar characteristics both of Mr. Moody and Mr. Taylor. He has all the melting tenderness of the one, and all the logical argumentative power of the other, while, at the same time, he possesses the graphic, delineative skill of both. At the afternoon service he had a most heart-searching discourse, to the unsaved and the saved alike, from the words, "He that is not with Me is against Me. He that gathereth not with Me, scattereth." His words of warning to old—and cold—Christians, not to damp the ardour of a young convert's first love, were most significant, and most needful in such a time as this. In speaking to the unconverted, he stripped them bare of the plausible excuse of neutrality in the war that is being waged between God and the devil, and showed the utter untenability of such a position.

It would be impossible to do justice to the evening's address, given to an audience that almost filled the immense area of the hall, without reporting it in full. This we cannot at present do. His text was the words of the four lepers outside the besieged city of Samaria, "Why sit we here till we die?" The lepers he held to represent those who had been moved in some degree by these special services, but who had not decided. With remarkable fluency and power he described the three alternatives propounded by the lepers as specially applying to the case of his hearers, and showed to demonstration the utter hopelessness and folly of going back or sitting still. Then he beautifully pointed to the last course open, and proved how, in the Syrian camp, deserted of its occupants, we have a type of the judgment of God, turned into life and blessing in the person of Jesus Christ. It was a very solemn hour, and the audience seemed to feel it, as they sat spell-bound by the irresistible force and tenderness of the speaker's language and manner. We wish very much Mr. Aitken could abide with us for a lengthened period. Such preaching, evidently inspired by the power of the Holy Ghost, would be of immense benefit at the present time.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was last week held in Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. His lordship was supported by Mr. J. Stabb, the secretary, Rev. F. Whitfield, Rev. W. Barker, Mr. Wayland, etc. The report noticed the removal of the society's offices to 5, New Bridge-street, and stated that their labours had been more successful than in any former year. Two, "Sir J. Y. Simpson" and "Michael Faraday," written with a view to meet the scepticism so prevalent just now, had been sent into the circles in which it is hoped they will prove most useful. One donor wished these two tracts to be circulated amongst members of the medical profession. Gratifying letters had been received in response from several eminent medical and scientific men. The gross circulation of tracts during the year had reached nearly a million.

MR. PEARSALL SMITH IN BERLIN.

[BY REV. GEO. PALMER DAVIES, B.A.]

Germany has long been looking on with wonder at what has been taking place in the religious life of England, Ireland, and Scotland in these last eighteen months. The secular press has laughed at it as a sort of spiritual epidemic, which breaks out from time to time in the Anglo-Saxon branch of the great Germanic race. The religious press has been divided in opinion. Some of its representative organs spoke approvingly, others disapprovingly; but by degrees a feeling began to grow that the work might, after all, be a work of God, though the instruments and methods made use of were utterly inapplicable to German life and German Christianity.

When a lecture delivered in this city—which, in its reprints in the religious journals of the land, has been circulated in tens of thousands of copies—talked of “singing the gospel,” of the “inquirers’ room,” of open-air meetings, attended by tens of thousands of people, of the largest halls in large cities being filled several times a day for a week or ten days together, people believed the lecturer as one known to report trustworthy facts which he had sifted, but the facts were a wonder and a riddle. They cried, “What has God wrought!” but still thought, like the secular press, that there was in the whole movement a strong mixture of Anglo-Saxon idiosyncrasy, with much which was undoubtedly divine.

Last autumn, Mr. Pearsall Smith’s name began to be associated with those of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, in connection with the great wave of spiritual blessing now sweeping over Great Britain. A few German and Swiss believers, laymen and ministers, went over to Oxford; when they came back, they told their countrymen of what God had done in them and done for them; and being themselves Germans, the testimony told with tenfold power.

These things took place in the autumn. The last month of the year came, and with it a longing for blessing in the Week of Prayer, such as had till then never been known. The week of public prayer was preceded by private personal prayer. A circular was issued to German Christians of all German lands by a great number of Berlin clergymen and laymen, and circulated both directly and in the religious press; and when the week of prayer came, the services were attended by such numbers as never before, and were blessed with a divine sanction.

None who were present at the last of these assemblies in the Moravian Meeting-house will forget the incident when, on being asked by the Court Chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Baur, whether they would vow fidelity to their heavenly Lord in this New Year, the assembled mass answered with a loud “Yes;” and then, as a token of their solemn vow, stood up, and, with a loud voice, repeated, article by article, the Apostles’ Creed.

The tide ebbed. But prayer was not abandoned. In the preaching-halls of the Evangelical Society, Berlin, ministers held special devotional services at certain intervals, and in secret some few were known to each other as offering prayer for some such blessing as that showered on Britain. In the heart of one family the thought ripened into the wish to see on German soil, and in quiet German circles, the man who had in Oxford so touched German hearts. A private letter was sent to America, to which an affirmative reply was received, saying, “Yes, if it be the Lord’s will,” and on such a day. The joy was great. But a few days later a second letter came, showing such a largeness of expectation on the part of our brother as to the results of a series of meetings, that a telegraphic despatch was addressed to him, to beg delay; for such an ingathering was thought improbable, if not impossible.

Only seven days before his arrival did the friends know for certain the day of his coming. No correspondence was possible. All that could be done was to sketch a hasty programme, and have it inserted in the journals. Quiet mornings in private circles, and public meetings in the evening, and one morning conference of clergy and laity, were all that could be thought of; and with anxious hearts the Christian friends in council looked for Mr. Pearsall Smith’s arrival.

THE SIX DAYS’ WORK.

Mr. Pearsall Smith reached Berlin after a long and unbroken journey from Brussels, on the morning of Tuesday, March 30. He was, during his whole stay, the guest of one of the royal chaplains, the Rev. Mr. Baur. Before noon, he was already in conference with friends, and in the evening met a select circle in Mr. Baur’s house.

The following morning, at ten o’clock, saw an assembly gathered together which, for Berlin, was of a strange and unusual character. Count Egloffstein, President of the German Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, had invited about a hundred guests, principally from ministerial circles, and from the upper classes of Berlin society, to meet Mr. Smith. Casting my eye over the assembly, I saw, among others, a former Minister of State, a prominent member of the Prussian Upper Chamber, the former Lieutenant-Governor of Alsace and Lorraine, and other eminent men. The families of these circles were richly represented in the ladies present.

Among the pastors present were three of the king’s chaplains, and other men of mark and note. Such was the audience which Mr. Smith saw before him—an audience whose mother tongue was not his, and whose hearts, by God’s help, he was to reach through an interpreter.

And here again God’s hand was visible. A few days before, Dr. Baedeker, of Weston-super-Mare, arrived in this city, and was introduced into the circle which had the direction of the arrangements. He not only translated with the tongue, but with the heart. God had set at Mr. Smith’s side, without any effort of his or of ours, a man of knowledge and a man of prayer—an immensely valuable gift.

For the first half of the service we were in London, seeing in spirit the teeming thousands flocking into the Agricultural Hall, listening to the religious conversations carried on in your omnibuses and railway-carriages, hearing your news-boys shouting, “Mr. Sankey’s hymns!” or “Buy the report of Mr. Moody’s meetings!” And we listened with wonder to the story of the proposed house-to-house visitation of every family in your four-millioned city. It was only when he had filled our minds with God’s work on this gigantic scale in others that he led us into the region of his own and other Christians’ experience.

To the substance of Mr. Smith’s message I need not allude. It must be as well known in England as his person or his method. He has one message, and he sticks to that—“Child of God, look to Christ as the habit of thy soul, and thou shalt habitually conquer.”

The result of this morning’s meeting was, that whatever dogmatical scruples might continue to exist as to the wisdom or truth of certain statements in Mr. Smith’s books, and even as to one or two expressions which, on that morning, fell from his lips, there was but one feeling, that the facts which, in those expressions, he had thrown into a dogmatic form, were real spiritual facts in his soul’s history, and that for us it would be our wisdom to cling to these as a prize of untold wealth within our reach as well as of his. God’s Spirit was in our midst, and every heart strove to appropriate the prayer he put up at the close. Possibly the faith of some was strong enough actually to appropriate it: “Lord, if any cling with one hand to thy cross, and with the other hand to the world, give them grace to let go the world, and cling with both hands to the cross alone!”

I cannot refrain from inserting here a touching little episode of this meeting. When all was over, one of the most godly ministers in Berlin, who had, as he expressed it, “lived four-and-forty years in his most blessed Saviour,” thought it right to tell Mr. Smith his fears, and give him his warnings and counsels. Some of them he recognized as good; in others he could not fully concur; but when all was over, he said, "Give me your blessing;" and the old pastor rose, put his hand upon his head, and said, "The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace!"

The afternoons of the first two days were devoted to personal converse with inquiring souls. Over these conversations a veil is naturally drawn.

God had been gracious above all we had dared hope and expect in the morning meeting; but how would the evening meeting pass off? When I entered the hall, half an hour before the service commenced, the hall was full. Before Mr. Smith arrived, it was crammed. Every spot on which a chair could be set or a foot placed, was occupied. Hundreds had to be turned away. The morning papers set down the numbers present at two thousand.

In the first part of his address, descriptive of the great work in London, he was hardly as much master of his hearers' hearts as he had been in the morning; but in the second part, the wondrous power and effect were the same. The next evening was intended to have been held in a small chapel connected with one of the charitable institutions of that godly man Gosner; but it soon became evident that this would be utterly impracticable, so the meeting was again announced for the hall in which we had previously met.

Thursday's morning meeting was looked forward to as the crisis which was either to stem the rising flood, or throw the floodgates wide open for the flowing waters. Ministers and laymen had been invited to a free conference. The men occupied the central seats, the women the side seats and the galleries. Some 500 persons came together. It was a beautiful sight to see. Among the clergy, there were men with hoary hair, and men in the pride and prime of life. There were men present in high office in the church. Dr. Hegel, the son of the illustrious philosopher, and president of the Consistory of the Province of Brandenburg; and Dr. Büchsel, the Superintendent-General, i.e., according to English ideas, the Bishop of the Churches in full one-half the Provinces, may be mentioned among these. A considerable number of pastors had come in from the provinces, the greater number of course from Brandenburg; but I saw some from Pomerania, Silesia, and other distant places, while laymen were present from Dresden, Leipzig, Nassau, Brunswick, the Rhine Provinces, and other places.

A few rows behind the seats occupied by the pastors, my eye caught a group of country peasants. I afterwards saw them all together, men and women—the women in their quaint costume. They had come from a distance of sixty miles, bringing thriftily their provisions with them. They formed a feature of every subsequent meeting, morning, afternoon, and evening. Such was the assembly in which Mr. Smith had to speak and be spoken to.

Here again that which I have ventured to call the accessory grace of sanctified tact which has been accorded him, did not forsake him. Had he assumed the air of a teacher, his cause would have been lost. He put himself in the attitude of a child, and instead of expounding a theory of sanctification, he simply told what God had done for him, and he conquered. When he had ceased speaking, Dr. Hegel rose and addressed Mr. Smith somewhat as follows:—

"Sir, I rise, not in my official, but in my personal capacity, to thank you in the warmest and sincerest manner for the words you addressed to us last night, and again this morning. In doing so, I am sure I echo the feelings of hundreds who have heard you. No one can feel and know so clearly and vividly as I what the anxieties and difficulties of God's Church in this province, and in the whole country are, at the present moment, and our hands and hearts have been discouraged. But you point us to the impensable and inexhaustible source of our strength, the life of God within, and we have been strengthened and cheered. We bid you welcome, and we thank you."

At this point the only discordant note was struck which was heard during the whole six days. The same venerated man who counselled and then blessed Mr. Smith the day before, rose and began to expound his own views and refute what he supposed to be Mr. Smith's. But as his remarks were based on a misapprehension of what Mr. Smith was supposed to have said, he withdrew from the platform, and was followed by Dr. Büchsel, the Superintendent-General of the Province. Dr. Büchsel spoke with deep spiritual insight and theological grasp on the mutual relations of sanctification and justification, showed that through the peculiar circumstances of the Churohin Germany, the second article of the Creed, the doctrine of Christ's person and divinity, had been thrust into unusual, almost exclusive, prominence, and now there came to them a solemn appeal not to neglect any longer the third article, the doctrine of the Spirit, but to give it its due prominence, not as a dogma, but in life. He uttered the remarkable words, "Brüder, we have of late been throwing ourselves with all our force into politics, secular politics, ecclesiastical politics, but we have neglected the politics of the heart. Let us listen to our brother's words, and practise these." Under the influence of this solemn appeal, the sitting closed.

It now became patent to all that a deep spiritual awakening would be attendant on Mr. Smith's visit to Berlin. The evening meeting was again crowded. What was to be done? The largest church in Berlin is the Garrison Church, and on the use of this, his Majesty the Emperor has alone to decide. The circumstances were explained to him, and in the most gracious and condescending manner he placed this building at Mr. Smith's disposal for the remainder of his stay in Berlin for the large evening meetings.

On Friday, five meetings were held, one of them being a private meeting, in the house of his Excellency Herr von Bülow, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. On Saturday, three meetings were held, and on Sunday again three—two in the English language, in the American Chapel; and one in the evening, in the Garrison Church. On Monday morning Mr. Smith spoke for the last time in Berlin at the American Embassy, to about 100 persons, whom Mrs. Bancroft Davis had invited to hear him.

Neither your space nor my time would allow of my describing in detail each of the services, or even those at which it was my privilege to be present. Let me single out the last public gathering in the Garrison Church on Sunday evening. It was an imposing sight to look down upon the assembled masses who crowded the chancel, and nave, and aisles, and galleries, of the great building. The Chaplain of the Forces, whose church it is, estimates the numbers present as exceeding 4000! You in England are accustomed to larger numbers; but this is an unheard-of number in Berlin. Before the service began, Mr. Smith's heart was full of confidence that the meeting would be a solemn one. He solicited the prayers and blessing of the ministers present for himself and his translator. God heard the prayers, and rewarded the confident trust.

The Christian young men of Berlin had been specially invited, and hundreds of them were there. The first half of the service was devoted to them. The Prodigal Son was the theme. Mr. Smith divided his young hearers into two camps, the saved and the unsaved, and drew lessons for both amidst the solemn rapt attention of the large audience.

Then Dr. Baedeker, his interpreter, knelt with Mr. Smith, and offered prayer, and, as if at the word of command, the throngs in the pews and in the aisles fell upon their knees by a sudden spiritual sympathy. Such scenes may be familiar to you in Britain; here they have been unprecedented.

In the second part of the service, the power of the Holy Spirit was the subject on which Mr. Smith spoke to the multitude before him; and a holy, reverent awe pervaded the souls of the worshippers.

This was Mr. Smith's last appearance in public. When the benediction had been pronounced, and the verses were being sung, which Berlin congregations often sing on retiring, nobody moved. The people seemed spell-bound, and remained a long time in complete silence. At last, when Mr. Smith was fairly gone, the people began to withdraw; but when it was at last known that he was still in the vestry, hundreds rushed in to see him, shake his hand, and solicit his prayers. It was a touching scene to witness. Men and women, youths and maidens, even boys and girls, rushed in, and strong men shed silent tears as they pressed his hand. The chaplain of the Lazarus Hospital came to thank Mr. Smith in his own name and in the name of all the deaconesses of his home for the blessing they had collectively and individually received, and indeed in almost all the assemblies the sober dress and white caps of the deaconesses of the Lazarus and Elizabeth Hospitals, were a marked feature of the scene.

How are we to account for all this? A layman, a foreigner, ignorant of the tongue of the population, comes suddenly into the metropolis of the greatest empire in Europe, where pride of intellect is as besetting a sin as it ever was in the intellectual metropolis of ancient Greece—and in four-and-twenty hours he has thousands at his feet. From the second day, taking public and private gatherings, and excepting Sunday, on which day he preached three times, he had never less than four services; on Friday he had six, one for ministers at half-past eight, another at ten; on another, which had been summoned also for ten, he appeared at half-past eleven; another at three; another at seven; and then a private gathering at nine.

The Emperor granted him the use of his church, the Empress and her daughter, the Grand Duchess of Baden, received him in a long private audience. Noblemen and statesmen threw open their houses to him for his more private meetings; members of the best nobility of the land flocked with the working-classes into the public gatherings; Professors of the University took their place, some of them, I know, sympathetically, among his hearers; and then along the whole scale of Berlin life, down to the artisan and the labourer, the movement ran like an electric current. How, I ask, are we to account for all this?

In his opening remarks on Sunday evening, the Chaplain of the Forces said: "What is it that, in these last days, ye have gone out for to see and hear? Great oratorical displays? You have not found them. But you have seen and heard a man of God on whose brow 'Eternity' stands inscribed."

This was certainly one great secret of Mr. Smith's power. When he spoke, men felt that he was dealing with realities, with realities which he had learned for himself, and whose power was a daily experience of his own soul. But this could not be all. There are other earnest men in Berlin who preach the same truths as he. I should rather seek it in the unshaken faith with which our brother came, in the fact that he had been praying for Germany for a year before the call to come to Germany reached him, and to the further fact, to which he often alluded to me in private, that in these days he supposed that some four or five thousand German believers in America were praying to God, that He would display his power during their brother's visit in this influential city. Thus, then, do I account for what we have seen in these last days. They were a reward of faith and an answer to prayer. Germans on both sides the Atlantic interceded with God; and as they believed, so it has been to them.

GOD'S WORK IN CANADA.

Dear Friends and Fellow-helpers,—As our dear friend and sister, Miss Macpherson, is still on this side the sea, and cannot be with you herself to tell you of all the Lord is doing for us in this part of the mission-field, she has asked me to give you some little account of our work. We know you are ever holding up our hands by prayer to God for us, and while we ask you still thus to remember us, we want you also to raise a note of praise and thanksgiving for many a prayer answered in the salvation of precious souls.

After enjoying a season of much 'spiritual refreshment in the midst of the Toronto blessing under the ministry of dear Mr. Varley, the Master called our dear sister, Miss Goddard, and myself, to go forth together in another path of service for Him, and during the past months of this intensely cold, yet bright and beautiful Canadian winter, we have been privileged to go from village to village carrying "the glad tidings of great joy." Invited by one minister after another, our path was opened up before us, and it has been our joy and privilege not only to sow the seed, but also to see sheaves gathered into the heavenly garner.

The thirst on the part of the people for simple gospel truth is most encouraging, and among the children of God there is the increasing desire after higher spiritual life. In the different places where we go, the minister generally proposes afternoon Bible-readings, either in the church or some private house, and many have been led to seek a deeper acquaintance with God's treasure-house of promise, or, as Mr. Moody puts it, "to get in love with the Bible." They are learning also the increased interest and pleasure there is in reading God's Word for themselves, rather than simply listening to it as read by another. Some are discovering for themselves treasures in it unknown before, and so God's people are getting "girt about with truth," to fit them for their own part of service in the Church of God.

The evening meetings have often been times of rejoicing over prayer answered, and souls saved.

The case of one dear girl I should like to tell you of. I first met with her in the inquiry-room after one of Mr. Varley's meetings in Toronto. She was then a student at the Normal School there. Awakened to a sense of her sin and danger through attending the meetings, she found her way one evening into the side room among the inquirers. I think it was Miss Macpherson asked me to talk a little to her, and show her the way of life. She was indeed seeking to see Jesus, and when the simple truth of Christ as the Sin-bearer was set before her, how He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, and that seeing He had borne the sin, and curse, and condemnation for us, whosoever believeth on Him "hath everlasting life," she simply received the good news and entered into rest. I did not see her again, but some weeks afterwards a friend asked me if I remembered speaking to a young lady in one of the Toronto meetings, describing her as well as he could. He said he had, as doctor, been called to visit her at her own home, and after prescribing for the bodily sickness, he asked her how it was with her soul. She told him all was well; she had been brought to Jesus at the meetings in Toronto, and mentioned my having led her to see the way of peace in the inquiry-room that night. A few days afterwards she was taken home. I visited her friends soon after, and learned all the sad particulars. She was getting better, as all thought, she herself hoping to be able to attend the meeting near her own home, at which she expected to meet me again, when suddenly, one morning, as she was preparing to get up, she fell back, and in half-an-hour her ransomed spirit was "with the Lord."

The previous night, before going to sleep, she begged them to sing her two favourite hymns. The chorus of one is—

"There is sweet rest in heaven,
There is sweet rest in heaven,
There is sweet rest, there is sweet rest,
There is sweet rest in heaven."

Then she talked to her sister till long after midnight, speaking of her own enjoyment now of true peace with God, yet little thinking that so soon she was to know full rest on his loving bosom whom she had so lately learned to love.

"I never experienced anything like this before," she said. Yet this was but the foretaste of the fuller joy she was to experience ere many hours had passed away.

"God is his own interpreter" in these to us dark providences. The cloud, however dark, is oftentimes "big with mercy." The same week her body was laid in the dust found four members of the family seeking that Saviour whom she had trusted and loved, and other members of the family already saved, rejoicing in a fuller blessing. To his name be all the glory!

Some of our own children, too, have been sharing in the blessing. At a meeting in a country district, where a little church had just been opened and dedicated, a very superior-looking young man was making himself generally useful in the congregation, taking the collection, etc. A friend, in speaking of him, said, "He is one of Miss Macpherson's first boys." But he was not yet converted, and rather a hard case, they said.

At the afternoon meeting next day, we made the young people of the Sabbath-school a special subject of prayer; and what was our joy to see in the evening meetings one and another come forward, desiring to give themselves to the Lord. The little children first began to trust Jesus, then the young men; and one of the first was N. S.—. He seemed deeply convinced of sin, and, after a night or two, stood up to testify to the experience of sin forgiven through the blood of the Lamb. Another dear, bright little fellow, also one of our own, stood up, and, in his own child language, praised God for having pardoned his sins.

Sometimes, as at one village where we had meetings, we are indebted to our boys for helping in the singing. One who had been brought to the Lord in the Glasgow Home led the praise at our children's service, and so sweetly sang alone that full gospel hymn which Mr. Sankey was singing when we left Scotland, "Free from the law, oh happy condition," etc.

God is also blessing the families who have taken our destitute little ones, and cared for them as their own. Some are rejoicing in fresh blessing received, while others are inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" and longing to enter into rest. One dear friend, who often helped in the work, and has for years been seeking Jesus, entered into rest by simply trusting the record God has given of his Son.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." We have been obliged to leave work only begun, or only half done, for other places to which we had already promised help. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He may thrust forth labourers into his harvest." He knows the fields are ripe, and He can send the prepared reapers.

The work for this winter is now almost closed; the snows of the past months have begun to yield to the softening air of spring, making the roads almost impassable. It has not, however, quite closed yet, and in this quiet country district, in another part of this wide field, where the Lord has directed my steps, the Spirit of God is also working. The minister and his colleague have been pleading and labouring for the blessing, and drops from heaven are falling. Every night last week the interest seemed to increase, and in the afternoon meetings for preaching the word God's children seemed much blessed, and at last our hearts were cheered by seeing one and another, little children, young men, and men in the vigour of manhood, and maidens also, seeking an interest in the great salvation.

The cordial, loving welcome we have received from those who labour in the gospel ministry has, wherever we have gone, cheered and helped us greatly. Sower and reaper can alike share in the joy of harvest.

Dear friends, continue, though it may be in the midst of much suffering, to labour fervently for us in prayer, and, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, these precious souls shall be to you also a "joy and crown of rejoicing."—Yours in loving fellowship in the gospel,

A WOMAN'S CRUSADE IN INDIA.

My dear Sir,—I believe you have once before had a short notice sent to you of the efforts which are being put forth to try and reach the sailors who frequent the grog-shops and drinking-saloons of this city. You will be glad to learn that the work has been kept up for more than three months, and we trust will be until the rainy season begins. The plan adopted is for a band of five or six ladies to go out after the morning service to the streets, where there are a number of grog-shops and low drinking-saloons, frequented by sailors of all nations, and having permission from the landlord or bar-keeper, to go in and sing and speak to them of Jesus and salvation. If they are loitering about the street, the singing of a popular hymn will soon attract them. Great kindness and civility have been shown by the landlords, and some of them will take a hymn-book, and join in the simple service.

After singing a hymn or two, there is either a short address, followed by prayer, if the men seem softened, and are willing to join, or personal dealing with each man, and a request to attend the evening service. It is strange and touching to hear these places re-echoing with the hymn of praise, and to see these poor rough fellows kneeling all round the tap-room or saloon, and joining in prayer. Many heathens crowd in, astonished at it.

One of the landlords said a few Sundays ago, "I am glad to see you, ladies. Come as often as you like, and sing and speak about Jesus." There is a great spirit of hearing among the sailors, and many have been impressed to tears. Each Sunday a number of the men have been induced to attend the evening services at the theatre, which must now, alas! be discontinued, on account of the heat. And hardly a week passes without one or two remaining behind as seekers; some, we believe, have found peace. Last Sunday evening one man gave the most satisfactory testimony that he had found the way of salvation through Christ.

It is touching to see the tears in their eyes while they say, "I've been to sea for many years, and never been spoken to by a lady like this before;" or, as one did lately, "Well, I should like to have a picture of this place as it is, with you all sitting down, and talking with us poor sailors." Another remarked, "This is a queer place to come and talk about religion in. I wonder you're not afraid to come—afraid of being insulted."

Two large grog-shops have been closed, and, we fervently hope, will never be opened again for the same purpose. The manager of one of these said he was disgusted with the whole affair, and would have nothing to do with the trade again; he knew he was doing wrong before, but it had never been put before him in the same way as now.

As there are so many foreign sailors, we have a supply of tracts in many different languages. All who can read, even Roman Catholics, will take one; and they have been distributed in English, French, Italian, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Greek, and also in Bengali, to the heathen who crowd in, attracted by the singing.

We ask an interest in your prayers for these feeble efforts to do good among these poor fellows, who, far from home and friends, are surrounded by so many and great temptations.—Believe me to be, faithfully yours,

E.

KINGSLAND GOSPEL MISSION.—The labours here claiming so much time and close application, Mr. W. Chorley, who has for some years superintended the work, has now given up his worldly calling, and is applying his whole service to this dark corner of our million-souled metropolis. Will Christian young men, capable and willing to aid by speaking or singing of Christ Jesus in the open-air, in the north-east of London, write to the Superintendent, William Chorley, 79, Norfolk-road, Essex-road, N.

CONVALESCENT HOME, KILKEE, IRELAND.—This institution, which God of his goodness has provided for the sick poor unable to procure the benefits of sea air, etc., is in need of a matron. Should this meet the eye of any Christian woman desirous to be used by the divine Master in this way, one who would be willing to rough it in an institution in its infancy and first struggles, for the Lord's sake, will please communicate with the Hon. Secretary, T. E. Lloyd, Esq., Heathfield, Ballingarry, Co. Limerick, Ireland.

THE CHURCH'S TRUST FOR THE WORLD.

The year recently closed will be remembered in the spiritual history of our country as one of extraordinary blessing. There has been such an ingathering of souls to the Church as has been unknown since the days of Whitefield and Wesley, while the work of the Spirit among believers has been yet more extraordinary, and a conviction of sin and a thirst for holiness, which has manifestly pervaded all classes of Christians, has proved the divine preparation for an experience of ability to do the will of God by faith and of rest and satisfaction and power for service, which in numberless cases go beyond all that was asked or thought. Blessed be God who has thus been opening our eyes to see how He "hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ!" Those who know these things will confidently expect the year 1875 to show the features and character of the parent year, and to bring forth much good fruit from the seed so abundantly sown and divinely watered in 1874. Yet it is necessary to stir up even pure minds by way of remembrance, and there is danger lest in some measure the life that is new, and the life that is purified and strengthened, may fail to produce results worthy to be compared with the possibilities now opened to us. This is of course one of the chief considerations at this time to pastors and teachers; and all those to whom the Lord has given a reviving will themselves be earnest, according to their knowledge, in seeking to put forth all "the fruit of the Spirit" in all "the beauties of holiness."

There is, however, one duty which seems to us likely to be but little remembered, and in respect to which we believe the Church needs to be awakened from the neglect of centuries. That duty is the evangelization of the world. It may appear to some as if we were ignoring the great missionary agencies now at work in all parts. We are not doing so. We recognize and thank God for these agencies, and rejoice to know that they have done great things—perhaps more than their most sanguine supporters believe. We thankfully acknowledge too that they are the characteristic of the present century by which it is blessedly distinguished from all centuries which preceded it, except the first; but these acknowledgments do not invalidate our assertion that the Church of Christ as a whole has never been awake since the days of the apostles to the duty of evangelizing the world. Even Christians in many instances have allowed their interest in heathen lands to be commercial, geographical, scientific, before it was Christly; while there must be thousands of truly converted persons who, from one cause or another, have hardly a practical thought from the beginning of the year to the end of it respecting the salvation of the heathen. If there are those whose consciences approve this state of things, we do not write for such, but for those who know that they are "called into the fellowship of God's Son Jesus Christ our Lord." We know the consciences of these will bear us out when we say that the command of Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," has been practically ignored by the great majority of his followers; and that the doings of all missionaries abroad, and missionary societies at home, nobly though they contrast with the apathy of former years, and worthily as they represent in many cases the fervour of loving self-sacrificing souls, are to this day utterly contemptible when regarded as the expression towards the heathen world of the life and love of Christendom.

We cannot believe that this state of things is to continue, and we hail the revival at home as the hopeful means by which this sinful, though long-continued neglect, may begin to be done away. Not only has God, in the bygone year, converted to Himself tens of thousands, from among whom may be found many fit and ready to leave all and follow the Saviour into some of the darkest places of the earth, but a similar multitude of those who, by their own confession, were till then half-hearted and selfish Christians, have been led and enabled to present themselves and all they have as sacrifices on the altar of God. We ask these latter, with whom we rejoice in the liberty of the will of God, whether they have considered the possibility of his desiring to use what they have unconditionally surrendered to Him in China, or India, or some other part of the pagan world, and, if they are sure that He gives them no call to such work, whether they are discharging the responsibility of those that stay at home, by their liberality and their prayers?

May we urge upon all who have the glory of Christ among the heathen at heart, to join in special and continuous prayer that the pouring out of the Spirit in Christian lands, and especially in England, may result in the personal devotion of a great army of missionaries, and in offerings and gifts for their support many hundred times greater than what the past has known!

"GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD."

Dear Sir,—A few days ago, I had a long conversation with Mr. Sankey as to the desirability of taking fullest advantage of this divine knocking at the door of the world's heart, to send the proclamation over vale and hill, and we came to this point, that the first thing was to get Christians to feel the evangelizing of the world as a burden on their hearts. "If ye love Me, keep my commandments." What was His great resurrection command? "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." We all confess that the Church has failed; but how few of us confess this disobedience as a part of our daily sins? Has there not been a grand mistake committed in trying to convert patches, instead of evangelizing the whole creation? Have our brethren Moody and Sankey not shown what can be done in a month, by God's blessing, clear gospel, united prayer, attractive meetings, and sanctified common sense?

Why should there not be an evangelistic steamer, with a cargo of Bibles in all tongues, and a battalion of missionaries on board? Can England send out her "Challenger" in the interests of science, for a three years' cruise, and the "Alert" and "Discovery," voting for expenses £100,000 to search for the North Pole, and the English-speaking Christians of the world, with as much money among them as Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer has at his command, are doing nothing comparatively to wipe out this blot of disobedience?

All power in heaven and earth is at our command, to be drawn on according to our faith. I write this that your praying readers may feel burdened with this load, and each of us may ask, What have I to do concerning this disobedience?—Yours in the truth,

The Park, Hull, April.

W. P. MACKAY.

CHERTSEY.—Very crowded meetings are being held in the Town-hall in this little old country place. Prayer is asked, that there may be a great reaping-time just now.

KING'S LYNN.—In this town, which is so full of public-houses, where vice abounds to an enormous extent, we are just beginning an open-air Mission. Will you kindly ask your readers to pray for a blessing on our efforts. Some seven or eight of us (young men) connected with the Congregational Church, have felt that it is high time we should spend our energies and talents in the service of Jesus. You would be surprised to see what an influence Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours have had here. It has aroused Christian workers from apathy and slumber, and stimulated them with greater zeal and enthusiasm for the Master. We have heard the evangelists' work spoken disparagingly of from pulpit and platform in this town, and we feel that we must do something towards bringing lost souls to the cross, and teaching them the simple gospel of the love of Christ. Pardon my troubling you with this letter. But I believe that the more prayer we have, the better shall we succeed. In other towns God's Spirit has been poured in abundance upon the labours of Christian workers, and we have only to ask for a blessing on our work, and I know we shall succeed. Our first meeting will be held on Sunday, April 25.—Yours faithfully,

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

My dear Brother in Christ,—In this far-off land, we are very constantly refreshed by your valuable paper, especially the articles on holiness of life, and the records of God's wonderful work in Scotland and Ireland, as well as England.

In my last letter to you, kindly inserted in yours of July 23, 1874, I asked the prayers of your readers "that God would bless us and our helpers, and open to us a door further west than we have yet been." This He has already answered to a considerable degree. Mr. Hudson Taylor and myself came here in June last, but did not obtain any house in which we could make a residence until the end of July, only a few days after our request for prayer had appeared in your paper!

Previous to our coming here, three other mission-stations had obtained a footing in this place, but still the difficulty of getting any suitable house was not small. Our great adversary, unable to keep us out of the city, does not cease to harass us in various ways, and succeeded in separating one young Christian from us, but who has since been restored in answer to prayer, and I trust will be more useful in his restored state than before his leaving us.

A young Cantonese, whom I mentioned in my letter to you, either fell under the power of temptation, or was a most clever impostor. He ran away from us, taking with him about £8 8s. in money (twenty-eight Chinese taels), besides the best of our blankets, flannel, and other useful articles.

We have with us an earnest, Christian young woman, as nurse; she was converted in Yangchao a few years ago. She has been a great help during my dear wife's sickness. Satan sought to rob us of this help also; but our God defeated his design, and she is not unfrequently pleading with tears for the conversion of her own country people. To see tears come from the eyes of such cold-hearted persons as the Chinese is indeed rare.

We hope very soon to baptize the first-fruits of the work God has given us here. A poor washerwoman, whose now happy face greatly contrasts with the miserable, hopeless face she carried a few weeks ago, is the first decided conversion our Lord has given us to see here. About ten days ago, I invited any in our prayer-meetings, either male or female, to pray and thank God for what He had done for their souls. This poor woman voluntarily poured out her heart in simple prayer, that rejoiced us exceedingly. Could some of your readers who support us with prayer and means have heard this woman, they would indeed have praised God for this first-fruit.

There is in this city, and especially in the next city, Hankow, a considerable knowledge of the gospel, and I believe God has been preparing the way for a great work here. On the first week of this year, three meetings were held in Hankow and Wu-Chang (almost adjoining cities) for prayer. These were attended by about ten to fifteen missionaries, who had come together, and truly not in vain. God's presence was evidently felt in our hearts, and several missionaries were led to express their longing desire to be filled with the power of God's Spirit, some also confessing that they felt deep need of a greater power and joy in their own souls before much could be done among the heathen around. It was resolved that we should for the future meet at least once a month for united waiting upon God. It appears as though God were now waking up many of his servants here to see the little progress that has been actually made among the Chinese, and the need of more full surrender of soul and body to the Saviour.

May I now specially ask prayer of your readers, that God will open to us a door for his blessed gospel in the next province to this, which is Hunan, containing twenty millions of human souls, for whom Christ died, and not one Protestant missionary. Attempts have been made by a few missionaries to enter the province, but they have on each occasion been driven out by being stoned or otherwise.

In this and the adjoining city of Hankow there are about 1,000,000 Chinese, with about one missionary to each 100,000. From these missionaries we have had great kindness and help in getting a footing here, that we may press further on.

Among the thousands of souls lately filled with joy in the mighty work in Great Britain, are there not a few who, in sole dependence on the living God, are willing to come out to these perishing millions, and obey the Saviour's word, "Give ye them to eat." Let us re-echo the words, "The voice of thy brother's blood." A million a month in China are dying without God!—Yours very faithfully in the Lord Christ, CHAS. H. JUDG.

THE FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.

Dear Sir,—I thank you for kindly inserting my letter last week; but, owing to a printer's error, my address was omitted. Hence, those willing to render further assistance to the poor sufferers may not know where to send their contributions.

I may mention that, during the past few days, I have received further intelligence respecting the famine district. Mr. Barrows, agent of the British Consulate, writes of one village, as a sample of many others: "In this village there are now thirty women who, deserted by their husbands, are left alone with their children, to live or die, as chance may decide. Many such have died, and their little ones are left begging in the streets, with no one to care for them."

Another agent, Mr. Farnsworth, writes of his distribution of relief: "Little girls, ten years old, came from a village nine miles distant to get their bit of five piastres" (a piastre is about twopence). Speaking of the patients in a hospital, who had only a little bread for food, until Mr. Farnsworth supplied some soup, he says: "Among them was a company of seven boys, each about fourteen years old, and I was glad that our supplies enabled me to give them an entire quantity. One of them said that for six months he had not had such a meal; and a woman said it was three years since she enjoyed such a dinner."

I have now received from members of the Society of Friends, from readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and other sources, £950 for Asia Minor, in addition to a successful application to the Common Council of London, who generously granted £500. But all this is but a little in proportion to the terrible need; so that further help is still necessary.—Yours truly, 97, Abchurch-lane, Stoke Newington, N. JOSEPH BECK.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN CALIFORNIA.

The following is from the Occident of San Francisco. With slight alterations it might be applied to the religious movement in London:—

The meetings held by Rev. E. P. Hammond in San Francisco are awakening a steadily deepening interest. The city dailies have very fully reported the meetings, and commented on them in editorials, usually by way of criticism. It is not a little curious to note how concerned certain irreligious men just now are, for the honour of religion. Never before, perhaps, have the dailies contained so much on religion as within the last two weeks. And yet, even what is said against the movement, helps along. Meetings are held every morning (excepting Sundays) at nine o'clock. Bible-readings they are called, and are intensely interesting. Children's meetings are held, and large numbers of them are apparently converted. There is a covenant book in which are written the names of those who hope they have found Christ, and upwards of 700 have inserted their names. Very large mass meetings have been held in the evenings in Union Hall—which is said to hold 5000—and the overflow on Sabbath evening, March 7, being enough to fill a large church near, and make an open-air meeting in the street. An inquiry-meeting is held after each sermon, in which the Christians go round from one to another, and urge them to come to Christ.

The work commenced in the churches. The first converts were from the pupils in the Sunday-schools, and the members of Christian households; but as the revival has increased and extended, it has obtained a hold upon the outside community, and thousands of persons rarely or never found in the houses of worship are seen frequenting Mr. Hammond's meetings, and in a great many instances are converted.

All of these meetings are remarkably free from visible excitement, except, indeed, as apparent in the tears of those anxious for their own salvation, or the salvation of others. Great warmth of affection and tenderness of emotion is apparent among Christians, and its effect is most salutary upon all. An immense advance has been made by the cause of Christ in our city, with an effect promising, hopeful, and, we believe, permanent.

The readers of this paper will doubtless have seen many criticisms of the work, and many falsehoods in print about the leader. The truth is, Mr. Hammond has peculiarities, and great dramatic power, and probably there is no man in Christendom who more entirely consecrates these talents to Christ. Will not the Christians outside San Francisco pray for us?

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION IN AUSTRALIA.

I send you the following account of three days' visiting on an old, worked-out diggings, because I think it will interest your readers, and let them see the sort of people we have to deal with here.

Being recently in (or, in colonial parlance, "on") Sandhurst, a large mining town, the centre of the Bendigo district, a Christian, who lives near Sidney Flat, called to ask me to spend a few days visiting and preaching in that place. The people had come pretty readily to two or three meetings which I had held about a year previously on the Flat, and now I arranged to reside there for a little while, if possible, so as to visit them in their homes.

All over the many districts of the colony there are large tracts of ground which have been dug over for gold, and left in the condition of a graveyard, with all the graves open. This Flat was, therefore, a long tract of land, most miserable in its aspect; and the principal portion of the inhabitants were, in colonial language, "hatters," i.e., men who made a miserable existence by digging over and over the old ground where gold had been found, and occasionally finding a nugget, the chance of which is the lure which binds them to this kind of life. Generally speaking, a more godless or depraved class cannot be found.

Having arranged for services in a schoolroom, I started, with a bundle of gospel papers, and a pocketful of tracts, to visit from house to house, and to talk to the people individually about their souls. There were not a large number on the Flat; therefore I had time to converse well with them, and I took the houses as they came.

The first hut that I came to was just a type of, at least, half the others, about eight feet by six, built of pieces of wood and bark, roofed with bark; rags and clay indiscriminately filling up the holes in the wall. Outside of the hut was the proprietor, a "hatter." He had a bad foot; he had driven the pick two inches into it, and was not able, therefore, either to work, or to come to the service. After a little conversation about his work and his foot, etc., I spoke about his soul, and the great salvation, and was met by the answer that he did not believe that God would punish any man hereafter; nor did he consider that he had ever sinned, "to speak of." And nothing could be got out of him but, "It was all very good, but he had always believed it." Poor old man! One who had probably committed nearly every sin that a man can commit, yet perfectly indifferent to Christ and his gospel. I left him some papers and books, and went on.

A little further on I came upon another "hatter," sinking a hole. I offered him a paper, and asked him if he had found forgiveness of sins yet. "All I want to find," said he, "is a nugget." A little conversation proved him to be one who believed neither in heaven, hell, devil, nor Bible; and he simply laughed at them all. So, after some plain statements of the gospel, and a few words of warning, I passed on.

The next house I came to, there was a woman washing. She came out before I got in, which, I presume, she supposed would give her a shorter time of my company. She listened doggedly to every word I had to say. "It is all true," she said, but was quite indifferent, and would see if she could come down to the service. I went on, after leaving with her gospel papers and tracts.

I entered the next house, a few hundred yards off, and found that it also belonged to a "hatter." He was away, but his wife sat down to talk with me. She knew she was unwared; she felt it. Desired to be saved, she said, but did not evince any desire to trust the Lord more. Her eldest daughter, a young woman of eighteen, would neither stop her work for a moment, nor answer a question.

After an hour's earnest conversation, I proceeded; and further on I came to another house, the only one on the place in which I found any who professed to be born again. Both husband and wife did so there, and the latter said that, for fourteen years she had lived here, but had never heard of such a thing on the place as a conversion.

I stayed a while to speak of Jesus, and then went back to my hut. The next day I resumed my visiting in the afternoon. In the first hut that I entered, the woman told me that she had eight children, and I saw them, mostly in rags. She merely laughed and joked at the message which I brought her, not denying it, but evidently considering it fit for children only. She said that she would send her children to the meeting.

At the next two bark huts, the owners are away, so I push papers under the doors, or throw them down the chimneys, and proceed to a house, the mistress of which I know, desires to be thought a Christian (by me); but as it is a "shanty," or a place where spirits are sold without a license, and as I know her to be altogether without God, I at once ask her why she has not yet come to Christ, and she hangs her head and listens, quite glad when I have done. In the next house, an educated woman tells me that she is a Christian, and that her sins are forgiven. She insists upon it, though her life is a proof that she knows nothing really of Christ's love. She presently tells me that her good education has done more for her than her being born again would do. Alas! she is just treading the same ground that so many thousands of the educated classes are now treading. Next I come to a dirty hut, whose occupant has a head of hair which evidently has not been combed for many months, perhaps years. Stolidly and silently he listens, contemptuously saying "Yes," or "No," once or twice. It is plain that it is just as much as he can do not to be uncivil, and he makes the usual excuses which all prefer to do sooner than refuse directly to come to the meeting.

Across the road, I enter a miserably filthy hut; its walls and roof falling in; dirty rags and rubbish in heaps in it, and the smell abominable. A poor old man is lying on two empty sacks before the fire. He is one of the worst drunkards on the Flat, and is ill from his last bout. In answer to a question, he affirms that he never has had a thought about his soul or hell since he was "a good little boy," and so full is the heart of man of lying excuses, that he actually tells me that he never drinks and never was drunk. He shuts his eyes to sleep when I talk to him of Christ; he opens them and talks when I speak of mundane things; but he is so besotted with drink that it is next to impossible to make him understand.

The next huts are shut, so, pushing in papers, I go on, and have half-an-hour's conversation with a man and his wife, the one a French Catholic, the other an English Protestant, both contemptuous to my address.

Next day I proceed again with the visiting. In the first house I enter, an educated woman is lying in bed ill, from constant drinking; last year she constantly interrupted the meeting, coming in intoxicated. This year she has been ill, and so we have had no trouble with her; but she is stupid even now with drink, and bewails having "let herself down," but does not believe in a hell at all.

The next huts are shut, so, pushing in papers, I enter one in which is a man ill, dying with consumption. Last year he scorned the truth; now, with death staring him in the face, he listens attentively, and makes few objections. Poor fellow! the only one who seemed to have any anxiety to understand the glorious message of salvation! After a long conversation, I go on to the next house. The woman has been ill, but is getting better; she attends the services which I hold close by, but she also is a drunkard; and after half-an-hour's conversation and explanation of the gospel and of her need, by some exclamation she lets me see that she neither understands nor cares for the blessed message.

Again I proceed, and at the next house I meet a man who is living in sin; he neither believes in devil, or hell, or hereafter, and laughs at them; so, after some words of warning, and setting the glad tidings before him, I turn home, calling in on the way to see my old man, who is still lying before the fire, and still indifferent to his soul's salvation.

Well, I thought, as I reached my hut, accounts are often given of the good and cheering results of visiting, and I have recorded with joy the anxious souls with whom I have met, and the souls that I have seen led to Christ through visitation; now here is the other side, that the readers of your paper may feel that there is a time of trial and of sorrow, as well as a time of saving.

CHARLES F. PERRIN.

APPEAL FOR EAST AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly let us bring before your readers the pressing need at the present moment of two devoted Christian men—one as a medical missionary, and the other as a lay superintendent, for the East African Mission of the Church Missionary Society, for whom an advertisement appeared in your columns last week?

At Mombasa we have a European missionary staff of some ten persons, and a band of Christian Africans from Nasik, among whom there has already been much sickness. There is also the probability of the arrival of liberated slaves in considerable numbers, to be entrusted to the Society, while no qualified medical man can be found nearer than Zanzibar, more than a hundred miles distant. In addition to this, there is a wide field of usefulness for a medical evangelist of devoted spirit among the inhabitants of Mombasa and the neighbourhood. Is there no medical man in Great Britain who, for love to Christ, will volunteer for this service?

The lay superintendent is required to take the oversight in secular matters of the Mission, which, it is expected, will include a settlement of liberated Africans. He should be a thoroughly practical man, capable of superintending the erection of buildings, the making of roads, etc., and of directing the affairs of the settlement; qualified also to fill the office of English Vice-Consul, if, as is likely, it should be offered to him. Above all, he must be a devoted Christian, with his heart in the main object of the Mission—the furtherance of the gospel. At present the whole responsibility of the Mission rests upon the Rev. W. S. Price, formerly of Nasik; but his health is precarious, and there is extreme danger of his entirely breaking down, unless he is speedily relieved of the secular concerns of the Mission.

Is there no retired officer (not too old), or civil engineer, or master-builder, or gentleman farmer, or other qualified person, prepared to give himself to this holy enterprise, and to help in laying the foundation for the evangelization of the tribes of East Africa?

Shall this appeal be made in vain? When the object is a perilous voyage of discovery to the Polar Seas, or a dangerous military expedition on the Gold Coast, shall volunteers flock to offer their services? But when the object is the deliverance of captive souls, and the furtherance of the Redeemer's kingdom, shall none among his subjects be found ready to respond to his call, and say, "Here am I, Lord; if Thou wilt, send me"?—Praying that the Lord himself may cause the appeal to be heard in the hearts of those He has chosen for the work, we remain, faithfully yours,

THE GOSPEL IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Having often experienced great pleasure in the perusal of the different accounts that from time to time reach us in this far-off land concerning the progress of Christ's kingdom in Britain, and being unwilling that the joyful news should all be wafted one way, we would like to give our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic some idea of what God is doing for us here in South America.

There are at present as many as twelve places in Buenos Ayres and Monte Video alone where the gospel is preached every Sunday in the English, and four where it is preached in the Spanish language. Four of the preaching-stations in Buenos Ayres are efficiently occupied (as far as English-speaking people are concerned) by the Rev. Dr. Smith and the Rev. F. N. Lett, of the Church of England, and working, we believe, under the auspices of the South American Missionary Society in London. The American Methodist Episcopal Church is the only one that, up to the present, has taken any steps towards evangelizing the natives; and we are happy to say that its efforts have not been in vain. Already many have been won from the darkness and superstition of Romanism to the light and liberty of the gospel. Both in Buenos Ayres and in Monte Video there are already several young men, converts from Romanism, who, besides being most active and zealous as Sunday-school teachers, hold religious meetings from time to time in the suburbs, with very great acceptability and success. It was our privilege last Sunday to be present at the Communion-service in the Rev. T. F. Thomson's church, in Monte Video, where we enjoyed the delightful sight of over a hundred people partaking of the sacred emblems, which (as more than half the people understood no other) were administered in the Spanish language.

The present success of the work is, we believe, in a great measure due to the fact that the American Bible Society's agent, Mr. Andrew M. Milne, and his active and enthusiastic staff of assistants, have up to the present time distributed over 50,000 copies of the Scriptures all through these countries and Brazil, besides what have been distributed by the British and Foreign Society's late agent, Mr. W. Junor, who till the time of his death was indefatigable in his efforts to scatter the blessed seed.

Mr. Milne has lately opened a depot in Buenos Ayres, in the same premises formerly occupied by that of the British and Foreign Bible Society, besides which he has one in Monte Video, from which great numbers of books go out annually on missions of love and of salvation throughout all these countries. He has lately been through Brazil, and we are glad to hear that he met with so much success that he has determined to pay a second visit there as soon as he gets the business in Buenos Ayres into working order. It is cheering to see the effects of Bible-reading, as they are manifested in different ways among the people here. Many a once shabby hut has been transformed into a neat and comfortable little homestead, in which the Bible and a copy of our little Spanish hymn-book occupy a prominent place, besides being used every day by the families. And it is by no means an uncommon thing now whilst walking in the streets of these cities to hear a Spanish version of that old familiar hymn, "Heaven is my home," or some other such tune, issuing from the most unlikely and unexpected places. These things cannot but be attended with the most glorious results, and if there were but a few more labourers in the field even now there could commence the ingathering of a great and most encouraging harvest.

When once the religious feelings are awakened in the natives here, they manifest great earnestness in the acquisition of knowledge, and eagerly read all the books and tracts that are accessible to them; hence, "Nelson on Infidelity," "Nights with the Romanists," "Dr. Barth's Scripture Stories," and the Bible, compose the library of many of the natives and other converts from Romanism. There is a great want of religious books in Spanish, many of the people have read and re-read all that are to be had, and we believe that if more were translated or written in that language, much more good would be effected. Last year the Rev. T. F. Thomson in Monte Video held weekly meetings, at which he read and made comments on the "Pilgrim's Progress" in Spanish, and every evening the church was full of most attentive listeners, and we believe that much lasting good was effected.

We have been very much rejoiced to see the intense interest that appears to have been awakened among the young men of England in the cause of foreign missions. It is cheering to see that there are still many noble hearts, that, responding to a dying Saviour's love, are ready to say, "Lo, we have left all and have followed Thee." And we hope ere long to hear of the departure of many of these heralds of the cross for fields of usefulness in the dark places of the earth; would to God that the steps of some of them were directed to these shores, where there is indeed a most promising field. In these countries Spanish is the language of the people, and a man knowing Spanish might travel all over this vast extent of country without having to learn any other language. There are already plenty of Bibles, hymn-books, and tracts in that language, so that labourers directing their attention to this part of the Lord's vineyard would find all things ready for them to commence at once to gather in the glorious harvest. Spanish is, moreover, a language that is much more easily acquired than any of the languages spoken by the natives of savage and remote regions. Besides this, there is almost weekly communication by steamer between these countries and England, hence, nearly all the comforts of home may be enjoyed, making it much less of a sacrifice for men to come here than it is for them to go where their work is impeded and cramped by their having to battle daily for the mere necessities of life. And last, but not least, there is quite as much need of pure gospel truth here, as there is in the centre of Africa itself. The workers here are all zealous and faithful to their respective charges; they preach, superintend Sunday-schools, hold prayer-meetings, distribute the holy Scriptures and other religious literature, and intend shortly to commence a religious periodical. But the field is too great for them, there is still room and abundance of work for a hundred earnest workers. Who will supply this want? Were more attention given to these semi-evangelized countries for a few years, it would not be long before men were raised up in them, to join with their brethren in England and the United States in going to heathen lands to carry the glorious news of a full and free salvation through the merits of our common Saviour. Petitions have from time to time been sent in to the Rev. T. F. Thomson at Monte Video from several of the country towns, offering to provide a suitable place and to defray all expenses for him to go out and preach for them. To some of these he has been obliged to send a refusal, on account of his many occupations. These facts of themselves speak volumes in favour of the coming here of young men devoted wholly to the mission work among Spanish people. And now, hoping the suggestions made here may not be without some good fruit, I beg to remain, Yours in Christ,

R. J. WHITE.

THE FAITHFUL PREACHER.

"But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him."—1 COR. ii. 14.

They said he was sensational; truly he seemed to feel,
With deathless souls of dying men, for God he had to deal.
His God no strange abstraction, his heaven no shadowy shore,
If doubtful once his mental view, life's morning mists were o'er;

He knew the power of self and sin, knew mercy's perfect plan,
Its wondrous adaptation to the varying wants of man;
Sought to convict of sin, that he might force men to the feet
Of the ever-living Great High Priest, their waiting Paraclete;
He told the tireless love of God, the life of God the Son,
From lowly birth in Bethlehem's shed, to Calvary's "It is done;"

His strong faith, substituting sight, each truth as clearly wrought,
As he had dwelt with Christ below, and seen e'en as He taught.

His mission was to scatter seed, each grain a word of God,
He spread it broadcast plenteously. Alas! they on it trod.
That word, a "lamp," he knew it, and he flashed its lighted line [shine;
Till we thought into the darkest heart some reflex ray must Alas! they were preoccupied, hardened to love and law;
"Who can break up the fallow ground?" who may allure or awe?

Deaf hearts had they, as men of old, when God vouchsafed to plead,
As if without capacity salvation to receive.

And they said it was "sensational"—surely 'twas sterling truth,
Of mightiest moment to them all, in manhood, age, and youth.
True, his tone was tuned to tenderness, or strong with nervous might,
As he wooed them by the love of Christ, or urged His sovereign right. [smile,

And there was strong attraction in his glad heart-lighted
That did (scarce consciously, we thought) our sympathies beguile—
But surely fellow-feeling should some vital force impart,
By God-implanted instinct 'tis heart answereth to heart!
True, cumbered so with countless cares, and burdened to the sod,

He marvelled men should be, who might cast all their cares on God!

And wondered, whilst One knocked without (One altogether fair,

Yet with His visage misery-marred with griefs for them He bare),

That closer they should bar the door, and higher climb the stair,

And with the night-drops on His brow, should leave Him knocking there!

That the risen Sun of Righteousness should be the dark world's light,

And men still blindly grope their way down, down to endless night!

Loved with an everlasting love, redeemed at countless cost,
He said he marvelled any should be numbered with the lost!

But is it not amazing that so vain's God's every plea,
And man can draw the heart of God—with but his misery?

True, too, he little mention made of counter creeds and isms,

Questions of diverse doctrine, ecclesiasticisms, and schisms;
Those who on technicalities philosophize were vexed
He did not more elaborate the teaching of the text.

But his evangel's centre-truths his heart like loadstones drew,

With tried heart-eloquence he held those centre-truths in view,

And, we thought, had he a seraph's tongue aflame with holy love,

Had he come direct to his pulpit-stair from the God-filled courts above,

And concentrated in one special plea the wisdom of the skies,
There were not wanting list'ners who could coldly criticise!

But some to whom life's road was strange, with step more firmly trod,

Cheered by his progress in the way; his nearness to his God.
The father came with burden bowed; he left his burden
there;

The mother, needing guidance, found her clouded pathway clear;

The young man, well-nigh overcome by a fell temptation's might,

To wrestle with the tempter went, and conquered in the fight;
The murmuring mourner felt God's hand, and bowed beneath the stroke,

And bondsmen by the truth made free, from life-long bondage broke;

Some shortly to be called from earth, there gathered strength of wing;

The grave was robbed of victory, and death had lost its sting!

Sensational! O you, with nerves so sensitively strung,
That mild and measured warnings must fall from the preacher's tongue,

Lest you believe him earnest, of danger conscious be,
(Blind on a precipice's edge) be warned, and turn, and flee.

Is eternity a myth that men sensationless should be,
And earnestness a shaming mark of singularity?

Must banner-bearers of our God His truth-scroll fold and furl,

Lest lagging soldiery should deem their teaching "personal"?"

"Listen," he said (his Master's words sensational or not),
"Lukewarm, I'll spue thee from my mouth; would ye were cold or hot."

By dying-beds, when earth has given all, all it had to give,
God's servant sees that aged men have not begun to live;

Wise in their generation knows the sons of men to be,
But sees them bankrupt at the last to endless poverty,

Striving to satiate with self long labour-paths they trod;
He knew their souls were hungering, and could but be filled by God;

And he has yet to learn that overdrawn the bliss of heaven can be,

Man's helplessness and hopelessness, or Christ's sufficiency.

Sensational! Could men below, or angel hosts above
O'erestimate our Triune God's inestimable love?

For concernments of a measureless immensity His care,
Give this our rebel atom-world so limitless a share?

If sons of God, joint heirs with Christ, the Spirit-temples you

May be, and may be now, if but to God you will be true;
How can you for convenient time with dull indifference wait?

How is it such tremendous truth can fail to agitate?

EAST ARDSLEY, WAKEFIELD.—In this secluded village there has been a wonderful awakening, in connection with a Mission in which the Rev. G. Howell, Mr. W. Holmes, and the Rev. W. Fulford, the curate in charge, have taken part. The work began in a prayer-meeting, which was held in the church about six weeks ago. The sermons which were delivered throughout the day were well attended, and at night the church was crowded. This was a new thing in Ardsley, and throughout the week the interest of the people was kept alive. Christians of long standing desired to live nearer to God, and the work went steadily on. Sunday, March 14, began a week which saw thirty new converts at the table of the Lord, and more than one hundred were spoken to who were anxious about their souls. The church is supposed to seat about 300, but as many as 500 have attended. To God be all the praise for what has been done in this benighted village!

THE MORALS OF TRADE.

We continue to receive letters on this subject. The following, in reference to buying, is not a whit less important than those on selling:—

"I want to tell you how heartily I approve of your leader in THE CHRISTIAN of April 15, and with what pleasure I look forward to future papers on the subject. Such truth is needed for Christians to 'distinguish the things that differ.'

"I also think that papers on the Morals of Trade may well reach to us women. Many need to be reminded that their side in the Morals of Trade ought to be regulated by the grand principle of doing to others as we would be done by, even in our minute transactions. I have often been pained to see 'women professing godliness' taking up shopmen's time, beyond the worth of their purchases; or so fastidious in their selection of articles, as if their happiness depended on the style of their apparel; or pleased to get a bargain, whereby the shopkeeper declared that he lost money; and many such like things, which would totally prevent the possibility of any ladies giving admonition to the man or woman behind the counter, although really anxious to spread the knowledge of Christ.

"I believe if we all, however humble our capacity, were to act in the detail of life as witnesses for the loving Saviour, we should find far more liberty to testify of Him, and blessing in it."

It may be as well to remark that this subject is not introduced into our columns with the idea of animadverting upon any class, whether Christians or otherwise. We do not believe that the commercial classes, taken as a whole, are either better or worse than the average of their fellow-men. But this is a commercial country, and the morality which obtains in British commerce, whether on 'Change or in the New Cut, is a very fair gauge of the moral tone of Englishmen everywhere. The morals of commerce are the morals of the country, and, indeed, of the world, because every man and woman, of every rank or grade, in every clime, is constantly engaged in commerce, as a buyer, if not a seller. The standard of morals in relation to buying and selling is the true standard of the whole life.

One of our oldest readers writes us:—"I most earnestly hope you will not pursue further the subject of 'The Morals of Trade' in THE CHRISTIAN. The axe should be laid to the root of the tree, not to the branches, if solid improvement is hoped for. Professions, ruling, labouring, and all other classes, have their iniquities, and for a conference to descend to such matters, when a spirit of revival is upon us, touching the very root of all sin, and the spring of all righteousness, Christ, is too much like Convocation coming down to vestments and postures for their discussions alone."

But this argument would go much farther than our friend would be content to follow it. John the Baptist, whose words he quotes, descended to particulars, when he exhorted the publicans to exact no more than was appointed them; and the soldiers, to do violence to no man and be content with their wages; and the people generally, to share their garments and their meat with their poorer neighbours.

The fact is, in our zeal for a free gospel, and our indignation against "moral essays" in the pulpit, we may have overlooked the importance of a high tone of morals, that is to say, of righteous acting. And even in exhorting to holiness, we must remember that the only test of scriptural holiness is scriptural righteousness. Holiness is the hidden root of which righteousness is the visible fruit. The Epistles, after enunciating the most exalted and soul-elevating truths, descend to such particulars as "Lie not one to another," "That no man defraud his brother," "See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently."

NOT God's answering prayer in respect of earthly things and earthly gifts, but growth of the new man, is the true proof that we please God.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE IN LUCKNOW.

Mr. Somerville, with his son, arrived here on Jan. 15, and remained for two weeks. During that time he held thirty-seven services, consisting of sermons, lectures, Bible-readings, and addresses. By the active co-operation of the Church, Wesleyan, and American Methodist missionaries, together with gentlemen of the station, the theatre, chapels, soldiers' prayer-room, and a large public hall, called the Kaiser Bagh Baradarri, were opened to him, and almost all classes of people listened to the word of life from his lips. Special meetings were held in cantonments for the soldiers.

A very successful meeting for young men was held in the Kaiser Bagh Baradarri. Brigadier Gen. Olphert presided. Mr. Somerville gave an eloquent and stirring lecture on Daniel in the fiery furnace, after which a Young Men's Christian Association was organized. This society has maintained a weekly prayer-meeting since Mr. Somerville's departure, but it is too early to see how much good may flow from it. A very pleasant children's meeting was also held. Native Christians were addressed through an interpreter; while at a special meeting held for educated natives who understand English, Hindoos, Mohammedans, and Bramos, were addressed to their expressed satisfaction on the conversion of the Philippian jailer. In none of the services did Mr. Somerville seem more pleased than in this. On the last day of his stay a meeting of Christian workers was held, and the methods of successful evangelism among all classes in India were discussed, followed by a lecture on the Holy Spirit.

Perhaps the most profitable and enjoyable of Mr. Somerville's services were the morning prayer-meetings. These were held just an hour, and often might have been continued longer to much profit. An inquiry-meeting held near the close of the series was intended to garner the results. At this many persons professed to find Christ; besides these, I think two or three in cantonments were brought to the Lord.

This was not, however, all the good effected by the Mission. Different denominations of Christians were drawn nearer together; prejudices against revival efforts were softened; and Christians were stirred up to a study of God's Word. Indeed, it seems to me that Mr. Somerville is better fitted for instructing Christian believers than convincing unrepentant sinners; and if I mistake not, more fruit of his Mission will be seen among believers than among those plucked as brands from the burning.

Almost all his sermons showed very careful preparation, and in many parts memorization, rich knowledge of the Bible, aptness in illustration, and now and then a bit of dramatic word painting. Mr. Somerville preaches Christ and Him crucified as the sinner's only and present salvation from sin. I know nothing about his theology or denomination. I suppose he holds views of his own, but he never preaches them. It is Christ to be accepted now by faith.

Mr. Somerville professes to follow to some extent the methods of Mr. Moody, and often cheered us by relating incidents of the great work of grace in Glasgow. Those methods are not perhaps as novel in this part of India as they were in Scotland. Still they are most admirably calculated to excite, win, and draw men to Christ. The hymns used are simple, and many of them are now sung by thousands in India.

Mr. Somerville left us for Cawapore, Agra, Delhi, and Meerut, which in turn are to share his labours. He was attended by the good wishes and prayers of all Christians in Lucknow. May his Mission prove a "savour of life" to many thousands in India.—Yours faithfully, K.

A CHRISTIAN LADY, who has been similarly tried, wishes to communicate with the lady who requested prayer in the issue of April 8, on account of being harassed by distressing thoughts. The address will be treated as strictly private, if the envelope containing it be marked "private," and directed to Box 25, Post-office, Sheffield.

WESTMINSTER LODGERS.

On Monday evening, April 12, a deeply-interesting meeting of about 500 men from the common lodging-houses of the district was held in the lecture-hall of Westminster Chapel. A considerable time was devoted to the enjoyment of a good tea; and as one looked at the motley throng surrounding the well-spread tables, one could not help feeling that, in this instance, our Lord's command had been literally complied with. To this generous feast had come, not the rich and well-to-do, who could bid their entertainers again, but those who evidently stood in need of a meal. Some were in ragged attire, and many faces were begrimed with the satins of our London markets and slums. It occurred to several who looked at them that it would be a work of some difficulty to give them an evening which they could enjoy; but when the time came for all to assemble in the large room upstairs, the sight of Mr. Duncan Miller's grand array of bells soon set at rest all anxieties on this score.

At about nine o'clock the Earl of Shaftesbury took the chair, and his lordship was supported by Rev. S. Martin (minister of the chapel), Rev. Canon Conway, Mr. H. Sawell (London City Mission), Mr. Robert Baxter, etc.

The Rev. S. Martin having opened the meeting with prayer, afterwards said he had one favour to ask. He was very glad to see so many present, and he hoped they would have an enjoyable evening. But would they be kind enough, when very pleased with any part of the programme, to express delight by the clapping of hands, and not by stamping of feet. This little hint was remembered throughout the evening; and as a sign that the audience at once resolved to act upon it, Mr. Martin's request was succeeded by a vigorous round of clapping, but no stamping.

The Earl of Shaftesbury said: "My good friends, inmates of the lodging-houses in Westminster, we have invited you here for what you call a 'jollification.' You are not here to have lectures given you, and to listen to a lot of rigmarole. You have been invited in a spirit of hospitality; we are very glad to see you, and we trust you are equally pleased to see us. We hope you will be pleased with the amusements of this evening. There are wicked amusements, and there are good ones, and we believe that the one to which you have been invited is a good one, and one that will do you good. Our great desire is to give you a taste for what is good, for what is innocent and elevating; and we think a little treat of this kind is well adapted to do so, and we regard it as a very legitimate form of instructing you. I dare say some here may be able to remember an incident in Bible story, and how one of old 'remembered Jerusalem in his mirth.' That is what you have to do—to have good thoughts mingling with your common, every-day enjoyments. You should thank God for an evening of this kind, and, like Job, mingle thoughts of Him even with your recreation.

Mr. Miller and his friends then played on bells a beautiful little composition, entitled, "The Snowdrop." It was listened to with keen interest by the audience, as indeed were all the performances, especially Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," the difficult variations of which were most admirably executed.

The Rev. Canon Conway said he should like them to remember one word—thankfulness. Thankfulness was always connected with happiness, and if, poor though they might be, they would begin to think over the many mercies they enjoyed, they would, when they reckoned them in order, find that they had abundant reason for gratitude. When they looked at the stars, their host was so numerous that they could scarcely be counted, and yet it was possible to fix attention upon particular ones. And so with their mercies; few as they might seem at first, they would as we thought of them, come more and more prominently into view, until we should be surprised at their number. And if they were thankful they should, like the good man of old, set up a monument in remembrance of the mercies they had received. In conclusion, he affectionately exhorted all to leave their sins, and to enter in through the door of hope, which Jesus had opened to the enjoyment of all the blessings which faith in Him brings before us.

It may be added that in addition to the friendly words of the Earl of Shaftesbury and other speakers, the interest of the meeting was well sustained by the singing of hymns which are now well known. "Hold the Fort" seemed a special favourite.

PURE LITERATURE.

During the past few months a very successful movement, which was commenced in the provinces, has been going on in London, to provide "Shelters" or "Rests," for cabmen. Up to the present time several have been opened and more are in course of construction, several gentlemen having undertaken to defray the cost of one each. These "shelters" afford opportunities to those engaged in mission work among cabmen such as they have never had before of supplying them with religious literature, which we find, from practical experience, the most effectual means of counteracting the pernicious effects of impure and infidel literature, which is one of the most powerful and diabolical machines for destroying men's souls, and at this present moment is doing untold injury to our Redeemer's cause throughout the world, and especially among this class.

I have commenced to supply each "Shelter" with a large parcel of pure literature for distribution among those who visit these places, and they are thankfully received, and eagerly read. I have, by God's help, been enabled to supply the men at the fifty-five Fire Brigade and four Salvage Corps Stations with a pocket Testament and a weekly supply of religious literature. If space permitted, I would give extracts from the many letters received, gratefully testifying of blessing received through this work. Text rolls have also been sent, and may be seen suspended at the police-stations and police-hospitals in the City. Also 1977 pocket Testaments have been distributed amongst postmen, sorters, telegraph clerks, and messengers, during the past fortnight; but yet there remains very much to be done for the above-named classes; so "Brethren, pray for us," and "Come over and help us" with funds for the carrying forward of this work for the Saviour.

Donations marked "Mission to Policemen," etc., will be thankfully received by the Publishers of THE CHRISTIAN; at the London and County Bank, Shoreditch; or by myself, 14, Richmond-road, Dalston, E. J. J. JONES.

CAMBORNE, CORNWALL.

The dear Lord has not forgotten this little place; but whilst blessing others, He has also blessed us. In the year 1872, we had a revival in connection with the church of this parish; but this year has been one of far greater blessing. The glorious work commenced in January, and is still continuing. Many, very many, both young and old, men and women, have found and rejoiced in a precious Saviour, and by their daily walk are testifying to the change. The work has been much hindered for lack of room, as the only room which we can have in the parish will not contain more than seventy persons, and those who desire to attend our meetings have been between 300 and 400. We grieve to refuse admittance, when there appears such a thirst after good. Long have we felt the need of a larger building, not only for special meetings, but also for general use, for we are obliged to hold our Sunday-school in the church, and we have very reluctantly had to refuse to take in all who would attend our night-school. At our general meetings, when our members are able to be present, there is but little space remaining for any one else; and in winter our tea-meetings are sadly cramped for lack of room. A plain building such as we require, to seat comfortably 300 people, would cost about £500. Our parishioners, consisting entirely of the labouring class, are unable to raise this sum. We shall make no personal appeal, feeling that the silver and the gold are the Lord's, and that He will stir up the hearts of his people to help us in this matter. Neither shall we feel it right to move one stone until the necessary sum is in hand, believing it to be unscriptural to be in debt. If this matter be of the Lord it will prosper; if not, let it come to nought. Contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Miss Butlin, Camborne, Cornwall.

"THE SPANISH CHRISTIAN RECORD," issued under the auspices of the Spanish Evangelization Society, Edinburgh, in its first number, contains details which will be read with interest. Although its object is not political, it gives an intelligible account of the situation in Spain, in order that the prospects of evangelistic work may be clearly understood. The fact appears clear that the priests are making a resolute effort to bring back the old times of Papal ascendancy; but the conviction is firmly cherished that the time to favour Spain with the gospel has come. The first number contains several items of news; and this little quarterly paper, with very modest pretensions, promises fairly.

MISSION WORK IN CANTERBURY.

A good work is now going on amongst the militia and soldiers stationed at Canterbury. Some 900 of the East Kent Militia assemble annually in the city, to learn their duties as soldiers. A lady, whose services have been owned and blessed by God for the last two years amongst the soldiers of this garrison, was earnestly invited to commence a special work amongst the soldiers and the militia. With the assistance of a missionary, whose labours have been greatly blessed, the work has been begun. Colonel Kirby, the commanding officer of the depot, kindly engaged the Music-hall for the proposed meetings three nights a week. Each meeting has been greatly blessed, both to militia, soldiers, and citizens.

It is wonderful to witness the power of a simply preached gospel on these usually careless men. Twenty, thirty, forty, present themselves in the inquiry-room each evening, deploring, in their simple, hearty way, the past, seeking free pardon through the Saviour's blood, and avowing their determination henceforth, by God's grace, to serve the Lord. The citizens are also greatly blessed in these meetings. On April 3 a very powerful address was given by the Rev. H. Woods Tyndall, of Christ Church, Margate.

During the past week the meetings have been well attended, and much blessing has been given. A united prayer-meeting is held every Monday evening. Colonel Kirby presided at the first, and on Monday last the Dean of Canterbury conducted the meeting. The room was quite full, and many earnest prayers were offered up for God's blessing to rest upon this special effort now put forth. Will the Lord's people pray for us?

GOSPEL TENT AT LINCOLN.

The city of Lincoln urgently needs special efforts to be put forth for the evangelization of its working-classes. Extensive foundries exist, employing thousands of hands, also, only recently, ironstone has been found in the immediate neighbourhood, so that large numbers of working-men have been attracted from other parts.

The population has so rapidly increased during the last ten years, that notwithstanding what has been done in church and chapel building, many families are attending no place of worship, and living in carelessness and neglect respecting their higher interests; these can only be reached by special effort put forth by earnest Christian workers.

Miss Lockwood, who has devoted some years to this kind of work, has for the last eighteen months been labouring amongst the people in Lincoln, holding services during the summer in a tent, and at various places in the winter; also visiting from house to house. Her efforts have been much appreciated, and also blessed of God.

Miss Lockwood is so impressed with the great need there is for a regular Mission to reach these people, that she has decided to erect a building upon a piece of ground which was secured by her some time ago in Croft-street, the centre of a thickly-populated district. Undenominational services will be held in it, and a Young Women's Christian Association, a Temperance Society, Bible-classes, evening-schools, etc., will be connected with it.

It is proposed to put up at first only a winter tent, or wooden building, to seat about 250 persons. This will cost £160, and it is earnestly hoped that many of the Lord's people will help to furnish this sum at once, so that operations may be commenced without delay.

Reference is kindly permitted to Mrs. Pennfather, Mildmay Park; or to Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.; to either of whom contributions may be sent; or to Miss Lockwood, 25, Croft-street, Lincoln, who will gladly afford any further information that may be desired.

A CITIZEN.

UNITED EVANGELICAL SERVICES AT CHERTSEY.—Meetings have been held day after day at noon, and evangelists have preached in the evening to large congregations, assisted by Episcopalian, Wesleyan, Congregational, and Baptist ministers. The movement has also had the co-operation of Sir Arthur Lawrence, Mr. Benjamin Scott, Chamberlain of London, and several tradesmen and gentlemen of the town. The Town-hall, where the services have been held, has been the scene of great fervour and heart-searching. Many have been pricked to the heart, and many, too, have been able to rejoice in believing. It is hoped to renew the movement by soon holding another week's services.

EVANGELIZATION OF GERMANS.

Few who have only passed through the villages on the Vaudois side of the southern extremity of Lake Lemane, are aware how very large a proportion of the working population are German-speaking; circumstances have combined to throw many departments of work almost wholly into the hands of immigrants from German Switzerland, and, consequently, the great majority of artisans, shopkeepers, and handicraftsmen are German-speaking. Add to this, that most of the servants in pensions, hotels, and even in private houses, are from the German cantons, brought often by the desire of learning to speak French.

Of this vast working population it may be, almost without exaggeration, said, that there is no one to care for their souls. Few of them know French well enough, at least for years after they come, to follow services in that language, or understand the instructions of French-speaking teachers; and long before they are sufficiently familiar with the language of the country, all desire for spiritual advantages (even if once felt) has generally died away, and they have sunk into contented disregard of all religion.

It is true that there is a morning service in German on Wednesdays, held through the winter months at the Eglise Libre at Vernex, by the German Pastor of Vesey, who comes over for the purpose; but this, valuable as it is to the winter visitors of the higher classes who speak German, is, of course, quite out of the reach of all who must work for their bread.

There is also an occasional afternoon German service held on Sundays in winter at the Montreux National Church, by a pastor from Aigle; but being irregularly performed, and not announced beforehand, it is of little use to the working-classes. What is needed here is not only a service, and meetings held at hours open to workpeople: an evangelist is required, one speaking the language of these "strangers in the land," and willing and able to spend his time in going among them, visiting from house to house, and gathering them for meetings at suitable times and places.

The resources, both of money and labour, of the Free Church of Vaud, are taxed to the uttermost. This effort must, therefore, be an independent one.

And the prevalence of Rationalism in German Switzerland lays a very heavy burden on all the sound Christian agencies of three cantons. They are called on already to work beyond their power, and much cannot be, therefore, expected from them. The plan proposed by a few friends here is to endeavour to raise the sum necessary for the salary of a German evangelist to work among the working classes who speak German in the villages in the neighbourhood of Montaux. Eighty pounds is required, and we have no doubt that a suitable man will be found if that sum can be raised.

We would then appeal to all who are alive to the value of souls in God's sight, and who desire to see the gospel put within the reach of "all people, nations, and languages."

Collections and contributions in Switzerland are received by Miss Whately, Maison Perengieux, Clarens; and in England by Donald Matheson, Esq., 52, Queen's Gate, S.W., Chairman of the Foreign Evangelization Society.

The Foreign Evangelization Society, as our readers probably know, is specially devoted to the work of aiding Missionary efforts on the Continent, and is always ready to be a channel for conveying missionary contributions there from England.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—An interesting gathering of the North London preachers was recently held at the Iona Rooms, Camden Town. Edward Gibson, Esq., presided, and Mr. R. L. Johnston gave a stirring address on "Brotherly Love," especially enjoining its practice during the summer efforts. It was arranged afterwards to occupy stately for preaching the following places in the locality:—Regent's Park, near Gloucester-gate, superintendent, Rev. W. Ewart; Regent's Park, near Zoological Gardens, Mr. J. Harrington; Cobden's Statue, Camden Town, Rev. Z. B. Woffendale; Euston-road, Mr. Grimsby; Pancras-road, Mr. Turpin, Mr. Moir, Mr. Geller; King's-cross, Rev. J. Dupee; Camden-road, Mr. Gill; Hampstead-heath, Mr. Harman; College-street, Mr. Mills; Mornington-crescent, Mr. Geller. Other stations will be added shortly. Preachers greatly needed. Those wishing to help can obtain particulars at the office. The South London preachers also met at the schoolroom, Melior-street, Bermondsey. Mr. Gill gave the address, and steps were afterwards taken for united efforts in preaching in that district.

RELIGIOUS WORK IN AMERICA.

Letters received from friends in America speak well of a good work now in progress in the southern towns and cities of the United States. The Rev. George A. Hall (Young Men's Christian Association, Washington) and Mr. T. K. Cree, of the Board of Indian Commissioners, of the same city, have been on a tour of visitation, and the services they held were largely attended. A marked feature in one meeting was the public re-dedication to the Christian life of several persons holding a prominent position. Many written and verbal requests for prayer were presented at each meeting, and marked answers were received to these prayers.

The appeals of some of the new converts were very touching, and reached those who would probably have been affected in no other way. Personal religion became the common topic in social and business circles. Business men, educated young men, as well as those accustomed to frequent the haunts of vice, ladies in every social condition, and children, have been amongst those brought to the Saviour.

After Mr. Hall and Mr. Cree left Georgia, three daily meetings were held, all of which were largely attended. Even in the evening hundreds were unable to obtain admittance to the hall. Soon afterwards, Rev. G. C. Needham, the Irish evangelist, arrived, and remained three weeks. Large accessions have been made to the churches, and the work of grace, now in its sixth week, is going forward with unabated interest.

Messrs. Hall and Cree then visited Jacksonville, Florida, and held services there, and a marked impression was produced. They also spent several days in Savannah, and many persons were brought under deep conviction.

At Columbus the meetings were largely attended, and hundreds renewed their vows of consecration, and publicly promised to do personal work for the Master.

It must also be said that the work of Messrs. Whittle and Bliss in Louisville, Kentucky, has moved that city, and the Rev. Mr. Graves, accompanied by Mr. Fish, has been holding a successful series of meetings.

MR. HENRY MOORHOUSE'S FAREWELL SERVICE.

The St. Louis Daily Globe, in its impression of March 29, announced that Mr. Henry Moorhouse would sail from New York for England on April 8. His farewell services at St. Louis were attended by an overflowing congregation, benches and pulpit stairs being crowded. In the pulpit he was accompanied by Rev. Dr. Brookes, Rev. Dr. Lewis, and Mr. Tudor.

Selecting Luke iv. 18, 19, as his text, Mr. Moorhouse delivered a fervent address, in the course of which he told an anecdote of a poor miner's wife and child, who were journeying to meet the husband and father. The latter had written the mother a letter, telling her he would meet them on the road, but not naming the station. The speaker noticed an appearance of sadness in the mother's face, but after hours of weary watching, the long-looked-for face and burly form of the miner appeared at the car window, and all sorrow was dispelled. The speaker said Christ was ready to meet them at some point on the road, where they were ready to lay their burdens down. In closing his address, he exhorted all to accept Christ. "I thank God," he said, "for bringing me to St. Louis! The two weeks I have spent here have been two of the happiest weeks of my life. I want you to believe that simple, glorious gospel which the Lord Jesus Christ came to preach. There we shall meet, never to part, in that bright, happy world."

As an appropriate hymn, the congregation then sang, "Shall we gather at the river?" after which Mr. Tudor led in prayer for a blessing on the word, and asked God to bless the speaker, and to guide him safely across the water, and to grant him many years of usefulness in the vineyard of the Lord. "Coronation" was then sung, and Dr. Brookes pronounced the benediction.

Many lingered to exchange a last greeting with Mr. Moorhouse. His arrangements were to spend two or three days in Chicago, and then proceed to New York, from which port he purposed sailing for England.

A correspondent writes:—"I hear from George C. Needham that he is at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, where he is being much used of the Lord in that city."

A SAD STORY FROM INDIA.

In a letter written to a Christian friend from Vizranagram, there are details which will be read with interest:—

"You will see by the heading of this letter," says the writer, "that we are in India; but very lately I received a letter from Mr. Bourkes, and I wish to copy an extract from it that yourself and your sister may see their deep need, and what sufferers they are. Mr. Bourkes writes:—"I have little heart to try to tell you about the suffering which has fallen upon many of the Farens during the last year, and is likely to affect them for another year. I have investigated severely afflicted districts; and in one village I found that there had been forty-three deaths from starvation in one village alone. The Catholic priests tell me that in three of their villages there have been sixty-two cases of death from starvation. We witness sad scenes every day, and are often heart-sick.....I have received in all during the last ten weeks Rs. 700, which I have distributed in rice by cupfulls to the poor creatures coming down from the hills to work in the relief works. I have buried several poor creatures from my own compound, who have died of sickness caused by want. Between twenty and forty have died on the relief works just across the river, and how many on the other side I cannot tell; but many whole villages are broken up, and I do not know what will be the end. It is sad work for us all."

The lady who forwards this letter to us is Mrs. E. Ford, Shorn Park Villa, Teignmouth, S. Devon, and she will gratefully acknowledge any donations that may be sent her to assist in this painful emergency.

THE TRUMPET TO THY MOUTH!

HOSEA VIII. 1.

"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

Wake up, wake up the city!
To east, to west, to north, to south,
Let no uncertain sound
Lull the sleeping millions round:
Wake, wake them up in pity!
The foe is at the gates!
The foe is in the streets!
At the portals of the palace,
In the lanes, and in the alleys,
"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

Once more the call be given!
To great, to small, to age, to youth,
Warned of the danger round,
Let the gracious gospel sound!
Echo the call of heaven!
A mighty Saviour's nigh,
To Him for safety fly!
Haste, haste, while still He calleth!
Once with Him, no ill befallerth!
"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

A blast, long, loud, and thrilling,
Telling the way, the life, the truth!
Oh! call them, call them in
From the thoroughfares of sin!
Salvation's halls are filling!
Time flies on rapid wing—
Doom surely hastening!
Why will ye die, ye sinners?
Why not of life be winners?
"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

Christ's warriors round thee gather!
The veteran calm—the fervid youth—
To battle for the Lord,
Grasping the Spirit's sword,
The word of God our Father!
Christian! God sides with Thee!
Sure is thy victory!
To the rescue, then, believer,
The dying to deliver!
"The trumpet to thy mouth!"

AMERICAN NOTES.

We extract the first three following items from Dr. Talmage's paper, The Christian at Work :—

Another great ingathering in Brooklyn Tabernacle. It was communion last Sabbath, and 163 persons connected themselves with the church, being 619 since the present protracted religious interest.

A great revival is going on in Louisville, Kentucky. Major D. W. Whittle, P. P. Bliss, and James H. Cole, have been the leading actors in this great awakening. The churches of Louisville have rarely co-operated on any subject. But for several weeks the different congregations have seemed to forget distinctive creeds, and have united on a common platform. During the meetings at least 800 requests for prayer were handed in, and many striking answers were reported. Messrs. Whittle, Cole, and Bliss are carrying on their good evangelistic work in all places, with immense audiences and great success.

Commenting on Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work, a London contemporary remarks :—

"By their fruits ye shall know them.' The shrewd journalists have a right to push this test. They ask whether there are fewer drunkards in their streets, fewer profligates, fewer thieves, fewer ruffians. They ask whether cleanliness has followed the new call to godliness. They do not admit that there has been any perceptible improvement. We trust that, in coming to London, the American evangelists will not forget to preach the common-place virtues which even worldlings honour, and to denounce sins which even policemen can detect."

Softly, neighbour. First the ear, afterwards the full corn in the ear. Christ went through all the region of Palestine doing his blessed work; but it may be doubted if there were any "fewer drunkards, fewer profligates, fewer thieves, fewer ruffians" in Jerusalem, or Bethany, or Capernaum after his ministry than before. Paul preached at Mars Hill, but for all that it did not end the licentiousness of the Greeks. Furthermore, drunkards, profligates, thieves, ruffians who are inclined to remain such, undoubtedly will. It is not these, but the indifferent; those who lead what are called moral, but which are still Christless lives, which the preaching of the gospel—by whomsoever delivered—reaches. Prove that the converts continue to lead the lives of thieves and profligates, and you have established your point. But not even the appearance of Gabriel, the preaching of Paul, or a tour of Christ Himself in England, would stop, even if it visibly checked, the career of crime and licentiousness in such cities as London or Liverpool. Mr. Moody preaches a crucified Christ, and that is better than the preaching of "common-place virtues, which even worldlings honour."

The well-known George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, writes us :—

"I have used your valuable paper very largely for more than a year, and the whole Christian public of America owe you their grateful thanks for the early, full, and reliable information which you have, from week to week, given in regard to the remarkable blessing that has everywhere attended the labours of my beloved friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey. I look for the weekly mail which brings THE CHRISTIAN with more interest than I have ever looked for any commercial news. On the day which our brethren commenced their evangelistic labours in your city, I received a cable despatch, asking prayer for a blessed entrance into London, which I caused to be telegraphed all over the country, and many have been the prayers, and continue to be offered up on behalf of these dear brethren."

PEMBROKE.—Mr. and Mrs. Diprose are residing at Lamphig, near Pembroke, and have been holding meetings at the Town-hall, Pembroke, on Lord's-day evenings, for some few months. Large congregations have been gathered together, and the word has been with power, so that many have come to the knowledge of Christ as a complete Saviour, and rejoice in the forgiveness of their sins. I was privileged lately to be at a meeting of young converts, which itself told a great tale, without mentioning any numbers, which, I am sure, our fellow-labourers would not wish. Also in several villages around many have been led to rest alone in Jesus. There is a large field of labour throughout the county, and they standing alone, greatly need the prayers and help of Christians to strengthen their hands. STEPHEN DAVIES.

TOTTENHAM TRAINING HOSPITAL.

When our Lord and Master was on earth, we are told that He "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil," and we know that this healing was extended as freely to the bodies as to the souls of those that came to Him. His followers in the present day cannot claim the miraculous powers which were granted to his immediate disciples for the same purpose, but it is now happily acknowledged on all sides, that the principle remains unchanged, and that our mission is not limited to words, but that we must use the natural means in our power to minister to the physical needs of our sick and poor, while we hold up to their view the One only Physician of their souls.

It is on this principle that the Tottenham Training Hospital has been established, and has been steadily working for several years past, and I am very desirous that it should become more widely known among Christians throughout the country than has yet been the case. I believe that cordial sympathy with the work cannot fail to follow a full acquaintance with the spirit in which it is conducted, and the actual benefits that have accrued to both nurses and patients. The work has a twofold aspect—as a hospital, and as an institute for training Christian women of all classes as skilled nurses.

The hospital (containing about fifty beds) is excellent in its arrangements, and the medical staff are of acknowledged skill. Very remarkable success has in many cases followed the treatment of the patients; but, above all, what strikes the visitor is the happy tone of Christian love which pervades all the workers, so that none who come into its wards can fail to learn that it is "the love of Christ" which "constrains" to all good and careful service.

Many are the testimonies which have been given to the unspeakable blessings received by the souls of patients, while their bodies were being skilfully treated for accidents or disease, and many a dying man and woman has had the gospel lovingly presented to the heart in a way impossible in an ordinary hospital. Surely this is worth working for!

As regards the training of the nurses, I find that a general idea exists that such an institution must necessarily be what is branded as "high church," or quite Popish in its character. A very slight knowledge of the Tottenham institution and those who are connected with it, will prove that this certainly is not the case here. The workers are of various evangelical denominations, and attend their own places of worship. There are of course no "vows," though there is an honourable understanding that no one shall enter on the work without the intention of devoting some years to it, and experience shows that a systematic training for Christian usefulness is quite as good a preparation for a happy married life as for an equally happy single lot.

I would earnestly invite those who have the opportunity to visit the institution on Tottenham-green, near Seven-sisters' Station, Great Eastern Railway, and I may also say that I know that the director is often sorely straitened for want of funds to supply its constant needs. I believe this would not be so often the case if it were better known among Christian friends.—I am, yours faithfully, Walthamstow, Essex.

ELIOT HOWARD.

DAILLY, AYRSHIRE.—The Young Men's Christian Association of the village of Dailly have decided on building a hall for evangelistic and temperance work. In answer to prayer, they have been provided with £220 for that purpose. A place of meeting has been our great want all along, and more especially since School Boards came into operation. Should any of the Lord's people see their way to help us, it will be thankfully received and gratefully acknowledged by John Smith, Granite Store, Dailly, Ayrshire.

BLACKHEATH.—The noon-day prayer-meeting, begun in the large hall of the Railway-station, Greenwich, on the 2nd instant, on the model of that in Moorgate-street Hall, has been well attended from its commencement, and has called forth expressions of hearty sympathy from all classes. This has been a great encouragement to those who have been praying for a manifestation of union amongst Christians, in accordance with the Master's own prayer (John xvii. 21). Short scriptural addresses have been given or promised by nearly all the ministers of the gospel and some laymen in the neighbourhood; and ladies play the harmonium, and lead the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns. Will our brethren ask that the Holy Spirit may make this daily prayer-meeting a centre of blessing to the whole of this district? R. W. B.

SERVICE AT THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

One of the most enthusiastic and altogether one of the best services Messrs. Moody and Sankey have had in London, was held in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle on Friday morning last. The service, we believe, as originally contemplated, was to be specially for the benefit of the students of Mr. Spurgeon's College and the Baptist ministers at present in town for the April anniversaries. Happily the scope of the meeting was widened, and tickets were issued to Mr. Spurgeon's congregation at large and as many more of the public as the building would contain.

As surely as the Sabbath-day comes round, so surely is every pew and every aisle of the Tabernacle alive with human beings; it was therefore no novel sight, though a most cheering and impressive one, that met our gaze as we threaded our devious way to a seat at the foot of the platform stairs, just as the immense congregation called on each other to "Hold the fort," led by Mr. Sankey, who was seated on the upper platform at his invariable companion, the American organ. Mr. Spurgeon's ordinary congregation always sings with a will, but this special gathering seemed to put more heart and voice than usual into the opening hymn, and its martial strains rolled through the house with thrilling effect.

Then the Rev. James Spurgeon stepped to the front and struck a minor note, that contrasted sadly with the one whose echoes had scarcely died away. Their beloved pastor, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, was not able to be present in body, though he was with them heart and soul. We could enter fully into the feeling of regret which this announcement caused. That good man of God—now a world-wide possession—sheds light wherever he goes, and infuses life wherever his burning words are heard. Still Messrs. Moody and Sankey were left, and we could hear Mr. Spurgeon, we hoped, another day. His brother led the prayers of the congregation, and among the petitions he presented to God were one that Mr. Moody's words might be "winged with the flaming fire divine," so reaching many hearts; and another with special reference to Mr. Sankey, that "the songs of earth might multiply the songs of heaven," and some sinner might repent as he sang the gospel. As he prayed that God would bless "the pastor of this place," the "Amens" were loud and deep.

Mr. Sankey's first solo was, "Here am I, send me," and then Mr. Moody read part of John xv., commenting on the graduated scale of fruit, more fruit, and MUCH FRUIT. Mr. Sankey appropriately followed with his solo, "Nothing but leaves," which he invariably sings with very powerful emphasis and effect.

Mr. Moody's address on "Work," we have now heard several times, but we must honestly say that this last version of it was the most telling of them all. He moved his audience in a wonderful and unprecedented way, now to laughter and now to tears. The laughter at some of Mr. Moody's well-aimed shafts of ridicule, which he knows so well how to use, was, we thought, somewhat immoderate. Perhaps our good Baptist friends are of a more cheerful disposition than the bulk of their fellow-Christians; we know that Mr. Spurgeon is a strong believer in a man's whole nature being aroused by the truth—the laughing as well as the weeping part of it—and, no doubt, he is right. Mr. Moody's command of the emotions was equally marked when he told some of his best stories, illustrative of the power of sanctified love and sympathy as qualifications for "Work." Tears flowed freely in all parts of the building, from men and women alike. About the middle of the address, when Mr. Moody was dwelling on the passage, "Prepared unto every good work," he said, "I wonder how many of you would rise if I should ask every man and woman to do so who are ready to go and speak to some anxious soul—I wonder how many would rise and say, 'I am ready for one?'" He paused. "Some one behind me says, 'Try it.' Well, I am rather afraid." He paused again. "Well, suppose we do try it. How many of you are ready to go and talk to some soul?" The students and ministers on either side of the platform at once rose en masse, and their example was quickly followed by numbers throughout the congregation. A goodly number, however, were honest enough to keep their seats. "Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay." Equal to the occasion, Mr. Moody added, "Well, now you have risen, I want to tell you that the Lord is ready to send you. Nothing would wake up London quicker than to have the Christians going out and speaking to the people. The time is come when it should be done. We have been on the defensive too long." He clenched home these remarks by narrating the story of the man at the lamp-post at ten o'clock at night, to whom he spoke about his salvation, and therefore compassed his conversion.

In speaking on continuous effort, he thus complimented Mr. Spurgeon's flock:—"This church has been a witness in all the earth that there have been conversions here right along for twenty years. In 1867 I came across the Atlantic specially with this object—to see this church, in which there were conversions all the while there was life, and where the Holy Ghost was at work. That is the kind of church we want."

Some words about courage and sympathy brought this memorable address to a close.

After Mr. Sankey had sung "The Armour-bearer," Mr. Moody, practical as ever, again came to the rails in front and said three thousand armour-bearers were wanted for the house-to-house visitation in the South of London; Mr. Dunn would remain and enrol them. What success Mr. Dunn met with we could not tell, having to hurry off to the noon-day meeting at the Haymarket.

MEETINGS IN THE SOUTH OF LONDON.

Yet another portion of the London campaign was opened on Sunday last by the Rev. Wm. Taylor, of California, in the Victoria Theatre. This building, capable of seating an audience of 3000, is situated in the New Cut, Lambeth, one of the poorest and most densely populated districts of London. At the opening services, the characteristic element of the neighbourhood was fairly represented, the class of people then present being evidently unaccustomed to attend divine worship regularly, if at all. In spite of barely two days' notice, the building on Sunday afternoon was nearly two-thirds filled, and in the evening a slight increase of attendance was noticeable.

Punctually at three o'clock the Rev. Wm. Taylor took his seat on the platform, and at once opened the service by announcing the hymn, "Have you on the Lord believed?" which was sung almost entirely, as, indeed, were most of the hymns, by the choir alone, although leaflets had been distributed among the audience as they entered. After prayer had been offered, Luke xi. 1—13 was read, or we should say recited, by Mr. Taylor, for at both services last Sunday he repeated the lessons from memory.

"Sowing the Seed" was then sung as a solo by Mr. Comber, the audience listening to it, as they did to the whole service, with riveted attention.

Mr. Taylor, previous to commencing his address, remarked that as the audience might have their attention drawn from the subject in wondering who and what he was, he would satisfy their curiosity in two minutes. This he proceeded to do, afterwards striking the keynote of success in these meetings—expectation. They had taken the place for three months, and during that time he was sure they would receive great blessing, and urged upon Christians the necessity of earnest united pleading with God.

He then proceeded with his address, taking as his text the passage in Luke xi. 13, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." Although words in the course of time changed their meaning and became obsolete, yet this illustration of parental love would always endure. Parental love was the infallible index selected by the Lord Jesus to show us the heart of God. This love made Him give his son to redeem us. The same love led Him afterwards to send down his Holy Spirit to minister to us, according to our needs. The text doesn't tell how much God's love is above human love—words could not convey it. Before the Holy Spirit could be received, there was a condition to be observed—submission to God's will; other bars might hinder the working of the Holy Spirit, such as unrepaid injuries to another, or the non-forsaking of sin.

Mr. Taylor continued his address at some length, depicting clearly the simple plan of salvation, closing the meeting by a short prayer. Some remained to the after-meeting.

In the evening he preached from Prov. xxviii 13, "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whose confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." His address was an earnest appeal to sinners, showing by apt illustration that sin, though concealed for a time, must ultimately be confessed. The after-meeting was more largely attended than in the afternoon, and Mr. Taylor, in the course of his address, mentioned that already fruit had ripened from the seed-sowing of the afternoon.

The meetings will be continued every night at eight o'clock.

The sanction of the Board of Works has been obtained for the erection of a building in Waterloo-street, Camberwell-green, which is now being proceeded with, and is expected to be opened early in June.

A SPRING DAY IN THE EAST OF LONDON.

BY MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

"Brightly beams our Father's mercy" on this great and guilty city, just now, and even on its most populous and poorest quarter. Sunday last was a bright day in the East of London. The first morning of spring, the first time that the late, long-drawn-out, ungenial cold season seemed fairly to have fled; the first time the early meeting in the Bow-road Hall had a fair chance; for the two previous Sundays the weather was so unfavourable as to deter great numbers, and of those who braved its disagreeables, many suffered severely from the biting currents of cold air in the hall—one six-foot-high soldier, who was acting as steward, took a chill at the first of these meetings, which laid him low in severe and dangerous illness, from which he is only now recovering; and not a few had a similar experience. But last Sunday, the throngs who long before seven o'clock had assembled in the hall had no need to be afraid of cold and rheumatism. The bright rays of an April sun were gilding the rough beams of the huge temporary structure, and making it look pleasant and inviting. The dwellers on the Bow and Mile-end roads were cheered as they left their beds by the strains of the sweet and now familiar hymns, sung by the groups who were wending their early way to the hall; and the highway, usually so quiet at seven o'clock on a Sunday morning, was alive with passers-by, rapidly converging to the top of the Burdett-road.

The hall was well filled, though "yet there was room;" five or six thousand persons at least were present, and the larger proportion were men. The congregation at this hall is, we rejoice to observe, a really local one. With the exception of some few visitors and workers, it is composed of genuine East-end people. There is no mistaking this as you glance over the sea of faces. They are those of the sons and daughters of toil; they are faces where the sorrows and cares of real life have left deep traces; the hands held up are ungloried, and have grown hard with labour; and dress is evidently to most no matter of taste or display, but (as it should be to all) of simple necessity. But hearts are alike in all quarters, though circumstances differ. These dear people respond to the truth and feel its power, as deeply as the audiences at the Agricultural Hall or elsewhere. "The common people heard Him gladly," and they generally flock to hear his earnest messengers. They feel also the truths embodied in song by Mr. Sankey. As the conscience-stirring words of "Nothing but leaves" rolled over the great assembly, it was easy to see that many a heart was pricked. It was indeed intensely interesting to watch some faces. Men were recalling "each lost and mis-spent day," and shame, and sorrow, and resolve were successively written on many a brow.

Mr. Moody, at the early meeting for workers, continued the subject of last week, and spoke of Christians bearing much fruit. The standard was not to be thirty, or even sixty, but a hundredfold. "We ought not to be satisfied with anything less than that," he emphatically asserted. Fruit: every branch in the true Vine must bear some, but Christ speaks of more fruit, and calls them in a special sense His disciples who bear much fruit. With considerable force and freedom Mr. Moody dwelt on the secret springs of fruit-bearing, illustrating each with his own telling stories. Love to the Master must be the mainspring; no work that comes from any other motive will be rewarded hereafter. Then a full and familiar acquaintance with the Master's Word, the Bible, must be attained by those who would serve Him effectually. "For a long time I tried to serve Christ, and didn't succeed much, though I loved Him. The reason was just here: I didn't sufficiently study my Bible. You can't give out till you take in; you can't get water out of a dry well, not if you pump ever so hard. A soldier can't get along without his sword, and no man can work unless he eats. The Bible is bread to the soul, it is the sword of the Spirit; it is the only spring of water for the soul. Read your Bibles—search the Scriptures. How can you serve your Master unless you know his will?"

With much force, too, he urged the people not to fear being considered "peculiar people." Real discipleship will involve this reproach from the world. "Never mind being called very good, but very peculiar; never mind being called a "humbug" (for that's the word just now!) You ought to be so peculiar as to get laughed at and objected to. If the world's got nothing to say against you, depend upon it Christ won't have much to say for you. Peculiar! Why oughtn't people whose citizenship is in heaven to be peculiar? "Are you going to heaven?" a good old Scotchman was once asked. "Na, sir," he replied; "I live there." So ought you, and then you will be peculiar in this world's opinion. Enoch was a most peculiar man in his day. So was Daniel, so was Paul."

Dwelling on the thought that Christians should be always ready, "prepared to every good work," Mr. Moody mentioned the case of a lady, thirty or forty years a Christian, who when asked to speak to an anxious soul, said she was not fit for such work. Not fit to lead a soul to Jesus, after having known Him all that time? Vessels, to be used by the Master, must not only be "purged" and clean, but they must be at hand—near. The Master will always use those nearest to Him. We must keep close to Christ, if we want Him to use us. It is not the pipe that gives the light, it's the gas that comes through it; we can do no good, it's only as Christ speaks by us, through us, that we can help others.

The last requisite he had time to mention was sympathy, and here he moved the audience by some of those touching stories which appeal to the tender and universal sentiment of family affection, and which come from him with so much freshness and power, even to those previously familiar with them.

Mr. Sankey, at this meeting, sang a fine hymn, not in the book, but which we welcome most heartily [it will shortly be issued as a leaflet]. It contains several stirring exhortations to work, but they may be, and doubtless generally are, applied to home work. They give the more limited view of the field. This new one, "There's a cry from Macedonia," takes up the needs of the wide-world field, including heathendom—poor forgotten, but deeply to be pitied, heathendom. Its animating strains were suggestive of missionary enterprise, and we hope Mr. Sankey will sing it in the ears of young converts and others, till they hear the cry, not from Macedonia, but from Africa, India, China, Japan, and the islands of the sea, "Come over and help us." If this awakening be real and of God, it must mean blessing for the lost sheep in the flock of nations as well as for individual lost sheep. It must send beams of light to the darkness which is denser than any darkness we meet here, and excite practical compassion for the heathen. May Mr. Sankey so sing, "There's a cry from Macedonia," that many a Paul may be led to respond, and go and preach Christ in the "regions beyond."

THE AFTERNOON MEETING

was for both men and women. The hall was filled both at this and at the evening meeting long before the time, and large numbers had to go away. But for the inclosure, it would have been difficult to have secured an orderly meeting, but by closing the outer gates, it was comparatively easy to regulate the crowd, and the result was an unusually quiet meeting. The sun was very hot, and no blinds being provided, many umbrellas were raised, while those who had none were fain to cover their heads with their handkerchiefs. Mr. Sankey sang "Oh what shall the harvest be," with the choir, and also, "God loved a world of sinners lost."

Mr. Moody, both at this meeting and the evening one, spoke from the third of John, probably not aware that Mr. Howie had done the same on Friday evening. The two preachers, however, kept to very distinct lines of thought. Mr. Moody dwelt specially on the necessity of the new birth; the reality of the change wrought by conversion; the impossibility of explaining how it is accomplished, and the consequent folly of refusing to believe till we understand how believing can save us; and on the fact that the new creation, like the old creation, is the work of God.

Mr. Howie, in his earnest and masterly address, had spoken of Nicodemus, the anxious inquirer, the timid disciple, and then the bold confessor. He had showed how Christ treated an anxious enquirer. That, while He "did not commit Himself" to the crowds of superficially awakened people mentioned at the close of the second chapter of John, He did, to the real, honest, though timid inquirer of this third chapter, reveal Himself and his work, and his love. Not reproaching Him for his doubts, or his self-righteousness, his cowardice, or his ignorance, but enlightening and humbling him, by the precious truths made known.

We met in the after-meeting on Sunday, a Scotchman, with whom the Spirit seems long to have been striving, who received peace in believing under this address of Mr. Howie's. Also with a woman, who by the reading of the reports of these meetings in THE CHRISTIAN, had been awakened and led to Christ, before attending any of the meetings themselves.

Mr. Sankey was not present in the evening, when the congregation had assembled a full hour before the appointed time. Thousands were unable to obtain admission; the afternoon subject was continued, and solemn weighty truths were so presented, that no one in the vast assembly could fail to understand. It is touching to hear some of these hymns, sung by such multitudes, the 54th, for instance, "I am coming to the Cross." The feeling that if sung from the heart, the very singing of this hymn may be that calling on the name of the Lord which is salvation, is overwhelming to one who is interceding for souls. To impress such spiritual songs on the memories of thousands, is in itself a grand success. Who can tell how they may recur in vital power in dark hours of trouble, or on dying beds, even to those who now use them thoughtlessly?

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA HOUSE.

Mr. Moody is bent on arousing a more widespread interest in the noon prayer-meeting. During last week he gave a general invitation to all the London ministers in sympathy with the movement, to muster on the platform of the Haymarket Opera House on Monday at noon. His call was very largely responded to, a good part of the spacious stage being occupied. The general attendance was also considerably more than usual.

After singing "Ring the Bells of Heaven," Mr. Hogg read the requests for prayer and praise. Among the latter was the case of a Cambridge undergraduate, who, since last week, had found peace in believing. "There are more than I have time to read," said Mr. Hogg, "from those who asked prayer for the conversion of relations and friends, and who have realized the answer." A clergyman on the platform offered prayer. In consonance with the nature of the meeting, that joyful and triumphant hymn of Dr. Bonar's, "Rejoice and be glad," was very heartily sung.

Mr. Moody read the 46th Psalm, and, without making any comment, threw the meeting open for reports.

A clergyman spoke of a good work going on at the parish church at Forest Hill, and also gave some striking cases of successful personal effort. He urged the clergymen to throw open the parish churches; God would abundantly bless them.

Rev. W. H. Aitken bore strong testimony to the continued progress of the work in Liverpool. As a rule, there were 50 to 60, and sometimes as many as 100 to 200, anxious at the close of the meetings. The movement was also spreading all through the suburbs of Liverpool.

Mr. Hodder gave two interesting cases of conversion at the Victoria Theatre services, held the day before by Mr. Taylor. One was a young consumptive, who was going into the Brompton Hospital that day, and might never hear the gospel again. She listened to the good news, received the Lord Jesus Christ, and was happy. The other case was that of an old man of eighty-two, who said he had been seeking peace for fifty years.

Rev. Mr. Billing, whose indefatigable labours at the Agricultural Hall are known to all, gave some very valuable evidence of the reality and results of the work there. Nineteen young ladies out of his Bible-class had professed to find Christ, and five others had done so subsequently. Many Christian workers had been brought to the front, and there had been much reaping from seed previously sown. He also spoke of conversions at the services at which Messrs. Moody and Sankey were not present.

Mr. Garthorne told of a lady he met at the Agricultural Hall yesterday who had sought Christ for many years, but had been led to saving faith by hearing Mr. Sankey sing. "What shall the harvest be?"

A gentleman on the platform related a very interesting case of a young man, who, at the Agricultural Hall, was struck by hearing Mr. Moody read the text, "God so loved the world," etc. He found Christ, went home, and told his mother of it, which resulted in her conversion the same night. On going to his place of business in the West-end, he met a policeman he knew, spoke to him, and had the satisfaction of seeing him also find rest in the Lord.

Rev. W. H. Chapman testified of much blessing on special services in Suffolk. He spoke of the claims of the servants in large families, and also urged more complete consecration to the work.

Rev. T. Richardson said the whole of the East-end was moved, and many who had been revived were asking to be set to work. He gave several striking cases of conversion. The peculiarity of the work in the East-end, he said, had been workers bringing others to the meeting with them.

Another gentleman had been struck with the working of the Spirit in the minds of the people independent of the services. Many had come from the country, feeling unhappy, with the express purpose of finding salvation, and had found it.

The next speaker dwelt on the responsibility resting on clergymen and others, who had influence, at the present time.

This interesting and varied volume of testimony being closed, Rev. W. H. Aitken led the meeting in thanksgiving for what God had done and was doing. He concluded with the Lord's prayer, which was joined in by the congregation with great heartiness.

THE FLOWER MISSION.

Hill, and vale, and rippling brook,
Their Creator's glory tell;
Woodland birds, with glad refrain,
Winsome flowers, and mossy dell,
All a joyous anthem raise,
Showing forth their Maker's praise.
Mournful, plaintive notes resound
In the mighty city's din;
Pain, and toil, and grief are there,
And the jarring tones of sin:
Numbers there in darkness stray,
Strangers from the heavenward way.
Tiny gifts of fragrant flowers,
Each with holy words around,
On the suffering poor bestowed,
Speak with no uncertain sound,
But in cadence soft and clear,
Help the weary heart to cheer.
Some may hear an echo sweet,
Of a long-forgotten strain,
Chords long hushed may thus vibrate,
And the truth an entrance gain:
So His works in various ways
Witness our Redeemer's praise.

The Depôts of the Flower Mission are, Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields; and Conference Hall, Mildmay Park.

To prevent all misapprehension, we would remind our kind friends that the only days on which flowers can be received at our depôts are Tuesday and Thursday forenoons. As the carriers will not take back any box or hamper from us under sixpence or eightpence each, we must ask friends who wish theirs returned kindly to prepay; but this expense would be considerably avoided if, whenever practicable, old grocery-boxes and tea-chests were used. In no case can we undertake to return a hamper unless a clearly-addressed "returned empty" label be attached to it inside. The expenses of the Mission are very heavy; and as we have no fund to meet them, we are thankful for any contributions to further this work of distributing "flowers for Jesus' sake." Many workers and sufferers are blessing God for the Flower Mission.

We should be most thankful to hear of any Christian ladies who would come to either depot at two o'clock on the Mission days, to help in distributing the flowers in the hospitals and workhouses, and in speaking and singing hymns to the patients. The secretary will be glad to hear from any ladies of a missionary spirit, who would take part in this combined ministry of God's Word and God's works.

"The children of Bideford," E. R., Exeter, E. H. W., and other friends, having asked us to acknowledge their gifts in THE CHRISTIAN, we now do so with many thanks to each. All boxes have been safely received.

The "Ministry of Flowers" is reprinting. E. A. H.

MINISTERIAL TEMPERANCE CONFERENCE.

For some time the Committee of the National Temperance League have purposed holding in London a ministerial conference for the Southern Counties, to follow up the one held in November last at Manchester. On Sunday last, as an appropriate preparation for a series of meetings about to be held this week, a large number of ministers of all denominations directed the attention of their congregations to the subject of temperance.

The annual sermon was preached in the afternoon in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, by Rev. Dr. Alexander Macleod, Moderator of the English Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, and upwards of 3000 persons were present. The service was opened by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, reading the Scriptures, and offering prayer, after which Dr. Macleod, taking as his text, "Our holy and our beautiful house where our fathers praised Thee, is burned up with fire, and all our pleasant things are laid waste" (Isa. lxi. 11), at once addressed himself to the topic of the day. He said he wished to arrest the Christian conscience to the general evil of intemperance, and that for Christians to continue in that attitude of indifference in which they had so long been found, was fraught with danger to the Church itself. The preacher illustrated and enforced his remarks with great earnestness, but he took occasion to observe, ere he closed, that in the evils against which he had thought it right to warn them, he had not been aiming at any church. He said his last word should be this. We are met to-day as workers together in a great work: but it is in reality the work of the Church. Drink had destroyed ministers, deacons, members, husbands and wives; but the work of healing and restoration ought prayerfully and hopefully to be attempted. The Saviour did not despise fallen ones, and it should be the work of those who love Him not to turn away from the ruins which they so often witnessed, but in the spirit of compassion to follow his example.

The sermon occupied more than an hour in its delivery, but it held the large audience in rapt attention, especially when the preacher, with great pathos, insisted upon the importance of showing mercy to the drunkard, although none could be shown to his sin. Another strong point was his calling a wicked public opinion the real Jezebel of our day, whose mission it was to reduce Christ's servants from their loyalty and steadfastness to the truth.

Amongst the many sermons delivered throughout the day was a notable one by the venerable Mr. Charles Stovell, in Commercial-street, Whitechapel. His text was, "Jesus took bread, and blessed it."

Amongst the meetings of the week, held in connection with this Ministerial Conference, was one in the Guildhall on Wednesday evening, preceded by a conference in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, at which the Lord Mayor consented to preside. A public meeting is to be held on Thursday (this evening) at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street. Next Sunday, April 25, in accordance with a resolution adopted at a ministerial conference at Manchester last November, will be a day of special prayer to Almighty God that our native land may be delivered from the great curse of intemperance.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The foundation-stone of the new Mission-hall in Bethnal Green, for the central work of the society, was laid on the 6th inst., by F. A. Bazar, Esq., in the presence of a numerous concourse of people. The Revs. Dr. Kennedy, C. Kerson, S. Bardsley, T. B. Temple, W. Tyler, J. Foulton, B. Taberham, and General Burrows, took part in the service. After tea, Mr. Robert Baxter presided at a meeting in Trinity Congregational Church. The Rev. W. Tyler read a list of donations, headed by £500 from Mr. George Moore, £200 from Mr. B. Baxter. Upwards of £2000 had been raised, still leaving a deficiency of £1500.

THE LATE MR. FREDERICK WILLS, OF CLEVEDON.

By many of our readers Mr. Frederick Wills was known, honoured, and loved, as a devoted and active Christian. During the last year or two he had been specially interested in a Mission which had been commenced in the village of East Brent, and it is more than probable that the foundation of his last short but fatal illness was laid in returning from one of his visits to that village on a bitterly cold night. On the morning of April 1, he was engaged in making calls on the afflicted and dying, but that evening he was conveyed to the bed from which he never again rose, and about noon on the following Tuesday he quietly breathed his last. The remains were interred in Arno's Vale Cemetery, Bristol, on April 10, amidst many tokens of affectionate regret.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

FOLLOW MR. ONLY A DANDELION. By the Author of "Stepping Heavenward." Ward, Lock, and Tyler.—Two little volumes of stories and parables, very interesting and profitable for young children.

CAMPBELL OF KILTEARN. By Rev. DUNCAN MACGREGOR, M.A., Dundee, Author of "The Shepherd of Israel," etc. Edinburgh: MacLaren and MacNiven.—We rejoice to see a second and enlarged edition of this little book. By the use of words "picked and packed," the author, in addition to the memoir of Campbell of Kiltarn, has managed to compress into marvellously little space sketches of the lives, characters, and labours of no fewer than five other ministers of the gospel. Besides these fuller narratives, we catch glimpses of an immense array of other true-hearted soldiers of the cross, some of whom were standard-bearers in the Scottish Highlands, while most of them occupied prominent places among the rank and file of the Christian host. Notwithstanding the multitude of names and details, there is no sense of overcrowding. Each sketch is luminous as well as brief, and several passages are graphic and powerful. For instance, the description of Macdonald, "the Apostle of the North," is striking and effective, while the portrait of Flyter of Ainess is drawn in lines of exquisite softness and beauty. In setting with so much taste those gems of Christian life and work, Mr. Macgregor has rendered the cause of vital godliness in the Highlands invaluable service. Henceforth the fragrant memories of these excellent men shall not "waste their sweetness on the desert air." The whole of the little volume runs over with the richest truths of the gospel. This, we trust, is not the last in the same line we shall see from the pen of the genial and gifted author.

Among the books which are calculated to be of service to those engaged in leading souls to Christ in this time of blessing, are Rev. Adolph Saphir's two, "Christ Crucified," and "Conversion, illustrated by Examples recorded in the Bible." Of this latter book, Dr. Hamilton said, "With its deep insight, its glowing tone of love and gladness, and its abundance of thought, original, wise, and beautiful, this is a rare book.....Nor do we know many books where so much scholarship is brought to bear with so little ostentation, nor many books adapted to so wide a range of readers."

THE PEOPLE'S CAFE COMPANY (LIMITED).—Friday evening last the first café of this company was opened in a newly erected building of substantial elevation, No. 134, Upper Whitecross-street, St. Luke's, a thoroughfare surrounded by a dense, poor population. The house is divided into several spacious apartments, neatly fitted and admirably adapted for the accommodation of the public. Plenty of light and ventilation adds greatly to the comfort and cheerfulness of the rooms. On the ground floor is the principal department, with what may be termed the bar in the centre, and above are rooms to be appropriated specially to the gentler sex who may be disposed to frequent the Café St. Luke's. The furniture is of a description to be seen at more pretentious refreshment places not far from Charing-cross. Tables of marble tops on bronze supports, covered with almost snow-white thick cups and saucers; nickel metal tea-spoons, and pretty-looking milk-jugs are here at the service of the inhabitants of the Golden-lane district. The tea, coffee, and viands are of excellent quality, and dispensed at a tariff ranging from a penny to sixpence. The cost of the building has been something over £2000. The company are erecting another in Whitechapel at a cost of £4000. £100,000 have been subscribed in £1 shares, out of a capital of £100,000. It is hoped that Christian friends will speedily take up the remaining shares; for if our fellow-citizens of the working class are to be delivered from the temptations which beset them on every hand, it must be by providing counter-attractions to the gin-palace, and by encouraging habits of cleanliness and thrift. This is the human side of it; but the more we read of the life of Christ, the more evident is it that the temporal blessing which He conferred upon the people was a far more important element in his ministry than in that of the Christian Church now. A large party of ladies and gentlemen took tea together at the café last Friday evening, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir Harcourt Johnstone, M.P., Mr. George Cruikshank, Mr. E. Fowler, the Rev. Basil Wilberforce, and several of the directors being of the number.

RED-HOT RELIGION.

BY DR. DE WITT TALMAGE.

WE have plenty of stale, insipid, lethargic, half-and-half religious life. The Church needs more caloric. The stove must have the damper open, and the grate shaken; and the dull heap of darkness must become a bright illumination.

Let us begin by more earnestness in Bible-reading. How many years is it since you learned the shortest verse in the Bible, at your mother's knee, "Jesus wept"? "I have become familiar with the parables and miracles," you say; "it is almost impossible that I should find anything startling or surprising in that Book." It has become like an old fable. It ceases to make that deep, profound, and rousing impression upon our soul which it ought to make. Are you not aware of the fact that we need in the perusal of God's Word an earnestness of soul we have never before felt? What is the Bible? It is a prescription for the worst of all illness. Suppose you had been sick for years and years, and all medical treatment had failed in your case, and some skilful one should come along and examine the symptoms of your disease, and write a prescription, saying, "I go by the next steamer into a far country, you will never see me again; do not lose that prescription. I am sure if you take the medicine there prescribed you will get well." How you would hold on to that prescription. You would say, "Everything depends upon my getting that prescription before the apothecary in the right shape, and my getting the right medicine." We are stricken by the leprosy of sin. The world comes and tries with its pleasures and honours to heal us, but it has always failed. Here is a divine prescription. Take it, and live; refuse it, and die. How we ought to hold on to it, and with what earnestness we ought now to take it. It is more than that. Suppose a captain is awakened in the night. The men who have had the management of the ship have been asleep and not minding their business. The vessel is among the breakers. The captain comes on deck with the chart. With what earnestness he looks at it now. Here is a rock and there is a rock; there is a lighthouse; here is a way of escape. So here is a map setting forth the perils of the sea in which we are voyaging; there are dangers all around about us. If the following of that chart does not get us out of the breakers, nothing will. With what earnestness we ought to examine it, and feel that it is a matter of heaven or hell, whether or not we read it, and whether we read it right or wrong.

We need also more earnestness in the matter of Prayer. In childhood we begin with, "Now I lay me down to sleep," and we learn the Lord's Prayer, and then in after life we get a few formulas of prayer, and go on with the same thing year by year, as though we did not have every day new sins to confess, and new blessings for which to thank God. What is prayer? A doctor in the army said he was going over a battle-field after a great conflict. He had but few medicines, and there were enough men wounded to occupy twenty or thirty surgeons. He could only attend to a small part of the wounded. It was doleful, he said, to hear the cries of the wounded men. One cried out, "This artery is bleeding me to death, doctor; won't you bind it up?" And some one else cried, "Doctor, can't you give me an anodyne to soothe this pain?" Hundreds of voices crying out all over the battle-field. Ah! that was prayer. We are wounded from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot—hurt with wounds that will be our death unless we have the divine Surgeon come to our relief. Are we holding up these gashes of soul before Christ, our divine Physician? Are we anxious for Him to come? That is prayer, and anything short of it is no prayer at all. We saw in one of the English journals a picture of the destruction of the "Northfleet" some time ago. You know how that vessel was anchored because of the rough sea—not venturing out very far. The afternoon went by, the evening came down, and in the darkness a steamer crashed into the "Northfleet," and she sank. Amid the excitement they got out the lifeboats; but the most of the passengers perished, three hundred going down to a watery grave. But a few got into the boats. We saw a picture representing a boat shoving off, and one man hanging outside the vessel, holding on, and begging that they would take him in that boat. Oh, it was a distressing picture! We could almost hear the man cry out, "Let me in; I won't be heavy. I can't die; I don't want to die here! Let me in." Ah! that was the prayer of a dying soul for life. And if we could realize the position we occupy before God, going down in our sin and wretchedness, while the gospel lifeboat without is pulling away, with two oars and two wounded hands, for the beach, we would, from the depths of our anguish-stricken soul, offer up a prayer to God for mercy, and pardon, and life.

Further, we want more earnestness in the matter of Christian work. A brother comes into a prayer-meeting, and he stands up to speak a word for Christ. How tremulous he is! He says, "I wonder if the people will hear me." His heart is not thoroughly enlisted. He wonders who will criticize him. He wonders if such and such a person is present. Before he begins to speak for Christ, he looks all around, to be sure such an one is not in the room. How he trembles! After a while he gets through, and he wonders whether he has made any mistakes, and he goes away asking his friend, "How did I do to-night? Did I get along well, or did I make a baulk?" He is not in earnest. There is another young man beside him. What does he care for rhetoric? He says, "Here are people that I must meet before the throne of God, and I have but three minutes to talk to them. I don't care what people say. It is between God, and my soul, and their soul."

A Sabbath-school teacher sits down before her class. She is not in earnest; she has no appreciation of the great work to which she is called. She thinks that it is a fine thing to be a Sabbath-school teacher. She comes in, and says to the class, "Fine day." Then she arranges her apparel; then she gives an extra twist to the curl, and looks at the apparel of all the children in the class.

A minister of the gospel comes on the Sabbath-day into the ante-room of the church. He is not in earnest. He has just happened to get into the ministry. He says, "I wonder what the newspapers will say to-day. I wonder how many critics there will be in church. I wonder if that sharp-looking man that sat before me last Sabbath, looking at me through those spectacles, will be there to-day? I wonder if my hair is parted straight? I wonder how my cravat is tied? I wonder if my shoes have the right polish? I wonder if that gesture made a while ago is graceful? The Sabbath goes by, and the people disperse to their homes; no saving impression is made, the Sabbath is dead and will not live again until the resurrection.

Another man of God comes to the ante-room of the church. He says, "Now there will be two, or three, or four or five thousand people here this morning. What shall I say to them? I may be dead before next Sabbath. The people who will be in church to-day will never all be there again. It is my last chance at them. O God, help me now; if Thou never didst help me before, help me to-day." And then he comes before the people and looks out upon the audience, and says, "All these in fifty or seventy years will be gone. They will have heard their last offer of mercy and salvation. The trumpet of judgment will sound, and they will stand before the throne, and I will be there too. Alas! if on that day any of them can point to me, and hiss at me, and say, 'You didn't tell me the whole truth; you hid the fact that I was a sinner; I didn't know there was any hell. I hardly knew I was an immortal. You told me not of the judgment; and here I am, and the heavens are flaming, and the throne is set, and the doom is being pronounced, and I am lost, and it is your fault.'" Oh, how different then the preacher feels. How little he cares for what the world says of him. How his soul goes up to God in an agony of earnestness. How little he cares for the gesture or the style of his apparel, or what the critics may say. It is a matter between himself, and his God, and his hearers.

We were going from Camden to Philadelphia some years ago, very late at night, after a meeting. It was a cold winter night, and we stood on the deck of the ferry-boat, impatient to get ashore. Before the boat came to the wharf, a man, who stood on the outside of the chains, slipped and dropped into the water. He was the only man that we ever saw overboard. It was a fearful night. The icicles had frozen on the wharf, and they had frozen on the steamer. The question was how to get the man up. The ropes were lowered, and we all stood with fearful anxiety, lest the man should not be able to grasp the rope; and when he grasped it and was pulled on to the deck, and we saw he was safe, although we had never seen him before, how we congratulated him. A life saved! Have we the same earnestness about getting men out of spiritual peril? Do we not go up and down in our prayer-meetings and our Christian work, coldly saying, "Yes, there is a great deal of sin in the world, men ought to do better. I wish the people would become Christians. I think it is high time that men attended to their eternal interests;" and five minutes after we put our head on the pillow we are sound asleep, or from that consideration we pass out in five minutes into the utmost mirthfulness, and have forgotten it all. Meanwhile there is a whole race overboard. How few hands are stretched out to lift men out of the flood; how few prayers offered; how few earnest importunities; how little earnest Christian work. We do not know how this suits your case, we know it suits our own. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

GRAYFORD.—We are obliged to omit a report of the anniversary meeting of the "British Workman" house and hall, which was full of interest, and in which many Christian friends took part.

CERES, CUPAE FIFE.—A week of united prayer, from 11th to 18th inst., was held here, joined in by the ministers of the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian Churches. The meetings were held in the Established Church, and suitable addresses delivered by the various local ministers, as well as others from a distance. A season of much refreshing from the presence of God was experienced, and a good work done.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE AT DELHI.

My dear Sir,—I had intended some time ago writing a short account of our brother the Rev. A. N. Somerville's visit to Delhi. Nearly a month has now elapsed since he left Delhi for Meerut and Umballa; but as I myself was, leaving with troops for England, I was unable to write until now.

Mr. Somerville arrived, accompanied by his son, who brought his harmonium, and a large quantity of Sankey's hymns with him, on the evening of February 13; and the ministers of the two denominations here, viz., Church of England and Baptist, and others, met him at once for consultation and prayer. He left on Thursday, February 18, on which day he previously held a meeting for children.

Excluding these two meetings, he held altogether, in the five full days he was at Delhi, sixteen meetings. This is the rate at which this beloved servant of Christ, of over seventy years of age, has been for months and is still working in India.

On the Sunday he held five services. At eight a.m. an address to young men from the latter part of John i., which a brother officer of mine, sceptically inclined, declared at the mess-table to be the best sermon he had heard in his life. The next was at ten o'clock—an address, translated into Hindostani, sentence by sentence, by the Rev. J. Smith, the well-known Baptist missionary, of Delhi.

Immediately afterwards, at 11 a.m., and again at 5.30 p.m., Mr. Somerville took the English services at the same (the Baptist) chapel. They were crammed as I never saw the church before.

But a very interesting service for English-speaking natives and Baboos, somewhat sparsely attended, owing to a heavy shower of rain, took place between these hours, at 3 p.m. This was exceedingly interesting. The natives paid the utmost attention whilst Mr. Somerville explained the history of the Philippian jailer's conversion, and of the introduction of Christianity into Europe; and whilst the essence of the discourse was salvation by faith through a crucified Saviour, he dwelt very ably upon the fact that Christianity was not, as some natives would pretend, a European religion, but entirely Asiatic; and that, as we originally got it from Asia, Christian missionaries, in preaching the gospel, are only asking Asiatics, including the Mohammedans and Hindus of India, to take back the gift which they, as a race, gave in the first instance to us English.

He also gave a helping hand to Zenana mission-work, in calling his hearers' attention to the fact that the first convert in Europe was a woman, and she an Asiatic!

One more meeting I may perhaps note. It was for the soldiers of the garrison, consisting of a half-battalion of an infantry regiment, and a garrison battery of Royal Artillery, held in the Dewan-i-Amm. This is a magnificent open reception hall, of red sandstone, situated in the fort, formerly the palace of the kings of Delhi. Underneath the famous peacock throne, of marble, highly decorated with inlaid work of precious stones—amethyst, blood-stone, pearl, etc.—stands a musnud, or marble slab, on which the Wuzer used to sit; and hand up to the king every petition. It is needless to add that there was generally an end of them.

Opposite to this throne, of considerable historical interest, the men had placed barrack tables, covered with a carpet; and this improvised pulpit was surrounded with benches from the barrack-rooms, and well filled with soldiers. There, where iniquity, before the times of the mutiny, reigned triumphantly, was the reign of Christ, our glorious King, proclaimed, and many petitions were put up to Him—who never, as the king of Delhi did, puts them on one side—that many subjects might be gained; and I have no doubt whatever that very much good was done, directly and indirectly, by our brother's instrumentality during his visit to Delhi. Christians were warmed, encouraged, and strengthened, and the numbers attending the ordinary ministrations in that station were considerably increased.

Would that an evangelist filled with the Holy Spirit would offer himself every cold season for a similar tour through India. India is doubtless a warm place in a climatic, but often very much the reverse in a spiritual sense, and the labourers are few compared with the harvest-fields.

Trusting my letter is not too long, I enclose my card, and subscribe myself, yours in the Lord, CENTURIUS.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND HEAVEN.—II.

"Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto Him, Yea, Lord. Then said He unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the Kingdom is like a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."—MATT. XIII. 51, 52.

In our former paper on this subject (No. 272), we said, "The idea of the Kingdom, whether latent or expressed, is a fundamental element in all the Epistles, and in the Revelation it shines forth like the sun in the firmament."

The following paragraphs are written in support of this assertion, and are commended to our readers in the belief that they give a significance to many passages which must be obscure unless read in the light of the Kingdom; and in the hope that they may lead many to study more thoroughly the wondrous and glorious Revelation which the Eternal Spirit has made to the saints of God in the Everlasting Gospel, the Gospel of the Everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"The Kingdom of God," writes Paul to the Romans, "is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." "The Kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." With evident reference to Daniel's vision (chap. vii.) of the Kingdom of the Son of man and the saints of the Most High, he asks the Corinthians, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? ... Know ye not that we shall judge angels?" and then reminds them that the unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God, nor extortioners, nor idolaters, nor effeminate, nor, indeed, flesh and blood at all; for Paul's word to the Corinthians agrees with Christ's to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." And because now the Kingdom of God is within; because the Kingdom must enter us before we can enter the Kingdom, he brings his body into subjection; yea, he brings every thought into captivity to the obedience of the Christ. In like manner he tells the Galatians that they who do the works of the flesh shall not inherit the Kingdom of God; and the Ephesians, that no unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God. He reminds the Philippians that God hath given Christ a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow. The Colossians are taught to give thanks unto the Father, who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of the Son of his love; and they are greeted by brethren who are with Paul at Rome, and whom he lovingly names as his fellow-workers unto the Kingdom of God.

In his first Epistle to the Thessalonians, he exhorts them to walk worthy of God, who called them to his Kingdom and glory; and in the second, he glories in their patience and faith, that they may be counted worthy of the Kingdom of God for which they also suffer. Writing from Laodicea, he charges Timothy, his dearly beloved son in the faith, to fight the good fight, and keep the commandment without spot until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; and, writing later from Rome, when brought before Nero the second time, and when he was now ready to be offered, he again charges him before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his Kingdom, "Preach the word." What word? "The word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19). Of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Priestly Kingdom is the ruling thought. The Son, who is not ashamed to call us brethren, when He had purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. Not unto angels, but unto man, hath God put in subjection the world to come, and although we see not yet all things put under man, we have the promise and assurance of it all, in that we already see Jesus crowned with glory and honour because He tasted death for every man. "Wherefore we, receiving a Kingdom which cannot be moved, let us hold fast grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire." "Hath not God," asks the apostle James, "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom which God hath promised to them that love Him?" And Peter, in his first Epistle, addresses the elect as a Royal Priesthood; and, in the second, exhorts them to make their calling and election sure, that so an entrance may be ministered unto them abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And, finally, Jude quotes Enoch, the seventh from Adam, who prophesied in the early ages of the world, "Behold, the Lord cometh with myriads of his saints, to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed; and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him."

In the Epistles of Paul to Titus and Philemon, there is no express mention of the Kingdom, but its undertone is heard through every line. John, in his Epistles, does not name the Kingdom, but in his Gospel the King bears witness to the truth, and Pilate quails before his Prisoner, as Belshazzar before Daniel, and as Festus before Paul. And in the Revelation which John the exile in Patmos saw, he encourages himself and his brethren by speaking of himself and them as brothers and companions in the tribulation, and Kingdom, and patience, of Jesus Christ. The grand and glorious glad tidings of the Kingdom—the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God—culminates in the Apocalypse, where the Lamb and the redeemed are seen in the midst of the throne, and the angels round about the throne. From the throne to the seven churches which are in Asia (type of the Church, not in the Lord's land but in the world) God sends this greeting to prepare her for the long tribulation through which she is about to pass: "Grace unto you, and peace, from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne; and from Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness, and the First-begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth!" And the redeemed on earth reply, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; unto Him be glory, and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen." And so, throughout the changing visions of the entire book: "To him that overcometh will I give to sit with Me in my throne." "We shall reign on the earth." "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever!" M.

ON THE CONTINENT.

BY CHEYNE BRADY.

"You might have written stronger," is the remark made about my note of the Basle Conference, and truly it is wonderful that, in a town of only 45,000 inhabitants, two of the largest places of worship were thronged several times daily, with an anxious and attentive audience numbering between five and six thousand. Many rose to testify in the language of Scripture to the blessing they had received.

On the last day, Sunday, all the different denominations assembled in the venerable cathedral, and 2000 partook of the Communion together. It was a glorious sight, and one that had never before been witnessed in Basle.

At one of the meetings, a learned professor of great eminence, who had formerly preached against this movement, publicly confessed his error.

ZURICH.

From Basle Mr. Pearsall Smith proceeded, much worn out in body, to Zurich, intending only to hold two meetings; but the interest increased so rapidly, that he held five the same day. In few places has there been a deeper interest than here. After the fifth service, in the evening, to a crowded assembly of 2000 people, all were requested to leave except those who wished to remain for conversation. About 800 remained for prayer, and hearing of the Word of God; and when the time came to separate, it seemed as if they could not go away from the scene of so much blessing.

CARLSRUHE.

Meetings of this kind have never been held in Karlsruhe before. There is no large church which can be properly lighted at night. The apathy and hostility to religion are very great. It is said there are 30,000 Jews here, nearly all in a state of great darkness. Before the hour appointed, crowds filled the church, which only holds 500. Deep, intense interest was depicted on every countenance. These sturdy Germans seemed as if they came for a purpose, determined to share whatever blessing was to be had.

The afternoon meetings were held in the large town church. Several of the grand ducal family attended. Mr. Smith spoke with power. So great was the interest created even here, that meetings had to be held in the large town church, which was lit very partially and imperfectly with small candles. Here the people began to assemble an hour before the time. The church was only two-thirds filled, sufficient notice not having been given. The address was divided into two parts; first to the unsaved the gospel was preached, and then believers were exhorted to a life of holiness. At the close, many crowded round the preacher, to press his hand, and express their gratitude for the faithful words. At this meeting, Pastor Rappard, President of the Missionary College of Crischna, interpreted.

The "Faith Hymns," and many of Mr. Sankey's, have been translated into German, and the sound of a full choir in that language is most beautiful and melodious. Several solos were sung, which were most touching, and the chorus was full and effective.

Testimony for Christ can be borne, not only by word of mouth, or by a consecrated pen, but perhaps, above all, by a life and walk of consistent holiness. Many are deterred from religion by the halting and temporizing lives of professors. Said a dear Christian lady to me, "Years before I was converted I thought on these things, but was disgusted with what I saw in church-members, and thought, If Christians are what they are, it is not worth while to be one."

How important, then, is this movement in the direction of a true scriptural experience, which will bear a continual living testimony to the reality of the faith.

At Karlsruhe the deepest interest culminated at the last meeting. The clergy of the town declared they never had imagined it possible to gather such numbers to hear gospel truths. The large town church was fuller than before. The solemn attention, the rapt interest, was moving. Rarely before was the gospel preached so simply in Karlsruhe, which is a modern town. It was a day to be remembered, and is, we fully believe, but the commencement of a mighty work.

"JESUS SAVES ME NOW."

Pastor Ernst Gebhardt, of Zurich, conducted the music. He sings the solos very sweetly, somewhat like Mr. Sankey. He composed during the meetings a very precious hymn, with music, in German, "Jesus errettet mich jetzt"—"Jesus saves me now." It was suggested by Mr. Smith saying that he could only say this one German sentence, but that this was enough to carry him safe in every moment of his life, and finally land him in glory.

is a small village near Stuttgart, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg. The settlement has been in existence about fifty years. Under the late king's reign, the Christians of Wurtemberg were greatly oppressed, and the laws were so strict, that they were hindered in the free exercise of their religion. Consequently, many of them emigrated to America. The king, finding that the best of his subjects were leaving the country, inquired into the cause; and having ascertained the reason of their departure, at the request of the remainder he granted them this tract of land, with permission to live as they liked, and to enjoy the free exercise of their religion. At first all the settlers were true Christians; now, however, some of the younger members have grown up lacking the zeal and earnestness of their forefathers. The community numbers about 1000 inhabitants, and they have many things in common. It possesses several large and flourishing schools, one of which is an Institut for young ladies, and a superior academy for young men.

The solitary Gasthaus, or hotel, belongs to the community, and is conducted by Christians. To no one will be supplied more than two glasses of beer; and if a man enters who has already been drinking, he is refused further wine. It certainly is very remarkable to be in a Christian hotel, in a Christian town, inhabited by a Christian community. The whole atmosphere is heavenly; everything is ordered for godliness. On the Lord's-day, the sound of hymns, the church-bells, the sober demeanour of the people, the absence of everything inconsistent, are sweetly impressive.

In this primitive inn Mr. Pearsall Smith and Dr. Baedeker were entertained. Amongst the residents here are Mr. J. M. Flad and his family, formerly among the prisoners in Abyssinia. His graphic description of the horrors of their captivity, and continued threatenings of being cut to pieces or burnt alive, were most touching, and vividly demonstrate the hardships of true missionary life, and the power of faith in Christ to endure trial. Mr. Flad is now missionary to the Jews.

Large crowds flocked in from the neighbourhood, and filled the church. The truths concerning holiness received a ready response, and will bear much fruit. Some young men, who had gone to the Black Forest for their holiday, hearing of these meetings, immediately returned, and several of them were rewarded by finding the pardon of their sins. Before leaving Kornthal, about twenty English students professed to have found peace in believing; while the Christians received a great lift, which was evidenced in the joyous, happy faces around us. The Germans numbered about ten to one English, but we could not hear of the results among them.

SIDMOUTH.—Dear Sir,—Will you allow us a corner in THE CHRISTIAN to make known to its readers the blessed and great work the Lord has been doing here, that they may praise the Lord with us? Special services held in the Assembly-room during the last fortnight, in which the gospel has been spoken and sung by Mrs. Bass and Miss Haddon, have resulted in bringing many to the Lord Jesus. One hundred testify to this. The town appears to be quite stirred, and a time of great refreshing and blessing has been experienced by many of the Lord's people. We ask for prayer, that the Lord's work may go on still more gloriously, and again we ask that praise may be offered for this gracious visitation. A. CHANNON.

GLAD TIDINGS FROM LODIANA.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN will rejoice over the glad news contained in the following extracts of letters recently received from two of the ladies working in the Lodiana Zenana Mission, in connection with the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. Miss Andrews, who conducts the Girls' Training School, writes:—

"I am sending a line again this week, because I have the joyful news to tell you of the conversion of three of my girls. Two of them, both about ten years old, stayed back after their class with Miss Higgs on Sunday, to tell her of the change that God had wrought. One of them only came at Christmas, the other came in 1873, and was a great trouble and anxiety to me at first. The third is the little Begum (she was a Mahometan), who came last October. I had noticed her paying the deepest attention to Mr. Bailey's addresses, and carrying about her Testament, as if it were the most precious thing on earth; and the morning after his second address, she never took her eyes off me during the Bible lesson. I was speaking of salvation as the free gift of God, and her face was full of a joyful light, which seemed to say, 'I have got it,' and all day she seemed hardly able to contain herself for joy. So on Sunday last I called her to my room, and asked her about it, when she joyfully confessed her faith in Christ as her own Saviour, and expressed her willingness to confess Him before men, both among her schoolfellows and by baptism, and said she would tell her brother (a Christian Munshi) the next day. It is a perfect joy to see her, she looks brimming over with happiness. Now, out of my thirty boarders, thirteen are really converted girls; and we 'shall see greater things than these.' The other day R— (another of the girls), wrote to one of her uncles, telling him that there were several besides herself who were truly converted to God; that four of them prayed together every morning and evening that God would pour out his Holy Spirit upon this school and this place, and begging him to join with her in praying for this blessing, and expressing her certain faith that God would hear and answer their prayers."

Miss Jerrom, the Superintendent of the Lodiana Zenana Mission, adds:—

"I cannot express how greatly I rejoice over the present state of things. I never saw before such a work of grace among natives of India, and never before in my life among children. Shall we not take courage in reference to the material edifice (see advertisement in our last three issues) when the Master Builder Himself is bringing up out of nature's quarry living stones, and preparing them for his spiritual building?"

THE GOSPEL IN RUSSIA.

Christian friends who have prayed for Russia will be glad to know that the Lord is answering prayer. Those who were brought to Christ last year are being established by his grace. Some of them are seeking to make known the gospel to others, visiting prisons, and reading to peasants, etc., and God has blessed their testimony to the conversion of others; and there is, speaking generally, a great desire to learn more. Among the upper classes, those who came from curiosity to hear the gospel do not come, but there are continually new people coming, who are evidently desiring to know more of the truth. Among the mass of the people it is evident there is a great preparedness of heart to hear the gospel. One gentleman arranges to have New Testaments sold at fivepence, and there is quite a rush to buy them; and if the price of New Testaments could be lowered to ten kopecks (about threepence), the sale would be enormous. The price at which our Bible Society sells is about eightpence (twenty-five kopecks); and even at this comparatively high price, which is under cost, thousands are sold every week at Moscow.

It is interesting to know that there is a real hunger for Christ's gospel in its simplicity. A gentleman, who is in the habit of speaking with the labouring classes about their souls, assures me that not one of them has ever asked him a question about forms and ordinances, as supposing they could have anything to do with salvation. At the same time, the ignorance is very great. It is supposed only eight or nine millions out of eighty can read. The priests never preach, and are very ignorant, except a few who preach occasionally in the large towns; and the mass, which contains portions of Scripture, and many beautiful prayers, being read in Slavonic, is imperfectly understood by the common people. In consequence of the increased establishment of schools, and the new law for conscription, the number of those who can read will rapidly increase, and those who learn to read nearly invariably prefer to read the Gospel before any other book, and those who speak to them find always an attentive hearing.

Another matter for thankfulness is, that the persecution of the Stundists, a body of Christians in the South, who only read the Scriptures and meet together without church forms, is stopped, and they are making considerable progress. What is needed there is labourers to proclaim the blessed message from heaven, "It is finished." But there is not only a need of labourers, but the few there are are trammelled by the laws of the empire, which put great obstacles in the way of meetings. Then, again, the censorship of the press is an enormous hindrance to the printing of good gospel tracts.

Will the Lord's people pray that the way may be opened for his message, that believers may be further established, and endued with power to witness for Him; that the hearts of those in authority may be changed, and that the laws which have hindered the gospel may be modified, so that it may have free course; and for a mighty ingathering of souls to Christ?

A TENT FOR DEPTFORD.

Dear Christian friends,—For a long time the Lord's work in Deptford has been much impeded for want of a building large enough to hold those who are anxious to attend our evangelistic meetings; it is on account of this difficulty that we have been led to undertake work in Greenwich and Woolwich, while, in proportion to its dense population, Deptford, the legitimate sphere of our labours, is still, comparatively speaking, almost untouched.

In vain, during the last two years, have we even sought for ground on which to erect a tent, so closely is the place built upon by long streets of small houses inhabited by working people; but through the munificence of two friends a magnificent site has now been placed at our disposal.

In a few weeks, if we are provided with the necessary funds, we shall be able to pitch a tent to hold 1500 persons; the immediate outlay for this will be about £300, and it will last about six years. I am sure that no money is spent more profitably for evangelistic purposes than in such a purchase; in a situation like ours the tent will be crowded nightly, and that by an audience but a very small percentage of whom would ever be induced to attend a regular assembly. Experience has taught us that no modus operandi is so efficacious as a tent in "ploughing up" a soil like this, hardened by so many long years of neglect.

The time to get everything ready is very short, every day is precious; such an opening to reach the masses of Deptford in all probability will never occur again. I am so anxious that this opportunity should be boldly grasped and used for the glory of God, that I am constrained to make a personal appeal to all those to whom our efforts in the past are known, for immediate help to carry through this important undertaking.—I am, dear Christian friends, yours, faithfully,

J. W. C. FEGAN.

CANTERBURY.—The Mission work in Canterbury is still increasing in interest and numbers, and during the past week the Lord's power has been made very manifest. On Monday the united prayer-meeting was well attended, and very earnest were the prayers offered for a greater revival. It is delightful to behold amongst the congregation a good number of the militia, who seem to enter heart and soul into the spirit of the meetings, as well as the soldiers of the garrison. This is especially encouraging after two years of labour and toil amongst them by the kind lady who has taken such a deep interest in their spiritual welfare. A Bible-class is held for the militia every Lord's-day afternoon, by whom it is greatly appreciated. Special prayer is now asked for this work, as we are expecting some 700 more of the militia during the coming week. The militia are very anxious for a supply of small books and tracts, and a supply of such would be very acceptable and thankfully received. They might be sent to

CALAMITY TO THE BELLEVILLE HOME.

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."—PROV. xxvii. 1.

Having seen in the morning's paper that the mail steamer, "Scandinavian" had arrived at Merville at five a.m. on the 21st, we were anxiously waiting the following morning for the Canadian letters, thinking they might bring us some intelligence of Miss Macpherson's return. A feeling of gloom was cast over the whole place as we heard the sad news from Miss Macpherson's own pen, of which the following is an extract:—

"Belleville, April 8.

"Again you will call our band together, and give hearty thanks for the wonderful deliverance vouchsafed to us. We are just overwhelmed with his goodness. Miss Bilbrough and I were away on business at Toronto, when a telegram informed us that MARCHMONT WAS ENTIRELY DESTROYED BY FIRE in the broad daylight; all lives saved. In half an hour everything was in ruins. Had it happened in the night, all might have perished. A portion of the furniture was saved, also Miss Bilbrough and Mr. Thom's things, they being in rooms that the wind allowed the firemen to enter, whilst Miss Mudie, Geldard, my nephew James, and poor I, have lost all our earthly gear. 'I have only what I stand in,' as many a wee boy has told me when rescuing him. What I regret most is the loss of my old Bible; my new one was saved. But 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee,' so that in all this we are not much disturbed, for no one can be blamed, and the cause cannot be discovered.

"This year we are evidently having much chastening, while we are having much blessing among precious souls. How rich the inheritance beyond is, and the many mansioned Home that 'eternally shall stand.' I now see the meaning of my tarrying here. I had taken my berth to sail for home by the 'Polynesian' on May 8. Now the future is all undecided; but ere you read this, the Lord may have shown me what He would have me do. I wait upon Him for guidance who has never failed me. I find more and more my all in Jesus, who gives continual rest. I only desire to know my Father's will. My health is excellent; my whole heart gives thanks for sparing life. I am glad to be here to help. I believe this will be greatly blessed to this whole district, and to all our souls; it is so already. Oh, give thanks, and praise our blessed God for saving all our dear ones, for the fire must have been smouldering for some time between the wood and plaster.

"We are all billeted about the town, the children sleeping in the Gospel Hall, but we hope soon to get the stable fitted up as a house, and the weather is getting warmer; we are all greatly helped under the cloud. All this may be among the 'all things' to prepare us and others for the times of blessing about to flow over this land. We shall need help; the Lord give you the pen of a ready writer to plead our cause, but to Him who knoweth all our need I commit the burden, and wait his light to shine on my path. You will excuse a letter of fuller details, and with Christian love to all beloved fellow-workers, your ever loving sister,
"ANNIE MACPHERSON."

"Dear Sir,—A line to ask you to insert the enclosed. I appeal to all of your readers, especially those who have always supported Miss Macpherson's noble work, to show active sympathy for her now. Marchmont, the Home of the boys and girls in Belleville, was burnt to the ground this day. Nothing saved except a little furniture. It occurred at two o'clock in the day. The building was insured for a small sum, £700; but it will take £2000 to rebuild it.—Yours faithfully,

"HENRY A. BRUCE MOORHOUSE,

NED WRIGHT'S GOSPEL TENT, at the corner of Southampton-street, Camberwell, was recently opened for the summer. Mr. Buckridge delivered an address on "Jesus Christ the only Sure Foundation," and Ned Wright himself delivered an address. At the conclusion, he asked those who had been converted at the services held in the tent last year to hold up their hands, when twenty or thirty did so; but that number does not by any means represent the good done there, as at Mr. Wright's chapel in Penrose-street, Walworth, there are considerably more than that number in church fellowship, who trace the time of their conversion to the services held in the tent. The tent was purchased last year from the funds of the South London Mission, and the land upon which it stands is rented by the same body.

LEEDS UNITED MISSION.

A series of special services, in connection with evangelical churches of all denominations, commenced in Leeds on Monday, April 12, has been attended with an extraordinary measure of divine influence. The services were supplemental to those of the Mission held in connection with the Church of England a few weeks ago, and were the result of an earnest desire for the continuance of the work so gloriously begun.

For several weeks a committee, composed of representatives of most of the churches of the town, met almost daily, for the purpose of devising means for carrying out the work. It was decided by them to divide the town into nine districts, and to appoint a committee for each. These committees arranged the places in which the special services were to be held, and organized a plan for the visitation of every house in the town.

The Mission preachers included a number of ministers invited by the central committee, from various parts of the country, and also some sixty ministers from the town and neighbourhood.

Meetings for united prayer have been held daily during the Mission in the Albert Hall. There were not less than 1500 present at each meeting at the lowest computation, and on one or two occasions numbers were unable to obtain admission. The Rev. R. Balmagne, who presided at the first of these meetings, struck the key-note of the week's services by an earnest address upon the words, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." He said that in coming to Leeds he had been much struck with the earnest expectation of a blessing which seemed to prevail on all hands, and they might depend upon it that God would not have created that expectation in their hearts, unless He intended in his gracious providence to meet it.

The evening services were conducted in two or three places of worship in each district, and in all cases the attendance was most remarkable. It is estimated that not less than 14,000 persons were gathered together night after night to hear the word of life. Meetings for inquirers were held at the close of each service, and hundreds of earnest seekers from all classes of society were directed to the cross.

SERVICES FOR WORKPEOPLE

were held daily in the factories and mills. Upwards of a hundred services of this kind were conducted, and by this means thousands of working-men and women not reached by other agencies, had the gospel preached to them. Some of these services were of an especially interesting character. In one case, the Spirit of God was so manifestly present in a meeting of mill-girls, that the Mission preacher was compelled to close his address before the appointed time, in order that he might speak to a large number present who were anxiously seeking Christ.

The hymns beginning "Just as I am," "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, Lover of my soul," and "There is a fountain," were distributed in printed sheets at all these services, and sung with the greatest heartiness. In many cases it was found that the young people employed in the mills had been practising Mr. Sankey's hymns in preparation for the meetings. It was a grand sight to "behold the sea of upturned faces" in many of the workshops, where were vast pieces of machinery, racks filled with lithographic blocks, long tiers of sewing and other machines, suggestive of the means by which so many thousands of the populations of our great towns earn their daily bread, as the Mission preacher proclaimed in simple and earnest language the "glorious gospel of the blessed God."

A CONFERENCE AND BREAKFAST,

to which the evangelists and local ministers were invited by the central committee, was held on Thursday morning at nine o'clock. Mr. Alderman Joy, who presided, said he "had never before seen in Leeds such a state of spiritual awakening as now, and they must all heartily rejoice at the cordial spirit of Christian unity which had been displayed." The present movement had, he said, aroused a number of laymen to exert themselves more than they had ever done before. Reports were afterwards given by the secretaries of the various districts as to the blessed results of the work. In all cases these were most encouraging. Short addresses followed, by several of the evangelists and Mission preachers, all of whom expressed themselves as having received a most favourable impression of the results of the week's work.

A THANKSGIVING SERVICE

was held on Saturday evening in the Albert Hall. At least half an hour before the service began the hall was crowded, and a large number of persons who were unable to obtain admission were directed to an overflow-meeting held in a neighbouring church, which was also well filled. The service in the Albert Hall was opened by singing and prayer, and was conducted by the Rev. H. Tarrant and J. S. Workman, the meeting being thrown open to anyone who wished to give any report as to the results of the week's work. There followed one testimony after another as to the good received—three fathers in succession telling how the Mission services had been blessed to the conversion of their sons. When after this the united mission choir (which has rendered efficient service in the choral department of the daily meetings), poured forth the beautiful hymn beginning, "Ring the bells of heaven," the effect was most thrilling, and it seemed, as many said, like "heaven begun below."

A meeting for young converts was announced to be held at the Young Men's Christian Association on the following Monday night.

HENRY VARLEY IN AMERICA.

After eight weeks' continuous labour in the gospel in New York, Mr. Varley has left us for Boston. Since our last notice he has been preaching three times a day, morning, afternoon, and evening, in New York and Brooklyn. On his last Sunday evening in New York (April 11), he again preached in Barnum's Great Roman Hippodrome, to about 15,000 souls. He took for his text the Lord's words in John xii. 32, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." His constant theme is the glorious person of the Lord Jesus Christ, and on this occasion, with a power of voice which penetrated the remotest corner of the vast building, and with an earnestness and vivacity which riveted the attention of the great assemblage, he followed closely the apostolic example of preaching Jesus and the Resurrection, and truly it was in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. With great clearness he showed that the gospel of Christ was not so much a system of morals as a personal love to a Living Person. In insisting on the glorious truth that union to Christ by faith was typified by the marriage relation, he declared that a man did not marry a beautifully bound book, containing the divinest morality, but the rather a living person; and even so the Christian had a Living Person, the Lord of Glory, on whom to set his affections. The after-meeting, to which upwards of 2000 remained, was characterized by great power.

On the following evening (Monday, April 12), a valedictory meeting was held in the largest church in New York, when 2500 persons assembled to testify that they had received a spiritual blessing through Henry Varley's presentation of the truth. The testimony of the Rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, was characteristic of that of the majority there present; viz., that from no man had they ever received so deep and true a blessing to their own souls. The Hon. W. E. Dodge stated that, to his own personal knowledge, the Christians of New York had not, for a period of forty years, been so much stirred up and revived as they had through the ministrations of their beloved brother. There was in 1857 a more widespread work among the masses, but at the present time the main characteristic of the work was the intense revival of interest among the Lord's people. After the close of the meeting, it was a moving sight to see many hundreds remain behind to bid farewell to our beloved brother. He has now left us for the City of Boston, the Athens of America, and the prayers of the thousands in New York, to whom God has blessed Henry Varley's ministry of the Word, follow him, that he may enter that city in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. F. T.

CONVENTION AT BRIGHTON

FOR THE PROMOTION OF SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS.
MAY 29 TO JUNE 7.

"God hath visited his people." In Great Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, America, meetings have been held, numbering in each from a few hundreds up to many thousands, for the sole purpose of gaining, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, a truly scriptural experience of sanctification and power in service; nor have these earnest seekers been disappointed.

Remembering the numerous Biblical warrants for gathering assemblies of the people together, for the renunciation of sin, and for seeking the presence of the Lord, and confidently believing that God, by the Holy Spirit, will multiply to us the grace and peace of the September meeting at Oxford, a meeting is called at Brighton for ten days, from May 29 to June 7, 1875, inclusive.

We assemble to seek the Lord, and the personal holiness which is found only in a life of abiding in Him. We press upon those who come great moderation in dress and in the use of the table, careful avoidance of excitement, an attitude of constant prayerfulness, the substitution of prayer for controversy, and, above all, the exercise of an entire surrender to and full trust in the Lord. We do not and cannot doubt that a life of maintained communion and victory, in a degree hitherto unlooked for, will open upon those who are honestly seeking for these things, and that, throughout this life and the next, we shall praise God for his goodness to us at the Brighton Convention.

So large and uniform a blessing to the unsaved has hitherto accompanied the meetings for consecration, that we cordially invite the presence of such, suggesting that members of the Convention solicit the company of those for whose salvation they are anxious. Evangelistic meetings will be held in the town as the way is opened.

We earnestly advise those who attend this meeting to remain the whole period of ten days.

About 400 ministers from various parts of the Continent are likely to be present, and we solicit for them the hospitality of those who can receive them, notice being sent to the local secretary.

No speakers will be selected, nor arrangements for meetings made, save by a unanimous vote of the Executive Committee, to whom, through the leaders of the meeting, all suggestions will be made.

Mrs. R. Pearsall Smith expects to hold meetings daily for ladies.

ARRANGEMENTS.

The town of Brighton has generously given the whole suite of the Pavilion Rooms and Dome, with the Corn Exchange and Town-hall, free of cost, for the purposes of the meeting.

The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Booking-offices will give to those who present the cards furnished on application to the local secretary, tickets at the price of one fare for both ways, available from May 28 to June 8 inclusive.

Table-board, for three or more days, will be furnished at 3s. per day, or 4s. 6d. for a single day. The same contractor will furnish, if desired, other tables at 5s. and 8s. per day.

Lodgings can be procured from 10s. 6d. per week upwards. Applications should state what grade of expense is desired, the accommodation being proportioned to the price.

All communications will be addressed as below, stating number of railway tickets required, with stamped and directed envelopes for reply. In appropriating lodgings, the Secretary will furnish the lodging-house keeper and the applicant with duplicate forms defining the dates engaged for, the detail of rooms and of charges, beyond which there will be no extras. Applications will state whether meals are desired at the lodgings or at the general ordinary.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON MEETINGS, HAYMARKET.

TUESDAY, APRIL 20TH.

The requests for prayer were very numerous, including persons in almost every condition of mind—one specially for a backslider, who had been a preacher of the gospel; and one for a young man in prison. The notes of praise were also many. The clergyman who followed in prayer asked that the churches in this country and America might be cemented for the conversion of the world.

"I've found a joy in sorrow"—a most sweet and plaintive air, set to beautiful words—was sung.

Mr. Moody read part of Luke v. There was no room in the synagogue, so Christ had to go into the open air—there must have been a great revival there. He hoped all the churches and theatres in London would become too small, and they would have to go out and speak to the people. Commenting on the command of Christ to his disciples, to leave their nets and follow Him, Mr. Moody asked, How many men in London would give up everything for Christ? There were many publicans and others engaged in unlawful trades, he believed, who were awakened, but did not decide for Christ because they would have to give up so much. They would not take Christ to be their Senior Partner because they would have to give up some branch of their business. The lesson of this story was—"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." These fishermen left fishes, nets, and hooks—everything, because they got something better. They followed Christ, and they could not but catch men. People might catch fish for their own church or party, but they could not catch men without Christ.

Mr. Sankey having prayed,

Mr. James Balfour, of Edinburgh, said faith in Christ's power was necessary as well as following Him. He gave a striking instance of Christ's power to save the most unlikely, in the case of a noted infidel in Edinburgh.

Rev. S. Shoobridge said he was about to pray that God would stop the mouths of sceptics in London when Mr. Balfour rose to speak. He was accordingly greatly struck by the incident he had related. Mr. Shoobridge then prayed for the Queen and the Royal Family.

Mr. Moody afterwards prayed very fervently for the infidels of London, and the doxology was sung.

WEDNESDAY, 21ST.

"Come to the Saviour, make no delay," opened the services of the hour. Twenty-two present requested prayer for their children, and twelve children for their parents. Among the other requests were, "For the work of the Lord in Spain," "For a Jewess, who is coming to hear Mr. Moody." Praise was returned for the conversion of five persons, prayed for at these meetings.

Rev. R. D. Wilson, of Craven Chapel, offered fervent prayer.

After singing "The Higher Rock,"

Mr. Moody spoke shortly from Luke v. 27—the call of Matthew the publican. He was the last man that we would have thought Christ would have chosen. Matthew obeyed the call, and at once went to work—a sure sign of life. He got up a great feast, and invited his friends together—no doubt, to get them into the company of Jesus—what every young convert should do. In order to see the beauty of Christ, a man must come and see Him for himself. This was a very successful dinner-party. Would that there were more dinner-parties like it! "There were many that followed Him." How many men and women in London are just waiting to be invited! If we have not got the means of giving a great dinner-party, we can invite them to the spiritual feast that is spread in all the quarters of London.

The call of Matthew had a good effect on the other publicans during the whole of Christ's ministry. Let every man and woman work among their own class. This publican wrote a book, perhaps second to none except that written by John the fisherman. How it must have cheered Christ to have this man follow Him, leaving all behind! Christ took him from the dunghill, as it were, and took him up to his mansions above. How grace is magnified in the conversion of this publican! Let us follow Christ wherever He leads.

After "The sweet by-and-by,"

Rev. Mr. Thomas said he could preach better since he had been working in the inquiry-room. He told of the case of a woman he met in the hall who had been led to salvation by a voice that kept calling to her, "Will you love Jesus?"

After a season of prayer,

Mr. Sankey said they had a precious time at the Opera House the evening before. He had met with many who were Christians, but had so little joy that they could not speak out of full hearts to anxious ones. Let us leave all our burdens with Christ, and then we would find it easy to work for Him.

Mr. Sankey then sang very expressively that exquisitely delightful hymn, "I left it all with Jesus." Is any Christian weary with himself and the world? Let him sing this hymn, and believe as he sings. If he does not get above his troubles, there is something wrong.

A young man in the audience said he had been a publican for years, but through one of Ned Wright's meetings he had been led to "leave it all with Jesus," and now he was full of joy. He requested prayer that he might follow the example of Matthew, and give himself to Christ soul and body.

After another gentleman had spoken of great results from most unlikely causes, the doxology was sung, and the meeting closed.

THURSDAY, 22ND.

The attendance at the noon meeting to-day was considerably smaller than customary, owing, we suppose, to the cold and stormy weather. Mr. Sankey was absent.

After singing, "Sweet hour of prayer," Mr. Graham, M.P., read the long roll of requests, special mention being made of a meeting of ministers and their communicants at Portsmouth, at which General Scott and Mr. Radcliffe were to speak. There were also many requests for praise. Rev. Mark Guy Pearce presented the prayers of the congregation.

All joined in singing of God's "Wondrous Love," after which Mr. Moody read Rev. v.

A strange sight in heaven—a man weeping! John did not know where to look for anyone to open the book, just as many Christians are looking to the wrong place for peace and happiness. There were many "worthies" in heaven, but none of them "worthy to open the book." But the Lion of the tribe of Judah, who was a slain Lamb, prevailed to open it. If we are to do great things for God, we must be as lambs. We must get out of ourselves, and lie down at the foot of the cross, shouting, "Worthy is the Lamb!" If Christ is in our plans and in our work, God will prosper us. Nothing will be able to hinder it. Let our thought be, "How can we exalt Christ?" and we shall succeed.

Mr. Moody then prayed that the man-fearing spirit might be taken away, and that unity might prevail among all God's children. He pleaded that London might be moved still more, that men and women might flock to Christ, as the doves to their windows.

After the singing of "The Old, Old Story," and prayer, a gentleman on the platform said he believed the time was come when the Book of the Revelation, which was written to the Seven Churches, should be applied to this time and this movement, as a preparation for the second coming of the Lord.

Another clergyman made some remarks on self-abasement, and afterwards told of a brother minister whose prejudices were removed by the conversion of one of his hearers at Mr. Moody's meetings.

Lord Cavan said a clergyman of the Church of England had visited the meetings once, and was satisfied with the preaching, but he had doubts about the singing. Lord Cavan was able to give him an instance of awakening that had been caused by Mr. Sankey's singing "Nothing but Leaves."

After Admiral Fishbourne had mentioned a remarkable instance of conversion at the Agricultural Hall, prayer was offered for the meeting in Portsmouth already referred to.

At Mr. Moody's request, silent prayer was offered for a man in London who was ruining himself and family through his love of strong drink. He proposed that next Wednesday the noon meeting should be devoted to prayer for those under the bondage of this vice. This proposal would at any time be opportune, but it is more so just at present, in view of the Ministerial Conference reported last week.

The meeting closed with the doxology and the benediction.

FRIDAY, 23RD.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon appeared on the platform to-day for the first time at any of these meetings.

With a zest that is ever fresh and never flags, the audience sang about—

"The Old Old Story
Of Jesus and His love,"

and Mr. Graham read out the requests for prayer and praise—prayer amongst others for seven drunkards, for seven infidels, one a scientific man, who is coming to the meetings, for an old man of eighty-eight years, for a lady who has been bound for forty years, for a young man who on Thursday deliberately rejected the offer of Christ till Friday.

Mr. Spurgeon followed with a prayer of singular simplicity, freshness, and beauty of utterance. It was as a man talketh with his friend.

Mr. Moody read part of Col. ii. The passage, he said, brought out seven things. First, the receiving of Christ, then walking with Him, next rooted in Him. He advised the young converts to make a rule to spend at least one hour alone with Christ out of twenty-four. Many people live spiritually beyond their income; they make a great outward show, and they suddenly come down. If we have no time, let us make time—steal an hour out of the world, or from our sleep. Then we are built up in Him; complete in Him; buried and risen with Him and hid with Him. To illustrate the latter point, Mr. Moody took his pencil, wrapped it in his little hymn-book, and then enclosed both in his Bible. It struck us as a beautifully apt symbol of the Christian being "hid with Christ in God."

Mr. Sankey sang "Wondrous Love," assisted by the congregation in the chorus.

The first speaker, referring to one of the requests for prayer—that of a mother for her prodigal boy, told of a similar case within his own knowledge, where a runaway sailor boy was brought home both to his mother and to his Saviour. On the east coast of England, said the speaker, there has been continual blessing for the last six months.

Rev. H. G. Thwaites, of Birmingham, said the work there was going on, and many who at first stood aloof, had been compelled to join heartily in the movement. He believed if great things were to be done in London, elsewhere there must be a higher and deeper spiritual life among Christians, a more real entering into the risen life of the Saviour. He offered prayer for this, and was followed by Rev. W. H. Aitken, who fervently besought the Lord to take away the prevailing unbelief.

Mr. Garthorne read a letter from one who was much interested in the meeting on Saturday evening for those in workshops.

Rev. W. Taylor prayed shortly and specially for that meeting.

A young man from Glasgow gave a short account of the many ramifications of the work carried on there by his fellow young men. He also spoke of the earnest petitions that were going up in Scotland for the work in London.

The hour closed with the doxology and the benediction by Dr. D. Fraser.

AFTERNOON MEETINGS, HAYMARKET.

During the past week, these meetings have been all that could possibly be desired in point of attendance. Every afternoon the spacious building has been filled to overflowing, and, upon the whole, the audiences have been mostly composed of West-end people. Whether the services have produced commensurate results, it is difficult to tell. On one occasion Mr. Moody announced that he would be glad to speak with any who desired conversation, but no after-meetings have been held; and from a remark dropped by Mr. Moody in one of his prayers, it would seem that he is somewhat disappointed by the fewness of apparent conversions. The truth has been as faithfully proclaimed, and as sweetly and powerfully sung, as in the other parts of the town; and if West-end audiences are not so susceptible and receptive as those in the North and East, it is only another illustration of the truth of our Saviour's words about the difficulty of the rich entering into the kingdom of heaven.

Mr. Moody did not confine himself to Bible-readings, although many of his gospel addresses might not inaptly be designated by that term, so thickly studded are they with passages of Scripture.

Tuesday afternoon's subject was "Love," a most congenial theme with Mr. Moody. He delights to unfold and illustrate God's boundless love to sinners, and the highest expression of that love in the free gift of his Son. His appeals to his hearers not to commit the madness of rejecting such love are most pathetic, and we wonder how they can, by any possibility, be resisted.

On Wednesday he discoursed on "What Christ is to us," and his address, we need not say, was a feast of very fat things to those to whom Christ is "all and in all." Surely, too, it must have allured many to the Saviour who, until then, had looked on Him "as a root out of a dry ground." Most affectionately did Mr. Moody plead with saints and sinners to "leave it all with Jesus," and no less effective was Mr. Sankey's admonition in song to "Go tell it to Jesus,

And all will be right."

On Thursday and Friday Mr. Moody spoke on the fundamental doctrine of "The Blood." In a way that evinced the most thorough knowledge and command of the subject, he traced the "scarlet thread" from Genesis to Revelation. He was very strong in his condemnation of preachers who affect to despise this doctrine of substitution, and declared that he would shun them as he would poison. In the language of the late Dr. Alexander, of Princetown College, he entreated his fellow-labourers in the ministry to "make much of the blood." "I am a young man," he said, "but I have learned one thing in travelling up and down Christendom—the man who makes much of the blood, God honours his ministry. The man who tries to cover up the cross, and says that Christ's death has nothing to do with our salvation, may draw a crowded congregation, but his church is like a gilded sepulchre." Strong language, but we think perfectly justifiable.

EVENING MEETINGS, OPERA HOUSE.

The Rev. Dr. Fraser has conducted the meetings in the West-end during the past week (Saturday excepted). The attendance has been small compared to the crowded gatherings of the afternoon, but a quiet earnestness has characterized the meetings, and Dr. Fraser's rousing addresses have been followed by a goodly number of inquirers. Mr. Sankey's presence on Sunday week and on Tuesday evening was a source of much gratification and profit.

The numbers who attend would be considerably increased if a little band of determined workers were to go out into the surrounding streets half an hour or so before the meeting, and kindly invite the hundreds of loungers and lingerers to be found in the streets in the Haymarket district. Mr. Radcliffe is most anxious that this should be done, but his other duties prevent him from personally engaging in it. As will be seen from our report, Mr. Moody made special reference to this on Sunday morning. On Friday evening Dr. Fraser spoke of the preaching of Paul before Felix, Festus, and Agrippa, and the lessons to be drawn from their reception, or rather rejection of the truth. He invited all who were "almost persuaded" to stay to the after-meeting. His invitation was accepted by a goodly number, who had much earnest conversation with the believers present, and we trust many of the halting ones went away altogether persuaded to be Christians.

The meeting on Saturday evening was addressed by Mr. Moody himself, and was a time of remarkable blessing. The truth went home with power, and Mr. Moody's heart was rejoiced at this first evening meeting he preached in the West, by seeing sinners flocking into the kingdom. The number of inquirers was so large that the third gallery had to be cleared, and was fully occupied with anxious ones and the friends who sought to point them to the cross. At the Sunday morning meeting, Mr. Moody said this evening meeting was one of the most marvellous and encouraging he had ever been privileged to hold.

SUNDAY, 25TH.

The West-end "Christian workers" assembled in the Opera House for the first time on Sunday morning last at eight o'clock. With the exception of the topmost gallery, the building was well filled, and though Mr. Moody was unassisted in conducting the service, thanks to his inextinguishable energy and enthusiasm, the meeting was a most successful one.

From the parable of the Talents, he enforced the necessity of every Christian being engaged in some specific work for the Master. The officers of the various churches, he said, ought to ask of all applicants for admission, what they were prepared to do, and if they were not willing to undertake some work, they were certainly not converted. There were a great many "dwarfs" in the church—they never grew in the spiritual life. "During the next thirty days, we want to make good use of this building. It has cost about £5000, and we only have it for four or five weeks more, and we want all the Christians to attend and bring their friends with them, so as to have the place crowded every night. Then you will not be asking who is to preach; you will be looking right up to God, not talking about this man or that man. I hope the day will soon come when we will get our eyes away from men; then souls will be saved. I do not know if I have ever attended such a meeting as there was here last night. It seemed as if God were hovering over the West of London, and were ready to give us such a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it."

Mr. Moody then called on all who were prepared to support the evening meetings to rise, and the congregation stood up in a body. "Now," said Mr. Moody, "Dr. Fraser will preach here to-night. Will two or three hundred Christian workers come at seven o'clock, and go out to the streets, and invite the people to come in? We do not want any man or woman to come within a mile of the building without receiving an invitation to the meeting. Let us look for great things during the present week."

Mr. Moody, and those like-minded, did not have to look long for great things. The afternoon meeting produced a rich harvest of seeking, and, we believe, finding ones. Long before half-past three, the theatre was crammed to the utmost. Lord Shaftesbury and a large party of friends occupied the royal box, and Lord Cairns occupied a seat on the platform.

Mr. Moody discoursed on "The New Birth," as taught by Christ in his conversation with Nicodemus. "The A B C of God's alphabet" was made very plain to the comprehension of the dullest and least interested. The result was happily apparent at the close. Groups of those who were professedly anxious about salvation were to be found throughout the building, and the afternoon was far gone ere the solemn business of dealing with inquirers could be terminated. If the later meetings of the week carry out the promise of the first ones, Mr. Moody will have no cause to mourn over the paucity of conversions.

EVENING SERVICES, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Through one channel and another the living water has been flowing out of the throne of God and of the Lamb into the hearts of sinners at the North of London, during the past week. On Monday, the Rev. W. Hay Aitken spoke with the demonstration of the Spirit and in power; many will never forget his address on the unbelief of Thomas, expressed in the honest, "I will not believe," replaced in most cases now by the less candid, "I can't believe." With extraordinary power the speaker developed the nature, the reasonableness, and the blessedness of faith, and the revelation of God which comes to believing souls. Tuesday and Wednesday, the Rev. Newman Hall delivered two very able and thoughtful addresses on the Penitent Thief; the first, treating of his repentance and conversion; the second, dealing in detail with the wondrous words of grace that sealed his pardon. On both these evenings, though the attendance was small, and the weather most unfavourable, we met with souls who had then and there passed from death unto life.

Thursday and Friday, the early gathering of large numbers told of the return of the evangelists so justly honoured and beloved. They were among some of the best and holiest times we have yet witnessed in the Agricultural Hall. The subject on each occasion was Decision, based, the first evening, on the words, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" and on the second, on the question, "What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?"

On Friday the large assembly seemed more than usual to be controlled and subdued by the power which we know to be of God, but which many deem some mysterious spell of excitement or romance. Occupants of the border-land must have felt, we should think, of all men most miserable. On both nights, the inquiry-room was eagerly sought by many who had already testified their anxiety by rising at the close of the address. Old men with snowy hair, children of twelve and thirteen, young men and maidens, all were found pressing in to hear more about Jesus. Coming out of the large hall from the prayer-meeting, we met a young woman with that half-glad, half-sad countenance that tells so sure a tale of dealing with God. "Are you saved?" we asked. "Yes," she said. "How, and where?" we inquired; and with a sweet frankness, she replied, "I hardly know how, but I am trusting in Jesus since some one spoke to me in the hall."

Moving on to the door of St. Mary's Hall, we found a young University man rejoicing in the decision of a fellow collegian, who was glorifying God that his eyes were opened to see Jesus. And so, the waters of life are flowing quietly, deeply, but surely into the hearts and homes of our dear fellow-citizens. May we who know the sweetness of these waters of quietness have them daily fertilizing our own souls, that we may easily and tenderly pass the cup of blessing on to others.

SUNDAY, 25TH.

The afternoon service, conducted by Mr. Sawday, was fairly well attended, and his address seemed to produce a good impression.

Mr. Sankey was at the East-end for the evening meeting. This Hall was, nevertheless, well filled. Mr. Gladstone, accompanied by the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, occupied a prominent seat at the front of the platform. The ex-Prime Minister entered heartily and with apparent interest into the service, and it was a very suggestive and most encouraging sight to see the foremost man of the day in many respects, and one who has commanded the applause of listening millions, sitting, as it were, at the feet of the preacher, and drinking in the burning words of a Saviour's love with eager zest as they dropped from Mr. Moody's lips. The right hon. gentleman received a sort of quiet ovation as he left the hall, which was perhaps scarcely in keeping with the character of the occasion, though one is hardly surprised at it.

Mr. Moody's text was, "For the Son of Man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." After stating that no man had ever been misjudged by the world as the Son of God had been, he proceeded to single out, one after another, those of Christ's acquaintances who were gathered together at his crucifixion, and made each one tell his or her own story of how Christ had saved them, both soul and body. The great crowd listened amid the wonderful silence that characterizes these gatherings, and though Mr. Moody did not call on any to rise, as his wont is, a very strong impression must have been produced. If the proportion that found their way to the inquiry-room was not large as compared with some other evenings, we cannot but believe that multitudes in the audience entered the valley of decision, and put Christ's saving power to the test which never fails.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

The difficulties with which this meeting has had to contend, arising from the unsuitableness of St. Mary's Hall in many ways, have not prevented its being carried on, night after night, with encouraging results. The Christian young men of the neighbourhood have rallied around Mr. Drummond, and from time to time accessions of converts, and the unsophisticated tale of their conversion, have sustained the interest, cheered the hearts of the Christians, and paved the way, we trust, for the inbringing of many more into the fold.

At none of the meetings does one feel more the intense reality of this great spiritual awakening. One evening, during the closing prayer, it was most touching to hear young men—and sometimes older ones—rise, and, in faltering accents, request earnest prayer for themselves or their relatives. Such a spirit of prayer, and such a desire for the conversion of others, surely betokens God's presence and power to save.

Mr. Drummond leaves the North this week, to break fresh ground among the young men in the East-end. The meetings there will be held in the large tent adjoining the Bow-road Hall, and it is expected that a great work of ingathering will be done among the thousands of young men in the crowded East. Will our readers pray for this, and also that the meetings in the North may be sustained and made powerful for good to the young men in that locality. These will now be under the superintendence of the Hon. Capt. Moreton.

PICKET WORK

AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Out of many interesting cases, allow me to enlist the sympathy and prayers of your readers for two young persons.

Standing in the large passage, and waiting for a friend who was to return home at the same time, a lady came up to me and said—

"Here is a young woman who will not go with me to the inquiry-room; will you please speak a word to her?"

We looked at the face of this one, and it seemed anything but youthful, so withered and worn. Winter seemed to claim this poor child for itself—weeds outside and grief within, made her old-looking indeed. But she was young, and expected, like all young people, to be happy. Her father died, then her mother died, her brothers were scattered here and there, and she was alone in the world, and has to labour every day, from nine in the morning till eight at night, for her bit of bread, and so weak and fragile. God seemed to her hard, his government not kindly to her condition; she needed companionship, and only on this theme could we get access to the dark and troubled spirit. "God is a Sun and a Shield," and the warm rays of Emmanuel's face wakened up in this sad one a desire to have Him with her, to give her "the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." "Out on the desert He heard its cry," and the thought of his sympathy drew out the big rolling tear, that told of his presence there. Pray for her!

The other is of another order; but in some respects equally sad. A pleasant and intelligent countenance, and yet lurking in it a great fear of what is before her. Her father, her mother, her brothers and sisters, are all living, and at home; but none of them love the Saviour. Now that the "reconciliation" is seen by her, and accepted as from and by God, what is she to do in such a home? She shrinks from the burden of testimony; cannot the Good Shepherd carry her? Pray that she may bring the message lovingly into that dark household!

In speaking to a labouring man, and explaining to him what faith meant, we said, "Now, Jim."

"How do you know my name is Jim? That's my name; who told you?"

We really could not tell him how; but it came out so; and simple as the circumstance may seem, it had its own effect, and made a way for the message, and he went away happy in the thought that all he needed was provided for him; only by the use of the word "trust" could we get the idea of faith into his mind.

It is exceeding cheering to see so many taking to this work, and if the blessed Comforter would bring more into this field, there is abundance of room, and the necessary grace and tenderness He has promised to give.

C. Y.

THE WORK IN THE EAST OF LONDON.

The Bow-road Hall was open every evening last week, and a noon-day prayer-meeting has been commenced there. This at present is not largely attended; but it must be borne in mind that the working East-end folk have not the leisure for a mid-day meeting that the dwellers in more favoured regions have. Mr. Moody preached on Tuesday evening to a full hall, from the question to Adam, "Where art thou?" addressing it successively to professed Christians, to backsliders, and to the openly ungodly. On Wednesday evening, in spite of heavy rain, the large hall was nearly filled. Mr. Moody preached from Luke iv. 18, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me," the anointing and work of Christ. The audience on Thursday evening looked small in the huge building, though by no means small in itself, numbering, probably, about 2000. Mr. Aitken spoke from the story of the Woman of Samaria with much power. He showed how differently the blessed Lord treated this poor unpretending sinner and Nicodemus—that while He cut short the learned Pharisee, He allowed the Samaritan to talk out all her mind; no one so stern as Christ towards formalists and hypocrites, no one so tender to poor sinners.

In the course of his address, Mr. Aitken related an incident illustrating the shifts to which convicted sinners sometimes resort, to avoid coming to close quarters. Preaching on one occasion an arousing gospel sermon, he observed an elderly gentleman with whom he felt sure the Spirit of God was striving. He sought conversation with him afterwards, when the old gentleman admitted that the discourse had deeply interested him; but added, "I am of a very analytical turn of mind, and I should have to weigh and examine your statements before I could receive them." Then, noticing the searching look of inquiry and compassion with which he was regarded, he falteringly repeated, "I am of a very analytical turn of mind, very," and then burst into tears. "Let me call on you to-morrow," said the preacher, and an interview was arranged. When he did so, he found the poor old gentleman completely broken down under a sense of sin, and was enabled to lead him to peace in believing. Then the old man said, "What a fool I was to talk to you as I did yesterday. I did not know what to say, so I made an excuse of my analytical turn of mind; what I wanted was salvation!"

There were many inquirers on Thursday evening, and some also remained to the after-meeting who were in an awfully hard and godless condition. It is throwing pearls before swine to talk of grace in such cases, and wasting time to urge the gospel on those who feel not their need of it. Where the Spirit of God is not working, it is useless for us to work. Such cases are out of place in the inquiry-room, and had better be left with a few solemn words of warning. There are too many really seeking God, after these meetings, to make it wise to give attention to those who are not, and who evidently have no proper motive for staying to the second meeting.

Friday night was bitterly cold, and the audience was comparatively small, though about 2000 persons were present. Mr. Aitken spoke from Acts iii. 26. The main subject of his address was the necessity of a severance from sin, in order to an enjoyment of heaven. This was urged with much earnestness. The people were attentive, and now and then a solemn feeling seemed to steal over their hearts, as the preacher depicted in strong colours the misery of sin and its dreadful consequences, both in this world and in that which is to come.

Mr. Sankey sang, with peculiar impressiveness, "Almost persuaded," and then poured out his heart in intercession for those present, his prayer eliciting many hearty Amens.

Mr. Aitken's thorough, thoughtful, somewhat stern and even unsparing style of preaching, is much needed at this time. The immediate results may not be so great, but the abiding fruit must be considerable. Only a few remained to be spoken with on Friday evening, but some of the cases were most satisfactory.

There was a large attendance at the hall on Saturday evening, though neither Mr. Moody nor Mr. Sankey was present. It is a good sign to see three or four thousand persons assemble in the East of London on a Saturday night, the busiest night of the week to the poor.

Mr. Aitken's address, from the healing of the nobleman's son at Capernaum, was of a most interesting and powerful character, addressed especially to inquirers, but edifying to all classes. It brought home afresh a sense of the inexhaustible fulness of the Word of God, for it educed from that simple little narrative in John iv. 46-54 a mass of truth applicable to the state of those present.

Mr. Aitken closed a most touching and powerful address by an exhortation to the inquirers present to believe the words that Jesus has spoken, and selected from among them that marvellous dying utterance, "It is finished." Many inquirers remained, and many, doubtless, left, filled with peace and joy in believing.

On Sunday morning at eight a.m. a noble audience more than half filled the hall; and Mr. Aitken spoke with much power from the words, "I beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." He endeavoured to lead believers to yield themselves more freely to God, and to the power of the Spirit. He beautifully illustrated the upward tendency of the grace that is in the Christian, by comparing it to that of a balloon, always struggling to rise, even when firmly held down by cords to the earth; and he exhorted those present to cut the cords and soar above earthly things, into the clear atmosphere of heaven.

The afternoon meeting filled the hall, and was felt to be one of much power, by those favourably circumstanced for hearing. The vestry and committee-room were on both occasions used as inquiry-rooms, and were filled with anxious souls after each meeting. The evening address was a peculiarly solemn one, designed to bring sin to remembrance, that its guilt might be felt, and its pardon sought. It was from Jer. xxii. 23. Space and time forbid our giving any report of either of these remarkable addresses, but the crowded congregation which overflowed the hall in the evening, showed that Mr. Aitken's ministry is appreciated. The presence of God was felt in all the Sunday meetings. Thousands were unable to get in, and the tent in Jupp's-road was filled with several successive congregations from the overflow. Many, we believe very many, will remember with grateful joy for ever, Sunday, April 25, in the Bow-road Hall. To God be all the glory!

A tent has been put up near the Bow-road Hall, under the direction of Mr. J. J. Jones, in which, on the two past Sunday evenings, free teas have been given to some hundreds of the poorest people in the neighbourhood. The young men's meeting for the Eastern district is commenced in this tent this week, under the superintendence of Mr. Henry Drummond.

THE VICTORIA THEATRE.

The services have been continued by the Rev. William Taylor in this building under encouraging circumstances. The attendance has kept up, and the spirit of unity which has prevailed among the band of workers, has greatly helped forward the work.

During the first week, the number of persons who stayed behind as inquirers was numerous, and it is believed that no night passed without blessing.

One lady who had been seeking Christ for forty-two years, and had heard of the case mentioned at the Opera House, of a man who had been seeking Christ for fifty years and found peace at Victoria Theatre, came, hoping to secure a blessing, and it is believed her visit was not fruitless.

It would be difficult to enumerate many interesting cases reported by various workers, but a large number of inquirers have remained behind for conversation and prayer.

On Sunday evening last the attendance was larger than on any previous occasion. Mr. Taylor met a small roomful of seekers, and many others were scattered about in various parts of the building.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA HOUSE.

As usual on Mondays, the requests for praise were many and cheering, embracing the conversion of individuals as well as successful services held in various parts of the country.

"Rejoice and be glad" having been sung, Mr. Moody varied the service by requesting Rev. W. H. Aitken to read a passage of Scripture, and after that the meeting would be thrown open for reports of the Lord's working.

Mr. Aitken read part of John iv., which, he said, contained a lesson for all workers, but distinctly for the sower and the reaper. Christ's meat was to do the will of his Father, so we want, in order to successful work, to get into the mind of God. The lesson for the sower, drawn from the words, "Four months, and then the harvest," was, that the sowers ought to look for an immediate harvest, and not be content to postpone it for four months, which often meant a postponement indefinitely. He told of a prominent man in Leeds who went lately into the inquiry-room there, and was overpowered by the thought that God had used him to the conversion of souls; he had not looked for it. Another case was that of a lady who wrote to Mr. Aitken, stating that she could not describe her joy at the thought that God had opened her lips, and enabled her to speak of Christ to her servants; as a result almost every servant in a large household had been converted. Reapers, too, ought not to forget the labours of those who have gone before. Let the sowers and reapers rejoice together.

Mr. Balfour, Edinburgh, read a letter from a young midshipman in the navy to his mother, telling of his conversion through conversation with a friend.

After some direct and encouraging testimony from Mr. C. Cook, of Hyde-park Hall, praise was offered to God for answers to prayer by Mr. Campbell Whyte, of Glasgow.

A gentleman from Glasgow reported of the work in the Drill Hall there, also in some of the commercial houses, and in the low districts of the town. He gave some gratifying accounts of the work in the adjoining country places. In one village as many as 160 had been added to one church.

Mr. Sankey told of most successful meetings yesterday at the East-end.

Rev. T. Richardson related an instance of a wife who was converted at the afternoon meeting in the Bow-road Hall, and at once wished prayer for her husband, who had left, but was to attend again in the evening.

Mr. Moody said that others wished to speak, and the reports would be continued at the noon meeting tomorrow (Tuesday). He said there was a village, nineteen miles from Glasgow, with a population of 800, in which there had been 150 cases of conversion during the last twelve months. He wished they had the same proportion in London. Many people had written to him about the waste of money in putting up the hall in Liverpool. To show that the work there was still going on, he read a telegram he had received, stating that the meeting yesterday (Sunday) was the best since they had left. The inquiry-room—containing from 400 to 500—was full, and there were many anxious in the large hall. At first he was rather sceptical about taking the Opera House at such a great expense, but all that had fled away since the meeting on Saturday night there. Yesterday a man came thirty miles to the meeting, was converted, and went on his way rejoicing. Last night, he was walking from the West to the Agricultural Hall, when a man came up to him, and saying he was a doctor, thanked him for his conversion. Since he had been converted, he added, he had taken his wife to the meeting, and she, as well as two servants, had been converted, too. The doctor was then on his way to the Opera House, to distribute bills inviting people to the evening meeting.

As Captain Moreton was on his way home from the meeting last evening, continued Mr. Moody, he was accosted by a man who asked him to go into his house; and on going there, it was found that this man, his wife, and all his servants, were anxious about their souls. Mr. Moody also read a note he had received, stating that a minister, after some consideration, went to the inquiry-room, and there his own son was converted to God. Let us "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," said Mr. Moody, in closing; and this appropriate doxology having been sung, the meeting was closed with the benediction.

MR. SPURGEON ON THE HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

At the usual morning service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last, Mr. Spurgeon prayed most earnestly for the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and also for the house-to-house visitation.

Previous to the commencement of his sermon, he said.—I have a few practical words to say. My friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is here this morning, as the Superintendent of the House-to-house Visitation for all London, which has been carried on in connection with the labours of our brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Radcliffe wants some 800 men and women, each one to superintend from twelve to twenty persons, who will go and call at every house. If I understand Mr. Radcliffe aright, he has not more than 400 yet—men and women somewhat advanced in divine things, and with an earnest desire for the salvation of souls. Out of this congregation he has got a goodly number of friends who have become superintendents, but not one-half as many as he ought to have; and I told him to come down this morning. He came on Monday night, but only got two superintendents; so he has come this morning because the people are here. He wants a number of persons—not for this neighbourhood, because that is pretty well done—but you very respectable people who come from the suburbs, from Greenwich, Blackheath, Dulwich, and Balham, and all these districts. We want persons to manage these regions, and we cannot very readily find them. I told Mr. Radcliffe I would explain what was wanted. The superintendent need not do very much himself—the more he does the better—but he will have to call his friends together who are doing service, and cheer them up, and see that the work is done. We want, at this auspicious time, to carry the gospel to everybody's house in London, without exception, high and low, rich and poor; and it cannot be done except a large number of superintendents undertake this service. Mr. Radcliffe has come to-day to take down the names of friends who will do so. If I have not explained the matter fully, I wish he might come forward and say two or three words, so as to make it quite clear.

Mr. Radcliffe stepped forward and said: We have some few districts left in every part of London, so that we should be glad of your services everywhere; but it is quite true what Mr. Spurgeon has stated, that in the suburbs we are very poor indeed. I do not know why, but in the suburbs—we take fifteen miles from Charing-cross—we are poorest.

I would only add one word more, to say this—up to last night our superintendents have brought word of conversions to God through their visitation. And the richest in this land are receiving the visitors—though they are comparatively poor men. Only last night we were told of a nobleman—who has been visited by a man, not in his own station, but by a comparatively humble man. At first he did not dare to enter, and paced backwards and forwards in front of the nobleman's house. But the Spirit of God moved him to enter, and when he told the man servant that he wished to speak to his master about his soul, he was shown up to the nobleman. There, humbly and courteously, he pointed him to Christ, and the gentleman said no one had ever spoken to him about Christ before. He asked the visitor to pray, and the man said, "Shall we pray here?" They prayed there together, and when the visitor left, after an hour's time, the nobleman asked him, as many others do, to come back and see him again.

Mr. Spurgeon added, "That's better than preaching; that's doing. Now I want you, dear friends, to come forward after the service and give your names." The result of Mr. Spurgeon's appeal was that about a dozen proffered themselves as superintendents. We take this opportunity of suggesting to Mr. Spurgeon's brethren in the ministry that they should follow his example, and lay this important matter before their respective congregations. Out of the thousands of Church members in the metropolis who have the sufficient time at their disposal, only 400 ready to step into the breach! We trust Mr. Spurgeon's appeal to his own congregation will echo through every Christian church in London, until the supply of workers shall exceed the necessities of the work.

"THY KINGDOM COME!"

Lo! through the breaking skies
Dawns now with sweet surprise,

The morning star,
Faint whispers in the air,
Life waking everywhere,
Voices as if in prayer,
Now near, now far.

When the summer day thus opens,
Do we e'er mistake the tokens?
Do we not soon,
As melt the clouds away,
See the mild eastern ray,
Shining to perfect day,
In the glad noon?

Fain would we trust, O Lord,
That Thy most mighty word,
"Let there be light!"
Hath now, in these last days,
Gone forth o'er earth's highways, [maze,
Chasing through sin's dark
The long, long night.

O Christ, our Saviour King,
Conquest to victory bring;
Display Thy power!

On Thee Thy people call,
Oh loose the captive's thrall,
Let hostile standards fall
In this Thine hour.

Blest Spirit, let Thy grace,
Reach all of human race;
The truth reveal!
Come as a mighty wind,
Sin's fatal chains unbind,
Show the diseased and blind
Christ's power to heal!

O Saviour, Prince of Peace!
Bid now all discords cease
Amongst Thy friends:
One King alone we know;
One battlefield, one foe; [go,
From strength to strength we Till conflict ends.

Till within heaven's gate-
Angels shall celebrate
A world's new birth:
So shall the true morn wake,
So shall a new light break,
For, saith the Lord, "I make New heavens — new earth!"

THE POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.—The eighth annual report of Monsieur Barbier's labours among this class is a very interesting though unpretentious one. It tells of much work done at small cost for the common Lord among the necessitous French, men and women, old and young, many of whom are always to be found in this great city. The agencies at work include mission services in Leicester-sq., and Collier-st., Pentonville-road; Sunday-school at Leicester-square; a Home for Poor Governesses, Nursery and Ladies' Maids; and an agency for procuring situations for those out of employment. These last two are under the special care of Madame Barbier. It is really surprising how all these efforts can be sustained with the very limited means disclosed by the balance-sheet before us. The funds must be carefully employed. We very cordially commend Mons. and Madame Barbier's work, and would gladly give extracts from the report did space permit. Help is urgently needed just at present. Communications may be sent to Mons. Barbier, 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, W.

FINANCES.

The following letter appeared in the daily papers of Monday last:—

"Sir,—The Committee who arrange the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey desire to answer the questions whether Messrs. Moody and Sankey make money out of the movement now going on, and for what purposes the money asked for by advertisement is wanted. Will you allow me, through your columns, to answer these inquiries? When Mr. Moody addressed the clergy and ministers at Freemasons' Hall he stated that he and Mr. Sankey would not receive any money from the London Committee; he also stated that the royalty upon the sale of Hymn and Tune Books would, from the 1st January, 1875, be paid to a trustee (a London merchant, whom he named), to be devoted to Christian work when they shall have returned to America. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have since confirmed these statements, and refuse to receive, and do not receive, any money from either source. What then is the money wanted for by the Committee? Before me I have an estimate, dated 23rd April, made by our honorary architect, Mr. W. A. Boulnois, giving the probable cost of rent of the Agricultural and Moor-gate-street Halls, the Opera House and Victoria Theatre, and the erection of large temporary halls at Bow and Camberwell, together with gas, wages, printing, advertising, and the purchase of 22,000 chairs, making a total of £26,018; this, he adds, is below the amount required to pay all to 10th July next. The expenses may reach £30,000, and, as the sum received by our treasurer, Mr. James E. Mathieson, 77, Lombard-street, is under £16,000, may I venture to ask all who are interested in this great work to help by sending donations? We have no collecting boxes, and the admission to every service, with or without ticket, is absolutely free of charge.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
THOMAS STONE.

Chairman of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee.
"Opera House, Haymarket, April 24."

[£30,000 appears a large amount, but the work is great; and we believe there are few of our readers who would not heartily subscribe according to their ability to carry it out, considering that no money has been more wisely or profitably spent than in bringing such a presentation of the gospel home to the hearts and consciences of our fellow-countrymen.—ED.]

NEWPORT, MON.—Our eight days' Mission ended last night (Sunday). We have had much blessing, many souls saved, and God's people greatly revived.

KEETERING.—We have received an interesting account of services by Mr. Spiers here, which we are obliged to hold over this week.

CONFERENCE AT PORTSEA.

A united conference of ministers and Christian workers of various denominations was held in Daniel-street Chapel, Portsea, on Thursday afternoon, last week, and the meeting was of a most representative character. Mr. J. Griffin occupied the chair, supported by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe (superintendent of the house-to-house visitation now being carried on in London), Major-General Scott, Right Hon. Cowper Temple, etc.

In the evening a meeting of the members and communicants of the various churches in Portsmouth and Gosport (Nonconformist) was held in King-street Chapel, Portsea. The doors were opened nearly an hour before the time of commencing the service, and even at that time numbers were waiting outside, eager to gain admission, and at half past seven the spacious edifice was densely crowded in every part, upwards of 3000 persons being present.

The Chairman, Major-General Scott, said they were living in marvellous times, and the Spirit of God was working mightily in this our favoured country. God was blessing their American brethren in their immense meetings in London, and he asked those present to entreat God to shower down a blessing upon Portsmouth as well. He attributed the success which was attending Moody and Sankey to the prayers which were everywhere being offered up on their behalf, and pressed home the necessity of carrying on the house-to-house visitation in this borough, among the rich as well as the poor. They had cheering accounts of the success attending this work in other towns. He appealed for volunteers for this department of Christian work, because they could not hope to reach the people by preaching only.

Mr. J. Griffin gave an account of what had been done at the afternoon meeting, and said there were some 10,000 houses to visit in this borough. He hoped they would all dedicate themselves afresh to God's service, and do what little they could to advance the interests of the Saviour to whom they owed so much.

After a long and excellent address by Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., enforcing the duty of personal witness for Christ on the part of every Christian,

Mr. Radcliffe said special prayer for Portsmouth was asked on Wednesday at Mr. Moody's meeting, and he would be glad to know of the success of that gathering. He gave some account of the house-to-house visitation in other towns, in which persons of different denominations were taking part. He said when Mr. Moody got to Sheffield he was shocked at the immense proportion of British people who never entered a place of worship. Whether it was as bad in some towns of America or not, he did not know, but his American mind was shocked at it; and he supposed in the parts he had been used to, it was not so bad. The house-to-house visitation first commenced in Manchester. In telling terms he appealed to them to seek strength from God in their work for Him in Portsmouth, and then told his hearers that he had not been in any town where the ministers had met together for prayer like the ministers had in Portsmouth. They lived in a glorious day. When the Church was united in love, and was going on in laughter and joy, devils would fear and fly from their fastnesses, and the sons of Anak would be brought down under their feet. He cried shame upon the Christian Church that the strongholds for brothels and drinking had so long existed in the land. It was too bad that so much bribery and corruption should exist in their business, and that the Church of Christ should mingle with the world, and go down on her knees for a few sovereigns. Let them be faithful to God. "If the Lord be with us, who can be against us?" A chapel should be as free as the public-house. Men went in there in their dirty boots and clothes, sat down anywhere, and were welcome; and the people should be as welcome in the chapel as in the public-house. He concluded with an earnest appeal for workers for Christ.—Hampshire Telegraph.

ERRATUM.—In the article last week, "A Sad Story from India," for Farens read Karens. The address of the writer should have been, Miss E. Ford, Thorn-park-villa, Teignmouth, South Devon.

CORRECTION.—In our report of the Noon Meeting on Friday, 10th inst., it is stated that a young woman had been going to a Wesleyan class-meeting for five years without being spoken to about her soul. We are informed that what the speaker said was, that she had attended chapel for that time, not class, as it would have been impossible for anyone to attend class-meetings without being conversed with on the subject.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

LIFE AND WALK. Addresses by J. DENHAM SMITH. Hawkins.—Six addresses, by a well-known and highly-valued teacher of God's people. They are full of gospel truth, though not simply evangelistic in their intention. The loving spirit and flowing language of the speaker are easily to be recognized, and the book is fresh with the love and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

HOW THE LOST ARE SAVED. By JAMES BALFOUR, Edinburgh. Nisbet. Price One Penny.—Mr. Brownlow North commends this as "a very valuable little book, containing a plain, simple, yet forcible statement of God's way of salvation. We trust it may be widely circulated, for we believe it calculated to be exceedingly useful."

FROGER'S LITTLE BROTHER. By "BRENDA," Author of "Nothing to Nobody." Illustrated by C. A. S. Shaw.—A worthy successor to "Nothing to Nobody," which we noticed some two years since. There are passages that touch us as we read, almost like the Bible, and what wonder, since both have to do with the history of human souls, viewed from God's standpoint? The interest of the book is greatly enhanced by the sympathetic illustrations which turn up at any special crisis of feeling or fun. The book is well got up, and is fit for any drawing-room table, where it is calculated to enlist fresh interest in our neglected children.

THE WORK OF PREACHING CHRIST. By CHARLES PETTIT McILVAINE, D.D., D.C.L.—A grand little book, because it sticks so close to Scripture, and exhibits so clearly what is and what is not "fully to preach the gospel of Christ." We would like to see it in the hands of every evangelist and preacher, so much profit have we derived from it. The right balance or adjustment of truth, and the honouring of the Holy Ghost in the preaching of the gospel, are strongly urged, and the book ends with binding all the qualifications of a good preacher together with the girdle of love. "He will preach best who loves most." We cordially recommend it.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The thirtieth annual meeting of this Association was held on Tuesday evening, April 20, at Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. There was a good attendance, and among those on the platform were the Bishop of Melbourne, Mr. George Williams, the Rev. Gervase Smith, M.A., Sir John Kennaway, M.P., Mr. E. Smyth, M.P., Mr. A. McArthur, M.P., the Rev. W. B. Carpenter, M.A., the Rev. E. D. Wilson, Mr. W. E. Shipton, secretary, etc. The report stated that 129 members had been added to the mission body of the Association, making a total of 4723 members of Christian churches that had united themselves to the Association, with the view of associating themselves with the mission service of the institution. The work done by the Association had been large and varied, but it had been very expensive. The total expenditure had been £4421 2s. 8d.; but fortunately, having had a balance of £501 from the previous year, the balance on the wrong side this year was only £261. The report also referred to the formation at the Association's house of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, which already numbered 400 members. The chairman, in reply to a vote of thanks, said that he had always looked upon that Association, and all its branches and kindred institutions in different parts of the kingdom and America, as grand cities of refuge for the commercial life, individually and collectively, of the several nations, and as a place where young men coming from a distance, and removed from the parental cares and genial influences of home life, might find a shelter in which they might learn the way of salvation, and have courage and confidence to work after it. He could only pray from the very bottom of his heart that the blessing of God might rest upon it, and upon all Associations similar to it.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND HEAVEN.—III.

"THE gifts and calling of God are without repentance;" for "God is not a man that He should lie; neither the Son of man that He should repent; hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" Therefore having conferred dominion and a kingdom upon man when He created him, nothing can turn Him from the fulfilment of this, his eternal purpose. Accordingly, at each great crisis in human history, when man's rebellion has been punished—first, by the flood; secondly, by the confusion of tongues; thirdly, by the sending of Israel and Judah into captivity: God has always commenced the new era by the renewed gift of kingly rule and power unto man. And when the season and time during which the times of the Gentile Kingdoms are prolonged (Dan. vii. 12) shall have passed away, "the God of heaven will set up a Kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the Kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

When the kingdom committed to Nebuchadnezzar had descended to the Romans, and had declined in royal dignity from gold to iron, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of David, was born King of the Jews; and if King of the Jews, King of all mankind, because the seed of Abraham was chosen to be a Kingdom of priests ruling the world from Jerusalem, the metropolis and the joy of the whole earth.

This Kingdom of God and heaven, of which "the Son of man who is in heaven" (John iii.), is the eternal King, began to be preached by John the Baptist, and, after that John was put in prison, by Jesus Himself. But He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not; He came unto his own land, and his own people received Him not. Thus the establishment of the Kingdom was deferred in order that, in the wisdom of God, it might be set up, not in the flesh of the first creation, but in the glory of resurrection life. So says the apostle, "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him [so] no more."

This Kingdom of God is the sum and substance of the gospel, and the subject dwelt upon by the four Evangelists. Often have Bible students declared that the Gospels are the most difficult part of Scripture, and Matthew the most difficult of all. The reason is not far to find. The Evangelists write about the Kingdom, which John and Jesus both had preached, and Matthew's Gospel is specially above all the rest the Gospel of the Kingdom. But we have almost confined the gospel to the one element of substitution, and have eliminated from it its great glory, that it is the glad tidings of the Kingdom restored to man in the second Adam, of which Satan defrauded man in the first Adam. And therefore numerous passages in the Gospels are like square pegs for which our systems of theology and standards of doctrine only afford round holes, or, indeed, often no holes at all.

If a king had lost his throne and kingdom, and fallen into ruin and disgrace, and from some greater kingdom and some nobler king a message were sent professing to be good tidings of great joy to him, whatever else the good news contained, if it did not include the restoration of the lost dominion, it would leave the fallen monarch fallen still. He might be removed to another sphere, and honours and dignities of other kinds be heaped upon him, but if the actual dominion he had lost were not restored, the power by which he had been overcome would still boast over him, and the good tidings of great joy would leave one great wrong unredressed, and one great sorrow unrelieved.

When Adam fell, not only man, but the Kingdom over which man reigned, was lost to God; and if the Kingdom be not recovered, redemption is incomplete. Eternal life may be given instead of the life forfeited by sin, and earth may be exchanged for heaven; but if the dominion which man lost be not restored to man, either the mighty God has been to that extent defeated, or He who is, and was, and is to come, has been turned away from his eternal purpose.

But this cannot be, for He is the unlying God, with whom is no variableness nor shadow of turning. And inasmuch as the Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world, it is beyond question that the Ruin, and Redemption, and Regeneration of the Adam race of kings, was foreseen and provided for before man was made.

Satan, in seducing man, by that one act proclaimed war against God and man; alienated man from God; and attempted to alienate God from man. But in this last he failed. Man was alienated from God, but never God from man. Like a father bereaved of his children, God went through the groves of Paradise, crying after his lost ones, "Adam, where art thou?" and when He had found his guilty children, He put Himself on their side against the adversary, and interposed Himself between the tempter and the deceived ones, saying, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her Seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Interposed Himself, we say, because her Seed was the Seed of God; the Son of man is the Son of God.

God would not suffer Himself to be estranged from man. He links Himself with him by an eternal and indissoluble bond, and by his power directed by his wisdom, by his wisdom set in motion by his love, He makes man more than conqueror. (Rom. viii.) And in accomplishing this mighty victory, He spares Himself no sacrifice, not even his Son, his only Son, the Isaac (Heaven's joy and laughter), whom He loved. And the angels, and principalities, and powers, are thus, by means of the Church, made spectators of and instructed in the manifold wisdom of God.

So high that they are dreadful (Ezek. i. 18) are the wheels of human history, past, present, and to come! Man for a brief season serves God, and rules the whole creation, of which he is the head. He falls by disobedience, and loses the dominion with which he had been entrusted, and becomes the captive and slave of Satan. But in the fulness of time the Son of God is sent forth from the Father's bosom, and is made of a woman, that those who receive Him may receive the adoption of sons. He magnifies the law, and makes it honourable; undertakes to fulfil all righteousness; makes Himself answerable for all human sin; overcomes at his weakest the tempter in the fulness of his subtlety and strength; and, finally, makes expiation for and bears away the sin of the world. Thus having, as the Faithful Witness for the truth, been faithful unto death, He becomes the First-begotten from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth. Those who have received Him have received power to become sons of God; and if sons, then heirs, heirs of God, joint heirs with the Christ. These are the blessed and holy ones, who partake of the first resurrection; the saints, who possess the Kingdom; who reign with Christ a thousand years. Whether this be a literal period, or a symbolic one, we do not certainly know; but at its close, when the Son shall have subdued all things under his feet, then shall the end come of this great drama, and Christ, the second Adam, shall deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, and the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that did put all things under Him, that God—the Godhead, the Triune God—may be all in all. (Heb. ii.; 1 Cor. xv.)

And God is glorified by man, beyond all the glories that ever accrued to Him from all He ever made beside. The Kingdom lost to man and God, is recovered, by the operation of God through man, and is restored by man to God, with an infinite usury and increase of majesty and might, dominion and glory. And man, made of the dust of the ground, and defiled by the slime of the old serpent, but redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, transfigured by his exodus through death into resurrection life, and made partaker of the divine nature, is raised up, in union with Christ, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come. (Luke ix. 31, Gr.; Rom. vi. 3, 4; Col. iii. 1; 2 Pet. i. 4; Eph. i. 20, 21; ii. 6.)

Such, in briefest outline, is the Gospel of God; the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God; the Gospel of the grace of God; the Gospel of the Christ—Jesus and the Resurrection; Jesus is the Christ. It must be accepted or rejected by each individual of the human race, to whom it is made known. The repentance from God, and the faith toward Satan incarnate in the serpent, more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made and put in subjugation under man—must be exchanged for repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, God incarnate in our own nature. And the penalties attached to the rejection of the Gospel must be in proportion to the glory attached to its acceptance. When we understand the Gospel, we do not wonder that the Kingdom of which it speaks is likened to a field of tares and wheat, to a net which gathered of every sort. We expect that the angel-reapers should bind the tares in bundles to burn them; that while they gather the good into vessels, they cast the bad away. But oh, let every Christian tell the story everywhere; and let every one who heareth it receive the truth in the love of it, that he may be saved. M.

THE REV. D. LOWE, of Newcastle, announced lately from the pulpit, that a day of humiliation and prayer was to be held, to consider before God the awful prevalence of drunkenness in our land, and that in order the more effectually to deal with the most important, pressing, and saddening question, he had determined no longer to remain on the outskirts, but to join the army of total abstainers.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

ONE visitor is greatly joyed by the conversion of a man over eighty. At that great age it is hard for public preaching to be effective. A superintendent writes that two young men, the first time they went out, were used in the conversion of a soul. Another asks prayer for a bed-ridden widow unable to attend to her children, who believes she would be raised up if God's people would pray for her!

Then a remonstrance comes, because at one house the visitors merely left Mr. Moody's leaflet without a word, as the postman might. Possibly the printed instructions should have been plainer on this point. The little, brief leaflet of Mr. Moody was never written for such a purpose. Multitudes of the people in London are ready, and not a few actually waiting, to hear of Christ by the living voice, and will be disappointed unless the gospel is explained. Besides, by so serving a house some other visitors who would speak kindly to the inmates are kept away. In this very house there were twenty-five workpeople, and the proprietor was so disappointed that they lost their opportunity. Again, if the leaflet had been merely sent in to the aged man of eighty already referred to, what would have been the result? It needed the kind voice of the visitor patiently and slowly to pour the loving message into his ear. Let us not be in haste. If that sister has no other case, she may well rejoice over this aged man.

In another case, where the leaflet was merely left, a man was in his last illness; but one in whose Bible-class he was, went and spent a long time with him, dwelling on that text Mr. Moody so often uses—"hath everlasting life"—and the man professed to rest on his Saviour, and in peace departed.

In another house, the visitors were told by a lady that she had been praying for some one to be sent to her to explain the gospel, and she was led to trust in the Saviour there and then.

Let us pray, then, that not merely the leaflet may be left, but the message of God's love kindly explained with the living voice in every house where access is not withheld.

Now it is desired to finish all London, and the villages immediately surrounding London, within the next four weeks, ere Messrs. Moody and Sankey depart; but there are about 250 districts in London, and within fifteen miles, for which superintendents are still needed. Christian men and women who would undertake any of the districts, would be welcomed most heartily. They would, of course, have to be introduced and recommended by some one known to the Committee, and any inquiries should be made at 48, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

There are encouraging letters from earnest private Christians in the country, expressing a determination to carry out house-to-house visitation in their own towns or villages.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15). The going, then, has to be performed by the believers. Where are we to go? Everywhere. When we have gone, to whom have we to speak? To masters, servants, wives, or children? To every creature. May his people not only fill London, but all Britain, with this doctrine. MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

THE WORK AMONG THE YOUNG MEN.

The noon meeting on Thursday last was devoted to reports of this movement among the young men, chiefly in our large towns, and was of the deepest interest.

After Mr. Moody had given a sketch of the rise and present position of this part of the work, he related the following incident:—

Two nights ago, some young men were going up one of the streets in Islington, when a young man handed to them invitations to go to the meeting at St. Mary's Hall. They took the papers, tore them up, and scoffed at the young man who offered them the hand-bills. One of the number, as he went home, thought to himself, "That young man attempted to do me good," and he turned the matter over in his mind. He went into his room, told his brother, and they talked it over till past midnight. Then they went down on their knees, and cried to God for mercy. The night before last, they came to the Agricultural Hall, and in succession confessed that they had given themselves to Christ without having been at any of the meetings.

Mr. Moody then read the following letter he had just received:—

"Dear Mr. Moody,—Our hearts are broken down with joy at a letter to-day from my dear brother. He has written mamma that he has accepted Christ at your meeting. Mamma could not read the letter, nor could I finish it hardly for crying. We are so thankful and grateful to God that our dear brother at last has got into the way of life. Papa will get the joyful news when he comes in from business to-day."

Is it not glorious, said Mr. Moody, to get such letters—the mother away in Scotland, in prayer for the conversion of her boy. What a blessing to the world it would be if the hundreds of young men in London who have praying mothers, were brought to Christ! Let us plead for the young men of London.

Mr. Sankey said he had lately met a young man converted at one of the Glasgow meetings, and another at Carlisle, and both of them had since been working for the Master. Last night, at the Opera House, a young man belonging to a very aristocratic and wealthy family in the West-end, who had found Christ about a week ago, at the Agricultural Hall, came up to him and said, "Is there not something I can do for the Master? At our home it is dinner parties evening after evening, friends coming in talking about all kinds of worldly things, and I am quite tired of it. I liked it once, but now it seems so hollow. What about the South side? Is there not some work I could do there? There is to be a hall there, and I would like to be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord." I told him we would get him a berth there, and was delighted to see one of the leading young men of your city willing to go to work, and try to bring others to Christ. Would to God there were ten thousand young men in London who would stand up for Him who bore our load of guilt on the cross!

A clergyman gave a very gratifying account of a revived work among the young men in one of the southern districts of London. In the course of the past two years, where formerly there were units, there were now tens who were at work in the vineyard of the Lord.

Mr. Coote, of Cambridge, related a remarkable incident that happened on the preceding Sunday, in connection with the special services being held there. A Christian worker went out before one of the meetings, and handed an invitation to a wild-looking fellow. At first he refused to go in, but he was ultimately induced to go. A story told about a neglected Bible went home to his heart, and he wept, entirely broken down. He stayed to the inquiry-meeting, and there told his story. Ten years ago he left his home, where he had a praying father, and mother, and sister. For years he kept a menagerie, until an accident prevented him, and he was now going about singing at public-houses. He took a Testament, and went away. He came to the united prayer-meeting in the evening, where he was rejoicing in Christ. The words, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved," had brought light to his mind.

When asked what he would do, he said, "I will go home to-morrow morning; I will work my way to Manchester, where my parents live." We could not allow him to work his way home, so we found him a lodging for the night, and started him off by the first train on Monday morning. A letter was written to his parents, to say that their son was converted, and asking his father to meet him at the station. I hold in my hand (said the speaker) a letter received from that young man on his arrival at home. It is beautifully expressed, and shows how he worked for the Master on the first day he went away.

Mr. Coote then read the following extracts from the letter, the perusal of which, we feel sure, will rejoice the hearts of our readers:—

"I have arrived home in perfect safety, but not without temptations on the road. I did not go via Peterborough, as I wished to avoid seeing so many old acquaintances there, who would have been anxious for me to have a drink with them; so I went by Bletchley, where I had to change, and wait a little time; and while so doing, I encountered an old companion, a clown in a circus, who tried hard to persuade me to forfeit my ticket, and go with him to a place near by. The old enemy said, 'Go;' but a new-found Saviour said, 'Keep on your journey.' So I told him I had started a new life, related the circumstances, and advised him to do likewise, and left him.

"I was interested, during the journey from Bletchley to Rugby, by a conversation among my fellow-travellers about the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and all similar efforts, one gentleman contending that it was all a sham, and doing no good. They talked for a while, and then I told them my experience of yesterday, my past life, and my intentions for the future, when all but the sceptical gentleman wished me success, but he laughed at my simplicity, as he called it. But I think I have the laugh on my side, and, with God's help, intend upholding the banner of Jesus, so freshly taken up by me. Thank God, I feel happy in his love!

"My father met me at the Manchester station—oh, such a meeting! And when I reached home—I cannot describe it—Mother and sister in tears of joy; and God was thanked for his answer to their many prayers, and for the prodigal's return. I never felt so happy in my life. I can now fully realize his full forgiveness. I am so very glad I came home at once, as my parents are removing at the latter end of this week. They are not in such good circumstances as they were when I left home ten years ago.

"I spent the greater part of last night in thanking God for his great mercy in snatching me as a brand from the burning, and sending me back to my sorrowing parents, to fill their hearts with joy and gladness. I feel such a continual happiness, that I cannot express my feelings. Will you pray that God will keep me steadfast, and that apparent difficulties may prove no stumbling-block to me on my way to the better land?"

Mr. Henry Drummond said he wished to say a word or two to the fathers, mothers, and sisters in the audience. At the last young men's meeting in Liverpool he attended, after a young man had stood up, and told of his conversion, an old man rose and wished to speak. Although the meeting was usually confined to young men, the chairman did not attempt to stop him, and he said, "Young men, that one who has just sat down is my son! I thank God I have seen him get up to-night and confess he is a Christian. He is the eldest of four brothers, all of whom have found Christ within the last three weeks at these meetings. I have been praying for it for the last fifteen years."

There is an instance of the way in which these young men's meetings bear upon the Christian fathers of this country. Let me give you one more, to show how they affect the Christian mothers and wives. These meetings are simply the history of answered prayer. I have had the privilege of speaking to many at these meetings, and when I have asked the question, "Have you got a praying mother?" the answer in ninety-nine times out of a hundred has been "Yes, I have." The other night, at the Agricultural Hall, at the close of the meeting, I was looking round to see and get hold of some work. I saw a respectably-dressed man standing away at the back. I went to him and said, "Are you a Christian worker?" "No." "Don't you think you ought to be?" "I am not a Christian yet," he said. We sat down together, and he told me his story:

"On Wednesday last I buried my wife. I married her a few years ago on the understanding that I was a Christian, but I was not. All these years she tried to lead me to Christ, but she failed, and it broke her heart. On Wednesday last I laid her in the grave. As she lay dying she said to me, 'My life has been lost; the purpose for which I have lived has been lost, and my life has failed.' I said to her, 'My dear wife, I will meet you in heaven.' She held out her hand to me and said, 'Then my work is done,' and she died. These words have been ringing in my ears ever since—'My work is done!'"

The man broke into a flood of tears. I said to him, "Don't you remember that these were almost the last words of Jesus Christ, 'It is finished—my work is done'?" Don't you see He has done it all, if you will only trust Him?" The man get hold of that there and then, and went home humbly trusting in Christ. God had made a great gap in his life by taking away his wife, but now he found peace in trusting Christ. And some of you may have heard him get up the other night in our young men's meeting and tell the story himself. My dear friends, I would ask your earnest prayers for these meetings. I believe that in London we will have a far greater work than in any of the other large towns where we have been. The work has broken out in real earnest in the East-end. Last night, at the meeting, we had the testimony of a converted Christy Minstrel, a converted sceptic, and several others. What we want is to get the fathers and mothers to pray, and I believe God is waiting to bless the work.

We have given this lengthened statement of the testimony given respecting the young men at this noon meeting, because of the vast importance of the subject, and we would fain re-echo Mr. Drummond's expression of faith that the movement in London is to exceed even that in Liverpool, where the results have been such as to astonish the most sanguine. Truly the harvest is plenteous.

BY MRS. BARBOUR.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND.

It is a week to-night since we came, and half-an-hour after went to the area of the Opera House, and saw one soul at least set at rest in Jesus. A good many were being conversed with. Next morning the daylight showed us how near we were to the great new centre of work. Opposite our window hung over the colonnade, a large orange-coloured placard, with the well-known names, in black letters, of preacher and singer, and below them the words, "Services daily."

The week has revolved to prove that London is daily becoming more enveloped by the cloud of blessing. The children of God are willing to be like Gideon's fleece, and have their souls filled and saturated with heaven's dew. The Holy Ghost is honoured.

"I cannot," said a young lady, the day before yesterday, "understand what is the use of the Holy Ghost in the Christian's religion."

She had been brought up among atheists, and was with curiosity spelling out the alphabet of the faith.

"I can see the meaning of the Father, and why there should be the Son to bring us to Him; but what would be the meaning of the Holy Ghost?"

Perhaps next time she goes to the Opera House she will learn that his almighty power is even now beginning to deal with her darkened heart.

"I never heard more trash spoken," said a man of letters, who is a sceptic, "than that man Moody speaks. He is not fit for educated men to listen to; in fact, I could not listen."

And yet, as his patient friend encouraged him to continue the conversation sentence by sentence, a good part of Mr. Moody's address was reproduced, showing that memory kept well-nigh the whole.

But, to take the days of the week in their order, I must go back to the first noon meeting. These precious days of the fortnight to be spent in London are hoarded like fifteen pieces of most fine gold. Each morning when we awake, we count one more piece into the past, and yet cannot be sorry to part with it, for each day goes away laden with memories that must ever live.

I do not know if any of the papers have told of Mr. Aitken's address that first Saturday morning. Mr. Matheson presided. It was, as it were, a paraphrase of Zech. ix. 13-17, "Ephraim and Judah were always at variance;" so too much have been the denominations of Christians. Think of the Lord making his bow of Judah. A hard thing to bend Judah for his use. Not only this, but He fills the bow with Ephraim—makes the two who stood apart to be closely one, as his instrument of work, so that the one were useless without the other. He will do it in London before our eyes. See, He speaks of raising up thy sons, O Zion, despised and few, and sending them right into the midst of the sons of Greece, in all their worldly wisdom! He uses the worms to thrash the mountain still. We shall see it in London, and the united Church, casting her differences away, shall advance upon men for their salvation, and the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning (read following verses). "Every word was fraught with the power of the Holy Ghost."

The prayers that followed were bringing answers down, and the meeting, small though it was, dispersed with the conviction that those who had offered the petitions had the results already by faith in their hearts.

At night Mr. Moody preached from "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," and there were many inquirers.

Believers never meet but to record the goodness of the Lord. Now the news comes of a whole family converted; then of one youthful member of a careless circle being the first to yield his heart to God; then it is the majority of the servants in a large household who are coming to Jesus. Last night a young man had no sooner decided for God, than in half-an-hour he was bending over an inquirer, while he remarked to the experienced labourer who had just before pointed him to the Lamb of God, "My heart is burning to lead sinners to Him." Many aged gentlemen have been found in the inquiry-rooms.

I could write pages to describe that magnificent Opera House, with its teeming mass of worshippers, anxious souls, and still light-hearted hearers, and the Agricultural Hall, with its vast multitude, over which the eye must wander to take it in. But language yields to silence as we realize that it is the footstep of the angel of the Lord's hosts which is planted in the one and in the other, while in the far East of London his arm is made bare for salvation.

Perhaps there is not a house where the voice of testimony is lifted up without fruit appearing, but it will take weeks to show the extent of what even now is already done.

AGRICULTURAL HALL.

The precious seasons of refreshing and revival from the presence of the Lord, in this building, are drawing to a close, so far as the ministrations of our dear American brethren are concerned. But we would fain believe the stream of blessing in the north will not be stayed by their departure. If God's people are united in the prosecution of the work, we shall look for greater things yet than our eyes have seen.

On Thursday and Friday last, Messrs. Moody and Sankey held their last week evening services in this hall, to mixed audiences. On Friday next there will be a young men's service, and on Sunday next their closing Sunday services will take place. We suppose it was not generally known that the meetings on Thursday and Friday were the last to be held on week evenings, as the hall, though well filled on both occasions, was not so crowded as we have seen it on nights past. On both evenings, however, the power of God was manifestly at work both through the preacher and the singer. Mr. Sankey, we think, has never sung better or more effectively in this immense hall than on these evenings last week, when he told out the old, old stories of "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," "The ninety and nine," etc. Surely the echoes of his marvellous voice will ring through many a heart long after he has returned to his native shores!

Mr. Moody spoke on Thursday evening on "Trust"—his favourite synonym for "Believe." With that passionate fervour and urgency that seems part of his nature when he speaks as an ambassador for Christ, he besought his audience to put their trust in the One who is mighty to save, and at the close, his repeated question, "Who will trust Christ to-night?" evoked loud shouts of "I will!" from many parts of the building, in voices both strong and gentle. Every Christ-loving heart must have responded "Amen." It was a most suitable word for sinners, saved and unsaved alike.

The Friday evening address was on the word "Behold," and though not, perhaps, so generally effective as that of the evening before, the word was clearly in the demonstration of the Spirit and in power, and numbers were moved by it to stay to the inquiry-meeting at the close.

A most interesting and refreshing meeting for thanksgiving was held in the hall on Sunday evening, when there was an audience present that about half filled the area of the building. Mr. W. T. Paton most happily presided, and his threefold reason for thanksgiving to God—the salvation of souls, the quickening of Christian life, and the manifested spirit of Christian unity among the different churches—found expression in the subsequent exercises of the evening. In the language of Mr. Sawday, who offered the closing prayer, words seemed too feeble to utter the overflowing desires of grateful hearts. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

VICTORIA THEATRE.

Showers of blessing are beginning to fall on South London. We have before reported that pioneer work had commenced with the labours of the Rev. W. Taylor, of California; and now that he has been called away to labour in another portion of the Lord's vineyard, others have entered into his labours.

On Saturday last, a preliminary service was held in anticipation of special work on the following day, when there was a large attendance to hear faithful words from Mr. Henry Drummond, whom, with other devoted evangelists, Mr. Moody has requested to conduct the services during the present week.

On Sunday afternoon there was another large gathering, and in the evening there was the largest attendance which has yet taken place. All but the upper gallery was full. The meeting was a very solemn one, and there were more inquirers than workers to speak with them.

While there is much cause for thankfulness for the help already rendered by Christian friends, it is needful that more workers should come forward to the help of the Lord against the mighty in this mission-field, for it is white already to harvest. Christians who can also render service in the choir will be cordially welcomed.

A mid-day prayer-meeting was held yesterday, at which an address was delivered by the Rev. W. Wilson, of South Lambeth. Mr. Moody has promised to attend on Wednesday, May 5.

MR. SANKEY'S SOUTH LONDON CHOIR.

Application by letter should be made at once, stating name, address, voice, and name of minister, to the Secretary, Victoria Theatre, or Camberwell Hall, S.W.

ACTON.—A Conference of Christians was held in the Assembly-rooms, Acton, on Tuesday, April 13, when A. Gliddon, Esq., of London, presided. Special united prayer-meetings have been held every evening since in the same place; and, in consequence of the large number attending them, an overflow meeting was commenced at the Lecture-hall on Tuesday, April 20, and it is believed these meetings have been blessed to many. Arrangements have also been made for holding gospel meetings for a fortnight, both at the Assembly-rooms and Lecture-hall, commencing Monday, April 26.

SUNDAY LAST AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The meetings at the Opera House last Lord's-day did not suffer very much as to numbers through the absence of our brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The audience in the early morning quite delighted us, so many were the gathered Christian-worker hearers, and nothing could have been more appropriate than Mr. Aitken's discourse from the review of the times of Amos. A most salutary lesson to all the Christian workers was given with much power and unction of the Holy One.

The audience became increased in volume, at three o'clock, and was more varied than at the morning meeting. As the hours of the glad day grew from morn to the time for the afternoon meeting, so increased the vigour and holy boldness of the speaker. It was a treat to sit and hear the masterly sermon given at this time, on the subject of the blind man, in John ix. It was an eloquent address on the power of the gospel, and the part we should all take in obeying the call of Heaven in owning and confessing Jesus and his saving grace. All the popular scoffs, and unreasonable objections notwithstanding, the after-meeting gave witness to some most interesting cases. How many were pricked in their hearts it was impossible to say, but that many were smitten with the Spirit's arrow cannot be doubted. The bold and fearless denunciations of mere "professional service" went straight to the conviction of the Christian hearer.

At the night meeting, at eight p.m., the house was all but overcrowded. The condition of the fool in Psa. xiv., and all his brethren in sin to-day, was made the starting-point for a most telling discourse from that psalm. The response to the invitation to young men to meet Mr. Aitken and others in the adjoining room, and the number of persons remaining to the after-meeting, was good to see.

Altogether, the day was a day of power, peace, and blessing to many. The ministrations of Mr. Aitken are such as may be left in the Spirit's hands for widespread blessing, with faith and abundant hope of ripening fruit.

THE WORK IN EAST LONDON.

FROM REV. T. RICHARDSON.

Mr. Moody took up the work at the Bow-road Hall on Tuesday evening, April 27, and although the hour was seven o'clock yet the Hall was well filled. The text selected was, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" (Acts xvi. 30.) Mr. Moody never seemed so much at ease in the East, and there was a marked unction throughout, and immediately an invitation was given both inquiry-rooms, one for men and one for women, were crowded, and many were obliged to be passed into the platform gallery.

Again on Wednesday night Mr. Moody spoke upon, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near" (Isa. lv. 6), and the word was with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Nearly the whole of the audience stayed some portion of the after-meeting, and the inquiry-rooms were again crowded in a few minutes, and the whole of the platform gallery, with the anxious.

These were just the fruits one might expect to be gathered by such an experienced soul-seeker, after the striking and deep-searching ministry of the Rev. W. H. Aitken.

On Thursday evening the Rev. Donald Fraser spoke upon the Syrian Leper, when another address of marvellous simplicity was given to those attending. The audience was not so large as usual, owing in some degree, no doubt, to the fact that the large posters announcing the services of Thursday and Friday had been barred by some enemy during Wednesday night with a printed sentence—"These services postponed." Even one of the stewards had determined not to attend till finding, on inquiry, that it was the work of some opponent.

FROM MRS. CHARLESWORTH.

We have been praying through the winter at our prayer-meetings for showers of blessing on London, and especially for our own East-end. And now the Lord is filling our hearts with praise, as we see each week richer and fuller blessing in the conversion of souls.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are by this time familiar with the Bow-road Hall, a building admirably fitted for the special purpose for which it was erected, its walls covered with gospel invitations, and so arranged that all can see, and for the most part hear well. They have pictured the crowded meetings, the rush of eager listeners gathering two hours before the meetings begin, and through the graphic weekly accounts, they can almost fancy they hear the burning words and earnest appeals of the speaker, and watch the eager, upturned faces hanging on his utterance, listening breathlessly, or melted to tears by his thrilling anecdotes or tender persuasions to turn now to Christ; but none but an eye-witness, and one who stays behind and goes to the inquiry-room, and speaks with the awakened souls, can realize how truly the power of the Spirit is present in these meetings to convince of sin and to draw souls to Christ. No mere human words, no eloquence or zeal, however fervent, could thus work on the souls of men.

Perhaps the meetings which we feel the most heart-stirring, are the eight o'clock

MEETINGS FOR WORKERS ON SUNDAY MORNING.

Our East-end people are not generally very early risers on this day; they work hard and late through the week, and are late on Saturday night; and it is a general experience that our Sunday schools are thinly attended in the morning. It is therefore the more remarkable to see the thousands who assemble at that early hour in the Bow-road Hall, and we who live near can bear witness that the congregation is mostly a local one; in all directions we see the people of our own congregations, Bible classes, and meetings, scattered over the area and galleries, their faces bright with joy and praise; and then we hear their testimony afterwards, that this meeting is such a blessing to them, and such a help through the day.

I suppose the thousands who gather there on Sunday (and the large hall, which seats 9000, is nearly full) must be mostly the Lord's own people—this can be seen in their faces—and probably really workers. It is a wonderful sight to see the thousands thronging the Burdett-road, generally so quiet in the stillness of the Sabbath morning, and it was remarked to me by a working-man after one of these meetings, that though thousands were walking, and some probably a long distance, the tram-car went down the road with only three people in it, and those, it was thought, had not come from the hall; and though men and boys were offering hymn-books for sale, hardly one was bought. Our working people in East London know how to prize the holy rest of the Lord's-day; and they have learnt to remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy.

The singing, sweet and heavenly as it is, is not the chief attraction at the meetings, for I noticed, after Mr. Moody's address, and while Mr. Sankey's thrilling notes were ringing through the building, quite a stream of people were leaving the hall, probably hastening to be in time for their different Sunday-schools, or perhaps returning to a more distant home for their morning meal before going to their place of worship. These Sunday morning meetings are a precious privilege for all of us who could not leave our own places of worship through the later hour of the Lord's-day, and Mr. Moody speaks with special power to believers, and looks himself on these meetings as the most important. Surely many of the Lord's dear children will here get fresh life and power, and have their lips touched with a burning coal from the Lord's altar, thus becoming centres of life in their different spheres of work.

THE DAILY PRAYER-MEETING

is at present but small in attendance. We don't wonder at this; our population are too much engaged in work to be generally able to give the time, but the meeting is full of life, and is marked by many requests for prayer for the unsaved, and by praise for spiritual blessings received. I noticed these four yesterday among others:—"A widow asks for praise whose eldest son has been converted in this hall." "The teacher of a young women's Bible-class asks for praise for several members of her class converted in this hall." "A Sunday-school teacher praises God for members of her Sunday-school class converted here." "Praise for a prayer-meeting in South London which numbered only six, and now is increased to sixty or seventy."

after the evening meetings will never be forgotten by those whose privilege it is to work there, and point the many anxious troubled souls to Jesus. These rooms are thronged with inquirers, and not only the rooms set apart, but all about the hall and galleries, may be found those whose hearts are stricken by the power of God's Spirit, for the most part willing and anxious for the help of God's children, though often so deeply bowed down with the first sight of their own lost state that they cannot be comforted, though in such cases they will generally go on attending the meetings, and we believe will not rest till they find Christ. Souls may be then seen in many different conditions—some quite ignorant, and only just awakening, others who have been professors for many years, and have been well instructed, but who have found, there for the first time, that they have never come as lost sinners to the blood of Jesus; others with special doubts and difficulties.

May the Lord give wisdom to all his children who are trying to help those who are seeking. If we did not know that He can use the weakest for his glory, we might indeed fear lest our poor words should hinder rather than help; but I am sure we must feel how powerless we are, and that the Spirit of God, who has wounded, alone can reveal Jesus to bind up the wound. Still He does use his people to pour in the oil and wine, and it is a joy to see the peace and rejoicing of those who have got a first sight of the pardoning love of Jesus. It was my privilege to see three or four go away praising God the other evening. One of them had been long an outward professor, and from her position likely to be made a blessing to many. Another had been long anxious, while one dear girl said she had never thought of such things till that evening, but she seemed able to lay hold of the simple message of salvation, and to see that Jesus was willing to receive her and make her his that night. Where it is possible, the awakened souls are directed by their own ministers; but many come from a long distance, and can only be advised to go to their pastors or teachers, and tell them the blessing they have found.

We can each judge best of the reality of the work as we see its effects upon individuals among our own people, and I can speak with thankfulness of instances of spiritual life among members of my own class. At one mission-house, we have kept on our usual evening classes and prayer-meetings, for while encouraging our people to go as much as possible to the Bow-road Hall, we knew all could not get in every night, and expected we should get some droppings of blessing from the work going on; and so it has proved, though the numbers have been smaller, the meetings have been full of life, and earnest pleading for souls. Some of our dear Christian working-men have each singled out some unconverted fellow-workman or friend, have asked special prayer for that one, have taken him to the great meetings at the hall, and have been by his side ready to take the first opportunity to press home the truth; and they have had the joy of thus gleaming by the Lord's side in the great harvest-field; and with what joy they introduce them, when brought to the Lord, to their own prayer-meeting or Bible class. Several of our dear girls, attending our young women's classes, have gone with their teacher to the hall, and have, we believe, truly given their hearts to the Lord; indeed, we have hardly a meeting where we do not have some token of the blessing going on. It is a time of solemn responsibility; may all God's children awake and come to the Lord's help against the mighty, and may none of us be found sleeping in harvest, lest we be sons that cause shame. (Prov. x. 5.)

Limehouse Rectory, E.

Several young men have set to work in earnest in the tent in the East-end. On Sunday week it was indeed a pleasing sight to see about 600 of the very poor seated, many of them only half-clad, and forty of these young Christian workers waiting on them with a substantial tea, after which the gospel was preached to them by the Right Hon. Cowper Temple, Mr. Grattan Guinness, and Mr. J. Jones. The expenses are about £30 per week, and these young men have been able to raise that amount weekly among themselves and friends up to the present time. The tent and seats cost £10 per week for hire; but if the purchase money, viz.,

£125, is paid within six weeks, no hire will be charged. We hope this sum will be at once provided, and we shall be happy to receive contributions for it.

NOON MEETINGS, HAYMARKET.

TUESDAY, APRIL 27TH.

This hour was devoted to reports, in continuation of the day before, when the time was too short to tell of what the Lord is doing.

After singing "One more day's work for Jesus," Mr. Moody read and commented briefly on the 146th Psalm—a Psalm of praise.

After singing that grand anthem of praise,

"Oh happy day, that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God!"

Rev. Lemuel Jones, of Macombe, Illinois, spoke. He said the people of America were praying for London more than ever they had prayed before, except, perhaps, during the time of their war. He hoped there would be such a blessing in London as would extend over all the world.

Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, gave a sketch of the effects of the work there on different classes of people. He mentioned the case of a sick girl, who sang in the midst of her fever "The Gates Ajar." Her little sister Bessie, three years old, scarce able to frame the words, could just join in the chorus, "For me, for me." She, too, was laid on the bed of fever, and in her dying moments was heard to whisper, "For me, for me; in Jesus for me."

Rev. W. Taylor, of California, said that, while he had a profound interest in this movement, and felt thankful for the success that had attended it, he had not heard a word about poor India since he came to London; and he wished to remind the meeting of that country, and what God was doing there. His heart was very much in India, and he did not know but it would carry him off back there some day suddenly. An old missionary, who had been working there for more than thirty years, wrote to him the other day, asking the people of London to set apart one day to pray for India, with its 240 millions of souls, locked up there in heathenism.

"This is not a prayer-day," said Mr. Taylor, "but a praise-day; let me give you something to thank God for about India. He has got some grand and glorious missionaries there, and others who have been brought to Christ, but the great mass of the people called Christians—Europeans, East Indians, and others—have scandalized and misrepresented the name of Jesus. Within the last three years, God has taken hold of this community, and raised up indigenous churches, composed of Europeans, East Indians, Hindoos, Parsees, and Mohammedans, all in a common fraternity. There are now eighteen evangelists and pastors, and 1300 newly converted workers, who go out and do more than 5000 miles travelling, in order to visit these different posts. The churches are self-supporting. Some of these men whose money was monopolized by Satan, and who were antagonists to the missionaries, after their conversion have furnished resources out of which the Church of God is supported.

The conversion of Hindoos there is a matter of great rejoicing. One man gave up a fortune to receive Christ. Afterwards I heard him say, "Thank God, I have received Christ and salvation, and I wouldn't give Him up for ten thousand worlds." Poor fellow! He was smashed in the street when preaching by the mob; they stamped upon his face, and left him for dead. A Brahmin who knew him, and admired his consistency of life, took him and carried him out of the mud, and washed him. When he came to himself, he said, "Oh, thank God, for the privilege of dying for Jesus!" He found it his highest and happiest privilege to be permitted to die for Jesus. The Lord brought him round, and now eight of his countrymen have been converted to God and baptized. There are about sixty converted Hindoos and Parsees in Bombay alone. We want to thank God for this kind of thing.

Rev. J. Foulkes, of Liverpool, remarked upon one feature of the work there, viz., that many who had been professing Christians for years, had, during the recent meetings, for the first time realized Christ as their Saviour. He gave one or two notable instances.

A clergyman reported on a good work going on in the south of France, and at the naval stations on the Mediterranean.

After Rev. T. H. Morgan had quoted and commented on Malachi iii. 16,

Mr. Paton read a letter received from Cambridge, telling the good news of a revival there. They were very anxious to have a visit from Messrs. Moody and Sankey, but failing that, they had set to work themselves, and God was blessing the effort abundantly.

Mr. Moody closed the service with a short but very importunate prayer for God's blessing on the work in India, Germany, Switzerland, Russia, and at home. The interesting proceedings might be summed up in the words, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

WEDNESDAY, 28TH.

Mr. Graham, in reading the requests for prayer, regretted that they were obliged to condense them, on account of their being so numerous. Those who send them in, he said, ought to be consoled with the belief that however their letters might be thrown aside or torn up here, there was no waste-basket in the Father's house above. There were a considerable number of requests for those who are victims of intemperance, this being the day specially set apart to pray for the salvation of such persons.

After prayer specially suitable to the occasion,

Rev. W. H. Aitken read part of Mark xix. The true view to take of these cases of demoniacal possession was that at that time, when the power and beauty of God were manifested in Christ, God permitted Satan's power to be manifested too. Such possessions were not quite gone in these days. The case of the drunkard was one that brought home to us what Satan could do with a man when he is able to lead him captive at his will. No cases were more difficult to deal with. We had to say it very often, but all things are possible to him that believeth. Mr. Aitken quoted the case of a debauched drunkard in his own congregation who laid hold of Christ on the last Sunday Mr. Moody was in Liverpool. Referring to the words of our Lord that "this kind comes not forth by prayer and fasting," Mr. Aitken said he believed the weapon God called on Christians to use were faith, prayer, and fasting. Other means were laudable enough, but this was incumbent on all disciples of Christ. He pictured the unspeakably wretched state of the drunkard, and said it was only the manifestation of the devil's power that was at work in every unsaved heart, though it might not be visible.

Silent prayer was offered for the drunkards of London, and Mr. Moody followed in earnest petition that this curse might be removed from our midst.

A gentleman in the first gallery told a sad story of a lady in good position who was a helpless victim to strong drink, her husband having died of a broken heart. He strongly deprecated a custom which produced such terrible results, and prayed subsequently that Christians might be taught to relinquish the use of strong drink.

Mr. Sankey sang a temperance hymn—the story of a mother, who, with her child, had to fly from her drunken husband. In her efforts to preserve her babe from the cold, she perished herself, and was found in this condition by the husband in the morning. Mr. Sankey's rendering of it was in chant form, and was most pathetic and thrilling.

When he had ceased, Rev. W. Taylor prayed that Christians might be impressed with the fact that drunkards graduated in the school of moderate drinkers, and that for the good of others they might decline to be teachers in this school.

Mr. Moody did not make any remarks on the subject of the hour, though he does not, as a rule, shrink from expressing himself very decidedly in opposition to the drink, and the drinking customs of the day. He closed the meeting with the benediction.

THURSDAY, 29TH.

"Sweet hour of prayer," sung with a quiet heartiness, was a fitting commencement to the exercises that followed.

As the requests were about to be read, Mr. Moody said, "Let us all pray; we want more prayer at this meeting. After the requests are read, let two or three brethren pray shortly. We want to have about twenty or thirty pray in the course of the hour."

The requests included thirty-six for drunkards; "for a minister of the gospel, that he may himself know the gospel which he ignorantly preaches to others;" "for two other clergymen, who do not know the truth;" "for one who has been in incessant pain for fifteen years." Seven requests for praise were offered.

After prayer, and "Jesu, Lover of my soul," Mr. Moody read the story of Pentecostal blessing, in Acts ii.

The Spirit of God at that day fell on all classes. One of the most difficult classes to reach was the young men. During the past twelve months there had been better success among them than any other class. In years past, men have been afraid of the future of the Church, but God is reaching the young men throughout the kingdom. "Today I want to ask the Christians here to pray for the young men of London."

Mr. Moody gave a stirring account of the work amongst that class in Scotland and Ireland, and also referred to the work that has been begun in the North of London. In another column we give some incidents he told, as well as others that followed. He closed with a fervent appeal for prayer on behalf of the young men, and himself led the meeting in prayer.

At the close of the testimony respecting the work among young men, Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, earnestly prayed that it might extend.

Mr. Moody said, while we were praying for young men, he might mention that, at the meeting in the Opera House last night, he noticed an old man on his knees. He went and talked to him for some time, and he believed light broke into the man's soul. He asked how old he was, to which he replied that he was seventy. The thought came into his mind that, though this old man was converted, his life was really gone; whereas, if a young man is converted, his whole life could be devoted to Christ. It was therefore very important to reach the young men. The next one he spoke to, the night before, was brought to him by a young convert, and was deaf and dumb. He was somewhat embarrassed to know how to act, but then the thought came that God would hear his prayer, even if the young man could not; and if he were converted, this deaf and dumb young man was worth more than the old man.

He announced that, at the noon meeting next day, "Our Children" would be the subject, and requested parents whose children had been converted to send in requests for praise.

FRIDAY, 30TH.

After preliminary exercises and the requests for prayer,

Mr. Moody read the 84th Psalm. He said the subject of the day was, "Our Children." He liked that eleventh verse of this psalm, "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." Surely it would be a good thing to have all the children brought to Christ. "The promise is to you and your children." He told a very interesting story of a young sailor in Chicago who, after his conversion, and while he was endeavouring to find out his mother in Scotland, read this psalm, and was encouraged to believe by this eleventh verse that God would reveal to him where his mother was. He was prompted to write to his former master in Massachusetts, and received back a letter from his mother which had been waiting for him seven years. He took his mother and two sisters out to Chicago, and they were now as happy and useful a family as there was in the city.

Mr. Hurditch gave an instance of strong faith on the part of a woman in Liverpool as to the return of her wandering boy—she pleaded the all-prevailing name of Jesus.

A gentleman on the platform prayed most fervently for his five sons and four daughters.

Dr. Ellis spoke of the responsibility of parents in walking blamelessly at home as well as praying for the conversion of their children.

Dr. Cairns, of Berwick, testified of much blessing received in these revival times by Christian fathers from their fidelity with respect to their children, and gave some remarkable answers to prayer. He made an earnest appeal to London ministers to rally around this movement, and entreated them not to lose this opportunity of coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty. We would commend this advice from one of tried experience and high Christian attainments, to any of his London brethren who have not yet thrown their energies and sympathies into this gracious work.

Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Newington, Edinburgh, followed in prayer, after which

Mr. Moody told of the lady in London who went to Dundee with her boys, where they were converted. He read a letter from her, stating that she and her husband had laid themselves out to bring nightly some unconverted friend to the special meetings, and without a single exception those friends whom they had taken there had been led to accept Christ as their present Saviour. What a blessed work! exclaimed Mr. Moody. Are there not hundreds who could go and do likewise?

SATURDAY, MAY 1ST.

It was announced by Mr. Moody the day before, but not generally made known, that the noon meeting this day would be specially for the children, and conducted by the Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Newington, Edinburgh, who has had great success in connection with meetings for children. The limited announcement, and the wet nature of the day, resulted in a very small gathering, but the service was, nevertheless, a most instructive and pleasant one. We are afraid Mr. Robertson's naturally weak voice did not reach those at the outskirts of the meeting, and next Saturday, when there will be a children's service in the same place, at three o'clock, we trust Mr. Robertson will speak from the rail in front of the platform, and not from the dais usually occupied by Mr. Moody.

In the column specially devoted to the young, our readers will find a condensed report of Mr. Robertson's delightful and suitable address. Here we only give his introductory remarks, which were more addressed to parents. He said:—

"It was a handful of tender grass for the lambs I was requested to bring, but I wish to drop a hint just now to my elder friends—the fathers and mothers who have come along with the children. It is this, that I am meeting in Edinburgh, and other places, not a few silvery-haired, old Christians, who say, 'Do you know we wish we were young again in these Christ-seeking and Christ-finding times; we wish we were passing through our childhood.' The Holy Spirit has been anointing the eyes of many young people in Scotland with his own eye salve, and our young people have been seeing visions of a full Christ for empty sinners. Not a few parents have told me about their own boys and girls coming home from such meetings as are being held here, and with streaming eyes saying, 'Oh, there is beauty in Jesus that we should desire Him.'

"Do you know, I confess to you parents to a very guilty misgiving as to early conversion, under which I long laboured. A great change has occurred in my convictions on that point during the last twelve months. I am persuaded that the little children may become ardent lovers of the Saviour at a far earlier age than we have been accustomed to think. A child can know and trust the love of Jesus as soon as it can trust its mother's love. The gate is not so strait for them. I have sometimes noticed, when we were on our Sabbath-school excursions in the country, that when we came to a paling, the teachers had to make a great leap to get over, while the little ones were through between the bars, and away far before us. Jesus suits the wants of those little ones who believe in Him.

"Do not treat early piety with suspicion. Do not think it a youthful fancy that will soon die away. It is a very tender bud; do not brush it hard."

Mr. Robertson then presented his "baskets of summer fruit," with appropriate hymns and prayers between.

BOURNEMOUTH has been highly favoured since the Week of Prayer in the visits of evangelists, with much blessing as the result. Mr. John Vine has just concluded a series of meetings, held at Poxedown and this place, when on every occasion the power of God was manifest, especially at the service in Bournemouth last night, when, at the close of an after-meeting, over twenty professed to have closed with Christ. Strong men and maidens, and quite young children, were weeping bitterly in all parts of the room. Altogether, it was a memorable night. Glory be to God!

Bournemouth, April 26.

T. CLARK.

AT BOWDON, NEAR MANCHESTER, the evangelistic meetings, commenced two or three months back by Mr. James N. Carr, of Carlisle, and carried on for some weeks after by Mr. W. D. Dunn, have again, in a second series by Mr. Dunn, yielded a large number of conversions. Each night during a week of addresses, there was a very large attendance, and not one meeting closed without a number of inquirers. The concluding gathering, which was held last week, was densely packed, and two side-rooms were filled with inquirers, one of them for the second time. The local friends are filled with joy. Christians who have never before spoken a word for Jesus, have begun to preach the word with boldness to their fellow-passengers on the railway and elsewhere, and the new converts are keeping their faith awake by efforts to save others. Old residents testify that Bowdon was never before so shaken by the Holy Ghost.

FOR THE YOUNG.

FIVE BASKETS OF SUMMER FRUIT.

What a pity all the little readers of THE CHRISTIAN—and the big ones too, for the matter of that—were not at the Haymarket Opera House last Saturday, at twelve o'clock. Why? Because there were such lots of good things given away, and I remember, once upon a time, when I was a little younger than I am, how delighted I used to be where there were nice presents to be had.

But for two very good reasons there were only just a handful of young folks there. The first reason is that not many of them knew what was going to happen—very good reason surely; and the next is that it was a rainy day. What terrible disappointments these rainy days are sometimes! Well, then, for the benefit of those who didn't know, and those who couldn't go, I am going to tell you a little about it, if Mr. Editor will let me. That dreadful man, Mr. Editor, says he has so much to tell the old people this week that he can't afford much room for the young ones. I don't think that's quite fair of Mr. Editor; but, you know, whatever he says must be done, so out of the "Five Baskets of Summer Fruit," that were given away at the Opera House, I must just pick an apple out of one, a plum out of another, a strawberry out of the third, an orange out of the fourth, and a cluster of grapes out of the fifth.

But I must tell you who gave away the baskets. It was the Rev. Mr. Robertson, from Edinburgh. He is a famous man for the children, I can tell you. He has got such a nice, pleasant voice, that I am sure God just made it and tuned it for the express purpose of saying sweet things to the little ones. I won't say any more about him, because he is going to give away lots more of good things next Saturday, at three o'clock, at the Opera House, and you can go and see for yourselves.

Now for the "Baskets." They are all about "one thing." I wonder how many of you know how often the words "one thing" are to be found in the Bible. You had better look and see.

Basket Number One. "One thing is needful." Where is that? Who said it? Whom did He say it to? I want you to answer these questions to your parents or friends. Be sure you do it. "Well, now, what is my watch for?" "To tell the time, of course." "Suppose it didn't tell the time, what would it be good for?" "Nothing." "Very good. What is my pencil for?" "To write with." "Suppose it had no point, what would it be good for?" "Nothing." Right. What were you made for, my boy? Ah! you don't answer that so quickly. If you are not living for the purpose for which you were made, what are you good for? You were made to get your feet on the ladder to glory. Suppose a ship is going down in a storm, what is the "one thing needful"? The lifeboat. If a house is on fire, what is the "one thing needful" for those who are at the window, and can't get downstairs? The fire-escape. What is the "one thing needful" for every boy and girl? Christ in the heart. If you haven't opened the door to let Him in, do it at once.

Basket Number Two. "One thing thou lackest." Who can find that passage? Lackest, means Wantest. Jesus said it to a young man, who came running, he was so eager to know how his soul could be saved. Jesus opened the shutters of his heart and let in the light,—then such a lot of motes! Jesus probed his heart, and this young man shook his head and shut the door and went away. That is one of the saddest stories in the Bible. Suppose you write a lot of cyphers all round the wall; what would they all come to? Why, nothing. But put a figure at the beginning and then what do they come to? Perhaps, millions on millions, whether of pounds or pearls. If you have everything else and lack Christ, what are you worth? Answer that if you can.

Just a word or two about the other Baskets. Number Three, is, "One thing have I desired." That's in the old Testament; who will find it? Desired what? "To see the beauty of the Lord." Have you ever seen a beautiful rainbow, made of sunshine and shower. But that is nothing to "the rainbow round about the throne." It is made up of the guilt of man and the grace of God. Wouldn't you like to see it?

Number Four basket.—"One thing I know."

Number Five basket, "One thing I do." These were beautiful, but I must leave you to find them out, and all about them. Your parents and other kind friends will help you I am sure. My parting advice to you is to go and hear Mr. Robertson next Saturday if you can; and if you can't, I'll try and tell you something of what he said in THE CHRISTIAN of next week. R.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING, HAYMARKET.

The volume of praise grows larger, and finds expression, week by week, at these Monday noontide meetings. After the public requests had been read and presented, the congregation sang, with heart and voice, that grand old song of praise, the Hundredth Psalm.

Mr. Moody, before reading Psa. cxvii., counselled brevity in the reports.

Mr. Shuldham Henry reported on the work in Liverpool. The inquiry-rooms were filled nightly. Every class was being reached, and the Lord was doing great things.

Mr. Weatherley told of a young man whose mother had sent him all the way from Leeds to London, to the meetings. He found Christ at the Agricultural Hall, and returned to Leeds to-day, to gladden the heart of his mother. "Last night," said Mr. Weatherley, "the adjoining room was filled with young men inquiring the way of life." He gave an intensely interesting instance of conversion which occurred last night.

Rev. W. Bradbury read a letter relating the salvation of a father and son at the same time in the inquiry-room.

Mr. Balfour gave an encouraging account of the services at the Victoria Theatre yesterday.

Mr. Radcliffe related incidents showing the growing success of the house-to-house visitation. Many, he said, were willing to come from the country and aid in the work if London friends would entertain them.

This testimony of blessing experienced was continued by Mr. Hodder in reference to the South of London, and Lord Cavan with reference to Seaford and Woolwich.

A gentleman gave an interesting example of how the work spreads. A word dropped by Mr. Moody at Birmingham went to the heart of a clergyman who heard him. He returned to Staffordshire, and repeated the words, which were blessed to the conversion of two men. Let us praise God for the twos and threes in the country as well as the larger numbers in the towns.

Rev. S. Herring gave an account of the formation of bands of boys and girls, numbering altogether about 100, who had set to work in the North of London.

Mr. Cory, from Cardiff, said about 600 people in that town had been professedly brought to Christ at recent services there.

Rev. J. Wilkinson spoke of successful services in Glasgow the day before, and also of much blessing that had resulted from speaking for Christ by the way.

Capt. Moreton told of two cousins who had been converted recently in the North, and had since been the means of leading thirteen relatives and friends to Christ. Another young man had reserved tickets for two unconverted friends in the same office, and having induced them to go to the meetings, they were brought to Christ there, and were now at work for the Master.

After some exceedingly encouraging testimony from Mr. Campbell Whyte of Glasgow, Mr. Moody read a letter received from one of the Cambridge undergraduates, detailing most successful meetings there.

Rev. Mr. Aitken then gave thanks for the good news coming from every quarter, and also prayed for individual cases. At Mr. Sankey's request the hymn with the chorus,

"Only trust Him, only trust Him,
He will save you now."

was sung. The singing of it, he said, at the Agricultural Hall on Thursday evening had been blessed to the conversion of at least one soul, who had long struggled in darkness.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS' COLUMN.

In these days of great religious awakening, I think it would be of great use if you would open a column in THE CHRISTIAN, to be called "The Christian Workers' Column," wherein accounts might be given of the modes used for helping the anxious ones at inquiry-meetings. Many of those now helping have had but little experience; a statement of the modes and arguments used by others who have been longer in the work would be of great assistance. They should be short and to the point; thus several might be embraced under one column.

For instance, I was speaking to a lady at the inquiry-room while Messrs. Moody and Sankey were at Liverpool. She said that she believed, but could not feel. I told her that faith came first, and feelings afterwards—that we were bound to believe, and that feeling would follow. I said, "You see I strike my hand against this form. I strike it first, and I feel it afterwards. The feeling is the result, and does not go before. So you must not attempt to feel first, and believe afterwards—endorsing, as it were, God's truth by your feeling." She seemed to grasp what I meant.

I think a column of this kind would be useful.

A. C. SMITH.

[We shall be glad to carry out our correspondent's suggestion, so far as space admits, if Christian workers will kindly send to us, in a few pointed sentences, the details of any similar cases they may meet with.]

The following conveys the substance of a conversation with a young woman a few weeks since:—

"Will you tell me whether you are a Christian?"

"I sometimes think I am."

"Perhaps you are. What are your reasons for thinking so?"

"I believe I am a sinner; and that Christ died for me; and I think that I shall be saved at last."

"But you have no assurance that you are now a child of God?" "No." "Nor that you have eternal life?" "No."

"Please read with me John iii. 16. Now you appear to me to believe the whole verse, except the last clause. You believe that God so loved the world, that He gave his Son to die for us; you believe that Jesus died for you; and you also believe, or at least you think, that you will not perish at last. But do you not see that you have the same ground for believing the last clause as for all the rest—for believing that you have eternal life as for believing that you will not perish. It is God's word in each case, and if you believe the one, surely you will believe the other."

In a moment she said, "Yes: I see it, and I believe it."

"Then give God thanks."

She bowed her head, and in a few words praised God for the gift of eternal life. She told a friend as she left, "I have seen the kingdom of God to-night;" and the last time we saw her, some days later, her face shone with the peace of God, and she said she did not want to be happier than she had been since that evening.

Among the audience at the Christian Workers' meeting, one Sunday morning, at the Agricultural Hall, was a young girl who had recently been saved. When Mr. Moody asked all to stand who would pledge themselves to speak to and try to lead to Christ some one person during the week, she was amongst those who rose. That night, at the close of a meeting in the northern suburb where this young girl lived, a father asked the congregation to unite with him in praise that his little child, when she came home from school in the afternoon, had told her mother that she loved Jesus, and He was her Saviour. The little one was in the class of the young Christian whom we have mentioned, and who, after speaking to her and others in school, had taken the child for a walk, pressed her to yield herself to Christ, and accept Him as her Saviour, with the result already noted.

The harvest of the harvest, the finest of the wheat, now being garnered for the great Husbandman, is to be found in the inquiry-room. A tall, handsome man was sitting there alone on a recent occasion, evidently wishing for counsel. Being accosted, he said—

"It is my earnest desire to be a Christian, but I do not see the way?"

"Where do you stumble?" was inquired.

"At the very beginning, I do not see how to take the very first step!"

[314]

He was wearing a handsome gold watch and chain.

"Where did you get your watch and chain?" was asked.

"My father gave them to me."

"Why?"

"Because he loved me, I suppose," with a smile.

"Just so; in exactly the same way and for the same reason, your heavenly Father is offering you salvation; take it as you received your watch and chain."

His head fell upon his hands and remained there for some time, while we both prayed. Presently his face was lifted, and he said, "I think I see it; leave me alone with God!"

He was left, as he desired to be, to the teaching of the Divine Spirit, and when seen at a later period of the evening, it was clear as light that he had found peace passing all understanding.

"Is there anybody here that can talk to an inquirer?"

I was asked at the head of the stairs by a fine-looking man of middle age.

"I'll go willingly," and we walked to his friend for whom he asked—a strong workman with very dark, bright eyes, thoroughly in earnest concerning his soul.

"I want to know what I am to do?" was his remark.

"Are you willing when you know?" "Quite."

"Do you know you are a sinner?" "Yes."

"Quite sure?" "Yes."

"Do you know Christ died to save sinners?" "Yes."

"Do you feel your need of a Saviour?" "Yes."

"Will you say after me, 'I am a sinner—Jesus died to save sinners, therefore He died to save me because I am a sinner. It is only to take the salvation He has provided—I do take it and so become a sinner saved.'" Quietly, step by step, the man repeated the words, until he reached the end, then looked at his friend and the teacher with such tender brightness, such awakening joy, as testified clearly that the truth had "made him free."

A dark experience suggesting an inquiry comes next. In the theatre, close to the stage, a man kneeling on the floor, moaning, crying, sobbing, praying, calling on the name of the Lord; around him many brethren endeavouring to teach him; standing nearest, his own little daughter stroking caressingly her father's grey hair as he kneels, and cries and groans. The fumes of strong drink are so powerful as to render it offensive to be near him, and he impatiently rejects all attempts to teach or enlighten him.

Question:—Is it right or wise to deal with a man in such circumstances as an inquirer for salvation?

Two grey-headed men meet as the inquiry-meeting closes, and they know each other. "How long are you going to be without Christ?" one asks. "You have not much time left to serve Him, your grey hairs should teach you as mine should me."

Just then a third grey-headed man passed and heard the words, adding, "And as mine should me; thank God they have. Take Christ as yours now, and come along."

"Well, what do you say to that?"

"I am willing, quite willing, to take Christ as my Saviour, but I am afraid I should bring disgrace afterward: I am so weak and unworthy."

"Never heed that; take Christ as your Saviour and King to-night, and trust Him to take charge and care of you to-morrow and all following to-morrows."

"Will that do?" "Perfectly well; what Jesus wants is to-night; to-morrow is in his hand."

"I will, I will, cheerfully then."

A strong grip of hands outstretched as his Christian wife, who had prayed for him twenty years, passed by at the moment, and then the words, "Take him home with you, the Lord has given him to you at last."

A young man said, "Suppose I accept the offered salvation, and I am quite willing and anxious to do so, and to-morrow I return to my former courses, what then?"

"Let us settle one thing at once. Will you give yourself to Jesus on condition that the responsibility of your continuing his rests on Him, not on you?"

"Will He have me that way?" "Certainly."

"But what am I to do?" "First, take Christ as Saviour and King, next, pray to Him constantly, and always trust to Him to keep you."

"Will He do it?" "Yes."

"I am ready, I am willing." "Praise the Lord!"

THE BRIGHTON MEETING.

The arrangements for this meeting are progressing most satisfactorily. The number from the Continent who are likely to attend is very large. It is specially desired that those who can entertain English-speaking ministers from the Continent should at once communicate with the Local Secretary, C. Buchel, 61, King's-road, Brighton.

So large a number of conversions have occurred at these meetings, that those attending are specially invited to interest their unsaved friends in coming.

A meeting of such size, held for so long a time, and gathering Christians from so many nationalities, for exclusively spiritual objects, has rarely, if ever, been known; and it is most earnestly requested that all should come in prayer, and in the confidence of faith, that God will use it in a special manner to large results of his own glory, hiding the instrumentalities, and revealing Himself, that the weak, imperfect earthen vessels might be so broken, that the light of the Lord may alone be seen.

MR. PEARSALL SMITH AT STUTTGART.

BY DR. BAEDEKER.

After a week's services at Basel, Mr. Smith paid a visit to Zurich and to Carlsruhe, and on his way to Stuttgart spent a Sunday at Kornthal. There were five meetings announced, in which Mr. Smith spoke, and such were the crowds that had assembled to hear him, that the church, which holds more than 2000 people, was not able to hold them all, and many had to stand outside at the windows and doors. The results of that day's preaching at Kornthal are great; many—about forty—who spoke English, confessed to have found the Lord in the pardon of their sins, and many Christians were lifted to a higher level of privilege and power. But a yet more glorious work was realized at Stuttgart. For a week, beginning on Monday, the 19th, there were mostly every day four or five meetings, with from 2500 to 3500 in each. Even the prayer-meeting at eight o'clock in the morning was crowded. There was a meeting for Christians from ten to half-past eleven o'clock; a conference for brethren from two to four, which was numerously attended by brethren in the ministry; and then there were gospel-meetings in two different places in the evening. Mr. Smith went first to one and then to the other, and the crowds were such as scarcely ever have been seen assembled in Stuttgart. About 6000 attended every evening. The simple and full gospel did a wonderful work; I am not afraid of over-estimating the numbers when I speak of some hundreds who, within that week, have passed from death into life. The clergymen of Wurtemberg are mostly true-hearted men, but many of them are so pressed down with the cares and labours of their pastorate, that the joy of the Lord and the privilege side of working for Him seem to reach them but little. They expressed themselves as truly grateful to Mr. Smith for coming to their help, and for bringing such a joyous gospel. Many a sad cloud was lifted from off their brows, and the sunshine of God's presence lighted up their sad but honest countenances.

On Friday morning especially many hearts were made glad, and many a cup ran over. Mr. Smith requested those present who had received a blessing from the Lord within the last few days to give expression to their gratitude in the words of a single text of Scripture, and for about an hour one after the other, in quick succession, rose to bear witness to what the Lord was to their souls.

Last Sunday, April 25, there were four meetings, one following closely upon the other. The first, at two o'clock, was for men only, and about 3500 were present; the second was only for women, when a like number attended. In the evening the same hall was filled again by a mixed multitude, and from seven till eight, and from eight till nearly ten o'clock, the largest church in Stuttgart was densely crowded with a most attentive audience. I believe that very many that night touched the hem of the garment of Jesus, as they had never done before, for healing and for sanctifying power. It was most affecting to see the warm expressions of love and gratitude they felt for Mr. Smith, and I am persuaded that the work of this week at Stuttgart will be seen after many days. There never has been anything of the kind before there. Surely the fields are white for the harvest everywhere on the Continent.

THE FREE GIFT.

O who will come, O who will come,
And take what Christ will give,
The glorious things He offers now
To all on earth who live?
"I give you life, eternal life,"
The blessed Saviour cries;
"A pardon seal'd, a heart renew'd,
And glory in the skies.
I give you faith, and hope, and love,
And all the life to come.
The Father's house, the Father's house,
It is the children's home!"
What would you have, what would you have,
That Christ cannot bestow?
What fair inheritance above,
What joy and peace below?
What mightier Lord would you obey,
What more celestial King?
What surer refuge would you have
Than His almighty wing?
What loftier height would you ascend
Than at His feet to lie?
What more could Jesus do for you
Than bow the heavens and die!
"What more could I, what more could I,
For all My vineyard do,
Than that I have already done?"
Now says my Lord to you.
You have His love, His life, His blood,
His Spirit, and His Word.
O take His gift, and you shall share
The glory of your Lord!
For you the gates stand open wide,
And angels guard the way.
The shadows lengthen on the earth,
O hasten while 'tis day.
Whosoever, whosoever,
Whereso'er you dwell,
O hear that tale of wondrous love,
The gospel pages tell!
It matters not from whence you come;
You need not have a doubt,
So that you do but come to Him,
Who will not cast you out.
However dark, and vile, and sad,
You shall be so no more,
When once you see the Lamb of God,
Who all your burden bore.
O do but come, and quickly come,
O come, poor sinner, now!
Before thy sun for ever sets,
That now is sinking low.
You'll ne'er lament you came to Him,
And gave Him all your heart;
For it is everlasting woe
When Jesus says, "Depart!"
But O the joy when from His throne
He says, "Come ye to Me;
For where I am, in this bright world,
There shall my servant be!"

ASHBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.—We gratefully trace the loving hand of our God in leading his dear servant, William Taylor (once a navy), into Ashbourne. The dear ones who pleaded for a blessing upon these services will rejoice to hear that each night numbers assembled at the Town-hall, who never attend any place of worship, and the Holy Spirit's power accompanying the sweet, soul-stirring addresses. Many were led to see for the first time their danger, to view the greater sight of Jesus on the cross, as their Substitute, and to accept the loving invitation to "Come and take the water of life freely." The latter days' services were crowded to excess. Great blessing also rested upon the open-air meetings, held by "other fellow-labourers whose names are in the book of life." We pray that our Lord will give us "out of his fulness grace for grace," and to his name shall be all the glory!

MEETINGS FOR THE YOUNG AT KETTERING.

In this small town of, perhaps, 8000 inhabitants, we have had night after night gatherings of a thousand young and old. Last night there must have been twelve hundred present. The after-meetings have been times of refreshing to Christians, and of salvation to seekers. Many believers who had scarcely ever before spoken to any one personally about the things of the kingdom, have been roused and helped by God to be soul-winners. More than two hundred children and adults, some of whom have for long been waiting on the threshold, have given in their names as members of the family of God. Oh that indeed they may all have been written down in the Lamb's book of life! We thank God also that the passing by of Jesus of Nazareth has brought some to his side for healing who were at first attracted merely by curiosity.

"Praise waiteth for Thee, O God, in Zion," "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name," "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; because his mercy endureth for ever," and other similar texts, rose from full hearts to the lips of many who remained to the happy little praise-service, with which, after ten o'clock last night, we concluded this series of special meetings. God grant that not one of those for whose professed conversion our thanksgiving was offered may be wanting in that day when He will "make up his jewels." We do pray that Christ may be glorified in them, and that the last words which Mr. Spiers heard as the train carried him away may be indeed prophetic. They rang through the air from the railway-truck, where a crowd of children stood waving their hymn-books, and singing—

"Like the stars of the morning,
His bright crown adorning,
They shall shine in their beauty,
Bright gems for His crown."

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.—A SUGGESTION.

Some few weeks ago it was remarked by a correspondent of THE CHRISTIAN that while so many means are being used to win the souls of young men, comparatively little is done for young women. Will you allow me to suggest that since so much success has attended the efforts of Christian young men in bringing others of their own age to the Saviour, it is probable that one of the best ways of reaching young women would be through those of themselves who are already on the Lord's side. I doubt not that there are in London alone thousands of dear girls who, like myself, have unconverted friends and acquaintances of their own age, whom they long to see entering the kingdom of God, while yet they find it difficult to get favourable opportunities of inviting them to the Saviour. Why should not such join themselves into little companies to pray for their friends, and to help and encourage each other in their efforts to win them.

I would suggest that each little band should meet for an hour every evening for this purpose, and after continuing to do this for some time (so that those who are only half-hearted may drop off, and those who remain become firmly united), that they should then invite their unconverted acquaintances and other young women with whom they may come in contact, to join them during a second hour while they lovingly speak to them of the dear Saviour whom they have found, and entreat them to seek Him for themselves.

Should the work prosper, it might be found advisable to unite these little companies into a Young Ladies' Evangelization Union, with more organization and unity of effort; but be that as it may, surely in these days of so much blessing the Christian girls of London might unite in some way to carry the gospel to their perishing sisters. S. M. M.

[We willingly give publicity to our correspondent's excellent proposal, and trust it may lead to practical work in the direction suggested. Communications and offers of co-operation may be sent to our correspondent, at 165, Aldersgate-st., E.C.—Ed.]

DUDLEY.—A very successful Mission has been held here in connection with some of the churches, a peculiar feature of which has been services held in some of the coal-pits in the neighbourhood. These meetings have been much appreciated by the miners, and we trust not a few of them have found the Pearl of great price.

WORK AMONG THE MILITIA.

A friend writes to say:—"Under the superintendence of the clergymen a few young ladies (taking alternate evenings) play an harmonium in a convenient mission-room every evening, and the young militiamen come in numbers, varying each night from twenty to sixty, to sing Sankey's hymns, the tunes of which seem particularly suited to please them.

"Coffee is sold to those who like to buy: the price charged is twopence for a large cup of coffee, and a slice of bread. In the course of the evening a striking short tract is read, a brief Scripture lesson given, or a telling religious anecdote related.

"This plan of gathering these young men brings under our notice two or three among them that are hopeful and seriously-minded, and it raises the tastes of many others, besides keeping them out of the public-houses. May I advise Christian young ladies in the places where the militia are now gathering to adopt the plan."

I trust the hearts of many may be inclined to respond to this appeal, and quickly enter this "door" so widely opened to us now, though but for a short time, as the opportunity for reaching these men lasts only a few weeks. E. R. COTTON.

COLPORTAGE IN ENGLAND.

Dear Sir,—In acknowledging receipt of the moneys forwarded by you, being anonymous contributions through your office in aid of our work, will you allow me, through your columns, to thank the kind contributors, as I have no other means of doing so. It will be gratifying to them to know that a marked success has attended our labours during the past twelvemonths, and the work is still increasing. Large quantities of the Scriptures and Christian literature have been purchased by those who, in all probability, would not have otherwise done so. In some cases it has been directly the means of supplanting the Sunday newspaper, and we have many instances on record of the blessing of God resting on the ministrations of the men and the reading of the books sold, bringing forth fruit in the winning of souls to Christ. Our first annual report is now issued, and I shall be glad to forward copies to any who may apply.—Yours truly, H. D. BROWN,

Secretary Christian Colportage Association.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—On Tuesday evening, April 20, Mr. Joseph's new hall, 394, Hackney-road, was most successfully inaugurated. The hall was well filled. Tea was served at six o'clock, and Mr. Scott, of THE CHRISTIAN, took the chair at seven. There were many warm friends of Israel on the platform, who nearly all took a part in the speaking, which seemed evidently to flow from hearts inflamed with love to God's ancient people; and from Mr. Scott's words at the opening and close, there was no uncertain sound as to his deep Christian sympathy in this all-important cause. The new hall is not large, but is just the thing required at present, and the Lord's presence was manifestly in our midst. We hail this new token of the Lord's moving towards his beloved people; and we were greatly surprised by the collection, which amounted to about £30, through which sum all outstanding debts can be paid, and a small balance still remain in hand. I commend this hall and Mr. Joseph's work to your readers, believing that it is one that the Lord will abundantly bless. W. G.

INDUSTRIAL DAY-SCHOOL, GLASGOW.

Notices have from time to time appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of an Industrial Day-school recently begun in Glasgow, in connection with, and as an almost indispensable adjunct to, the Drill-hall work there. It may, however, be necessary again to explain that, every Sabbath afternoon, about 1200 to 1500 poor little ragged children, boys and girls, are gathered into the Drill-hall, near the Glasgow-green, have the gospel simply, earnestly, and affectionately set before them, and then each child receives a good piece of bread, and a large mugful of wholesome and nourishing soup.

The sight of so much misery, and the neglected state of many of these poor little creatures, stirred the hearts of the workers to devise some plan of more effectually helping the most destitute amongst them; and, after much prayerful deliberation, premises were secured in which to begin a Day Industrial School, capable of accommodating about two hundred children. The plan of this school is as follows:—The children attend from seven in the morning continuously till half-past five or six in the evening, receiving breakfast, dinner, and supper at the school, the rest of the time being divided judiciously between school-work, industrial training, and play. They are sent to their own homes at night. Every care is taken, by visiting each case, that none are admitted whose parents or friends can make a shift to support them; and so numerous are the cases of the really destitute, that, if the funds placed at the committee's disposal would afford it, the school could be filled. At present the attendance averages about a hundred.

Last week an incident occurred which, we hope, is the beginning of a genuine work of grace among these little ones, the particulars of which are as follows:—

Seven of the children were standing on a form, for having violated the rule of the tea-table. The school was assembled for evening worship, previous to dismissal; and on the teacher asking what such conduct deserved, a little voice (that of a fatherless boy, whose mother is in the lock-up for drunkenness) called out—

"Let them off!"

"Would you like to see them pardoned?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you willing, then, to take their punishment?"

"No," shaking his head, and smiling.

"Is there a boy or girl present who will take their place?"

"I will," said a blind boy, for whose transference to the Blind Asylum arrangements are in progress.

Accordingly he was brought to the front, and, in the presence of all, received the punishment due to the offenders. As he was led back to his place, one after another of those who had been saved by the substitute began to weep, and, in turn, went up to "blind Harry," to thank him for what he had done for them. He only said, "Oh, I don't mind if it will only bring them to Jesus."

Seeing that the incident had produced a deep impression, and feeling the solemnity of the occasion, the great substitutionary work of Christ, was faithfully and earnestly brought before the children. Nineteen of them seemed much affected and impressed, and the others were then dismissed, leaving these with their own teacher, who again urged them to accept Jesus as their Substitute and Saviour at once.

One little girl, the child of a Roman Catholic mother, whose face bespoke intense agony, on being taken aside by the teacher, said, "It's nae for Harry I'm crying. My heart will burst for Jesus. My heart's sair for Jesus." After a long talk, first with one, and then with another of the teachers, she went home professing to have given herself to Christ.

Hearing the sound of sobbing still proceeding from another room; on entering it, the senior girl of the school was found there in deep distress. This girl had previously given us great trouble and anxiety, and was considered the worst girl in the school. In fact, it had been decided that, if her mother, who was not a good character, could be induced to sign the paper agreeing to her being placed in a girls' Reformatory, she should be transferred thither at once, lest she should contaminate the other children. Now the hand of God was upon her. Again and again the moan burst from her heart as she was being spoken to—"I have been such an awful sinner." But before she left, light broke in upon her soul, and she went home saying, with quiet confidence, "I'm Christ's now. My sins are all forgiven."

Since then the change in this girl is something marvellous. She has become gentle and tractable, and each evening she comes to the teacher and asks prayer and counsel before going home. One thing which she said to the teacher may be a hint worth taking by those who have to deal with similar cases, "Oh, Mr. H—," she said, "when I do anything wrong, don't scold me, but pray for me." She has since been speaking to her companions, and another of the girls now professes to be "happy in the Lord."

Will your readers remember this school in prayer, asking that "the Good Shepherd," who, passing by the "ninety and nine," goeth after that which was lost until He found it, may have his eye on these poor, neglected lambs, and bring many of them into his blessed fold?

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

We must group together the Reports of several valuable Missions which have reached us, premising that their importance is not to be undervalued on account of the space which we can devote to them:—

The Sermon-lane Mission, Liverpool-road, Islington, has surmounted its pecuniary difficulties, and is free from debt. The attendance at the services during the year has been most encouraging, and the Evangelization Society continues its assistance. The report speaks cheerfully of the Sunday-school, the free Sunday-morning breakfast, and the several instrumentalities employed.

The Gosport Free Ragged-school presents its seventeenth report, and much that is interesting is told of the Home for Poor Boys, the Seamen and Poor People's Bethel, the Girls' Free School, and the Floating Bethel and Mission Ship. In the vessel which has now been afloat nearly four years, there is, every Lord's-day, a fresh congregation, excepting now and then a few who have been before, and gladly come again when they visit the port. A good work is being done amongst the navvies employed on the Dockyard Extension-works.

The Mount Hermon Girls' Orphan Homes, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, are for destitute orphans who leave the Home at fifteen years of age, for such situations as they are capable of filling. Miss Cole, who presides over the institution, writes that it has been their privilege to see some of the girls following the Lord after they leave. An appeal is made for a sea-side home for delicate orphan children.

The second annual report of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association can hardly fail to interest readers of THE CHRISTIAN, since, as Mr. Holme writes, "It is a child of THE CHRISTIAN, and its inception first saw the light in your columns." The report contains a feeling allusion to the loss sustained by the association in the decease of the late-esteemed honorary secretary, Mr. George Vigeon. Through the exertions of a general committee, under the presidency of Earl Shaftesbury, a sum of about £1400 was collected for Mrs. Vigeon and her family. The report calls special attention to the library fund, which is being gradually augmented, although no special canvass for funds has yet been made. The libraries are being favourably received everywhere, and generally approved of as supplying a want long felt.

The Red Bank Working Men's Christian Institute, Manchester, in its report, gives many cases of usefulness during the past year. The Medical Mission in connection with it appears to have been especially valuable. A tribute of heartfelt respect is offered to the memory of the late Professor William Smith, who for fourteen years took a deep interest in all the work of the institution.

Home for Destitute Girls, Plaistow.—This Home was removed to Plaistow from the Seven-dials twelve months since, and one can well believe the words of the third report that the change "has proved a great blessing to all, both in body and soul." Miss Lee has now forty-eight children under her care, and it is gladdening to know that she has been able "to see much fruit of her labours in the conversion of the dear children." This result is worth any amount of labour and sacrifice, and it will, we trust, encourage the supporters of the Home to further and increased interest in the welfare of these poor neglected waifs.

PRACTICAL HINTS ON HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

BY GENERAL BURROWS.

Sir,—Allow me to mention a few practical points as to house-to-house visitation, which the Committee for carrying out the same may think not unworthy of notice.

1. Many are now shrinking from the whole work proposed by Mr. Radcliffe, because they cannot muster courage to go to the higher classes, or that they think it inexpedient to do so; let them, however, visit the lower classes, and the various grades of artisans and others, who are now quite without Christian visitation, on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread.

2. Superintendents find much difficulty in getting proper Christian workers; let them apply to ministers of the gospel, as they can recommend them, giving names and addresses.

3. Superintendents are sometimes too particular. Mr. Radcliffe advises that young converts be coupled with more experienced Christians; and this is the right plan.

4. Let this glorious and useful work be made permanent. Surely the results show that we must not give up the multitude of souls which have been reached by this visitation.

5. The amount of spiritual destitution is not sufficiently gauged by Christians. It is supposed by many that the City Mission and other agencies nearly reach the masses. This is a great mistake.

6. Individual dealing with souls is often shrunk from, under the excuse of not having the talent for such work; but this is felt because the talent has been hitherto, in a great measure, "hidden in the earth." Let each one go forth in a simple dependence on Jesus for words and loving wisdom, and many a poor anxious, burdened soul will be led to salvation, and the careless, or even infidel, be brought to conversion and peace. Christians should practise with one another to condense the gospel message, placing themselves in the position of a backslider, or an inquirer, an undecided one, or an unconverted person.

7. Men must go to men, finding them during the dinner hour, or in the street or public-house. Business men could spare an hour or two every week on a Saturday afternoon and on a Sunday morning. Ministers sometimes condone gentlemen for not working, allowing that they have not time. Time can be found.

8. Persons sometimes decline to work because they are not settled in a place, but let them begin, the Lord will help them to find successors and helpers.

9. House-to-house visitation will, together with the efforts of ministers of churches, do more to carry on the work when Messrs. Moody and Sankey have gone, than any other plan that can be devised.

10. Form associations of visitors and workers on a permanent basis, an instance of the great blessing attending this individual dealing with souls was given a short time ago at the mid-day prayer-meeting at the Opera House.

A gentleman related two or three interviews with an infidel, who said that he had not prayed for twenty years. He was a ringleader among his fellow-workmen, and shrunk from accepting salvation from the dread of losing their approbation. He was finally, however, led to break through every barrier, and kneeling with this gentleman one Saturday afternoon, the proud, hard infidel gave himself up to the Lord Jesus. It was then found that he had from time to time attended the services of Moody and Sankey, and the Christian worker had been sent by the Lord, like Philip to the chief eunuch, in order to lead the poor wanderer to the fold, and send him "on his way rejoicing."

MR. HENRY VARLEY is now on his way home from America. Will our readers pray for his safe return?

MISSION AT CLAPHAM.—Will you allow me, through your columns, to ask the earnest prayers of Christians throughout the land for a blessing upon a twelve days' Mission, which I am about to hold here, from May 6 to May 17? God graciously gave us a very great blessing in a similar work in February of last year, and we are expecting a much larger blessing now, in the quickening of believers and the conversion of sinners. It will be a great comfort to us to feel that dear brethren and sisters in Christ are everywhere praying for us.

AUBBEY C. PRICE, Vicar of St. James, Clapham.

A PLEA FOR PRAYER.—A correspondent writes:—"Amongst the vast numbers of those who are attending the services at the Opera House are many who have themselves learned the value of these blessed opportunities, but whose hearts ache for relatives and friends who will not come to the meetings. "We cannot persuade them," is the oft-repeated word, in which we hear but an echo, of our dear Saviour's own language when He said, "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life." Will the Lord's people pray for those who refuse to come to the meetings that they may be led by a mightier hand than ours, and in coming receive that which it is not ours to give, even "the gift of eternal life."

BOYS' HOME, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

There is much talk just now about "How to reach the masses," and many suggestions, practicable and otherwise, have been made. It appears to us that the surest way to influence for good the lapsed and neglected part of the masses is to get hold of them at an early age, before Satan and sin have altogether blighted their lives, and made it next to impossible to rescue them. This is what is being attempted and partially accomplished at the Home in Deansgate, Manchester, the second annual report of which now lies before us. It is very short, but full of encouraging facts as to the work of the past year. Forty-eight boys, chiefly of the "Arab" class, have been admitted to the Home since its commencement; and, as Mr. Moody puts it, what a wealth of possible good to the Church and the world is represented in the fact!

If any of our readers who feel interested in this most Christian undertaking will write to the manager, Mr. Alfred Aisop, 150, City-road, Hulme, Manchester, for copies of the report, they will, we are sure, endorse our approval of this institution, and probably be induced to give it substantial encouragement. Cast-off clothing would be most acceptable.

FIELD-LANE INSTITUTION, LITTLE SAFFRON-HILL, FABRINGTON-ROAD.—In this institution, every Tuesday evening, a sewing-class is held, and, on an average, 200 girls, ages varying from nine to eighteen years, assemble in the large schoolroom, to be taught needlework. At present there is a great need of help, and, from the existing want, many who come cannot receive the instruction they require. Much good might be effected if some Christian friends would come forward to assist those who have for many years been employed in this work of usefulness. Any one willing to devote a portion of Tuesday evening will be gladly welcomed by the lady superintendent on that day, at half-past six o'clock, at the Institution.

SOUTHAMPTON.—At the commencement of this year, almost all the evangelical churches united in an invitation to Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It being impossible, however, for them to visit us, it was felt by many that it would not be the Lord's will that therefore no evangelistic effort should be made. With this feeling one or two general united meetings were called, and the services now being held twice daily, are the result of this combined effort. Evening after evening one of our largest halls is filled with deeply-interested listeners, and each day since the commencement some have found peace in believing, while others have been aroused from indifference to seek rest to their souls in Jesus. The evangelist is Charles Edwards, of the London Evangelization Society, assisted by others.

EDMUND ASHBY.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HOW TO CONQUER. By Rev. J. T. WRENFORD. Part-ridge.—Another of the excellent little series of booklets, of which "All for Jesus" was the first, and all of which have been much blessed of God.

THE PROPHET OF SORROW; or, the Life and Times of Jeremiah. By the Rev. THORNLEY SMITH. 66, Paternoster-row.—A book of a class much to be commended, as tending to promote the reading of Scripture. It contains much valuable information from the best sources bearing upon the times of Jeremiah. We regret we cannot speak so well of the unfolding of the prophet's predictions. The author thinks that the Jews "are to return not to the literal Jerusalem, but to the Church of which it was but the type;" and those who hold "that the millennium will not come until Christ appears in person on the Mount of Olives," are described as persons for whom "the blessings of the new covenant are too spiritual."

THE UNCHANGING SAVIOUR, AND OTHER SERMONS. By the late CHARLES VINCE, of Birmingham. Hodder and Stoughton.—This volume is a memorial of the ministry of this much-lamented servant of God, and contains eighteen of his sermons. It is needless for us to say anything respecting the work of so well-known and justly-esteemed a man; these sermons were not prepared by him for the press, but have been edited by a friend, partly from notes, and partly from MSS. of Mr. Vince. They are all good, and well worth careful reading, but we like especially those on "The Solitude of Christ," "The Disappointments of Life," and the one from which the volume is named. It is a book that all thoughtful readers, whether acquainted with Mr. Vince's ministry or not, will do well to read.

IS SANCTIFICATION PERFECT HERE BELOW? or, Romans vi.—viii. Expounded. Norwich: Fletcher and Son. Why should the writer of this able little exposition conceal his name, especially as he attacks others by name? However, every one familiar with his other writings will at once recognize his acute mind and vigorous pen; and we must own he has done good service in refuting many prevalent mistakes as to the interpretation of the passage which he expounds. The title, however, is a misnomer. Had it been, "Is Salvation, or Redemption, Perfect Here Below?" all would be well; for he clearly proves, as Scripture convincingly testifies, that it is not. But he has not shown, nor do we think can he show, that sanctification may not be perfect. Surely Paul's prayer for the Thessalonians (1 Thess. v. 23) is for nothing less than perfect sanctification. "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The mistake which shows itself in the title of this book is in supposing that perfect sanctification implies sinless perfection. That it clearly does not. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Paul's prayer carefully avoids the use of language that elsewhere he employs to describe the sinless perfection of the believer's standing in Christ. "Preserved blameless" is very different from "presented faultless," as a reference to the original will even more distinctly show. The perfection of the peace-offering was not hindered by the presence of leaven (Lev. vii. 13), nor is the perfection of a believer's sanctification by the presence of "a body of death" (Rom. vii. 24). There may be such a thing as the perfect sanctification of that which is imperfect; and were this distinction attended to, much of the controversy about the "higher Christian life" might be avoided, as to which both sides err—the one, as the author of this little book, in denying "perfect sanctification" here below; and the other in thinking that, to maintain this scriptural truth, it is necessary to twist such scriptures as Rom. vi. and vii., so as to make them express anything different to what the words, simply understood, undoubtedly convey.

ABERDEEN.—We have had a most refreshing time at our Conference this year, and though the numbers attending have not been such as one would have expected in a population like Aberdeen, there has been one marked and very encouraging feature in the presence of a much larger number of young people, chiefly young women, than at any former Conference. There have been much spiritual refreshment and blessing, and, we trust, lasting good in the upbuilding of the Lord's people, as also in the ingathering of souls. Some of our evening evangelistic meetings were full of power, particularly the last in the Holburn parish church. JOHN BOSS.

PRAYER UNION FOR GOVERNESSES.—A number of Christian governesses, who for some time past have met monthly for prayer, desire to form an Association and Prayer Union, which shall extend to Christian governesses everywhere. They feel that to carry out this object it would be necessary that some lady should undertake to act (gratuitously) as president and secretary. This would not interfere with home duties, correspondence and presiding at the monthly meeting being all that would be required. Any lady who feels herself called to such a work is asked kindly to communicate with Miss Virgo, Christian Institute, 321, Fulham-road, S. W.

LUTON.—Mr. and Mrs. Croxford, have just conducted a fortnight's special services in the High Town Chapel, Luton. The opening services were held on Sunday, April 18, and were well attended. After the evening service, all the anxious ones were invited into the vestry; twenty-eight accepted the invitation, and professed to find peace through believing in Jesus. The services were continued each evening during the fortnight, and the power of the Lord has been present to heal. Above sixty have professed conversion during the services. By special invitation Mr. and Mrs. Croxford have visited the various straw-hat factories, and preached Jesus to the crowds of young people found in them. Mrs. Croxford, who is a convert from Romanism, has sung each evening from her selection of sacred songs, accompanying herself on her American organ. Many have realized a blessing while the songs have been sung.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, SOHO-SQUARE.—Rev. E. Auriol, 35, Mecklenburg-square, W.C., writes respecting this institution:—"Having been acquainted with the working of this hospital as a member of the committee for the last thirty years, and having constantly visited the poor sufferers there, I am anxious to bear my testimony to the Christian spirit in which all its proceedings are conducted, and to urge upon your readers who take an interest in benevolent objects, the claims of the institution at this time, when, from the pressure of recent necessary improvements in the building, the committee are prevented opening a ward which bears the honoured name of the president, Lord Shaftesbury. I believe it to have been found to be a 'house of mercy,' not only for the relief of bodily weakness and suffering, but for the spiritual and eternal interests of many."

OXFORD MUSIC HALL.—The last gospel service for the winter was held on Sunday last, when there was a good attendance. Mr. Hurditch preached. At the after-meeting, several amongst the anxious left rejoicing in Christ. The St. George's Hall Sunday evening services will be continued throughout the year. Mr. T. Shuldham Henry will preach during the present month. Mr. C. R. Hurditch has been preaching at Westminster Chapel, where large meetings have been held and much interest manifested. He will preach there again next Sunday night.

SCRIPTURE-READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—The annual meeting of this society was held on Tuesday afternoon, in the Molesworth Hall, Dublin, when there was a manifest display of the interest felt in this good work by the large attendance. The chair was taken by the Lord Bishop of Tuam, and the proceedings having been opened with prayer, the secretary (Capt. Kearney White) read the annual report, which stated that auxiliaries had been formed in London, Edinburgh, Clifton, Bristol, and other places. The year's income, including the small balance from 1873, amounted to £3022 7s. 11d., and the balance in the treasurer's hands at the close of the year amounted to £182 15s. 6d. The Lord Bishop of Tuam said that after a ministry in this country of about thirty-eight years, he ought to know something of the Scripture-readers' Society, and he could bear his testimony on a great many points to the character of the men whom the society had selected to carry on its work. He believed this society to be one of the most powerful agents brought to bear on the religion of that country, and he concluded by expressing a hope that it would succeed, and that its efforts in Ireland, at least, would be blessed by the Almighty.

The Christian.

ABOUT SHINING.

BY DR. CULROSS.

A GOOD deal has been said of late to Christian people—and by no means too much—about Working; I would say a few homely words about Shining. This is part of the use that Jesus makes of his disciples; they are the light of the world; and their business is to let their light so shine before men as to glorify God. They are like the candle which a householder lights and places on a candlestick, that it may give light unto all that are in the house.

There are three things which young believers would do well to consider. First, the Lord has the lighting of his own candles. We are not light in ourselves; we are "light in the Lord," because He has kindled us, and because He sustains the light He has kindled. Changing the similitude, we are to arise and shine, because our light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon us. The Lord is going round among us at the present time, in the gracious work that is proceeding in these lands; and is lighting soul after soul with the light of life eternal. In how many neighbourhoods, in how many homes, candles have been lighted within these few past months, where formerly there was the darkness of ignorance and sin! It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

Next, the Lord has the placing of his own candles. He places each one where it may be of some use. He never lights a candle to be put under a bushel, or where its shining can serve no good end. He has no "hidden ones" in this sense. We may be unable to discover why He places one candle here and another there; but He knows the why Himself, and that should be enough to satisfy us; His wisdom cannot err. This consideration should correct a sore evil into which we are very ready to fall. We imagine that if only our position were changed, we should be so much more useful. If we were placed in a lighthouse, or some such prominent and responsible position, we imagine we should serve great and glorious purposes; but because we are only placed in a small closet, or at the top of a stair, or at the turning of some unfrequented lane, we become discontented, our sense of our own importance is hurt, and so our light wanes and grows dim. This is very foolish on our part, and very wrong; and all around us are losers through our proud and foolish discontent. We do indeed sometimes go where the Lord has not called us; it was not the Lord's doing, for example, that Lot was found in Sodom—it was his own selfish and evil choice. But where it is the Lord's doing, and not our own foolish choosing, let us be well content; that is the place we are fittest for, and where we shall be most useful. It is not change of position that is needed, but rather acquiescence in the Lord's disposal, and the simple assurance that He knows best.

While the Lord has the lighting and the placing of his candles, our business is to shine. We shine by doing "good works"—they are the flame of the candle—"good works," inspired by his Holy Spirit, and answering in character to the works done by Himself. One cause of the lowness of spiritual attainment among Christian people is the lowness of the standard we have set up. In our creeds kept for solemn occasions, the standard, indeed, has been right enough; but there has been a second and lower standard brought out for every-day use. We have made our own "consciousness" the standard; we have measured ourselves by ourselves, or by what is current in the religious world. That lower standard must be broken in pieces. For every place, for every day in the week, for every occasion, the one standard is the life of Jesus Christ—the life that was and is; He expresses the righteousness, and meekness, and mercifulness, and truth, and patience, and charity, and self-denial, and joy in God, and surrender to his will, that we are to exhibit. "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." I am not to be as saints or martyrs merely; I am not to be as Peter, or Paul, or John merely; but as Jesus Christ Himself, reproducing his life among men, manifesting it afresh in my mortal body, able to say, by no mere figure of speech, but in simple truth, "Christ liveth in me." And the works I do in this case are the flame of the candle, which men "see," and on account of which they glorify the Father of lights, from whom we borrow our shining.

Our business, then, is, not to talk about shining, not to have theories about the way of doing it, but by our good works to shine, and so to bear testimony to the Lord. This simple thought meets a thousand difficulties. "I am very young; my candlestick is a very little one." Let your light shine. "I am very poor; my candlestick is tin instead of silver; if I were richer, I should be of more use." Let your light shine. "I am sick; my candlestick is a broken one." Let your light shine, even if there is no more candlestick than to hold the candle from falling over. "I am very much out of the way—in a very obscure corner, away from the general eye and observation; I wish I were in a better position." Let your light shine; the Lord knows why He has placed you there; be sure He has a purpose worthy of being accomplished.

In all this there is nothing against the humility that is one of the fairest adornments of the Christian character. The truest humility is quietly to fulfil the Lord's appointment, shining because He has lighted us, never dreaming of any praise that can come to us, joyfully showing forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light.

It is the peculiarity of the Christ-life that it may be lived in its utmost grandeur in the humblest worldly circumstances. It was so lived at first by Him who was born in a stable, and laid in a manger; and that is the sign that, through God's grace, it may be reproduced in you and me, no matter how lowly and commonplace our sphere.

If we do not "shine," our working will be of just so much the less value. If we are worldly, selfish, covetous, pleasure-loving, frivolous, slaves to custom and fashion, men will give very little heed to our words, except to express contempt for them. It is not in proportion to the stir we make, and our outward vehemence, not even in proportion to the clearness with which we can state the truth, but in proportion to the pureness of our shining, in proportion to the intensity of the life and light of God in our own souls, that we may expect to be blessed.

MR. R. PEARSALL SMITH AT ELBERFELDT AND BARMEN.

These adjoining cities have long been the centre of large missionary operations, and radiating points of spiritual life. The joint population is about 160,000. Addresses have been given daily, at 9, 11, 3, and 8 o'clock, with increasing manifestation of interest. The audiences have been from 1800 at first to 2500, the limit of the halls. On Sunday the crowd was much more than double what could be accommodated in a large church, at the three o'clock service; and a hall, holding over 2000, was filled at three o'clock, in anticipation of an address at five o'clock; and to accommodate those who had come in from long distances in the country, and who could not get in, a third church had to be used for an address at half-past six o'clock. At eight o'clock, over 2000 men alone were present in the Vereins Hall. Such eagerness to hear the gospel we never saw before on the Continent.

On Monday morning, the well-known Pastor Fabri gathered over a hundred ministers at his Mission-house for training young ministers at Barmen, when Mr. Smith delivered an address, which was prolonged, by their call, to about two hours. It met with the warmest response, and, by a unanimous vote, under deep feeling, they decided to dispense with the doctrinal discussion of the subject, which had been planned, that they might pray over it—a most wise decision.

Mr. Smith holds three meetings in the day-time for believers, and he devotes the evenings mostly to the gospel to the unsaved, of whom there is good reason to believe hundreds have found the joy of forgiven sin within ten days. The clergy attend in large numbers, coming in from the adjoining country for a hundred miles. About fifty persons, including Professor Christlieb, and many theological students from Bonn, about three hours distant, have been spending some days here to attend the meetings.

Wherever the services are held in Germany, the same scenes of gathering crowds, in silent and often tearful interest, are seen. Rich and poor, learned and ignorant, old and young, come in numbers, often journeying whole days to attend. What does this profound awakening and atmosphere of earnest expectation indicate? Surely that clouds great with blessings, such as have burst in plentiful showers over the Anglo-Saxon nations, are now gathering over their cousins, the German-Saxon family. The first drops of a plentiful shower have come. Conservative and cautious almost to an infirmity, the great and good men of Germany are anxiously, but with admirable candour, watching these movements, and inquiring how, without too rude a shock to their time-honoured habits of religious life, the Anglo-Saxon methods of reaching the hearts of the masses can be adopted in Germany.

The more they examine and inquire, the more they are giving their confidence, and we may hope that we shall soon see a mighty wave of blessing sweeping over the land of Luther. It opened to us the foundation truth of justification by faith, an event affecting the interests of the race in its results to mankind more, even temporally, than all the conquests of Rome; would that we might express our gratitude to Germany by inspiring them with our "virtue," or Roman courage and effort, which the apostle tells us to add to our faith!

We believe that experienced and educated evangelists, with sanctified tact to meet the honest difficulties of those so differently trained from themselves, would meet with a warm reception throughout this great empire. Mr. Smith cannot respond to one in ten of the requests for service pressed upon him from influential clergymen in different parts of Germany.

He closes a four days' Mission at Elberfeldt and Barmen to-day, and after visiting Düsseldorf, the Hague, and Amsterdam, and meeting a Belgian clerical Convention on May 10, at Brussels, he expects to be in England May 13. He hopes to return to the Continent in the autumn for six or eight months for labour in Switzerland, Germany, and Russia. His health is excellent, notwithstanding five weeks of near thirty addresses a week, mostly to large audiences. He has an excellent companion and interpreter, in Dr. F. W. Baedeker, of Weston-super-Mare, a Westphalian German, well-known for his earnest and devoted character and work in England and Germany.

Let our readers pray that the Lord will raise up evangelists for Germany, and that the large number of ministers and others who will come from there to the meeting of May 29, at Brighton, will carry back the courage and hopeful expectation of blessing which form so large an element of success in evangelistic work in Great Britain. We have much to learn of them in their deep, earnest, steady consecration, and we may, perhaps, impart to them something of the sanctified courage and daring which, in spiritual as well as military conflicts, leads to victory.

May 3, 1875.

THE HAGUE.

After closing the crowded meetings at Elberfeldt, Barmen, and Düsseldorf, Mr. R. Pearsall Smith has gone to the Hague, where there is a deep religious interest among the upper classes. The Queen attended some of the meetings, one being appointed by her special request. Lord Radstock's visits had been greatly blessed here, and some of those whom he had been the means of leading to the Lord are earnest workers in his vineyard.

Mr. Smith has a meeting on Saturday, the 15th, at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, 165, Aldersgate-street, London, to which those purposing to attend the Brighton meeting on the 29th are specially invited.

THE FORTHCOMING BRIGHTON MEETING.

ENGLISH HOSPITALITY.

We hope that those who are taking lodgings for the Brighton meetings will be "not forgetful to entertain strangers," the godly, earnest ministers who are coming from Germany, France, Switzerland, Spain, Italy, Sweden, Belgium, Holland, and Russia. They all speak English, and we believe that a special spiritual blessing will rest upon the extension of a generous but simple hospitality to them. Invitations, stating the nationality preferred, can be sent to E. Pearsall Smith, 9, Paternoster-row; or to the Local Secretary, C. Buchel, 61, King's-road, Brighton.

THE GOSPEL AMONGST SAILORS.

The Bishop of St. David's presided at Swansea at a meeting of the Missions to Seamen Society, when Commander Wm. Dawson, R.N., said:—The great work of the gospel amongst sailors must be done at sea. The individual sailor kneeling in private prayer in the fore-castle was a silent power of God—a living witness to all on board; the officer conducting divine worship every Lord's-day was, whether he himself be but a finger-post pointing the way to others or not, a minister of God for good; the shipowner who evinced an actual interest in the spiritual well-being of his crew, and aided his officers in such duties, was a great missionary. Chaplains could organize these shipboard services, furnish hymn and prayer-books, and books of sermons before ships sailed; and the Holy Spirit of God might be trusted to do the rest. The Missions to Seamen Society had thirty-two seaports, occupied by forty honorary chaplains, and forty-six mission clergy and Scripture-readers, with an income of £10,721 19s. last year. The agents were also working well. At Cardiff, the dockmaster told him the Missions to Seamen ship "Thisbe" was a power felt throughout the whole splendid fleet in those enormous docks; whilst in Penarth Roads, a capital Reader worked a fine mission yacht through the wind-bound fleets in all weathers. He concluded with the wish that wherever the crosses of St. Andrew and St. George float over salt water, the cross of Christ may be taken up daily by all on board; that shipowners and officers may be led to entertain a just sense of their high responsibility as regards the spiritual as well as temporal interests of those over whom they are placed; and that one and all would pray that grace be given to all the chaplains of the Missions to Seamen to be wise, diligent, and faithful servants of Christ, and that the Spirit of God might abundantly bless their labours, and the awakening, establishing, and feeding of many souls.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.—The Annual Report, which is full of interesting details, and records the conversion of many souls through the instrumentality of the colporteurs, may be had, gratis, on application to Rev. W. Corden Jones, General Secretary, Pastors' College, Temple-street, St. George's-road, London, S.E.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE AT LAHORE.

The evening after their arrival, Mr. Somerville and his son met a number of Christian friends in the house of the Rev. W. Hooper, of the Divinity College connected with the Church Missionary Society. Prayer-meetings were held at eight o'clock in the mornings, and public preaching in the evenings. These services were well attended. The largest audience I ever saw in Lahore was assembled on Tuesday evening, to hear Mr. Somerville's lecture for young men, on "The Fiery Furnace." There were probably three hundred present, some standing throughout the address, which was listened to with great interest.

The Conference on the means of promoting the cause of our Saviour in Lahore among nominal Christians and heathen was also well attended, and several missionaries took part in the discussion. At this meeting one of the American missionaries suggested that some of those present might employ themselves profitably in teaching in Sunday-schools for heathen children. This suggestion resulted in the establishment of four new Sunday-schools and one Bible-class.

The service which seemed most satisfactory to our visitors was one for the benefit of heathen who speak the English language. This was held in the hall of the American Mission-school, and was attended by more than two hundred heathen gentlemen, and a number of Christians. We were charmed with the address delivered on this occasion on the introduction of Christianity into Europe. The description of Paul's reception and treatment at Philippi was most graphic, and the tone of the address most conciliatory. More than once his Asiatic auditors were reminded that Christianity was an Asiatic religion; that we were merely bringing to them what we had received from Asia; not that we wished to part with it, but to induce them to partake with us of its blessings. The audience was not only large, but attentive; and some forty or fifty Hindoos showed their appreciation of the discourse by attending the services held in the Union Church on the next Tuesday and Wednesday, which were Mr. Somerville's last days in Lahore.

There are now five ladies engaged in teaching girls' schools, and visiting zenanas in this city. Two other ladies have a school for native Christian girls. There are three missionaries of the Church Missionary Society who have a Divinity College, or training-school for native teachers and preachers, and who have charge also of one European and one native congregation. The American Presbyterian missionaries, four in number, have a boarding-school for Christian boys, and a number of schools for the heathen, in which there are about sixteen hundred children and youths. They have also one congregation of native Christians, one of Europeans in the civil station, and another in the military cantonments. They, as well as the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, also preach in the streets, or at the gates of the city, and visit the villages and towns in the district around Lahore.

I beg the prayers of the Christians of England for us and our work in the Punjab. C. D. FORMAN, Missionary.

SERVANTS' HOME.—A small Home has been opened at 87, Railton-road, East Brixton, which, it is earnestly hoped, may prove a shelter to many servants when out of place.

AN ENCOURAGING SIGHT.—A few weeks ago a few of the joiners in the Dockyard hit upon an idea (or shall I not say God inspired the thought?), viz., to spend a part of their dinner time on Saturdays in playing and singing Moody and Sankey's hymns. I may say the men do not leave the yard for dinner on Saturdays, but stay an hour less in the afternoon. The sight to-day was indeed a glorious one, for the numbers had gone on increasing during the past six weeks, until there were present about 600 in their working clothes, just as they had left their benches, assembled around a band of five musicians—one cornopean, two flutes, and two violins. There they stood, or sat, caps off, holding some of the little blue-covered hymn-books in their hands and singing Nos. 2, 11, 20, and 35 as heartily as those assembled in the Agricultural Hall. A large notice-board told the hymns for the day. There are also similar gatherings being held among the smiths, shipwrights, fitters, and other. May the narrative of this lead to many similar gatherings in our dockyards, factories, and workshops in this and other countries. One of the Scripture-readers had a room holding fifty or sixty packed full a few days since. At the close he asked any anxious ones to remain, and no less than twenty did so. Praise the Lord!—Yours in Jesus, G. D. Portsmouth Dockyard.

FOR THE YOUNG.

MISSIONARY MUSIC.

Have you ever brought a penny to the missionary-box—
A penny which you might have spent like other little folks?
And when it falls among the rest, have you ever heard a [ring,
Like a pleasant sound of welcome, which the other pennies sing?

This is missionary music, and it has a pleasant sound;
For pennies make a shilling, and shillings make a pound;
And many pounds together the gospel news will send,
Which tell the distant heathen that the Saviour is their Friend.

And oh! what joyous music is the missionary song,
When it seems to come from every heart, and sounds from every tongue—

When happy Christian little ones all sing with one accord
Of the times when realms of darkness shall be kingdoms of the Lord!

But sweeter far than all, which Jesus loves to hear,
Are children's voices when they breathe a missionary prayer—
When they bring the heart-petition to the great Redeemer's throne,
That He will choose the heathen out, and take them for His own.

This is the music Jesus taught when He was here below;
This is the music Jesus loves to hear in glory now;
And many a one from distant lands will reach His heavenly home

In answer to the children's prayer, "O Lord, Thy kingdom come!"

Then, missionary children, let this music never cease;
Work on, work on in earnest, for the Lord, the Prince of Peace;

There is praying work and paying work for every heart and Till the missionary chorus shall go forth through all the land.

THE BELLEVILLE HOME, CANADA.

Mrs. Merry writes to us respecting the calamity to this Home, recorded in THE CHRISTIAN of April 29:—"I am glad to be able to tell you all the books and other documents were saved, and Miss Billbrough's wearing apparel. A temporary building has been erected, and the children are in it ere this, as it was almost completed at the time the mail left."

"J. S. C." writes, with respect to this calamity:—"I have been so long interested in Miss Macpherson's noble work among the little ones, and am so thoroughly convinced of the importance of that branch of it carried on at Marchmont, that I am very anxious to help in raising funds for the rebuilding of the Home. I therefore write to make the following proposal. I shall be very pleased to add £5 per cent. to any sum sent to you for that purpose, up to £600, during the next six weeks."

We hope this proposal will evoke the practical sympathy of our readers, and we would ask friends to state, in sending donations, if they are in response to J. S. C.'s appeal, so that our correspondent may know the extent of her liability.

Miss Macpherson may have reached England before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN appears, so that in our next week's paper we shall hope to give our readers later information. She will hope to meet friends at the Monthly Workers' Meeting, on Wednesday, 19th inst.

FLOWERS FOR THE SICK.—It will be of great interest to the supporters of the Flower Mission to know with what joyful surprise the first arrival of the flowers was welcomed by all in this hospital, and how pleasing is the anticipation with which they await the weekly renewal of the gift. The more thoughtful among them, no doubt, welcome the God-sent message which the accompanying text conveys; and if by the more indifferent the enclosing card is thoughtlessly thrown away, we may yet hope that the flowers themselves bear their own message, telling them as they do of hearts yearning for their salvation, and thus awakening in their minds the same solicitude for themselves. If but one conversion should be the result of this noble Mission, its supporters will not regret the strenuous efforts they have put forth, remembering Him who spared not his own Son, that sinners might be saved. Fever Hospital, Islington.

LONDON (TWO DAYS') CONVENTION.

Among the most effective and important agencies in propagating and disseminating the good news of revival throughout the three kingdoms, as well as prompting to renewed and extended effort in the work, have been the series of Conventions held by our brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey in many of the large towns where they have laboured. All these gatherings have attracted ministers and Christian workers generally from the surrounding country, and from the sister kingdoms, and it would be impossible to estimate the results that have flowed from them. The last one held at Liverpool, two months ago, has had a very practical issue in the conception and carrying out of a movement for providing "British Workmen," or places of safe and comfortable resort for the thousands of dock labourers in that great shipping emporium. And that is but one illustration of what these Conventions have, under the Divine blessing, brought about.

What will be, we suppose, the closing meeting of this series, held in direct connection with the work of the American evangelists, took place at the Haymarket Opera House, on Wednesday and Thursday last. We think it most likely that the May meetings proper—now in full swing in London—as well as the Annual Synod of the English Presbyterian Church sitting last week, deprived the Convention of some of the interest, and, perhaps, usefulness, which a more numerous attendance would have produced; but, notwithstanding, the number of delegates from Scotland, Ireland, and the provinces was very large, and the proceedings were extremely interesting throughout. There was also a numerous attendance of the public. We trust there will be results commensurate with the occasion; indeed, from the spirit of earnestness and determination that characterized the various speeches, we are warranted in believing that this will be the case.

WEDNESDAY.

The Convention opened at ten o'clock, with the singing of the appropriate hymn—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, then read Phil. iv., and commented on the passage in his own characteristic, epigrammatic way. Verse 6. "Be careful for nothing," etc. It is like a doctor's prescription; sometimes we miss the cure, by omitting one of the ingredients, and mixing up the rest. "I can do all things"—surely Paul is off the rails at length—"through Christ which strengtheneth me"; ah! that's the secret of it. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am," etc. It didn't come naturally to him; it needed a good deal of learning. "My God shall supply all your need." Would the Bank of England sign a cheque like that?

After prayer by Rev. W. H. Chapman, and the singing of "The Great Physician," Mr. Moody called for limiting each speaker to five minutes. Later in the day he requested to be provided with a bell, with which to remind refractory orators of this rule; and he now and then made it tingle very gently, as if to say, "I am very sorry to stop you, but really—I must." Mr. Moody presided throughout the proceedings, it is needless to add, with his usual tact and happiness.

Rev. W. Bradbury broke the ice with a brief sketch of the work that had come under his own observation in and around London, and gave the details of the conversion of an infidel.

Rev. Mr. Jones, of Illinois, spoke of the great spiritual movement in the Western States of America, and made special reference to the labours of Mr. H. Moorhouse in Chicago, and Mr. Henry Varley in New York. He described a particular form of evangelistic effort common in the States called "canvassing." The plan seems to be that of mapping out districts and towns, and entrusting each district or town to some suitable man, who is responsible for a series of services being held there. Much good had resulted from this, he said, and he advised the adoption of the plan in this and the sister kingdoms.

Rev. W. Hay Chapman related an incident to show the indirect workings of this movement, and Rev. T. Thomas gave a gratifying narrative of special services at Plymouth, undertaken and sustained chiefly by students there.

The 100th Psalm being sung,

Rev. W. Gill, of the London Missionary Society, and sixteen years a missionary in the South Sea Islands, told of the marvellous change that the preaching of the gospel had wrought in these Islands since he first went there, and urged the claims of the 750 millions of heathendom on those who had received so much blessing during these revival times.

Mr. Aitken, of Sheffield, said the good work was still going on there, and among the villages round about.

Rev. J. Kelman, of Leith, in reporting the continued progress of the movement in Edinburgh, said the number of those who had given in their names as converts now amounted to about 3000. The Lord was still working at Leith, and in the country round about. The tent recently used at Leith had been taken to a village in the country, and was crowded every night, there being sometimes as many as a hundred anxious inquirers.

Mr. Wills, a farmer from Devonshire, gave a rousing address, in which he told of God's wondrous working in Chard, Crewkerne, Sidmouth, and other places in that part of the country. He rather deprecated evangelistic work by committees, and said it was best not to wait for them, but to set to work each one as he could find opportunity.

Mr. Moody was obliged to stay the flow of his eloquence, remarking, at the same time, that he wished there were a hundred farmers like him.

"What shall the harvest be?" came in very suitably after an address by a farmer; Mr. Sankey sang the last two verses as a solo very touchingly.

Rev. Mr. Van Meter, of Rome, said: While there was cause for weeping over Italy, there was much to rejoice over. He gave a most interesting and graphic account of the marvellous manner in which the way had recently been opened up for the preaching of the gospel, and the holding of Sunday-schools, under the very shadow and within hearing distance of the Vatican.

Rev. Mr. Swanson, missionary from Amoy, spoke of the powerful influence likely to be exerted in many parts of the world by the Chinese, and appealed for special effort on their behalf.

Rev. Jas. Cargin, of Dublin, in speaking of the revival in Ireland, said that God's blessing had especially rested on those places where united services had been held. In Ireland they had already carried out the plan recommended by Mr. Jones as to "canvassing." They had formed a "Philip and Andrew Society"—every disciple try to bring some friend to the Saviour.

Rev. W. H. Aitken, of Liverpool, had good news to tell of the work at St. Helen's, Southport, Birkenhead, Ormskirk, and other Lancashire towns. His own congregation had also been greatly blessed; a hundred young men in connection with it now engaged in house-to-house visitation.

Mr. Sankey brought the subject to a close by singing the hymn—

"There's a cry from Macedonia—

'Come and help us!'

The light of the gospel bring;

Oh come!

Let us hear the joyful tidings of salvation;

We thirst for the living spring."

It is a very spirit-stirring call to work for Christ; and, we trust, as it fell in gentle though rousing accents from Mr. Sankey's lips, it may have found a lodgment in many a heart that will respond to obey the divine command to "go forth into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." From twelve to one the usual was held. After singing, the requests for prayer were read—among them one presented by Mr. Sankey, "For the authoress of the hymn, 'There is life for a look at the crucified One,' who is now passing through a season of deep mental and spiritual depression."

Rev. W. H. Aitken read and expounded part of the seventh and eighth chapters of Judges, dwelling on the difficulties thrown in the way of Gideon and his three hundred men, who were "faint yet pursuing," and the punishment that overtook the men of Succoth and Peniel for not rendering assistance in that crisis. Applying the history to the present revival work, he said that those who stood aloof would certainly know something of the thorns and briers of the wilderness after the victory had been achieved. He had an idea that there were clergymen at this moment who were experiencing this.

The hour was filled up by prayer, and remarks from several speakers, not, however, of special import.

After an hour's interval, the Convention reassembled at two o'clock, and the next two hours were set aside for discussion of the how well-worn but still unanswered question,

"HOW TO REACH THE MASSES."

"Work, for the night is coming," and "Rescue the perishing," being heartily sung,

Dr. W. P. Mackay, of Hull, opened the subject in an address of great vigour. His first point was that every Christian was bound to take his and her part in the work, just as every member of the body had some specific function assigned to it. He used the forcible illustration of the damage that would ensue, not only to the part specially affected, but to the whole body, if say the little finger were doubled up, and kept in that position for a lengthened period. "Masses!" he exclaimed. "We think of a few millions in London, but when we speak of masses, my mind goes to China and Japan. Think of five hundred millions who have never heard that there was a Christ! God has been knocking at the heart of the world—London—as never before; ought we not to take advantage of it in order to reach the masses of the world? If the Queen commissioned her servants to encircle the world, it would be done in eighteen months, and yet it has taken the Church eighteen centuries even to set about obeying the Divine injunction to preach the gospel to every creature. He closed with an earnest appeal to practical and speedy effort in spreading abroad the knowledge of the Saviour's love.

Mr. C. Cook advocated open-air preaching, and gave instances of conversion through the services in Hyde Park.

Dr. Smith recalled the wonderful workings of God's Spirit in past revivals, and said that instead of asking what we are doing for Christ, let us see what we are asking Christ to do.

Mr. E. Radcliffe said that Dr. Mackay and Dr. Smith had brought us to the A B C of the Acts of the Apostles—Work and Prayer. During the weeks that remain of these special services, let us also follow the apostolic example in caring for the poor of London. There were profligate beggars in London getting the money bestowed in charity, while widows were starving on bread and tea, tea and bread, and with miserable clothing, both for body and bedding. He made an earnest appeal for effort in this direction, which, he said, was always the sign of a true revival.

Rev. Mr. Jones, of Tunbridge Wells, told of much good accomplished by a lady of his congregation among drunkards and others.

Mr. Sankey having sung "Scatter seeds of kindness,"

Rev. Mr. Turner, of Deddington, testified to the power of sacred song, and also counselled union among Christians if they were to look for great results.

Rev. W. Fraser, of Edinburgh, told of the blessed union of spirit that existed among the churches there; no one even wished to steal the sheep from his brother's fold. He also bore testimony to the good work in the country districts of Scotland.

Mr. Naggs, of London, advocated the claims of the large class of skilled artisans, who, it was said, were becoming alienated from the gospel. While there might be some truth in this, still it was not difficult to recall them.

Rev. Mr. Woffendale spoke of evangelistic work in the vicinity of King's-cross, where infidel discussions are largely carried on. The infidels used, he said, to draw away their audiences, but Mr. Sankey's hymns had not only brought the people back to listen to the preaching, but they had attracted the infidels themselves. He gave an illustration of how the best things may be abused, by recounting the story of a respectable-looking man who had come to the services at King's-cross Theatre, and joined heartily in singing the hymns, and who was afterwards seen singing those same hymns in the streets, in the disguise of a beggar.

Mr. J. J. Jones described the work now started in the tent at the East-end, for the double purpose of relieving the wants of the body, and supplying the greater needs of the soul, among the East-end poor.

Mr. Tom Jones, the engine-driver, advised converted working-men being set to work among their own class, and narrated his personal experience in this respect.

Dr. Barnardo believed the only way to reach any class of people, even the poorest, was not through the medium of their stomachs, but by the simple, earnest preaching of the old gospel. It was a libel on the working-classes to imagine that they could only be reached by feeding their bodies. The great lack he experienced in the East-end was a sufficient number of places to hold those who flocked every Lord's-day to hear the gospel.

Mr. R. Paton exhibited to the audience a large sheet he had received, containing reports of entertainments provided for the working-men in a London district, and from which all allusion to the gospel was carefully excluded, while some of the items were of a very questionable kind. The masses would never be reached until men were burdened with the love of souls and a desire for God's glory.

After Mr. Sankey had sung "Only an Armour-bearer," further remarks were made by Mr. Watts, of East London, Mr. Campbell White, of Glasgow, Rev. C. B. Sawday, and Rev. W. Bradbury, who made special reference to female effort. Having read the words of Psalm lxxviii. 11, "The Lord gave the word; great was the company of those that published it," he said the literal Hebrew translation was, "Great was the company of the female preachers."

The last hour of the day's proceedings, from four to five, was filled up with which has always been among the most interesting departments of these Conventions. Mr. Moody shines conspicuously in his remarkably thorough-going, incisive, and common-sense way of answering the multifarious questions sent in. He confines these answers to points of Christian practice, and judiciously declines to touch disputed doctrines, unless, perhaps, the fundamental one of the Atonement. We regret that space obliges us to condense very considerably the answers, some of which were given at great length.

How to Reach the Masses.—The great thing was to have, first of all, a quickened Church. It was hardly time yet to speak of reaching the masses until the Church was reached. When the pulpit and the pew are united, then Christianity will become a power in the earth.

How can we get up a fresh interest in our Church? People will not come to the week-day meetings.—Mr. Moody's answer might be summarized in the words of the Scotchwoman he quoted, "Put a little more snuff in the sermon."

What will give me a love for the Lord's work?—Get so full of the Word of God, that you will be compelled to speak to others. Many people cannot speak because they have nothing to say.

How should we deal with Inquirers?—Take them to the Bible. Don't say much yourselves, but let God speak by his Word. Introduce them to Christ at once as revealed in the Scriptures.

How to deal with Infidels.—Never argue with them; I never knew one of them to be converted in that way yet. Pray with them, and for them; and if they are really desirous to know the truth, they will soon listen to God's Word.

Our church is not one quarter full; how can we fill it?—Go out, and gather the people in; and if they won't come in, go out and preach to them where they are.

How long should evangelistic meetings be held?—About an hour. Send the people away hungry for more, and they will be sure to come back. Let them be short, and to the point. Have only one speaker at a meeting, and let him have the control of the meeting.

How can the prayer-meeting be made interesting and profitable? Take up some subject (to be announced a week before), such as Faith, Love, Grace, Assurance, and get as many as possible to take part. Have pleasant, comfortable buildings, and study to make the meetings interesting. Then the people will come. I pity the church that has not got a good prayer-meeting.

How do you get up your sermons?—For a number of years I have kept large envelopes, marked, say, "Blood," "Heaven," "Faith," etc., and everything I hear or meet with on any of these subjects, I make a note of, and keep it in these envelopes. After some time I have got material enough in one of these envelopes for three or four sermons. People sometimes speak of its taking four or five months to prepare a sermon: it takes me four or five years. Mr. Moody then gave young Christians some excellent advice with respect to taking notes of sermons, etc., and thus accumulating a store of knowledge which would be of the greatest possible service to them in later years.

How to conduct a Bible-class?—That depends on the kind of class you have. One way I like is to study the Bible topically. Take up "Love," and go through the Bible teaching on that. Take a month or two to study one subject. Get the people in the class to study the subject themselves. Do not get into the habit of preaching in a Bible-class; what you want is to draw the people out. "Well, brother, what is your opinion about it?" That wakes him up; he begins to find out he has got no opinion, and gets thinking about it.

How can we keep up union among Christians in the United Kingdom?—Mr. Moody said this could not be done until all the large towns were provided with halls where Christians of every section could meet. He hoped some wealthy Christians would give £50,000 or £100,000 to build these halls in London. It was the tabernacle that kept the tribes together in the wilderness. Where the ministers had been most united during this great movement, the Lord had blessed it most.

How can we arouse a cold, dead Church?—Get warm yourself; it will soon spread. It is easy to talk about a cold church, but such people very often look through cold eyes.

Ought young converts to be set to work at once, or should they be built up?—Both. The spirit of the gospel is, Get and give. Work and study; if you feed yourselves well, you are ready to work well. The first impulse of a young convert is to work. You say they will make mistakes. Who does not? Some people only make one mistake—they are so afraid of making mistakes, they never do anything at all!

How to reach drunkards?—Not by condemning them. Christ never condemned any of that class of people; He condemned hypocrites. If we are to reach drunkards, we must do it in a kind, Christian way. A plan that has been wonderfully blessed in our country has been that of "witnessing"—reclaimed drunkards telling what God has done for them. We have reached a great many in that way. There is many a poor drunkard in London who thinks he cannot be saved; they do not know that Christ is stronger than strong drink. Let those who have been saved speak to such. I do not know why we should not have meetings of that kind.

How can I become a fruitful Christian?—Keep out of the world. The further you get from it the better. Be in it, but not of it.

Mr. Sankey sang, "Nothing but leaves"—a suitable echo of the final question of the hour, and the first day's Convention was closed by prayer, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. Adolph Saphir.

THURSDAY.

To-day's Convention opened at ten o'clock, and the attendance during the day was larger than that of yesterday. The proceedings, especially the last two hours of the afternoon, were of the deepest interest.

After singing and prayer, Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, as on the previous day, read and expounded the Scripture—part of John iv. Applying the passage to the subject of the first hour—

OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS,

he said the true spirit of Sunday-school teaching was that which animated our Lord whose meat and drink it was to do the will of his Father in heaven. Dr. Arnot excels in illustration, and one that he repeated here, given, he said, to Sunday-school teachers many years ago, was, we thought, exceedingly happy. Its object was to show that the way to lead the children to Christ was, first of all, to gain their affections for one's self. In the country he said the calves are reared on milk, which is brought to them in pails; as a rule, they do not let them suck the cow. When the first pail of milk is brought to them, they go dashing at it with their heads, and probably overturn the contents. Next time, however, the milkmaid, not wishing to lose more of the milk, instead of putting it down at once before the calf, gives it her hand to suck, and this the calf does with great readiness. "But," said Mr. Arnot, "it will be a long time before the calf gets fat on that." The maid then gently lowers her hand into the pail, and though the calf continues to suck it, it at the same time drinks in the milk that gives it strength, and thus by-and-by it learns to take the milk itself without the leading of the hand. So by first gaining the affections of a child, the teacher can the more easily lead the child to the Saviour.

As Mr. Arnot sat down, Mr. Moody said, "The question is now fully opened."

Mr. T. B. Bishop, of the Children's Special Service Mission, said, however difficult it was to reach the working-classes, there was no trouble in reaching their children. He detailed the operations of the Special Service Mission, already well known to our readers, and urged the holding of children's services on Sunday evenings. He gave an interesting account of children's services at Ipswich.

Mr. Eugene Stock said the Church of England schools had been greatly stirred by the revival movement. He thought they did not so much require any fresh agency as a fresh baptism of the Spirit on existing agencies.

Mr. Coote, of Cambridge, said that a "happy-faced" Christianity would win the children to Christ. He gave a very interesting sketch of a work of grace among the boy choristers at Cambridge.

Rev. Dr. Hanna, of Belfast, said that in their schools they were happily able to retain the young people after they had passed beyond the age of childhood. In many schools a large proportion of the pupils were young men and women up to thirty years of age. As a consequence, numbers of them joined the church. They succeeded in keeping hold of them by selecting suitable teachers, and making the classes interesting.

From eleven to twelve the topic for consideration was,

YOUNG DISCIPLES: HOW TO UTILIZE THEM.

After some remarks by Rev. T. Thomas on personal appeal, and a gentleman in the pit on the power of united prayer,

Rev. G. Bowden, of Chelsea, who had worked for twenty-five years among the middle classes, said he had adopted this plan. He had introduced his young disciples, either personally or by photograph, to some destitute child, who had been gathered from the London streets. He had got them to band together, and raise enough money, by collecting or by saving, to support a child. If one could not do it, two might; if not two, four. They wrote to the child, sent it a little gift on its birthday, and made it feel that there was some one in the world who cared for it. In that way the young converts learned to work for Christ.

Rev. T. Richardson, of Stepney, was utilizing the young converts in the East-end in various ways—in the Sunday-school, as district visitors, giving away tracts, in house-to-house visitation, etc. Those who could sing he put into the choir; he did not have Satan's people to lead God's praise in the church, and he would be glad if one result of this Mission should be that every person, from the churchwarden down to the doorkeeper, should be a Christian. Every converted man and woman should be doing something for the Lord; if not, they had not received the kind of conversion God gave him.

A gentleman from Bishop Auckland spoke of open-air services and special services in the winter, entirely conducted by the young men who had been converted during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to that place.

Mr. Sankey having sung "Your mission,"

Mr. Moody said this was about the most important question that could come before the Convention. These young converts could reach their friends better than any one else, and they ought to be encouraged. He then described the "Yokefellows' Band" at work in America—yoking together a young convert with an experienced Christian, and setting them to work. To show how every one could do something, Mr. Moody told the story of the Swede, who, not understanding English, stood at the corner of the street in Chicago, and gave away invitations to the service to all the passers-by. He had a happy smile, and showed a white and beautiful set of teeth. If they thanked him, he smiled; if they cursed him, it was all the same; he smiled. He did not understand, and the people thought they never knew such a good-natured fellow. In connection with Mr. Moody's church in Chicago, they visited the public-houses, and all the surrounding district, before service, and they always had a full house, though the preaching might sometimes be very poor. Among the other agencies at work were boys' and girls' prayer-meetings, young men's and young women's meetings, so that all classes were attended to. He strongly advocated the young men who had some gifts and intelligence going out to the country places, and holding meetings, as was now being done successfully in Scotland and Ireland.

Rev. M. Pim gave an account of work at Doncaster, specially during the time of the races, when thousands of tracts were distributed. The young women helped in this work by assorting the tracts. He did not think a hundredth part of the tract-distribution was accomplished that ought to be. He had given tracts in third-class compartments on the underground railway, changing from one to another on the way, and never got an uncivil word.

Rev. Mr. Leonards of Boston, Massachusetts, spoke of the "praying bands" in America, who went from town to town under a responsible leader, and had been the means of creating revival in many places.

Mr. Sankey deprecated any fresh organizations being started; he thought every young convert should go to work in the church to which he belonged. From his own early experience, he believed that what young disciples needed most was a word of sympathy, encouragement, and counsel from the older Christians. He thought much good could be done by those who could sing, visiting the poor and afflicted, and singing to them. It would open their hearts to the reception of the truth.

"Jesus, Lover of my soul," opened the

NOON PRAYER-MEETING.

Dr. Mackay, of Hull, read part of John xv., commenting specially on the seventh verse, "If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." These words contained the two conditions on which the prayers of God's people were answered—communion and intelligence.

Mr. Moody prayed specially for the young men's meeting, next night, at the Agricultural Hall, and also at the request of a man in the audience, for his brother sailors.

At the close of the prayer-meeting, the Hon. J. L. Farwell, of Chicago, said he had been commissioned by the prayer-meeting there, and also by a meeting of ministers in Philadelphia, to congratulate and thank the friends in Great Britain who had so cordially supported Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in their endeavours to carry salvation to the masses. He hoped they had only seen the beginnings of the wondrous work of grace, and desired to give God all the praise. The Doxology closed the morning sitting.

After an hour's recess, the convention reassembled, to consider, first,

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

After singing, and a prayer of great unction and fervency by Rev. C. B. Sawday,

Rev. W. H. Aitken said that some of those who had not actively engaged in the work might still have doubts about the necessity or wisdom of the inquiry-room. He quoted passages from the Acts to show that the apostles used the after-meeting. Experience, he said, had proved that God chiefly blessed the public preaching to awaken sinners, and personal conversation to lead them into conscious peace. Preachers had made a great mistake in past times in not following up the spoken word in this way. They had got into a conventional style of preaching—not as if they had looked for results—and the results had not come. Now when he preached he was all the time thinking of the results in the after-meeting, and he believed if all preachers did the same it would produce a revival throughout the whole of England. The inquiry-meeting, too, brought into play the energies of the Christian people in the congregation. He earnestly urged on those who had not adopted the after-meeting at the close of the public preaching to do so, and the most blessed results would follow.

Mr. Sankey at this stage of the convention sang "The Ninety and Nine" by special request, it is scarcely necessary to say, with all the power and pathos he throws into this glorious gospel story.

Dr. Mackay resumed the subject of the inquiry-room, and said the way that experience recommended to him was that of bringing the anxious one right to God's Word. The great thing was to grapple with a man's conscience, and that could only be done by transfixing him, as it were, with the sword of the Spirit. He would not argue with infidels, and told, as an illustration, how he had convinced a sceptic once by making him see himself, in the light of Scripture, as "a fool and a liar." He had met the man often since, and though he was an earnest Christian, he never seemed to get beyond that word that had reached his heart and conscience at the first. "Use the sword of the Spirit," said Dr. Mackay, in resuming his seat; "nothing can stand against it."

Rev. W. H. Chapman and Rev. T. Richardson expressed their sense of the importance of this part of the work, and

Rev. J. C. Whitmore related how he had been able to convey light to the mind of a negro inquirer at the East-end Hall by a simple illustration about giving and taking, backed up by some appropriate passages of Scripture.

Rev. E. C. Billing also testified to the great things that had resulted from the inquiry-meetings at the Agricultural Hall.

"What shall the harvest be?" having been sung, the subject next on the programme was—

OUR YOUNG MEN.

Mr. Moody called first on Mr. H. Drummond, who has been so closely associated with this department of the revival work, to speak.

In the course of an excellent and practical address, Mr. Drummond related the history of the movement among the young men, from its inception in Glasgow, to the latest, and perhaps most successful example in Liverpool, with the remarkable phases it had presented to the special gatherings of working-men and boys. The young men of Great Britain (continued Mr. Drummond) have not been utilized as they might be. We talk of the mineral, intellectual, and scientific wealth of England, but these were nothing, in point of usefulness to the world, compared with her wealth of young men, if they were once stirred up to the knowledge that they could win souls to Christ. He believed God had a great future in store for the young men of Great Britain, and he appealed to the Christians to pray for them, and cheer them on in their glorious work.

Another young man from Edinburgh having spoken of the Sabbath-morning breakfasts to the poor there, undertaken chiefly by the young men, the fruits of the recent revival.

Mr. Coote, of Cambridge, gave an exceedingly encouraging account of the Lord's work among the undergraduates in the various colleges there. The daily prayer-meeting, commenced, amid much opposition, twelve years ago, had now become a public institution among the students, and was largely attended. Speaking of the spread of the movement among the members of the boating clubs, he gave a very recent instance of how the captain of one of these clubs, for years a Christian, having just the other day experienced the "remarkable phenomenon" of talking to some one about his soul's salvation, invited a number of his fellow-students to his rooms, where several of the other Christian students told their spiritual experience with marked results. Next week there was to be a special mission effort at Cambridge, and greater results still would be looked for.

Mr. Campbell White, of Glasgow, said while it was a grand thing to see so many young men offering themselves for the work of the minister and the missionary, it must not be forgotten that Christian young men were equally wanted in the office, at the bench, and on the Exchange.

Mr. Stalker, of Edinburgh, was the last speaker on the subject, and was introduced by Mr. Moody as the man who had woke him up on this question of reaching the young men. The purport of Mr. Stalker's address was that, in order to the gospel having much influence on young men, it must be presented to them in a manly way, suited to their views of life as a precious possession.

Mr. Sankey fittingly wound up the hour by singing, with much emphasis and expression, the hymn, "What are you going to do, brother?"

Mr. Moody occupied the last hour of the two day's Convention with a continuation of

THE QUESTION DRAWER.

We repeat our regret at having to compress Mr. Moody's most pointed and practical answers to the queries sent in. They were so numerous that even with his whirlwind rate of speech, at the close of the time he had to leave some of them unanswered.

Why are there not meetings for young women?—When we get a little further on, and the women get their mouths opened, we may have such meetings. At Glasgow some of the leading ladies used to speak in the women's meetings, and there were a great many inquirers. If there are any ladies who want such meetings here, let them write me a letter, and we will try what we can do about starting them. Nobody would object to women speaking to women.

Can a man be a successful evangelist if he has charge of a church?—Well, I think a pastor is one thing, and an evangelist is another. If a man has got a church in London, and has to attend to all his duties in connection with it, he cannot go away for a week's preaching, and do both well. I have tried it and failed.

How would you deal with a man who comes into the inquiry-room without apparently feeling anxious?—I would not talk very much about his feelings. I would hold Scripture right up before him, pray with him, and leave him with Christ. I would not turn him out or refuse to talk with him.

If a man has the Spirit on him, are you right in stopping the prayer if he exceeds the allotted time?—Men who have the Spirit on them generally pray very short.

Do you believe it is good to have Young Men's Christian Associations?—I do. I think they are very important. Our young men do not now-a-days stay at home as they used to. Look at the number of young men who leave home, and come into the great towns. If there is any time when they need a warm grasp of the hand, it is when they come into a great city. We want better Associations, larger buildings, and more of them, and to keep them open to all who choose to come.

Is it right for a Christian to make a vow to bring so many souls to Christ?—I do not think it is. At the same time I would urge every one to try and bring some one else every day. I have never known any one to try it but they liked it very well.

What did you mean yesterday about promise-meetings?—A good many people say they cannot speak. Let them bring a promise out of the Word of God, and read it at the meeting. Brother Chapman is going to have one, I hope, and he says to brother Jones, "I wish you would come and read a promise in our meetings." Bring up the promise you think is best, though it would be a hard thing to say which is best. It is like a man who has ten children, and he does not know which he likes the best. If you know a good promise, do not keep it to yourself. [It appears to us that this suggestion of Mr. Moody's could be most easily acted on in every congregation and Christian circle with untold wealth of results. Will our friends try it, and let us know the issue?]

Why should the children of ministers turn out to be worse than others?—I deny it. In our country that statement was made. A man took the pains to inquire into it, and found that there was not one word of truth in it. It teaches us, however, that grace is not hereditary.

What is the responsibility of young converts towards a dead minister?—Pray for him. At the same time, if he spoke against the doctrine of the atonement, I would get out of his church or chapel as Lot got out of Sodom. But I think we do not pray enough for our ministers.

Have Christian workers any right to work beyond their strength?—I do not know whether that is intended to be personal or not, but I say, No. I always go to bed when I get tired: but I thank God I get tired, because then I sleep so well. I do not think it is generally the rule for Christians to overwork themselves. Many are dying for want of work. It is care and anxiety that kills. Cast all your care on the Lord, and you will be able to do five times as much.

In dealing with inquirers, should not the duty of repentance be pressed on them before accepting Christ?—That depends on what you call repentance. If it is godly sorrow for sin, I say not, because a man cannot have godly sorrow for sin until he has Christ. If you want to produce repentance, hold up Christ.

How can female agency be utilized in the Church?—It would take an hour to answer that question. The best of the talent in the Church lies sleeping. Mr. Moody indicated house-to-house visitation as one great field for female effort, and said he sympathized very much with the present movement carried on by Mr. Radcliffe. He also urged visitation of the sick, and spoke of the wonderful effect on the armies during the American war by the presence of female nurses.

The remaining questions answered by Mr. Moody had reference to Sunday-schools, and these we must defer to a future issue, when we hope to give his answers at the length which their importance demands.

Mr. Sankey having prayed earnestly for a soldier, who requested prayer at an earlier stage of the meeting, and had immediately thereafter to leave for Ireland, the deliberations of the two days were brought to a close. It was truly a season of much privilege, as well as responsibility, to all who attended, and we devoutly hope the issues may prove that the one has been realized, and the other neither forgotten nor neglected.

BLACK-DOWN HILLS MISSION.

I am rejoiced that Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's energetic action on house-to-house visitation and personal dealing has taken such a hold as it has in this day of grace. Well do I remember his stirring letters to me nearly twenty years since, and how they were used of God to burn out the apathy and cold indifference to the state of soul of the thousands around me.

From that time till now it has been my joyful service to the Lord to visit from house to house, and to deal with old and young about their soul's salvation. And as far as God has permitted me to see the results, not less than eighty per cent. of those who have been brought to the Lord have been by personal dealing in their homes.

I do earnestly pray that this blessed branch of work may spread to every city, town, and village of our land; for, alas! with all the machinery at work for the gospel, the masses are not reached, and will not be reached, unless Christians everywhere build next to their own house (see Neh. iii.).

On these hills we have sought for several years to carry out this visitation work from house to house, seeking to show believers the privilege of service to the Lord in every Christian seeking to be a witness for Him, and specially seeking to lay responsibility on some man whom we have discovered to have any measure of gift, to use that gift for the Lord, and for the good of the neighbourhood in which he dwells. And so with the women. And so a large tract of country has been constantly visited, and each person who has been willing to labour in this way has had blessing on his service.

Within the past few weeks I have had the joy of seeing several souls converted through personal dealing with them in their homes. And there are at this time many interesting cases which would, perhaps, never have been reached but in this manner. But we long to reach places that never have a visit from persons who speak simply and to the heart.

A Christian came to one of our meetings a few weeks since, a poor labouring man, and begged me to come to the place he lived in. I asked him if the gospel were not preached in the parish.

He replied, "Not that which the people can understand. And there are only a few people who go to hear."

"Do you get any visiting?" I asked.

"No," he said; "I have lived in the parish twenty years, and no one ever called at my house all that time to say anything about my soul."

"But how did you get converted?" I asked.

He replied, "I was told there was to be a baptism at C—, and I thought I would come over and see it; and it was there the Lord met with me, and saved my soul."

This man had come fifteen miles to witness a believer's baptism, and was converted; and now he longs to see others near him brought to the Lord.

I would gladly send help in the gospel to this district, and many others, if I could, but the needs of the work have exhausted all the funds at our disposal, so that we cannot assist in any further work until the Lord sends supplies for this.

Any help for this, or the many aged and sick poor in this wide district, or the general expenses of the Mission, will be thankfully received and acknowledged by, yours in the gospel,
GEO. BREALEY.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

GLASGOW.—About two thousand of the destitute poor were served with a breakfast in the Drill-hall, at eight o'clock, on Sunday morning, May 2; and it was a very striking sight to see so many ragged men, women, and children assembled for the purpose. After singing and prayer, a short sermon was preached by the Rev. G. W. McCree, from London, from the words, "Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you" (Acts iii. 26). The preacher showed that Jesus came to bless us with pardon, peace, and paradise, illustrating each point with an anecdote. Great feeling was displayed by many present, and it was felt that good was indeed done to the unsaved ones who were present.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

FROM "THE TIMES" OF MONDAY LAST.

A vast congregation assembled at the Agricultural Hall last night to join in the fiftieth and last service held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey under that roof. By seven o'clock the vast building was crowded in every part, and when the whole congregation rose to join in the opening hymn—38, "Wondrous love"—a more impressive sight could hardly be imagined. No one who has witnessed these services can doubt their powerful agency for good, not only upon the ruder masses of society, but upon many also who have been accustomed to associate the idea of "revivalism" with mere fanaticism and excitement. There was certainly nothing of this kind in yesterday's service. The devotional part of the service was as calm and unexciting as in the soberest parish church, while the sermon was not less calculated to benefit the most steady-going Churchman than to arouse the attention of those who had hitherto thought little about religion. We have no doubt that the West-end of London, to which Mr. Moody is now devoting his attention, will gain quite as much from his preaching as the North.

FAREWELL SERVICES AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

We are, somehow, oppressed with a sense of sadness as we seek to present to our readers a brief account of last Sunday's services at the Agricultural Hall. From the 9th of March to the 9th of May we have there seen so many wonderful sights, heard so many gracious and stirring words, and experienced so many movings of the Good Spirit in our hearts, that we are ready to say with the apostle, "It is good for us to be here; let us make three tabernacles." As we gather with the multitude, however, at this last "SUNDAY MORNING BREAKFAST" FOR THE SOUL, we are rudely reminded by the signs of change in the arrangements of the hall, that our wish is no more likely to be gratified than was Peter's, and that, after to-day, we shall renew our experiences in this place no more. Still we shall never be able to think of these two months' services without thankfulness and rejoicing, and we hope the memory of the past will help us when we are among the worldly multitude below, where are so many mountains to be removed, and so many devils to be rebuked and cast out. Whatever may be the use to which the hall is turned, henceforth it will be consecrated in the hearts and memories of thousands as the spot of their second birth.

The clouds and rain of Saturday had passed away before the wind, and the sun shone into the immense building with all the brightness of early summer (emblem of that Sun of Righteousness which within these walls had chased away the darkness from many a soul), lighting up the glorious picture of some twelve thousand immortal beings, drawn together by the common impulse of desiring to hear what God the Lord would speak to them by the lips of his honoured servants.

The service opened with Dr. H. Bonar's triumphant hymn, "Rejoice and be glad! the Redeemer has come," which was sung with a will, especially the chorus of the last verse—

"Sound His praises, tell the story
Of Him who was slain;
Sound His praises, tell with gladness
He cometh again."

Then Mr. Sankey sang, "Go work in my vineyard," with a power and effect which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to describe; and Mr. Moody, in his prayer that followed, asked the Lord if it would be too much to expect that there might be more conversions in the hall that day than during all the two months that had passed.

After Mr. Sankey had sung "Only an Armour-bearer" in a way that must have thrilled the heart of the humblest soldier in the assembly, Mr. Moody read and expounded the 8th chapter of Nehemiah, in which is described the reading of the law to the people and the effect it produced. Incidentally he uttered some very strong observations with respect to Sunday trading and travelling. "Let us go afoot on the Sabbath, and if we have a long walk, the Lord will walk with us, as He did with the two disciples. If we get a little tired, we will sleep all the better from having a good conscience in the matter."

Mr. Moody then proceeded with his address on "How to study the Bible," and instead of trying the difficult task of describing it, we prefer to give his leading thoughts in his own words. We only wish all the wondering world had been there to hear this admirable lecture. They would no longer, we think, be greatly puzzled to understand the secret of Mr. Moody's marvellous energy and success as a preacher. We regret we cannot give his remarks in extenso.

"All the men who have been very much used of God have been well versed in the Scriptures. Moses rehearsed God's dealings with the children of Israel; Peter told it out on the day of Pentecost, and Stephen did the same. Christ conquered Satan by the sword of the Word.

"How am I to know the Word of God? By studying it with the help of the Holy Ghost. As an American bishop said, not with the blue light of Presbyterianism, nor the red light of Methodism, nor the violet light of Episcopacy, but with the clear light of Calvary. We must study it on our knees, in a teachable spirit. If we know our Bible, Satan will not have much power over us, and we will have the world under our feet.

"For a number of years I have made a rule not to read any book that does not help me to understand the Word of God. I am a greater slave to that Book [holding up his Bible] than any man is to strong drink, and I am sure it does me a great deal more good too. If I go into a meeting without this Bible, I feel lonesome, and don't know what to do. But if I have got it, I am ready to get up and talk about any subject. Every Christian ought to have a good Bible—not so good that you are afraid to mark it—a Cruden's Concordance, and a Scripture text-book—not a birth-day text-book, but a Scripture text-book, published in Dublin at sixpence or a shilling.

"I think I have got the key to the study of the Bible—take it up topically. Take 'Love,' for instance, and spend a month studying what the Bible says about love, from Genesis to Revelation. Then you will love everybody, whether they love you or not. In the same way take up 'Grace,' 'Faith,' 'Assurance,' 'Heaven,' and so on. When you read the Bible, be sure you hunt for something.

"Spend six months studying Genesis; it is the key to the whole Book; it speaks of death, resurrection, judgment—it is the seed-plant of the whole Bible. Read the same chapter over, and over, and over again, and don't leave it until you have understood it. [Mr. Moody illustrated this point by describing the chromo-lithograph process, which requires some twenty-eight separate impressions, in order to produce a life-like portrait.] About the twenty-eighth time you read a chapter you will see the man Christ Jesus, who is on every page of Scripture.

"Here is another way. Take up one word in a book, such as the 'believes' of St. John's Gospel. Every chapter but two speaks of believing. Look up the nineteen 'personal interviews' with Christ, recorded in that Gospel. Take the 'conversions' of the Bible. [Here Mr. Moody recommended a book on this subject by Rev. A. Saphir, lately published by Messrs. Isbister.] Take the seven 'blesseds' and the seven 'overcomes' of Revelation. If you want to get the best book on 'assurance,' read 1 John iii. and the six things there worth 'knowing.' Take up the five 'precious things' of Peter, or the 'verilys' of St. John." Mr. Moody closed by repeating striking expositions of the book of Job as a whole, and of the "four things which are little, but exceeding wise," in Prov. xxx., told to him by some English friends.

The foregoing is, of course, the merest outline of Mr. Moody's address, but may serve to help those of our readers who had not the privilege of being present, in their study of the sacred volume. Mr. Moody has most liberally given out of its treasures to multitudes in the Agricultural Hall these last two months, and it was fitting that his concluding exhortation to the Christians should be to make the Bible their own by personal study; so that they, in turn, might, like the prophet of old, be unable to hold their peace, but having drunk of the cup of salvation, should pass it on.

At the commencement of the service, it was announced that a hall had been secured for the young men's meetings between Nos. 7 and 8, Islington-green, and to be called Islington Hall. The meetings are to be held there nightly in future, at eight o'clock, not nine, as heretofore. We hope the young men of the North will rally around this place, and that it may become a centre of great blessing in the conversion of multitudes of that class.

Mr. Moody appealed, at the close of the morning service, for more house-to-house visitors, and we believe about twenty gave in their names—a very small number, we think, out of such a gigantic congregation.

THE AFTERNOON SERVICE

presented an intensely interesting and beautiful sight. Before half-past three, the hall was crammed with an audience of both sexes and all ages, the sombre dress of the gentlemen being relieved by the patches of colour, chiefly blue, that betokened the presence of many of our sisters, who had donned their summer apparel.

Mr. Sankey sang, "Yet there is room," and "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," touching, we believe, many, if not all, of the hearts in the vast company, saved or unsaved.

From the story of Naaman's cure, Mr. Moody pictured forth, in words of tremendous earnestness, the leprosy of sin that has covered the human race, and the gospel plan of salvation from its power and punishment. At the close he was moved, by the solemnity of the occasion, to make an unusually importunate appeal to the unsaved, and many wept—some for sorrow at finding themselves in such evil case, and others for joy at the thought that they had, by God's infinite mercy, been enabled to obey his command, and get rid of their soul disease. A great company of young and old rose, wishing to be prayed for, and we have never seen the inquiry-room disclose a more delightful or momentous sight. It was thickly dotted from end to end, besides a large number in another room, to whom Mr. Moody spoke collectively. There was much sowing in tears, and we are bound to believe there was also much joyful reaping of precious souls for the great harvest-day.

THE EVENING HOUR

was one not likely ever to be forgotten by any one present. The condition of the hall can only be compared to a vessel so full, that by a mere touch it overflows; thousands must have gone away unable to get in. The hall was crowded so early that the service was commenced at a quarter past seven instead of eight o'clock.

For the last time, the echoes of the Agricultural Hall resounded with the mournful yet jubilant strains of "The Ninety and Nine," as sung by Mr. Sankey amid the hushed attention of fifteen thousand souls. The sight was inexpressibly grand, and will dwell in our minds while memory lasts. If it be true that the saints above are interested spectators of what goes on upon the earth, we think the writer of this hymn must have been watching with eager anxiety to see if one more "lost sheep" would be found. How many this beautiful song, from Mr. Sankey's lips, has allured back to the fold, eternity alone can reveal.

The preacher, too, rose to the height of the occasion. From God's invitation to Noah, "Come thou, and all thy house, into the ark," Mr. Moody delivered an appeal to those still out of Christ the Ark, which, for affectionate urgency and persuasive power, has not been excelled, if equalled, at any of his London services. Towards the close his utterance was choked with deep emotion, and the whole assembly was moved in a most wondrous manner. Hundreds on hundreds rose to their feet at Mr. Moody's invitation, and the closing moments of the service were unutterably solemn.

Mr. Sankey's final solo was "Yet there is room," and both he and Mr. Moody must have felt deeply thankful to God for the rich blessing attending their labours during the day, and richly rewarded for it all. Crowds of anxious seekers repaired to the inquiry-rooms; St. Mary's Hall was well filled with young men to hear most affecting testimony from a large number of young converts, and a great proportion of the audience in the great hall stayed to pray for God's blessing to follow the services.

As a token of the esteem in which Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours are held by all classes of the community after two months' duration, we may mention that, besides the widely representative gathering of ministers on the platform, both Houses of Parliament were represented—the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, and the Commons by Mr. Samuel Morley, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, Sir Charles Reed, and Sir John Kennaway. One can only exclaim, with grateful hearts, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

SPECIAL MEETING FOR COMMERCIAL YOUNG MEN.

AGRICULTURAL HALL, FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 7.

It is well known that some of Mr. Moody's earliest efforts at evangelization were directed to the young men of his own country; and in Chicago itself, as well as in various towns in Great Britain, the Young Men's Christian Association has benefited largely by his labours. A week ago, when speaking at the Haymarket, reference was made to the manner in which the young men of the land were being reached; and the importance attached by Mr. Moody to missionary labour among young men was remarkably illustrated, on that occasion, by his telling story of the conversion of an old man of seventy, followed, as it was, by a conversation with a deaf-and-dumb young man. As Mr. Moody quaintly said, "I was puzzled to know what to do with him. But I thought, 'God can hear prayer, if the deaf man can't; and if he should be converted, this deaf-and-dumb young man will be worth more than the old man.'"

No wonder, then, that an attempt should be made, before leaving the Agricultural Hall, to bring Mr. Moody face to face with the thousands of commercial young men employed in London; the Young Men's Christian Association, naturally enough, making the necessary arrangements, and undertaking the entire management of all preliminary details.

The secretary, Mr. Shipton, issued in the first instance a circular letter to all the large business houses, banks, and public offices, announcing the time and place of meeting, and requesting to be supplied with information as to the number of tickets which would be required. Up to mid-day on Wednesday the issue of tickets was limited to houses desiring them; and in this manner about 16,000 tickets were supplied to commercial young men who had expressed a desire to be present. In many cases the employers took a personal interest in the movement, and on the evening of the meeting closed their houses, to enable all their young men to attend.

The arrangements thus made and carried out, secured the attendance of a special class, who could not otherwise be directly reached; while the care exercised in the issue of tickets outside the business houses, also limited to commercial young men, in no way altered the special character of the gathering.

The meeting itself was a most remarkable one, not so much from its size (though the large hall was well filled), as from the evident and almost overpowering emotion under which Mr. Moody was plainly labouring, and the effect of his appeals upon the audience. It has been said that no words can adequately describe the tender, delicate bloom in a ripe peach, the odour of a flower, or the voice of a friend; and similar difficulty is experienced in attempting to describe Mr. Moody's conduct of a meeting like that held on Friday night. Punctually at eight o'clock he entered his familiar skeleton rostrum, and after allowing a few seconds, in order to secure perfect quiet, he called upon all present to unite in prayer, the Rev. Daniel Wilson, Vicar of Islington, leading.

Mr. Sankey then sang, "What are you going to do, brother?"—an earnest opening note which found its echo in the whole proceedings of the evening. The singing of another hymn was followed by prayer by Mr. Moody, and his now familiar expression, "O Lord, make this place very solemn with thine own presence!" being repeated with, if possible, more impassioned earnestness than ever before. And the prayer seemed answered. Strong young men, with all the evidences of gaiety and fast living in their appearance, were deeply moved; and as the faltering voice in which Mr. Moody pleaded for "sons who were breaking their mothers' hearts" fell on the ear, big tears rolled down the cheeks of men who had not wept for years. At the close of his prayer, Mr. Moody selected a portion of Scripture in Luke v. 18, 19, 20, describing the healing of the man sick of the palsy, brought to Jesus lying helpless on a bed, healed and pardoned on account of the faith of others; "for we don't know he'd a bit himself," said Mr. Moody, quaintly. On this he grounded a most powerful appeal to Christian young men to have faith in prayer for their unconverted friends, and pointed out that the man got more than they expected from Jesus, adding, "I never knew anybody who didn't." The continuation of the address, the painful earnestness of Mr. Moody's pleading with prodigals, the almost vehement fervour with which he warned his hearers against some special form of sin and temptation, were calculated to arouse the most hardened, and to leave a deep impression upon all; and those wondrous anecdotes, so well selected, so touchingly told, with which the appeal was illustrated and enforced, seemed new even to those who had heard them from the speaker's lips before.

The proceedings closed with the hymn, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me;" and the request to those present to remain for the after-meeting, and to adjourn to the inquiry-room, was responded to by many hundreds; and, till nearly midnight, Christians, lay and clerical, were busily engaged in conversation and prayer with anxious and inquiring ones. It is perhaps unwise, in reference to particular instances, to draw back the veil which hides the anxious soul during its first conscious breathings in the new life from above; but we are much mistaken if the results of Friday's meeting are not seen in the addition of a large number of new members to the household of faith.

THE OPERA-HOUSE, HAYMARKET.

Mr. Aitken's week of earnest labour closed on Friday night. The congregations have kept up well all the week, and the signs of much blessing were always present, as witnessed in the inquiry-room, and those who remained at the after-meetings.

Dr. Cumming was present at the Bible meeting in the afternoon, and Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, opened the meeting with a prayer, marked with a simplicity and power which captivated all hearts present.

The venerable Dr. Robert Moffat was at the Convention on Thursday.

A large gathering of children and friends came in the rain on Saturday afternoon, to hear a second most skillful address from Rev. J. Robertson, of Edinburgh. He said that Mr. Moody had asked him to come and hand round a cup of living water to the little ones, and he was delighted to be a cup-bearer in such an interesting work. We regret we cannot give our young readers a sketch of his address, as promised last week, our columns being so crowded this week with the report of the Convention. We can only say that all present were delighted.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETINGS, HAYMARKET.

The requests for praise this morning were very numerous and cheering. We noted specially that Miss Leigh, who labours among young Englishwomen in Paris, desired praise to God that the whole of the money required for the new building had been received. Mr. J. E. Mathieson gathered up the requests, and presented them in prayer.

The audience having sung

"O happy day, that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour, and my God,"

Rev. W. H. Chapman read part of Acts xi., telling of the result of God's working in the house of Cornelius, in stopping the mouths of objectors. "Many," he said, "were acknowledging the hand of the Lord in the present movement, but he wanted all the Christians to be led to give the glory to God, and cast away their prejudices."

Mr. Moody returned fervent thanks to God for answers to special prayer for the young men's meeting and the closing services at the Agricultural Hall.

A merchant from Honolulu on the platform told of the wonderful things that God was doing, as witnessed by him during his journeyings, by way of the Sandwich Islands, San Francisco, Cedar Rapids, Chicago, and New York. At all these places a great revival was going on.

An interesting sketch of the young men's meetings at Liverpool was given by the next speaker, who stated that upwards of twenty carters working for one firm had been converted through the influence of the foreman, who was recently a careless, godless man.

Mr. Ned Wright brought cheering intelligence of a revived interest in God's work at Margate. He also related the conversion of a man (who had been twenty-one years in prison, though only fifty-three years old) by hearing "Hold the Fort" sung at the Agricultural Hall.

Rev. M. Guy Pearce said he had received news of great doings at Hull, and gave some deeply-interesting cases of conversion there. He had noticed, in revival times, how easy it was for men to believe when God's Spirit was working mightily, and gave illustrations from his own experience.

Mr. E. Paton related a remarkable chain of blessing in the conversion of friends and acquaintances, the details of which we hope to give at some future time.

Mr. Moody said that God had wonderfully answered the prayers they had presented for the young men's meeting and the closing meetings in the North. Friday was to him a very solemn day, and the evening meeting was one of the most remarkable he had ever seen. Sunday last, he added, was the most remarkable Sabbath he had ever spent on earth. He besought them to be earnest in prayer for the meetings in the West-end during the next twenty days when the Opera House would be available.

In his concluding prayer, he made special reference to the wreck of the "Schiller," and entreated God's blessing on the bereaved friends of those who had found a watery grave.

A SUNDAY IN EAST LONDON.

BY REV. T. RICHARDSON, STEPNEY.

On Sunday morning, May 2, Mr. Moody addressed an enormous gathering of Christian workers in the Bow-road Hall, at eight a.m., taking for his motto a line of the hymn just sung by Mr. Sankey, "All ages and ranks I can fully employ." At the close, he asked those workers present who were willing to try and bring one soul to the Lord during the coming week to stand up, when a most marvellous sight was seen. Thousands answered the appeal; all felt it to be a most solemn time, and many not standing were deeply impressed, whilst some could not leave the hall till they had had private conversation with some of the friends present.

In the afternoon, at half-past three o'clock, Mr. Moody addressed women only, when the hall was again very nearly filled. There were so many anxious inquirers at the close, that Mr. Sankey and some of the workers were obliged to address them in groups; and many were the families made happy on the return of these saved ones to their homes.

This is the second Sunday Mr. Moody has had the women alone; and if results are to be the test of the plan, it cannot be questioned but that these special gatherings have borne the greatest amount of manifested fruit.

In the evening, at eight o'clock, a still more wonderful gathering of men was held, and again the hall was nearly filled, and filled with a class emphatically composed of the masses, by their whole bearing, respectful, yet off-hand, telling how seldom, if ever, most of them troubled themselves about attending the house of God. One working-man said to the writer, "You see, sir, the masses of working-men are willing to hear the gospel, when put in a homely and straightforward way."

Having lived amongst those commonly supposed to be careless about these things for the past twenty years, one can have no hesitation in saying that East London last Sunday had the gospel sent to thousands of homes never yet reached in any other way than by house-to-house work of the city missionaries or Scripture-readers.

To see the hesitation of the men when asked to stand up, and then to have the privilege of dealing with souls in such a mass, of the hard-handed and hard-headed but still soft-hearted artizan or dock-labourer, all who have the cause of the conversion of our careless men at heart, would have rejoiced, as did the worthy Editor of the British Workman, who was present.

On talking over the subject with the obliging inspector of police, he confirmed the writer's views, that three-fourths of the men attending these separate services are not church or chapel-goers, and a very large proportion of those attending, even at week nights, are of the same class.

The general tone of kindness manifested by these men, when spoken to about their souls, tells of the power God had exercised over them by the service.

More stayed to the after-meeting than could be effectually dealt with, as Christian workers on Sunday afternoons and evenings, are engaged in their own spheres. Heaven has the record of this Sunday in many precious names being added to those repenting.

One remarkable testimony was given by a man, who said he should not have liked to stand up had his wife been with him, but that now he had accepted of salvation, he had no difficulty in going home and praying with her that night.

Not only do larger numbers by this plan hear the gospel, but the wisdom of the plan is seen by contrasting the marked blessing on each occasion it has been adopted, with the apparent results of the mixed Sunday meetings.

AN INCIDENT OF THE WORK DURING THE WEEK.

The work has been extending every night. One result of the Sunday morning meeting may be taken from amongst many. After speaking to an anxious young man, and opening to him the way of life, the writer noticed an elderly man engaged in private prayer, who proved to be the young man's master. The good man said he was one of those who had stood up on the Sunday morning, and now fulfilled his promise by bringing his apprentice, for whom he had been praying, and was rejoiced in seeing his prayer answered in the youth's conversion.

MR. SPURGEON AT THE BOW-ROAD HALL.

The Bow-road Hall was crowded in every corner on Friday night; not a seat was vacant. The doors were closed twenty minutes before the appointed time for commencing the service, and many hundreds failed to gain admission.

Mr. Spurgeon's appearance on the platform was hailed with a loud murmur of welcome from the vast congregation which had assembled to hear this long-honoured and much-loved servant of Christ once more tell out in his own grand way the old, old story of the cross.

The service commenced with the singing of the Old Hundredth. Mr. Spurgeon then prayed; and such a prayer!—so fresh, so fervent, so full of faith and feeling! It seemed to carry every heart with it, whilst thousands of "Amen's" accompanied it in its heavenward flight. Never shall I forget the impression it made upon my own heart; and would that I could recall its language! Only a few of its precious sentences remain to me. "This vast congregation! Lord, let it be the object of thy pity; it might be the target of thy wrath! What a mass of sin and rebellion does it represent! Come, come, Lord, into our midst. Ten thousand prayers invite thy presence! Deal graciously with the Sabbath-breakers before Thee. It is many a long day since some of them were in a house of prayer! Deal graciously with the drunkards, and turn their cups upside down, and make them to drink of the wine of thy love! Deal graciously with the moral man here, whose heart is yet unchanged; may he be no longer content with the mere whitewash of human goodness! Lord, we cannot pray; we can only tell Thee what we want. Oh, dip this prayer in the precious sacrificial atoning blood of thy dear Son, and answer it for his sake!"

After prayer, Mr. Spurgeon read and expounded Mark viii. 24—31. His sermon was preached from the last six verses of the same chapter. Speaking upon the words, "They bring unto Him one that was deaf," he took occasion to remark upon the helplessness of the sinner, and how fitting an object he was for the compassion of his friends, and urged Christians present to seek to bring the spiritually deaf and dumb of their acquaintances to Christ. He then warned us against delay in this, and told an affecting incident which occurred lately in his own congregation. He was led to say from the pulpit that perhaps there was a mother present who had been intending to speak to her daughter Jane about her soul, but she had not done so, and then entreated her, the moment she reached home, to put her arms around her child's neck and invite her to come to Christ. A few days after, Mr. Spurgeon received a letter from a woman who was present, saying that he had "exactly described her case." She had a daughter named Jane; she had intended to speak to her, but had not done so. "But I went home," she said, "after hearing you, put my arms round her neck, and entreated her to come to Jesus. She did so, is now converted, and is coming to speak with you about joining the church." God knows, added Mr. Spurgeon, the names of your daughters, and can tell his ministers their names also.

In the course of his sermon he referred to Mr. George Müller preaching at the Tabernacle last Thursday, and to the advice that faithful servant of God then gave, that believers should deal with God on business principles, keep books—put down on one page what they asked God for, and on the other what they received in answer to their prayer, and note the results. Alluding to the method which our Lord followed in healing the poor man spoken of in the text, he called it the deaf-and-dumb man's alphabet, and remarked that many people, though wise, were a little overwise. "Don't," he said, "tell God how you are to be saved;" and he told us of a young person who came to him the other day, and who said, upon his telling her she had only to believe, "Is that all I must do to be saved. I have done that. I have believed, but when my father was converted he had such pangs of conviction that he went mad for a month." On being again pointed to the word the poor girl replied, "Well, I think I won't ask to have my father's experience, but will trust and believe what God says." I am persuaded that what we want in order to reach the masses is more and more of this sound, simple, affectionate preaching of the old, old gospel, thus telling out, in homely language, out of a full heart, the message of a Saviour's love.

Mr. Spurgeon spoke of a "great twist" he received when he was converted, which prevented him doing otherwise than preaching Christ crucified. May every minister amongst us in this land get a similar twist. Our dear brother Moody, he added, has an awful twist this way. The papers try to make him out, but they cannot. He spoke affectionately of our dear brother, and prayed earnestly for his continued blessing. He closed his discourse with a telling illustration drawn from a custom which prevails when a caravan in the desert are in danger of perishing through thirst, of sending forward swift dromedaries in succession in search of water, and which when the foremost finds, he turns round and cries out to the next behind him, "Come, come, Come," and he in his turn cries, "Come, come, Come." As Mr. Spurgeon with his fine voice called out again, "Come, come, COME," to the sinners present, "come to Jesus," it sounded sweeter than the sweetest music we ever listened to. "Let him that heareth say Come."—

VICTORIA THEATRE.

The Victoria Theatre, which has been the centre of operations for the South side, has had its full share of blessing. The nightly services have been in the hands of a party of Mr. Moody's Scotch friends, who had come to spend a week in London "to see the work"; but as Mr. Moody has a theory that the best way to see the work is to take part in it, he threw the responsibility of the Theatre-meeting upon their shoulders. They entered into it with great spirit, and the work has gone on with much success and encouragement throughout the week. Mr. Sankey comes to their assistance this week, as well as Mr. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, and the workers are looking forward not only to a crowded house, but a crowded inquiry-room. The work in the South, though comparatively on a small scale, has, perhaps, been as real and deep as in any part of London, and the number of genuine cases of inquiry have proportionately been even upon a greater scale.

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK.

We have received the following cases of testimony as told at the young men's meetings now held at the East-end. One young man rose, and in a simple yet thrilling manner narrated his case as follows:—

"But a few weeks ago and I was madly dashing along the downward road, but Christ gently drew me to Himself as I was thus carelessly and thoughtlessly making away to ruin's brink. It used to be with me every night, as I met my giddy companions, 'Well, old fellows, where shall we go to-night? To the Olympic, Strand, Gaiety, or to this or that music-hall and dancing-saloon?' But the other evening I strolled in, merely out of pure curiosity, to hear Rev. W. Hay Aiken preach. I was deeply impressed with the solemn truths he uttered then, and, with a sorrowful, burdened heart, I found my way to the inquiry-room, and there and then light, and joy, and peace broke in upon my troubled soul.

"Oh, with what disgust and shame do I now look upon those places of amusement where, but a few weeks ago, my whole life and soul seemed wrapped up. Brothers, they never gave me real, solid happiness, and I'm sure they are incapable of doing anything for you, except destroying and eternally damning your soul. Oh, flee to the only refuge! Oh, haste to the only shelter! Then, by the grace of God alone, feeling perfect weakness in yourself, shall you too be able to exclaim—

'Begone, vain world,
Thou hast no charms for me!'

Another rose, and said—

"I almost tremble now to think of what I once was—one of the blackest, foulest sinners that ever breathed. I could swear, gamble, and mock at religion with any one. But one night I thought I heard the voice of God speaking through a text of Scripture brought to my remembrance, and the arrow of conviction transfixed me, as it were, to the spot. I was for some time in great agony of soul. I made the too common mistake, suggested by humanity's arch enemy, the devil, that, in order to be saved, I must feel something; but, by the grace of God, I was led to see that the Bible said nothing about feelings and frames as essential to salvation, and my storm-tossed soul rested at last on those precious words, 'He that believeth hath,' etc., and, somehow or other, I didn't try to leave off my evil practices, but they rather, by some means, took leave of me, and, praise the Lord, I have been a happy, rejoicing man ever since.'

We lately gave two letters from a school-girl to her parents with respect to the special meetings. We now give extracts from the letter of a domestic servant in London to her mother in the country:—

"My dear Mother,—I am delighted to find that you are so much pleased with my account of the meetings I attended at the Agricultural Hall. You seem to take a deep interest in the work, and that encourages me to write longer letters than I might otherwise do. Of course I like to tell you what is uppermost in my mind, and you may be sure that this great work that is going on in London takes up most of my thoughts, and I have no inclination to write about anything else; I am sometimes told that my head is full of it, and I say, 'Yes! and my heart too.'

"I went to the Agricultural Hall last Friday night, and Mr. Moody preached from 'What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?' If he knew he was preaching his last sermon, or if he knew that his audience would never have another opportunity to hear the gospel preached, he could not have been more in earnest; it was the most heart-searching sermon I ever heard. He mentioned almost every shade of character; but the backsliders, he said, were worse than any, for they have seen the light, and sinned against it. But he pointed out the 'Great Physician' so clearly. He lifted up the Son of man to every one, and if there were any who went out of the hall unsaved, they must have been hard-hearted indeed. Mr. Sankey sang 'Yet there is room' very beautifully, the audience joining in the chorus.

"I had my eyes open as well as my ears, and I saw that both preaching and singing had the desired effect on the people. A great many stood up to be prayed for at the close of the service, and I thought to myself, if Mr. Moody's converts prove to be as earnest as himself—

'All the ransomed Church of God
Will soon be saved to sin no more.'

"Dear mother, there is one thing I like in Mr. Moody's preaching, and that is that he is anxious to put every Christian to work, more especially the young converts. So if we are Christians, let us be workers, for I believe little efforts help the big ones, and surely there is a work for every one; no matter what capacity we may hold, we can do something for Jesus—

'If we cannot cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
We can find the heathen nearer,
We can help them at our door.'

A correspondent sends the following incident, which bears on the subject of trade morals, about which so many letters have been written to us of late. Nor is this the only letter to the same effect.

"A man sitting next to me at one of Mr. Moody's meetings, was in great anxiety about his soul. He said he had not been happy since he heard Mr. Sankey sing 'Jesus of Nazareth has passed by.' His sister had been converted through attending Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in the North, and his family would rejoice to see him saved. He listened to the story of God's love, and seemed fully prepared to accept it; but when asked what hindered his doing so at once, he replied that he would give himself to the Lord that very night; but he knew that if he did so, he must give up his situation, for he could not possibly continue his present occupation if he became a Christian? He begged me to pray earnestly for him, and I think I need not ask those who hear of it to do so too."

The following instance is suggested by the question in last week's CHRISTIAN, "Is it right or wise to deal with a man under the influence of drink as an inquirer for salvation?"

"About twelve months ago, a middle-aged man, who had been trying to drown his convictions of sin with drink, went one evening, partially intoxicated, to a mission-room, against his will, where the writer was preaching. After the meeting, feeling most wretched, and unable to move, he was spoken to, and the simple plan of salvation was set before him. 'Is that all?' said he. 'Yes, thank God; that is all,' was the reply. That moment the light of God's truth shone into his soul, and he accepted Christ, and has since proved, by his life, and efforts for the salvation of others, the reality of the change which then took place. 'Is anything too hard for the Lord?' "C. S. T."

A LETTER FROM A YOUNG MIDSHIPMAN.

H.M.S. —, Monday.

Darling Mother,—I must write you the good news, the best news I could give. My soul has been awakened, and last night I took Christ as my Saviour, and felt He was sufficient for me. Oh, mother, I am so happy to-day! There was a gladness about everything I did; the very dockyard rounds, which used to seem so tiresome, were enjoyed.

The way of it was this:—Yesterday I went to Mrs. — to lunch, and went out for a short walk with her afterwards. Gradually the conversation turned to the worldly way of living in this place. She suddenly said to me—

"I have often wondered whether you are a Christian or not. Are you?"

I said, "No, I am not," to which she replied—

"Why don't you take the everlasting life that God holds out to you?"

I said, "I can't; I have prayed for it, but can't take it."

She answered, "Don't pray; take it. What is the need of praying for a gift you can at once have for the accepting? You would not ask for a sum of money some relation had already said you might have for the taking; so why pray to God for that which He has been holding out to you since you were born, and only waiting for you to take it? I used to be like you; I used to go on praying and praying for eternal life, till at last I found what I had to do was not to pray, but just to say, 'I take the everlasting life which the death of Jesus Christ gives me.' I got peace then, and have kept it ever since."

We went into the house, and she talked to me until it was time to go on board to dine; but I could not see it. When I came on board, I knelt down in my cabin, and said—

"I TAKE THE EVERLASTING LIFE WHICH THOU GIVEST ME,"

believing on Christ, that He was sufficient for my sins; and I got it so easily, that I could hardly believe I had passed from death unto life. The verse that struck me most was John v. 24, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." So I knew I had eternal life, and had passed from death unto life. I am so happy, mother. Whatever befalls me, I am safe.—Your loving Son, —

INDIA'S NEED.

The Lord is now manifesting his rich grace and power in many countries, reviving the souls of his people, and adding to the Church daily such as shall be saved; on all sides the cry for help is heard, and while it is being warmly responded to at home by those who have learnt that it is more blessed to give than to receive, I would point to India as a field white unto harvest, and appeal to the mothers and daughters of England who love the Lord, to remember their heathen sisters, among whom so little has hitherto been done to bring the gospel of the grace of God to their knowledge.

The Zenana Mission is doing all it can by its agents to teach "the glad tidings" in Zenanas, female schools, etc., and if the Lord's voice is heard by his children, this Mission affords the opportunity for their faith to be brought into exercise, both by offering themselves as labourers, and by giving liberally to send out those who are willing to go. The Society has already at work in different parts of India about 131 agents; of these 28 are English ladies, the others, native and Eurasian Christian women, labouring as visitors to Zenanas, teachers in schools, and Bible-women.

A great increase of funds is needed to meet the demand for more helpers. The treasurer is the Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W., and the sub-treasurer, Mrs. Stuart, Sudbury-hill, Harrow. T. FIELD.

TENT FOR DEPTFORD.

"T. H. O. M." being desirous of aiding Mr. Fegan, in his efforts to procure a tent for Deptford, offers one pound percentage upon every five pounds given in answer to this appeal, up to the last day of this month. Donors will please state, when giving, 'In response to T. H. O. M.,' that amount of obligation incurred may be known."

TO OUR READERS.—We have been obliged to issue our publication for some weeks with the pages uncut. The reason has been that its increasing circulation has necessitated its being folded by machine instead of by hand, and the machine-folding scarcely admits of cutting. We are, however, endeavouring to restore this convenience to our readers, though it must be at the expense of an inequality of margin which may sometimes be a little unsightly.

THE WORK IN LIVERPOOL.

The young men's meetings are still carried on from nine to ten night after night with the most gratifying success, the attendances continuing as large as ever; indeed, on Sunday evenings the spacious Circus is invariably crowded out. Similar young men's meetings are now being held all over the town, and on the Birkenhead side of the river. Deputations from the central meeting have been sent to many towns in Lancashire, Shropshire, Cheshire, etc.

Meetings have also been held every Sunday afternoon at 2.30, in the Circus, for carters; another at 3 o'clock in the large St. James's Hall or theatre (now destroyed by fire), for commercial young men; and at 4, in the Circus, for working men only. Every Thursday evening, at 7.30, a boys' meeting is held, attended by from 800 to 1100 boys. A young men's prayer-meeting is held at 8 on Monday evenings; and a boys' prayer-meeting on Thursday evenings at the same hour. Bible-readings are held every Wednesday and Friday evening, at 8; and at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms at 3, on Sunday afternoons.

All the meetings are presided over by young men. It has been arranged to hold a in the Circus, on Thursday and Friday, the 20th and 21st of May, as under, viz.;

Thursday, May 20.—At 6.30, Prayer-meeting; at 7, Reception of delegates, reports of work; at 8, Young men's evangelistic meetings; a, Their origin, aim, and usefulness; b, How to make them attractive, interesting, and increasingly successful; at 9, What shall be done with the young converts?

Friday, May 21.—At 6.30, Prayer-meeting; at 7, Young Men's Bible-classes; a, What should be their object? b, How best to conduct them; at 7.45, The extension of the work amongst young men to other localities, both important and desirable; at 8.30, Question drawer; at 9, How to deal with young men individually in winning them for Christ?

For further information apply to Mr. Samuel Nash, secretary, 44, Renshaw-street, to whom also requests for prayer may be sent.

Mr. Henry Drummond has been invited to preside at the Convention.

Would all the Lord's people join in prayer that this great work amongst young men may go on increasing until all the young men of Liverpool are won for the Saviour? S. N.

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

The Gospel All-night in the Streets of London, is the title of a tract written to show the efforts made by a missionary to bring the truth as it is in Jesus under the notice of those whose business or whose vices may keep them out of doors during the greater part of the night. Many painful details are referred to, and the value of this effort is undoubted.

Home of Compassion, Hounslow.—In working at the mid-night meetings, during the London Mission last year, the need of Homes for illegitimate children came pressingly before me. I opened this "Home of Compassion" in hopes that God would bless me in this needful work. Since last May I have helped many such cases. If I am not assisted by Christian friends, this good work cannot go on. I am in great distress for money to meet my daily needs.

Park Lodge, Bath-road, Hounslow. MISS A. BAGSHAW.

Miss Sharman's Orphan Home, West Square, Southwark, S.E.—Many of our readers are well acquainted with the good work which has been carried on with increasing success at West-square, Southwark, and at Hampton, for eight years past. The kindness and liberality of Christian friends have enabled Miss Sharman to purchase the freehold of the Southwark Home. The building, however, is decayed, and quite inadequate to the necessities of the work, so that it is much desired now to erect a new Home on the old site. Subscriptions to the amount of £3100 towards the building fund have been received, but £9000 will be required to defray the entire cost. It will depend on the continued support of the friends of the helpless orphan whether or not the whole scheme can be undertaken at once or by detachments. Mr. Roger Smith, of Forest-hill, one of the trustees of the property, kindly gives his services as architect.

[334]

Bristol Medical Missionary Society.—All that has appeared in our pages from time to time with respect to the Medical Missions in London and Liverpool might well be repeated in regard to the sister institution at No. 7, Redcross-street, Bristol, the third annual report of which has reached us. A hasty perusal of it proves beyond doubt the appropriateness of its motto, "Heal the sick and say the Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." We can well believe the words of the report, that "angels might envy us our daily audiences and our visitations." We cordially commend this excellent institution to the notice of our readers, and would advise them to obtain copies of the report.

WHY HE TAKES THEM.

Among shepherds it is customary, when a flock will not cross a river, to carry one of the lambs to the opposite side, when, attracted by its bleating, the mother will at once cross, followed by the whole flock.

The flock stood waiting by the rapid river,
And would not cross,
Although the shepherd kindly called them thither,
And banks of moss,
And fields of green, and verdant hills, surrounded
The further shore;
The danger all their narrow vision bounded
Of crossing o'er.

He stretched his kindly arms, and gently called them;
They would not heed:
The deep, broad river's rapid stream appalled them,
Though pleasant mead
And mountain fair, beyond the darkling river,
Rose to their view,
And in the distance, bright, unfading ever,
Were pastures new.

The shepherd took a lamb, and safely bore it
Within his arms
To where the pastures brightly gleamed before it,
And all alarms
Were hushed. The mother heard its voice of pleading,
And, crossing o'er,
The flock behind her followed in her leading,
Unto the shore.

O stricken hearts, all torn with grief, and bleeding,
A Saviour's voice
Ye would not hear, nor follow in His leading
Of your own choice!
And so He takes your lambs unto His keeping,
That eyes all dim
And dark with sorrow's clouds, and sad with weeping,
May look to Him,
And see, beyond the darkly-rolling river,
Those gone before,
And to the fields with verdure green for ever
Cross safely o'er.

MANCHESTER.—In this city we have formed a "Sacred Song Association," our sole object being to "sing" the gospel at evangelistic services in and around Manchester. We visit the poorest and most destitute of districts. God has blessed us in being thus enabled to keep up the necessary interest in the meetings, and He has given us to realize more than our former expectations. E. D.

GOSPEL TENT MISSION.—The wish which I expressed in my last with regard to the formation of a Mission for Shropshire, and its adjacent districts, is now, thank God, about to be realized. Two Episcopal clergymen, one Independent minister, and some nine or ten laymen of different denominations, met in the parlour of Mr. Henry Edwards' farmhouse, on April 27, for the purpose of organizing the Mission. After a paper had been read on the subject, the meeting agreed to commence a Mission, to be called, "The Gospel-tent Mission for Country Villages;" and Shropshire, with its adjacent districts, is to be the field of its labourers at present. It was decided to purchase a tent, or hire one, to employ an evangelist, and, as soon as possible, to commence work by having a tent opening, which would consist of a tea-meeting and a mission-service. It was estimated that £100 would be required, to enable the committee to do its work for the present season. L. WEAVER.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO TRACT-DISTRIBUTORS.

A correspondent sends us a paper inculcating the need of faith and wisdom in the selection and distribution of tracts. We have not space for the paper, but give the following incident from it:—

"Yesterday, while out distributing tracts in a back street, I called upon an old woman, who, though formerly comfortably off, has been obliged, through the long illness of her husband, to part with one thing after another, in order to procure food; so that now she is truly destitute as to this world's goods; but, during her trouble, she has been led to the Lord Jesus, through gospel preaching at a mothers'-meeting; and now her eyes brighten at the name of Jesus, and her mouth is full of praise at the blessing which the Lord has given her in the forgiveness of her sins.

"But yesterday she had a new blessing to tell me of. Her husband has come out of hospital, and hopes soon to be able to work again, and her heart seemed bursting with joy as she told me that he was converted too. I asked by what means this glorious change had been wrought, and she told me, by means of a little tract which had been given him at the hospital. He had read it, and the light broke in on his soul."

MILDMAY CONFERENCE.—This annual gathering will be held, as announced some weeks since, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, June 23—25. The subjects for the respective days are "The glory of the King," "The power of the King," and "The presence of the King." The passages of Scripture which are given as the basis for the addresses will be found embodied in our Daily Texts this week.

CARLISLE.—Mr. Jas. N. Carr favours us with a sketch of the opening services of a series now being conducted at Carlisle by Mr. Dunn, and adds, "Will the Lord's people pray, not for Carlisle only, but that Cumberland itself may be moved by the power of God?" Mr. Carr subsequently writes:—"Glorious meetings here on Sunday last. Great numbers finding Jesus; the whole city is moving. We never had a work like this before."

ABERGAVERNNY.—A correspondent, in sending us an account of recent special services at this place, says:—"The work in Abergavenny since the Mission of April, 1874, has been truly wonderful. Numbers of young men have been brought in, and banded in a Christian Association. The most part of the work has been amongst young men. On the day Mr. Morgan (the Mission-preacher) left, quite a large congregation was gathered in the church at ten o'clock in the morning, to hear his last words to young converts. He went on to Bath, where he held a Mission-service in St. Paul's Church, which was crowded in every part, and numbers remained to the after-meeting."

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A combined effort is now being arranged for singing and preaching on Hampstead-heath, on Whit-Monday, the 17th inst. If it be fine, it is confidently estimated that many thousands of pleasure-seekers will flock to this "lung of London" on this day, affording a good opportunity for making known the unsearchable riches of Christ. Will any of your readers possessing the needful discretionary zeal and gifts, come over and help us? The friends will gather near the Flag-staff at 3 p.m., punctually, and spend an hour-and-a-half in singing Mr. Sankey's Songs and Solos, interspersed with short addresses. Tea will be provided, admission by ticket only, after which arrangements will be made to occupy various suitable stations to reach as many of the people as possible. Further details will be announced, and tickets may be obtained at the meeting at Iona Rooms, Camden Town, on Friday next. J. K.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK.—A service of song was held in this hall on 8th inst., by Captain the Hon. B. Moreton and the choir lately engaged in the special services at the Agricultural Hall. Short addresses to the unconverted, and stirring appeals to the Lord's people, were interspersed with suitable hymns from Mr. Sankey's selection. Over two thousand persons enjoyed a most refreshing hour, and several anxious ones remained to seek the way of life. The service will be repeated (D.V.) on 22nd inst. at 7 o'clock. The choir having now finished their work at the Agricultural Hall, are arranging to form themselves into a permanent company, under the presidency of Captain Moreton, to continue to assist in the work of the Lord with the voice of song, which has been so much blessed of late. Particulars will be announced shortly. C. F. HODGES, Secretary.

The Christian.

THE NOON PRAYER-MEETING.

ARE the Christians in London alive to the power which lies latent in a daily meeting for prayer? The privilege and the responsibility which attach to the Metropolitan Noon Prayer-meeting are simply inconceivable. All blessing from God is in answer to prayer. "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." Innumerable are the wants and sorrows and sins of men, and earnest are the desires of those who are bearing the burden and heat of the day to be held up in prayer by their brethren, who are tarrying by the stuff at home. Perhaps the estimate of and the longing for the prayers of the people of God in England, which are expressed in the following letter from our highly-esteemed and well-beloved brother, Major Malan, from his lonely place of willing and loving service in South Africa, will have more weight than any words of ours in alluring London Christians, not merely to the Noon Meeting, but to real and actual prayer. It is not of so much consequence that the meeting should maintain a reputation for being "lively," "fresh," "interesting," as that we should get actual access to God. Our brother tells us he will judge of the amount of earnest, believing prayer which ascends to God by the life and power which will come down upon him and his fellow-workers among those heathen tribes. Shall we cheer his heart by sending him more than he asks or thinks "by the way of the throne" where the Great Intercessor sitteth on the right hand of God?

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.—PRAISE.

BELoved BRETHREN,—As I requested prayer in THE CHRISTIAN, and prayer was made for me at the Mildmay and Perth Conferences last year, as well as by many smaller gatherings of Christians in Great Britain and America, I desire, for the strengthening of their faith, and to induce them to continue in prayer for me, to praise the Lord for his abundant answer to the supplications of his people in my behalf last year.

The Lord has borne me during the past six months, as He did Israel of old, in the hollow of his right hand. This was my prayer in the journey to which He called me in his Gospel, to go as his witness to the native churches and heathen of Basutoland. Often, as I rode along, the words, "how I bare you on eagles' wings," came into my heart.

Not to weary my brethren. From October to March is the summer of South Africa, and the rainy season. The rains this year have been unusually heavy; the rivers are unbridged. I prayed the Lord to keep down the rivers before me. This He did. I had not crossed the Orange River an hour before the rain commenced, and it was full that night.

During these six months I have visited, usually for periods of from two to three days, most of the native churches among eight Kaffir tribes, the Gaiikas, Galekas, Tembus, Basutos, Zulus, Pondos, Griquas, and Fingoes. Among the Galekas there are only two small churches, thirty miles from where I hope to labour. My journey on horseback has not been less than 1600 miles, some say much more. I have usually preached once or twice a day, on the Lord's-day often three times. When I reached Leribe, in North Basutoland, where I spent the Week of Prayer, my love for my dear American brethren in the United States led me to cross the Drakensberg Mountains, and visit the American Missions among the Zulus in Natal.

I cannot sufficiently praise the Lord for his great mercy in permitting me thus to testify for Him. It may not be much in the eyes of some, but to me it is a cause of boundless praise. What I heard and saw of his work has filled my soul with thanksgiving and hope. That which He has wrought in Basutoland and elsewhere, He can repeat again and again in the interior of Africa, when the churches in Great Britain and America awake from their dream of self-indulgence, selfishness, and sloth, and send forth his name and word to the heathen beyond.

Glory be to Christ the Lord, Basuto evangelists have carried his name on towards the Zambesi. A large tribe, the Baniari, who observe the first day of the week in remembrance of a great Chief's Son who was killed by His own people (the Lord Jesus), have invited the Mission of the Church of France to send them preachers.

Oh how the Lord has blessed the poor Church of France in its South African Mission! It is a history worth reading, and I trust to publish it, to the praise of his grace and glory, and to arouse sympathy and obtain help for this excellent but needy Mission from the wealthy Churches of Great Britain and America.

As to the results of my journeyings, they are with the Lord. He has given me assurance that they were not in vain. From one station a dear brother writes that, since my visit, "the work has been begun by the Spirit in right earnest. The village has been renewed spiritually. Nearly the whole of our youth have turned to the Lord. On the station we have more than sixty new converts. On most of the out-stations a similar work is taking place."

Oh, my fellow-Christians; oh, my brother and sister in Christ, whoever may read these lines, will you not pray for us out in Africa and Asia, and in the isles afar off? The Lord has aroused his Church during the last two years to some sense of its neglect of his work throughout the earth in prayer. A consequence of this has been the visit of Mr. Somerville, Mr. Sholto Douglas, and others, to India, as an answer to prayer. I daily prayed for them in their journey. Soon we may hope to see, if prayer increases, the Church sending forth its visitors and witnesses to every nation. The result of this would soon be evident in increased faith, and hope, and zeal in the Lord's work, and spread of his Gospel.

And now I earnestly entreat the prayers of all Christian conferences, assemblies, or prayer-meetings everywhere, and of every Christian who reads this, in behalf of my two brethren, Clarke and Noble, their wives, and myself, who are going in the name of the Lord Jesus, if He will, into as dark and heathen a population as any in Africa. Not only so, but Satan has, for many years, hardened the chiefs and people against the Lord's Word. They will not receive it. Our Mission is looked upon, even by Christians in the colony, as hopeless! But I am by no means hopeless. I am full of hope in Christ the Lord. His word, "All power is given unto Me," is written on my heart. Whatever happens, his name must be glorified. Earth and hell cannot prevent that!

The difficulties before us are, indeed, very great; but with God, all things are possible. Pray that the Lord will open the hearts of Kreli, chief of the Galekas, and of his chiefs and people, to receive his word, and believe on his name. Pray often; pray much. Pray that the Lord will guide, help, quicken, and bless us, my brethren Leslie and Dewar, and all his servants among the Galekas, and throughout all the tribes of Africa. China and India and other lands must make their own appeal to the churches for prayer. I pray for them continually, as for many who will read this. My rest, my recreation, my relaxation, my sweetest, happiest hours, are those in which the Lord permits me to bow before Him in prayer.

It has been my greatest joy to pray for my dear brothers Moody and Sankey, day by day, for a rich blessing on their labours. All the London Missions I know I hold up in prayer, and I hope they continually remember me.

My brethren Clarke and Noble, and their wives, have arrived in Africa, thank the Lord. I go to meet them with a waggon in a few days, if the Lord will. The assault on Sebastopol seems nothing to what lies before us among these heathen; but my soul rests on the Lord. I see only one thing, Christ in God. His service alone is glorious. His reward alone incorruptible, eternal. He has a right to us by creation and redemption. Living or dying we are His.

Forgive so long a letter. I know that the Lord is faithful. I shall judge of the amount of earnest, believing prayer which ascends to Him, by the life and power which comes down upon us, and upon the dead Galekas. Last year, more than once, I felt the power of prayer out here at the time that my brethren were praying for me in England or America. May I often be so helped this year. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.—Your loving brother,

C. H. MALAN.

A VOICE FROM MEXICO.

Dear Sir,—I feel very much impressed with the magnitude of the gospel work in this land, and am very anxious that God's people in England should be awakened to a sense of the great and imperative need there is to help on this work. Having had an intimate acquaintance with this part of Mexico now for nearly ten years, and being brought into close connection with all classes of the people, I have long been groaning over their fearful spiritual ignorance, and have done all I have been able to do to tell them of Christ; but the great disparity between the work to be done and the number of workers who are doing it, and the means we have for carrying on the work, causes a great sadness in one's soul.

On the 14th of this month I paid a visit to a large native congregation some eight leagues from here, and my visit convinced me more and more of the absolute need of more being done for Christ in this great valley. From here I took, as companion, a Mexican brother, about my own age, and formerly a brave Liberal soldier. Passing through Metepec we were joined by another Mexican brother, an earnest man, true as steel, and feared even by the noted bandits of Metepec. Further on, in the little village of Chapultepec, another brother joined us, an ex-smuggler; and so, accompanied by these three Mexican brethren, I started on my journey.

No doubt you will say I had a suspicious sort of escort. Yes; such were they in days gone by when they were without Christ, without God, and without hope in the world; but all that has passed away, and now they are genuinely converted men, in whose love and honour and faithfulness I have every confidence.

This valley contains a great many towns and villages scattered over it, but in none of those through which we passed (excepting Metepec and Chapultepec) has the gospel been preached; beyond tracts, which find their way there from Toluca, nothing, absolutely nothing, has been done as yet to tell the poor idolaters of Christ. We passed through one town where, not many months ago, a Protestant colporteur was lassoed and dragged through the streets. In the town next to that a similar outrage was committed on another Protestant about two years ago. Reaching the town of Tenango, situated right in the corner of the valley, we began to cross the mountain ridge, and on the other side came upon Joquicingo, snugly nestling in a hollow between the hills, which on all sides shut it in.

We stayed the night, and were most heartily welcomed. That same night the congregation got together, and we had worship, and it was indeed a blessed sight to have nearly three hundred eager souls listening to the simple gospel. Next morning they would have service again, and early enough they assembled; and the tears rolled down many cheeks. I really believe it was the first time they heard a gospel sermon. I was especially delighted to see so many Indian faces among them. They have the custom of calling everybody "brother" and "sister," and they embrace at meeting or parting. I saw at once that a noble work can be done among them, and by their means, in the villages around. It is a marvel how they have held on so long; so eager to know the truth, and with no one able to teach them. Few possess Bibles; fewer still understand its glorious message; none of the females possessed either Bibles or Testaments until, on my return to Toluca I sent them a good supply. I heard from these Joquicingo brethren that they know of various towns where, by means of a tract or a gospel, persons have come to know something of the gospel, and have broken away from the paganism of Catholicism; but, poor souls, so they remain, hungering after the truth, and no one to teach them or guide them.

We returned in safety the next day to Toluca, reaching here in the evening. That visit fully confirmed my opinion that if I had the means to employ some proper person to occupy my pulpit here in Toluca, and so enable me to make such visits, almost daily, at least weekly, a most important work could be done for our heavenly Master.

As I have before mentioned, I am entirely alone in this neighbourhood; but with a little help, oh, what great things could be achieved! I do not ask God's people to give money for church building; by no means. Too much of that has been done already in Mexico. It is astonishing how a simple tract, or gospel, has been used by God on many occasions to bring souls to Christ: that work should be followed up. Had I more means at hand, to pay a few good co-workers; to carry on our printing work with vigour; and so enable me to move about more at liberty; I am sure we could soon tell of wonders being done for Christ. The men wanted here are men full of faith and fire, men of iron nerve and unflinching courage. Such men I have at hand; all I want are means to provide for their families whilst they are out preaching the gospel far and near.

A few days ago, the courage and faith of the church in Joquicingo was put to the test. On Sunday, I believe, that village was attacked by a band of twenty-five bandits, whose main object, no doubt, was robbery, although their cry was "Viva la religion!" and "Death to the Protestants."

Don't you think that one needs help and sympathy when preaching the Gospel of Life in the midst of such difficulties as these? I do beseech you to speak a kindly word on our behalf, and may God incline many of THE CHRISTIAN'S readers to pray for us and help us in carrying on His own blessed work in Mexico.—Yours very sincerely,
JAMES PASCOE.

THE LEVEE.—I.

On the same day that her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen held a Levée at Buckingham Palace, another assembly, but of a very different character, was convened in the East of London. Yes, it was in a poor street, within a short distance of the water-side, and opening into one of the great East-end thoroughfares, that our Levée was held. There was no flourish of trumpets, nor imposing palatial equipages. In character, it somewhat reminded one of another gathering, mentioned in Holy Writ, which was graced by the presence of a King whose Dominion is from sea to sea, and from shore to shore. At the Pool of Bethesda, the halt and the blind, the withered and the maimed, anxiously gathered, thronging the porches, waiting to be healed. And on the day already mentioned, the large waiting-hall of the HOME FOR WORKING AND DESTITUTE LADS, was filled with eager applicants—suitors we may call them—who pressed with desire to our Levée, impelled by the sad necessities of their several conditions.

Will my readers come with me, and take a brief glance at the groups who are occupying the time whilst waiting the hour of interview with snatches of conversation, or in silent and mournful thought? Look over my shoulder—we will not disturb them from the position we take up,—and let us see who they are, listen to their communications, and guess at what they want. At the first glimpse the scene is somewhat puzzling, for the hall is filled with a strange concourse. Men and women, boys and girls—babies too—are there. The light comes straggling in through the windows, which look out on to the narrow street; and although the sun is shining a little, clouds come and go fitfully, and strange freaks are played by the occasional gleams of sunshine falling upon the people waiting there. Notwithstanding that the hall is unpleasantly crowded, and the fire is sending out the heat of its ruddy glow, the air within is still felt to be biting cold. Outside the snow lies thick upon the housetops, though upon the street paths it is beaten into shapeless mud by the traffic to and fro of busy feet. Icicles like crystal rockwork still hang from the eaves, unmoved by the frequent gusts of sharp east wind which have suddenly set in after a few weeks of almost genial weather. As we gaze from our secluded corner of observation upon the shivering forms of the poor applicants waiting in our hall, we feel that it is not necessary to ask them if they enjoy the sudden change from heat to cold, and of almost summer weather to inclement wintry. Misery, sorrow, want, and, in some cases, feelings of a stronger and more appalling kind, are but too apparent in the wan countenances and wretchedly-clad bodies of the poor creatures.

A few, indeed, are there who, although poor, are yet a little removed from the penury of the rest; and they look, with that tender and pitiful commiseration which the poor so readily afford to the poor, upon the more miserable and suffering objects around them. As, for example, see those little boys—there are three of them; and as they cling to one another, they appear to stand out from the others quite alone in their indescribable wretchedness. Rags, and but few of them, form their only dress. Bare-headed and bare-footed, cold and blue, their boy-like life seems to have been turned into premature old age, so anxious and careworn are they. When they first came in, they crept into a distant corner, as if to escape observation; but now, encouraged by the kind words and pitiful looks of the others around them, they have drawn up to a spot nearer to the blazing fire, and eagerly hold out their little scraps of dirty, almost frozen hands, to catch the genial warmth and life from the cheerful glow.

Some of the women are chatting in a confidential manner; and if we listen, perhaps we may hear what they say. That stout woman, whose garrulous tongue has been going at a steam pace the whole afternoon, is telling her neighbours that "it's a fine Home, God bless it!" Her boy Joe, who "never did no good out o' doors, got in there more than two year ago and they'd got him on board ship." She had just received a letter from Portsmouth, written by her boy, who was made "a regular smart scolar in that Home afore he went;" and having now got a berth in a fine ship, was going to India. "And I've come," said she, "to show the gen'lman the letter my boy wrote, and to thank him for all he's been and gone and done."

While she was speaking, another woman, seated on a bench behind her, listened to every word with almost breathless eagerness. She was a broken-spirited looking creature, miserably clothed. By her side sat a great, strong, hulking lad of some fourteen years of age. His only attire consisted of a tattered waistcoat, and an equally tattered pair of trousers, while a rough and dirty woollen comforter was wound around his neck, and crossed over his bare chest. As this poor woman listened to her neighbour's recital, her face began to beam with animation and hope. Occasionally she nudged her boy under the arm, and whispered, "Ah, Tom, if you can only get in here, your fortin's made!"

The next group was a very sad one. A young woman, scantily dressed, was seated between two very young girls, also insufficiently clad, whose hands she firmly grasped in her own. Her features plainly showed that she was sister to the children, over whom she appeared to be acting the part of guardian. A bit of plaid shawl, old and past mending, was drawn tightly round the form of the oldest of the two children, who was about ten years of age.

"She ain't," said the eldest sister, in an explanatory tone, to another sitting near her, and pointing to the girl aged ten, "she ain't got on no petticoats!" The young girls held their grown sister's hand firmly, as though they feared their best friend was about to be wrested from them.

"Mother's been dead eighteen months," the young woman continues, "and I've done my best to keep 'em, poor things. But there—it ain't keepin', it's more like starvin'!" and the last word was spoken as though the grip of hunger had been already most painfully experienced. "I can't get no work," she adds, in a somewhat slower and more despairing tone. "Last week I done only a shillin's worth, and we've pawned everythink; there ain't two sticks left at home; and Mrs. Rock, where we lodges, says the children must go to the 'House.' "Hush, Sissie, don't cry," said the poor girl to her younger sister, who suddenly broke into a paroxysm of crying, and seizing her companion's arm with both hands, exclaimed beseechingly, "Don't leave me, Maggie." Quieted by the soothing and comforting assurances of her sister, the little creature brushed away the scalding tears, and crept closer to her sister's side.

(To be concluded in our next.)

HOME OF INDUSTRY, SPITALFIELDS.

Just as we go to press, a short letter reaches us from Miss Macpherson, who has safely returned from Canada. We can only give the following extracts:—"All is well on both sides of the Atlantic. It is with a grateful heart I am enabled to say we have sufficient to rebuild the Home at Belleville; and the Canadian Christians are most kind in aiding to supply the heating and furnishing requisites. As clothing material of every kind is very expensive, house-linen and old and new garments, to replenish the store-room, will be most acceptable; and any help of this kind forwarded to us within the next month can be sent out by our first party."

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE AT POONA.

My dear Sir,—I address this letter to you rather than to the honorary secretary of the Anglo-Indian Christian Union, because I write it expressly for THE CHRISTIAN. Your readers, who constitute, I believe, the very large mass of the most earnest labourers together with God in every land, must feel a deep interest in what their fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, the Rev. A. N. Somerville and his son, are doing in India. I feel that I should fail in my duty if I did not communicate for their information what I know, from personal observation and experience, of the work of these dear servants of the Lord in my own locality.

Poona is no mean city. It is the head-quarters of the civil and military administrations of the Bombay Presidency for one-third of the year; it is the chief military station of the Presidency; the native city contains 100,000 inhabitants, and is a city-municipality, and it is the capital of the Marattic country. There is no city in the Presidency which has a more direct and more powerful influence on the people of Western India. In every part of the Presidency, and in Central India, Poona men are to be met with in influential positions.

Mr. Somerville and his son came here from Bombay on Thursday, April 8. Arrangements had previously been made for all the services to be held by them during their visit.

The first engagement on the programme was a preliminary meeting of ministers and Christian friends, to be held at the Rev. Mr. Beaumont's Free Church Mission-house, at half-past eight o'clock on Thursday evening, to enable Mr. Somerville to explain his object and plan of action to the leading Christian workers of Poona. Knowing that these dear servants of the Lord would have to go straight from the railway-train to this meeting on their arrival in Poona, I went out to Lanowli, forty miles from Poona, where the train stops for twenty-five minutes, to meet them, and to see them properly refreshed after their long and hot journey. The train arrived in Poona a little after eight o'clock p.m.; and within half-an-hour after its arrival, Mr. Somerville was in the midst of an unusually large meeting of ministers and private Christians, explaining to them his object in coming, and what his plan of action in Poona would be; and this he did with as much energy and fire as if he had been resting all day, instead of journeying tediously through dust and heat. He had a severe cold, and a hoarseness which left him but little voice; but his faith and love bore him above these infirmities. He had come, not to any denomination of Christians as such, but to Christians as such. Loving Him that begat, he loved all them also that are begotten of Him.

Mr. Somerville was so full of the spiritual refreshing which has come from the presence of the Lord upon Great Britain and Ireland, and his accounts of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, of their methods of evangelization, and of the many mighty works which Jehovah the Spirit has done in the name of Jesus, chiefly through their agency, were so glowing and vivid, that we seemed to be transported into the midst of those blessed scenes, and to receive a share of the refreshing in our own souls.

The success of Mr. Somerville's visit to Poona was secured that first evening. We were brought into full sympathy and co-operation with him. He remained with us three days, Friday, Saturday, and Sabbath, during which days he delivered nine sermons, evangelical addresses, and lectures, in public places connected with all the different denominations, except the English Episcopalian; and the last he delivered, on Sabbath evening, was his 319th evangelical address since his arrival in India on the 30th of November last. Every succeeding audience was larger than the preceding, the places of meeting were overcrowded, the attention was breathless, the impression deep, weeping universal, the joy of Christians full. The gospel was imparted in all its freeness and fulness, Christ offered for immediate reception, for instant salvation, the privileges of believers in Christ unfolded in all their magnitude, God's love poured out in our hearts, and a realization by the children of God of their sitting together in heavenly places in Christ.

"The men of grace have found
Glory begun below;
And heavenly fruit, on earthly ground,
From faith and hope may grow."

I must refer more particularly to one meeting, the lecture to English-speaking natives in the Rev. Mr. Beaumont's (Free Church) Institution in the city, on Saturday evening.

Mr. Beaumont had calculated on a large audience, and had had the hall of the Institution seated for a crowd. However, long before Mr. Somerville and he made their appearance, at eight p.m., four times as many persons, chiefly young men, as could crowd into the hall, had assembled at the Institution. The Institution occupies what is called in India a Wada, or palace. It is the palace of Phudkay, a nobleman under the Peishwa's dynasty. It is like, on a small scale, a block of buildings in a city, the vacant space inside, or the quadrangle, entered by a large gateway, and the various apartments of the building entered from the quadrangle, the sides of the building facing the quadrangle having at each storey large gallery-like verandahs.

When Mr. Somerville and Mr. Beaumont arrived, the latter, seeing the state of things, at once gave the order: "Occupy the quadrangle." The crowded hall was at once emptied, and the benches let down by ropes into the quadrangle, the hall being in the second storey. While this was being done, Mr. Beaumont erected a temporary platform at one side of the quadrangle. Then the immense audience soon settled down in perfect quiet, and the scene which presented itself was grand and imposing. The quadrangle and its verandahs, and the verandahs of the second and third storeys, were crowded with natives, clothed in their white garments and red turbans, to which the silvery light of the moon shining overhead, gave a most picturesque effect. To spare his voice, Mr. Somerville requested me to read the Scriptures, Acts xvi. 6—34. He then offered a prayer, beginning with those words in Acts xvii. 24. The heart of the vast audience was won.

The subject of his evangelistic address was the portion of Scripture which had been read. The vision which appeared to Paul while at Troas, in Asia, with his companions, was described with marvellous power, and the prayer of the man of Macedonia was uttered with thrilling effect. Paul and his companions were Asiatics; they carried the gospel then for the first time into Europe; God loved his dear Asiatics so much that the first convert to Christianity in Europe was Lydia, an Asiatic; the Christian religion had its origin in Asia, and its adoption in Europe showed it to be a religion for the world; Europe, especially Great Britain, owed all its greatness to it, and now Great Britain desired to bring back to Asia what she had originally received from her, in order that Asia might be as blessed and as great as herself.

In this strain Mr. Somerville lectured for two hours, and kept his audience in delighted attention. I have known Poona for thirty years. I have seen its greatest assemblies—even that at which the Shankaracharya, or highest Sanyasi of the Hindus, presided over the decisive discussion on widow-marriage; but I have never seen a greater assembly in Poona than on this occasion; and I am sure that a deeper impression was never made upon the native mind than was made by the earnest and loving words of this evangelistic address.

I should leave the half untold if I did not speak of the essential part accomplished by the son in the great work of those three memorable days. Mr. Somerville conducted on all occasions the service of song, leading it with his rich-toned American organ. The last hymn he played and sung was his 882nd since his arrival in India.

We had often read in THE CHRISTIAN of Mr. Sankey singing the gospel in the great revival meetings in Great Britain, and of the wonderful effects produced by the gospel thus published or imparted in sacred song; but we never before fully realized what that was of which we had read so much, until it was actually reproduced amongst us by this young servant of Jesus, who has so endeared himself to the hearts of us all. He has taught us not only how to sing with the heart and the understanding also, but likewise to sing aloud unto God, our Strength, and make a joyful noise to the Rock of our Salvation. He has distributed amongst us some hundreds of the "Sacred Songs and Solos," sung by Mr. Sankey; and we have got together since he left us to practise and learn them thoroughly, so as to sing them at all times and in all places. We do not intend to be silent.

Already at many points throughout this great country, these quickening gospel hymns are now sung—east and west, to the far north, and in central India; and we shall go on singing till the day come, which is not distant, when the high praises of our God shall be in the mouth of all the people of this land, and when, turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, they shall sing forth the honour of his name, and make his praise glorious; nor will we cease—

"Till Kedar's wilderness afar,
Lift up its lonely voice,
And till the tenants of the rock
With accents rude rejoice:
Till midst the streams of distant lands,
The islands sound His praise,
And all combined with one accord
Jehovah's glories raise."

It is nearly a week since our beloved friends left us, and I am able to testify that God's work has been greatly revived in our hearts; and I believe the new songs which they have left us will be a powerful means towards perpetuating this time of refreshing.

The all-important matter of Christian union has been greatly promoted by the labours of Mr. Somerville, and many souls have been saved. Let this visit, then, cost what it may, it will for ever be worth more than it has cost.—

Yours in the Lord,
Poona, April 17, 1875.

THE GREAT SHEPHERD.

"The Breaker is come up before them."—MICAH II. 13.
"He goeth before them."—JOHN X. 4.

Calmly He leads the way
Along the road—
That blood-stained track alone
Which leads to God.

The path was rough and steep,
Arid and bare;
No human soul alone
Could venture there.

The sun with cheering ray
Ne'er pierced the gloom;
The fiercest beasts of prey
Made it their home.

Yet forth the Shepherd went,
Loving and bold,
To clear this path that led
Unto the fold.

The thorns and briars grew thick,
With cruel dart,
Wounding the tender hand,
The loving heart—

Rending the bleeding feet
That pressed their sheaves,
Leaving the impress of His pain
Upon the leaves.

Still on He went, till darkness came.
Ah, dreadful night!
Even Jehovah's face was turned
From the sight.

But forth He came, a Conqueror
Over death;
The sword of vengeance now
Lies in its sheath.

The hard-won path is free,
Sprinkled with blood:
The Shepherd fought the way
That leads to God.

O Shepherd true, Thy love
Will guide us on,
Till, in thy glorious strength,
Our crown is won!

WEST HARTLEPOOL.—During the last three weeks, Mr. Scroggie has conducted evangelistic services in West Hartlepool in connection with the united churches, and the Lord has abundantly blessed his labours. The theatre has been filled on the Sundays, and the different chapels during the week nights have been crowded with people eager to listen to the glad tidings of salvation by Christ alone. Not one of the services has been without fruit, and on some occasions as many as fifty inquirers have gone into the anxious-room, to come out of it rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Mr. Scroggie preaches a simple gospel, gives great prominence to the "blood," and the Lord manifestly owns his labours. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that this good work may be carried on, that God's people may be quickened, and that many more may be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.—W. HETHERINGTON.

WORK IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

The Sailors' Rest at Devonport is pushing steadily on. I have paid for the houses, and have money in hand to commence operations. The workmen will proceed at once with a small hall, to seat about 150, where I shall have to carry on the work, until funds enable me to build the large hall, which will seat 700, when the smaller room will be used for prayer-meetings, etc. I have received notice to leave the iron room where we assemble now on Sundays, and which has been the birthplace of so many souls, and I must look to God to give me some place for our Sunday meetings in the interval. The temperance refreshment bars and the repairs of the house will be proceeded with also. I am sure that God's stewards will not allow the work to stop for lack of means.

A great blessing has attended the circulation of the MONTHLY LETTERS, or "little blue-backs." I have lately been very short of funds for this work. Last month I had not a penny to meet the next month's expenses, about £15. The matter was laid before God, and the next day's post brought £20 from an anonymous donor.

All the work in hand—the Monthly Letters, the Mission to Seamen and Marines' Wives, the Sunday Meetings, and all else—has to be kept up by money sent for "Naval Work," and so marked.

A touching proof of God's blessing on the Monthly Letters came over the sea last week from China. It was a photograph of a group of sailors, and on the back of the photograph the names of the men were written. Attached to two names belonging to H.M.S. "Ringdove" were these significant words, "These two men were blessed by reading the Monthly Letter on 'The Good Samaritan.'"

While speaking of my own Monthly Letter to the men of the royal navy, I would mention a kindred work, which deserves equal support. Mrs. Best, of Leamington, at my suggestion, commenced some time ago a "Monthly Letter to the Merchant Seamen," a totally distinct class from the men of the royal navy, and men whom comparatively few care for. This effort has been a great blessing; but Mrs. Best's funds are so low, that she will be compelled to limit her issue, unless help is sent. I would cordially commend this work to all interested in the poor fellows who "go down to the sea in ships" in the merchant service.

WORK AMONG THE MEN OF THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

H.M.S. "Alert" and "Discovery," together with their convoy, H.M.S. "Valorous," are at Portsmouth, and sail for the frozen regions in a few weeks. That the public are deeply interested in the expedition is evident, from the crowds which visit the exhibition of sledges, tools, etc., in the Dockyard; and I am sure that Christians will follow them in their icy prison with earnest prayer. I have been asked what I am doing for them. I am preparing Monthly Letters in advance, up to June, 1878. Each ship will take her own box; and on the first of each month the new Letter, with the current date, as if just out of the postman's bag, will be given to each man in the ship's company. Who can say, during the ninety days of darkness, how many souls may be blessed by them, and come to Jesus, the Light of the world? I shall need about £30 to cover the expense of this issue.

Mr. Dowkontt, of Her Majesty's Dockyard, an earnest and esteemed Christian worker, has received a large number of books in answer to his appeal; and together we hope to present all these means of blessing to the men at

A FAREWELL TEA.

This tea I propose holding at Portsmouth, just before the expedition sails. A personal invitation will be sent to each man. The officers in command are kindly disposed to grant every facility for the gathering of the men, not forgetting the ice-masters. A good, substantial tea will be provided, and after tea I hope to give a farewell address, which God may be pleased to bless to precious souls. A good choir, aided by the men, will sing Mr. Sankey's hymns, a copy of which will be presented to each, with other things, before the close of the meeting.

Funds intended for this work can be sent to me, or to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, marked, "Miss Weston's Work in the Royal Navy—Arctic Fund."

A dear Christian seaman of the "Alert" said to me, 'I'm not afraid to go, because Jesus keeps me company. I shall never be lonesome in the dark winter, or on the sledge-journeys. I hope to sing 'Safe in the arms of Jesus' at the North Pole yet."

 AGNES E. WESTON.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY-MEETING.

1. Let the meeting be conducted as quietly as possible, so that one worker may not disturb another. If possible only deal with one inquirer at a time.

2. Cast the burden of each separate case upon the Lord, and ask to be "filled with the Spirit," so that the words you speak may be his—not yours.

3. Enter fully into the difficulties of each inquirer,—remembering that it is a matter of life and death in which you are engaged.

As a variety of motives induce persons to attend an inquiry-meeting, be sure and ascertain distinctly at once their reason for being present.

4. Take the inquirer to the Bible,—this is all important. The following passages have been found very useful:—Isa. liii. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 24; John xix. 30; Isa. lv. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 2 (end); Rom. vi. 23; Matt. xi. 28; John vi. 37 (end); Rev. xxiii. 17; Isa. i. 18; 1 John i. 7 (end), and 9; Heb. x. 17; Luke v. 32; Luke xix. 10; Rom. v. 8; John iii. 16, 18, 36; John v. 24; 1 John v. 10, 11, 12; Acts xvi. 31; Gal. ii. 20 (end); 1 John ii. 12; Rom. x. 13.

5. As most "anxious ones" are waiting to feel that they are saved, instead of taking God at his word, avoid the use of the word "feeling" in your conversation, and point the sinner straight to the Saviour and his finished work.

6. Besides praying with the inquirers, encourage them to pray with you, and (if the Holy Spirit has enabled them to receive "the truth") to thank God for having forgiven them before they leave the room.

7. If you are unable to meet the difficulties of any particular case, it is sometimes better to pass it on to another worker.

8. Be sure and take the name and address of the person you have spoken with, and see that the work is followed up afterwards.

SCIENTIFIC CRUELTY.

Dear Sir,—Men are beginning to say in regard to all evil practices, "What are Moody and Sankey about?"

I believe these honoured and faithful servants of the Lord are setting the right way to work to remedy evil practices by dealing with the root. If the tree is good the fruit will be good. But it behoves us all in such a day of grace to strive to the utmost against sin of every kind—dishonesty, drinking, impurity, cruelty. The practice of vivisection, i.e., anatomy on living creatures, is daily gaining ground among us. The details are so horrible that very few will endure the pain of reading them. I beg to refer your readers to two articles, one in "Fraser," the other in "The New Quarterly," both for April, and to entreat the prayers and the co-operation of all Christians for a blessing on the efforts now being made to cleanse our land from this atrocious cruelty perpetrated under the pretence of science, falsely so called.

The late Professor Reid, of St. Andrew's, considered the agonizing disease of which he died "a judgment" from his heavenly Father for what he had made animals suffer, and acknowledged this in the most affecting manner. Yet in his day, 1852, the medical profession revolted from the practice.

Now-a-days men professing to be converted, and even office-bearers of Christian churches, instruct students in these atrocities!

Will the Lord hear prayers from those whose hands are full of blood. H. C. M.

GREENHEYS, NEAR MANCHESTER.—The Rev. O. L. Leonard, of America, has been holding special services at Greenheys since April, and with manifest tokens of the Spirit's presence and working. The meetings have been held at Cavendish Chapel and in the open air. The Christian young men of the church have been earnest in their co-operation, and have been blessed to many of their own class; it is believed that about seventy have found the Saviour. The Rev. Mr. Leonard proposes to remain in England during the summer. His address is, 166, Aldersgate-street, London.

FROM THE WESTERN STATES.

A pastor of one of the largest churches in Chicago, numbering about 1200 members, said to me only yesterday, "My church has never before received so great a blessing through any one person as through our brother Moorhouse." The afternoon Bible-readings have been most interesting and profitable, and a number of the city pastors have united in soliciting Mr. Moorhouse to give a series of these readings during the evenings of next week, in order to reach the business men who cannot attend the afternoon services.

A great and blessed work is now going on in Louisville, in the State of Kentucky. Our brethren, Major D. W. Whittle and P. P. Bliss (the latter being well-known to you by his many sacred songs), have been preaching and singing the gospel in great power. The Lord has been with them. A letter received a few days since, says, "God is with us here. The work is beyond anything we have seen. The city is fairly moved, and the meetings thronged. Over one hundred last night accepted Christ, and as many more to-day at the afternoon meeting. God be praised for it all! People are coming in from all parts of Kentucky to attend the meetings, and we are doubting whereunto this will grow. God is with us. He is doing all, and will do all, to the praise of the excellency of his grace." F. H. R.

THE LAST HOUR.

From a most touching letter, lately received from a native Christian in India, we quote some striking words. After referring to Psalm lxxviii. 11, which he takes as the original permits, to refer to the special service of female evangelists, he adds:—"The 'great company of women' must be sent. When the company of priests sounded the trumpet round the walls of Jericho, they fell; the even stronger fortress of women's ('purdah') seclusion in India, with all its evil customs, will fall, too, before the company of this army of preachers."

He then refers to the impure and polluting songs at marriages, which he likens to the cracking of thorns under a pot; to idol festivals, which he likens to a black mountain, yet is the only worship in which these poor secluded ones are even permitted to take part, and which is only a cover to conceal the grossest wickedness and moral impurity. He also makes affecting reference to their deep need of medical help in sickness and suffering. He then winds up thus:—"Please give this notice to your countrywomen. Now is the opportunity for them to win a priceless crown. It is the evening, when only one working hour remains; yet God is calling the labourers still, and gives the same reward as to those who have worked all through the day. By spending five talents, by a little toil, five more may be won. Send us at least one. Let her understand medicine, and women from the cities and all around will flock for relief, and there will be glorious opportunities for sowing the seed of the word of life, and of ministering health and soundness to the whole man."

We have just discussed in our Convention the special sphere of women. Here is a practical comment! Let those who read this brief but burning appeal from a Hindu Christian, who knows and sees the pressing need—the utter misery of his countrywomen—and remember, dear sisters, made, in the providence of God, our own fellow-subjects; let his simple words touch your hearts, and lead those who are able to go, to self-consecration to this distant but blessed sphere. One dear lady, who was with us on Wednesday, sets forth in August, God permitting. She leaves a happy, comfortable home, attached parents and family, and a wondrous sphere of usefulness here, to go and tell of the love of Jesus to her benighted sisters. Another of great gifts and usefulness, has made a similar resolve, and will speedily follow. They go forth in woman's feebleness, but in Christ's strength, and they believe that He will use them there as He has done here. Are there not others equally equipped, and just as ready as these two to lay their accomplishments, their position, their pecuniary means at Jesus' feet in this blessed service? If any desire further information, Gen. Sir William Hill, of the N. S. and Instruction Society, 8, Kensington-gardens-terrace, London, W., will gladly give it, either personally or by correspondence, either to those able to sustain themselves, as those alluded to above, or to those needing the help a society can afford in sustaining as well as in advising and protecting them.

PARENTS' CONFERENCE, ADDLESTONE.

Those who feel their responsibility as parents both to God and to their children will be anxious to know something of the Conference, last Tuesday and Wednesday, at the Princess Mary's Village, Addlestone.

The weather was lovely, and the picturesque little village, with its youthful inhabitants, who looked as unlike the descendants of criminals as well could be, were the picture of Christian happiness; and there was every evidence that the title of Mother borne by the woman in charge of each cottage was more than a name, for it characterized to the full the loving relationship existing between her and her little charges.

The first day, although the attendance was not large, the interest was great, and the Revs. H. E. Brooke and P. E. Phelps spoke with the fullest confidence, both from Scriptural testimony and from that of their own experience, as to the very early age at which the grace of God is savingly manifested in little children, and the responsibility of parents to seek in their very tenderest years to lead the little ones to God.

Mrs. Barbour, of Edinburgh, gave an address to mothers only, in the afternoon, testifying by the history of a single family in several generations the wonderful power of the grace of God in early conversions. And not only did she speak with the graphic power with which God has so highly gifted her, as a natural woman, but in the power of the Holy Ghost, whose work she was indicating.

On Wednesday morning, the Rev. G. Savage, of Bexley, opened the subject of how to promote the growth of spiritual life in children. Remarking on Eph. vi. 5, he said: We are taught to bring up children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," not to bring them down. It is the enemy's work to break down. Sin breaks down; but the Lord is the Builder. He builds up, and calls us thus to partake in his work while training our children.

He dwelt very searchingly on 2 Tim. iii. 5, "denying the power thereof," as the greatest hindrance in the way of the conversion of children, and also of their growth in grace after they are converted. If the life of a parent is not the life of an overcomer, the children will soon discover it, and will draw the inference that faith is a powerless thing. But if, on the contrary, the parent's life is a life of quietude in God, lived without friction, lived in the will, and in obedience to the Word of God, the children will say, I want my father's God, or my mother's God, to be my God! Thus, to promote the spiritual life of our children, our own spiritual life must be promoted.

Dr. Cranage spoke of two great mistakes which are often made in the training of children. The first is to tell them that if they are good they will go to heaven, which he says is the common teaching which children, even those of Christian parents, receive in the years of infancy, and then adduced the case of an officer who was brought to Christ when a young man by the remembrance of his mother showing him a picture of Christ's sufferings on the cross, and saying, with tears in her eyes, "He did it for you, my boy." "He did it for you," is the gospel; "You shall go to heaven if you are good," is the law.

The second error is to doubt the conversion of a child who has professed to have found the Lord, because of inconsistencies and even sins which may follow. Lead them back to Him who has borne their sins, but do not let them doubt the fact that He has received them, or they become sceptical of everything.

Admiral Fishbourne took the chair in the afternoon, and Mr. Westall spoke of the necessity of early training as well as early conversion, drawing interesting lessons from the gold of the tabernacle all being overlaid with gold. He drew a striking contrast between Eli and Abraham, and warned parents against taking their children into scenes of temptation, with the delusive hope that, by doing so, they would prevent the desire to go a second time, which desire they were fostering by indulging them.

Admiral Fishbourne said that we have not been looking for an individual possession of the Spirit, and our children have seen it. We must be filled with the Spirit before we can do anything with our children.

Mrs. Barbour followed with the words, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy hopes." There was a thrilling power with her words so simply spoken. Among other things she said the word "house" might include any that a woman's heart might ask from the God of Omnipotence, and she urged all who were present to make their house the Lord's house of faith, and to take his house for theirs.

Mr. Bishop spoke in the evening of plans for keeping together children who professed to have found Jesus.

It would have been well if a far larger company had gathered to dwell on this subject of all subjects for Christian parents.

L. BAXTER.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

We have received the following letter, which tells its own story. Will not the writer trust us with address?

I live in one of the streets leading off Lisson-grove, N.W., and would feel grateful if some visitor came here among us. We want one; we are longing for some one to come and speak to us. We have not courage to go and seek them; we don't feel worthy to speak, but we are anxious, very anxious, about our salvation, and no one would meet with rudeness, I am sure, who came amongst us. We are poor and wicked, we know, but we would not insult any lady who came to speak to us about Christ. Many among us are ashamed to speak of Christ. I am myself. I don't feel myself fit to do so, and we would be very glad that some one came among us, to our houses, to speak to us, and show us the way.

We have plenty of music-halls, and dancing-halls, and other places, but we want Christ among us. I went out last night looking for a church to pray in, but there were none open. Can you in any way help us to get some good man or woman to come among us. We will not be rude to them; we want them to come. I do not feel worthy to sign my name, as I am not sure whether I am saved or not. I sometimes think I am, and then I am sometimes doubtful, and want advice.

R. D.

PROTESTANT DEACONESSES' INSTITUTE, TOTTENHAM.

In these days when there is so much (not too much) preaching of the saving value of faith, there is a possible danger of the equally binding exhortation to good works, as a result, being lost sight of. Dr. Laseron's institution at Tottenham comes in as a loud reminder at such a time. His motto is, "I will show you my faith by my works." It was a great pleasure to form one of the company who assembled at his quiet retreat at Tottenham on the afternoon of Saturday week, to hear him read the report of his work for the past year. He was able to tell us that both at the parent house and the various branches in the three kingdoms, an increased number of patients had been treated; this means more work done for Christ, both to the bodies and souls of men, because Dr. Laseron and his devoted assistants never dream of trying to cure bodily ailment without also attempting to reach the deeper and more dreadful disease of the soul. In this respect we fear the Tottenham institution stands unique among our hospitals, and for this reason we strongly think Dr. Laseron should have the unmistakable support of the Christian public. His needs are large at the present time, and he desires, by extended effort, to make them larger. Will those whose hearts the Lord has touched, and who are able, not gladly be the medium of supplying his wants? They will be richly rewarded. More deaconesses of the right sort are also wanted, and we would only repeat Dr. Laseron's appeal, uttered at the annual meeting, to those who have no family ties too strong to prevent them, and those who are not otherwise actively employed, to offer themselves for this most blessed service in the Lord's vineyard.

WHITEHAVEN.—A series of evangelistic services were held last week at this place by the Rev. E. Stainton, of Sheffield, with most encouraging results. The meetings were literally crowded, many remaining afterwards as anxious inquirers, and it is believed that through God's blessing on the indefatigable efforts put forth, much good has been accomplished.

RAMSGATE.—Mr. and Mrs. Croxford conducted a week's special services in this town, in the Queen-street and Denmark-road chapels, commencing Sunday, May 2. The congregations have been very good, and God's saving power has been manifested. Sixteen professed saving faith in Christ on Sunday evening. The singing of Mrs. Croxford has been blessed. One woman found Jesus while "The Great Physician" was being sung.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

"The Christians" have received mighty blessings from the never-to-be-forgotten visit of our American brethren.

To them "the word of God" seems clearer, more personal, the realities brought out, a greater relish for divine truth, and the Lord Jesus beams with a peculiar brightness in each page.

There is a much more DECIDED belief in instantaneous conversion, and that prayer will be answered (1 John v. 14, 15). I have observed also that ministers who make much of prayer and prayer-meetings, are more highly esteemed than mere preachers.

As for the singing, most places of worship are not content without Sankey's hymns, which are popular alike in factories and churches, and conversions are daily the result of such singing.

I must confess that more "love," "sympathy," and "enthusiasm" exist than at any period during the past fifteen years I have had the privilege of labouring in the North of London. Christians who formerly only gave that peculiar London nod on recognition, now take the trouble to cross over the street and talk about what the Lord is doing.

They give little heed to mere criticism about the men and work, since they see, by God's grace, drunken neighbours made sober, the immoral become chaste, sceptics confessing Christ, the careless awakened, and God's people refreshed and comforted. Many friends have been raised up who will stand by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey "come what may."

Perhaps the most notable feature is the individuality of the movement. Each is carving out, as the Lord directs, some personal work—and doing it all for Christ's sake. Quite a number of independent and different spheres of labour, unconnected with any church work, have originated, and are going on well.

I attended every week-night meeting, and most of the Sundays, and never omitted the inquiry-room, and can with joy affirm that a very rich harvest of blessing is the result of our beloved friends' visit to North London.

A. STYLEMAN HERRING.

St. Paul's, Clerkenwell.

THE OPERA HOUSE, HAYMARKET.

TUESDAY, MAY 11TH.

The first thought this morning which pressed upon the mind was, "How wonderful it is that, day by day, so many can come out from home, from business and profession, to attend a noon-day meeting—the very cream of the twenty-four hours!" And still the crowd increases. Let not Mr. Moody feel discouraged if the noon meeting is not as overflowing as the two other meetings. It is only God who can and does lead the people out so much and so constantly to pray.

This day the meeting had an excursion party of 250 from Portsmouth, and it called for special prayer. A most edifying and remarkable list of requests, too, was presented.

Mr. Moody opened the Word on the subject of "The Promises," urging the Spirit's testimony that "the Scripture cannot be broken." "There are no discounts in God's payments of promises to pay. Man dates his promises; God never dates his; they are always payable. Let us be definite in our prayers to God." He spoke of a man who went "all round the world" in his prayer, and a woman present called out, "Ask Him for something." Oh, if He gave his Son to the world for nothing, what will He not give his Church if they ask Him!

The Bible-reading in the afternoon was a glorious sight. The people pressed to hear the word; not an inch of room was unoccupied; and the address, on "What think ye of Christ?" thrilled the audience. The result was a crowded after-meeting and a host of inquirers.

At night the same sermon was repeated, by request, and Mr. Moody begged that none who heard it in the afternoon would come at night. Most of them, we think, observed this request. We saw a few of the same faces only. But as we listened to the same discourse, we thought how much we should like to hear it twice again next day.

During the day, some time, Mr. Moody stated that a letter had come to him from "a minister who had preached four years, and who was only converted this very noon."

Speaking of the love of Jesus to sinners, Mr. Moody said: "He'd hush every harp in heaven to hear one sinner cry for mercy. It reminded him of the poor freedmen's chorus—

'Jesus is lisenin' all de day long
To h'ar one sinner pray.'

"The heart of the great Preacher," he said, "came out in nine 'blesseds' in the first sermon on the mount. The Saviour told Saul He was Jesus, and, bless God, He is Jesus still! He hasn't changed his name, though He's gone to heaven." Of the Gospel of John Mr. Moody said, "It is God's love-letter to the world."

WEDNESDAY, 12TH.

Mr. Moody was absent to-day, at the opening of a noon prayer-meeting at the Victoria Theatre. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, we learn, will conduct that meeting next Wednesday.

At the Opera House Mr. Herbert Taylor led the meeting, reading 1 Kings iii. 5, "And God said, Ask what I shall give thee?" The knowledge of Mr. Moody's absence was the cause of a little smaller attendance, but truly the spirit of prayer was present.

One most edifying part of this meeting is the reading of the requests for prayer and praise, and the remarks thereon with so much feeling and unction by W. Graham, Esq., M.P. These requests are so numerous that Mr. Graham is compelled to group them in this way to-day:—18 Christians ask prayer for themselves; 198 parents ask prayer for their children; 29 children for their parents; 12 wives for husbands; 50 brothers for sisters; 63 relations and friends for the same; 6 for drunkards; 7 for sceptics; 11 for backsliders; 8 for families; 7 for servants; "For one very ill, and deeply anxious"; 22 for God's work; 5 for parishes; 10 for anxious ones; "For blessing on the gift of a Bible in his own tongue to a young foreigner."

Another overflowing audience met at 3 p.m., with about 150 ministers, of all names, on the platform, and many others seated all over the house.

Mr. Sankey's singing was deeply solemn; it was the 18th hymn, "Hark, the voice of Jesus crying." Truly the labours of our brother are a very important portion of the services, which God always so much honours with blessing.

The sermon, from the text, "Where art thou?" we had heard before, and yet it came fresh to the heart with absorbing interest. Mr. Moody said, "Most ministers make the application of the text after the discourse; he would apply his text to start with. I feel sad," said Mr. Moody, "to see so many ladies all the time in their carriages, carrying their 'poodle dogs' so carefully, while thousands of wretched children have no one to lead them to Jesus. Oh! where art thou?"

The second appeal was to "backsliders."

The awfully solemn stillness of the house, and the tear-glistering eyes of thousands, told the power of the faithful appeal, while the general rising all over the pit, the platform, boxes, and galleries, of those who asked for prayer on their behalf was a telling and overwhelming sight. The audience seemed to want to linger when the inquirers thronged the two private rooms for spiritual assistance. It was with difficulty we could disperse them; they seemed like an enchanted crowd of eager ones waiting for more to follow.

The meeting at night was a repetition of the afternoon, only still more thronged and hungry to hear.

The numbers who joined in the after-meeting, and of those who went to the inquiry-room was very great.

The young men's meeting, from 9 to 10 p.m., is now fairly started, and is a success to begin with.

During the sermon to-night, it may be added that Mr. Moody deplored the sleepy state of the Church. What was needed was that the believers should be "red hot"—if he might use the expression—for the cause of Christ and dying men around. Never mind if the world calls us mad; we are mad in one sense, but we have a good "Keeper," and a safe asylum to be removed to in "a little while." If the world be not against us, Christ will not be for us.

THURSDAY, 13TH.

At the noon prayer-meeting, Mr. Moody read and spoke from Gen. xi. 31. Abram came as far as Haran, and stopped there. So many Christians stop short of the land of rest for their souls. We must be "out-and-out" for the Lord. Let self be put out of sight, and the whole being given up to his service. Abram got into trouble here; famine came and struck the land while he was at Haran (Gen. xii. 10); and if we do not go right into rest in God, famine of soul must find us. But Abram came to God's altar; he got on his face (chap. xii. 8). He built an altar to the Lord. This is the remedy still, if we are not in our proper place of service. And after this, God gave Abram four "I wills" (chap. xvii. 2-8). If we would have God's "I wills," we must build our altars, and wholly surrender to Him; get out of Haran and Egypt, and get into the dust.

Here Mr. Sankey remarked that some may feel weary—not of, but in, the work, and he would sing, "Not now, my child." The chorus, "Wilt thou not watch with Me one little hour?" went straight to all hearts present. This noon meeting was one of deep solemnity and divine refreshing.

At the three o'clock meeting, the crowd was excessively great. The Royal Box was full. We will not mention names, except to say that the presence of the Duchess of Sutherland so constantly is remarkable, and on one occasion, when we missed her earnest face, the meeting kept looking for her coming. May this lady be used of the Lord in her exalted rank, so that here on earth she may win many to Christ, and be known as a worker for Jesus, who will let her name live, as now, in the hearts of God's people in coming ages as one bold for the Master; and may she win many stars for her immortal crown.

Mr. Sankey sang the 26th Hymn, "There's a light in the valley," and again, before the sermon, he sang, "Nothing but leaves." That the Spirit uses these hymns is most evident.

Mr. Moody said: "I will not preach a sermon to-day; I want to tell how we may be saved;" and gave his address from the words, "What must I do to be saved?" and he repeated the same discourse at the evening meeting. In the course of his address, Mr. Moody said: "A lady came to me yesterday, at noon, and said, 'I won't come to any more of your meetings; you make me feel wretched.' 'I am glad of that,' I replied. 'Well, I won't come,' she added; but in the afternoon, there she was again; and I hope she is here now, and will keep on getting more and more miserable, till she lets Christ turn her feet the right way."

While repeating his address at night, the gasman had turned on more gas. "Oh, there is more light!" he suddenly broke out; "more light—that's what we want!" and added, that a reporter asked a minister once for the notes of his sermon. "Here it is," said the preacher; "make all you can of it." And in the paper was found only the words, "More light, more light!" "Oh, God send more light to this audience!" he cried aloud; and the effect was thrilling and solemn.

There were thousands, it was said, waiting outside and could not get in, and Mr. Moody said, "I see some faces here who were here in the afternoon; will they get up and leave at once, to make room for some who cannot get in?" At this several went out. Both afternoon and night meetings the press of the crowd was very great. At the end of the meetings the congregations sang, "I am trusting, Lord, in Thee." Mr. Moody said, "Mr. Sankey, can't we alter that, and change the chorus from, 'I will trust Him,' to, 'I do trust Him,' and make it a present act; and let us all say it a dozen times;" and the words were varied several times, and sung as many times, once to, "I now trust Him," and at last, all who wanted a present salvation, and would now venture on Christ, were asked to sing it. "He has saved me. He has saved me just now." "Would to God," said Mr. Moody, "that all London would take up this chorus; why not shout it all through the streets of the city? Let us go on, and sing it again and again!" While this was being repeated we observed an intelligent looking man, of grey hairs, in the front, who began the altered chorus, and stopped, putting his finger on his lips, and trembling, bending his head in visible agony of spirit. The meetings increase both in volume and solemnity.

FRIDAY, 14TH.

Lord Cavan opened the noon meeting with prayer; after which the Rev. J. H. Wilson read from 2 Cor. v. 1-4. He said that Paul's assurance of the "house not made with hands" is the common property of the humblest believer.

Mr. R. Pearsall Smith added a few thoughts. "Whom do we doubt—is it God?" Can we "make Him a liar?" Shall we let a little doubt of God be in our hearts? Why not say, "I steal a little and lie a little?" Is it less a sin? Why, God has made us temples of the Holy Ghost. How can the child doubt his Father? Would our child doubt us? It would wound us to know it. Oh, let us confess this sin on our faces, and put it away, and mount up as on eagle's wings. The eagle has two wings, so has the Christian—the wing of faith and the wing of obedience. We must use both in mounting; neither will lift us alone.

Dr. Wallace, of Glasgow, also said a little on the same point. He would not give the last twelve months of his life for all the former; he had felt the joy of this renewed assurance; it had, of late, come so clear to his soul.

The afternoon and night meetings were of the same character, though different congregations. The same subject was presented to a subdued and almost painfully silent crush of people. Mr. Sankey sang two new hymns, both very touching and telling. The reading of texts of Scripture between the verses sung was doubtless very effectual to rivet the truth upon the mind. The prayers and little addresses of Mr. Sankey are always so sweet and appropriate. God is giving many souls to be shining places in his heavenly crown, we believe.

The words of Mr. Moody's text were taken from Luke ii. 7, "There was no room for Him in the inn." When he asked if we were all willing to see the Son of Man come to-day before five o'clock, it sent a thrill of bewilderment into the hearts of many, we are assured.

Mr. Henry Varley was at the night meeting, and offered the opening prayer. It was very clear that our brother has been living much alone with the Master. No outsider could so speak to God.

Near the end of the sermon, Mr. Moody put the question, "Would you—will you let this Jesus have room in your heart?" and as he pressed it, and asked, "Who will?" there arose a cry from before, and behind, and above him, "Me," "Me," "I will," "I will." The heart of the dear servant thus pleading for his Lord was visibly moved as he tremblingly responded, "Praise God! praise God! praise God there are so many willing to let the Saviour come in!" And the army of anxious souls who rose to his further plea to rise, was overpowering; it was the largest show of lost ones coming home we have seen in this house. The after-meeting and inquiry-room were quite full, and many ready to help.

We can report good things of the week of young men's meetings, but pressure on our time otherwise kept us from being able to give particulars of this matter from observation. From one to two hundred young men were present, on an average. The Lord's name be praised!

SATURDAY, 15TH.

The noon meeting was conducted by Mr. Edwards, and, as usual, the reading of the requests was most solemnly edifying.

At three Mr. Robertson gave the third and last address to the children, and again proved himself to be a "prince of preachers" to the little ones. For a full hour he riveted their attention with an address on "Five D's about children—their Dignity, Depravity, Danger, Duty, and Destiny." It teemed with anecdote and illustration, and seemed to be much appreciated by the large company of children and their friends who were present.

In his address Mr. Robertson alluded to the question of Scripture clocks started by him last year in London, and of which he said he had received 1000 in response to his invitation. He still wanted 500 to complete the 1500 requested by Mr. Moody for the Chicago children, and those at the meeting on Saturday were asked to aid in making up this number. We may extend the like request to those of our young readers who have not contributed to Mr. Robertson's collection. The clocks, when finished, ought to be sent to Rev. J. Robertson, Newington, Edinburgh. J. SABINE KNIGHT.

BOW-ROAD HALL.

SUNDAY, MAY 16TH.

Last Saturday and Sunday will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to be present. On Saturday, although there was a very small attendance, Mr. Moody declared it was one of the most solemn meetings he had ever held. At the close, he said he had finished the hardest week's work he had ever gone through; but, for all that, if the Christians would meet him in the tent at seven o'clock on Sunday morning, for prayer, he would be there. He then asked all who would come to hold up their hands, and enough did so to more than fill the tent.

Sunday morning found it full at the time, and great was the blessing received by those fortunate enough to be there. One described it to me as so solemn, that the chair on which he sat seemed to move; and another, that he almost felt he must ask God to stay the awfulness of the meeting.

At eight o'clock, Mr. Moody commenced the service in the large hall, by prayer; and Mr. Sankey sang, "Not now, my child." Mr. Moody then delivered a most powerful address upon the prophet Daniel.

It need hardly be said that the wondrously suggestive history of that bright star in the Scripture firmament, was told out in a way most likely to awaken the dormant energies of the sluggish ones in the audience, and to quicken the flame of love that burned more or less brightly in the hearts of others. One is rejoiced to think that the stirring up of the best affections for the person and service of the Saviour that many of us are at the present time experiencing, will make us "dare to stand alone" in times to come, when it may perhaps not be so easy to do so as it seems just now.

On Sunday afternoon last there were, we suppose, over five hundred empty seats during the service, but the near approach of the Whitsuntide holidays may have caused the absence of a good many.

Mr. Sankey's solos were "The Home of the Soul" and "Mary Magdalen." The last is, we think, one of the most effective in his collection. As sung by Mr. Sankey, it tells so eloquently of the sinner's need and the Saviour's all-forgiving love, as well as the gratitude that ought to well up from the heart of every forgiven one, in spite of all discouragement. We never hear Mr. Sankey sing this hymn without having our love increasingly drawn out towards the Saviour who stooped so low to save.

Mr. Moody's theme was "Christ's compassion," which he portrayed in a series of incidents from the Saviour's life. We are constrained to add that the audience did not appear to be so greatly moved as this subject and Mr. Moody's handling of it led us to expect, but then we have lived long to know that it is possible for sinful human hearts to resist almost anything. The tent was used for the inquiry-meeting, and we can speak positively of not a few cases of decided and very hopeful conversions. At the same time we hope the real results of the meeting will far exceed those that were apparent.

To insure admittance to the evening meeting, it was necessary to be at the hall long before the appointed hour. An overflow meeting of 2000 and upwards was held at Mr. Brown's tabernacle. Both there and in the large hall the power of the Holy Ghost was very manifestly present to seal home the gospel message. Mr. Moody told out the story of the cross, from the Last Supper,—all through the agony in the garden, the shame of the betrayal, the indignity of the mock trials, the crowning iniquity of Calvary, the burial and resurrection—to the parting interview of the risen Lord with his little band of followers on Olivet as He was translated to his seat at the right hand of the Father. This address, as delivered on Sunday night, was yet one more illustration of the undying power there is in "the old old story" to move human hearts, and break down human wills, and to meet human needs. Mr. Moody's customary call to anxious ones to rise was so generally responded to, that he was constrained to exclaim, "Thank God for this sight! This is what we have been praying for." Then followed the hand-to-hand fishing for souls, and a good catch, as far as observation could extend, was the result. We cannot but admire the hearty, unreserved way in which many of the East-end friends enter into the work of the inquiry-meeting, and labour to bring souls to the birth. A little time spent in the after-meeting reveals the wonderful way in which God is at present visiting this part of London, and pleading his own cause in a marvellous variety of form. Still there is much land to be possessed, and this week special efforts are to be made to reach the sailors and drunkards, the former a very numerous class, and the latter, we fear, not much less so. Mr. Sankey is to sing suitable hymns, and we would ask our readers to make it matter of unceasing prayer to God that these efforts may be abundantly successful.

A SUNDAY AT THE BOW-ROAD HALL.

The early morning workers' meeting, after a wet night, was not quite so well attended as usual; still, the hall was more than half full, and the life and blessing in the meeting were as great as ever.

Mr. Moody took for his subject Matt. xx., the labourer in the vineyard, who received every man a penny. He entreated the Christian workers not to make bargains with the Lord, but to trust Him for their reward, and so to forget self as to be willing to do anything, however small, for Christ.

Mr. Sankey sang "Go work in my vineyard," and Mr. Moody began his address on the second verse of this hymn, showing that there was plenty of work for all. At the close of the meeting, he asked all the Christians present who would try to bring one soul to God that week to stand up. Thousands rose, and it was a solemn moment as he pleaded with such fervour and tenderness for them that they might be filled with the Spirit, and abundantly blessed in their work for Christ. Surely the Lord is giving a gracious answer to these prayers in the hearts of his children, as well as among the unsaved.

The afternoon meeting for women was very well attended, and at a quarter to three the five hundred unoccupied chairs at the end of the hall were filled by some of the men and boys who were waiting for admittance outside.

In the evening the hall was thronged with men, the women being admitted shortly before the meeting began. The address was a very striking one, showing that salvation might be obtained at once. He illustrated this, first, from the ark. "There was a moment when Noah was outside; another when he was inside, and safe; Lot out of Sodom; the manslayer safe the moment he entered the city of refuge; the slave safe as soon as he was under the British flag in Canada.

It was an interesting sight to watch the eager, listening faces of thousands of men, and to see how vividly the truth was brought home to their hearts and understandings. There were many anxious inquirers afterwards; quite a number of young boys gathered in one room, and many older men in the galleries.

The great work that is doing will, we hope, be manifested more and more in its fruit as time passes on, and the new converts have shown the reality of their conversion in their lives; but many are rejoicing over the work already, and last Sunday afternoon I saw some of the fruits in my working-men's Bible-class. I noticed several strangers present as we began; and when I alluded to something Mr. Moody had said in the morning meeting, there was a bright response from a young man sitting in the front row; but so changed was his whole face and expression, that I did not recognize him as an old member of my own class, one who had been a grief to me by his ungodliness. His father, a faithful Christian man, long a member of the Bible-class, had gone home, leaving a widow and large family. This eldest son had been a great sorrow to his mother, and the Christian men who knew and cared for his father had tried in vain to lead him to choose the right way. He left the class, and would not return, and went far on in the paths of sin. How surprised I felt when, at the close of the class, this young man came forward, and asked to have his name entered again, and I recognized in him the lost one, and found him a bright and happy Christian, his face beaming with joy, and his lips full of praise!

And then he told me the story of the Lord's goodness to him. He had gone to the Bow-road Hall, and had been first aroused by the singing of the hymn, "The home over there." He said it was so heavenly. And when they sang, "Oh think of the friends over there," he thought of his father; and then came the thought of his own lost state. The Spirit was striving with him, and he remained to the after-meeting. He told me how a gentleman talked to him, and he wished he could become a Christian, but thought he could not, and that the verse he showed him was John v. 24. He opened his Bible, and read it to me with the delight we feel in the word which first brought light into the darkness of our hearts. "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life." And he said, "Then I saw that, if I trusted Christ, then everlasting life was mine; that it did not say, 'shall have,' but 'hath';" and that was so wonderful to me, and I did trust Him. And now I am so happy; I never felt so happy in all my life. I feel as though I could sing all day long. Sometimes, when I am at work, I can't help singing a hymn softly to myself; and then the men say, 'Sankey, Sankey,' and jeer at me. But I think that an honour. I don't mind it. I feel as though I could bear anything for Christ."

Then he told me how, at the young men's meeting in the tent, he, among others, had stood up, and told what Christ had done for him. To his mother he said, "Mother, I have often stood up to speak for the devil; now I must not be ashamed to stand up to witness for Christ." And as he held his Bible in his hand, he said, "I used to think the Bible a dull book; but now it is all new to me, and I am never tired of reading it."

As we were talking, by his side stood a young Christian man, a member of the Bible-class, who had been his guest, and had tried hard to lead him to Christ, praying for him, and visiting him; his face was glowing with hearty sympathy. And as the new convert told me he was now out of work, he turned to this friend and said, "But I am not sorry, for the men at that yard swear so; and I do not know how to bear to hear them swear now." And then he added, "But I have no fear about work, I can trust the Lord for that."

And as we went on talking of the new life he had to lead for Christ, he seemed so anxious to be consistent, and he said, "I don't mind telling you how I was tempted the other day, but the Lord helped me. I was going to put up a pailing in the garden to keep the little ones from running over some things I had newly planted, and when I was at work in the dockyard, there were quantities of nails lying about that we use for tacking on the felt. I just up with a handful, and put them in my pocket; but directly something seemed to say to me, You ought not to do that, and I thought, There is that man saw you do it, and he knows you are a Christian now. Then I said to myself, But so many of the men do it, and Mr. G—— would not mind you having a few nails. Then I thought, But they are not yours, and you are a Christian; and then my hand goes back to my pocket, and I pulls out a handful and throws them down; and then I put my hand in again and out with some more, till I put them all back; and then I felt so happy. I know the Lord will keep me."

And then he said, "Last night, I do think I brought another soul to the Lord Jesus. I know I was only the instrument; it was all the Lord's work. I met a young man, about my own age, at the Bow-road Hall. I asked him if he was a Christian. 'No,' he said, 'but I wish I was.' And so I got by him and talked to him; but he did not seem to be able to see it at all; and so I thought he might be like me, and I says, 'Perhaps your difficulty is that you want to feel it, and you can't feel?' He says, 'Yes, that is it; I can't feel.' And so I says, 'Now I will show you the verse that helped me,' so I just read to him, quite slowly, John v. 24, and I read it once or twice, and as I read it I just watched his side face from where I sat, and I saw the light come into his face, and he said, 'Oh I see it; thank God I see,' and I do believe he was able to trust Christ that night."

How sweet it is to see that Christ is willing so soon to use these young converts in his service. And how we see exemplified in these simple stories of God's grace the words of the Psalmist, "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."

The next day I heard from that widowed mother how her home was changed by the blessing to her son: and she said, "All my care seems gone now."

This was joy enough to fill one's heart with praise; but it was not all. Each of the new-comers to the class that afternoon (and there were four or five) had a sweet story to tell of the Lord's goodness to them through the meetings in the Bow-road Hall—one, a backslider, had been restored; and three others had found life in Christ, two through the help of members of the Bible-class, who had taken them to the meetings, and talked to them afterwards.

One said, "I see every thing in a new light since Mr. — talked to me in the hall."

Another evening an attendant at a place of worship is rejoicing in the Lord, and hoping now to come to his table.

How great is the joy of this harvest work! May the Lord strengthen his dear servants, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, for the blessed work they are doing. Mr. Moody said last night that when he heard of one soul who had been brought to the Lord at his meetings, and who had died a few days after, rejoicing in Christ, he said to Mr. Sankey, "It was worth our coming across the Atlantic for that one soul, who is now gone home to the Father's house."

And surely we may praise the Lord that they have come across the Atlantic, as we see these souls who were living without God and without hope, full of praise and joy, and beginning to live to the honour of Him who has died for them, and washed them from their sins in his own blood!

M. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Limehouse Rectory, E., May 7, 1875.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING, HAYMARKET.

The popular holiday of Whitsuntide did not lessen, but rather increased, the attendance at the meeting to-day, which was, as usual, pervaded by the spirit of praise for the work of the past week.

There was a perfect tide of requests for prayer of the most varied kind, including special services at various places throughout the country, and the annual meeting of the Society of Friends.

After the introductory praise and prayer, Mr. Moody read Peter's recital of his vision at Joppa. He remarked that it was interesting to notice, that the words that were specially blessed to the conversion of Cornelius and his house were those spoken by Peter concerning Christ, and Him crucified. This was the kind of preaching that was still owned by God.

Mr. Moody said the first letter he opened this morning was the following:—"Dear Mr. Moody,—Our family have been attending your meetings, and myself and wife have had our souls greatly refreshed, but above all, five of our dear children, a sister of my wife's, and one of our servants, have been brought to know the truth as it is in Jesus. Another of my servants is now under the influence of the Spirit, and, I believe, fully broken in heart. What shall I render unto the Lord for all his mercies! Praise Him in the congregation of his saints." Another extract told of the conversion of two girls in a class through the conversion of the teacher. Mr. Moody asked prayer for the conversion of all unconverted teachers, and afterwards prayed very fervently for the services to be held this week.

Mr. Stone and Mr. Paton gave interesting reports of the meetings in the East-end yesterday. Mr. Paton related some striking instances of the conversion of households. At his request, a man who had been a great dog-fighter, came forward to Mr. Moody's stand, and told the remarkable story of his conversion in a very unassuming and touching way. His first religious impressions were created by the death of his child, fifteen months old, in March last. He was led to attend the services in the East-end Hall, and after several conversations with young men at the tent, was able to give himself to Christ, and part company with his dog-fighting and other evil practices. He was now anxious for the conversion of his wife, who was seeking Christ, and in a trembling voice requested prayer on her behalf.

This being done by Rev. W. H. Chapman,

Mr. Edwards gave some details of the services in the Opera House yesterday, and told of a little boy he met outside, who had received Christ three weeks since, while hearing Mr. Moody preach. Mr. Edwards closed with some words of earnest prayer for Mr. H. Varley, now returned from America, and that his labours here might be even more successful than they have been across the water. Mr. Varley was present at the meeting, but took no part.

After some further testimony with respect to the conversion of relatives through the East-end services, the meeting closed with the doxology and the benediction.

A REPOSITORY has been opened in Gosport for the reception of suitable books or periodicals no longer needed, for supplying hospitals, military barracks, and outward-bound ships. All parcels to be addressed, carriage paid, to the care of the Rev. C. J. Hort, Chaplain to the Forces, Clarence House, Gosport. I shall also be glad to acknowledge small donations for defraying necessary expenses, payable to my husband, the Rev. H. Tudor Craig, Chaplain to the Forces, Alverstoke, near Gosport.

HASTINGS.—Efforts are being made among the numerous body of fishermen at Hastings to induce them to forego Sunday fishing. Open-air addresses and subsequent meetings have been held, and the fishermen invited to social tea-meetings, which were well attended, and a hearty response was given to the movement by some of the principal fishermen present. The movement is being supported by Christians of different denominations, and help is solicited for the continuance of these social meetings, and appropriate tracts for distribution would be greatly appreciated. Please address the Rev. Wm. Corbridge, Beulah House, Plynlmmon-road, Hastings.

MR. MOODY ON SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

We give, as follows, the answers by Mr. Moody at the Convention to questions about Sunday-schools. He promised that he did not know much about the Sunday-schools of this country, and would therefore answer the questions from an American point of view.

How should the superintendent be elected—by the scholars, or by the teachers?—By the teachers, and by ballot, once a year. I do not believe in putting a man in, and keeping him for life. Let his term expire every year; he will soon find out whether he is popular or not.

What can be done with a minister and congregation who do not take the slightest interest in the Sunday-school?—Pray for them. Get the minister to speak himself now and then.

Ought a superintendent to scold his teachers before the scholars?—No; nor at any other time. Always hold up your teachers before the scholars.

Is it best for the teachers to use helps?—Yes, every kind of help; but I would not take them into the class with me. It is a very common thing in our country for the teacher to have two books with him in the class, and he proceeds something like this:—"John, who made you?" "God made me." "Yes, John, that's right. Who was the first man?" "Adam." "Yes, that's right, my boy." I would have only one book in the class—the Bible. Picture the lesson out before the children, and write down the answers they give. They will then want to see their answers, and that will make it interesting. Or take an object-lesson. Christ made use of all the objects round about Him—the bird, the fox, the little lamb skipping on the hills. It is much better to teach in that way than have a question-book.

What can be done to retain the older scholars?—I was very glad our friend from Belfast (Dr. Hanna) touched on that question. The quicker we abolish the word "children" from the Sabbath-school the better. We want to get the adults into the Sabbath-school, to teach them the Word of God. I believe we are on the eve of a revolution on this point. We have a wealthy man in Philadelphia who has put up a building there with fifty rooms in it, all opening into one building, and the parents can see their children with the teachers right down below them. There you will see 2000 or 3000 children and parents all together studying the Word of God. The result is, we get a great many of the fathers and mothers to attend Sabbath-school every Sunday afternoon. I would have preaching in the morning to the church; in the afternoon, let us come together, old and young, for the study of the Bible; and in the evening have an evangelistic meeting. That is about what we ought to have. Then I would have proper seats for the little ones. The idea of setting a little fellow on a high seat, with his legs dangling down, and listening to a dry sermon! No wonder he gets to hate the very name of the Sunday-school!

Would you have a teachers'-meeting? If so, how would you conduct it?—Certainly have one; but there are different ways of conducting it. We have one in Chicago every week; and we have it on Saturday, at twelve o'clock—the worst day in the week—yet it is always full; about a thousand attend it. We have in America a uniform lesson. I hope you will soon have one here. But some one says, "Will the same lesson do for the little ones as for the old?" Of course. Cut the meat finer for the young ones, that is all. Then all the religious papers publish an article on the Sunday-school lesson, and even some of the dailies are doing the same. Then as to conducting the meeting. You should have a union one, to study the lessons. But then, I have one in my own church, once in three months, where the superintendent and the teachers have a free conversation, and criticize one another. For a quarter of an hour they criticize me; some think I have too much singing; others I have too long prayers, and so on. Then I turn round and criticize them pretty sharply.

Would you have a teacher disturbed when he is at the lesson?—By no means. And, another thing, I don't like to have any one disturb me in the inquiry-room. When the teacher has just got warm in his subject, and the scholars have just got interested, up comes the secretary. Then they settle to their work again; up comes the librarian. Back to their work again; up comes the superintendent. There won't be much satisfaction in the lesson that night. I was in a Sunday-school lately, and noticed one lady teacher was disturbed seven times in thirty-five minutes.

How would you ministers like to be disturbed seven times in the middle of your sermon by somebody wanting to speak to you? It would break the thread of your discourse. No teacher should be interrupted during the lesson.

What can be done to awaken a fresh interest in our Sunday-schools?—One thing you could do is to set the children to work. Bring in a number of nice little plants and geraniums, and tell the children each to choose one, and take it to any sick person they know. Sometimes I have brought a few gold fish, and have done the same. I know the sick love to have flowers, and the children will be delighted to take them the present. I am very much interested in what is going on at Mildmay in giving flowers to the sick. It makes one almost wish he were sick to get these lovely flowers.

What plan do you think best for conducting infant-schools?—Well, it is a pretty difficult thing to do properly. I know I find it a great deal easier to preach to large meetings, and therefore I cannot pretend to answer that question.

Do you think it is best for classes to have two teachers?—By no means.

How many scholars would you have in one class?—That would entirely depend on how many good teachers I had. If I had a hundred scholars, and not a converted teacher near me, I would take them all myself. Some teachers are like magnets, and can teach seventy-five better than others can teach five.

REV. W. TAYLOR'S WORK IN BRISTOL.

A correspondent writes:—

The long-sought blessing for our city is just commencing, and the expectations of God's people are enlarged and intensified for a glorious revival in our midst.

For many months importunate prayer has been offered for a share of the blessings enjoyed by other cities, and our gracious Lord is now responding to these appeals, and our city is being moved by the Holy Spirit.

After several fruitless attempts to obtain the help of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Rev. W. Taylor has been led into our midst, and, with the hearty co-operation of ministers and earnest Christians, is holding a series of meetings in the largest and most central of our halls.

These services have been gloriously successful, hundreds have heard the blessed gospel, Christians are being quickened into newness of life, and the results of the inquiry-meeting have been most encouraging.

Nor have the efforts been confined to the Colston Hall, but special meetings for working-men during the dinner hour have been held, and largely attended.

Will Christian readers pray for us that the house-to-house visitation may be blessed; that the outlying masses, so hard to move Godward by ordinary means, may be brought to hear the gospel; that the spirit of union and brotherly love may fill every minister and Christian in our city, and that our God-dishonouring unbelief may be cast out by the might of victorious faith.

The following is from another correspondent:—

We have much reason to praise the Lord in this place, that He has put it into the hearts of so many of his children of every section of the Church of Christ to call upon Him unitedly for a blessing upon this important work carried on by the Rev. W. Taylor. The first droppings of the shower have already appeared in many anxious inquirers, accompanied with many hopeful results, at the evening meetings of Sunday and Monday; but we look for abundance of rain, and earnestly solicit, in this behalf, the prayers of all the sympathizing readers of THE CHRISTIAN. At our three first meetings in the large Colston Hall, holding about 2500 or more, we were quite full; and on Sunday evening an overflow meeting of many hundreds was held in Lodge-street Chapel adjoining.

The Western Daily Press, of Friday, says:—"An open-air service, in continuation of the special services which are at present being held in Bristol, was addressed by the Rev. William Taylor last night on Brandon-hill. There were from 1500 to 2000 present. Mr. Taylor addressed the assembly twice. After his first remarks, the Rev. W. J. Mayers sang 'The Ninety and Nine.' The words were uttered with remarkable clearness, and sung with full volume of voice, so that all present could easily understand without the hymn-book. The service closed with the singing of 'There is a fountain filled with blood,' and prayer, after which Mr. Taylor announced that there would be a meeting for inquirers at Bethesda Chapel."

A well-informed correspondent also writes: "The work of God is going on here well. The Colston Hall is crowded, and the inquiry-room—itsself a large hall—well dotted all over with groups. An Indian Army officer was saved there on Wednesday night; and last night he brought two of his daughters and a son into the room as seekers; they also received the Saviour. Pray for the extension of the work in the west. There is a tier of towns in this direction, I am told, which have not been aroused like the cities of the north."

Rev. William Taylor, of California, has been for many years labouring as a missionary evangelist in most of the mission-fields of the globe, and among agents of all the principal missionary societies of all churches. Within a few years past, God has founded a self-supporting Mission in India, composed of newly-converted European residents, East Indians, Parsees, Hindus, and Mohammedans. Its object, in conjunction with other organizations, is the conquest of India for Christ. It does not draw a penny from any missionary society, or any source outside of India, except the funds required to send missionaries to them. This Mission is now firmly planted in Bombay, Poona, Kurrachee (west of the Indus), Calcutta, Madras, Bangalore, Secunderabad, and more than a score of smaller places. It requires more than five thousand miles of travel to visit all the organized self-supporting centres of this work. It is called "Bombay, Bengal, and Madras Mission," these being the three great centres of its operations; but it is not limited to these.

Mr. Taylor, under God, is the founder and the superintendent of this Mission. Its present working force comprises eighteen preachers, devoted wholly to evangelistic and pastoral work, and about thirteen hundred lay members and workers, who support their own ministers, and pay all running expenses of their work, except their pioneer superintendent, who refuses to take a penny from them. For many years, in addition to his preaching, God has been using his pen for the spread of His gospel. By the proceeds of his books he supports his family, pays his own sea-travelling expenses, and bears the expense of planting Missions, and developing resources for their support, after which he turns them over to the care of faithful ministers whom God appoints as his coadjutors in this great work. Mr. Taylor's funds are very low now. He will not receive gifts. He has three promising sons to educate, and needs help. The only way open to help him is to buy his books, which are published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

SUGGESTIONS.

One correspondent writes to us on what may be termed the subject of Personal Appeal, urging no child of God to pass a day without speaking to some soul about Jesus.

Another is very anxious that workers for Christ should repair to the Ludgate-hill station of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, and other lines, at the time that the workmen's trains arrive—4.30, 5.30, and 6.30 a.m.—and distribute portions of Scripture and tracts, as well as printed notices of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in the South.

A third entreats that some of the united, earnest efforts lately put forth on behalf of our young men should be extended to the young women of our isles. Our correspondent says.—

"It was with an expression of surprise that I called a lady's attention the other day to the fact that, at a recent Communion, the young men admitted to church fellowship considerably outnumbered the young women. 'I don't think it surprising,' replied the lady, 'when we consider the almost exclusive manner in which young men have been prayed for for a long time past.' She was right, and I felt, not for the first time, that the Church has been unwise in this matter."

CRECHE, CAMP HILL, BIRMINGHAM.—It is proposed, God willing, to establish a Creche, or infant nursery, in the district of Camp-hill, for the care and preservation of infants and young children whose mothers are compelled to work for a livelihood. Details can be given, or assistance received by Mr. Geo. Davis, secretary to the Birmingham School Board, Clarendon-chambers

BELGIUM.

I have just paid a visit to Brussels, with the object of meeting delegates from the seventeen associations of young men in Belgium, of which about twelve were represented. There is a considerable variety in the character of these associations. Some are actively engaged in the dissemination of the gospel; some assist in open-air preaching. At one of the annual meetings, nine or ten young men stated that they had been awakened, and ultimately led to the Saviour, by tracts which were given them by young men of the association.

In addition to this I had a meeting for ladies, to interest them in a work of Bible women for Belgium. A commencement has been made by English ladies for evangelization amongst the labouring classes, and I was anxious to know if they could not also get the military to attend these meetings. I pray God that workers may be raised up for Brussels and other parts of Belgium. There is as much liberty for Christian activity as there is in England, and I merely notice these various lines of Christian service with the view of hinting to God's people speaking the French language what an important door of labour is open to them in this prosperous little kingdom! There are above five millions of inhabitants, and perhaps between twenty and thirty thousand Protestants.

MR. E. PEARSALL SMITH'S MEETINGS.

A number of pastors, evangelists, and delegates of young men's associations, besides residents in the town, came together to take part in the three days' meetings held here. At half-past nine there was a familiar conversational meeting with pastors and evangelists, characterized by much freshness and efficiency, at half-past ten an address, at half-past two another social meeting of pastors and evangelists, and another address at half-past three, and at eight o'clock another, which partook of the character of a gospel appeal. It has pleased God greatly to bless these meetings for the quickening of believers. At one of the meetings several souls were brought to Christ, and several were also converted in a subsequent meeting. From the rapt attention of those who came to the meetings, and from expression in private of the benefit so many received, it is to be hoped that the believers in Belgium have received an impulse in the Divine life which may issue in lasting benefit to the cause of God in this land. During an address on Wednesday morning the effect was such that Pastor Anet stopped the meeting and asked all present to join with him in prayer for the power of God, and at the conclusion all joined with their whole heart in singing the doxology, "Gloire soit au St. Esprit."

In one meeting Mr. Smith pressed on believers the duty of being reconciled with their brethren ere they engaged in the worship of God; and this led one pastor to accost another with the words, "Before I bring my gift to the altar I want to be reconciled to my brother," and then and there a reconciliation was effected.

When we think of doors flying open in France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, and one being used for such extensive blessing who does not speak a word of their various languages, one is constrained to exclaim, "What has God wrought!"

THE WORK OF GOD IN BELFAST.

It must not be supposed, because we have for some weeks past given no details as to the work of revival in Belfast or its neighbourhood, that the work has ceased. This is far from being the case. The ministers of the town still testify to the good which is being done, if not so demonstratively as in months past, yet none the less really and effectively. To give an instance in point, which may serve as a specimen:—Last Saturday night four young men, at the conclusion of an evangelistic meeting, started to convey a friend, who had come to the meeting from a distance, homeward. Their way lay down the Carrickfergus-road, along which, as the five walked, they beguiled the tedium of the way by singing some of Mr. Sankey's hymns, which have now become so familiar and popular. When they had proceeded some distance they heard footsteps behind, and turning they saw four men following them a little way in their rear. Resuming their journey, however, they continued their singing, the men still following, evidently on purpose. Some miles from town they parted with their friend, and turned homeward. The four men were now before them, and, as they advanced, allowed them to come up with them, and to their surprise informed them in tones of deep earnestness that they were in a state of anxiety about their souls, that hearing the singing they had been constrained to follow it, and would now be glad if the young men would speak with them regarding salvation. The request was gladly complied with. The four youths each took one of the men beside him, and thus, two by two, they walked on together talking of the things which concerned their peace. It was late when they parted, but ere they did so the strangers were able to declare that "they went on their way rejoicing."

Quite a multitude of cottage-meetings continue to be kept up, and to be attended by crowded gatherings of most earnest, in many cases tearful, people. In connection with one congregation which we could name, there are no fewer than fourteen of these, scattered here and there through the streets around the church. Open-air preaching is now also commencing vigorously, and, if the weather permits, is likely to be carried on by the ministers of the town with much earnestness during the summer.

At the daily noon meeting on Monday several very cheering reports of good work were given in by the ministers present, some respecting the work in Belfast, and some regarding the country districts or towns around. This meeting continues to be held daily in Donegall-place Methodist Chapel.—Witness.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

MAY 29 TO JUNE 7.

Luther said, "I am so overwhelmed with work that I must pray four hours to-day." If you, dear Christian, are burdened with work, or with your very efforts for the Master, then take a week out of your life, and "Come aside, and rest awhile," with the Master and his gathered disciples.

If a partial faith is overcome by the world, come and find an overcoming faith. If the feet of any are weary and stumbling, "come" and learn to "walk in the Spirit." Devote a week out of your busy career to "wait on the Lord," and to review your whole lives from a more quiet stand-point, and find, as thousands have found in such meetings, a crisis of faith and consecration, in which your former purposes will be turned into acts, and your creeds into glorious realities. We invite you in the name of the Lord, to follow the numerous examples in the Scripture of assembling ourselves together for special days of consecration and faith.

We do so without any doubt as to the overshadowing presence of Jehovah, or of the definite blessings which He is pledged to give to those who seek his face. This dispensation of the Spirit was opened with ten days of prayer. Is it without a lesson to us? Can we be without something, at least, of blessing, similar in character, though different in degree, to the several scenes narrated in the Acts of the Apostles, when the Holy Spirit filled them with his sacred presence?

Among others, the Christians named below have expressed a desire to co-operate in gathering the Brighton Conference. Most or all of them are expected to be present:

The Earl of Chichester, the Very Rev. the Dean of Canterbury, the Revs. W. Hay Chapman, London; Filmer Sullivan, Brighton; J. A. Aston, Cheltenham; S. Christopher Morgan, Harrow; Baron Harte, Paris; Armand de Lisle, Paris; Thain Davidson, Islington; and George Savage, Bexley; Baron Van Dorn, The Hague; Jonkheer Elout van Soeterwande, the Hague; Baron Von Gemmingen, Baden; Hon. Mr. Farwell, Chicago, U.S.A.; John Wannamaker, Philadelphia, U.S.A.; Paul Kober Gobat, Basle, Switzerland; Martin H. Sutton, Reading.

WESLEYAN SCHOOL, KING-STREET, HASLINGDEN.
—This school, which was opened some two years ago by the late Rev. L. H. Wiseman, is already found too small to accommodate the numbers wishful to participate of its benefits, and its enlargement is much needed. We have lately been blessed with a visit from Mr. Isaac Marsden, of Doncaster, whose labours were abundantly owned of God. Some fifty found peace, and are now joined in church fellowship. We have lately formed in the school an adult class, now numbering some thirty, many of whom have not been going to any place of worship. It is very pleasing to see child, father, and grandfather joining together in praising the praises of Jehovah.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

WORK AND SING FOR JESUS. By Rev. E. BAILLEY. Book Society.—One of the many useful and valuable little books called forth by the present awakening of the Church to living activity, and conscious possession of talents to be employed in the Master's service.

THE CHRISTIAN'S INVENTORY: What is It? Notes of an Address to Young Converts. By J. DENHAM SMITH. Hawkins.—Food for converts—elementary truth for God's young children, milk for babes—is needed now; and this summary of what a Christian is, and has, and knows, is timely as well as true.

ST. JOHN VI. A Key to the Anti-transubstantiation View of the Words Used at the Institution of the Lord's Supper, etc. Hatchards.—This little brochure is by a clergyman, and appears to deal very completely with this much-contested subject. We do not much care for these controversial works, but presume they are really needed in certain directions, and in the present instance the subject is handled in a very readable manner.

TEN DAYS' MISSION (1875). Twenty Sermons preached in St. Margaret's Church, Brighton. By Rev. W. HAY M. H. ATKEN, M.A. Dickinson and Higham.—We rejoice to see such words of life and power reproduced, and that so well. It is like having the Mission at one's own fireside, with God alone, instead of amidst the excitement of public assemblies. May a rich blessing rest on the work, and a second harvest of souls follow on its perusal.

GREEK LESSONS. By W. H. MORRIS. Longmans.—This very useful little work has now reached the third edition, and the author has increased its value by adding the accents, and by such modifications of grammatical arrangement as were desirable to bring it into harmony with improved methods. It is a book, as the author says, "for those who may not have much time to give to the subject. ... At the same time, all in the right direction for those who wish to know more of that wonderful language; and, lastly, a book especially adapted to those who desire to read the New Testament in the original Greek," and the Septuagint; though, for the study of the New Testament, we think there are works which are more likely to meet the student's wants.

"THE CHRISTIAN" TRACT FUND.—I have used this valuable medium for the promotion of the Lord's work once or twice during my short experience as a worker for the Lord. It has encouraged me to persevere, and by the handing of the silent messenger to all I came in contact with, has given me confidence to speak for Jesus, and endeavour to lead them to seek Him. It is only about twelve months since I found Christ, and during that time I have had the gratification of seeing much good result from the humble efforts put forth. A fellow-worker and myself have established a class for the roughest and most neglected young men and boys we can find in Birmingham, and have, during its existence, seen the Holy Spirit work very blessedly amongst us. Although only about seven months ago they presented themselves at our meetings in a most deplorable condition, dirty, ragged, and almost uncared for, at least by human friends, they now come from time to time most respectably dressed, and behave in a most becoming manner. This is a sphere of work which seems very much neglected, seeing the hundreds, yea, thousands, of youths who are thrust out upon the world, with unhappy homes and drunken parents, and we think by a kind word and a tract dropped to them, they would be very willing to attend such meetings as these, and much good result. Any contributions of tracts or small books will be thankfully received and acknowledged by me. Also I shall be glad to give any information whatever in respect to our class.

YOUNG MEN'S CONVENTION, LIVERPOOL.—We would solicit the attention of our readers interested in the work among our young men to the advertisement of this Convention, to be held this week. The work among the young men there has attained very gratifying dimensions, and as this, we believe, is the first Convention of the kind in this country, we hope it will be supported by the presence of those who can attend, and the prayers of all.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN praise the Lord for the blessing God has given with his word, through the preaching of our dear brother John Vine here during the present month? Also pray for a still greater blessing on the meetings he is to hold every night this week at the Royal Amphitheatre. A great many have been already brought to the Lord. The meetings have been full, and not a night has passed without some precious souls having been born again. All praise to His holy name! The Amphitheatre seats over fifteen hundred people. Christians of various denominations are all heartily in the work. JAS. WHARTON.

SINGING THE GOSPEL.—As mentioned last week, it has been thought desirable that the band of Christians who have been assisting Mr. Sankey in the service of song at the meetings in the Agricultural Hall should remain united, and hold themselves open to assist in other efforts for the spread of the gospel among the masses of this great city, as the Master may have need of them. An association has been formed for this purpose, under the title of "The North Evangelistic Choir," president, Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, R.N.; and the secretary, Mr. C. F. Hodges, of 17, Dunlaco-road, Clapton Park, E., will be glad to arrange with ministers of the gospel, evangelists, and others who may wish to secure the co-operation of this band of Christian workers for special evangelistic services, especially in the northern and central districts of London. The choir will meet at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, for practice, and occasional gospel services of song will be given there, the next being fixed for Saturday, May 22, at 7 p.m.

WINDSOR.—In the royal borough God has been reviving the faith of his people, and stirring them up to special effort for the unsaved. Since the commencement of the present year, the Town-hall was granted, by the kindness of the Mayor, W. Underhay, Esq., for special services from time to time. Those conducted by Leite Rozas, Esq., were accompanied with much blessing. Many have been filled with joy in finding a Saviour, and others are still in a very anxious state. These evangelistic services were followed by meetings for the young, in which Mr. Jordan and Mr. Kerwin, of the Children's Special Service Mission, took a leading part. A meeting for the promotion of scriptural holiness was also held in the Baptist Chapel. Evvs. J. Allen, W. E. Boardman, Charles Graham, and Asa Mahan, D.D., were present, and the congregations were large and appreciative. A noon prayer-meeting has been started; and, altogether, the spiritual life of Windsor has received a blessed impetus Godward.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY IN LONDON.

LONDON is the metropolis of the world. In thousands of ways, for good and ill, its influence extends to our provinces at home, and our colonies and dependencies abroad, to every European nation, and to the remotest regions of the more distant quarters of the globe.

London is now the centre from which the spiritual light and heat of God's present gracious visitation to our country is radiated through all lands, and to the isles afar off. Not only are our provincial cities and country towns sending up their ministers and people to hear the gospel so simply, clearly, and fully preached, by sermon and by song, with such deep and wide results; but pastors from the European and American Continents come and listen, and then, refreshed in spirit, and assured that this work is of God, return home enriched with new thoughts, and stirred with new desires for God and souls.

We were remarking this to a Scottish minister, after one of the daily prayer-meetings, and he replied, "Yes, I was seated this morning by a German pastor, who told me that he had come to see and hear for himself, and, quickened in his own soul, had been carrying the good news to his fellow-countrymen in London before returning to his own home."

We are sure that to localities which cannot be personally visited by our American brethren, the influence of their work has brought such wealth of blessing, that it only needs to be said that the funds hitherto contributed have only sufficed to carry on this great work to the present time, and that at least Ten Thousand Pounds further are required to defray the outlay yet before them.

Our readers are generous givers, as our weekly subscription list sufficiently shows; but while we trust the existing agencies will be liberally helped to redeem their increased opportunities for good, the exceptional outpouring with which God is now so richly blessing this land calls for an exceptional liberality, in order that those who are devoting time, energy, and means, to their arduous responsibilities, may be able to meet the exigencies of the work.

We need not, therefore, apologize for calling the attention of our friends to the letter of the Chairman of the Committee on our first page; and we hope that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will make very speedy work of placing the required amount in the Treasurer's hands.

FROM AN EAST-END CORRESPONDENT.

So far as my observation extends, it seems to me that the character of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work is best described in the words of Luke vii. 16, "God hath visited his people," i.e., all those who, in the words of Anna, "looked for redemption in Jerusalem." It has been chiefly a work amongst the Lord's own people, those who were longing for "times of refreshing.....from the presence of the Lord." The Church as a whole has been quickened, revived, energized; the joy of her salvation has been restored to her, and in that fact lies, in my opinion, the chief hope for the irreligious masses of the East-end and elsewhere.*

A Church revived, then, means an increased sense of personal responsibility; a ministry from love and not from profession; a fulfilling of Phil. ii. 4; a broad stream of missionary action at home and abroad. With comparatively few exceptions the Christian life of this land had sunk into a Laodicean state; the coming of Messrs. Moody and Sankey amongst us has been like John's Epistle, has shown us our state, and as many as have had ears to hear what the Spirit by them had to say unto the Churches, have opened the door, and let in the flood of blessing. The wheels of our chariots have been lifted out of the theological ruts in which they were running, and we have been shown with fresh power the meaning of such words as Conversion, Love, Gospel, Repentance, Good Works, and the like; we have been re-introduced to the Father, and have seen "the power of prayer." And for what purpose? Simply to be filled with joy ourselves, to find there is such a thing as a "full assurance"? By no means; but that "our sons and our daughters may "prophecy," i.e., bear a personal testimony for the Lord. And just in proportion as every Christian man and woman does this, each in his or her sphere, will the heathen masses, either at home or abroad, be reached.

But while this is the general aspect of our brethren's work, how true it is, as when the Apostle Paul himself was preaching, some believed, and consorted with him, and some believed not, and kept aloof from his work. And so it is to-day. There are professing Christians, and whole churches, who will not "consort" with "Moody and Sankey," who keep aloof from their work, and who decline to take any steps whereby they may reap a portion of the blessing accompanying their labours for themselves. I know a large, wealthy, comfortably cushioned Nonconformist church, where there has for some little time been a Saturday evening prayer-meeting among a few of its young men members. They petitioned the deacons and pastor for a prayer-meeting to follow the service every Sunday evening, as the best means open to them of securing a blessing on the Sunday's services, the church in question being far too respectable to listen to such a word as after-meeting. And—will it be believed?—it was denied to them in terms significant of disapproval of such an innovation! And yet there is not a weekly prayer-meeting of this church at any time. Can it be wondered at, then, that those who thus think themselves "rich, and have need of nothing," should profit nothing by this outpouring of the Spirit? An outpouring of the Spirit does not mean, as some seem to think, a forcing of unwilling people to be holy, but is a filling of those who, by emptiness of self, are prepared to receive the poured-out blessing; in fact, "looking for" it. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force," and those who will are now getting a blessing. It is for us who do get it to seek to stir up our indifferent fellow-creatures to some degree of interest in the matter, that they also may be brought in. Let Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, then, thank God, for they are doing a wider and more permanent work in stirring up Christians than even in preaching the gospel to the unconverted.

* The "noble army" of Christians working in comparative seclusion, each the living centre of a little company, can reach and move the East-end masses far more effectively than any great meetings, as those at the Bow-road Hall and elsewhere.

THE LEVEE.—II.

Undisturbed by these "asides" and conversations, are two other groups, one in a distant corner, where they remain unnoticed in the dark, and another under the window, engaged in vigorous confabulation among themselves.

The group in the dark is one which, as we afterwards discover, possesses some very interesting features. It comprises a mother and two little boys, aged nine and five respectively. They are whispering together, undisturbed by the conversation of those around them. The mother has been under our notice for some time, and comes in to-day to obtain our final decision about her boys. She has a husband living somewhere, but he cruelly deserted her some eight months before she made her first application to us. Frugal and hardworking, loving her children with a passionate devotion quite remarkable in its way, she nevertheless finds it utterly impossible to preserve them alive with herself in the narrow and wretched room in Ratcliff, which they call home. She has four children in all—a girl aged eight years, and a boy fourteen months, in addition to the two with her to-day. She pledged everything that could be parted with before applying to us. On the day in question she first of all came without her boys; we sent her for them, and afterwards discovered that in her absence the boys lay in the room naked on a few rags, which constituted their only bed. Before she could bring the poor things to us it was needful to take out of pawn the old tattered garments they had been accustomed to wear; and for two shillings, which were lent her, she speedily redeemed these rags, and having arrayed the two little ones, brought them for inspection. The youngest boy was a pretty and comely child, but utterly wretched from want of food and warmth. The mother now has him on her knee, drawing around him, while in the hall, her own threadbare and scanty clothing. This, including the old bonnet, was borrowed of a kindly neighbour that the poor woman might make a presentable appearance at our Levée for the destitute.

The other group near the window consists of five boys. These apparently have been strangers to each other until they came into the hall; but with that quickness which belongs to boys cast upon their own resources, they now fraternize congenially with each other, and freely speculate upon the chances of being "tuk in."

But, gentle reader, we will not wait any longer, merely looking out upon these poor creatures waiting in the hall. For although there is a great deal to be seen and learned by a closer survey of these sorrowful groups, yet we have to remember that to-day there is serious and important work before us which calls for every moment of our time. So we will leave the post of observation, and sitting down at our table, ring the bell. See—in they come—this is applicant number one. Our questions, her replies, together with all her statements, are rapidly noted down by a fellow-helper, who sits silent by my side; when she has gone out, her case, as with each one that follows, is dealt with upon its own merits. Some applicants are at once received, others are held over for further inquiry, while others again are assisted by letters to heads of Institutions with whom we are in correspondence. Very many of the applicants whose cases we are unable to receive or recommend elsewhere are nevertheless aided with personal advice, and, it may be in a few cases, with temporary pecuniary relief.

Thus to-day, as upon the same day every week, from three to six hours' of patient inquiry and examination are given to the necessitous and distressing applicants for the advantages of our Institution.

But when the last suitor has retired, the more careful work of close investigation begins. The notes our helper has taken are handed to our agents, whose work it is to visit the various localities whence each case emanates, and there to diligently search out every scrap of information which may enable us to decide upon each individual application. Dear reader, you will be glad to know that the result of our interviews on this very day upon which you have accompanied us is that eleven destitute children have been admitted. Yes, five dear little girls and six boys, of varying ages, have, thank God, to-day been passed from the outer world of suffering, pinching want, and, in some of the cases, almost crime, into the peaceful and industrial circle of our Home-life.

Our "Homes" can accommodate now 310 Boys and Girls. By God's help we cleave to our old, but delightful rule, never to refuse a really destitute boy or girl, let the applicant come when he or she may, be it day or night, winter or summer.

It must not be supposed, however, that all applicants come to us at our Friday afternoon reception, for a very large number are brought to our notice by friends throughout the country, and in many of the large provincial and manufacturing towns; whilst in addition to these the "Beadle" of our Home is out almost nightly, frequenting the low lodging-houses, concert rooms, and theatres of the East-end and Mid-London. And from these places we constantly rescue boys, and even girls, before whom, but for this intervention, nothing apparently waits in the future, save Shame and Crime, the gaunt twin sisters of Misery and Destitution.

On Wednesday, June 9th, by the mercy and goodness of our covenant-keeping Father, we hope to lay, in faith and prayer, the foundation stone of TEN COTTAGES at Ilford, the nucleus of the "VILLAGE HOME," so long desired, and now about to be raised in that locality. We need hardly remind our readers that its object is the rescue and training, upon the family principle, of little homeless orphan or neglected girls. Each of these cottages will contain some twenty children, superintended by a godly woman, and thus, when the entire village is built, no less than 600 children will be provided for. Each cottage costs some £450, and already ten of the Lord's stewards have each resolved to surrender this amount for the purpose we have in view.

Trains will leave Bishopsgate Station at 12.10, and 1.10 p.m. for Ilford. The same trains stop at Stratford ten minutes later. Carriages will meet these trains at Ilford to convey visitors to Barking-side in time for the ceremony.

Tickets are necessary, and may be procured free, upon application by letter to the writer at the SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, HALIFAX, N.S.—Your parcel of books by Anna Shipton arrived safely per last English mail, and I thank you very much for your kindness in sending them. Our soldiers value so much "the new books just come from England." Our numbers go on increasing. Four soldiers at present command my special interest. Two of them feel their state of sin, and need of a change, but still "halt between two opinions." The other two are, I trust, farther advanced, and really desirous to find Jesus. The children of the married soldiers eagerly flock to the Home, and borrow books from our library for themselves and their parents. The Lord opens the way for me among them very graciously, and I fully trust in his mercy for the means to obtain a building where the Mission may be more effectually carried on. It is greatly, fearfully needed; for the temptations to sin abound in this city, and the absence of almost all care for the soldiers contributes to push the poor fellows into the very slough of evil. Our Home has already been the means of gaining many to the Temperance Society, when I make a point of urging them farther, even to the only real and permanent Source of strength and safety. Numbers are thus brought under the sound of the gospel who would not attend a prayer-meeting, or other professedly religious meeting. My temperance meetings are, in fact, although not in name, preaching services for Christ, and He has not left without witness of his blessing there. Oh pray for more manifestations of his converting grace among us, and for his Spirit's teaching for me in the work.—Yours, ELIZABETH MARY HUNT MORGAN.

EXTRACTS FROM MY NOTE-BOOK.

BY A LADY WORKER IN THE BOW-ROAD HALL.

The first Sunday of the services I met with many interesting cases. I will only mention some of the most striking. The particulars were not all gleaned at the meeting, but have been since conveyed to me by letter or otherwise.

A young woman, with her mother, was very much impressed, and after conversation and Bible-reading, she praised God for what he had done for her in Christ. Her mother, at her side, could not restrain her joy, but, putting her arms around her, wept glad tears of joy. Surely the angels also rejoiced over her.

The next was a woman, deeply anxious. She did not find Christ on the spot, but a letter from her on her return to the country reads thus:—"I have well looked into the matter before I wrote back to you. I have been in a place of worship only once; it was to hear and see Moody and Sankey. Oh how happy I shall return home! Come up to London a sinner, and now washed in his precious blood. I hope Jesus will always keep close to me. I have a mansion above. What a blessed thing to know Jesus! I just went to see fun and the world, but, thanks be to God, He has plucked a brand from the fire. Pray for me," etc.

The next is a young girl about thirteen, who, after the same meeting, returned home, and went to bed to weep for two hours. Her teacher met her on the following Sunday, and, after conversation, she found Christ. Some of our elder Christians in the faith should have seen this young Christian rejoicing over her first-fruit in working for the Lord. "Oh, teacher, my brother has been with me to the hall, and he has found Jesus too." Brother, sister, go and do likewise.

I mention another case, as it may encourage others, as it did myself, who are sowing seed by the wayside. I had been in an omnibus in the afternoon, and at the mention of the names of Moody and Sankey, I was met with a storm of words that almost shut my mouth for ever in a public conveyance. But in trying to get out of the crowd in the hall in the evening, a young girl spoke to me, saying, "I do so wish to thank you." I did not remember her, and wondered what she could have to thank me for. She went on to tell me I had spoken to her in an omnibus a few weeks back. This had led her to go to the Agricultural Hall, and she had found Christ as her Saviour. You can imagine how I thanked God for this, teaching me that even the wayside seed will sometimes spring up to his glory.

Some of your readers are much interested in servants, many of whom are finding Christ. One case will show us that even ignorance is no bar to the gospel, as this young woman cannot read. A young servant, whose mistress is an earnest Christian, was by her induced to attend the hall, much against the wishes of her friends. After a few days' struggle, she made the choice of Christ before even the dearest on earth. She is now a happy Christian. Her mistress teaches her texts of Scripture, that she may feed on the living Word of God.

A poor woman, without a home, found forgiveness of sin through Christ. She said, "I do not mind about my poverty; I have Jesus. I will leave myself with Him. I have been ashamed to go to my business, as I am so shabby. I will go to-morrow just as I am." She had learned true humility at the feet of Jesus.

A young Christian girl sent in prayer for her mother, to the noon-day prayer-meeting. She also persuaded her mother to attend the meeting with her. Some pray and do not work. Others work and do not pray. This girl did both. The woman was impressed, and the girl led her to the inquiry-room. Next she prayed to find me, as she did not see any one. There the Lord guided me to her the next minute, and after half-an-hour's conversation, she found peace in Jesus. The girl was praying outside all the time. She said, "I could not go and work, my heart was too full." Now they are rejoicing together.

One more case of a dear girl who was weeping over her sins. It was after Mr. Moody's sermon on "Excuses."

"Oh," she said, "it was me. My mother has wept and prayed over me all my life, and I have only been making excuses." In her agony she cried to God, "O Lord, take the devil off my back. He has been sitting there all my life. Oh, do take him away."

In a letter she says, "I could not help crying when Mr. Sankey sang, 'Jesus of Nazareth passeth by,' and 'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' for I knew I was not safe. I should like to thank Mr. Moody for showing me the right path, for it is through him I am saved."

STREAMS IN THE SOUTH.

"Sing unto the Lord, for He hath done excellent things." Your space, or my time, would not allow for going into details of the work; but, in order to draw forth prayer on behalf of those remaining behind to carry it on, I will just mention the names of each place in order, as visited. North Curry, Bridgewater (second visit), Clevedon, Tickenham, Kingston, Ken, Yatton, Cleeve, Dundry, Whitchurch, Chewmagna, Taunton, North-common, and West Kingston.

A good work is at present going on also at

through the instrumentality of Mr. W. Taylor, of California, aided by a very efficient staff of willing, earnest, prayerful and godly helpers. The city is divided up in districts, and thus arrangements have been made for every house to be visited. The Lesser Colston Hall is well filled each day at noon for praise and prayer, and again at 3.30 for a Bible-reading. In the evenings the larger hall is crowded often to overflowing. The after-meetings are well sustained, and many are the hopeful and interesting cases of conversion that nightly occur. The Lord's work in our hands at the

NEW GOSPEL HALL,

Newfoundland-gardens, is very encouraging. Many of those unreached by ordinary means have become regular attendants with their families, and, better still, are now sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right minds.

We have also a Sunday-school, with a numerously-attended Infant-class, and two large adult Bible-classes, with sixteen other classes. These all assemble in the hall for want of other accommodation. It will be remembered by our friends that the building was opened in January last in a very unfinished condition. About £900 worth of work being actually done, that amount has been paid to the builders, leaving us without funds to proceed further. £540 is, therefore, urgently needed in order to complete the hall (apart from proposed galleries), and to erect classrooms and vestries, etc., for which ground has been secured behind. Our which was blown down in the gale of November 29, has undergone extensive repairs at a cost of £30. We purpose (D.V.) using it in various parts of Somerset during the coming summer, for which we ask earnest prayer.

Should the Lord move the hearts of any of his children to assist, either in the gospel-hall or gospel-tent expenses, it might be sent to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN or myself.

AMONG THE FALLEN.—The only word in English that can express the manner in which the Spirit of the Lord is poured out in London now is "wonderful." Two London evangelists visited one of the Homes for fallen women, belonging to the Reformatory and Refuge Union, for the double purpose of inquiring concerning some women sent there, and addressing the inmates. They were gladly received, and preparations for service made. About thirty-five women and girls assembled, and the service lasted one hour; the subject was, "The woman brought to Jesus in the Temple." At least one half the inmates were in tears, and when the address closed those willing to turn to Jesus were invited to remain. About ten remained, six of whom professed peace in believing. Of these six the ages were—one not taken, one twenty-one, one twenty, the remaining three sixteen. These last had passed all the knowledge of evil involved in such a life, and been rescued from it at the age named. A second visit was productive of similar satisfactory results. May the Lord pour out the spirit of work among Christians.

THE WORK IN LONDON.

BY MRS. BARBOUR.

WRITTEN FOR FRIENDS AT A DISTANCE.

London's time of the singing of birds is come, and one of the most joyful thoughts during our three weeks' stay there was, that the work will go on and enlarge, after the labourers, so honoured and beloved, have taken their leave of it. But for this the Lord will be inquired of, to do it for us. May He lay it on the heart of each of his remembrancers all round the world to plead continually that it may be so!

Long after Mr. Moody had left Scotland, when unlikely conversions were heard of, and those impressed said nothing of these services as having been the means of their awakening, it yet came out in conversation that "just once" they had heard Mr. Moody preach, or Mr. Sankey sing, and that the effects had somehow lingered. Shall we all entreat the Lord definitely, on behalf of those who have been "the once," and who resolve not to return, or are hindered by others from returning, that the unperceived arrow which they carry about with them shall begin to rankle, nor give them rest till it slay them, and they arise new creatures in Christ? Why not look on each in whose hand the blue ticket to the reserved opera tiers has been held, as indeed a subject for believing prayer? Some of them broke the charmed circle of worldly friends to use it. The ticket was not got without being asked for, either by a praying friend, or by the holder of a pen which never wrote to ask the like before. The tickets were given and sent with prayer. And what is true of these, is true in other ways of hundreds of thousands in London. The battle for Christ in these souls did not begin when first they sat face to face with that preacher and that singer. Nay, blessed be God, the fight was fought and won, so long ago as Calvary, and all this is only his way of reaching his own; all these preparations and efforts are but the scaffolding from which the living stones are carried to their place in the new eternal temple. Surely blessings for every part of the world will be carried away from London now.

And many a wounded bird is now upon the wing, to be met and cared for in other lands and latitudes. The scenes amid which they shall find healing and rest are widely different; let us all be on the outlook for them. God has done a great work in his preparation of Christians resident in London for what He had in store for them. There they stand unwearied from morning till evening, unselfishly, at the appointed task. What the country and the world owes to their wise arrangement and unflagging zeal, can only be realized by witnessing the work. One gets a glimpse into the heart of the Master by watching the loving patience of the servants; the Spirit is spread abroad throughout the city.

A very interesting, intelligent young woman had found rest in Christ, and was preparing to leave the inquiry-room, at the Agricultural Hall, on the last afternoon of service there. We asked if she had any friend to encourage her on.

"Oh, yes," she said, "master and mistress have put themselves very much about to let me have this day out. They are at home praying for me. I am to have tea at the house of the mother of my mistress, that I may be back to the hall this evening; they will be so happy; I owe them so much!"

The seat which this inquirer had taken had just been vacated by a mother, at whose knee stood her little daughter, nine years old. The woman came in in distress, hard and careworn; the child seemed only sorrowful about her mother, and kept her soft, quiet eye fixed on those lips from which she had life-long got the kiss of kindness, and the precept too. From what her mother said she had tried to bring up her family in the fear of God. But no comfort could she now take for herself, nor receive Jesus for her own. After prayer with the offer of Jesus, I chanced to look at the little face, and saw there the change which betokens the secret discovered.

I said, "You understand about laying sin on Jesus, don't you?"

"Yes," said the little one.

"Mind what you say to the lady now. It's Jesus that she's telling you about," she said, in tones somewhat austere.

Taking no notice of the interruption, I said, "And what made you give your sins to Jesus?"

"Cause He asked me for them."

"And what made you come to Him?"

"Cause He bid me."

The mother's perplexity would not yield. I had in my bag a book intended as a present for some one else, and asked the mother if she would like to have it. She said she could not think of taking such a volume from a stranger.

After it was laid in her hand, along with her own Bible, and I rose to go, I said, "Whose is it now?"

All radiant, and forgetting the book, she raised her eyes, saying, "Mine!"

It was the Saviour she was claiming, having at last seen the freeness of the great gift through coming into possession of the book given her.

Such was the power of the Spirit's presence that afternoon in the Agricultural Hall, that hearts seemed to be yielded up to God through Christ gently and speedily. Some were found in the inquiry-room, who, in one of the galleries, had scarcely been able to hear the preacher's voice, perhaps because so many parasols had to be raised for the hot sun. But the words of the hymns had reached them as Mr. Sankey sang, and the whole scene was fitted to bring eternity near. Many rose throughout the hall, as a sign that they desired to be prayed for. It was touching to see two young mothers rise, with babes in their arms.

On our way to one of the services, a gentleman from America said, "How is it that none of the newspapers, and none of the letters in Christian periodicals, give the least idea of the character and the extent of the meetings and the work? Nothing like it has been seen in America anywhere I have been." It has certainly been the endeavour of those who have sought to tell the loving-kindness of the Lord to understate what they have seen, and only to write as much as would give the friends of Jesus all round the world the assurance that Jehovah's arm has been laid bare, and that souls all over the United Kingdom have been escaping for their life, nor staying in all the plain until their feet stand safe in Christ Jesus.

But we cannot wonder that the work, seen for the first time in London, should bewilder the beholder. There is not a more striking sight than the area of the still unfinished wooden hall near Camberwell Green. It is not enough that the Agricultural Hall should have seated, for six weeks, its ever-gathering 14,000 souls. It is not enough that the streets around the splendidly renovated Opera House should be filled with elegant equipages in double line from three o'clock, until their occupants drive away again at the close of the service. It is not enough that Bow-road Hall should receive and scatter its thousands every night, but here in Camberwell preparation for multitudes of worshippers is making also. The grass is still green in large patches for carpet to the workmen; the tall trees still shine green between the spars of the wooden walls; a scared bird, missing its way, flies through; and the sound of the hammer foretells that sounding of the Word which shall break, in the long June evenings, hearts now hard as the rock in pieces. Here a cart is emptying out its load of sand, there the slates are driven in, and there again a knot of men are welding the machine which fits the slates for the roofing. Mr. Boulnois came in to see how the work was going on as we were ignorantly looking around. He showed us where the platform, the entrances, and the galleries were to be, and then said, "Here is the inquiry-room." Sure enough, there it was, marked off to receive its hundreds—yes, its thousands. Thither the unthinking crowd, among which it was difficult, when we asked our way, to find any one to say where the hall was being built, will send in its chosen vessels, destined already for the use of the Master in the skies. There the fetters of the slave-master shall be broken, and the compact made which shall bind them to the royal service through everlasting days. There the poor drunkard shall have the cup of cold water of the free salvation raised to his lips, and leave the place to enter the gin-palace no more. There the little ones shall hear the "Samuel, Samuel!" and become temple-worshippers for ever. Many infidels in London are leaving off their blasphemies against the sacred Word, and affixing their seals to it that God is true. Ladies in Belgravia and beyond it have trembled in presence of this world's splendour; and after going two or three times with the blue ticket to the reserved tiers in the Opera House, have returned possessors of the free salvation, to give orders amongst their dependents henceforth with an eye to the glory and an ear for the bidding of a gracious Lord. And so the weight of often crushing responsibility has fallen from them, and rests where they first threw their sin-load on the shoulder of another.

The platform of the Opera House is immensely large, because, since it was reconstructed after the fire, nothing has been railed off or arranged for theatre scenery or work. It is like a good-sized church in itself. The massive brick-work (the bricks in arch-form for strength), the wooden rafters, and strange-looking little iron spiral staircases, present an unusually plain contrast to the rich gilding and the exquisite white-painted decorations of the boxes. Let those who have never seen a theatre imagine the large pit or ground-floor centre, of horse-shoe shape, covered with cane-bottomed chairs. Five galleries rise on each side; the two lower have very rich frontage, bulging out towards the bottom, with what you might call gilt leaves on white for ornament, with crimson cloth at the top. Fronting the platform two empty boxes seemed to hang out flags of distress to the multitude which thronged every corner. They belong to a renter, who disapproves of the present occupation of the building. They seemed to represent those in London who stand aloof from the movement, and to call loudly for the prayers of all who sympathize with it, that God would, in some way, meet and bless them. Great is the responsibility of the thousands who do, in full sympathy, share in the gladness and gaze on the brilliance of that wondrous scene. Whether by night, when illuminated by the great gas-light from the top as with a magic glare, or, more solemnly, in the day, when there is comparatively little light in the house, and the black mass of unseparated lines of listeners (for the upper white tiers only extend along the sides of the edifice) sits motionless, able thus to catch each word of the speaker, the sight of the assemblage beggars description. In rude simplicity stands the raised wood, covered with red, from which Mr. Moody speaks. It consists of a simple wooden rail, with an upright in one corner, supporting a flat board, large enough to hold an octavo Bible open. Sometimes a cane chair is within it; sometimes not. A large square boarding is let down from the roof overhead for the sound, and which protects some from the glare of the skylights. The day he preached on "He was wounded for our transgressions," describing the sufferings of the blessed One preceding and during his crucifixion, the whole service and surroundings were grand, sublime, august beyond the telling! It was the only time we saw the scene from the reserved seats, having to lead friends there. You could have heard a pin fall; the fans, sometimes in use, did not move. Many a soul was there to realize—and some for the first time—its oneness with the Man of sorrows, as accused outside Jerusalem. The square mass of the preacher's figure, as, in words so differing from the declamation of priests or so-called evangelist fathers, he calmly presented the One sacrifice which has swept the universe of all other sacrifice for sin, seemed really to stand in Christ's stead, offering reconciliation, instant and for ever.

The Liverpool work had a oneness in it, from having the one centre of the Victoria Hall, which may not repeat itself elsewhere. Nothing can ever surpass the Sunday forenoon when Mr. Moody preached on "Trust," and the chorus, "Trust Him! only trust Him," was sung till the strongest men had a task to suppress deep emotion. But that simple hymn has done a wondrous work in London too. Again and again, when Mr. Moody saw that inquirers were too numerous to be dealt with, and too ripe to receive Jesus to need commendation of Him from lips of clay, the little chorus did the work of the inquiry-room. It was varied with, "I will trust Him," and "I do trust Him;" "He has saved me!" and repeated again and again. In every corner of the various buildings a surrender was making into the bosom of the long waiting Saviour. It will not be without a pang that any, even the smallest, labourer will leave London. There you hear, as it were, the sounding of the Infinite Heart of Love in which "compassions flow." You seem, even when alone, to be aware that the waves of blessing are breaking over street and square, and park and crescent, making their way to cellars, and offering everywhere to fill all hearts. The Christian men of London are turned into Great-hearts, as Bunyan would say, preparing the way for others, leading, pointing, directing; self-forgetting doorkeepers of Christ's pavilion. The hymns are beyond all price in the great market of grace. Mr. Sankey's testimony and prayers, as well as his hymns, are very much used in London.

THE OPERA HOUSE, HAYMARKET.

TUESDAY, MAY 18TH.

Perhaps the most striking of the very numerous requests for prayer and praise this morning was that of the superintendent of a Sabbath-school, who returned thanks for his own conversion.

The scripture for the day, read by Rev. J. McNab, Ardrossan, was Col. i. 27, "Christ in you, the hope of glory." The burden of the speaker's words was, Christ all and in all, both for this life and the glory beyond. The true Christian spirit is alien to any trust, either in religiousness, or morality, or in frames and feelings, but simply in Christ. As an old woman said lately to the speaker, "I am resting on the bare rock."

Rev. J. H. Wilson, of Edinburgh, read a letter embodying the following incident, as an illustration of answered prayer:—A young girl in Edinburgh went in search of a situation, and, while on her way, she observed a girl who was in charge of some children, and who looked very sad. Being unsuccessful in her mission, she returned, and again met the young woman. Seeing her countenance still troubled, she went up to her, and said, "Are you a Christian?" "Who bade you ask that?" "The Lord bade me." "The Lord!" she wonderingly repeated; "I have been praying that if there is a God in heaven, He would send some one to speak to me about my soul." She then went on to tell how she had come with her mistress and family on a visit from Aberdeen, and how she had heard Dr. Bonar preach from the text, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved," which had troubled her very much. Maggie—the girl who spoke to her—tried to show her the way of salvation, but her efforts did not appear to be successful. At last she said, "I must part from you, but I will just leave Jesus' bare word with you—'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.'" Two days after, the girl found her way to Maggie's home, and said, "I have come to tell you that I have found Jesus;" and there they rejoiced together. A week or two after she brought her sister, and wanted Maggie to speak to her. The three had a little prayer-meeting, and the sister, too, went home rejoicing, and at peace with God.

The touching sequel to this interesting chain of events is found in the following letter, received by Maggie a few days afterwards from the father of the two sisters:—

"Dear Miss M—,—You will perhaps think me rather forward in writing to you, but I feel as if my heart would burst with gratitude for the kindness you have shown to my daughters in being the means of leading them to the Saviour. I have long prayed for them both, and when they left here to go to Edinburgh, I prayed that the good Lord would save them both before they came back. He has heard my prayer. On the same day that you spoke to Mary, I was ill in bed; and as I prayed for them, I felt the preciousness of the text, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.' You can, perhaps, fancy my joy, when, by the next post, came a letter to tell me that Mary had found Jesus from that very text. Dear Miss M—, I cannot thank you enough, but the Lord will reward you for the joy you have brought to an old father's heart. You will excuse the writing; I am well-nigh seventy years old. I have only one thing to ask you. If you get a holiday in summer, come and see poor old Davie; you will be made as welcome as the angels in heaven. Mary says you are an orphan, but you will never want a friend, lass, as long as Davie Ferguson breathes the breath of life. And at the judgment you can take my Mary and Jane up to Jesus, and say, 'Here are two that, by the Spirit's help, I led to Thee.' We all send our greatest love to you."

Dr. Wallace, of Glasgow, followed with some exceedingly touching instances of the good work among domestic servants, of which the following is one:—"I was greatly struck, since I came to London, to find that a servant girl had come up here from Melrose (Berwickshire). She had not been able to go to hear Messrs. Moody and Sankey when they were in that neighbourhood; and having a sister in London, she came up to attend the great meetings in the Agricultural Hall. The first thing she did, after spending the night with her sister, was to try and find her way to the hall—a Scottish lassie saying as she went along, "I will find my way; God will direct me." She did get there, but, unhappily, she found herself leaving. With Scottish perseverance, she pressed forward (like the woman who elbowed her way through the crowd in Jerusalem, saying, "If I might but touch the hem of his garment"); and as she was repulsed at one door, she tried another. At last she got to one door, and there she pleaded with the attendants, saying, in her Scottish dialect—would God the same feelings ruled all our minds!—"Eh, sir, but I'm awfu' keen to get the blesin'; wull ye lat me in?" The door was ajar, and her words fell on the ears of an old Scotchman, who reached out his hand, and said, 'I hear from your Scottish tongue that you are a Scottish lassie; we will need to try and get you in.' It was the venerable Dr. Moffat, of Africa. And there and then she gave her heart to Christ. She was the means of bringing her sister to Christ, and has gone back to Melrose, a lady tells me, and is doing all she can in that neighbourhood to bring in servants too."

Mr. Sankey told of a mother in Wolverhampton whose dying hours were cheered by receiving a letter from her son in London, stating that he had become a Christian by attending some of the meetings. It had been the one wish of her life, and it was granted her before she fell asleep in Jesus.

Mr. Sankey sang "Nothing but Leaves," having previously made some appropriate remarks about the lesson of the hymn.

Dr. Black, of Inverness, opened the afternoon meeting this day with prayer. Mr. Sankey sang his new hymn, "The cross of Jesus." Mr. Moody's subject was based on "confessing Christ," from the words in Romans, x. 9. Some people thought it was the duty of ministers to confess Christ; but there is only one straight way to God, and every soul must come the same way. The reason so many Christians are not happy is that they don't confess Christ in their places of business, at their dinner parties, and in their homes. A Quaker lady spoke to a young man of a Free Methodist meeting she had attended, and he was struck to hear her confess Christ. He soon came to the Saviour himself, and then he asked Mr. Moody to preach to the mechanics in that town; soon this young man sent him a request, signed by mechanics, and it was so long it might reach across the Opera House; the result was, that even in one church there were seventy-nine members added through the confession of that one woman.

This powerful address evidently went home to the heart, and many were looking up, that, by the grace of God, they would henceforth confess Christ before the world. In the evening, Mr. Moody spoke from "Whosoever will." As the result of his appeal, numbers flocked to the inquiry-room at the close.

WEDNESDAY, 19TH.

Rev. J. Robertson, of Edinburgh, prayed, and the tender pleading tones of the children's friend reached the hearts of the audience. He asked the Father to behold us now at Mount Carmel, with our faces between our knees, looking for an abundance of rain, and that he would put our prayers into the golden censer of our High Priest, and added, "Jesus, art Thou not now letting it down in our midst? Oh, let us have the Pentecost, Lord, without its imagery."

Mr. Moody said a woman came to him in the enquiry-room, and asked if she were a Christian. He could not tell her, but it is easy to know for one's self. When we become Christians we get seven new things. He read 1 Corinthians v. 17. We get a new birth and a new creation,—life and change of being. There must be a new tongue to go with the new heart. Then there is a new way to walk, a new hope, and a new song. God is mightily using the gospel of song in these days. The first time we read of singing is after the escape from Egypt. He put a new song in my mouth. The lark sings only as it flies upwards, so the new convert sings as he rises heavenwards. The songs will last longer than the sermons. How many read John Wesley's sermons now? But Wesley's hymns are sung all the world round. Let us praise God in our songs. It is good to praise Him. Then we get a new heaven and a new earth: a good list of new things. It ought not to be hard to find out if we are in possession of these things. God makes them ours in Christ.

Captain Moreton spoke of the work among young men. At the Islington meeting the other night a young Oxford graduate, and then nine others, rose and confessed Christ, and all present—being holiday time only about fifty were there—banded together in the name of the Lord, to go out and bring in each of them one other young man the next night, and so the blessing spreads. He said Mr. Drummond and he were that night going to the Young Men's Convention at Liverpool, to join in conference as to the best steps to take in this increasing work for young men. Last night a mother brought her boy who had left her for a long time. She had never given him up, but still all the time prayed, and believed God would send him back to her and God. He came at last, and is now happy in Christ.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. Sankey sang the hymn beginning, "If I were a voice." It was indeed a thrilling song, and clearly touched the hearts of many present.

Mr. Moody's subject was "Walking with God." This address was for Christians, and though some of the usual pathos was absent, it seemed as barbed arrows winging their way to thousands of smitten hearts present. It was a timely and well received admonition, which may the Holy Spirit write on all our souls.

At night the audience was large. The meeting opened with a request by Mr. Moody for prayer for "a young man, who perhaps may be present, whose mother is at home pleading with God that the word may reach his heart this night." Mr. Moody continued his former discourse on "The Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost."

THURSDAY, 20TH.

The special burden on the hearts of the praying ones at the noon meeting to-day was "the conversion of our families and households," and the requests partook largely of this character.

Mr. H. Varley, in very fervent words, supplicated God's blessing on those whose cases had been presented in the written requests.

After singing "Mighty to save," Mr. Moody read Deut. vi. 7, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children," etc. If parents were truly faithful to their children in teaching them God's commandments, God's blessing would surely follow. But such teaching must be of an attractive, and not of a repellent kind. Mr. Moody quoted the cases of Lot and Eli to show the dire results from unfaithfulness to their children. There were very few parents, he said, who really believed in the early conversion of children, and consequently they were not saved so early as they ought to be. He urged those who had public duties not to neglect home duties, and referred to David's grief at the death of Absalom.

In the prayer that followed, Mr. Moody pleaded very earnestly for the return of prodigal children, specifying the case of a mother who had come to him the day before, requesting prayer for her wandering boy.

Mr. Sankey sang the beautifully pathetic chant, "Father, take my hand," and spoke some encouraging words to parents who longed for the conversion of their children.

Rev. J. Robertson, of Edinburgh, said the subject for the hour reminded him of the saying of good old Richard Baxter, "If families were what they ought to be—Christian—the children would be converted to God generally before they pass from under the parental roof." It had been said to him in inquiry-meetings, by young people who came anxious about their souls, and when appeal was made to their father's piety, "The less said about my father's piety the better." He had been told that some frivolous criticism on the preacher had made the effect of the most solemn sermons to vanish. There was a power of life and death in the conversations carried on at table, in the likings expressed by parents, in the company kept, in the character of the newspapers and periodicals received and read. These things silently but potently affect our children. He recollected a young man saying to him, "Ah, sir, what most went to my heart was to find every chair in our house redolent of my mother's prayers." She was one of those mothers who took her children, one by one, alone, and told them of the love of Jesus. After some excellent remarks about the influence of mothers over their sons away from home, Mr. Robertson said he could testify that the Scotch brethren who had been lately at the London meetings had been much refreshed, and would return to sharpen their sickles with a livelier hope of success than ever.

Mr. H. Varley related an incident that transpired shortly before he left London. "I was preaching," he said, "in one of the large sanctuaries, and at the close of the address a young girl, of about fourteen years old, said to me, 'Can I speak with you, sir?' I at once gave her my attention, and she said, 'I want to know whether I am a Christian.' I said, 'My dear child, that is an important question, but I cannot answer it off-hand. What makes you ask me this?' I was a little startled to find the way in which she put it. She replied, 'I have been a member of this church for more than four years, and my parents have been members many years. I want to say this to you, and I am sure you will not understand me as speaking disrespectfully of my parents—but they never say one word to me about these things at home. We never exchange, from one month's end to the other, a single sentence on these subjects.' Why, their child might well wonder whether she were a Christian. If that is the life of Christ, it is a miserable thing; but it is not the life of Christ. Let me say this with great thoughtfulness to you: when our Father in heaven wanted to bless the world, He not only sent his word, but his Son; and if we want to bless our children, we must not only give them the Word of God, but must hear Jesus saying, in that sweet personality of utterance, 'Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not.' We must have a personal Christ for our little children."

Mr. Varley concluded with some touching particulars respecting his own family, the five eldest of whom, he said, were all united to Christ. He entreated parents, as soon as their children were five or six years of age, or earlier, definitely to bring them to Christ.

FRIDAY, 21ST.

"A young girl who found peace at the Opera House yesterday requests prayer for the conversion of her family." Such is a sample of the touching petitions that flow in day by day. No less touching are the requests for praise. "Praise is offered for the conversion of a brother." Who can fathom the depth of joyful meaning and of result conveyed in that brief sentence.

Mr. John Sands was very earnest in pleading with God to work in answer to the united cry of his children.

Dr. Blake, of Inverness, read from the 26th chapter of Matthew about Christ's agony in the garden, also from John xviii. 11, from which he gave a short address on prayer.

Mr. Moody then said, "We want a real prayer-meeting to-day." He referred to the young men's meeting to be held in the evening, and requested special prayer to be offered for it, and also for all the meetings of the day. Yesterday, he said, was a glorious day; there were a great many inquiries at all the meetings last night, and very cheering reports are coming in this morning from all parts of the vineyard.

Much earnest pleading with God followed, and Mr. Sankey sang "Go bury thy sorrow."

Mr. Moody asked prayer for the prodigals of London, who would not attend the meeting in the evening, and recited the conversion of a young man, who at his mother's death, ten years ago, quarrelled with his sister, because she spoke to him about salvation. He went away and she had not seen him since, until the other day she received a despatch from him at Paris, asking her to come and see him at once. She went from Florence, where she was sojourning, and found him within two days of his death, but to her joy, he was resting in Christ. The hymn "The Ninety-and-nine," and especially the lines,

"But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold,"

had taken hold of him, and led him to the Good Shepherd. Mr. Moody, before closing, also presented a request for prayer by three sisters, for their father, eighty years old, and dying without Christ.

Friday afternoon Mr. Moody repeated his address on the "Two Adams." There was a large concourse of people. Mr. Sankey sang the hymn, "Knocking." The Bishop (Bickersteth) of Ripon, with several others, was present in the Royal Box.

At seven p.m. Mr. Moody preached from the word Compassion. There was not the least sign of any falling off in the overflowing audiences. There were more, we think, than at any night this week. The energy of the preacher was in no sense lessened. Mr. Sankey sang, by request,

"Jesus of Nazareth." Before singing he stated that he had received a letter from a lady in Gibraltar, informing him that this song was blessed to a poor soldier there. He said that he heard this hymn sung, and the words, "Jesus of Nazareth has passed by," had led his soul to Jesus. Also another letter from the heart of India, saying that this hymn is there being used for the good of souls. Many rose to ask to be prayed for.

Mr. Moody was rather brief, as there would be another meeting to follow.

Before the ordinary evening meeting was dismissed, large crowds of men had besieged the various entrances in the Haymarket, impatiently waiting to obtain an entrance to the special service held for them at nine o'clock. That somewhat late hour was fixed upon to suit the convenience of those in houses of business, whom it was specially desired to reach. In a short time the fine building was well filled from top to bottom with men young and old—mostly young. The sight from the platform was a truly noble and suggestive one.

Mr. Moody chose the subject of "Excuses," always an appropriate one, and one eminently appropriate for his audience. As men get older, many of the excuses that satisfied their consciences in earlier years vanish before the rough touch of experience, and the deepened conviction of the importance of things eternal. It is not needful to recapitulate here all or any of the excuses brought forward and trenchantly exposed by Mr. Moody. As he sometimes says, the air is always full of them, and the devil is ever ready in helping the sinner to manufacture fresh ones for the occasion. Suffice it to say that Mr. Moody's earnest words carried conviction to many of his hearers, and they were fain to stand up at the close, thereby confessing that they wished no longer to put off the invitation to the "King's feast." The words of Joel, "Multitudes, multitudes, in the valley of Decision," came forcibly to our mind, as we conversed with one and another in the after-meeting, and heard from their lips the welcome determination to accept the loving invitation pressed upon them with such affectionate earnestness at the close of Mr. Moody's address.

On Saturday evening the same address was given to a crowded gathering of women, and, we may add in brief, with a like result. If there is one thing more than another that has struck us in the course of these special services, it is the most manifest adaptability of the pure, unadulterated gospel of the grace of God to all kinds of audiences, to all classes and conditions of men and women.

The singing of "Yet there is room" at the women's meeting, was pronounced by Mr. Moody to be about the sweetest he had ever heard. The evening was far gone before the Opera House was emptied of inquirers Zionward, and despite the arduous duties of the week, Mr. Moody was among the last to leave. Would all Christian workers had the same unquenchable zeal!

SUNDAY, 23RD.

This bright Sabbath morning ushered in a week that promises to be the busiest our American brethren have spent at the Opera House, as it is to be the last—no less than twenty separate services being announced. It brought a crowded house of workers at eight a.m. to hear Mr. Moody's stirring exhortation from the words, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Dan. xii. 3). Surely all those present must have left the building with a firmer and more settled determination to redeem the time, and be counted worthy to work for the Lord that bought them.

Three o'clock found the Opera House filled almost to repletion with another gathering of women. At Mr. Moody's request, "Yet there is room," was sung; it had been ringing in his ears since last night, he said. He then proceeded with the continuation of his address on "Excuses," and was most effective in his exposure of many of those "refuges of lies" by which the devil keeps so many precious souls out of the kingdom.

We have seldom, if ever, witnessed a more solemn and overpowering scene than that which followed Mr. Moody's repeated question at the close of his powerful address, "Who will accept the invitation to the marriage supper of the Lamb? Who will say, 'By the grace of God, I will?'" At first there was a single voice from one of the galleries, "I will!" "Thank God for that," said Mr. Moody, and repeated the question. Then came the answer, "I will!" "I will!"

"I will!" from all directions, while some rose to their feet without being asked, showing a less glib, but perhaps more real response to the solemn question addressed to them. One impulsive woman shouted, "All of us," and though her answer, perhaps, deserved the rejoinder of Mr. Moody that one could not speak for the whole audience, still one could not but feel that such a striking scene was enough of itself to produce conviction and decision in the mind of every individual present. It was a time not to be forgotten, and was, we doubt not, the beginning of a new experience to many.

Again "an eager, anxious throng" crowded into the Opera House at seven o'clock, both men and women. Mr. Moody read and expounded the story of the man who "fell among thieves," which, he said, "portrayed the whole scheme of redemption."

Mr. Moody commenced his address by putting the question to the audience, "Why not be saved to-night?" Asking the Christians to be constant in prayer for the next thirty minutes, he said he would try to make the way of life so plain, that not one in the audience would be outside the kingdom of God at the close, if he wished to be saved. He proceeded, in language of the utmost simplicity and clearness, to prove from Bible illustrations the way of salvation. The ark, Lot's escape from Sodom, the death of the firstborn in Egypt, the cities of refuge, and other figures, were successively brought into requisition, to demonstrate the instantaneous nature of conversion. With reiterated force and fervency, and in every variety of form, he put the solemn query, "Who wants to be saved to-night?" and, as in times past, numbers declared their desire by rising in the sight of the congregation. These solemn moments of decision have been so often repeated within the past weeks and months, that we are apt to underrate their tremendous import. We are strongly convinced that our regular ministry will lose a great opportunity if they fail to adopt in their preaching this habit of bringing their hearers to a point, in something like the way that Mr. Moody has accustomed us to, with such blessed results. The anxious ones at once retired to the inquiry-room, as the building had to be cleared for the young men's meeting at nine o'clock.

At the nine o'clock meeting for men only, we observed Father Ignatius on the platform. We understand he was also present on Friday evening. After giving out the numerous notices for the week, Mr. Moody said he hoped a thousand young men would be converted during the next week, but he wanted to make a beginning to-night. He then re-delivered the address on "Excuses," given to the women in the afternoon. It was very refreshing to hear the ready way in which the "Yes, yes," sounded out from many of the young men when Mr. Moody asked (in reply to the excuse that Christianity was a gloomy thing) whether they had not found the Christian life to be a happy one, with a great deal of pungency and a good deal of sarcasm, he showed the hollowness of the "popular excuses" of the day. "I have come here to-night to get some souls for my Master," said Mr. Moody, in tremulous tones. "This has been one of the best days of my life; I have seen many pressing into the kingdom, but I want this to be the best meeting of the day."

We think he must have been well rewarded by the numbers of young men, and old, too, who rose to be prayed for. They kept rising for a considerable time, and the almost delirious joy of the solemn time was heightened by the rising of many who had been recently converted, and who were not unwilling to confess Christ before men. It was a fitting close to an altogether remarkable day of sowing and reaping in one spot of the West-end of London.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING.

There was a very good attendance this morning. Among the requests for praise were:—"A minister's son, prayed for in Dublin; then in prison, and who has since come out believing in Christ;" "Three girls, living in ungodly families, converted by hearing the singing of 'Jesus of Nazareth passeth by';" "A husband, for the conversion of his wife yesterday."

After prayer by Rev. Mr. Fox, of Westminster, Mr. Taylor read and commented on Psalm cxlix., a psalm of praise.

Rev. T. Thomas spoke of the work at the Opera House, making special reference to the meeting for women on Saturday night, and to the fact that the movement had reached all classes of society. He told of the conversion of an actor to whom he had spoken.

A clergyman in the front of the platform related how he had obtained a greater assurance of faith and peace through these services.

The next speaker (from Scarborough) gave an account of the recent Mission week at Leeds, and speaking of services in a brewery, said that many of the men were teetotalers, and were preferred to those who were not. He said nothing but the gospel of Christ would bridge over the gulf that had too long existed between capital and labour.

Lord Radstock said that the Lord had heard prayer for Russia. Many of those brought to Christ last year were now witnessing in a way that would put many Christians in this land to shame. He believed that Russia was ripe for a great work of grace, and said that several there in the highest positions in society were entirely devoted to the Lord. He pressed home the responsibility of Christians not simply to have nice meetings in London, but to go out in thousands to all the world.

Mr. Hodder reported favourably of the Victoria Theatre services. The very dregs of society were coming to the meetings, and, better still, coming to Christ. He asked prayer for the services to be held there this week by Dr. Black, of Inverness.

Prayer was offered for London, Russia, Spain, Italy, China, and India, by Lord Radstock and others.

Mr. Moody spoke of the work among the young men in Liverpool, who were carrying on, he said, twenty-five meetings there in different places. He urged special effort during this week among the young men in the West-end. He also read a despatch which had come in from Shrewsbury, as follows:—"The Lord is blessing us. The Working-men's Hall was crowded several nights last week; last night, the Working-men's Hall overflowed, and the Market Hall was filled."

VICTORIA THEATRE.

There are no signs of falling off in the attendance, nor is there less evidence of blessing. On the contrary, during the past week more have confessed Christ than in any week previously. On Friday last, when Mr. Varley was conducting the meeting, a most intensely solemn sense of God's presence prevailed, and about thirty-two seekers stood up, and subsequently fourteen confessed that they had received the Lord Jesus Christ. The Rev. James H. Wilson of Edinburgh, Mr. Varley, Rev. Mark Guy Pearce, and Rev. T. B. Stephenson took part in the services last week. The Rev. Dr. Black from Inverness (Dr. Donald Fraser's successor), commenced a series of services last Sunday, with great prospect of blessing.

STEWARDS' MEETING.

On Thursday evening there was a very pleasant meeting of the stewards lately engaged at the Agricultural Hall. Through the courteous hospitality of the Rev. Mr. Billing there were nearly a hundred gathered to supper, and for prayer and conference over the work in which they had all been engaged. It was a time of very pleasant intercourse and mutual encouragement.

PARIS.—Miss Leigh writes to us that although the building of her Mission-house for young Englishwomen is secured and paid for, £800 is still needed for the necessary alterations and furnishing. She fears the impression exists that all the wants of the Mission have been supplied.

RELIGIOUS MAGAZINES IN FRENCH.—Should this meet the eye of any one who takes in the following books, they would be doing a great kindness if they could spare a few copies for use in Jersey:—"L'Evangeliste," "Le Libérateur," "La Chambre Haute," "Le Bulletin de la Mission Intérieure," "Le Rayon de soleil," "L'ami de la Maison," etc. If sent before June 5, they would be gratefully received by Miss Wickham, The Holmwood, Surrey.

THE PEOPLE'S CAFE.—The second of these Cafés was opened in Whitechapel last week by the Earl of Shaftesbury. The Bishop of Gloucester, the Duke of Westminster, Sir Robert Carden, and many clergymen, were present. The new building occupies the premises lately held by the London and Westminster Bank. It is well situated, cheerful within, and well ventilated. The plan is pretty much that of a complete and well-organized East-end club. The tariff is moderate, and the fare good, and a library is to be collected for the reading-room. This enterprise is intended to be a strictly commercial one, and hitherto the pecuniary success has been all that could be wished.

MR. SPURGEON ON UNITED PRAYER.

At the weekly noon prayer-meeting, in Victoria Theatre, on Wednesday last week, Mr. W. M'Arthur, M.P., presided, and Mr. Spurgeon gave the address.

After the requests had been read by Mr. Hodder and presented, Mr. Spurgeon offered fervent prayer for the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the South of London. He then said:—

Beloved friends, I suppose the object of the address is to stir up the children of God to earnest and united prayer. It is to use attempting too much, and I shall, therefore, stick to that one thing, and may God send his approving smile.

I had yesterday to pay a considerable sum of money for some building purpose, and I went over some deposit-notes, to see which one would meet the bill. When I found it I sent it to the Bank, and felt quite sure it would be honoured. I think we ought to deal with God in the same business-like manner as we do with one another, only with much more confidence in God than we feel in the safest bankers in London. I thought I would open my Bible and look for the proper deposit-note this morning that I might lay it on the Banker's counter—bring it before the throne of grace, and then be quite sure God would honour it, and be as good as his word.

I found this text, and I thought it would do—Matt. xviii. 19, "Again I say unto you, if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

Two of you! Of you who are my people; of you who love Me; of you whom I am speaking to, and whom my Father will hear when you speak to Him. Two of you who have taken my yoke upon you, and learned of Me. Two of you who call Me Master.

If two of you are agreed. It ought never to be a difficult thing for Christians to be agreed. Is it not a wonderful thing we should so much disagree? If I look to the human side of the question, it is not a wonderful thing; but considering that the grace of God in the heart of every child of God is of the same kind, and that the indwelling Spirit is the same in all the quickened ones, it is very wonderful that we should disagree so much. Surely it ought not to be very difficult for them to agree. I suppose it will be a very long time before we shall all agree in doctrine, as to its exact statement; but I believe there has been a fundamental agreement amongst all the people of God from the first day until now about the great things of God. It is very easy to see the silver line of perfect unity running right through the Church of Christ unto this moment. We all preach the same things about Jesus Christ our Lord; we believe the same grand doctrines concerning the fall, concerning redemption by blood, and concerning regeneration by the Spirit of God; and if we would but search a little more into the Scriptures, and be willing to put away old legions and traditions of the Fathers, we should agree more readily in our expression of these doctrines, and the world would see more clearly that we believed the same things.

I think, however, it is not difficult for us to agree in spirit, certainly not when we are in the right spirit. It is wonderful how easily two bars of iron, red hot, will weld, that, when cold, will not effect any conjunction at all. So when we get fervent in spirit, the Holy Ghost seems to fuse the whole Church into one mighty mass.

The text speaks of agreeing in prayer; and here, dear brethren, it is a very easy business. If a dozen persons here were to pray after this address, some six or seven of them belonging to so many different sections of the Church of Christ, I will defy you to tell which is which. There is a little kind of lip of one sort or the other that a practised ear might detect, if you are looking for it; but as a rule, if you are wishing to know which was the Baptist, and which the Church of England, and which the Wesleyan minister, you will be likely to pick out the wrong man.

When any prayer is offered, according to the text, there must be an agreement in subject. It would not be very easy for us to agree if we were to ask for something temporal, and for ourselves. Our interests might clash a little. I have heard of a clergyman who, being importuned to offer up prayer for rain, stated that he would do so when they all wanted it. Somebody always wanted dry weather, while others wanted rain, and they could not get to agree about it. But the object proposed for our prayers just now is one in which we can all agree—nay, must agree. If we do not, why then we ought to put some little questions to ourselves about whether we are in a right state of mind.

Dear friends, we gratefully acknowledge the good hand of the Lord in raising up our friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, to stir the stagnation of the present period. God has highly blessed them in this respect, and tens of thousands have gone to hear them who would not have gone anywhere else. Many have been impressed and awakened, and not a few have been really brought to the Lord Jesus Christ. Now they are coming to the South; the hall is being built for them. We will not raise any question about the men; let the Lord send whomsoever He will send. We would not have them other than they are. God has blessed them in other parts of London, and we believe He means to give a blessing to us on this side of the water as well as to our friends in the North, and East and West.

Now while we rally round them for the time being, and work hand-in-hand with them, we ought to seek two things. These two things, to my mind, are simply these:—

The conversion of a great host of sinners; and

The greater holiness of all the saints, wherever they may be.

I do trust we can all agree in praying to God to save a great company of sinners. We do not want to have a few conversions only; we will be thankful if we do; but we will be disappointed if there are not a great many! We desire to see and hear thousands crying out, as on the day of Pentecost, "What must we do to be saved?" Of course, if we see this, we shall have the cry of fanaticism, and all that raised against us: but we have got so used to that, that we do not very much mind it. We are like the farmer who did not care much for getting wet through so long as he got rain for his crops. We do not mind suffering a little inconvenience if God would pour out such a blessing that we shall not have room to receive it. We all want to see sinners saved. You cannot go down the New Cut on a Sunday, or walk along these streets of an evening, or go into the homes of the people, without saying, "Lord, save these people; save them anyhow, and save them now." We are all agreed about that. We all feel, too, that whatever respect we may have for our church members, and for our churches, still we are all short of the mark. We have not come near the standard of perfection yet. I know I have not, and, as far as I can judge of many of my brethren, they do not seem to be much nearer. We want to get to a higher platform, and become more truly consecrated to God.

About these two things we are agreed in the text, and we shall have them if we are agreed in asking for them. Well, let us be agreed in this. There is a wonderful, cumulative power about prayer. Look at those prayers of Abraham for Sodom and Gomorrah—and what a mightily wonderful pleader he was. And yet there was not a single soul that was saved in answer to his prayer till poor Lot—a miserable little believer himself—prayed a poor, timorous prayer for a little city called Zoar. I do not believe it was Lot's prayer alone, but the prayers of both together—Abraham's big prayer with Lot's little prayer, that brought the answer. Abraham, the friend of God, was all the better for having Lot by his side. We all know the name of Paul—the Christian world rings with it. We do not know much of Silas; but I do not think the prison walls at Philippi would have been shaken if they had not sang and prayed, the two together. And surely we shall see great things if there be two agreed; the blessing will come. If two will bring the blessing, I calculate—is it not a right calculation?—that we shall bring a much greater blessing if we are all agreed.

Then we must not only pray together, but we must work together. Those who cannot work together, it is clear, do not pray together. So if we are going to pray God to do great things by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the South, we must go into the work and help them.

Mr. Spurgeon closed his short address by some further remarks on united prayer, and counselled every Christian to find some other one person to pray with them for a great blessing on the work in the South.

Rev. J. H. Wilson gave us an instance of blessing granted in answer to the prayers of two. The following little note, he said, was laid on the desk of a school of 300 or 400 girls, conducted by two Christian ladies:—"We write you this note to tell you that A. Somerville, C. Gilmour, J. Hunter, and M. Clark have given our hearts to Jesus, and love Him. We were anxious to tell you this, so we thought we would write this note to say that we are 'safe in the arms of Jesus,' and we hope when He sends for us we may be ready to go home. Signed, A. S., C. G., J. H., and M. C."

After a few words of sympathetic cheer from Dr. Wallace, of Glasgow, the meeting was closed with prayer.

Next Wednesday the address will be given by Rev. G. Flindt, of Denmark-hill.

THE WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN AMERICA.

On the evening of December 22, 1873, Dr. Dio Lewis, while delivering a lecture in the town of Hillsboro', Ohio, incidentally related the circumstance of his mother having once closed a saloon by prayer and persuasion, and urged the women of Hillsboro' to unite together for the same kind of work. The exhortation resulted in the appointment of a meeting in one of the churches the next morning, at nine o'clock. This meeting was attended by about a hundred ladies from the different denominations, who, after consulting together, chose for their leader a sister of an ex-Governor of Ohio, Mrs. J. E. Thompson—she having suffered the agony which only a mother knows who has seen a talented son, and he a minister of the gospel, ruined by strong drink. She opened her Bible, and read to them these words:—"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.... Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God.... which keepeth truth for ever: which executeth judgment for the oppressed.... The Lord loseth the prisoners: the Lord openeth the eyes of the blind: the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down; the Lord loveth the righteous.... The Lord relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked He turneth upside down. The Lord shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the Lord."

Mrs. Thompson then called upon a Presbyterian lady to pray. The prayer was the first audible one the lady had ever offered, but the words fell upon the little company like fire, and so inspired them, that, at the word given by Mrs. Thompson, they filed out two by two, singing, "Give to the winds thy fears," and marched to a saloon kept by a German. There they prayed and sang, while the rum-seller declared it to be a sin and shame to pray in a saloon; but they kept on praying and singing in this and other saloons. The result was a victory for the ladies. The news of their success soon spread to other towns and villages, until the whole State was one vast combination of union prayer-meetings. The gentlemen in large numbers joined the ladies in these meetings, and usually remained in the church praying and singing; while such of the ladies as felt called of God to do so marched forth to plead with Him in the presence of saloon-keepers, that they might be induced to give up a trade which was destroying their souls and bodies.

Just so long as the ladies put their entire trust in the mighty arm of God, victory crowned their efforts. Hundreds of saloons were closed, and thousands of men and boys were induced to quit drinking, and give their hearts to Christ; but in many places where the victory was won, and every saloon closed, the ladies exchanged the strong arm of prayer and faith for the weaker one of the law; and in every instance where this has been done, they have met with signal and disastrous defeat.

In one county there was, at one time, a radius of fourteen miles, containing many thousands of inhabitants, where it was impossible for a man to purchase a glass of any kind of intoxicating drinks. But even the ladies of this section were destined to have their faith sorely tried. Near one of the villages in this district a man rented an old cooper's-shop, and fitted it up for a saloon. As soon as the ladies heard of it, they visited him, and revisited him over and over again; but failing of their object, and being refused admittance into the saloon, the gentlemen of the village came to their aid, and erected a building adjoining the rum-shop; and there for five long months those ladies have met every day to pray for that man. When last heard from, the ladies were still praying, and would "keep on praying," until he made an unconditional surrender.

From Ohio the great movement passed over into adjoining States, and so kept on spreading, until now the tidal wave of gospel temperance has rolled over every part of our land, from Maine on the Atlantic to California on the Pacific, and from the Lakes in the North to the Gulf of Mexico in the South. Everywhere temperance meetings are being held, and praying bands are meeting together to ask God's blessing upon the work.

The excitement which at first attended the movement has passed away. Secular papers, as a rule, have but little, if anything, in their columns concerning it; but the work goes on with a quiet determination and fixedness of purpose on the part of the truly consecrated women and men of the entire country, which is rapidly diminishing the consumption of intoxicants throughout the land. For instance, the official report of the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Cincinnati shows that the exports from that one city alone were less in 1874 than they were in 1873 by 34,218 barrels of whiskey, to say nothing about wines and malt liquors, which also fell off largely.

In some of our States, we have most excellent laws bearing upon the liquor traffic. In the State of Mississippi, they have a law which prohibits any one from selling any kind of intoxicant until he shall have first obtained in writing the consent of a majority of all the males over twenty-one, and of all females over eighteen, within the district where such liquors are to be sold.

In other States the sale of intoxicants is entirely prohibited, excepting under prescriptions from reliable physicians; but in all our States the moral sentiment was so reduced that it was impossible to have the laws executed, no matter how stringent they might be. Under this new movement the moral sentiment is being elevated and strengthened, and in many places we find no difficulty in carrying out the laws.

In some parts, the liquor dealers have banded together, and by expending large sums of money have carried everything before them, and are now untrammelled in their nefarious business; but we who have enlisted in this work for life know in whom we have believed, and have no expectation of becoming dishonoured by one defeat, or even by a hundred. We believe that God has called upon his people, both women and men, to go forth in the love of Christ, firmly relying upon Him to deliver the nations of the earth from the great curse of rum, and that this deliverance is to be accomplished through preaching the wondrous love of Jesus, and through kindness and brotherly treatment, concerning them, and that Christ does love them, and that in his sight a rum-seller is no worse than other sinners—"for there is no difference."

Last autumn, the reformed men of the New England States held a five days' Convention in the State of Maine, and three of us from Brooklyn were present by special invitation. The meetings were held in a beautiful grove. We had four sessions each day for five days, with a continued growth in power and numbers from first to last. The closing meeting was on Sunday afternoon, when there were over five thousand people present. So manifest was the power of God that when the appeal was made to come forward and sign the pledge, over 1200 persons came forward and put down their names. Many scores of them, after writing their names, would appeal to the audience to join them in asking God to enable them to keep it. Thus did we continue that meeting from one o'clock in the afternoon, until ten o'clock at night.

From that Convention, the tidal wave of gospel temperance swept through the town of Saco, four miles away, and over 4000 signed the pledge, being about half the inhabitants; and so great was the interest awakened that all the churches and public halls in the town could not accommodate the people who wanted to attend the gospel temperance meetings. Previous to this, notwithstanding they had the "Maine Law," liquor was for sale at almost every corner. Now not a drink can be bought in the place to be taken simply as a beverage.

Still the wave rolls on, spreading nearly all over the State of Maine, and thousands upon thousands have joined the temperance army, to battle for God and the right. In the city of Portland, when we were there last autumn, they had over 500 drinking saloons. A short time since every one of these was indicted, and the officers of the law, feeling that they are now supported by the people, have determined to close every one of them.

The most marked feature in this movement thus far has been the sound conversion of such vast numbers of the rum-sellers and rum-drinkers, and the willingness of Christ to manifest his power by taking from these men all appetite or desire for any kind of stimulant; but the details of this and the wonderful work carried on in the city of Brooklyn, where over 800 saloons have been closed within a year, without any excitement, and of other points where a great work has been done, I will reserve for another article, in which I hope to show more fully that it is all of God, and that He is a Hearer and Answerer of prayer.

BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

It will not be necessary to remind our readers that this Convention opens on Saturday next, 29th inst., and extends over ten days. Both in Brighton and throughout the country, as well as on the Continent, expectation is high as to the results of this gathering in the quickening of the large number of Christians who are expected to attend, and also in the awakening of many unconverted. On Thursday morning last a number of the Brighton clergymen and ministers met for breakfast at the Royal Pavilion, when a long and interesting address was given by Mr. Pearsall Smith, setting forth the aims and objects of the Convention. We trust our readers will be earnest and constant in prayer to God, that this Convention may be the channel of spiritual blessing, not only to those who are privileged to be present, but through them to multitudes throughout the world.

The applications indicate the probability of 8000 visitors at the Brighton Convention, in addition to residents. It is very desirable that those who come should bring portable camp chairs, which will be kept for them in the ante-room.

It is also suggested that there are many Christian workers who would derive great benefit from these meetings, but are unable to bear the expense, and that those who can afford it would enjoy them all the more if they gave this opportunity to a poorer brother or sister.

YOUNG MEN'S CONVENTION IN LIVERPOOL.

In connection with the remarkable awakening amongst the young men of Liverpool, which has followed the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to that town, a young men's convention was opened on Thursday evening last. The meetings took place in Newsome's Circus, where most of the special services for young men in the town have been held. The object of the convention was an interchange of thought in reference to the revival movement amongst young men, with special reference to the best means of making it increasingly and permanently successful. In view of the important object, and the somewhat novel character of the gathering, much interest was felt in the proceedings.

As will be seen from our advertising columns, we intend publishing next week, along with our ordinary issue, a Special Young Men's Number, containing a full report of the proceedings of this Convention, so that we refrain from giving any more detailed account of it this week.

HENRY MOORHOUSE'S FAREWELL MEETINGS IN AMERICA.

The furthest point westward our beloved brother has reached in this his fourth visit to America has been the great city of St. Louis, the largest city on the River Mississippi. Here he was welcomed by Dr. James H. Brookes, who is well known throughout the West as one of the most pronounced preachers of the gospel of Christ in its simplicity and fullness. After his departure, Dr. Brookes, editor of The Truth, testified that, after seventeen years' ministry in St. Louis, he had never known his brother Christians so deeply moved, or more spiritually instructed, than by the simple ministry of Henry Moorhouse. After he had left for Chicago, Dr. Brookes, in the name of many Christians in St. Louis, earnestly besought him to return, and continue his labours, and, if possible, settle permanently in that city. This request was accompanied by very substantial inducements in the line of earthly comforts. Henry Moorhouse replied that he believed it was the Lord's will that he should continue to go from place to place, doing the work of an evangelist.

At Chicago he preached chiefly in Mr. D. L. Moody's church, which, during each of his four visits to America, has been one of the chief centres of his ministry. The farewell meeting in Mr. Moody's church was a time to be remembered, by reason of the manifest tokens of the Lord's presence.

From Chicago Mr. Moorhouse stopped at Rochester, in the State of New York; and on Sunday evening the last service was held in the Brick Church in that city, when many hundreds were unable to gain admission.

On Tuesday he was back in New York, where Dr. Stephen H. Tyng threw open his church to him. It was deeply interesting to find one of the leading Episcopal ministers of America, bearing a name honoured by all who appreciate an earnest evangelical ministry, thus giving the right hand of fellowship to a plain and humble worker in the Lord's vineyard, whose ordination was not of man, nor by man, though manifestly of the Holy Ghost.

After two meetings in Dr. Tyng, jun.'s, church, Mr. Moorhouse went on to Philadelphia and Wilkesbarre, in Pennsylvania, where the same blessing attended his ministry. He is now (May 7) in New York again, and preached last night in Dr. Tyng's church, taking up the question, "What is the gospel?"

His farewell meeting in America will be held this evening in the Church of the Disciples, of which Rev. George Hepworth is the pastor—a recent convert from Unitarianism—where many tokens of the Lord's blessing have recently been richly manifested. And to-morrow (Saturday) he sails by the steamship "Adriatic" for his native shores, followed by the prayers of thousands, to whom his earnest ministry has been full of blessing.

MISSION TO THE CABMEN OF NORTH LONDON.

The following circular has been issued:—

It has been found by inquiry that a large proportion of the London cab-drivers have their homes in the Northern and Eastern districts of the metropolis, more especially in the neighbourhoods of Kingsland, Hoxton, Dalston, Hackney, Homerton, etc. Most of these men are "seven day" drivers, attend no place of worship, and are living the lives almost of heathen. It is proposed, therefore, to establish a Mission, having for its object the spiritual good of these uncared-for thousands. This Mission will have its centre at Dalston Junction, the religious services connected with it to be carried on at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, where a suitable room has been granted for the purpose by Mrs. Pennefather.

It is intended to erect a cabman's "shelter" near Dalston Junction, and to connect with this a lending library and benefit club. For single men out of employment, beds at a low rate of charge will be provided. A Sunday-evening service will be held for cabmen (to commence at eight o'clock, or such other hour as shall be found most suitable at the Mildmay Conference Hall (Room No. 4). Suitable speakers will be provided to address the men, and no efforts will be spared to render this service attractive. Personal invitations to the drivers will be given weekly by an agent connected with the Mission, and by lady visitors. Week-evening classes are also suggested, to be held after working hours, when hot coffee and bread-and-butter will be provided for all comers, before or after the class commences. This plan has been found most successful amongst cabmen. Home visitation of the cabmen's families will also be attempted, and mothers'-meetings for their wives.

The superintendence of this work will be placed in the hands of Mrs. Pennefather, who has kindly agreed that it shall be carried on in connection with the band of workers at the Mildmay Conference Hall. To inaugurate the work, we propose giving a public supper to the cabmen of North London. Tickets to be issued for 700, and distributed through cab "ranks" by aid of city missionary. Suitable addresses will follow, and the different plans suggested for their benefit be laid before the men. By this means their own views and wishes will be ascertained, and the names and addresses of those present collected for the purpose of home visitation.

£200 will be required to commence this Mission in the manner proposed. Donations will be thankfully received by "The Treasurer of the Cabmen's Mission," care of Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Post-office orders to be made payable at the Islington branch.

A WARNING.—May I be permitted to warn those who attend Messrs Moody and Sankey's services against receiving some of the tracts which are distributed at the doors? I attended the Bible-reading on Thursday afternoon, and while waiting at one of the entrances for a friend, after the service, I stood near a man who was busily engaged in giving away two Socinian tracts, entitled, "The Crucifixion," and "The Blood of Jesus." They were eagerly received by hundreds; but I observed that he never offered one to a clergyman or minister.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT CAMBRIDGE.

"The Lord hath" indeed "visited his people." Special services were held in this town throughout last week, as a result of the united prayer-meetings carried on since the beginning of April. House-to-house visitation had been instituted, and the Lord brought large numbers together to hear the gospel message.

At the theatre, situated in one of the worst localities, William Taylor, of the Evangelization Society, London, spoke with great power, and the Holy Spirit evidently gave the right word, so that the attendance increased nightly. On the last two days of the Mission, Whit-Sunday and Monday, an extra service was held in the afternoons, while the theatre was crammed to excess on both evenings, open-air addresses being also given at the same time for those who could not get in; thus on each of these nights at least 1500 people must have been brought under the sound of the gospel.

The inquiry-meetings were well attended, and many precious souls realized "joy and peace in believing."

At the Guildhall on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas, of the Evangelization Society, clearly and faithfully "preached Christ" to large and attentive audiences, and we have good reason to hope that souls were saved at each meeting. Many undergraduates, besides more than one Fellow of a College, joined with the townspeople in acting as stewards, and helping at the after-meetings in the men's inquiry-room, while Christian ladies spoke to the anxious women who remained after the services in another part of the buildings.

Praise God for what He has wrought here, and ask Him to draw his own people yet closer together, so that nothing may hinder the blessing which is being so abundantly poured out upon us!

MR. PEARSALL SMITH AT OXFORD.

From my heart I thank God for the faithful addresses, full of gospel truth, and earnest exhortation to Christian young men to yield themselves to God by faith in Christ, for whole-hearted service, which two large gatherings of Oxford undergraduates heard from Mr. Pearsall Smith on Saturday.

We sat down to breakfast, a hundred and twenty-six University men, though more than a hundred had been obliged to decline my invitation, because of the examinations which are going on. I never saw deeper attention during a Christian address than was given to Mr. Pearsall Smith's, after breakfast. I feel sure that God answered prayer and guided him as he spoke.

As might have been anticipated, there was a very large attendance at my usual Saturday evening meeting of undergraduates, when Mr. Pearsall Smith gave another most awakening address. The Lord Jesus was glorified as a Saviour who really does save those who trust Him to do so from their sins, and gives them the will and power for whole-hearted service. The habit of instantaneous unreserved obedience to the Lord's commands was urged as essential to usefulness and happiness.

On Sunday the great Corn Exchange was filled in the afternoon, and crowded in every part in the evening at half-past eight. Mr. Pearsall Smith preached to the unconverted in this great congregation from the text, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." On Friday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday afternoon the addresses were to Christians, encouraging faith in Christ for the heart, and energy for a life of entire consecration in the service of God.

I hope all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will pray and promote prayer for an abundant blessing on the Brighton Conference. Let us look with the confidence of faith for a most gracious answer to these united prayers. The venerated Prebendary John Venn of Hereford has added his name to those of the President of the Church Missionary Society (the Earl of Chichester), the Dean of Canterbury, and many others, as promoting the Brighton Conference. Mr. Venn writes to me:—

"I have been dipping into the Report of the Oxford Conference, and am more than ever convinced that God was present in a wonderful degree. I earnestly pray that God may work as mightily at Brighton as He did at Oxford."

Mr. Venn was present at the Oxford Conference.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS AT THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

On Wednesday, the 19th, there was a large gathering to welcome Miss Macpherson on her return from Canada. The meeting was thoroughly representative in its character. In addition to labourers from all parts of London, there were some from far-off India, China, Basutoland, Canada, and other distant places. The hour allotted to tea was spent in pleasant conversation, and introducing labourers whose fields are wide apart. Dr. Bonar's new hymn, "Rejoice, and be glad," gave the meeting a good start, and then Mr. E. C. Morgan, who presided, read the 66th Psalm, and offered prayer.

Miss Macpherson first called attention to the connection between suffering and glory in St. Peter's first Epistle, illustrating it from her own experience. She also spoke of the blessed rest of faith, observing that it was not so much faith that was to be thought of, as the faithful One. Proceeding to speak of her Canadian experiences, she wished the meeting to understand that she was a representative person. Though she had travelled so far, and spoken 196 times, others had also done and were doing the same. In these Canadian journeys, on sleigh in mid-winter, on dark nights, nerves had to be put on one side. Four congregations would come together into one schoolhouse in a wood, and who could resist the opportunity to speak to them? She would forbear for the present speaking on the criticisms which had been made on her work. Before leaving Canada, she had had a second interview with the Premier, who would be in England soon. The loss of their house by fire was a heavy trial, but the amount for which it was insured (£700) would rebuild it, and kind Canadian friends insisted on being allowed to refurbish it. But that which had cheered her most was the spiritual work among the children, which had never been more encouraging than now. Among their elder boys—600 over eighteen being now in Canada—some had got married. One was met with in a shop who told her to work on hopefully, as in his case, though it was some time before he was a decided Christian, he had never forgotten anything; not even a Bible-lesson on board ship had escaped his memory.

After singing the now popular and stirring hymn, "Rescue the perishing," Mr. Henry Varley addressed the meeting, having first offered prayer. Naturally he was expected to speak on his recent visit to America, where he was almost as much talked about as Mr. Moody is in England; but, beyond a passing allusion, he did not touch on that topic. His address was on "The Crowns of Scripture." He considered "the crown of life" the common property of all the saved. "The crown of righteousness" comprehended all that was meant by our faithfulness to the Lord. "The crown of glory" was for distinguished service in the Church of Christ; and "the crown of rejoicing" consisted of those who had been saved by our instrumentality. All these crowns would be cast at the Lord's feet, and He would be crowned Lord of all.

"The home over there" having been sung, prayer was offered by a venerable missionary from Basutoland, by Mr. Morgan, Mr. Varley, Dr. Barnardo, Miss Macpherson, and others. Major Malan's work in South Africa was specially named in these closing intercessions.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Whitecross-street Christian Mission (founded by the late George Vigeon) took place on Thursday last, when 180 persons partook of an excellent tea. The meeting followed, with General Alexander in the chair, when addresses were given by the Rev. J. Poulton and Mr. Smith. The rev. gentleman, referring to the death of the founder, said, although the Lord buries his workman, He carries on his work still, for in the present case we have a striking instance, for since the hall was re-opened in February last, you have got in working order, sewing-classes, mothers'-meetings, Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, children's and adults' services, making in all about ten meetings a-week, and through the active services of Mr. Dawson, the resident evangelist, who is daily working among the people, you have had seven genuine conversions, and four of them have gone safe home to heaven. One of them, the speaker said, he had visited by request, and was a very interesting case, an old Waterloo veteran, eighty-two years of age, now safe in the arms of Jesus. The meeting was excellent in spirit and purpose. A very hearty vote of thanks was given to C. Ashton, Esq., for his kindness and support; and a vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close.

WHIT-MONDAY AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

"Casting bread upon the waters." This is quite characteristic of the Lord's work at the Bible-stand in the Crystal Palace. About 40,000 persons, both young and old, had flocked thither to enjoy a day's outing. From early in the morning till late in the evening the human stream passed in front of the stand. Upwards of 13,000 of neatly-printed four-page Scripture leaflets and Scripture cards, containing from twenty to thirty appropriate texts, were distributed. These were entitled: "Come to Jesus," "Words of love to the young," "Words of eternal life," "God's word to parents," "A message of God to thee," "Why will yedie?" etc., etc. They were given, as far as possible, to the person to whom they were suitable. There was little time for conversation, but now and then "a word in season" was said to the recipient. Several also bought a Bible, Testament, or text-book, which are often bought as presents to friends from the Crystal Palace. Three hundred and eighty foreigners received a Gospel, and in some cases a New Testament on this day. To these we pay special attention, and "thus every one in their own tongue hears the wonderful works of God."

Thus we are constantly engaged in "holding forth the Word of life" to English and foreign visitors; the seed is not only sown in faith, but watered with prayer, and results are left with Him who hath promised that his "word shall not return unto Him void."

J. ALEXANDER.

*Bible-stand, Crystal Palace.HAMPSTEAD HEATH, WHIT-MONDAY.

A lovely spring day; sun shining gloriously in an arc of blue, flecked here and there with clouds of purest silver; heat tempered by a strong breeze, wind and sun harmoniously blended to make perfect weather, neither hot nor cold. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of the great city out somewhere in the wind and sun; certainly many thousands of the city dwellers on Hampstead-heath. Meeting for fresh air and fun, for sunshine and revelry, is it of any use to offer them the gospel? The command is to "go out"; in all the year there cannot be another opportunity so good; let us obey, and leave consequences.

Three hundred workers and singers; Sankey's Songs and Solos; thousands of hymn-sheets and leaf-tracts; tea provided in two places (no one large enough) for the workers. The Secretary of the Open-air Mission, the Superintendent of the Goldington-crescent and Whitefield Missions for Generals; Open-air Missionaries for Majors and Captains; the Rev. J. Matheson, of Hampstead (Moderator of the Presbyterian Synod), for chief of the guides, the remainder of the singers and workers for the host, meet at the flag-staff on the Heath at three o'clock, for singing and short addresses, and thus the campaign opened.

Lo! no enemies to fight; no opposition; no ribaldry; no blasphemy; no turves or stones, no drunken fellow (to begin with, he came afterward); only a vast multitude of men, women, and children of all ages and classes, listening with great delight to the gathered Mission Choirs as they sing Mr. Sankey's Songs and Solos. "Thank God for songs and solos!"

"There's Moody, that's him!" said one who didn't know to another of the same class. "No, it isn't!" said a third. "It's Sankey, ain't you seen the pictures?" "Don't be deceived; neither is here!" said an "open-air," and the vision faded. But the work went on; first a "song;" then a very short address from Mr. Kirkham. Mr. Forbes, Mr. Woffendale, Mr. Whitmore following each other, with songs between, led most skilfully by Mr. Blaikie, of Regent-square. How the people were held; how they listened; how the sweet voices of the children chimed lovingly in with the singing of the choirs; and how the mighty crowd increased and grew; up the hill from the little valley where the singers and speakers lay, and sat, and stood; to sing and speak, until there was a living mass of faces; of intense listeners to song and gospel word. Far too soon the hour had flown, and the first gathering dispersed to meet no more collectively till they meet before God's merciful Christ. May they find mercy "in that day."

Strengthened by rest and tea, the various bands took up different stations on the Heath; and thus far greater numbers were reached in detail than in the afternoon. One thing was abundantly clear throughout the day; there is now no opposition or dislike to hearing the gospel in such places. Not long since, many good Christians thought it wrong to go out at such times, they talked about "holy things" and "dogs"; many decent people told us to keep our preaching for places where it would be valued; many worldly people said, "Let us alone." But on Monday there was nothing but good wishes, quiet zealous co-operation, volunteer keepers of order, and unobstructed singing and speaking the "good news."

Whence is this mighty, blessed change in the temper and conduct of the masses of the people? Are they changed? Are we! Our message is the same, do we speak it in the same manner? Is the Spirit of the Lord poured out from on high according to his promise?

Oh! to realize, to feel and know that the power of the living God goes with the gospel of his Son in our midst to-day! To feel and know that we are surrounded by touched multitudes of immortals; that men and women are easily, pleasantly slipping into the kingdom! That our weak words are endowed with divine power to lead to Jesus, just so far as we use his word.

Oh! to understand the blessedness, the preciousness of the time; to be up and doing in the name and might of the Son of God, whose commission we bear, whose assurance, "Lo! I am with you always!" was never more plainly fulfilled than at present, since London has been a city.

Oh! for a mighty, united cry of prayer; a shout of praise and thanksgiving for what has been, what is, and what will be, if the servants of God only recognize and seize the time!

GRAY'S-YARD RAGGED CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

The annual meeting of this unobtrusive but most useful society was held in Seymour Hall, Portman-square, on Wednesday evening last week. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and beside him on the platform were many friends of the institution, including Lord Leigh, Lord Dynevor, Mr. M. Stewart, M.P., Revs. E. W. Moore and Donald Fraser, Sir Robert Carden, etc., all of whom, as well as others, made speeches in its behalf.

The report for the year, read by the hon. secretary for the Ragged Church and Ragged School respectively, showed a large amount of work done amongst the very poorest and, in some sense, the very lowest of society, and it was with regret we noticed, from the financial statement, that the balance was on the wrong side. Such a society as this ought to have its coffers overflowing, and we think it would have if Christian London would pay a visit to the Ragged Church in James-street any Sunday morning, and see the extraordinary congregations that gather there to be fed both temporally and spiritually.

Lord Leigh, in his few remarks, put the pertinent query that had often, he said, presented itself to him in church, Where are our poor brethren and sisters on the Lord's-day? He was obliged to answer, and everybody agrees with him, that they are not at the ordinary religious services. Messrs. Moody and Sankey's special efforts have, to some extent, answered the question, because at their meetings you will see the poorest in close proximity to the well-to-do and wealthy; but the question will come up with increased force when these special services are over, and unless the respectable, well-dressed Christianity of London makes some effort to induce and retain the attendance of their poverty-stricken and barely-clad brethren and sisters at the ordinary Sunday services, the churches and chapels will remain as exclusive as before. Gray's-yard Ragged Church and School supply a recognized need in this particular, and we would wish to see it well supported, and its example imitated throughout London and all our great towns. Some of the children of the Ragged School were present at the meeting, and sang very nicely a selection of hymns, chiefly from Mr. Sankey's collection. Prizes were given to those who had been over twelve months in their first situation.

POLICE AND POSTMEN.—Friends willing to send monthly packets of papers to the above are asked to communicate with Miss Whitway, Elmore House, Chudleigh, Devonshire.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING, BIRMINGHAM.—We regret to be informed by a correspondent that this meeting has fallen through for the present. Are there not as many praying people in the town of Birmingham with the necessary leisure as will support a daily meeting for prayer? Are the spiritual wants of the town all supplied? Is the Lord's hand shortened that He cannot save, or his ear heavy that He cannot hear?

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

Young Women's Christian Association, 49, Great Marlborough-street, W. (Morgan and Scott).—A revived interest in the welfare of our young men must not make us forget the equally pressing claims of the many young women in London in need of sympathy and assistance. Miss Branwell is doing what she can in this way, and would gladly do more, if funds permitted. The letters from former inmates of the Home, at the close of the report, are very cheering.

Ebenezer: A Cottage Home for Aged Christian Israelites.—A very praiseworthy undertaking, and one that commends itself to the sympathy of all those who wish to show their gratitude to the nation of whom Christ came after the flesh, and who have preserved for Christians of all ages the oracles of God.

Scripture-readers' Society for Ireland.—The report for 1874, just issued, has for its motto, "Erin's only Hope, the Bible. Search the Scriptures," and is replete with encouraging details of the good work carried on by its agents. We would the Bible were not only in every Irish home, but in every Irish heart. Our sister isle would then be as happy as she is beautiful.

The Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the Melior-street Schools and Mission briefly narrates the work of the past year.

Mission-work in Clerkenwell is a graphic account, by Mr. George Sokhan, of two years' labour for the Master in that populous neighbourhood, and illustrates the Scripture promise that no such labour shall be in vain.

The Friendless and Fallen. Annual Report for 1874.—Everybody who knows anything of London, and has the very smallest love for human souls, must wish this institution a hearty God-speed. There is no more heartrending sight, we think, on the earth's surface than that which many of our metropolitan streets present of an evening when scores upon scores of our poor unfortunate sisters openly follow their short life of shame and sorrow. It sickens one to think of it, and yet the Christian Church seems to be asleep on the question, and calmly takes it as a matter of course. This institution fills a little gap in the breach, and has done great good. The Report for 1874 shows that 1496 cases have been dealt with at the Homes and Refuge. The Report contains many encouraging details. We would earnestly commend the work to the prayerful support and co-operation of all who seek to follow in the footsteps of the loving and forgiving Saviour. The office of the society is, 200, Easton-road, N.W.

St. Marylebone Female Protection Society, 157-9, Marylebone-road, N.W.—A kindred society to the foregoing, and one that has sheltered 112 young women during the past year. May God's rich blessing attend its efforts. It is gladdening to know that many of those who come within the range of its influence are led savingly to Christ.

The Children's Home, Weston-super-Mare.—Established about three years since "for orphan girls of good birth; but extremely limited circumstances, or for those whose parents, though still living, may be unable to give them a suitable education. It is sought, first, to win for Christ every child admitted; and, second, to teach and fit her to fill some position of usefulness in life. The efficiency of the Home is circumscribed by lack of funds. Any information will be given, and donations gratefully acknowledged, by Mrs. James Currie, King's-cliff, Weston-super-Mare.

House of Rest for Female Missionaries, Nos. 7 & 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn Park, N.W.—In these busy days, when the energies of all kinds of workers are taxed to the utmost, and yet come short of the crying needs of the time, there must always be a goodly number, especially of our sister toilers in the Lord's harvest-field, who become weary in, though not of, their work. At this quiet resting-place, and the branch establishment at Eastbourne, provision is afforded for deserving cases of this description, and the report now before us shows that many a weary one has been refreshed and strengthened for future labour by a sojourn with Miss Mason. "A cup of cold water" given in the shape of a donation to the "House of Rest," will carry with it its own reward, to say nothing of the special approval of the Master.

The Iron Room, Shoreditch. Some Records of the Lord's Work in the East of London.—A little pamphlet which shows that the devil is not left in undisturbed possession of the East-end, with its vice, and attendant poverty and wretchedness. The Saviour's words still hold good, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." An illustration of "Sunday Morning at the East-end" accompanies the pamphlet; and if it is, as it purports to be, a faithful representation of the scene of labour in connection with the Iron Room, we should say this work requires all the sympathy and support it can get. Friends can obtain copies of this little book post-free, on application to Mr. Knowles, Iron Room, Shoreditch.

Whitecross-street Mission, 198, Whitecross-street, E.C.—This Mission, founded by our lamented brother, Mr. George Vigeon, is now carried on under the superintendence of Miss Frances Hastings, of 23, Chilworth-street, Westbourne-terrace, W., and seeks to supply "the fearful spiritual destitution prevalent in the crowded courts and alleys of the district." Mr. C. J. Chapman, Elm House, Ferndale-road, Clapham, S.W., brother-in-law of the late Mr. Vigeon, is treasurer.

Aldershot Mission-hall and Soldiers' Institute.—The best proof of the usefulness of this work is to be found in the large number of interesting extracts from soldiers' letters contained in this the twelfth report. It will well repay perusal.

The Society for Promoting Female Welfare, 31, Weymouth-street, Harley-street, W., is a very catholic institution. "Its work embraces all charitable agencies, industrial, educational, benevolent, and missionary (reformatory institutions excepted), which are designed to promote the welfare of women, and which can advantageously unite for purposes of mutual assistance on a scriptural and Protestant basis." If its usefulness is in proportion to the width of the field it occupies—and the Report for 1874 indicates that it is—surely every woman who has to earn her bread ought to be made acquainted with it.

Evangelization Society Occasional Report, No. 15. April, 1875.—When we say that the number of services held during the past year at 612 different places by the agents of this Society amount to 7269, we have said enough to prove that it is doing a great and good work. This Occasional Report contains volumes of testimony from many sources to the worth and success of this truly apostolic Society, and our readers cannot do better than procure copies from the new offices, 57, Charing-cross, S.W.

THE LATE DR. BUCHANAN, OF GLASGOW.

Our readers will have read with regret of the death of this eminent servant of God at Rome, where he had gone to recruit his health. His remains were brought back to this country, and carried to their resting-place in the Necropolis, Glasgow, on Tuesday week, by his sorrowing relatives and friends. Large crowds witnessed the progress of the procession through the streets, and several bells tolled a mournful peal at intervals.

We understand that Mr. Bryce, publisher, Glasgow, is about to issue a volume, containing the funeral sermons delivered by Sir Henry Moncrieff and Dr. Roxburgh, the minute in which the Session express a sense of their loss through the death of their eminent pastor, and also the pastoral letter which he wrote at Rome shortly before his demise. Prefacing the whole will be a neat photograph, which is considered by the family to be an excellent likeness of the doctor.

BUSHEY, HERTS.—Since the year 1873, a good work has been carried on in the neighbourhood of Bushey, and the lower part of Watford. A tent in summer and a barn in winter have sufficed, with much difficulty, for the accommodation of the hearers. The Christians at Bushey are now desirous of erecting a small iron building, with ante-rooms at the back, for prayer-meetings, etc., so constructed, that they can, if necessary, be thrown into the hall. Contributions thankfully received and acknowledged by the Publishers of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

SCIENTIFIC CRUELTY.

Sir,—Will you allow me to supplement the letter of "H. M. C.," in your pages of last week—for which I thanked God—with an earnest entreaty for the fervent prayers of all your readers, that during the present session of Parliament God, of his great mercy, would incline the hearts of the Members of both Houses to frame such a law as shall effectually put a stop to the inhuman cruelties of vivisection, which are now, from the example of some men of science, spreading like a moral pestilence amongst the youth of our country, and destroying the very heart of the true courage of English nature, which is of one fibre with its mercy and pity for the weak and helpless. SCRIPTURE-READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—We would call the special attention of our readers to the annual meetings of this important Society, to be held in London this week (see Forthcoming Meetings).

HARROW.—Evangelistic services have been held in the public hall in this place for ten days. A house-to-house visitation was made beforehand by the members of the local Y.M.C.A. with great success. The hall was filled every night during the ten days. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. W. Haslam, M. C. Leite Rozas, J. G. Watson, Esq., and T. Bennett, Esq. The after-meetings were conducted by the Rev. S. C. Morgan, who also gave the address on Sunday night, after the church services were over. Large numbers remained every evening to be spoken to, and many were enabled to rejoice in Christ as their Saviour. The whole place has been stirred, and on the last two Sundays the word has been blessed to the salvation of many in Mr. Morgan's congregation. For some time prayer-meetings have been held, for the special purpose of praying for the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on the place, and prayer has been most graciously answered.

NOTICES.

THE LADY who sent £70, anonymously, for the expenses of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services, is informed that the fund for that purpose was designated "The Noon Prayer-meeting Fund," as the services are under the management of the Noon Prayer-meeting Committee. Her kind donation is placed to the credit of that fund; its name is now altered.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY ADVOCATE. Elliot Stock.—The first appearance of this very excellent little magazine was in April. The sole desire of its projectors is "the glory of God in the conversion of the heathen." Among its contributors we see the names of some who have been familiar to us as students of the East-end Training Institute, and who have gone forth into the Mission-field. The programme of Home Proceedings for the present month is a very varied and promising one. We heartily wish this magazine a great success. Every Christian young man will do well to take it. All can afford a shilling a-year for such an object.

THE FIRESIDE HYMN-BOOK. Hamilton.—It is given to few only to possess a well-stocked library, where the mind may enjoy at will the bright and precious thoughts of sweet singers now passed away from us. Miss Braithwaite has, therefore, rendered good service to the many who have not this privilege, by collecting in this neat little volume between two and three hundred gems from our best hymn writers. Miss Braithwaite is not merely a compiler, as we observe several of her own compositions in the collection, some of which are marked by much grace of composition, and all of which breathe an ardent desire after holiness, and bear the mark of the furnace of affliction about them. It is an exceedingly nice little book for a present, and we cordially recommend it to our readers.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For a young lady, who has recovered from a very dangerous illness.

PLACES.—For an eight days' Mission in the village of Blacktoft, Yorkshire, commenced on the 23rd inst.—For special services now being held in a town in Scotland, where there is very much infidelity.—For the Lord's work in Spain.

CONVERSIONS.—For the conversion of sinners in Clay Cross Circuit.—For a minister's brother and sister.—For C.—, in the last stage of consumption.—For a dear, motherless youth, who is sadly given to untruthfulness, and is a cause of great grief to his aged grandmother.—For three brothers, and their wives and family.—For a sceptic, who desires to be saved, but has doubts. Also for two Romanists, and their wives and families.—For a husband and family, all without God.—For my dear husband.—A Sunday-school teacher, for a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit on a class of youths.—For a beloved brother, placed in a position of great temptation.—A young man begs prayer for the conversion of his wife.—For my mother, my sister, and myself.—For our parish minister and school.—That God will save the soul of my singing-master.—For a dearly-loved brother, in precarious health, and his wife.—For a gentleman and his wife, who do not believe the gospel.—For a young man, a drunkard.—For two young men.—For a young woman, who has backslidden.—For two sisters in deep waters.—For one whom God has visited with a sore affliction, that it may be blessed to his salvation.

THE PRIMATE'S LETTER.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, the Primate of England, has written to a friend (said to be the Lord High Chancellor, Lord Cairns) a letter, which appeared in the Record, of Monday (May 24), and in which his Grace says that he takes the deepest interest in the movement of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and that having found an opportunity of consulting most of his episcopal brethren on the subject, his own view is very much strengthened by what he heard from them; that the great truths of the gospel should be urged on the people's consciences by laymen is no innovation; and he heartily rejoices that the movement is conducted on so great a scale, and with such apparent success.

Considering the position of the writer in the National Church and in English Society, we cannot but feel that the Archbishop has manifested not a little courage in saying so much as this, and we honour him accordingly.

But when we think of the position which the Primate holds as professedly the chief representative of the Church of Christ in this Empire, we cannot but be surprised that he should consider his responsibilities fulfilled by contenting himself with hearsay as to a spiritual movement concerning which he deems it necessary to consult his episcopal brethren. And when he proceeds to point out what appear to him, still from report only, to be the weak parts of the movement, we think he fairly lays himself open to the remarks of the correspondent who writes as follows to a daily paper:—

"The Archbishop of Canterbury has given to the world his views on the missionary movement of Mr. Moody. The judgment of the Primate on such a work is most important, as his influence is necessarily great. It is thus essential that it be based on the facts of the case; but his only data are mere reports. No leader in science would venture to pronounce a judgment on reports when the data reported on are within easy access of his personal inspection. Were the President of the Royal Society, backed by his position and authority, to condemn persons or views of which he did not approve, upon such evidence, he would thereby certainly undermine that position. Surely the importance of accuracy in religious matters to an Archbishop is not inferior to the importance of accuracy in a matter of science to a man of science: it should be greater. Why, then, does the Primate base his judgment on report, when any day during the last three months he could, without effort, have verified the facts for himself? I venture to submit that a judgment on such data is not worth the paper on which it is written,—rather, it is only baneful. It exhibits a master in theology proceeding in a way that the merest tyro in science would be ashamed of. From personal knowledge, obtained in the after-meetings, as well as the public meetings, I make the following corrections in the Archbishop's data. His reporter is in error as to the nature of the after-meetings when he says they are 'for confession of sin and for guidance of the conscience.' His reporter is in error in characterising Mr. Moody's teaching as an unwise and untrue representation of conversion and an ignoring of the full Scriptural teaching on repentance. His reporter misrepresents the methods of proceeding at, and some of the parties engaged in, the after-meetings. As a scientific inquirer, daily dealing with evidence, and a believer in the gospel of Christ, I submit that the Archbishop of Canterbury, having publicly criticised this mission work on erroneous data, is bound to make himself personally acquainted with the facts of the case, so that from his own knowledge he may either confirm his judgment or withdraw his condemnation. F. B. S."

The Archbishop says that he has heard it urged upon good authority, "that, in the discourses of the missionaries, there are unwise and untrue representations of the almost universal necessity of instantaneous conversion, and an ignoring of the full scriptural teaching as to the nature of repentance." We confess we do not quite comprehend the terms in which the Archbishop speaks of instantaneous conversion. Surely every unconverted man is in active rebellion against his sovereign Lord; and under any even human government, there can be no question, not only of the almost, but the absolutely "universal necessity of instantaneous conversion" from such a condition, to implicit submission and obedience.

But leaving this, we come to the allegation that there is "an ignoring of the full scriptural teaching as to the nature of repentance." And this leads us to the very important questions—What is repentance? How is it produced? And why is it essential to man's salvation?

In considering a remedy, we naturally compare it with the disease; and in considering the means of man's redemption, it is obviously necessary to compare them with the means by which he fell into the condition from which he is redeemed. By repentance and faith man fell, and by repentance and faith he must be restored.

Repentance (meta-noia) is a change of mind, just as meta-morphosis is a change of form. Repentance, or change of mind, is produced by presenting to the mind considerations which are, or appear to be, of more importance than those by which it was previously actuated. And repentance, or change of mind, is essential to salvation, because man fell by receiving Satan's false gospel, leading our first parents to repentance from God and faith toward himself, incarnate in the subtlest beast which the Lord God had made; and he is restored by repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, God incarnate in human nature.

It was by directing her attention to the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, by his false assurances, and by her gazing on its pleasant fruit, that the woman was led to repentance from God; it is, on the other hand, by directing our attention to the Tree of Life, by his precious promises, and by our looking to the atoning Sacrifice, that we are led to repentance toward God. John the Baptist came to prepare the way of the Lord by calling men to repentance. The inducement to repent was the near fulfilment of the promises of God, which were all contained in this one assurance, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Satan had fraudulently obtained from Adam the dominion which God had given him; and for four thousand years his disastrous reign had filled the world with woe. Now the Baptist comes to herald the Son of God—God's King—and presents, as the one inducement to repent, to change their mind, to turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, this everlasting gospel, "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."* This was also the way in which the Lord and his apostles preached and produced repentance.

Judged by these primitive standards, can it be said that in the preaching which has stirred Scotland and Ireland and England the past two years, there is an ignoring of the full scriptural teaching as to the nature of repentance? We are sure that those who are best acquainted with it will the most emphatically say No.

* Man may indeed postpone it, but God has no other gospel than "this Gospel of the Kingdom;" no other is needed; the mystery of God is finished when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ (Matt. xxiv. 14; Rev. xii. 10).

The only other feature in the Archbishop's letter to which we feel it necessary to allude is that which relates to the matter contained in the following extracts, in which the italics are ours:—

"Many of our parochial clergy, as you are aware, have been present at the meetings in question, and those who have stood aloof have done so, not from any want of interest, but because they have felt that, greatly as they rejoiced that simple gospel truths were urged on their people's consciences, there were circumstances attending the movement to which they could not consistently give their approval."

"If there is a difficulty in the clergy generally giving any official sanction to the details of the work, you will at once see that, in the case of the Bishops, there are greater difficulties in the way of any direct sanction, which, coming from them, could not be regarded as other than official and authoritative; and I confess that the objections I originally felt still remain in full force, now that we have had time to examine and to learn from various quarters the exact nature of the movement."

"I am aware that many of the most quietly religious people amongst us regard not unnaturally with alarm these irregular efforts; such persons have scarcely been able to approve even of the Home Missions, which have of late years been conducted by our own clergy, in a way to which our fathers were not accustomed."

"But looking to the vastness of the field that lies before us, and the overwhelming difficulty of contending with the mass of positive sin and careless indifference which resists on all sides the progress of the gospel, I for my part rejoice that whether regularly or irregularly, whether according to the Divine, Scriptural, and perfect way, or imperfectly, with certain admixtures of human error, Christ is preached and sleeping consciences are aroused."

We repeat our satisfaction at the Archbishop's rejoicing, though in such a qualified degree; but it is worth while to consider whether this be a true attitude to assume towards a work which has confessedly for its results the quickening of Christian life, and the turning wicked or careless men from Satan to God.

Every now and then a murmur runs through the land because of some impediment which professionalism and officialism present to the growth and expansion of the body politic. This dissatisfaction finds expression in the cry of "Red Tape!" and sooner or later the bonds are cut or burst, because in the things of the world men will not suffer themselves to be bound and hindered by worn-out traditions.

But religiously and ecclesiastically men love to escape from responsibility to God, under the plea of "regularity." There is nothing so irregular as life; nothing so regular as death. Every revival, every awakening or re-awakening of human souls, has been effected by the life of God breaking in upon the regularity of sleep and death, in ways which seemed irregular to those asleep or dead.

The attempt of men after the flood to gather themselves into a compact and well-ordered polity was irregularly broken in upon by God's confounding their language, and scattering them abroad upon the face of the earth. When God wanted a friend among men, and one whose seed should become a kingdom of priests, He began by separating Abram from all the regularities of life, and made him a pilgrim and a stranger in a strange land. He prepared the seed of his friend to become a mighty nation by very early breaking up the clan they were beginning to form in Canaan, and sending them into still another and stranger land. When He wanted a deliverer and lawgiver, instead of availing Himself of Moses' position in Pharaoh's house, and of the learning of the Egyptians which he had acquired, God sent him to feed sheep for forty years in the desert. When Moses died, instead of appointing one of the elders of Israel to fill his place, God called the young man Joshua, Moses' minister, to lead Israel into the promised land. And when his people again and again forsook the Lord and served other gods, but in their distress called upon Him to save them, the living regularity of God was invariably exhibited in a systematic antagonism to the dead regularity of man.

The first judge (or saviour) whom God raised up in the turbulent time which succeeded the death of Joshua, was indeed a descendant of Caleb, a man of renown, but it is noted that he was the son of his younger brother. The next, Ehud, was a left-handed man ("shut of his right hand"—the symbol of power—see marginal reading) of Israel's smallest tribe, "little Benjamin." Then came Shamgar, who slew 600 of the Philistines with an ox-goad. Think of Israel owing their deliverance to a warrior armed with an ox-goad! Deborah and Barak were the next deliverers; the soldier will not go to battle except Deborah go with him; and even then the honour is not his, for God sells Sisera into the hand of a woman (Jael). Then Deborah sings a hallelujah, in which Meroz is bitterly cursed, because its inhabitants came not to the help of the Lord; and the tribes which abode in their own place are reproachfully contrasted with those who jeopardized their lives in the high places of the field. Is there in this no lesson for us to-day?

The next deliverer is Gideon, whose family is poor in Manasseh, and he the least in his father's house; his army is sifted down to three hundred men, whose victory is gained by breaking their earthen pitchers, and letting their light shine. Then came Abimelech, the son of Gideon's concubine; and Jephthah, the son of a harlot. And when after these another saviour was needed, God caused a son to be born of a hitherto barren woman; as He had previously given Isaac to Sarah, and afterwards gave Samuel to Hannah, and John the Baptist to Elizabeth. No warfare could have been more irregular than that of Samson, who made foxes his rank and file, and gained his greatest victory but one with such a weapon as the jawbone of an ass; in each proceeding affording a grotesque foreshadow of the method of the greater One than Samson, who was not moved by the Spirit at times, but always; and who sent out his fishermen two and two, with the name of Jesus of Nazareth for their firebrand; and saved three thousand in one day by the lips of unlearned and ignorant men.

What shall we more say? for the time fails to tell of the venerable Eli set aside and the child Samuel called to minister in the temple of the Lord; of Saul rejected, and the elder sons of Jesse overpassed, that the shepherd boy might be anointed king; of Elijah, an unknown mountaineer from Gilead, suddenly appearing before the king, with such high credentials, and with so startling a message so abruptly said:—"As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain, these years, but according to my word." Elijah passes off the scene, but whom does he anoint to be prophet in his room? Not one from the schools of the prophets, but Elisha, a farmer, at that very moment ploughing his land; and he left all and followed him. Look a little later at their farewell journey. At each stage the sons of the prophets say some discouraging word to Elisha, but the servant will not leave the master. "Fifty men of the sons of the prophets stood to view, afar off;" but "they two went on." So when the sick of the palsy was healed, "there were certain of the scribes sitting there and reasoning in their heart;" "but God was with HIM." The prayer for a double portion of the master's spirit is granted, and by-and-by the sons of the prophets confess, "The spirit of Elijah doth rest upon Elisha," and they bow down before him and confess, "The situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth; but the water is naught, and the ground barren;" the life is without power, and there are not many conversions to God.

Only once more. When God sent his Son into the world, He was as a Stone cut out of the mountain without hands; born in a manger; educated at Nazareth; a carpenter by trade; despised by the nation, abhorred by the rulers; but He was God's Anointed. The first manifestation of enmity against Him arose from his independence of the sanction of the synagogue, and because He reminded them that God in former days passed by widows and lepers in Israel, and sent Elijah to the widow of Sidon, and, by Elisha, healed Naaman the Syrian.

Must the voice of history cry in vain? Even if the calling of Elijah from the mountain, and Elisha from the field, implied no lack of faithfulness on the part of the sons of the prophets, did they need their sanction and approval? The comets may seem to us irregular bodies; but they do not need the sanction of the stars; all in their diverse orbits, regular or irregular, glorify God—together “singing, as they shine,

The Hand that made us is Divine.”

REV. SHOLTO DOUGLAS IN BOMBAY.

Singularly enough, on the very day that Mr. Somerville came into Bombay, another evangelistic worker, viz., the Rev. C. Sholto Douglas, Vicar of All Saints, Derby, also came amongst us. Mr. Douglas preached and laboured in various ways, chiefly amongst the Church of England people, for the first week or ten days; and after that he too has been labouring among all classes, preaching at the National Church of Scotland, at the Free Church of Scotland, joining Mr. Somerville in one of his meetings for the natives, holding meetings in private houses, and in more public rooms, speaking to the soldiers at Colaba, and at the present time Mr. Douglas is holding special services at Mazagon, which is a very populous district of Bombay, but which has been but poorly supplied with the means of grace, and where pronounced Ritualistic practices have lately been introduced.

And now that Mr. Somerville is gone, and that Mr. Douglas is going in a day or two, we may well look round and take note of the result of their labours in our midst. We thank God that He has sent them to us—that He has given them health and the power to preach. We feel confident that many have been converted to Christ, and brought into the fold. We hear testimony from Rev. Dr. Wilson, and others who come very much into contact with the natives, that they have been immensely stirred and moved, and led to think more seriously than in many instances they ever did before of the Christian faith and doctrine. One who knows them well says that they have never been so aroused before, and certainly if the number who came on the second occasion is any proof of interest awakened on the first, it was very great indeed.

Hon. Sec. United Evangelistic Committee.

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD.—Good tidings reach us of this little town, and the outlying villages. At Chessham, very many have found Christ. The vicar has been preaching in the open air Jesus and the resurrection, and poor people walk miles to hear the truth. A tent is greatly needed, and a suitable man for village work. Information may be obtained either of Mr. Fenell, 191, Edgware-road, London, or of Mr. Foskett, Hemel Hempstead.

WINCHESTER.—The gracious work still continues here. The evangelists' services are held in St. John's Rooms in the afternoon and evening, every Sunday, and are attended by hundreds of eager listeners. Last Sunday evening, John Waite spoke, and that there was great power resting upon the people, was manifested by the number who remained for prayer. The indoor meetings concluded on May 30th, but it is arranged to go out into the highways and byways to preach the gospel during June. We hope before that to pitch a "Gospel Tent" and carry on the evangelical addresses every night for a month or two. It would gladden the hearts of absent Christian friends of Winchester, to see the glorious work which has been going on since the Week of Prayer. The extraordinary quickening of believers, the conversion of sinners, the reclaiming of backsliders, the general eagerness to listen to the simple story of the cross, are all signs that the Lord our Saviour has truly been in our midst. There have been difficulties, hindrances from unexpected quarters, but the enemy has not triumphed. The rooms, etc., cost about £12 per week for two months; and as the erection of the tent will incur further outlay, we should be glad for our friends to help us. WILLIAM D. GRIBBS.

"THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT."

"Search the Scriptures.....they testify of Me."—JOHN v. 39.

Book of holy inspiration;
Oracle of truth divint;
Well of everlasting fulness,
What unmeasured depths are thine!

In the past far distant ages,
Hebrew sires this page unrolled,
Saw, as in a far-off vision,
Christ of whom the prophets told.

Christ, the theme of song prophetic;
Christ, the end of Jewish law;
Antitype of Jewish priesthood;
Christ, whose day the patriarch saw.

Oh! can we, on whom the Dayspring
Shineth full in this our age,
Can we fail to pause and wonder,
As we turn the sacred page?

Oh! shall we, who hold the treasure
In the gospel's broad daylight,
Shall we leave this mine unopened,
And its untold riches slight.

Goodly merchandise unequalled,
Gold, and gems of purest ray,
Here await the prayerful reader;
Let us search them; let us pray.

Illumined by the Holy Spirit,
In the unlocked Scriptures, we Shall new joys be ever finding,
Ever-growing beauties see.

Bless'd he who finds the Saviour
In the Bible's sacred store;
Finding Him, he findeth heaven,
Peace on earth and evermore.

MISSION TO THE WORKING-MEN OF PARIS.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to give a few particulars respecting the opening, on Tuesday, May 25, of a new station (the fourteenth) in the Quartier de la Gare d'Ivry, one of the most populous faubourgs of our city.

The room, containing about two hundred sittings, was filled to overflowing with working-men from the neighbouring factories. It did our hearts good to see those men, with black faces, and in their working clothes, listening with great attention to the blessed tidings of salvation, which for the first time reached their ears. Far from showing any dislike or contempt they heartily clapped their hands at the end of the meeting, and received with thankfulness the Illustrated Almanack which was offered to them at the door. In fact, it was once more proved to us that the working-men of Paris are readier to hear and to receive the gospel than is generally supposed, and that neither popery nor infidelity have a hold upon them strong enough to prevent their being brought to the Saviour, when true love is shown to them. This our English brethren do not lack; and, as a Frenchman, I believe it is one of the strongest causes of their success among us.

An interesting feature in the case of this station is, that its foundation is owed, under God, to the generosity of a Christian lady, of London, who does not desire her name to be mentioned, and who has subscribed a sum sufficient to meet all its expenses for two years.

Other parts of the city claim our care, and we cannot but hear the cry, "Come and help us." From at least five additional districts the call for evangelistic agencies reaches us at this moment. Why should not the example above related be followed by several English Christians, who have received from the Lord both money and love for souls?

SEASIDE SERVICES FOR CHILDREN.—Mr. Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has arranged to visit the following watering places during the present summer, in order to hold open-air services on the sands for the children of the visitors:—Weymouth, July 7 to 17; Scarborough, July 19 to 25; Redcar, Yorkshire, July 26 to 31; Rhyl, North Wales, August 2 to 8; Llandudno, August 9 to 21; Ramsgate, August 23 to 29; Folkestone, August 30 to September 11; Eastbourne, September 12 to 26. All communications respecting these services should be addressed to Mr. T. B. Bishop, Hon. Secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, 71, Thistle-grove, West Brompton, S.W.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

From the Sussex Daily News, and from the report of our own correspondent, we give the following summary of the opening meetings of this Convention:—

The ten days' Convention at Brighton, which has been so much looked forward to in many religious circles, commenced at the early hour of seven o'clock on Saturday morning, the proceedings being opened at that time—as will be the case each day—with a "praise-meeting." Mr. R. Pearsall Smith presided, and about 1000 persons were present. Several hearty hymns of praise were sung during the meeting, and addresses were delivered exhorting to praise and thanksgiving in expectation of blessing and success. In proportion to their faith would be the result. About 70 evangelical pastors from the Continent were present, and were warmly welcomed. Some of them testified to the great spiritual results that had attended Mr. Pearsall Smith's labours in Germany, and elsewhere. A service of song followed, led by the Rev. J. Mountain, of London, in that manner now familiarized to the English public by Mr. Philip Phillips, the American "Singing Pilgrim," and more recently by Mr. Sankey.

Two prayer-meetings were then held simultaneously, followed at half-past eleven by the first "general meeting," Mr. Smith, as usual, presiding. The principal feature of this occasion was an address by the Rev. T. Monod, of Paris, consisting of an exposition and practical application of the leading evangelical doctrines. The Rev. Mr. Sawday, of London, followed with remarks on "The Rest of Faith," which he described as not a rest from conflict, but a rest in confidence that Jesus could and would make his people "more than conquerors."

The first meeting in the afternoon was a Bible-reading and address by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, ladies being specially but not exclusively invited. Mrs. Smith spoke of spiritual health, urging Christians to quit their chronic spiritual invalidism by applying to the Great Physician. At the afternoon general meeting Mr. Pearsall Smith spoke from the passage "Make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lust thereof," instancing as the besetting sins of Christians, which should thus be subdued, unbelief, self-righteousness, pride, an unfor- giving spirit, and evil-speaking. In the evening a meeting was held to welcome the foreign pastors. In his introductory speech Mr. Smith alluded to the great debt that England, in common with the rest of the world, owed to Luther, the German monk, who recalled the attention of the Church to the cardinal doctrine of Scripture, justification by faith. An appropriate allusion was also made to the benefits that England had received through the immigration of the persecuted Huguenots. Some of the French and German pastors then spoke, especially alluding to Mr. Pearsall Smith's successful mission on the Continent. A pastor from Italy warmly invited Mr. Smith to visit that country. Special prayer was then offered for the principal continental nations.

At the later and final meeting for the day, the Rev. T. Monod, of Paris, spoke of the necessity of purity in the Christian life—all sin must be relinquished, and the "temple thoroughly purged."

Mr. Pearsall Smith offered a special prayer for the safety of Mr. and Mrs. Boardman, who were on their way to America.

A telegram was then read from Mr. Moody, who had offered special prayer for the Convention, which he regarded as, perhaps, the most important meeting ever held. Prayer was offered for the success of his mission in London in return, and thus the first day's proceedings were brought to a close, having probably in every respect, certainly in numbers, fully realized the anticipations of the promoters.

On Sunday, about two thousand persons gathered to the seven o'clock prayer-meeting in the Corn Exchange. At half-past nine there was again a large meeting, which closed before the hour of public worship.

At three o'clock, as the Corn Exchange would not contain the crowds at the Bible-readings of Mrs. Pearsall Smith, an overflow-meeting was held in the Dome, which was nearly filled. Mr. S. A. Blackwood gave a most effective address on "Full Consecration."

At four o'clock, Mrs. Pearsall Smith repeated, in the Dome, the address given in the Corn Exchange, and at the same hour a large meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, which was addressed by Rev. Mr. Rappard, of the Missionary College of Basle, Rev. Dr. Mahan, and R. Pearsall Smith.

In the evening, at half-past eight, after the close of the public services of the churches, the Corn Exchange was over-crowded to hear an evangelistic address from Mr. S. A. Blackwood. At the same hour, Mr. R. Pearsall Smith gave an address, first to the unsaved, and then to Christians, from Mark i. 40, the healing of the leper.

Among those at the meeting are hundreds from the various countries on the Continent—France, Germany, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, as well as many from America.

The weather is cool and delightful, and the meetings have been sustained in great quietness, solemnity, and spiritual power.

The programme for to-day (Monday), and indeed for each succeeding day, is of a similar character. A special effort is to be made to reach the young men of the town, and it is hoped that the Rev. H. M. Aitken, Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, Mr. Henry Varley, and others, will address meetings for this purpose. The first will be held on Wednesday evening next, at 8.30 p.m. If the interest should continue unabated, it will doubtless be found necessary occasionally to hold meetings simultaneously in the Dome and Corn Exchange. The extraordinary attendance of yesterday is, perhaps, to be partly attributed to the day being Sunday, when more would be disengaged than at other times; but even on Saturday the resources of the Dome were fully taxed. The weather hitherto, though cold, has been beautifully fine, conducing much, it need hardly be said, to the comfort of visitors.

THE SCRIPTURE-READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Three meetings in aid of this Society have been held during the past week.

The public meeting was held at Exeter Hall on May 28th, and two drawing-room meetings were held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, and at the National Club, respectively. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided at Exeter Hall, and the following gentlemen also took part in the meetings. The Earl of Cavan, S. A. Blackwood, Esq., Captain the Hon. E. Moreton, B.N., G. H. Davis, Esq., LL.D., E. C. Morgan, Esq., T. B. Smithies, Esq., W. Graham, Esq., and General Alexander. Dr. Neligan, of Dublin, the Rev. Samuel Walker, of Bristol, and Captain Kearney White, the Secretary, represented the Society.

Lord Cavan expressed his great pleasure in finding that the object of the Society was not to make men Protestants or Churchmen, but to lead men to Christ. In this, we believe, lies the secret of the success which has attended the Society's operations. Any one who has tried controversy, must own how seldom he has found it successful, at least in the highest sense. Lift up Christ before men, and we have his own word that they shall be drawn to Him. Show a Romanist what God, in his own Word, says of the one High Priest, and it will soon follow, "I want no priest but Jesus."

Mr. Smithies spoke of the present willingness—quite unknown even a few years back—of the Irish Roman Catholics to listen to God's Word. Mr. George Williams considered that the forty-five readers now in the employ of the Society ought to be supported by the Christians of London alone.

At Exeter Hall, Lord Shaftesbury took up a suggestion of Dr. Davies, and urged that the readers should also, to some extent, act as colporteurs, and his Lordship mentioned that he knew a blind Scripture-reader in London, and he thought that this Society might employ such men.

Dr. Neligan at once rose and stated that for some years one of the agents of this Society, who was blind, had been at work in his parish, and he spoke of him in the highest terms.

We would urge upon our readers the timely words of Rev. S. Walker, at one of the meetings, that in these days of such wondrous blessing, when so many of God's people have been strengthened and refreshed, that the deeper love for Christ should be shown by greater devotion to his service. As the Apostle says, "I will show thee my faith by my works."

MESSESS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.
THE OPERA HOUSE, HAYMARKET.

LAST WEEK.

TUESDAY, MAY 25TH.

The requests for prayer were so numerous this morning, that specific mention of them could not be attempted. They numbered altogether 301.

After prayer, and singing "I am coming to the Cross,"

Mr. H. Varley read (from Luke xi.) "The disciples' prayer," as Mr. Moody prefers to term what we usually call "The Lord's Prayer," and the verses that followed. When we pray, we should always have "a good case;" let us go to God for what we want. If we were more definite, and had "the faith of God," of which Christ spoke to Peter, nothing would be impossible. When we know what we want, we can pray and work. Another lesson from this passage is to have our hearts burdened for those who are out of the way. Again, we want to realize that there is "bread enough and to spare" in the Father's house. He thanked Christ for the teaching of the parable of the man who knocked at his friend's door for bread at midnight. It does not convey to our minds any unwillingness on the part of God to answer our prayers, but rather the need of definiteness in our asking.

After a very importunate prayer by Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey sang a hymn, the refrain of which was—

"For you I am praying,
I am praying for you."

The melody is sweet and flowing, and was sung by Mr. Sankey with great tenderness of feeling. He followed with a brief season of prayer. The spirit of prayer was manifestly poured out on the meeting. After several had led the meeting in public petition, Mr. Moody asked all the Christians who wished to be remembered in prayer to rise, whereupon the bulk of those present stood up. Dr. Black prayed for more unreserved consecration and devotion to Christ and his service, and closed the solemn service with the benediction.

The Bible-meeting this afternoon was so densely crowded, that the service was obliged to be commenced about half-an-hour before the appointed time. The galleries, including the grand tier, were filled to overflowing, and the Royal Box was never so full on any previous occasion. The Bishop of Ripon was again present.

Mr. Sankey sang the hymn entitled, "Passing knowledge," of which the following is the first verse:

"It passeth knowledge! that dear love of Thine,
My Jesus! Saviour! yet this soul of mine
Would of that love in all its depth and length,
Its height and breadth, and everlasting strength,
Know more and more."

Mr. Moody then gave an address from the words, "The Scripture cannot be broken" (John x. 35), the substance of which will be found in another column. The service was closed by a touching prayer by Mr. Moody, followed by the hymn, "The Lord will provide," Mr. Sankey drawing special attention to the words in the third verse:—

"No word He hath spoken
Was ever yet broken."

The evening meeting was as large as the capacity of the Opera House would allow. Mr. Moody propounded Pilate's question, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus which is called Christ?" to different classes of his audience. His appeal was solemnly plain and telling, and seemed to produce much self-searching, and, we trust, decision on this all-important matter.

Of the nine o'clock service for women only, we can only say that it was more crowded, if possible, than ever. It almost appals one to think of the tremendous issues of these nightly gatherings to hear the way of salvation sung and spoken. The question perpetually recurs to our mind, "What shall the harvest be?" We tremble to think of the future and eternal history of those who come and listen to the glad tidings of salvation, and yet depart as if they heard not. We wish we could believe there were none who do so. Mr. Sankey was not present at this meeting, to the disappointment, doubtless, of all.

Mr. Moody's exhortation from the story of Rebekah was exceedingly appropriate to the audience. With a holy skill, he showed the analogy between the institution of matrimony and the union to Christ that brings salvation. "Wilt thou go with this man?" was the question he pressed upon his auditors; and surely many of them were not loth to take the Saviour on the spot, "for better and for worse."

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26TH.

The ordinary noon prayer-meeting to-day was relinquished, in order to hold a special service for the blind. There were 1500 of this class present from various parts of London, a large contingent of them coming from Croydon at their own expense. The attendance of the general public was larger than usual at this hour. The Earl of Shaftesbury had a seat on the platform.

Mr. Graham read the requests for prayer, which were exceedingly numerous, and occupied a considerable time in reading, even in their condensed form. Dr. Moon, of Brighton, who has done such good service to all who like himself do not possess the precious boon of eyesight, offered prayer. Then was sung, "I heard the voice of Jesus say," the last verse of which is exceedingly appropriate in any meeting for the blind.

Mr. Moody read Luke iv. 14 verse onwards; and Mr. Sankey followed, with "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," the singing of which was invested with a special interest from the circumstances of the incident on which the hymn is founded.

Mr. Moody then gave a short address on the good news of the gospel as recorded in the passage he had previously read, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me," etc. There was, however, no special reference to the blind portion of his audience.

Dr. Moon followed with a few remarks, of a purport similar to Mr. Moody's address, and gave some interesting cases of conversion.

Mr. Sankey addressed some earnest words of sympathy and encouragement to the blind. He said it seemed to him that though they had not the privilege of their physical eyesight, they might be singing for Jesus a great deal. He alluded to the fact that both in London and Liverpool, a blind lady formed one of the choir, and both these were singing for Jesus in other ways. He subsequently observed, what some one had just told him, that in this country they put out the larks' eyes to make them sing. He then sang "The Ninety-and-nine," and the meeting was concluded with the benediction, pronounced by the Rev. R. C. Billing.

No sooner does the noon meeting disperse, than crowds of eager candidates for a seat at the afternoon gatherings cluster around the doors. There was another crowded house this afternoon, to hear a stirring address from Mr. Moody, on "How long halt ye between two opinions?" He denounced the "border Christianity" of the present day, and showed the folly as well as misery of such a course. Some of his incidents were most touchingly appropriate.

There was so much eagerness to get admission to the seven o'clock evening meeting, that Mr. Moody, early in the service, requested 500 of the Christians to sacrifice their seats, and go to the prayer-meeting, in order to make room for the crowds outside, many of whom he said had come long distances, and had not been to the meetings before. He also desired the Royal Box to be filled, which request was complied with.

In his prayer before the address, Mr. Moody prayed that some one with his heart full of love to Christ might go and speak to the crowds in the street, and that on the side walk some souls might be saved.

Mr. Moody gave his address on "Naaman the Leper," who, he said, was a good type of every sinner, whatever his position in life. He incidentally referred to the Derby races run in the afternoon. There would be many a broken heart, many a dark home, in London to-night. They were already beginning to return from the races, and many a mother would see her boy coming home intoxicated. Yet Christians debated whether or not it was right to go to a race. He would rather cut off his right hand than go to such a hellish place. From the story of Naaman he drew the lessons of obedience, faith, earnestness, and self-renunciation, in the matter of salvation, and pressed them home on the hearts of his hearers. From the return of Naaman to the prophet after his cure, he urged the duty of confessing Christ. There were a great many cowards now-a-days amongst the Christians, he said. If the Christians of London would tell out the story of Christ's love, it would soon be aroused. It is not so much preaching as personal testimony that we want. Speaking of Naaman's return to his family, he told of the joyful sight he witnessed at the Agricultural Hall. A father and mother were outside the hall waiting for their son and daughter to come out from the inquiry-room. The daughter came out first, when she and her mother embraced each other for joy at her salvation. Then the son came out, and saying, "Father, I have taken Christ for my Saviour to-night," they embraced, and wept tears of gladness together. Mr. Moody also related an incident to show how men are often converted in the very way that is repugnant to them. A man in Glasgow was very much opposed to "Moody and Sankey;" he didn't like their style. He happened to be at Inverness when the special services were being held there. We were holding a service (said Mr. Moody) on the banks of the river, and I was speaking on the subject of Naaman, and dwelling on what "he thought," when this man was walking along the river side. He saw the crowd, and not knowing who was speaking, he listened, and was arrested by the word. Conviction came to his heart, and he was there converted by the very instrumentality he had despised.

The inquirers having made their way to the inquiry-room, the meeting was dismissed, and slowly dispersed to make room for the crowds of women who were waiting without.

As on the previous night, the building was filled to overflowing with women at nine o'clock. Mr. Sankey appeared shortly after the commencement of the service, and the disappointment of the previous evening at his absence was brought into strong relief by the loud hum of evident pleasure that pervaded the entire building as he took his now familiar seat. He sang "The Ninety-and-nine" as touchingly and sweetly as ever before, amidst the most perfect stillness. He seldom thrills the hearts of the multitude more deeply than by the triumphant close of the last verse, "Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own."

Mr. Moody's subject being the vital one of "Regeneration," he read from John iii. the story of Christ's interview with Nicodemus, where the new birth is explained by the Great Master Himself. "What shall the harvest be?" was most impressively sung, and one could not help feeling that the question propounded in the hymn was a very pertinent and momentous one.

In terms as plain as language could express it, Mr. Moody proceeded to dilate on Regeneration—what it is not, and what it is. "Three thousand were converted in one day at Pentecost; why should there not be a thousand converted here to-night? I hope all the Christians are praying that the Spirit may fall upon this assembly." By one of those touches of nature that "make the whole world kin," he melted the hearts of his congregation, so that when he addressed his usual appeal for decision at the close, he was cheered by the sight of a ready and large response. It was a supremely solemn moment, and one fraught with the most inexpressible import. Then followed a brief season of prayer, that heightened the effect of Mr. Moody's address, and the general meeting broke up, only to give place to much personal dealing with souls, we doubt not, with blessed and lasting results.

THURSDAY, 27TH.

The attendance at the prayer-meeting increases as the time for its being held here draws to a close. There were many touching requests for prayer, by wives and husbands for each other. Special prayer was asked for the boys at Eton and Harrow. Praise was given for successful services at the Victoria Theatre and Bristol, also for a class that went to the Bow-road Hall, and were all blessed.

"I've found a joy in sorrow" was sung, after which Rev. J. Knaggs, of Stratford, read from John i., the Baptist's testimony concerning Christ, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world"—the effect it produced on some of his disciples who left him to follow Jesus.

Mr. Moody prayed with vehement urgency and power for the continued extension of the work in London, and others followed in similar supplication.

Mr. W. Forbes referred to the baneful effects of the drinking customs of society, and urged Christians to abstain from countenancing them.

Rev. C. B. Sawday related some incidents for the encouragement of young converts, in confessing Christ before their companions.

A man in the audience having asked prayer on behalf of a woman who was a victim to strong drink,

Mr. Moody said there was one thing had been lying heavy on his mind for some days. Next Monday they would have to leave the Opera House and the West-end of London. A great many people had been asking them to have more meetings, but the question was, where could they meet? They could not go into the church; the law would not allow it. Then they could not go into the Dissenting places, because there was such a strong feeling that many of the Church people would not go there. There was no place where they could meet on neutral ground. He wished they had something like Mildmay-park Hall in the west. It was said that London has got no centre; he thought the West-end would be the heart of London and the centre of the world as long as Parliament and Charing-cross Station were where they were. People said it cost so much to get a site. But when a club was wanted, they got a site; when an opera house that would cost many thousands was wanted, they got a site; when a theatre was wanted, a site could be got. If the world wanted anything, they got it. Were there none with sufficient love to Christ to prompt them to build a Hall in the West-end, where a daily prayer-meeting could be held? There was a glorious work going on in the west among the young men, and in a day or two they would have nowhere to go; they would be turned out into the streets. There were wonderful meetings in the Opera House last night; it was enough to make one weep for joy to see the hundreds of young shop-girls inquiring the way of life. If a hall could be had in the West-end, there would be a work of grace going on for twelve months in the year. Look at the money that there was in the West-end. How God's people were spending money on themselves! There was a good deal of wealth represented in the meeting. Let us ask God to give us the money to get a building in the West-end. It was not for his sake he asked; after thirty days he might never visit the West-end again, but it was for the sake of Jesus Christ and of souls. Nothing would better meet the infidelity of the day than for Christians to unite in keeping Christ before the people. Perhaps some one would start them with £20,000. They shook their heads, but what was £20,000? They could not make a better investment than by planting here a fountain that would send a stream of blessing to all the world. It would bring in good returns. He would a great deal rather have his money invested in it than in the Bank of England, or in any railway stock. Better for them to spend it in this way than leave it to their sons and daughters, to make it more easy for them to go down to hell. Let them pray for great things, but if they had got the money, let them not ask God to do what they ought to do; let them draw a cheque themselves.

We have no space to particularize the other meetings of the week, all of which were attended by crowds as large as ever. An unexpected interest was given to the Thursday afternoon meeting by the presence of the Jubilee Singers, who have returned to this country, and to whose mission we have drawn attention in another column. Just at the close of the meeting this afternoon, while the vast audience were bowed in silent prayer, soft strains of music were heard, as if in the distance, coming one scarcely knew whence.

"There are angels hovering round,
To carry the tidings home," was the song that fell on the ears of the wondering assembly, in cadences now soft and low, now swelling into louder tones; and so novel and inexplicable was the circumstance, that many of the audience departed hardly knowing whether the music was human or angelic. It may be said that it was done for effect, and doubtless it was, but the effect was a peculiarly striking and solemnizing one. They were present, and sang "Steal away to Jesus," on Friday afternoon.

At nine o'clock on Friday evening an immense gathering of men was packed into the Opera House. The tickets were at the disposal of the Y.M.C. Association, Aldersgate-street, and they appear to have distributed them among men chiefly of the working-class. At all events, they formed a larger proportion of the audience than usual at these meetings for men.

The opening hymn was "Hold the Fort," and the hearty, decided way in which it was given by the thousands of male voices induced Mr. Sankey to say that he had never heard it sung so well. He sang the last two verses as a solo, and the chorus was taken up by the congregation in a way sufficient to elicit Mr. Sankey's words of commendation.

After Mr. Moody had read part of the third chapter of John, and prayed, Mr. Sankey sang, "The Ninety-and-nine," remarking that it would probably be the last time it was sung in the Opera House. We do not suppose he ever sang it better, and never with, we trust, more success.

By special request, Mr. Moody repeated his address on "Regeneration." He strove to make this initial and essential doctrine of the new birth unmistakably plain to the hearts and minds of the congregation. At the outset of his address, he was somewhat interrupted by a young man just below the platform, who was disposed to question some of his statements, and who, in the result, was removed from the building during the singing of a hymn, amidst rather unseemly demonstrations of hissing and applause. Mr. Moody said he looked upon the circumstance as a cause of weeping rather than applauding, and turned it to good purpose as the foundation of an earnest appeal to his hearers. He proceeded to the conclusion of his address without interruption in the most impressive manner, and with his usual wealth of striking illustration. The oft-repeated scene of numbers rising to their feet to be prayed for encouraged and rejoiced the hearts of every Christian present.

At the noon meeting on Saturday, Mr. Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, presided, and spoke of the interest that was felt in America at the present time in the great religious movement going on in London.

About 3000 children, with, perhaps, 1000 adults besides, came together on Saturday afternoon, when Mr. H. Drummond presided, and gave a delightful address, which was well suited to allure his young audience to happy, loving service for Christ. The Jubilee Singers were present, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Sankey, and charmed old and young with several of their quaint but beautiful songs. One of them spoke briefly in explanation of their mission to Britain, and we give his little address elsewhere. A number of the children stayed to be conversed with, and we trust many of them gave their young hearts to the Saviour to keep and use for his glory.

The closing meeting of the week was not the least interesting. The building was nearly full of men, and the time was chiefly occupied with addresses from the presidents of the New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago Young Men's Christian Associations. We hope to report the meeting at length in our Young Men's Number of next week.

LAST SUNDAY AT THE OPERA HOUSE, HAY-MARKET.

The visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey is rapidly drawing to a close. They have left the North some time since; to-day their labours close in the West, and a week hence they will bid farewell to the East. We hardly know which feeling is the stronger in our mind—gratitude to God for the great things He has wrought by them in all these districts of London, or regret that their most fruitful visit, like all earthly things, will soon terminate as far as this metropolis is concerned. We are glad, however, to have the assurance that, whenever our friends may take leave of London, the fruits of their unwearied labours in our midst will remain and be felt in thousands of hearts and homes while the ages roll on.

As might be expected, the anxiety was great to be present at the closing Sunday services to-day. Morning, afternoon, and night brought together congregations limited only by the size of the building.

Even at the early service the place was packed long before the time, and many had to go away disappointed. Those who got inside were well rewarded for their exertions by hearing Mr. Moody's thrilling address on "Daniel." We can hardly add anything to what has been already said in these pages with respect to the wonderfully real and vivid way in which Mr. Moody presents the life of the "stiff-kneed" prophet who could say "No" at the right time.

There were many ministers present, and we should think these fellow-workers with Mr. Moody must have delivered their forenoon messages to the people with all the greater power and unction for the stimulus they had previously received from his burning and outspoken words.

The afternoon meeting of women was in many respects a wonderful and memorable occasion. The sight from the back of the platform was altogether indescribable. Every possible and some seemingly impossible positions were filled with women of all grades of society, from the humble domestic servant to the lady of rank and fashion. Mr. Moody seemed to feel the import of the occasion, and, if possible, he was more earnest and tender in his tones than usual. His address on the conversion of the dying thief was singularly appropriate, and was delivered with all the energy and fire of his being. From this wonderful story of conversion he brought forth the treasures of divine grace to lost sinners, and pressed home the lessons of conviction, confession, saving faith, and full salvation for the chief of sinners. The effect of his urgent appeals was never more evident than at the close of this address. When he asked all who wished to be prayed for to rise, from platform, area, boxes, and galleries, there arose a great army of anxious souls, most gladdening to behold. The inquiry-rooms were crowded with tearful seekers after salvation, and many were conversed with in the great building. Surely there must have been joy in the presence of the angels of God over many souls returning to their heavenly Father on this bright Sunday afternoon.

There was a noble array of men crowding every nook and corner of the spacious Opera House, to hear Mr. Moody preach the gospel within its walls, for the last time. Our heart throbs faster with feelings of regret, and we involuntarily heave a sigh to think that the sweet sound of "Jesus and his love," shall be heard no more in this place, which has been hallowed by so many precious memories and by the accomplishment of so many triumphs of redeeming love.

The exercises of the evening opened by singing the 51st Hymn, "I love to tell the story," after which, Mr. Shipton, of the Young Men's Christian Association, prayed that the many petitions offered up in this building for all classes of persons might be answered, and that God's power to save should be manifested at this closing meeting.

Mr. Moody then related the origin of the hymn "Hold the Fort," which was sung with great heartiness by the choir, the fine volume of male voices joining in the chorus, with overpowering effect.

Mr. Moody intimated the future arrangements with respect to the work among the young men, after the closing of the Opera House, and bringing his audience to a point, he appealed to all who were prepared to support the work to stand up. A good many did so, and Mr. Moody added that if each one brought a dozen more with him, it would make a good audience.

After more prayer, and singing of the hymn "Free from the Law," Mr. Moody repeated his afternoon's address on the conversion of the thief on the cross. Towards the end he grew so intense and earnest in his language that he seemed scarce to know how to express himself. The closing scenes were so inexpressibly solemn that they can be but feebly and inadequately described. Both speaker and hearers appeared to realize the intense moment of the message and of the occasion, and when hundreds had risen in response to Mr. Moody's appeal, the feeling of solemnity culminated in the prayers offered by Mr. Wanamaker and Mr. Moody himself, for the conversion of all those in the building out of Christ. Mr. Moody addressed the inquirers in a body in the adjoining room; and a prayer-meeting, conducted by Mr. Shipton, brought the last Sunday's services in this fine building to a fitting close. Seeing that it has been for years unused, and will probably remain so for years to come, we cannot help wishing that it could be permanently devoted to the noble purpose which it has served during the weeks that have just passed away.

As intimated by Mr. Moody, the young men's meetings will for this week be held at the Presbyterian Church, Oxenden-street, Haymarket, where Mr. H. Drummond and Mr. Pearse, of the West-end branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, will co-operate in evangelistic work among this class. In default of the Opera House, the general services will be continued in various of the West-end churches. Particulars will be found among the "Forth-coming Meetings."

Several correspondents have suggested to us that many persons throughout the country would like to subscribe small sums towards the expenses of the religious movement in London. We shall be happy to receive and forward to the treasurer any such donations.

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

This interesting band of coloured singers has again visited our shores, and, as will be seen from our reports, they have lost no time in identifying themselves with the great revival movement going on in our midst, as they did on their former visit, when Messrs. Moody and Sankey were labouring in Scotland. They were present at the children's meeting at the Opera House on Saturday last, and very kindly sang several pieces, to the great delight of the large juvenile audience.

One of the male members of the company gave a short address, setting forth the object of their mission to Britain, and we gladly reproduce his remarks, in the hope that they may awaken in the minds of our readers the deep interest which the object of their visit undoubtedly deserves.

Addressing the children, and others present, he said:—"This is no doubt the first time that many of you have ever seen a man of my colour, or heard him speak, and perhaps it may be in the minds of some of the little ones especially, Who are these that are singing to us? I will tell you in a few words who we are, and what the pieces are that we sing to you. We come from America. We belong to a race known there as the African race, and a race that, till within a few years, was held in bondage in that country. Perhaps many of you do not know what that means, being held in bondage. It is something that has been so long unknown, thank God, in the dominion of Great Britain, that many of you do not understand what it means. Well, I will tell you. We were, until within a few years, subject to sale, just as men in this country sell their horses and cattle. And there are those among us who have been sold. It was customary to sell us away from our fathers and mothers, our brothers and sisters. We were not permitted to live as you are, with the ties of the family and the household all knit together and held sacred. On the contrary, these were subject to be rent asunder at any time that those who held us and claimed to be our masters saw fit to do so. There are those among us who were sold from their mothers when but six years old, and who never have been permitted to look on the face of their mothers since that time. None of you have ever been subject to such cruelty.

"Let me say one word about what I have felt since my feet have struck the soil of Great Britain, and since I sat down here. We all have felt very friendly to Great Britain, because during the time we were held as slaves, many of us used to run away. There was no place in the United States where we could stop with safety, but there is a place over there, on the other side of the water, owned by Great Britain, and known as Canada; and when our feet struck that soil, and not till then, could we say that we were free men. Then the hounds were put to flight; they could come no further.

"And now we have come among you again to sing some of the songs that were wrung from our hearts in those days of bondage—some of these songs with which we used to console ourselves when we were in this state of bondage. With our flesh quivering from the lash of the driver's whip, we used to drag ourselves into the cane-brake, and there, with our hearts uplifted to Jesus, the songs we sung came forth as if by inspiration. They were not written as your songs are, but they were given to us, as if by the hand of God Himself. They tell of our sorrow; they tell of the grief which we bore; they tell of the joyous hope we had in the resurrection of Christ, and the joyous hope we had in our own resurrection after death; of the hope we had that after death we should be gathered at the right hand of God. And if we could find consolation under such trials and tribulations, and under such persecutions, may you not find consolation too? Sometimes these hymns told of our sorrow, and sometimes of our joys, and though they are often considered odd, yet we often found consolation in them—nay more, we find consolation in them still.

"We have come among you again to sing these songs, and from the proceeds of our labours we are striving to educate those who are near and dear to us by the ties of nature, those who, but a few years ago, were held as slaves, but now are being clothed with the full habiliments of manhood. We hope and trust that we may be successful in doing this. Will you aid us by your prayers, that success may crown our efforts."

Many who will think of the week of meetings at the Opera House will remember the face of Mr. Sabine Knight, who has given his whole time and strength to assist at these services at the Agricultural Hall, Exeter Hall, and Opera House. He has been thus engaged as his last work in England previous to his leaving to recommence his labours amongst the freedmen in the far South. He must have felt quite at home on the platform on Friday last, as he helped the Jubilee Singers into their seats.

We wish our brother health, success, and the guidance of the Spirit in his coming missionary tour through Newfoundland, Canada, and the United States, to the extreme states on the Gulf of Mexico.

SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SERVICES AT BOW-ROAD HALL.

It being Whitsun week, and most of the day schools closed for holidays, advantage was taken, and "Children's Services" were held in the Bow-road Hall on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, May 18-22.

Major Cole, of Chicago, conducted the services, assisted by the Rev. Thomas Richardson, Rev. W. Benn, Rev. G. T. Butler, and other Christian workers.

Although no printed notices were issued, and the weather very stormy, yet about 2000 children gathered at half-past two on Tuesday, and increased daily up to Saturday.

On Tuesday afternoon Major Cole spoke upon the text, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16), and again on Wednesday. At the close the workers took many of those who wished to stay to be spoken to.

It was very pleasing to find the interest taken by some of those recently brought to the Lord. One, a teacher in a day-school, has been strongly pressed to do something for Jesus, so she brought two girls, and asked the writer to speak to them. One turned out to be a little lamb of Christ's flock, and the other most earnestly desired to be taught how she might have her sins forgiven; and when guided to the crucified Jesus, the dear child accepted of what God had done for her "as a little child," and just as older persons in years are obliged to come down to. The dear child and her day-school teacher went away rejoicing together.

After the 2000 children had gone away, and the last of the little groups composing the after-meeting had left, one little fellow, aged thirteen, came to me, and with his cap under his arm and his eyes brimming over with tears, he said, "Please, sir, I haven't found Christ."

He soon poured out his heart as though it would break, and had he been an aged person I should have fancied he had committed some dreadful crime.

"What is it, my dear boy?"

"Oh, sir, I have a wicked soul; I have been very disobedient to my father and mother."

"Have you asked their forgiveness?"

"Oh yes, sir, they have forgiven me, but I want my sins to be taken away."

I opened to him the mission of Jesus dying for sin, and the dear lad went forth, as he said, "praising Jesus for dying for my sins."

Amongst those spoken to I found some had been impressed in their own Sunday-schools, but many had been to the hall and had heard Mr. Moody, and had felt a desire to give their hearts to God. As several belong to my own Sunday-school, I can the more confidently speak of the wonderful blessing Mr. Moody's services have been even to very young children. If Christian workers had been at hand there would have been many to confirm this testimony.

By Thursday, many of the children went out and worked for Jesus by inviting others. Major Cole spoke upon another of the texts in the hall, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29), and another after-meeting was held; but on account of the great number of children and the small proportion of workers, the work was only partially done.

Large numbers gathered around Major Cole and other friends.

One boy brought another to a friend of mine and said, "Please, sir, will you talk to this boy about Jesus." The boy was immediately spoken to by one of the workers. The writer again met with many anxious cases as the results of the evening meetings.

About 2,000 of the children had each a hymn-book given them, and who can estimate the joy in thousands of homes when the parents hear their children sing the songs of the Lord's people. Mark one little group in a densely-populated street, not far from the hall. Several children have stopped; one has given out the number, and then rest these little songsters while they sing—

"Ring the bells of heaven; there is joy to-day
For a soul returning from the wild.
See the Father meets him out upon the way,
Welcoming His weary wandering child."

The passers-by heard, and more than one worker was encouraged to go on working amongst the young ones. Many a home will ring with the song of praise from the children, where nothing but the sighing of the wife and cries of the drunkard's child have been heard.

On Friday, the weather being fine, there was a still larger gathering, the little ones crowding round the doors by one o'clock, although the service was not till half-past two.

It was delightful to see a child bringing in a cripple in a large perambulator, and place her right under the speaker, and then to hear from a worker from Nottingham, who was present, and had spoken to the dear little invalid, suffering from a diseased hip, that this child had the experience of an aged Christian. Another couple of little workers were busy at the after-meeting, seeking a lady to speak to a girl.

One of them had been blessed at the first meeting, held for females only, and had since brought her brother, who also was saved, but her younger sister would not go to the hall. She then told her teacher, who sent another little worker, who persuaded the child to attend this service, and now these are seeking the teacher with this third one, whom they wished to be saved. Their anxiety was rewarded, for they not only found the teacher, but the dear little opponent was made happy in Jesus. This is also a case in my own Sunday-school.

If we could occupy your columns, we could call other workers to testify to the fields of young ones white unto the harvest. The fewness of the workers has immediate fruits. One teacher of an important day-school, asked and obtained the approval of his Rector, to commence a weekly children's service during summer, and a special children's mission has been determined on for my own parish immediately the work in the Bow-road Hall ceases.

A class for elder boys who have been brought to Christ recently, belonging to the Sunday-school, has been commenced by the superintendent, and a "Samuel's band" formed of little workers for Jesus, all of whom will do something for others.

Will not every Sunday-school teacher who reads this become a soul-winner, by asking each child singly "Have you given your heart to God?" It has been in the providence of God that "little Samuel" was the international lesson for Sunday, May 23, thus following upon these blessed gatherings of the children.

On Saturday the attendance amounted to 4500, and the meeting was conducted again by Major Cole, the text being Isa. liii. 2, "For He shall grow up before him as a tender plant." This was illustrated by a plant, and made all the more interesting from the announcement that each child would be presented with a plant at the close of the meeting. This gift, so very acceptable to every child, enabled the speaker to open up the grace of God in giving his Son.

It was a delightful sight to see these 4,500 young ones, each carrying a plant to many a dark home, and many of the passers inquired how it was that every child seemed to be carrying a plant—some had geraniums, others fuchsias. Major Cole announced that he would organize a Daniel's Band next Saturday at three o'clock, and special prayer is asked that these children's services may prove in each young heart the groundwork of much future effort, to the blessing of generations to come in East London.

Never will the efforts of Messrs. Moody and Sankey and their co-workers from Chicago be forgotten.

THOMAS RICHARDSON,

Vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney.

Major Cole, of Chicago, writes as follows in connection with these meetings:—

"The children's meeting in Bow-road Hall has increased to such magnitude, that there were between eight and nine thousand at our last meeting, Saturday, 29th ult. May I ask your readers, in the name of Jesus, for their earnest prayers in behalf of the children of London, and that the Holy Spirit may direct in this work. Meetings this week are as follows:—South side, Victoria Theatre, Friday, six p.m.; east side, Bow-road Hall, Saturday, at three p.m.

"God heard the cry of little Ishmael (just one small lad) in the wilderness, and gave him water. Surely He will hear the cry of thousands of children in London as they cry for the water of life."

INTERNAL EVIDENCE OF THE TRUTH OF SCRIPTURE.

The substance of an Address by Mr. Moody at the Opera House on the afternoon of Tuesday week.

Mr. Moody preached from the text, "The Scripture cannot be broken" (John x. 35). He began by saying that he had been constantly asked how he knew the Scriptures to be true, and he wished this afternoon to show why and how he believed that the Word of God was true, from several passages of Scripture which he would adduce as instances. If London could be brought to believe this, he thought there would not be so many persons careless and indifferent about eternal things as there now were, and men would lead a very different life from what they now did.

We frequently see in the Bible the expression, "This was done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled;" and our blessed Lord Himself constantly quoted the Scriptures to show that they were fulfilled. We read that "the way of transgressors is hard." Did not the libertine and others find this to be so? We also read, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Is that true? We read that God told Abraham that he would make his name great. Is not that true? We read, "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession;" and if you turn to Exod. i. 12, you will read, "But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew." Then, again, although we read in verse 22 of the same chapter, that "Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river," yet do we not know how the little boy who was to be the deliverer of God's people was sent right into Pharaoh's palace itself? Mark, my friends, that whenever we read in the Bible as to anything, "Thus saith the Lord," the very thing said will be fulfilled with unerring certainty, and I wish you to notice this particularly, because we are living in a day when nothing is believed, in a day of infidelity and scepticism.

Mark also that if the Bible teaches us any one thing more than another, it is this, that God first warns before He punishes. Accordingly He warned Eli, as we read in 1 Sam. ii. 84, as to his two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, "In one day they shall die, both of them," and twenty years afterwards, as we read in chap. iv. 11, "the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain." So again we read in 1 Kings xxii. 19, that the word of God came unto Elijah to go down to meet Ahab in the vineyard of Naboth, and to say unto him, "Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine;" and we find in chap. xxii. 35, that this was fulfilled "according unto the word of the Lord which He spake." And so, my friends, if God says that the wicked shall perish, believe God, that what He has said will surely come to pass. Some time ago I was reading Jer. xxxiii. 17, and I could not understand how it was said that "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel." On reading the Bible through carefully, however, I found how wonderfully God preserved that line.

Many wise men now-a-days believed the New Testament, but not the Old. But if we turn to Luke xxiv. 25, 27, we find that our Lord thus reproved the two disciples who were going to Emmaus, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken..... And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." And so also in verses 44 and 45, we read, "And He said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." Oh! that God may open the understanding of all here this afternoon, and that every heart may be brought to feel and to know that the Scriptures cannot be broken.

But to return to Jer. xxxiii. 17, I went through the books of Moses, and of the prophets, and of the psalms, and I was fully persuaded in my mind that the Scripture was true. In the first place, look at 2 Kings xi. 2, and see how Joash was stolen from among the king's sons that were slain and hidden, and how at the end of six years he was brought out and took the throne. Then again, we read in Gen. xlix. 10, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come;" and accordingly we find that the sceptre did not depart from Judah until nine years after Christ was born. Turn to Isa. vii. 14, and is it not true that Christ was born of a virgin? Look also at the fulfilment of the prophecy in Micah v. 2, relative to the birth of the Saviour in Bethlehem; and of the prophecy in Jer. xxxi. 15, about the slaying of the children. Also at the prophecy in Isa. xlii. 19, as to where the ministry of our Lord was to begin, "I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert;" for did not the forerunner come preaching in the wilderness of Judea? See also how the prophecy in Isa. ix. 1, 2, was fulfilled, seven hundred years afterwards, in Matt. iv. 13-16. Also, how the prophecy in Zech. ix. 9, was fulfilled in Matt. xxi. 1-5; Jesus had walked into Jerusalem over and over again; but He rode into it once, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled to the letter. Look again at the fulfilment of the prophecy in Isa. xxxv. 5; for is it not true that no one who was blind ever received his sight until Christ came?

That was the way in which John the Baptist was assured that Jesus was the Messiah, as we read in Matt. xi. 4, 5. Look them at the fulfilment of Psa. xli. 9, in the betrayal of Judas; at the fulfilment of Zech. xi. 12, 13, as to the price (thirty pieces of silver) for which our Saviour was sold; and of verse 13, as to what was done with the money; of Micah v. i, as to how our Lord was smitten upon the cheek; of Isa. lii. 14, as to his visage being marred more than any man; Isa. i. 6, of his being spitted upon; Psa. xxii. 16, of his hands and feet having been pierced; Psa. lxxix. 21, of gall mixed with vinegar being given Him to drink; Psa. xxii. 18, of lots being cast upon his vesture;

Psa. xxxiv. 20, as fulfilled in John xix. 36; Isa. liii. 9, of his being buried with the rich. Did He not tell his disciples that He would rise again, and is not the resurrection of Christ the glory of the Church? Did He not tell Peter of his denial? Did He not say that He would send the Holy Ghost? Did not He warn the Jews of the destruction of Jerusalem? Did He not say how the Jews were to be scattered for rejecting their King? Again, in Hosea iii. 4, we read, "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice," etc. Is not that true? Let us look around us for an answer. Why, it seems to me that God's dealing with the Jews ought alone to settle the question of the truth of God's Word for ever! The following verse goes on to say: "Afterwards shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Yes, blessed be God, there is a glorious day coming for the Jews.

But it would take all day and all night to prove the truth of God's Word. Let me, however, say, in closing, that if the word of God is true, how terrible it must be for those who despise or neglect it, and do not believe. "He that believeth not shall be damned." Oh, that we might give up trifling with the word of God, and let us, when we read, "Thus saith the Lord," bow to it, and feel that his word must come to pass. I wish I could have dwelt for a time upon Christ's second coming. Yes, my friends, it is perfectly true that Christ is coming to this world a second time, and God has told us in his holy Word to keep our lamps burning and our loins girded, so as to be continually watching and waiting for the return of our Lord from heaven. If there is any one who desires to be saved to-day, let him take God at his word and come and be saved to-day.

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK IN THE EAST-END.

BY EDWIN H. KERWIN.

A man giving testimony one night said, "I have been a poor, drunken, debauched fellow, caring for nothing nor nobody. I came to hear Mr. Moody—why, I don't know; the words went home to my soul. I went home and, to my wife's great surprise, I said, 'We've got a Bible, haven't we?' 'Yes,' she replied. 'Well,' says I, 'get it.' So she got it down and blew the dust off, and I said, 'Now open it at John iii., last verse, and read.' She read it, 'He that believeth, etc.' Now I said, 'If there is any truth in that let's have it; I mean to,' and ever since, I have been happy. Whether I have eternal life or not, I know this much, I am now a changed man, for I have this night put into my wife's hand one golden sovereign, whereas I used to put only ten shillings. I now want to live to God and for his glory."

An infidel young man, very intelligent, had been a teacher in a Jewish family. He had been led into his sceptical notions by an Oxford man, a friend of his. A few evenings ago, he went into the Bow-road Hall simply out of curiosity to hear Mr. Moody, and after the address, which struck him to the heart, Mr. Moody asked all who wished to be Christians to stand up. He could not resist the invitation, and stood up, and from that time till now, he said, "Thank God I have been as happy as I could be."

A young man one evening said, "I have been in a surpliced choir. I always had a liking for church, and thought I was pretty right, but I was comfortably going down to hell. A little brother, only eight years of age, wrote to me about my eternal welfare, and it made me very miserable. I came to the Bow-road Hall and heard Mr. Moody, and somehow or other he has got such a way of putting things, that I can't make out how any one can resist the gospel and the mighty power God gives him; it settled the question for me, and, as a proof of the change, I know that I hate the things which I once loved, and whereas it used to be 'Not for Joe, etc., etc., it's now 'Tell me the Old Old Story.'"

Another said, "For years past I have been an infidel, and until three weeks ago I did not believe in a God, devil, or a hereafter. Religion, I thought, was simply an idea. I wanted to be an actor, and my ambition was to get a name on the stage. I joined a club for the purpose of learning, and worked very hard. When I went up for my examination they rejected me. I was so disgusted with the treatment I received, that I resolved to have nothing more to do with the world. I heard of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and sneered and jeered at them. One night I thought I would go and hear them, and heard Mr. Aitken, and everything he said went home to my heart, and from then to the present time I have experienced an inward joy which increases every day, thank God."

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING.

CLOSING MEETING AT THE HAYMARKET.

The curtain fell on the services in the Opera House to-day. For the last time (the first time at the prayer-meeting) the house was crammed from floor to roof, and the proceedings were full of the deepest interest.

The final request, read by Mr. Graham, was a fervent one for the Queen, a request that came appropriately just after her birthday, and one that, we are sure, will be complied with by every praying Christian in the land.

After public petition Mr. Moody read the five closing psalms, which are so many invocations to everything to praise the Lord, and gave a short address on Praise. Let us look, he said, on the bright side of things. When we look back to the past, how much we have to praise God for. Let the wrinkles be put out of our brows for a little as we recall the goodness of God. In commenting on the psalmist's command to praise God with the timbrel and the dance, he said, "If you dance for the glory of God, and make it part of your worship, as before the Lord, go on and dance. But I believe," he added, "that themen used to dance alone." A revived church had always been a singing church. So it was in the days of Wesley and Whitefield, and so it should be now. If Christians would praise God continually, and, like the psalmist, 'sing aloud on their bed,' London would be awakened pretty quick. We want to fill London with a new song, and send the music of it into the dark alleys and lanes, and into the homes of the people. If we praise God here, then, like the psalmist, we can lay down our harp and go up on high where we would get a better one.

Mr. Sankey contrasted the present meeting with the first prayer-meeting they held at York, shortly after they landed in this country, at which there were four persons present, and afterwards sang the really beautiful new hymn, "I'm praying for you." The choir assisted in the chorus, and at the last verse the audience joined in with fine effect.

Rev. Newman Hall gave a short address, still on "Praise," which was indeed the keynote of the meeting throughout. Among the causes for thanksgiving he recited, were the union of England and America that had been strengthened by this movement, the union of denominations and the sinking of sectarian differences that had characterized the meetings, and the union of hearts in the bonds of Christian love. He related some beautiful incidents illustrative of the value of a spirit of praise, and concluded with earnest prayer, making special reference to the Queen and the kindred nations of England and America.

A few verses of "The home over there" had been sung.

Rev. C. D. Marston read part of Micah v. He dwelt briefly on the diversity of gifts in the Christian Church, and urged that all should consecrate whatever gift or talent they possessed to the service and glory of the common Master.

Mr. Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, followed in the same strain, and spoke of the volume of prayer that was daily ascending in America for the work in London.

Mr. Moody wished the 98th hymn, "God loved the world of sinners lost" sung once more in the building, and it was accordingly sung. Mr. Sankey remarking that this theme would give us occupation in heaven.

Mr. Paton gave some very cheering accounts of Rev. W. Taylor's work in Bristol. Hundreds had been brought to seek Christ, and a large number had found peace in believing. Something like sixty churches and chapels had been affected by the movement in Bristol.

Mr. Moody then gave a short closing address. While Mr. Sankey was speaking of the first prayer-meeting, his mind had been going back over the twenty-three months during which they had laboured in this country. In all that time they had only had four or five nights of rain, which in England was something wonderful. The Lord had sent them just the right kind of weather. There had not been a single accident, which was great cause for thankfulness. They had heard a good deal of people going mad, but they had not seen any of them. Then there had been wonderful displays of Divine power. Those who were at the meetings yesterday could testify to that. They had come to London with trembling; but he was obliged to say that last week was the best week of his life. There were as many inquirers as they could take care of, and sometimes more. Everything, in short, had conducted to their encouragement. The unity existing amongst the ministers had been most wonderful, and was matter for great praise to God to-day. Then there had been remarkable answers to prayer, as many of them could bear witness. Mr. Moody specified some of these, and also told of two brothers telegraphing to their brother 500 miles away to come to London, with the single desire that he might be brought to the Saviour. Their faith and labour had been rewarded. A gentleman, he said, had also come all the way from India in order that his family should attend the meetings.

Mr. Moody, in conclusion, urged the Christians not to be satisfied with the blessings that had been received, but to ask God for greater things still. He then requested special prayer for the young men's meetings, for the work in the East-end, for the meetings at Victoria Theatre and Midway Park, and for the Brighton Convention. He wished them all to be like the Scotchman who said he had been in the work for some weeks, but now the work had got into him.

Mr. Moody offered earnest prayer, and with the singing of the hymn, "There's a land that is fairer than day," the doxology, and the benediction, the successful labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the Opera House were brought to a close. No one who has been privileged to take the least share in the work will ever be able to think of it but with feelings of the deepest gratitude and thankfulness.

VICTORIA THEATRE.

The meetings throughout the past week have been full of interest and encouragement. Dr. Black, of Inverness, conducted the services up till Friday, and much blessing manifestly followed his earnest and practical application of the truth. Lord Cavan preached on Saturday evening. Sunday was a day of rejoicing to God's children for successful services conducted by our American visitors, the Hon. J. V. Farwell, of Chicago, and Hon. W. E. Dodge, jun., of New York. There were numbers of inquirers, and the Lord was present to save. This week the meetings will be conducted by Major Cole, of Chicago, each evening up to Friday, at eight o'clock. A children's service will be held on Friday, at six o'clock. The young men's meetings will take place in a building close by, the use of which has been granted by a neighbouring clergyman.

DON'T FORSAKE OLD FRIENDS.

And don't neglect old servants. From every quarter we receive the complaints, long and patiently withheld, of the superintendents of the various Missions in London, many of them working unnoticed and unknown, with most self-denying perseverance, but sadly suffering now for want of funds. It certainly is not the will of God that, in blessing London so mightily by our beloved American brethren, other work should be forgotten. How is the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to be conserved and continued, except by those faithful ones who were in the field before, and who will remain after these brethren have left? Nothing could be more painful and disappointing to our American friends than that those who are to carry on the work should suffer by the diminution of interest, either personal or pecuniary, in the varied Missions to which London owes so much. Therefore we are sure our readers will bear with us in earnestly reminding them of their old friends.

THE KOORKOOS OF CENTRAL INDIA.—During the past season God has enabled me to preach the gospel, through an interpreter, among this race of Indian aborigines. As a result, God has given conversions in three different sections of their country. I have a deep conviction that another missionary is needed to work among this people. May I ask that friends will pray God to speedily send some one fitted by God to work among these hillmen of Central India? One is needed who will live among the Koorkoos, learn their language, reduce it to writing, translate the Scriptures, and prepare other books for their use. The Deputy Commissioner of the Ellichpoor district has granted a place for building a house about fifteen miles from Ellichpoor. A Koerkeo village is near the locality, and some of its men have been converted. We desire our work to be evangelistic, and in which a brother from any of the evangelical denominations may engage.

THE NEW PRESBYTERIAN MISSION TO AFRICA.

BY MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

On Friday week, there sailed from our shores the little band who go to found LIVINGSTONIA, the projected missionary and anti-slavery settlement on the southern shores of Lake Nyassa, Africa. In order that the warm sympathy and earnest prayers of all your readers may follow this party, allow me to mention a few particulars regarding them and the sphere to which they have devoted their lives.

They go to carry, with God's help, light and liberty to those dark and desolate regions of East Africa, which are in danger of being depopulated by the cruel slave-trade; to the poor, helpless, ignorant negro tribes, whose only idea of religion is the Mohammedanism of the heartless Arab slavers who invade their country, burn their villages, and steal them and their children. So terribly has the scourge of slavery fallen on these simple pastoral people, that a district four or five hundred miles deep, inland from the eastern shore of Africa, has been almost depopulated within the memory of living men. Traces of recent villages and remnants of cultivation prove this whole region to have been even lately well-peopled and prosperous, but it has long been the slave-trader's hunting-ground; now it is left desolate, and he must penetrate 400 miles inland to find victims enough to satisfy his cruel greed of gain. It is this fact which adds so awfully to the sufferings of the slave-gangs. Livingstone found the roads strewn with the dead bodies of those who had fallen on the dreadful march to the coast. "The wayside stunk with corpses;" out of one caravan of 300, "one hundred were left murdered on the bloody track." His deliberate conviction was, that not one in five, and in some cases not one in ten, of the captives survived the sufferings of this terrible journey, and yet about 100,000 slaves were shipped from Kilwa in the course of five years! The wanton sacrifice of human life involved in the trade is almost too painful to contemplate.

It fosters, besides, incessant wars between neighbouring tribes, destroys all mutual confidence, and effectually prevents all improvement.

Now heathenism has miseries enough of its own. When a people have to endure the added miseries of exposure to the diabolical cruelties of slave-hunters, their lot is pitiable indeed. It was this combination of woes that moved so deeply the Christian compassion of the great Livingstone, and led him to cry across the ocean, "Haste to the rescue!" His death added a solemn weight to his appeals to his countrymen, and nothing could be more fitting than that this new effort should be associated with his name.

The Mission goes forth under the auspices of the Free Church of Scotland and the Reformed Presbyterian Church; the other Presbyterian churches co-operating to a certain extent, and heartily sympathizing with the movement. It is a pioneer Mission which will, it is hoped, open the way for "more to follow." Its plans have been laid with much counsel and wisdom, and great care has been taken to provide against the difficulties which experience foresees. It is to be industrial and educational as well as evangelistic, and is to teach not only the truths of the gospel, but the arts of civilized life to the natives. A healthy locality in the highlands, at the southern extremity of Lake Nyassa, has been selected for the Mission station, which will, it is hoped, soon grow into a town, and some day into a city, which shall be a "city of refuge" for many. A small steam vessel, suitable for the navigation of the lake, has been built here in London, constructed in such a way that she can be taken to pieces for convenience of carriage. Mr. Young, B.N., who conducted the search expedition for Livingstone, a thoroughly Christian man, full of judgment, tact, experience, and practical wisdom, has obtained from the Admiralty leave of absence for two years, in order that he may conduct the party to their destination and see them fairly settled. The Mission consists, we believe, of eight or nine persons, among whom are a medical missionary, a schoolmaster, and several artisans. Mr. A. Biddle, who has been for some time with us here in the EAST-END TRAINING INSTITUTE, accompanies the party as an agriculturist, having had some experience on his father's farm in Scotland. The veteran Missionary Dr. Duff, the fire of whose zeal is in no wise cooled by advancing years, came up to give his parting counsels and directions to the little band; and they are gone! They are now on the waters, feeling the keen pain of separation from home and loved ones, and the sense of weakness which must needs come over wise men when they attempt a hard and perilous task. Let us pray for them, that they may be comforted, strengthened, preserved, and guided, and above all prospered in the work they have undertaken. "If we ask anything according to His will, He heareth us," and "we have the petition that we desired of Him."

FAREWELL MEETINGS TO THE CREWS OF THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Farewell teas to the crews belonging to the "Alert," "Discovery," and "Valorous," were held at Portsea and Gosport last week. Miss Weston presided at the former, Mr. Cook at Gosport; and Mr. Dowkontt, of Portsmouth, was present at both. Each of the men was presented with a New Testament, in a waterproof case, a lithographed letter, and a copy of "The Sailors' Text-book." The ships also carry with them a very fair library, collected from various friends by Miss Weston, Mr. Dowkontt, and others.

In the course of Miss Weston's address, she advised the temperance men to keep together, and read an extract of a letter from Dr. Parkes, of Netley Hospital, who said, "As a matter of individual opinion, were I going on the Arctic Expedition, I should, on the faith of the evidence before me, entirely abstain from alcohol; but, at the same time, I should be extremely interested to see all round how the question worked. If there are any men going in the expedition who take a large quantity, only one result can be anticipated, viz., that they will break down; but the question is, how will it fare with some of those who take only a small quantity."

Mr. Dowkontt adds: "What a matter for rejoicing that, on board of each of these vessels, there are bands of two or three of the Lord's people—men who are ready to do as Paul did when on his way to Rome, place the foot down firmly on the deck of the vessel, and say, 'I fear God,' and show the truth of the same by their consistent lives. Several out of each crew are total abstainers. Will not the Lord's people pray for a great blessing upon these dear men? Some are going to act as missionaries; for, by the kindness of Mr. Harrison Penney, of Darlington, they will have in their possession some tracts, etc., in the language spoken in the North."

MISSIONARY SHIP TO THE MORAVIANS.

On the 25th ult., the launch of the new Moravian missionary vessel, for use on the Mosquito coast of Central America, took place in the yard of her builders, Messrs. A. Dyer and Son, of Shoreham and London. The vessel was called "The Herald," a convenient and very appropriate name for a ship whose calling it is to assist in heralding the glad tidings in the dark homes of the heathen. The launch was most successfully accomplished, and the meeting which followed was very pleasant and truly edifying. God was praised for all the success He has granted to the labours of his faithful witnesses, and for having caused the wreck of the missionary vessels on the Mosquito coast a year ago to turn out rather to the furtherance of the gospel, by exciting a wide-spread sympathy and prayerful interest in our work. The cost of delivering the vessel in very complete condition, well built and well fitted, on the distant coast, will be about £1200, of which one-half has been received from friends in England, the rest from America, the continent of Europe, the negroes in the West Indies, and the Christian aborigines in Australia. The vessel is a small schooner of forty tons, fifty feet long, fourteen feet wide, with a comfortable cabin. In a few days she will set out on her voyage across the Atlantic, and will, no doubt, be surrounded, as with a bright cloud, by the prayers of many of God's people. H. E. S.

DERBY THEATRE.—We are now in the fifteenth week of Mr. Henry Holloway's evangelistic services, in which from one to two hundred have professed to find spiritual blessing. Every Sunday evening our hall, capable of holding 700, is full, and last evening over a dozen were anxiously seeking the Saviour. G. W.

ANTWERP.—The Rev. Edward Matthews, sailors' chaplain, writes that the visits of Lord Radstock and Mr. E. Pearall Smith have been productive of much blessing, and the people of Antwerp hope for a repetition of these visits. But such an event would necessitate larger accommodation, as many are unable to get in, even at ordinary services. The writer deems it not the best use of time to go about seeking help for building purposes, and begs that God's people will remember the sailors of Antwerp.

MISSION WORK IN CLERKENWELL.

Very few labourers in the Lord's vineyard are permitted to reap so abundantly and quickly the fruits of their sowing as some are now doing, and it may help to cheer the hearts of many hidden workers to be reminded of the promise, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." One or two fulfilments of the promise which have recently comforted our hearts, we would like others to know of.

For some years before his death, which occurred a few months back, we had been visiting a man named John Hyatt, but better known as "Old Jacky," one of the few remaining followers of Johanna Southcote. We had pleaded often and earnestly with him to accept salvation through Jesus, but all our words seemed to be thrown away. He was well read in the Bible, giving chapter and verse, and years gone by in old Smithfield Market, and more recently on Clerkenwell Green, advocated and defended this superstition with blind zeal, energy, and perseverance. He had a great love for talking, so much so that if he woke up in the night, he used to attack an imaginary opponent, to the great grief of his wife, who used to have to get up, dress herself and sit on the stairs till he had gone to sleep. He used to come to the meeting not so often as he liked, because of a severe cough. It used to be very difficult to get away from him when visiting him. He always allowed, much to the joy of his Christian wife, that the missionary had the best of him in nine points out of ten. He gave him plainly God's truth, backed up by his wife, and got from him Johanna's portrait, which he used to hang up at the foot of his bed, so that he might see it the last thing at night, and the first in the morning. Just two weeks before he died, he was confined to his bed, and in that position gave more heed to the truth. The week before he died he said to the missionary, "The truth has prevailed over my prejudice, and banished for ever my superstition; I am dead beat, quite done over." The day before he died he seemed like a child, so teachable, hearing and asking questions. The day he died he said to his wife, "I have had a lot of work to do to-day, not by me, it is true, but done for me by Jesus—Jesus, not Johanna." One hour before he died he sat in the arm-chair with his grandson on his knee, the two singing, "Safe in the arms of Jesus." The child, looking into the face of the dying man, said, "Is you safe in the arms of Jesus." "Ah, bless his name, and I can't get out," he said, "my dear." Then they went on singing about half an hour, when he said to his wife, "I feel tired, I will go to bed and hope God will give me rest." Ten minutes afterwards his spirit departed. "They that believe do enter into rest."

Not long afterwards his wife followed him, her dying hours being greatly cheered by the visitor connected with the House-to-House Visitation.

Seven years ago a young soldier attended a gospel service with his father. At the close of the meeting he was spoken to and begged to decide for Christ, but left, seeming quite unimpressed. A few weeks ago he re-appeared at one of the meetings, to tell us that those words had never been forgotten, though he had sought to drown them in drink and sinful pleasures until he was dismissed the army for misconduct. Quite recently he had been led to the Saviour after hearing an address by Bendigo. GEO. SOLTAU.

CARLISLE.—Our friends Messrs. Dunn and Weeks were joined on Tuesday, May 18, by Mr. Hill, from Scotland. The meetings continue steadily to increase in interest and power. On Sunday, the 23rd, two very large open-air meetings were held. At the Victoria Hall, in the evening, about eighteen hundred were present, fully one-third of which number remained to the inquiry-meeting. Mr. Hill says he has "not seen such a sight of reaping for weeks." All classes are now being reached. Scores of most deeply-interesting cases of conversion might be told, did space permit, but we know the names of such are written in heaven. J. N. CABE.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.—Since writing to THE CHRISTIAN of April 15, about a hundred and sixty have applied for sample packets of books and tracts, many expressing great satisfaction in the selection, and ordering large quantities. I have not been able to write in reply to the many who have kindly sent specimen copies, but wish to take this opportunity of thanking all such. I shall be glad to continue to send out the shilling sample packets to any who apply. JAMES N. CABE.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

All eyes are upon London. The blessed wave of life, that is floating so many quickened souls out from the putrid ruins of Babylon the great, is hailed with gladness and joy, and the work of God is borne up to the throne of grace daily, and, I may say, hourly, not only in our mid-day prayer-meeting, but by individual Christians, some sorely afflicted in body, others actively engaged in the vineyard of the Lord. While we are instrumental in "asking of the Lord-rain, in the time of the latter rain, drawing down copious showers upon the tender grass" (Zech. x. 1), and while we are attentively watching the bright, transfiguring cloud, lingering over London and the South, we have much, very much, for which we ought to be, and are, profoundly grateful to our blessed God in Christ. The noon-day prayer-meeting, established on Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit, still draws a few of the Lord's people to invoke blessing upon his own work; frequent meetings are held by young converts in the lanes and alleys of the town. But the great work in which the Spirit of God takes precedence is outside, in the neighbouring villages, hamlets, farm-steadings, and cottages.

A most valuable association has been for some time in existence in Berwick, known as the Young Men's Evangelistic Association. Every Monday a goodly number of young men, chiefly young converts, assemble for the study of God's own Word, after which all the places on the list to be visited, and in which meetings are held, are read over one by one; and two young evangelists give in their names as those who will attend for the week. In some instances, young Joshuas and Calebs, flushed with holy zeal, take outside places, not mentioned in the list; and the amount of blessing on all hands is marvellous in our eyes.

On Friday I attended a cottage-meeting in the country. The room was crammed. Many who, a week or two previously, had received the blessing, were singing in exalted strains, with happy, shining faces, "the new song;" and those who had been convicted a week or two before were loosed, and let go.

On the following Sunday I walked out to a village, the schoolroom in which was kindly placed at the disposal of the Association by the lord of the manor, and the minister of the district. There many who had received the blessing at other places were prominently conspicuous, singing the hymns, and testifying to the glory of God's grace in the full, and complete, and free salvation of God of poor, vile sinners, some of them through and through lepers, whose pitiful sigh and dolorous wail, "Unclean, unclean!" formed the burden of the cry which caught the open ear of the compassionate Saviour, who came to seek and to save the lost. Surely there never were such times.

A week or two ago, I and another brother visited an island on the coast. At low tide the sands are dry, and for three miles, without shoes or stockings, we commenced and finished our partial "plodge." In the evening we held a service. The next morning, before leaving, as we went out, an old man came up, with his hand above his eyes. He said, "I canna see ye, but I ken yer voice. I'm seventy-four years old. I've been thinking all the night about what yer said about my sins. I never heard it like yon before. I see we have just to leave our sins with Jesus." And he appeared quite joyful and happy. The portion read was Isa. liii.; the text from John xix. 30, "It is finished."

A Bible-class, held by an invalid, has been much blessed to young men and young women, and has contributed a full quota to the Evangelistic Association. W. S.

Palace-green, Berwick-on-Tweed.

WORK IN BRISTOL.—Much blessing is still resting upon the services in the Colston Hall. Last week there was a series of Bible-readings in the afternoon at half-past three, in the lesser hall. Most of these were on the subject of "Testimony, or Personal Witnessing for Christ, as the result of an experimental realization of his grace." This duty was clearly explained, and most forcibly urged. The last reading was on the "Prophetic Gift," as foretold in the prophecy of Joel, and as intended for all Christians; not the power of predicting future events, but of speaking for Christ by the unction of the Holy Ghost. The house-to-house visitation is progressing. Much good has been done in this way. Men and women are working with a will, and, I trust, will not cease till every house in the city is visited. Sunday was a blessed day; great crowds at the hall; and many inquirers. F. MASON, Wesleyan Minister.

THE ALDERSHOT MISSION AND ITS BRANCHES.

The report of this Mission and its branches is just issued by Miss Daniell, and it is impossible to read even so slight a sketch without heartfelt gratitude to God for the blessing which He has bestowed.

This year the tone of the report is somewhat varied by the prominent place assigned to letters from soldiers and their wives. The most interesting of these is one received from America. The seed dropped four years before into a soldier's heart had sprung up, and he wrote to tell her that the book she had given had been used of God to complete the work which her words had begun. With remarkable clearness he traces the progress of grace in his soul, laying bare the false hopes from which he was slowly driven, until, in his own words, "I did come to Him just as I am, and can now say, If the trumpet should sound, and the Son of Man come again, I am ready to meet Him, and rejoice at his coming."

Our readers would find it well worth their while to send for a copy of the report, were it only to read this most touching letter. It is pleasant to see, from reference to those mentioned in former reports, that the often-repeated question, "Does the work last?" can be met. All the world over are faithful hearts "waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," who first found Him precious in the Mission-hall, or one of the branch Homes.

One young Highlander tells how, as he lay fever-stricken, under the burning sun of Ashanti, he could still listen to that still small voice, "Fear not, I am thy God; I will never leave thee nor forsake thee!" "Dear friend," he adds, "though I have left that death-stricken land, my heart yearns over heathen Africa, and can find in my heart to go back and spend and be spent for Jesus."

A few lines refer to one who, six or seven years ago, received Jesus as his Saviour. The grace of God was signally manifested in his conversion. At the time when Mrs. Daniell began her noble work, a brewer in the neighbourhood declared his intention of opening a dancing-saloon and spirit-bar immediately alongside of the hall. He was as good, or as bad, as his word; but the mighty hand of God was upon his own work. It was during a visit of Mrs. Daniell to Scotland that the public-house was finished, and a spirit-license applied for. Not till all was over did she hear that, when the application was made, a person, unknown to this day, rose and stated the facts of the case to the bench, who very rightly declined to grant a license. One adventurer after another has failed in the attempt to make the place succeed.

It was during one of these short periods of occupation that the young man referred to, came up for some entertainment that was then going on. A large party of children from the work-house had been spending a holiday at the hall, and were being packed into waggons as he came up. Attracted by the unusual sight, he passed the door of the "Alexandra," and stood among the crowd of soldiers and helpers till the waggons drove off. Then some "watcher for souls" spied the new face, and teaching him on the arm, invited him into the hall. The moment he entered, the sight of the texts and hymns on the walls smote him with the memories of old times; he was spoken to more than once, and within a very few days he had avouched the Lord to be his God. But the early months of his spiritual life were very troubled times, not to himself alone, but also to those who watched for his soul, and who sometimes feared that he would never make anything but a stumbling Christian. After the regiment left camp no word was heard of him, and he passed away into the shadowy throng of mere memories, recalled sometimes as bygone days are talked over, and sometimes, perhaps oftener, before the throne of God.

But a few weeks before the report was issued, Miss Daniell met a Christian officer, who spoke of him as being "the shining light of his regiment," and since that time has sent word that he has received his discharge, and entered a training college in hopes that he may yet "preach among the heathen the unsearchable riches of Christ." How cheering it is to hope that many another soldier may, in like manner, be shining brightly for God in his regiment, and that in the last great gathering many a soul will come to greet the rejoicing reapers who once sowed in tears.

Another variety is introduced into this report in the different sections devoted to the "Branch Homes at Colchester, Weedon, Manchester and Plymouth." We must refer our readers to the report for the many interesting details supplied from each of these. But it may not be amiss to urge upon those who have either service or means still undevoted to the Lord, the great importance of these connected homes throughout the country. Each day proves increasingly their great value in adding to their efficiency and permanency of the work.

Only workers and funds are needed to extend this Mission throughout the country. The expenses, it may be believed, are very heavy. Not only have all these agencies for the soldiers themselves to be maintained, but rescue work for the poor followers of a camp is carried on, and the blessed Missions which nearly twenty years ago were begun by Mrs. Daniell, in two neglected villages in the Midland Counties, have not been suffered to languish. In one of these especially there has lately been a remarkable outpouring of the Spirit of God. Soul after soul has come rejoicingly into the liberty of the gospel.

We have reason to believe that Miss Daniell's faith is at times sorely tried by want of funds. It may be that other work, which is more prominently kept before the public, naturally excites a livelier interest than one which is but seldom mentioned in our religious papers and periodicals. Some do not feel the same liberty as others in making known what might be described as the more dramatic side of their work: but surely such stirring details should not be necessary to draw forth our offerings.

Funds are also anxiously desired for building the Chatham Soldiers' Home, which Miss Daniell has had in contemplation for several years. Now that so many hearts are opened to receive Christ for the first time, and others to dedicate themselves freshly to his service, it may be that among the offerings cast into the treasury some may be sent for this special object.

Donations for any part of the work will be received very gladly by Miss Daniell, Mission-hall, Aldershot, or can be paid to her account at her several bankers.

"OUT OF DARKNESS INTO LIGHT."

This book contains the experience, reaching over a period of fifty-eight years, of one who is a prominent teacher of the views popularly known as "The Higher Christian Life." In many respects he differs from other teachers of this school. His view of the seventh of Romans is, for instance, different from that of Mr. E. Pearsall Smith, and he makes no secret that he disapproves of many things taught in connection with the present movement. He is a much more avowed opponent of the theology of the churches on this subject, and boldly claims "perfection," refusing to give way to the prejudice which would avoid the use of the term. When we turn, as the Christian will instinctively, to ask what light from Scripture Dr. Mahan adduces in support of his views, we regret to say that his treatment of God's Word is most unsatisfactory. "If we say that we have no sin," means in his view, if we say that we had no sin (i.e., before conversion) and he endeavours to justify this by reference to John vii. 7, where 'he that is without sin among you,' may be understood of the past. But the Greek expression here is quite different, and does not contain as in John i. 8, the present tense of the verb "to have," which is fatal to Dr. Mahan's view.

Of "Christian warfare" as commonly understood, "fighting the old propensities, dispositions, and tendencies, and holding them in subjection," he says, "we shall search in vain for any such idea of this warfare in the New Testament, or in the Old either."

Of the exhortation, in Rom. vi., to all believers, as such, to reckon themselves "dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord," Dr. Mahan says, "how absurd for a believer in such circumstances (those of conflict) to reckon himself dead to sin," etc.

God's order in the attainment of holiness would seem to be, first, to show the believer his standing in Christ, tell him to appropriate it by faith, "reckon yourselves," etc.; and then, as a consequence, "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body." This, however, Dr. Mahan reverses. If "filled with the Holy Ghost, and with the power of Christ resting upon him," he may with all assurance reckon himself dead," etc.

One manifest root of much of the error which pervades Dr. Mahan's teaching is his wholly ignoring the question of time in relation to the fulfilment of the promises. Wherever he finds a promise, he seems to think that "now or never" must be the time of its fulfilment. Hence promises clearly relating to the glory—whether the earthly glory of the Jews, or the heavenly glory of the Church—are quietly assumed by him to describe the inward experience to which he lays claim. Thus two texts which are great favourites of his, and which he quotes on almost every page, as if they were written to describe Christian experience, are the following:—

Isa. lx. 20, "Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

Rom. viii. 21, "The creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

But what intelligent Christian can be so ignorant of the context in which both these passages stand, as not to know that they point on to the future—one referring to the future glory of Israel, and the other to "the liberty of the glory" of the coming age. Whilst pointing out what is open to exception in Dr. Mahan's views, we gladly welcome much that he says as to the matter of Sanctification. His earnest exhortations to holiness we cordially endorse. It is because practical holiness is so much needed amongst Christians that we deprecate its being made to rest upon so insecure a foundation as that of texts misinterpreted, and clear statements of Holy Scripture, such as 1 John i. 8, plainly contradicted.

The present widely-spreading evangelistic movement is daily calling out new tract-distributors, and the appeals for tracts are altogether beyond our power to supply. If, therefore, those of our readers who are not called to this work themselves, but who have confidence in tract-distribution as one of God's means of spreading the gospel of his Son, will contribute to our Tract Fund, they will usefully employ many zealous young converts, who are as unable to buy tracts as others are to distribute them.

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN IN PARIS.—Prayer-meetings in connection with Miss Leigh's Mission are held at the Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, on Saturdays, at 4 p.m., and at the Young Women's Christian Association, 88, Faubourg St. Honoré, on Wednesdays, at 2 p.m.

MRS. HILTON'S CRESCHE HOME BAZAAR was well patronised, the receipts being nearly £300, the net profits of which will not, however, meet all the requirements of the new Home. From inquiry on the day of opening, it was found that there were 103 children in the Croche proper, 12 in the Infirmary, and 22 in the Home.

CONSECRATION MEETING IN EDINBURGH.—The Rev. W. E. and Mrs. Boardman, assisted by the Rev. J. Mountain, have recently held services in Bolton, Birmingham, Glasgow, and Edinburgh. In the last-mentioned place there were three meetings each day for one week. They were all very well attended. The greatest possible interest was manifested in the subject of the "Full rest of faith." At the closing meeting, which was a crowded one, many Christians testified to the great blessing they had received during the services. Mr. and Mrs. Boardman were to sail for America on Saturday last.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.—On Sunday, June 6, out-door gospel-meetings will be held (d.v.) at short intervals in various parts of St. Giles's all through the day. The brethren will start from the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, at 7 a.m.; Great Earl-street Mission-station at 10; Mission Chapel at 3 and 6 p.m. Refreshments provided. Christian workers accustomed to out-door efforts, from any part of the vineyard, will be heartily welcomed.

The Christian.

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT.]

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

[12, Paternoster Buildings, E.O.]

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1875.

LETTER FROM MR. MOODY TO THE EDITOR.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am greatly taken with the idea of having a Special Number of THE CHRISTIAN, devoted entirely to Young Men. The work amongst the Young Men is, to me, one of the most cheering features of the present movement, and I trust this Special Number will give it a fresh impulse throughout the whole country. The account of the Liverpool Convention should be read by every Christian Young Man in the three Kingdoms.

TO OUR READERS.

It was originally intended that only one Young Men's Special Number of THE CHRISTIAN should appear, but so many contributions of the deepest interest to young men at the present time have come in, that we have decided to issue another Young Men's Special Number next week.

This second Number, in addition to the close of the Liverpool Convention, and other articles bearing on the special department of Young Men's Work, is expected to contain papers by the Presidents of the New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago Young Men's Christian Associations. It will also contain a report of the International Young Men's Convention, held at the Haymarket Opera House, on Saturday evening last, for which we have not space in our ordinary issue of this week. Mr. Sankey has kindly promised a new hymn.

It is hoped that all Christian young men will feel a personal interest in this effort to reach their fellow young men, who are living in towns and villages too far removed from the great centres of revival to feel its influence otherwise than through the press.

This second Young Men's Number will, as in the present instance, be published as a supplement to our regular issue of June 10, forming a Double Number, price Twopence. The two extra portions will, however, be subsequently issued as one Special Double Number of THE CHRISTIAN for Young Men, price Twopence, for supply to Young Men's Associations throughout the world. It will contain matter of sufficient interest and importance to constitute it a manual for the conduct of evangelistic and other work among young men everywhere; and we would request those Associations which desire supplies to send us orders as early as possible.

INTRODUCTORY.

THAT there is a great future in store for the Christian young men of the world, will any one who has been watching the current of recent events be faithless enough to doubt? Side by side with the great waves of interest in things spiritual which have been breaking in succession over nearly all the great cities of the United Kingdom, there has been a movement amongst young men not less wonderful in its individual facts, certainly not less important in its ultimate consequences. One would find it hard to forgive the Christian who knows or cares nothing about the former, after all that has been spoken and written; but to bring a similar charge against young men with reference to the latter, since special attention has never before been called to the subject, would scarcely be less than unjust. But that young men should know nothing of a work which concerns them so deeply in their highest and best relations seems, to those who know how deep and real it has been, to those who have felt its power, who have seen it, lived in it, are living in it now, at once a grave misfortune and a loss. This work has been so much to them, they would like it to be something to others. It has made their own lives so much brighter, so much more worth being in existence at all, that they would wish to reflect a little of its joy. And to those who have been taught by it the luxury of working for Christ, it has grown to be a passion not less strong than the yearning desire for souls, that every fellow-Christian should be also a fellow-labourer. So God has put it into the hearts of some of them to try this means of scattering the tidings among the young men of the land, in the humble hope that He may use it to fan the smouldering flame of revival where, above everywhere else, it ought to burn—in the breast of the nation's youth. And may God grant that wherever there are Christian hearts to catch the sacred fire, they may begin to glow with the consuming, undying desire to spend and be spent for Christ.

No young man who carefully reads the following pages can rise from their perusal the same as he was before. They are written for a special purpose, and every one who makes himself acquainted with that purpose comes under a grave, and, what may be to him, a new responsibility. Do young men know that God is calling them just now, as He has perhaps never done before? Do young men know that young men like themselves are being used by God in winning hundreds and thousands of their fellows to Christ? Do young men know that wherever the effort has been put forth, even the inexperienced labour and the untried faith have met with a reward and an encouragement which can never in this world be either expressed or known?

If we, as young men, do not know these things, we ought to know them, for they are true; and if we do know them, we ought to feel the responsibility of knowing them; of getting others to know them; and, above all, of acting upon them. And the great question which ought to come home to all of us is this,—seeing that God is setting his seal so unmistakably to young men's effort—Will the Christian young men of the country rise to the occasion? Are they willing to help the little bands which, a few here and a few there, are trying to work and witness for Christ amongst their fellows? Are they willing to give up some of these long summer evenings, let us say, to try and rescue the young men around them whom they know to be hurrying grave-ward, without a hope beyond? Are they ready to join in a crusade against the sin and vice which are dragging the flower of the country to an inevitable doom? Surely God is as willing to do nationally what He has already done locally; and are we who call ourselves Christians, by our coldness, by our love of ease, by our worldliness, to take upon ourselves the terrible responsibility of lying as mere obstructions in that path which might otherwise lead to the most splendid victory the world ever knew?

RULES FOR DAILY LIFE.

The following card has been issued by the Y.M.C.A. at Liverpool:—

Begin the day with God;
Kneel down to Him in prayer;
Lift up thy heart to His abode,
And seek His love to share.

Open the Book of God,
And read a portion there,
That it may hallow all thy thoughts,
And sweeten all thy care.

Go through the day with God,
Whate'er thy work may be;
Where'er thou art, at home, abroad,
He still is near to thee.

Converse in mind with God;
Thy spirit heavenward raise;
Acknowledge every good bestowed,
And offer grateful praise.

Conclude the day with God;
Thy sins to Him confess;
Trust in the Lord's atoning blood,
And plead His righteousness.

Lie down at night with God,
Who gives His servant sleep;
And when thou tread'st the vale of death,
He will thee guard and keep.

"Entreat the younger men as brethren."

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS, AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

"What is the virtue in having meetings exclusively for young men?" ask our sceptical friends; and some strong Protestants even seem to think that there is a suggestion of Ritualism in the separation of the sexes. At all events it is an innovation, and what is worse apparently, an innovation from America, and that is quite enough to throw the minds of some very good people into a state of intense alarm. With those who think that there is no special power or efficacy in young men's meetings, we can only plead the old but very good argument, "Come and see." It is often possible to find a great many reasons why a thing should be this or that; but when we go and look, it is quite the reverse of what we have laboriously proved that it ought to be.

I think many of the sensible but cautious people who doubt very much the propriety of these novel expedients, who think young men should not be encouraged to get on their feet and speak till their Christian character is more confirmed, who are afraid of spiritual pride and inconsistencies of conduct, and all that, would have a good many of their scruples removed were they to come two or three times to a young men's meeting, and see how it actually worked.

Of course there are a great number of crudities; there are sure to be foolish, or at least extreme, things said, and unless you have a pretty firm chairman, there may even be something like bickering or collision. But who ever heard of any good thing that did not easily run into what is foolish and dangerous. If we are to adopt nothing that is not entirely free from possible abuse, I am afraid we would be obliged to move within a very narrow range, and use only a very few instruments.

The main plea for young men's meetings conducted as these in London and Liverpool and other places are conducted, is that they set a-flowing a perfectly fresh current of spiritual feeling. There is a force generated in them which breaks into men's hearts. If this is the case, it does not seem to matter much whether the speaking be fluent or not.

Polished, prepared speaking is not wanted. The moment a man begins to preach or exhort, it is the chairman's business to ring him down. It is the broken confession of faith in Christ, it is the nervous, frightened effort to speak, perhaps, for the first time, it is the simple statement of what has been passing through the mind, of how the truth has but lately come home, that really stirs the meeting, and melts the heart. If a young man, who has ceased to believe much in religion, and has almost given up attending church, sees one of his own standing, some one whom perhaps he knows, rising to acknowledge in trembling accents that his past life has been all wrong, and that he is resolved in the strength of God to live a new life, and then sitting down with a modest request that the Christians around would pray that he may be kept from falling—that touches him. A hundred eloquent sermons would miss the mark—he might not go to hear them; but this little pebble from the hand of a youthful David, goes home with unerring aim.

There are many who will go to these meetings who would not go to a church. Perhaps they go to scoff; no matter, get them inside the walls, there are many who will remain to pray. I have noticed this. I have watched the faces of some who have come in to such meetings. They evidently considered the whole thing rather a good joke; you could see the sneer, or even the half-suppressed laugh. But gradually the expression of face changed. The strangeness at first surprised them, and then the evident reality of the thing began to move them. There could be no humbug about it. These young fellows around them could have no motive for getting up and speaking as they did, except deep conviction. It was not professional men with white ties who were addressing them. They felt how the whole meeting was solemnized, and they began, almost in spite of themselves, to share in the growing solemnity. I have seen the very faces which had worn the sneer when they came in, showing the distress of deep spiritual conviction before they went out.

It is not a very easy thing presiding at a young men's meeting. When the writer attempted it, he was very nervous, and probably made rather a mess of it at first. I suppose, as in most things, one learns success through failure. You must make the meeting feel that there is a firm hand on the reins. Some degree of self-assertion is necessary; of course, within the limits of the rules the chairman himself has laid down. One feels intensely the awkwardness of interrupting a clergyman in the way one has sometimes to do. And then, of course, there is a certain amount of anxiety as to how the spirit of the meeting is to rise. Meetings differ in this respect a good deal. Sometimes there is a quick movement about them, two or three men getting on their feet together. At another time it drags; you can hardly tell the reason, probably it is want of prayer. If there is this dragging, and the Christians pray much for the next meeting, there is almost sure to be compensation then.

Let me give one result of my experience. It is this: though the chairman is firm, he must not be severe or peremptory. Cheerfulness and good humour are essential. The men you wish to speak are those who require some encouragement to speak, and you must draw them on. The secret of presiding at such a meeting is very much the secret of successfully entertaining a company. You must put the people present at their ease. I have come more and more to see the power of tenderness. Ministers and professional speakers lose half their power from being too hard.

Those who are half-inclined to get up and speak (and that is just the kind you wish) keep their eye very much on the chairman. They judge of the temper of the meeting through him. If they see an encouraging kindness in his manner, they think the meeting will give them a favourable reception.

It is, of course, no information to say that a meeting very much takes its tone from the man who presides. But this is peculiarly the case where you have such elements as you have in our meetings. Young speakers fix their eye on the chairman very much to steady them, and the chairman should keep his eye on them. Once a man gets on his feet, the chairman should never take his eye off him till he is done.

Where there is anything like a field or materials to work on, let no one hesitate to preside if asked. The moral support of a few whose heart is in the work—a preliminary prayer-meeting—a good number sweeping the streets with invitation hand-bills—give us these, and there is no reason why the meeting should not be a success. But once you have fixed on a chairman, do not change him; support him, back him up, pray for him, encourage him in every way. We have seen the wonderful results of such gatherings, and the kind of influence they generate, too clearly not to believe that in these days at least faith can work miracles. J. F. E.

THE YOUNG MAN'S HYMN.

Let us not pride ourselves in youth,
Nor boast of manhood's vigorous frame;
But humbly walk in grace and truth,
Trusting alone in Jesus' name.

For when our Saviour came to earth,
And left His Father's radiant throne,
It was to show, man's highest worth
Is found in glory not his own.

O Man of sorrows! God of bliss!
We consecrate our lives to Thee;
Impart to us Thy righteousness,
Keep us from sin's dominion free.

Gird us with might in life's brief hour,
To spread abroad Thy sacred truth,
Till the whole world, saved by Thy power,
Shall blossom in eternal youth.

HOW TO DEAL WITH YOUNG MEN.

I. Success in dealing with young men depends on the possession by the religious worker of personal qualities which young men admire and respect. Those who commend religion to young men must have more in them than religion. They must have, in considerable measure, some of those moral, intellectual, and physical endowments and attainments which excite the enthusiasm of the young, whether they are associated with religion or not. In fact, the Christian who would deal successfully with young men must not only be a Christian, but a thorough man. Such moral qualities as courage, modesty, straightforwardness; such intellectual attainments as business capacity, skill in one's trade, extensive knowledge; and even good physical development and excellence in athletic exercises, give a capital introduction to religion. For youth does not yet care for principles, but only for examples, or for principles embodied in living men. The reason why young men are so little attracted by religion, and sometimes even disgusted with it, is because they see it so often associated with moral and intellectual weakness. A Cambridge student told at the conference in London the other day of a University man who was stroke oar in a boating club, and at the same time had prayer-meetings in his rooms. That man was likely to attract his companions to Christ. Another speaker told about a young man in Edinburgh who had been led to seek Christ by seeing the thorough manner in which the Christian foreman in the shop where he was employed, did his work. He wished to be a Christian like him.

II. Those sides of the gospel should be turned to young men which are most likely to attract them. It is an acknowledged principle that different modes of dealing are needed for different cases. In the inquiry-room you seldom have two who are saved quite in the same way. Christ is a many-sided object. And some lay hold of Him on one side, others on another. The gospel is a many-sided thing. Some get comfort from one truth in it, others from another. So there are some truths more attractive to certain classes than others. There is a religion for the old, and a religion for the young. There is a young men's religion. It is the same Saviour all embrace; but some, in coming to Him, throw themselves at once on his bosom; others grasp his hand; and others only touch the hem of his garment.

Religion has two sides—a giving side, and a taking side. We give ourselves to Christ, and we take Christ as ours. But in some minds the one of those sides predominates, and in others the other. Now it is the giving side which is most congenial to youth. Youth feels itself rich. It has a great deal to give away. It has just awakened to consciousness of its own powers—of thought, of love, of work. These are a great and precious gift to be given to some master. Life seems long to a young man. An old man thinks of life as a small, empty thing; it is nothing compared with the vast eternity. But to the young, life is the large thing, and eternity is small. To which master are you going to give this life, so important, so full, so long? That is a question which will move every thoughtful young man. You know it is too precious to squander, or to spend on yourself, or to give to the world. You know you ought to give it to Christ; He needs it and asks it. This appeals to every young heart; but to be threatened with death and eternity moves the young but little—these things are too far off.

It is quite scriptural to put this side of the gospel in the foreground. When Jesus was calling his first followers, who were young men, to Himself, He presented this side to them. He said, "Follow Me." And they left all, rose up, and followed Him. Their religious life began with giving. They were not long with Christ when they discovered that they were to get far more than they could ever give. So young men will discover too. There is far more getting than giving in religion.

But if an appeal to give is more likely to win them than an appeal to take, then it should be made. Though taking from Christ is a deeper experience than giving to Him, the new life may begin with the more shallow experience. J. S.

PICKET WORK UNDER THE ARCHES AT THE HAYMARKET.

One of the nights, when looking about for any who might need helping, there stood a respectably-dressed man listening to one or two soldiers, with some civilians, talking about the "one thing needful." In wedging up to where he stood, we listened together for some time, and gradually we got into conversation. In the knowledge of the Scriptures he was not deficient; but the simple hold of the Saviour as a lost sinner he had not; he was still at sea. His great difficulty was, the will of God. "How can I do, or be anything, without the will of God?" Again, "If He only gives me salvation, I am quite ready." He also insisted on the "meekness and lowliness" necessary to receiving Christ. Here was one not to be got over by ignoring the doctrine of sovereignty, or telling him he had nothing to do with it; we had to show him the way to a solid peace by accepting the will of God in salvation, with all its understood subjection of our own wills.

It is by the revelation of the Holy Ghost that any man truly accepts Christ; any appropriation of Christ merely by the intellect, or from sympathy with the earnestness or force of the speaker, will soon relax, and the grip will altogether give when sorely tried; but the work of the Spirit, the more it is tried, the more it proves itself to be divine.

If the will of God manifests itself in the choice of any, it is not those who may think themselves worthy of being chosen; it is not the competition of merit, it is the favour, sovereign and free, of God alone. "Not unto us," "not by might, nor by power." "Born not of the will of man." God has not gifted to us indiscriminately, and independent of Himself, a Saviour; nor does He now a Comforter. Instead of this being our sorrow, it should be our joy, for in the divine excellence of his loving will, whoever came to Him with their soul's burden, but they found a ready ear! The blood that cleanses is the gift of God, and receiving that gift as flowing from the loving heart of the Father, you accept of all his will in the work and person of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. You magnify it; you put your Amen to the great scheme of mercy, not merely as the refuge of your soul from wrath, but as the way back to the Father's heart. You endorse the will of God. The "strait gate" is ever open to those who come in this spirit; the Scriptures are open on all sides; not one doctrine, but all meet in this place, where the altar of surrender stands—blessed spot! sacred and sweet, when our own will is merged in the will of the Father.

We parted when it was near the "wee short oor." He felt there was something very precious where he had been stumbling. May we all see more of this blessed will of God in the salvation of men! C. Y.

LETTER FROM A YOUNG CONVERT.

The following is an extract from a letter written by a young man a few days after his conversion at the special meetings recently held at Cambridge:—

"I went to the central office of the Young Men's Christian Association at Manchester last night, and spent a very happy hour at a meeting for young men. In a few words I publicly gave a brief narrative of my life, and my happy experience of the saving power of Jesus, and I wished you had been there to have seen the young men in tears at the description of my wasted life, of my miraculous conversion, and of the happy meeting with my parents. There were several remained to seek Jesus. I feel that I have a great work to do, and that the Lord has found me to make me of great service in his cause. I am going to another meeting at the same place to-night, and should love you to see the meetings of happy faces and gladdened hearts through the instrumentality of Moody and Sankey. As I lay thinking last night, I thought how I should like to visit Cambridge in a few months' time, and give my humble testimony of the wonderful love of Jesus in the very place He found me. Praise his name! Jesus has fast hold of me, and I mean, by God's help, to be as active an agent (more so, if possible) in his cause as I have been in the devil's."

YOUNG MEN'S CONVENTION AT LIVERPOOL.

On the evening of Thursday, May 20, a Young Men's Convention was opened in Newsome's Circus, White-chapel, Liverpool, and the proceedings extended over the following day.

The object of the gathering was to afford an interchange of thought on the subject of the great evangelistic work amongst young men which has arisen out of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, with special reference to the means of extending it, and making it permanently successful.

The Convention, for which arrangements had been made by a committee in Liverpool, was very numerous attended, and the proceedings throughout were of a most interesting character. Delegates were present from many of the large towns of the three kingdoms, and also from the United States and Canada. The attendance of young men residing in and around Liverpool was very large; and at the second meeting, at which the attendance was a little larger than at the first, over 1700 persons were present.

A number of local clergymen and gentlemen, who have taken an interest in the evangelistic work in Liverpool, attended the meetings. Amongst these were the Revs. R. H. Lundie, W. H. M. H. Aitken, Alexander Pitt, Patrick White, H. Baugh, Dr. Harrison, P. T. Forfar; Messrs. J. Houghton, A. Balfour, W. P. Lockhart, Samuel Smith, R. J. Glasgow, Brainerd Radcliffe, D. M. Drysdale, A. Ferguson, E. Darbyshire, etc., etc.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Mr. Henry Drummond occupied the chair.

The proceedings commenced with a short prayer-meeting, during which a number of requests for prayer were read.

The Convention then received from the delegates reports of

THE WORK IN OTHER TOWNS.

Mr. JAMES MILLER, of Edinburgh, said he had heard reports of the great things the Lord had been doing for them in Liverpool, he knew what the Lord had been doing in Edinburgh, and he thought that that evening they could not do better than bid each other God-speed. He could bear testimony, not only to what the Lord had done in Edinburgh, but to what He was still doing. They were too much in the habit of speaking of this wave of revival as if it were past. In Edinburgh at that time the work was going on as steadily and as surely as it had been at any time within the last twelve months. The number of those who waited behind at inquiry-meetings was not so large, it was true; but their inquiry-meetings were not to be the gauge of the value of the work. He believed the work which was going on in Edinburgh was a more mighty work than any one had any conception of. Their young men's meetings, which were commenced just before their American friends left, were begun as a sort of testimony meetings, but in the course of a few months it was found advisable to make them evangelistic meetings. Since last summer they had been held only twice a week, on Tuesdays and Saturdays. Their Tuesday evening meeting was small, but the Saturday meeting was a splendid one. They had a chairman who took the first half-hour, and then the meeting was thrown open to any one who wished to speak, and those who spoke were requested to follow in the same line as the chairman. From 600 to 700 persons attended the meeting, and the Lord was blessing them more and more every week. One branch of the work in which the young men had had a tremendous blessing was the holding of open-air meetings; and another was the giving of a free breakfast on Sabbath mornings in the Drill-hall to the poor and the outcast from the lowest slums of the city. From 600 to 700 were present every Sabbath morning to have their breakfast, and hear the gospel preached. The whole of that work was originated, and was carried on, through the young men's committee, by young converts, who had been brought to a knowledge of the truth within the last eighteen months. And it was a noble sight to see young men coming up at six o'clock on Sabbath mornings, with their bull's-eye lanterns, to fish up these poor people in their slums, and drag them up to the breakfast. It was a noble sight to see them, the pick of the upper classes in Edinburgh, walking along to the breakfast with the poorest and most wretched people. This bringing of all classes together was one of the greatest facts of the work. These young men appeared thoroughly to realize the shortness of our time, and the opportunities at our disposal, and they should be an example to young men everywhere, whoever they were, whatever their position, to throw themselves into the work of the Lord.

The Hon. Captain MORETON, of London, said: In London they were not like their brethren in Edinburgh, whose work had been going on for some time, and was thoroughly established; but theirs in London was quite new. With regard to the general revival work in Islington, it was remarkable how many infidels had been brought to a knowledge of the truth. Mr. Moody himself said that he had met with more infidels during the first week or so that he was in London than he had met in the whole of his tour. They came as boldly into the inquiry-room as possible. One evening a young man got up, and said, "I have been an infidel lecturer for some time; I have boasted of having shaken the faith of many a Christian man; I came in here three or four nights ago purposely to blaspheme the whole thing, but I felt I must refrain, and I did so. I was induced to go again, and found my way into the inquiry-room, and there God met me; and my one desire now is to live and work henceforth for the glory of Christ." He then sat down; and he (Captain Moreton) should never forget the impression that those few words made upon the whole meeting. Here was a man who, a few nights before, could boast of having shaken the faith of some of God's people, standing up, and saying that he desired to live and labour for Christ. Here was a man taken out of the enemy's camp, and brought into the Redeemer's, and made a weapon in the hands of the Lord in winning souls to Christ. He had not himself much faith in infidels. Their scepticism was, in a great many cases, mere bravado; and the best way to deal with them was to give them some striking passage of Scripture to think over, and not to argue with them.

Mr. J. T. AYMERS, of Dublin, said he felt among friends that evening, being in the midst of so many Christians. The work in Dublin was not so centralized as this in Liverpool. Their meetings were carried on in three different parts of the city; but, to a certain extent, the fact of their separation showed the life that existed. One series of meetings, held every night during the week, was commenced by Mr. Drummond during Mr. Moody's visit. After they had been a short time in existence, some young men in business houses started another series of meetings. A large room was hired for these second meetings, and God had blessed them in many ways. A third series of meetings was afterwards commenced by a young man who was converted during Mr. Moody's visit. The young man was not a good speaker, but he asked a Christian what he should do in the way of work for the Lord, and he was recommended to start a meeting for young men. He did so; and it had been going on ever since twice a week. The young men who commenced the second series of meetings had extended their work beyond Dublin, by going down to the country towns, telling what God had done for them. He (Mr. Aymers) was only lately speaking to one or two young men who had been invited down to a country town. The biggest hall in the place was engaged, and it was crowded. After this meeting, those who were anxious about their souls were asked to remain, and every one in the hall remained. On the following day children were invited, and the hall was again full. After the public address, the children who were anxious to know the Saviour were requested to remove to one side of the room. They all commenced to go to one side, half of them in tears. The thing was overpowering. The Lord had been working mightily among them in Ireland, and these were some of the characteristics of the work. Everybody was willing to be spoken to about Jesus Christ. They had instances of young men going into the meetings to scoff, and going away with Christ in their hearts, whom they had been resisting all their lives before. At one of the meetings a man got up, and said, "I did not believe there was a God this day week; now I am willing to spend and be spent for Him." It was wonderful how many who seemed to be running right in the face of the Lord had been brought to a knowledge of the truth. And how had this been brought about? Just by young men telling the old old story to their companions. They remembered the words, "Speak ye every man truth to his neighbour." It was easy enough to get up and speak there; it was harder to speak in the shop to one's neighbour. God used these quiet testimonies for Christ, and it was what God wished all of them to do. Let them not wait for this one or that one to speak. Every one of them had his story to tell; they knew what the Lord had done for them, and God would make them a blessing, according to his promise.

Mr. ARTHUR BURSON, of Montreal, Canada, said he was glad to meet the Christian young men of Liverpool. He met them as Christian workers; and he was glad that the Christian young men of Liverpool had made up their minds to do something for Christ. In reference to the work on the other side of the Atlantic, he could point to Montreal, where it was of a very cheering character. He thought he was right in saying that not a day passed—and he thought the time would come when the same might be said of Liverpool—without some soul being brought to Christ. They made it a regular business. The secretary sat in his office every day to talk to young men about their souls. If the Liverpool Association wanted to be a power, the nearer they stuck to Christ the better. They found in Canada that those associations which entered into collateral work were weak, whilst those which stuck to the purely spiritual work of bringing men to Christ were strong. Might God bless the Christian young men of Liverpool abundantly!

Mr. JAMES SCOTT, of Glasgow, said that after their dear brethren, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, left Glasgow, then came the testing time of the work which had been going on amongst the young men of the city. There were a great many good, christian people who were not much in sympathy with them; and then there was the enemy saying that it would come to nothing. They had to change their place, which had a most pernicious effect upon their meetings. But the meetings had survived; and he could not tell them the good which had been done. He agreed with the enemies, and with the half-and-half friends, that if there had been a genuine work of Christ, it must prove itself. One great cry was continually, "We'll believe in your revival if you go and feed the hungry, and clothe the naked!" They had, therefore, started what they called a breakfast-meeting. Every Sabbath morning, in a tent on a Green, they fed about 2500 poor people. This had been going on for a year. Soon after it was commenced, the people came with their faces cleansed, and he believed many hearts had been cleansed also. In addition to this system of working, they had meetings in the Drill-hall, and on Sabbath evenings, in the theatre, there was an attendance of 2000 or 3000 people, and always a great number of inquirers. They had also an organization for visiting the public-houses, where they had got a great number of people to sign the pledge; and another organization for distributing leaflets at the doors of the theatres and public-houses.

Mr. J. C. EDGAR, of Manchester, said the work in Manchester had been more of a quiet nature, with much individual effort for the conversion of souls. At the present time there was an opening for people to speak for Christ that there never seemed to be before. Night after night he had spoken to strangers as he walked home; and he found that they were not only willing, but many of them waiting and anxious, to be spoken to on the subject. He commended to the young men of Liverpool for their adoption this plan of talking to people as they went home at night.

Dr. ZIEMANN, of Manchester, said the young men's meetings had been going on in that city for about four months; and every night he had seen a blessing in some shape or other. He did not think one night had passed during all that time without anxious inquirers.

Mr. ANNESLEY, of Claughton, near Birkenhead, said he did not believe that there was any place in England which had had more blessing, in proportion to its population, than Claughton had had lately. Four weeks ago it occurred to some of the young men there to make some efforts to reach their companions; and it was decided to commence special meetings for the young men of Claughton. The originator of them wanted to get hold of the young men from the Exchange and the cotton-brokers' offices, and see if they could not be induced to come over from serving Satan to serve the Lord. A school was placed at their disposal, and they commenced their meetings. Sixty or seventy were present the first night, and there was great interest manifested. He was happy to say that the interest increased until they had a gathering of 150. That was the outside work, and he did not think he was exaggerating when he said that the work done in the hearts of the young men was more wonderful still. The meetings were held about five nights every week, and numbers of the young brokers and merchants from the Exchange and the different offices now came out boldly for Christ.

Mr. A. WARDLAW, of Dublin, considered that one of the most beautiful results of the work was to be seen in the young men themselves—not merely in their efforts for Christ, but in their hearty, loving fellowship with one another as Christian young men, and the loving, earnest, prayerful care they have for one another's spiritual welfare. He believed they ought, as Christian young men, to cultivate that spirit more and more. As to the results of the work in Dublin, many meetings had been held in different parts of the city, and many persons who were not directly reached by Mr. Moody's meetings, were reached indirectly through the efforts of those who had received blessing at them. He would mention one instance that came under his own notice. The ticket-taker on board one of the steamers that crossed the Channel was a Christian man. There were some sixty persons employed on board each of the steamers who could not attend Mr. Moody's meetings. The ticket-taker went, however, and brought back reports of them, which he used to tell to the sailors assembled round him. A story of Mr. Moody's thus reported took hold of an unconverted man, and, through it, he became converted. That was the beginning of a good work on board the steamers, and now, in nearly all of them, they had got a prayer-meeting every morning. God had blessed these efforts amongst the sailors, one and another being led to Christ; and in many other ways the work of God was spreading as the result of these meetings in Dublin.

Mr. WILLIAM DRUMMOND, of Dublin, said that one branch of the work in Dublin had not been touched upon; he referred to the work amongst the soldiers. Meetings were held in the barracks, and the young men got up a meeting in Grosvenor Hall, which was attended by 600 soldiers. The meeting was an open one, the soldiers speaking amongst themselves. He thought that this was one of the most important departments of work that a young man could engage in. He reminded his hearers that every soldier who was converted was a missionary, for he would preach the gospel wherever he went. It was no easy thing to be a Christian among soldiers. Soldiers were very grateful for small attentions, and often asked why they took so much interest in them. The Roman Catholics petitioned the colonels in one or two of the barracks against the holding of their meetings there, and they were now prohibited. He asked his hearers to pray for them that the door might be opened again.

Mr. JOSEPH ARMISHAW, of Birmingham, said he could not speak so favourably of the work in that town as that great meeting spoke of the work in Liverpool. Some few weeks ago they felt in some difficulty, and finding it was necessary to call in a physician, he wrote to Mr. Samuel Nash to come over and supply the healing ointment. Mr. Nash did so, and since then the work had been going on and prospering. He did not remember a single evening—and the meetings were held every evening—when some soul was not won for Christ! And one evening nine were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

In bringing the first hour's conference to a close, The chairman said that if any one wished to know about the work in Liverpool, he would simply point them to that meeting. And when he said that nine-tenths of those who were present were not only Christian young men, but workers, he thought it would be admitted the gathering was itself a living monument of the great work amongst the young men of Liverpool.

A hymn having been sung, the Convention proceeded to consider the subject of a, Their origin, aim, and usefulness.

b, How to make them attractive, interesting, and increasingly successful.

Mr. JAMES SCOTT, of Glasgow, opened the discussion. He said the subject was one of deep importance, and he felt very much the responsibility of opening it to them. He should begin with a word or two about the evangelistic element in a church or association. The evangelistic element was the aggressive element. It found its representative in the Old Testament Church in David and Jonathan, and in the New Testament Church in the Apostles, who went from place to place attacking the garrisons of the ungodly. He thought these associations had lost a great deal in leaving out of sight the evangelistic element. The association which was not in these days aggressive, ought not to live. Certainly it could not have a very happy existence, because it seemed to be a rule in God's Church that if it was not striking the enemy outside, it would soon find an enemy inside, and there would soon be waging the worst of all wars, a civil one. By leaving out of sight the evangelistic element they had failed to attract young men. In Scotland the continual cry was, "How are we to get the young men when they grow to about sixteen years of age, and leave the Sabbath-school?" One way of keeping them was giving them some work to do. The first division of his subject was "The origin, aim, and usefulness of young men's evangelistic meetings." If an evangelistic meeting originated rightly, it originated with the Spirit of God. He alone could preach the gospel with power. He alone could open our blind eyes. He alone could stir up dead souls. In this He used many instrumentalities; and it might be as it was in Glasgow, that the means used to begin young men's meetings were some young men who had themselves been in a revival. They were all aglow, all on fire. They came and told what they had witnessed, and then when they were declaring the works of God, the power of God came down, and the work was begun. At any rate, it must always originate with Christians, who have got their own hearts full of love to God and their fellow-men. There must be a revival in the hearts of some people before there can be a revival in a hall. That was the right way to look at it. When they had got a revival in the heart, they would not be long in having one in the meetings. Then the aim of these meetings must be the winning of other young men to Christ. He had seen evangelistic meetings got up, it might be to fill a church or support an association. They could not expect very much blessing if that was their aim. The aim should be the winning of souls to Christ, and with that distinctly before them they might be sure that they would get young men into the associations or churches. As to their usefulness, it was often said, "What's the use of your having young men's meetings, and above all what's the use of your trying to preach; that is for the clergy and ministers? Leave them to do their work, and go you and do your own work." He could bear witness to this fact, that the ministers in Glasgow find themselves face to face with wickedness in so many shapes and forms that not one has said a single word against our working; but, on the other hand, they have been glad to see that we give all our strength to the common work of delivering souls from the common foe. In a branch of the work which was conducted very much by the young men, they found at the close of the season that about 3000 people had been spoken to. He did not say they were all very anxious, but they had been spoken to. They got them all divided, and sent to the clergymen and ministers in the districts in which they lived, their names and addresses, with a request that they (the ministers) would attend to them, and see whether they had been brought to Christ. These young men's meetings were useful in several ways. There were plenty of young men who would not attend an evangelistic meeting if it was merely to be addressed by a minister; but if it was to be addressed by men who worked with them at the desk or warehouse, they would go. They were useful also for the young men who got up and confessed Christ. They were further useful in this sense, that they attracted young men who would not go to a religious meeting of the ordinary kind, but who would go to a meeting which was in the hands of young men and was for young men only. The second division of his subject was, "How to make them attractive, interesting, and increasingly successful;" in other words, how to get a house, how to keep a house, and how to make the most of it when you have got it. For the first they needed a hall in a good position, well lighted, well seated, and comfortably heated. Then get a stranger to take the meetings for a week at a time, to give them a start. He should be a man who was identified with young men, who was a young men's man, affectionate, manly, natural, outspoken, who was not ashamed of the truth, but boldly confessed it. Failing that, they might get some very interesting subjects, but not sensational ones. Let them be printed on leaflets, which should be circulated widely. In this way, with a good hall, good speakers, interesting subjects, they had something to attract. The next point was how to interest people when they had got them. They would remember Mr. Moody's remark on this point, "Be interesting yourself." But that did not get them out of the difficulty. How were they to be interesting? There were some people who were always interesting, and some who were scarcely ever interesting. He believed if they would pay attention to the matter, they would find that the man who was interesting was a witnessing Christian. By that he meant a man who studied his Bible, and then brought what he found in his Bible to bear on those with whom he came in contact during the day, and whom he studied. They would find that when he came to the meeting he was full of his subject, and the meeting was on the alert to hear him, and to hear of the rebuffs or the encouragement he had derived from the study of his Bible. With a few men of that sort they would find these meetings interesting. They had always something fresh to say. To be fresh they must stick to the Bible, and bring the Bible to bear upon these fellows. The next point was, how to make these meetings increasingly successful. He took it for granted that their meetings were short ones—they ought not to last longer than an hour, because they would find that the real work was done at the second meeting. The Christians should scatter themselves through the hall, avoiding the platform and the cushioned seats. Give the sinner the most comfortable place, so that he would have the greatest difficulty in getting out. During the meeting Christians should each fix their attention upon one man, pray for him, and at the close speak to him about his soul. Do not be afraid of him; he must be dealt with. If he got angry, he was in need of the Christian's words; if he did not get angry, but thanked the Christian, then they could rejoice together. Then they should make use of those whom they gained. Get them to confess Christ, and work for Him. In this way they would have a continuous revival. Let them ask God's guidance in all these doings, and remember that the things which, above all others, reconciled men to them were honesty and a loving heart. In speaking to men, they must be loving and gentle, but let them be sure they did speak to men; and be sure of this also, that men would respect them when they had done it. There was a notorious drunkard in a village in Scotland. A great many people spoke to him about his drinking; but when he was converted, he said there was only one man whom he respected. "Others," he said, "came and talked to me about religion; I saw what they were driving at, but they had not the courage to speak out their convictions. This one man came up, and looked me in the face lovingly, and laid his hand on my shoulder, and said, 'You are perishing; go down on your knees, and beg pardon for your sins.'" The converted drunkard bore this testimony, that this man was the only one in the whole village whom he respected.

Mr. E. McDougall, of Liverpool, said the aim of evangelistic meetings should be to interest young men in religion for themselves; and, secondly—and, he was not sure, mainly, especially in connection with churches—to interest them to do some work. There was plenty of work in connection with every church, and young men not only needed appointing to the work, but needed some instruction as to how to do it. And their evangelistic meetings should tend to this particular kind of instruction, as well as the exhortation as to what they can seek and find for themselves. As to their usefulness, it would be well if the Young Men's Christian Associations had each a list of helpers, who could be sent to every little coterie or clique in the different towns, to help them to do the work. It came into a young man's heart to do some work for the Lord, but he did not know how to go to it. In a town like Liverpool, and with a Young Men's Christian Association such as they had, they ought to have a list of deputations—gentlemen willing to go to any schoolroom, or anywhere where an evangelistic meeting was proposed to be got up, and help to start it.

Mr. WALTER CHAMBERS (Liverpool) said that, to make the meetings increasingly successful, they should be increasingly lively. How were they to make them lively? Let them get a lively chairman. He should be upon the platform prompt to the hour, start at once with silent prayer, then read the requests for prayer, and get some brother to engage in prayer briefly and powerfully, and that gave a great start to the meeting. Then there should be a hymn. Great care should be taken in the selection of a hymn. Do not have a hymn with a slow tune, that would take half-an-hour to get through. Then a few verses of the Bible should be read, and another verse of a lively hymn sung, and then throw the meeting open. Speakers should be kept to their allotted time, and prayer should be short.

Mr. MYALL (London) said that a remarkable movement was going on in connection with one of the universities of this country. It came about in this way. A few young men, undergraduates, came together and prayed that God would give them some work to do amongst their own young men. They saw their way to taking the large Town-hall of the place, and they arranged amongst themselves that every one who spoke should speak five minutes, and nobody but young men should speak to young men. They would have young men who understood the feelings of young men, to stir up their fellows. On the first Sunday they had an attendance of 500; on the second an attendance of 800; and on the third an attendance of 1,000; and in the last letter he had from the university, only two Sundays ago, it was stated that the prayer-meeting which was held on the Sunday evening after the service in the churches was so largely attended that, in addition to occupying five rooms in the Town-hall, they had to go to the Young Men's Christian Association, in another street. In conducting young men's meetings, Mr. Myall urged that speakers should not be allowed more than two or three minutes, for then they would be more likely to speak to the point than if they had a longer time allotted to them. And if their audience was composed of educated young men, they should by all means get educated young men to address them.

Mr. ALEXANDER BROWN, of Liverpool, remarked that it had been his privilege to be present at a good many evangelistic meetings for young men which had been alluded to by Mr. Annesley, of Claughton; and he (Mr. Brown) believed these to be models. They were conducted by young men almost entirely. The aim had been to get young men to speak; and God had raised up young men with such power of speaking, that the meetings had been delightful. The meetings were opened with singing and prayer; then a passage of Scripture was read, and a few pointed remarks were made occupying perhaps a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes. This part of the service lasted about three quarters of an hour; and the last quarter of an hour was devoted to testimony, the meeting being thrown open. He was not able to explain how the blessing had come, but it had come. By these kind of meetings the work at Claughton had been carried on; and he commended the plan to those who were thinking of beginning a work amongst young men. Perhaps after a time it might be profitable to throw the meeting entirely open for testimony, but a great many had to be taught.

Mr. BURSON said that in Montreal they had evangelistic meetings on Saturday night and Sunday night. They found, some time ago, that in the after-meeting they could not bring out any real results. Those who were anxious were asked to stand up, but nobody stood up, and the Christians came to the conclusion that every one must take his man and sit by him during the meeting, and at the end speak to him about his soul. This personal dealing with the unconverted, in a business-like way, as if they meant it, had resulted in great accessions. They had made an arrangement with the railway companies to put on the tickets a notice of their meetings, so that every passenger coming into Montreal knew exactly where to come to. They had a large band of young men who went into the hotels, saloons, and billiard-rooms, and brought the people out. This band got into trouble sometimes, but their very best workers that day in Montreal were the men who had been brought out of billiard-rooms. One of the brightest ornaments of the association was a young man who was in a billiard-room one night when the band of visitors entered. One of the visitors handed to him a card of invitation to the meeting. He gave him a kick, and told him to "get out." It was his turn to play; but while his opponent was playing, his attention was arrested by the text of Scripture on the invitation. It reached his heart, he went to the meeting, and found Christ. Sometimes they went to the doors of the billiard-saloons and hotels to sing. Sometimes they got put out, but they did not mind. The great thing in Christian work is courage.

Mr. JOSEPH FALCONER (Liverpool) urged the importance of increasing prayer and increasing expectation, and said that when these were combined, they would have happy meetings and powerful work at the end. He had noticed that where there was a good prayer-meeting in the committee-room beforehand, there was always a good meeting after.

Mr. WM. GRIFFITHS (Bangor) suggested the holding of meetings specially for seamen, as Liverpool was a seaport.

Mr. SHAW, of Birkenhead, said that if young converts were to thoroughly understand that the meetings were their own, they would be more useful than what they now were. A convert might be asked to open with prayer, and read a portion of Scripture. This would bring them out, and they would go forward and do greater work for the Master.

Mr. J. WALKER, of Liverpool, said that those who spoke at young men's meetings should speak, not to air their own eloquence, as he was sorry to say he had heard some do, but with the direct purpose of souls being brought to Christ. Some of the best meetings for young men there had been marred by young men getting up evidently to let themselves be heard; and he could assure them that nothing was so jarring to a young man's feelings as seeing a person getting up to speak for the sake of speaking. Every young man who spoke at an evangelistic meeting had a great responsibility upon his shoulders. For his address he would have to answer one day. Either it would be the means of leading some to Christ, or of repelling some. Oh that young men were more fired with a real love for souls!

Mr. THOMAS STOREY, of Liverpool, said the chairman of an evangelistic meeting should be some wise man who knew how to take the lead. There was plenty of work for the young men, if they would pray for the chairman. Before going to these meetings, he had made it a rule to pray for the chairman, and the chairman should himself pray for a blessing on the meeting. A chairman would never get prosy who had wrestled hard with God for a blessing on the services; and the religious zeal which he felt would pass into the others.

Mr. E. E. WALTERS, of Liverpool, said it was not so difficult to get up an evangelistic meeting now as it was a few months ago, and as it would be when the present enthusiasm, for which they thanked God, had, in a measure, passed away. It was therefore all-important that they should consider the question, how to get the people together. The meetings should be held in a nice room, in as nice a neighbourhood as they could, or in just the neighbourhood where the people whom they wished to get in resided, whatever class that might be. It was not the poor alone whom they wanted to reach; they desired to get at the rich young men as well. The importance of open-air work in getting up evangelistic meetings was very great. Young men should band themselves together to take an interest in a special district, or special meeting, and go round the neighbourhood with tracts, or circulars, or advertisements, and induce young men to attend the meeting. Then the meetings would be successful, and the work of making them successful would not all rest on the chairman. The best chairman was a man who would not talk, but just set the meeting going, and keep it going. He would not have the meetings stereotyped, so that the people might know just when you were going to speak, and read, and pray; and great care should be taken to secure that the addresses were short, and to the point. If the chairman found a speaker was not making himself interesting, he should pull his coat-tails, or in some other way stop him.

Mr. SAMUEL NASH (secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, Liverpool) remarked that little had been said about the individual effort which was also necessary if the meetings were to be made "increasingly successful." With a view to much success and blessing in the work there must be unity, and both private and public waiting upon God in believing prayer; and, in addition, in order to fill these large buildings, young men must be willing to go out into the streets and persuade young men to attend. True, they must make the meetings attractive and interesting, so as to keep the young men who have been induced once to attend; but they must also see to it that they make the meetings very widely known. The respectable young men should not be ashamed to go out into the streets, invitation-slips or cards in hand, and button-hole young men of their own class, inducing them to come to the meetings. If they wanted to get the respectable and better class young men to attend, why the better class young men should not be ashamed to go out themselves into the streets, inviting their fellows to the meetings, remembering, "'tis for Christ's sake." Working-men and others should likewise go out (two-and-two is best) inviting those of their own class to come to the meeting. In conclusion, he urged that there should be a variety of meetings, which would largely contribute to make the movement attractive and popular, such as a praise-meeting, a promise-meeting, fellowship-meeting, experience-meeting, a meeting for young converts, another for older Christians, a soldiers'-meeting, a sailors'-meeting, a carters'-meeting, one for policemen, another for young men in offices, in shops, in warehouses, for costermongers, and so on—with all these, an efficient choir, and, with God's blessing, the work would go on.

A few minutes having been spent in silent prayer, the Chairman said he had received the following telegram from the young men's meeting, Birmingham:—"We greet you; pray for us and the young men of Birmingham. We shall pray for your Convention meetings."

Mr. William T. B. Patterson (late of Montreal, Canada) led in prayer, and a hymn was sung.

The Convention then proceeded to discuss the subject of

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH THE YOUNG CONVERTS?

Mr. J. T. AYMEERS (Dublin) opened the discussion. He said that the great necessity of coming to a right decision upon this subject was shown by the fact that they had seen young converts destroy themselves, and that they had seen others destroy them, to the best of their power. He was speaking the other day to a young man who was leaving a meeting, and who told him that his wife had been converted at one of the meetings, and that she scarcely had the courage to take out a ticket as a convert, she was so tender-hearted and sensitive upon the subject. However, she gave in her name, and the ticket was sent to her minister, that he might look after her. That minister was one of those very High Churchmen—so high and dry, that he put the ticket in a nice envelope, and sent it to the lady back again through the penny post. That treatment seemed to give her soul a shock which almost drove her back into the world. Thank God, all ministers were not like that. Their hearts were often pained when they came to speak to those who remained behind after their meetings, because among them were persons who were not asking the way for the first time, but who had seen the face of the Sun of Righteousness before; who had rejoiced in Him for a while, and had, somehow or other, got their backs turned upon Him, and were looking at their own shadow, forgetting that the Sun was shining on them all the time. How much the Lord had laid upon them who were older Christians to do for young converts! It seemed to him that the mistakes young converts made arose from a wrong idea of what conversion was, and of the position of the convert as related to Christ. They seemed, some of them, after they had got hold of the truth, to rejoice in it for a while, and afterwards they looked back to their conversion, resting on that, instead of feeding on Christ daily. They seemed to think that, after conversion, they had just to rest in peace, and go on in a glorious, happy existence to the end. The conversion of a soul was only the beginning of the new life. It was often said, in answer to the question, "What shall we do with the young converts?" "Put them to work." That is very good. By all means set them to work, but be cautious how you do so, and what work you give them to do. St. Paul, writing to the Philippians, prayed that their love might "abound in knowledge, and in all judgment." That was where a great many people made a mistake. They must take care how they put converts to work. It was not always a wise thing to put a handful of tracts into the hands of a young convert, delicate and tender in feelings. Send him into an alley to deliver them, and he perhaps got them thrown in his face, or was himself kicked out. Such treatment would almost kill some converts. The work which young converts should be put to was the work for which they were individually fitted. In a measure, all Christians were young converts. They were all very ignorant, they had all to learn a great deal, and they must be constantly taught from the Word of God; and this constant teaching was particularly necessary in the case of young converts.

Mr. ROBERT JACKSON, of Liverpool, suggested that the attention of converts should be constantly directed to passages of Scripture calculated to strengthen them; and they must be looked after. Their names should be obtained and sent to the various ministers with a request that they would look after them. Christians needed to put on the "whole armour of God," and converts should be urged to do so by study of the Bible and other means.

Mr. JAMES SCOTT (Glasgow) said that in Glasgow the first thing they did was to send the names of young converts to the ministers of the various congregations with a request that they would see them. Then a fellowship meeting for young converts was held on Monday evenings. To give the young converts exercise, something to do, they got three or four to go out into the streets and stand up and tell what the Lord had done for them, and some of the statements thus made were delightful. If a young convert told just what the Lord had done for him, and did not try to preach sermons, people would listen to him. Young converts needed to be taught, they must study the Bible for themselves, and along with the reception of the Word there must be testimony. It was, he thought, in some cases, the best thing that could happen to a young convert to get into some work where he would meet with opposition, perhaps abuse and violence, for then he could say, "I am in the way of my Master, and of the apostles, and of all who have faithfully followed Christ."

After some remarks from Mr. Edgar and Mr. R. McDougall,

Dr. ZIEMANN urged that Christians should make friends of, and show increased love for, the young converts, who often by their conversion would lose all their old friends.

Mr. PLANT, of Bootle, thought that the main reason why young converts fell away was that they did not know their Bibles.

Mr. JONES (Wrexham) thought that young converts should be urged to join a church, and be brought under the notice of the ministers. He did not believe in indiscriminately setting young converts to distribute tracts.

After some remarks from Mr. George T. Coombs, of Birkenhead,

The Hon. Captain MORETON said in dealing with young converts, they must be guided more by the character and capacity of the individual than by any general advice of that meeting. This was a matter which should be prayed much about. A very important thing was to see about the young converts' walk; if that were all right, they need not be much afraid. He should not advise putting a young convert in the chair at meetings; that might spoil him, by lifting him up. He suggested that a young convert might, perhaps, be allowed to read the requests for prayer, so that he might feel he had some part in the meeting.

Mr. MYALL thought the first thing they should do before setting a young convert to work, was to ascertain what had been his besetting sin; and take care that he was not put into positions where that would be likely to be developed.

Mr. BIGLAND (Oxton) thought that all young converts, though they could not preach, could tell what the Lord had done for them; and in so doing, they would be using the best means of bringing others to Christ.

After a few words from Mr. Leonard, of Boston, and a minute or two of thanksgiving and prayer, the meeting, which was characterized throughout by great spirit and enthusiasm, was adjourned punctually at ten o'clock until the following evening.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The Convention was resumed on Friday evening, the 21st, at Newsome's Circus. Mr. Henry Drummond (of Stirling) again presiding. The attendance of young men was much larger than on the previous evening, and the number of leaders in the revival movement all over the country who were represented on the platform, was very large.

The proceedings of the second meeting very appropriately opened with a prayer-meeting, which lasted for half-an-hour, the devotional exercises being conducted by several clergymen and laymen.

After the hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," had been sung, the business portion of the Convention was resumed by a paper and discussion on

YOUNG MEN'S BIBLE-CLASSES.

The subject was introduced by Mr. W. HIND SMITH, Secretary of Young Men's Christian Association, Manchester. After a few preliminary remarks, Mr. Smith said: The subject which I have to introduce this evening is, "Young Men's Bible-classes: 1st, Their importance and object; 2nd, The qualifications of the conductor."

And, first, I must say I think it is impossible to over-estimate the importance of young men's Bible-classes. Whether it be the class held for the special purpose of bringing to bear upon unregenerate minds the leading truths of the gospel, or the class for the mutual edification and instruction of Christian young men in searching into the Word of God, both are alike important. It would be difficult to enumerate all the advantages which result from such meetings held with the avowed object of exploring the Bible—that mine of wealth, that most wonderful book that was ever written, affording an exhaustless subject for profound study, and demanding the diligent thought of all Christians. By meeting together to "search the Scriptures," acknowledging our ignorance and our dependence upon the Great Teacher for light, we may well and wisely give utterance to that effectual prayer, "Speak, Lord, for thy servants hear."

I am not surprised at the suggestion thrown out by Dr. Thomson, of New York, that it would be well if one of the religious services of every church were a Bible-class for the whole congregation; I am satisfied that such expository and catechetical teaching would be productive of great benefit.

There are three kinds of Bible-classes, all of which are applicable to young men. The first, and that to which I shall chiefly confine myself, is largely frequented by strangers. This class affords an excellent opportunity of setting forth the plan of salvation. I believe that the Christian Association workers generally regard this as the most effective agency in winning young men to Christ. The second class, usually held on a week evening, is for the systematic and more critical study of the Word of God. The third class is specially intended for the training of Sunday-school teachers.

I leave the claims of these two latter important classes, for the systematic study of the Word, almost untouched, owing to my inability in an address of this length to do them justice, and turn my attention chiefly to the consideration of the evangelistic or conversational Bible-class. Before doing so, however, allow me to impress upon my co-workers the exceeding value of meetings amongst young Christians, for the avowed object of searching the Scriptures. Brethren, depend upon it we need to meet more frequently than we do for this purpose. We ought to be better acquainted with our Bibles. The more we know of God's revealed will, the more shall we love to do that will. The better we understand the sword of the Spirit, the more effective shall we be in the use of it. Let us remember the word of command from the Master, "SEARCH the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of Me." The entrance of the Word giveth light, and life, and power. A right understanding of the Bible will fit us for our private life, and for our public usefulness. In these quiet meetings for the useful study of God's Word, I have seen the wonderful progress made by young disciples in their growth in grace, especially by such as, owing to their youth and inexperience, are unprepared to undertake work in the vineyard, for doing which successfully the study of the Word is essential. I think, therefore, that every branch of this work amongst young men should have such a class, devoted entirely to the systematic and prayerful study of the Bible. Again, as we have so many young men with us who are identified with Sunday-schools—and with all my heart I say, the more the better—let us also have a weekly meeting, where we can help one another to a right understanding of the work we have to do, and how we ought to do it. Let us never forget, in our work amongst young men, that we are not only an auxiliary to the church, but also to the Sunday-school, the nursery of the church. Let it be known to the esteemed ministers of the churches, and to superintendents of Sunday-schools, that we not only seek the salvation of young men, but the building up of such in their most holy faith, thereby to fit them for spheres of future usefulness. This will doubtless keep us, as I pray we ever may be kept, allies with them in the work of God. Is not the cry coming up from all sides, "Oh for more intelligent Sunday-school teachers—such as know and can present the truth!" May the Lord of the harvest help us to raise up such an army of students of God's Word, who shall respond to the call, and be of real use when they have responded!

I must now return to my chief subject, viz., the Evangelistic Bible-reading. Difficulties have been suggested, and I have been asked, not only how such a class should be prepared for, but how conducted; and, further, how unconverted young men would be induced to attend, what were the qualifications of the conductor, etc. Before entering further on the subject, I will answer these questions.

1. How to prepare for the class. By a prayerful study of the passage, and the use of all available helps from other minds.

2. How conducted. Begin with a lively hymn and a short prayer. Read the passage, and give a brief exposition. Do not be prosy; be suggestive, rather than exhaustive. An illustration or two will be useful. Sing a verse, and then have the meeting open for half-an-hour, inviting any one to ask a question, or turn to a parallel passage, or say something to the general edification. Watch against long talkers, and put them down. Encourage the inquirer. Always have a few young men present upon whom you can rely, either to keep quiet, or to keep up the conversation, as may be needed. There should be a good understanding on this point between the conductor and his young men. A glance of the eye ought to call up the right help at the right time, as is the case in the Liverpool Young Men's Christian Association Bible-class. Brother Nash can give us the exact idea or plan he adopts, and finds successful. The class should be brought to a close by an earnest address from the conductor, in which a brief sketch of the subject may be given, and an earnest exhortation to every unconverted young man to accept a free, full, and precious salvation. The whole meeting should not last more than an hour.

3. How shall we induce unconverted young men to come to our evangelistic Bible-reading? (a) Put out at the place of meeting a big poster, or black-board, on the morning of the day, containing announcement of the class, time, etc., and thus invite all young men to come. (b) Let the conductor of the class meet, say, half-a-dozen young members of the class at the room, about three-quarters-of-an-hour before the meeting, and let them all pray for a blessing upon their endeavours. (c) Let the six young men go out on the principal thoroughfares next the place of meeting, and give slips and kind words of invitation to every young man they meet, and, in cases where there is no response, leave the gospel slip in their hands, and pray God to incline them to come to Him. (d) Do not be discouraged if ninety-nine out of the hundred refuse to accept your invitation. Go on; stick to your work, remembering that duty is yours, the result is God's, and that one young man brought to hear words whereby he may be saved is worth all the effort expended.

From the varied nature of the classes mentioned, it will be seen that, while there are some general qualifications requisite to the teacher, there are others that are peculiarly needed. My object on this occasion is to suggest what are of general application, and especially such as should be possessed by the conductor of the Evangelistic Bible-class. In order to fully realize those which are actually required, we should do well to look at the necessities of the case, and the magnitude of the work contemplated by this meeting, or, as your programme has it, the object of the Bible-class.

We seek to be instrumental, in the Lord's hands, in bringing souls out of darkness into light, in raising the dead to life, in giving eyes to the blind and ears to the deaf, in reclaiming the wanderer, and, in fact, in carrying on the mission of our blessed Lord, "To destroy the work of the devil."

The leader of a young men's Bible-class must be not only a converted man, but "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith," and consecrated heart, and soul, and life, to the service of the Master. The class of young men we seek to reach, compass, and, by God's help, bless, includes the thoughtless, reckless, gay and dissipated, the blind, lame, withered—the babes in Christ, the strong men, strong in convictions or crotchets; the earnest, anxious inquirers, and the backsliders; also, the sleepy, drowsy Christians, the indifferent and satirical, self-righteous Pharisees, moral and immoral characters. Our Bible-class should be a veritable Pool of Bethesda, into which we, in conscious and constant dependence upon the Angel of the Covenant to come and trouble the waters, may assist the needy to step in and be healed of whatsoever disease they have. Let us never forget that the primary object of our Bible-class work is to bring unconverted young men under the saving influence of the gospel.

And now, in dealing more particularly with "The teacher and his qualifications," I unhesitatingly say that, in the first place, he should be a man of God, a man of earnest piety, a "good man," who not only teaches the way of life, but lives it; whose religious character will speak, as well as his tongue. Many excellent qualities will be neutralized if the life is not right. There is a power in real Christian worth.

In the next place, the teacher should be a man of faith. He should have faith in the importance of the work; faith in the love and presence of God to enlighten the mind and affect the heart; faith in the blessed weapon, "the sword of the Spirit," which he is privileged to wield; faith in the value of the soul, always realizing the importance of the charge committed to his care in dealing with and influencing those who shall soon prove blessings or curses, scourges or benefactors. The teacher should be conscious of the power that surrounds and sustains him, confident that the work is of God, and that, however weak and failing may be the instrument, He will not fail who has promised. Whoever may doubt, the teacher should be confident. Whoever may be tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, the teacher of a young men's Bible-class should be fully persuaded in his own mind. Next, he should be well informed in the Book he undertakes to teach. Further, he must be apt to teach, not only himself accepting the truth, but able to set it before others, expounding and applying it. He should also be able to draw out the mind, as well as to inform it, bringing to light the dead capital that may exist within. The teacher should, moreover, have a well-disciplined mind. He will have to deal with difficulties; and whilst it may not be wise to be hindered by mere crotchets, it is necessary to be able to meet such difficulties as may be presented by honest and yet somewhat sceptical thinkers, who may at the same time be earnest inquirers. It is only a self-disciplined teacher who will be able to exercise that consideration and general forbearance which some of the frequenters of our Bible-classes require, where the special temperament, education, or habit may have fostered a state of mind which only the man who has himself firmly in hand can cope with or intelligently satisfy.

The teacher should be a man of good sound judgment and common sense, having a clear and well-defined idea of what he is about—one who understands the young man's temptations and besetting dangers; one who remembers being himself a young man, and the difficulties and snares peculiar to early manhood; one able to warn, entreat, and persuade in the spirit of love.

He should be a faithful man, by which I mean a man who will not shrink from the duty, however painful, of "declaring at all times the whole counsel of God." A compromising spirit can take the edge off an otherwise good and effective class. He should be a sympathetic man, not only as beforementioned, understanding the temptations peculiar to young men, but able to deal tenderly and brother-like towards those who are thus beset; understanding that a loving heart will often effect what argument never can. As the Saviour "wept over Jerusalem," the Bible-class conductor should know what it is to yearn and weep over his class. The constant remembrance of the great love wherewith he has been and is loved, should ever affect the teacher of a young men's Bible-class.

He should be cheerful, "not bilious," as our American brethren have it, of a happy disposition, being happy, and letting people see it. The Dean of Norwich has a threefold heading for a speech, which would be very applicable in this case. The divisions are as follow:—1. Be cheerful.

2. Be cheerful. 3. BE CHEERFUL.

The Bible-class leader should be a persevering man, persevering even when his work involves self-denial; and a patient man, willing to plod on should he see no results.

God is so good as frequently to withhold results, lest we should be injured.

He should be a punctual man, never allowing the class to wait for him. He should be manly and dignified while unassuming. He should be affable, genial, easily accessible, especially to those who most need his counsel in private. I attach much importance to this, believing, as I do, that private, or, as some of our friends denominate them, "button-hole" conversations, are invaluable helps to young men.

He should be a generously-minded man. Whilst affecting a judicious exclusion of controversy and irrelevant matters, he should respect the opinions of others. A crotchety, narrow-minded man, who can only sympathize with those whose views are exactly his own, is not the man for a Bible-class conductor.

Lastly, he should be a downright earnest man, what my American friends would denominate a "live man," and what the Yorkshire people call a "wick one." Our esteemed brother, George Williams, says that "all leaders in young men's meetings should be warm-hearted men." The teacher must have his heart in the work as well as his head. Nay, he must go beyond the ordinary acceptation of the term "earnest"—he must be enthusiastic. His earnestness should tell in deep anxiety for the salvation of the frequenters of his class; he should labour to win souls, being fully persuaded that whatever other good may be accomplished, if young men are not brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, the great end will be unattained.

(At this point the quarter of an hour allotted to Mr. Smith's opening had expired, but the Chairman said he was sure it would be the unanimous wish of the meeting that the remainder of the excellent paper should be published in THE CHRISTIAN in connection with the special report of that Convention.)

The following is the other division of the paper which was left unread:—I come now to the third part of my subject, "The conversational element, and how it may be fostered." And first, I have found the class most useful when the conductor's exposition is given uninterruptedly, followed by the conversation, and concluded by a summing up address, a condensed outline of the main principles of the gospel, especially such as may legitimately be drawn from the subject in hand. I would recommend that the teacher never forget that his work is to save souls, and that young men cannot be reminded too often of their need of Christ, and of his infinite love and willingness to receive them into his service. Here is the opportunity which, if lost, may be for ever lost, of presenting God's claims and man's responsibility.

The province of the conversational element in the Bible-class must vary according to circumstances. It may not always be convenient to admit of much talking. The limitation or exclusion must be left to the good judgment of the conductor, who should have his eyes in his head, and will (if he is what he ought to be) soon be able to measure his audience, and discern their character. The proper time for the conversation is following, not accompanying or preceding, the exposition. Some attenders are so ready to hear their own voice as to forget themselves, and break in upon the exposition ere the proper time has arrived. This ought never to be allowed. A firm rein must be held here.

The conversational element is certainly out of its province when it lapses into discussion and argument. Care must also be taken that the remarks keep within the circle of the subject. This department needs great care and watchfulness.

It is sometimes wise to hold on with the exposition, and then call on some discreet member to lead off the conversation on the right line rather than expose the class to the infliction of hearing a meaningless oration from a forward, wordy man, who has simply come to the Bible-class to ventilate his opinions, or to exhibit his own ability. Long-winded men must be avoided. Let the remarks be short, and to the point, or stop at once; one prosy man may do irreparable damage. I know of no portion of our work needing greater wisdom on the part of the conductor than the half-hour between the closing of the exposition and the winding up of the class; and yet, with all these limitations and cautions, we desire that all should take part who can contribute anything to the general profit, or may honestly desire further help. The opportunity to speak will prove a great blessing to those who are earnest seekers after divine light.

This brings me to my last topic, "How can the conversational element be fostered?" First, I would say, by the conductor giving time for it. By this I mean that he should not be so loquacious as to occupy so much time in lengthy explanatory expositions as to leave none for conversation, thus hurrying those who might be otherwise inclined to take part.

Secondly, that the exposition should be interspersed with frequent suggestive questions.

Thirdly, I suggest also that the conductor give repeated invitations to the frequenters to speak.

Fourthly, that he specially encourage the diffident. Should a single parallel passage be referred to, or a remark be made, however feebly done, let it be responded to by a nod or a smile, or a word of recognition. Do not let the weakest go unnoticed. It may be their first attempt, and, perhaps, the first utterance of that blessed spirit of inquiry within, which, if fostered, may lead to salvation.

And fifthly, I recommend the presence of a staff of young men, able and willing to sustain the conductor.

It will be unnecessary to enlarge, except briefly, on the last suggestion. In large and somewhat uncertain classes, it would be well if some half-dozen young men, having previously studied the subject with the conductor, say at the Saturday evening class, would hold themselves responsible to lead off and sustain the conversation. With this understanding, it is not difficult for the teacher, through the telegraph of the eye, to signify his wishes to his helpers. By this means I have seen a common difficulty overcome, and an obnoxious or intrusive speaker, imperceptibly to himself, talked down. In these cases, tact is as much in demand as talent.

In conclusion, I pray God that a mighty army of Bible-class conductors may be raised up, who shall possess all the needful qualifications for the carrying on of our glorious mission amongst young men; conductors who shall prepare themselves for the work as though everything depended on themselves, and then teach, feeling that everything is of and from God, who worketh in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

Mr. Wm. MUIR (late of Aberdeen) said he presumed the object of the discussion would be as to the best means of carrying out the work of the Bible-class amongst young converts in 1875. About 5000 people in Liverpool had recently accepted Christ, many of whom were very ignorant, and therefore the chief object ought to be spiritual instruction just now. Division of labour in the work of Bible-class teaching was a great thing. If they could find a man with great zeal, great genius, great learning, good temper, and perfect tact—in fact, if they could find a perfect man, according to Mr. Smith's standard, give him a class by all means, and nothing would go wrong. But they could not find such a man, and what was to be done, in that case, with the imperfect materials which they had? His suggestion was, allow the Bible to teach itself in a large measure in their classes. Let a subject be given out, let the members search the Scriptures, and at the next meeting let each one bring a text or passage, and compare them upon the matter, and no doubt great good would result. It might be asked, What parts of the Bible are best adapted for Bible-classes? That was simply answered. If the Bible-class be one of young Christians, surely that part of the Bible which was written by Christians for Christians was the most appropriate; the Epistles of St. Paul and St. John, for example. Take these and the other Epistles, and select subjects (of which there were plenty) for the Bible-classes, and the result was sure to prove interesting and instructive.

Mr. W. J. B. PATTERSON (Montreal) also advocated the greater use of the Scriptures in connection with their classes. Dr. Thompson, of New York, at a Young Men's Convention in Poughkeepsie, New York, said it was a wonder how so many professing Christians managed to exist on such small portions of Scriptural food, and it was a proof of the infinite richness of food when even crumbs promoted such life. How little time did they give to the study of God's Word! The Bible was often kept out of sight in the day school; the children were taught everything except the Bible, and a quarter or half an hour on Sunday seemed to be considered all that was necessary! It was not necessary to show that the study of the Bible was of the highest importance; they all realized that. It really must be the Word of God which should convince the heart, and if they desired to be zealous Christians and faithful men, and exercise the influence upon those who surrounded them which they ought to do, they must be thoroughly informed as to the mind of the Spirit and have the word of truth in their hearts. He took it that the main object of the Bible-classes was for the instruction of those weak in the faith, and for the conversion of souls. It must be painful to many true Christians to hear, night after night, the number of requests for prayer sent in for those who had "fallen back;" but when it was considered how little they fed upon the Word, it was no wonder that they became poor and miserable, and really fell away. In conducting a class, he (Mr. Patterson) thought the leader should avoid asking very pointed questions from a timid or stranger young man, as that was calculated to drive him away. The leader of a class ought never to be ashamed to confess his ignorance, nor try to explain a thing away when he is really ignorant of the matter, as it might injuriously affect the honest inquirer. Extraneous discussion should never be allowed to take the place of practical questions. In the Bible there was something fit for every circumstance in life, and it ought not to be treated as an ordinary book. They ought to ask God to give them light to read it aright and to profit, and always approach its study in an earnest Christian spirit.

Mr. WILKIE said he had a suggestion to give from his experience of one of the largest classes in Glasgow. Having upwards of a hundred young men in connection with the class, considerable difficulty was experienced in getting personally acquainted with them. This difficulty, however, had been solved by one of the most experienced young men arranging to meet the stranger, either at his own house, or the home of the new member. They thereby ascertained more clearly how he stood in relation to Jesus Christ, and several conversions had resulted from this method. Mr. Wilkie gave one or two instances of good resulting from this plan, and said they were sufficient to show that, in connection with every Bible-class, there ought to be one appointed, with the great object of winning the new member to Jesus Christ, if he is not already a believer, and getting him into harness as soon as possible.

Mr. EDMUND BUCKLEY (Liverpool) said he believed it was the bounden duty of every new convert to attach himself to some church, chapel, or place of meeting which he may prefer, and make himself acquainted with the conductors of the Bible-class. As regarded the manner in which these classes should be conducted, he (Mr. Buckley) confessed that he did not quite agree with Mr. Smith in thinking that they should be republican. He knew from experience that where some one could be got who was well informed in the Scriptures, it was a great help to the work. Instruction of the young should be as elementary as possible; they could only believe as much as they knew, and they knew that Jesus Christ had come into the world to save sinners, and often very little more.

A working-man strongly urged the desirability of young converts getting Bible-classes formed for spiritual instruction in places where they did not at present exist. If a young man had his name written in the Lamb's book of life, he ought to see that his name was also written in the book in connection with the Bible-class.

Mr. J. JONES (Wavertree) said the great object of their teaching in the Bible-class ought to be to bring every member to Christ. They ought to ask God's blessing before going to the class, and read the portion of Scripture for study, with prayer. They heard a great deal about preparation for other kinds of work, and why should they not show the same zeal in reference to God's work. If young men would try to get up early in the morning for study of God's Word, they would find it very refreshing, and they would be enabled to speak with greater earnestness, and have a larger amount of God's blessing on their labours. Mr. Jones also counselled a systematic reading of the Bible, special study over the subject to be brought before the class, and an invariable asking of God's blessing on all their undertakings.

The Rev. W. H. M. H. AITKEN said he had a suggestion to make, and that just in a sentence. He thought that notice should be given that, on the following week, a certain subject would be taken up, and considered, and each member would then be expected to bring some passage in illustration of the subject. It might only be a single text, but that might throw much light upon the subject, and thereby they would get greater information, and the Bible-meetings would be much more profitable.

This closed the discussion on the subject of "Bible-classes."

After a short prayer by Mr. Miller, of Edinburgh, that God would teach all the young men to love the Bible more, the Convention proceeded to discuss the second subject on the evening's programme,

THE EXTENSION TO OTHER LOCALITIES OF THE WORK AMONG YOUNG MEN, BOTH IMPORTANT AND DESIRABLE.

Mr. ALEXANDER PITT, of Liverpool, opened the question with the following address:—I often used to think when I was younger that Euclid was a fool, in proving many things that appeared to me to want no proof at all. Propositions which were plain and palpable to the eye, and which I would willingly accept as self-evident, without the cumbersome and sometimes very mysterious argument with which he demonstrated them true; and many and many a time have I wished him far enough with his laboured proofs, bothering my poor brains, and, as I then thought, wasting precious time; and with similar feelings I approach our subject now on turn for discussion, for the subject appears so self-evident and desirable, that I am sure no one here would challenge the statement, if allowed to pass without any endeavour to prove it true. But, as Mr. Nash thinks otherwise, and has given peremptory orders concerning this question, I must, as becomes a member of a Young Men's Christian Association, obey my superiors, and not set an example of contumacious, and may-be stupid, self-will. So let us to the consideration of the proposition given, "The extension of the work amongst young men, both important and desirable."

It is not clear at first sight what is meant by the phrase "this work;" whether it applies to meetings of a similar character to those which are held in this circls every evening, or to all sorts and kinds of endeavours to do good, and to bring young men to Christ. But as we last night were discussing "Young Men's Evangelistic Meetings," and "What shall be done with the Young Converts," and to-night the question of young men's Bible-classes has had our attention, and later on we shall consider "How to deal with young men individually, in winning them for Christ,"—I take it that the latter view is the correct one, and that by "this work" we are to understand any and every work, which has for its object winning young men, by God's grace and help, to a knowledge of and an absolute trust in Christ, as the Saviour from sin, the power of sin, and the punishment of sin.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that one would not be very much out of order if, in attempting to uphold this proposition and to prove it true, we entered at once into an elaborate analysis of Christianity itself. For if we can show that Christianity is a good thing, well then it stands to reason that its extension is both important and desirable. But not to weary you with such an analysis, allow me to make a short, concise statement of the character of Christianity, which I must ask you to accept. I doubt not you will willingly and thankfully do so, since we have not time to argue the question, and better still perhaps because I am thankful to think that there are so few here who care to gainsay it.

I submit that Christianity is (1) Purifying in its character; (2), Elevating in its tendency; (3) Beneficent in its outgrowth.

In other words—(1) Christianity purifies the man; (2) Christianity raises the man; (3) As the outgrowth of the first two, Christianity brings forth from the man fruit worthy of the Christian principle within.

It seems to me, James in his Epistle (Jas. iii. 17) upholds this idea, or rather he is my authority for it, "The wisdom that is from above is first pure;" there is its character. "Then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated;" there is its tendency. "Full of mercy and good fruits;" there is its outgrowth.

Surely, my dear fellow young men, if Christianity be a system that produces by its acceptance with the heart (as well as the head) such results as these I have named, and I submit that it is so, then its extension amongst all young men, nay, amongst everybody, is something both important and desirable.

The next question that arises is this, "Granted what has been advanced, have the young men's meetings of different kinds that have been held in Liverpool, been productive in bringing young men to Christ, and so leading them to accept the truths of Christianity?"

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that I have not been able for many reasons to see more of the various young men's meetings held in Liverpool, than what I have. But as regards the meetings held in this circus from night to night, I can confidently and thankfully say that they have been productive of good in this respect. Many and many a man have I heard saying, humbly, but overflowing with his new-found joy, that he had accepted Christ. Not that he had found Christ, but that Christ had found him, and that he was endeavouring by God's help to keep from sin and every evil way; that he was spending his time, not in evil ways, and amongst evil associates, but at home studying the Word of God, and seeking his own moral and spiritual good which had been so long neglected: and those of us who have attended these meetings from time to time, can thankfully testify to an ever-increasing improvement in the young men. In the Liverpool Mercury for to-day, the author of the article on our last night's meeting, says, that judging from the dress "most of the men appear to belong to the middle class." To some extent this may be true, but those who have been here most, can testify that many and many a man, well-dressed in this meeting to-night, was not so three months ago. The man having accepted Christ, finds himself a far richer and more decent man, than previously he did. And I have heard hundreds of young men testify during the last few months, to having experienced the saving power of the grace of God; and when you remember that many meetings besides this circus meeting have been held, who can tell what numbers of young men are now "clothed and in their right mind," rejoicing in the love of Christ. And may I not ask you to look at this meeting as a proof of this. To get a couple of thousand young men together for a religious purpose, and that in Liverpool, and I believe most of them Christians, is a monument in itself of the good that these young men's meetings have done.

This might easily be brought about in other localities. Brethren, the results are not ours—they are God's. It has been his Spirit at work that has done this—not the young men of Liverpool—and God is the same everywhere. To every person the address is, "Try Me and prove Me," saith the Lord, "and see if I will not pour you out such a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it," and on every place this blessing might come down. In every town there are some Christian young men, and many of these want stirring up. Deputations might be sent to cheer them up. This has been tried here in Liverpool, and has been eminently successful as far as we can judge; and so, the leaven spreading, shall leaven the whole lump.

There are two or three reasons with which I would urge the extension of this work, and the first of these is:—

1. Because young men who are not Christians are doing great harm. Sin, directly or indirectly, is hurtful to others as well as the wrong-doer. Many a young man has told me of his being led astray by the evil example and enticements of others. Whence come all our swearers, but from hearing others? And many a young woman has been ruined for life, oh! terribly ruined, by the sins of persons who ought to have been men. Do you want to do away with jails and reformatories, and consequent heavy taxes? Bring the young men to Christ. Do you want to do away with insobriety and disturbance, and to clear the streets of those wretched daughters of vice, more to be pitied than blamed? Bring the young men to Christ. Do you want to stop the ever-rising river of evil that is flowing down our streets? Bring the young men to Christ. This will be the grand panacea for all social and moral sores, and the only true preventive of all kinds of sin. Much discussion has taken place lately about the reduction of the national debt. There are advocates for special effort; for an annual payment out of the national exchequer, and for the use of surpluses as a means of reduction. But all these means appear spasmodic and uncertain. The plan that appears most feasible and sure is its reduction by what are called "terminating annuities." By these, gradually and surely, and unfelt, the whole debt will be done away with, provided, of course, nothing unforeseen arises, such as war, etc., to increase it. So of sin. We may try temperance, or morality, or acts of Parliament by the score; they may do something to decrease the sum of it, but they are uncertain. The only sure and safe way is the Divine way. Bring the people, and especially the young men, to Christ. Then temperance and all morality will follow, and like as the "terminable annuities" reduce the national debt, Christianity in the souls of all will soon bring evil to an end.

I ask for its extension (2) because Christianity exalts a man's idea of life. Of course, I speak of Christian young men who have brains enough, in quality and quantity, to understand Christianity with the head, as well as accept it with the heart. How many young men without Christ feel concerning life as Shakespeare represents Hamlet to feel, when he makes him say—

"O God! O God!
How weary, flat, stale, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!"

If a man is a Christian, and living up to his privileges as a Christian, he never could say this, or feel it either. No, Christianity in the soul makes a man feel that "life is real, life is earnest," and almost overcomes him with its grandeur and nobility. It causes him to realize he is a man, with a man's responsibilities, duties, privileges, and honours. I take it it was under this feeling that David cried out, "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels, and crownedst him with glory and honour." It tends to make him more a man of honour, of truth, of industry, because it gives him as an exemplar Him who is the embodiment of all these virtues, and others too, and tells him that imitation of Him, or rather internal likeness to Him (for imitation implies unreality), is necessary to spiritual growth, and to the true Christian man. It tells him that he is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and that he must not defile that temple with sin. It tells him that he is a son of God, through grace, and that he must live as becomes one so honoured. This, I take it, my fellow young men, is the influence of Christianity. Is it not elevating in its character?

Mr. Gladstone quotes a fine idea of Homer in his "Vaticanism," thus translated—

"On the day that makes a bondman of the free, Wide-seeing Zeus, takes half the man away."

May we not say, slightly altering the idea (remembering that "He is the freeman whom the truth makes free,

And all are slaves beside") that, on the day when a man is set free by truth, he regains, not loses, his true manhood. The complement is added, when Christ is received, to make him a man—

"God, when He makes a Christian,
Does not unmake the man."

I ask for the extension of this work amongst young men. (3) because England wants Christian young men of decided principle. The present time warns us that the future is ominous. I am no alarmist; but the young men of this country had better be opening their eyes to the position of things, and preparing for the future. Questions social, political, and religious, of a difficult character, are looming in the distance, and some are nigh us now; and if Christianity conduces to make a man hate the evil and cleave to the good; if it tend to make him more thoughtful, more earnest, and more real, and this thoughtfulness and earnestness be guided by a sound religious principle, then I submit that it better enables a man to do his part as a citizen of this great empire. The student of history well knows to what a depth of humiliation England fell in the days of James I. and his successor Charles, as well as the high position that it came to enjoy under the Protectorship of the God-fearing Oliver Cromwell, when the name of an Englishman gained the respect due to an ancient Roman, and a Cardinal of the Romish Church feared the Protector as he did the devil himself; and equally is it known the rapidity of the decline from this position that ensued under the succeeding Stuart kings.

If, as Lord Bolingbroke says, "History, by philosophy, teaches by examples," then I submit the philosophy of the past is, Bring the young men of Britain to Christ; bring England under the influence and power of a perfect and unadulterated gospel, and you may rest in peace, and leave Cardinal Manning to pursue his ecclesiastical conquest at his case.

And lastly, I ask for the extension of "this work to other localities," because it will bring fresh trophies to his feet—triumphs of redeeming love. It needs no argument to prove this. As every person saved from a watery grave by some brave mariner is an honour to the man who saves him, so every soul saved from eternal death by Christ, is to Him a trophy of his power—a monument to his grace. If He is in all things to have the pre-eminence, as most certainly He is, then every soul saved from sin, and brought to Christ, counts two in helping on that consummation—one taken from the losing side, and one added to that which wins. Glorified He is on earth by every fresh accession to his ranks; but when at the great day of account, he shall come forward to confess those that are his, "Here am I, and the children Thou hast given me," all tributes to his mercy, monuments of his power, trophies of his redeeming grace; then, and not till then, will his own saying be fully true, prophetic through the omniscience of the Speaker, as his eye rolled along the ages to "that day," as well as real to some smaller extent, at the time they were uttered, "I am glorified in them."

And surely if He then will be glorified in the number of his saints, love to Him now should prompt the gladsome toil that, by his blessing, will bring fresh honour to his feet!

There are many more reasons which, if time permitted, might be adduced in favour of the proposition given. Surely enough has been said, reasons sufficient to stamp it as true. Much of what I have suggested does probably appear presumptuous in one so young as I, but I beg you will place what appears so to my sincerity and earnestness, and not to presumption. I speak of those things I have tasted, and handled, and felt, and hence with all the greater confidence, I ask you for the reasons adduced, viz., that Christianity is (1) purifying in its character; (2) elevating in its tendency; and (3) beneficent in its outgrowth; that the young men's meetings in Liverpool have been eminently useful in bringing young men to Christ, and thus bringing them under these blessed influences; and for the reasons on which more especially I have dwelt—(1) that Christianity keeps a man from much evil to others; (2) that Christianity gives to a man a new and nobler idea of life; (3) that England wants Christian young men; and (4) because every young man saved will be an additional honour to our common Lord—I submit with all confidence "That the extension to other localities of this work amongst young men is both important and desirable."

This Report will be concluded in the Young Men's Special Number, next week.

FELLOWSHIP-CLASSES, LIVERPOOL.

In October last we formed a fellowship-class, to draw the working-men nearer to God, and nearer to each other, and to train them for usefulness in the district. This class has steadily increased, and now it numbers upwards of 160 members, who meet at half-past six every Saturday night, and spend the first hour in a singing practice. At half-past seven the fellowship-meeting begins with prayer, reading a portion of Scripture, followed by a short address. The men offer up prayer, and then the meeting becomes an experience meeting; and it is delightful to hear these dear men speak of the work of grace in their souls.

We have a similar class for women on Monday evening, which numbers about 120 members. Both classes increase every time they meet, and another meeting is held at Christ Church for young men, which is attended by upwards of 100. Hence, in the district of Christ Church alone, we have nearly 400 people banded together in the fellowship of the gospel.

The members become earnest workers, and reach their fellow-workmen in the factories, the docks, the warehouses, the streets, and in their homes, and try, by their example, and by their zealous efforts, to reclaim them from vice and misery.

Their spare time is devoted to visiting in the district; and we are organizing a plan by which every household will be brought under the influence of the movement. Other districts are adopting the plan; and, should it become general, the aspect of church work will be completely changed.

In the neighbouring district of St. Matthew's about 300 have been gathered into classes, and an earnest work is going on. The young men are holding meetings in the cottages and cellars of the working-men, and the elder children in the Sunday-school are useful in other ways. About twenty of our own boys have taken a cellar in one of our worst streets, where they hold prayer-meetings for the young, under the direction of their teacher. They pay the rent, and light the room, and fit it up at their own expense, and scour the street every evening to get other lads in.

We have been too often charged with coldness and formality in our work, but there is no reason why we should not infuse new life into it, and become the very soul of a religious impulse, founded on the pure and evangelical truths of the Word of God. Our dear people give their experience in the words of Holy Scripture, and encourage each other to live near to the Saviour. This is the more cheering, because only a few months ago they were living in sin and grovelling in intemperance, but now they delight in the experimental parts of the Word of God, St. John being their favourite writer. The Scriptural basis of our fellowship classes may be found in the following passages:—John iii. 16; Rev. xxii. 17; Mal. iii. 16, 17; 1 John i. 7. We have a fellowship-box which is divided into two compartments; the weekly contributions in one are applied to the relief of sick members or of those who are out of employment; and the money from the other is spent in purchasing tracts for distribution among the working classes.

The movement is creating great interest in Liverpool, and many attend our meetings with a view of introducing them into other districts. The evangelizing meetings held at the Victoria Hall by Mr. Moody have done us good service since February, and our fellowship movement bids fair to be of inestimable benefit to the Church, by quickening her spiritual life, and calling forth her activity in reaching the masses through the working-men. What has been done in one district may be done in others. Christians of different denominations attend our meetings, and we feel that we are one in the fellowship of the Spirit, and in the bonds of brotherly love.

WORK AMONGST THE LIVERPOOL CARTERS.

A LEAF FROM A YOUNG MAN'S DIARY.

Sunday Afternoon, 2.50.—Went to a wooden building in Whitechapel, formerly held as a circus, but now by the young men for their various meetings. On the front of and about this building were many small posters, with the following headings:—"Young men's meeting every evening, from 9 to 10 o'clock;" "A service for working-men;" "Boys' meeting, no big fellows allowed;" "A carters' meeting every Sunday afternoon, from 3 to 4 o'clock. Come, and bring a friend." Entering, I took my seat among the boxes, and saw about 340 carters, and three women, who had found their way in by mistake.

3 o'clock prompt.—The chairman* rose, and gave out the 17th hymn—

"When He cometh, when He cometh,
To make up His jewels;
All His jewels, precious jewels,
His loved and His own."

The singing was conducted by a young man at an harmonium. It would be a treat for any one to hear the hearty way they all joined in the singing. After singing, a short prayer, with requests, was offered.

3.12. 25th hymn sung, "Safe in the arms of Jesus."

3.15. An earnest address was given on John iii. 16.

3.34. The 38th hymn was sung as a solo by a young man, the audience joining in the chorus, "God loved the world of sinners lost." The meeting was then left open for any one to give their testimony. Eight carters spoke of the love of Christ, and the change that had taken place in them. One said he was sorry to say that, one time, not long since, he would have been very uneasy all Sunday if he had not got drunk and thrashed his wife on Saturday night. But now things were changed. His wife, his child, and his cat all look for his return home, and he now loves to be with them. "This is what Jesus has done for me," he says.

3.55. The meeting was brought to a close by singing the 38th hymn, "Ring the bells of heaven," and the benediction. They had an inquiry-meeting afterwards, and five remained to be spoken to.

Monday, p.m. Going up — street, by the cart-stand, I saw a group of men, one man, named Ball, in the middle. As I passed, they said to me, "Come here; we want you. We were plaguing Bill a bit, and he got into a passion, and has come out with an oath. Was he converted last night? He told us this morning he was. We are no scholars, and don't know anything about these things." I said, "Well, Bill, my friend, what have you got to say?" With tears running down his cheeks he said, "I know Jesus is mine, and I am his, and He has pardoned me. But I used to be such a passionate chap, and these fellows know it; they have been trying to get me vexed all the morning, and at last I could not stand it, and in my passion came out with the oath. I feel vexed with myself, and am sorry I have done it. Christ will not leave me for that this time, will He?" Giving him suitable advice and encouragement, I turned, and pointed out to the other men the folly and foolishness of their ways, also their responsibility for such an act, and left them with the words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." At night I saw Bill and two of his mates at the Victoria Hall; they had come to be directed in the way of salvation.

Tuesday, noon. Read a short portion of God's Word, and spoke a few words to a number of carters while at their dinners in an excavation. It was received very kindly.

Evening, 8 o'clock. Met a number of carters in an empty stall of a large stable; had a short Bible-class, and a few words afterwards. Spoke of the love of Christ to them. The object of this meeting is to strengthen the believers, and to try and win their fellows who will not go into any place of worship. The Lord has blessed this work. While our meeting was going on, some were cleaning their horses or harness, waiting the while to listen.

Friday Evening. Met two carters at the Victoria Hall, persuading some of their fellows to give their hearts to Christ. One of them said to his friend, "Come, Jack, into the inquiry-room; thou wilt never repent it." When Jack said, "I don't like; look at my clothes," his mate said, "Jesus Christ will speak to thee as thou art. He'll nair look at thy clothes, and thou hast nowt to do with anybody else." Jack found that Jesus was his friend before he left.

Saturday Evening, 8 to 9 o'clock. Went to a church school-room. About forty carters were present, with the carters' missionary at the head, holding a Bible-class for half an hour, the remaining half-hour being spent in singing and prayer. A young man has promised to give them a quarter of an hour's instruction and drilling in singing Mr. Sankey's and other hymns. This is by their own request.

9 o'clock. In the Circus many spoke of how they were brought to the Saviour. One, a carter, said that he had received a number of small handbills of the young men's and other meetings, but without reading them, stuck them in his left-hand waistcoat pocket; but one Saturday night he said to his wife, "Lass, I have got a lot of papers here; I don't know what they are, but they will do for thee to light the fire with," taking one by one out of his pocket, and reading young men's meeting, carter's meeting, until he came to the twelfth, spreading them out in order upon the table, having a little fun to himself, and then saying, "What fools these men must be, wasting the money, paper, and time." He then said, "I will see if there are any more." "Oh, yes, one more, larger than the rest. I will put this in the middle." But that larger one was a tract with these words upon it, "Come to Jesus." "I was fixed to the spot," he said. "Thought a moment, and then said, 'All these are the twelve apostles, but this tract is Christ's word to me, 'Come to Jesus.' I said to my lass, 'I'll go to the meeting to-morrow afternoon.' I did so, and Jesus set me free." T. S.

A CARTER'S ACCOUNT.

When Messrs. Moody and Sankey were here, a young carter, C. E. W.—, was, by God's providence, led, prompted by a feeling of curiosity, to attend some of the services; but ultimately curiosity gave place to fear, fear to interest, and interest to peace and joy in believing. He at once set out to find what he could do for Christ, and meeting in the Circus one who has been labouring among carters, in connection with the Church of England Scripture-readers' Society, it was arranged to hold a meeting on Sunday afternoons for carters only. With this object in view, a committee of working-carters was formed, most of whom had found peace in Christ at the Victoria Hall services. The matter was laid in prayer before God, small bills were got for distribution, the expenses of which were borne by the men themselves, and our first meeting was attended by about 600. The average attendance, however, is about 300, and in order to induce the men to come, it was arranged that one of their number was to preside. This arrangement had a very good effect, and brought in many who otherwise would have kept away; but not only have our meetings been pretty well attended, but, what is still better, God's Spirit has been with us, and some who came just to see a lot of other carters, have been led to see themselves sinners, and to trust the sinner's Friend for their salvation, very many having professed to have found peace.

A Bible-class, which is held on Saturday evenings, from eight to nine, is also an offspring of our Sunday meetings. At our first class, twenty-five were present; that number has since more than doubled itself, fifty-four being present last Saturday, and here, too souls have been won to Christ. This class is conducted by Mr. G. Bozman, the reader before referred to. In order to bring more men under the influence of gospel preaching, a circular was sent to the master carters, some of whom take an active interest in the movement, and have made a liberal offer to supply us with a number of Bibles.

Our meetings are addressed by clergymen and laymen of different denominations, after which an experience-meeting is held, the testimony of the men being owned of God in many instances.

We earnestly request the readers of the Young Men's Number of THE CHRISTIAN to remember our meetings in their prayers, that God will continue to increase our number, and his blessing. A LIVERPOOL CARTER.

A WORD IN SEASON.

After the address at the Victoria Theatre, New Cut, last evening (the 26th), I went into the pit, and there met a young man who was on his way out. I asked him if he were "Safe in the arms of Jesus?" (we had just sung this beautiful hymn).

He said, "No; but I very much wish I were. I am very miserable, and very unhappy. I came to this place last night, and was very much impressed by what I heard, so I came again to-night."

We sat down and prayed, asking God to give us his blessing. I then asked him his difficulty. He said that he believed all the gospel, but was unable to grasp the precious gift of eternal life. I read to him John iii. 36; v. 24; vi. 47; and 1 Pet. ii. 24. He said he believed that Jesus did die for his sins.

I then asked him if he would not like to kneel down and thank and praise the merciful God for giving him this belief. He assented joyfully. We knelt down together, and he prayed most fervently for the blessing, and thanked and praised God that He had enabled him to believe that Jesus died for his sins; and, glory be to God, whilst he was praying, the merciful Father shed the light of his Holy Spirit into that poor fellow's soul; and he who had knelt down a wretched and unhappy sinner, rose from his knees, after thanking and praising God, a saved soul, full of joy, and love, and gratitude, and rejoicing in his Saviour.

FIRST ATTEMPTS.

It was on the 9th March last that the Lord graciously opened my eyes spiritually. On the following day I commenced to distribute handbills of the Moody and Sankey services at Victoria Hall. In giving them, I put on my best manners, and kindly invited the recipients to come to the meetings. In some cases the bills were received in a decent manner, and sometimes the reverse; others were inclined to converse and seemed anxious about their souls, to such I repeated texts of Scripture and related to them my own condition when the Lord Jesus met me. Many gave me their serious attention, and promised to think about spiritual matters and attend Victoria Hall, or some other place of worship. In other instances (these were drunkards), I was asked to call at their homes and accompany them to the Hall. I took two such one evening; one of them was somewhat intoxicated and went to sleep during the service, the other listened attentively and accompanied me again the next night, therefore I had a good opportunity to show him how Satan was working out his destruction; he has since attended several of the meetings of his own accord.

My humble opinion is, that the mode I have stated, viz., first handing a bill and then following it up by conversation, if the opportunity seems favourable, is preferable to abruptly button-holing and addressing people without first introducing your object by the aid of the handbill. J. E.

LEEDS YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The committee and members of this association have determined not to "slacken speed" during the summer months. An open air mission has been organized, and five young men's committees appointed for the purpose of carrying on meetings in as many districts in the town every week throughout the summer months. Several meetings have been held already. There has been little or no opposition, and a manifest blessing has rested on the work.

The Christian.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

THE Lord hath visited his people; and, as a consequence, his people are drawn to seek his face. On every hand, in every town, in every church, it would seem that there are some, be they few or many, who have ears to hear what the Spirit is saying unto the churches; and by a spiritual attraction, because they fear the Lord, they instinctively come together, and speak one to another. Thus it has been at Barnet and Mildmay for many years; thus at many Conferences, annual or special, which have lately shown a decided tendency to increase in number; and thus it was very remarkably at Oxford last year, and now still more wonderfully at Brighton.

Before proceeding further, can we do other than lift up our hearts in praise to God for the great work on the Continent? Pen cannot write the results of the visit of the foreign pastors to Oxford, the quickening and encouragement then received, and the results during the year that has succeeded—results which those who blamed as well as those who praised the Oxford Meeting are nevertheless constrained to acknowledge; for the fact of a great evangelistic awakening is patent to every one.

It is under a deep sense of responsibility to God, to our readers, and to the brethren more specially charged with the direction of this movement, that we endeavour to record our impressions of this Convention. We shall do so, not as partizans, on the one hand, nor as critics on the other. We went expecting to see the grace of God, and we were not disappointed.

The key-note of the Convention was said by Mr. Pearsall Smith to be this, "Jesus saves me now." The Apostle Paul founded an important argument upon the letter "s"—not SEEDS but SEED; so let us take for our motto, not so much the prayer, "Jesus save me now," as the assurance "Jesus saves me now"—for "if we know that He heareth us whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions we desired of Him."

Each day began with a prayer-meeting, from 7 to 8.30, and these were always very hallowed seasons of waiting on God, in which numerous petitions were laid before Him, followed by seasons of silent prayer. Little was spoken at these meetings, and the last portion of the time was chiefly spent in solemn silence. An early prayer-meeting of two thousand Christians, gathered from all parts of the land, and representing the most diligent and faithful workers in our churches, is of itself a very significant and cheering fact, full of promise of good things to come.

The programme of the subsequent engagements was very varied, extending to thirty or forty daily meetings. The General Meetings were held in the Dome and in the Corn Exchange, each of which, accommodating, as we understood, about two thousand persons, was filled each day from 11 to 1 and 8 to 9.15 p.m. The smaller gatherings consisted of meetings for ladies, convened by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, inquiry-meetings by various ministers, conversational and other meetings for foreign pastors, evangelistic services, etc. Of course, it would be very laborious to spend the whole day in meetings; and the halls and ante-rooms of the Pavilion, and the beautiful grounds in which it is situated, have afforded opportunity for rest and meditation, and for pleasant social intercourse. Indeed, one of the most enjoyable features of the Convention is the "communion of saints," who have thus been happily brought together—to revive old friendships, and form new ones.

One of the most delightful seasons was on the occasion of a breakfast for Continental pastors, when a number of representative Christian men and women were invited by the Earl of Kintore, the Earl of Cavan, Samuel Morley, M.P., George Moore, Donald Matheson, J. Butterworth, and T. B. Smithies, to meet Mr. Pearsall Smith, and the pastors of various nationalities who were at the Convention. After the breakfast, at which Lord Kintore presided, thanks were returned in few words, each in his own language, by brethren representing England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Italy, America, India, Holland, Belgium, Spain, and, last of all, by Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem, in the Hebrew tongue.

Mr. R. Pearsall Smith very appropriately read passages from Rev. vii. and Acts ii., asking the foreign brethren to repeat together, each in his own language, the words from Rev. vii. 10, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." The effect of this was most touching, and all hearts were melted and subdued. Then all ascribed praise to God by repeating verse 12: "Amen! Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."

Mr. R. P. Smith, referring to Rev. vii. 14, said it was not unlikely that some there would be called to seal their testimony with their blood, but drew encouragement and strength from the subsequent verses:—"They shall hunger no more," etc., "but the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them by living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

After prayer by Mr. Varley and a few more words from Mr. Smith, the following hymn was sung, the chorus in a different language after each verse:—

"JESUS SAVES ME NOW."

Mr. Pearsall Smith, when holding evangelistic services in Germany, said, "I have learned only one sentence in the German language, but this is enough to carry me safely all through life, and then right into glory. This is, 'Jesus errettet mich jetzt.'" Pastor Gebhardt has written a hymn in the German language suggested by these words, and which God has greatly used. The chorus of the English hymn is an exact translation of the German. The English hymn itself is not a translation of the German, but has been written specially for the Convention.

The Italian chorus was sung by brethren from Spain, as a Spanish chorus has not yet been composed.

[This hymn is published at a penny, and sold for the benefit of the orphan and destitute children at the Children's Home, Bonner-road, London, E.]

It would be impossible to describe this meeting. The holy fellowship in which all hearts were knit together was, as indeed the whole Convention has been, a foretaste of heaven on earth. The effect on the foreign pastors may be judged from this:—one from Holland told us, on Sunday morning, that the French and German pastors had confessed that some of them had come with bitter feelings in their hearts, but their hearts had been broken, and had flowed together in love, and on the morning of the first day of this week they met to break bread together in remembrance of the Lord Jesus. And on Monday evening, in the two large halls, the Dome and the Corn Exchange, there was a united Communion, presided over by the foreign pastors. Who can tell whereunto, in blessing, this will grow? If these pastors go home filled with love to God and man, "Oh, what will the harvest be?"

If we were to describe the present revival from the point of view which strikes us most, we should say it is a revival of the Bible in the esteem and affection of God's people. Whatever there may be that is crude, erroneous, or inconsistent with itself, in the teaching of this movement, its safety lies in this, that Christians of all ranks, views, and denominations meet round an open Bible to inquire there at the mouth of God; and so long as this is the case, there cannot be much danger.

The addresses of Mr. Theodore Monod, in which lucid exposition and direct application, earnest exhortation and quaint illustration, are blended with logical accuracy and charming simplicity, are beyond praise. The excellent English and the tinge of foreign accent gave to these delightful and invaluable discourses an additional interest.

A correspondent, in the paper which follows this, refers to the inquiry-meetings. They have been on the whole most profitable; two or three brethren have united in conducting them; and what one has said has often been happily and usefully supplemented by another. The questions for the most part indicated genuine exercise of soul; there was very rarely a frivolous inquiry, and almost never a captious one; very little mere criticism, but an evident desire, created by the Holy Spirit in the soul, to learn and to teach the way of God more perfectly.

Of course every human thing has its weaknesses; and some of the inquiry-meetings appeared to us of this character. The truth concerning the Holy Spirit is one of those about which the Church generally is very little instructed; and we may well bear with one another in our endeavours to learn and teach; for while there may be a mote in our brother's eye, there may be a beam in our own. Nevertheless, "What is written in the law? How readeest thou?" must be our test; for if we remove in any degree our reliance from the written Word to experiences, we are to that degree removing from solid rock to shifting sand. We think it not unlikely that this may have been done by some who attended some meetings to wait for a baptism of the Spirit, and that they may have gone away in doubt and darkness. For their sakes we say, Come to the Scripture, which cannot be broken, to know what is really promised, and plead the promise in God's own words. All is clear as crystal in the Book of God. And the Holy Spirit will guide us into all truth.

The meetings for ministerial experiences were of very great interest. Some may have spoken from a sort of pressure, not liking to appear to have nothing to say; but there were many who spoke words of matured wisdom, and who had evidently drunk deep of the river of the pleasures which are at God's right hand.

Mrs. Smith's addresses were pungent and searching—those at her meetings only for ladies were, some of the ladies said, even more enjoyable than those in the Corn Exchange. Mr. Varley also spoke with great power and evident unction of the Holy One. Indeed, throughout, the presidency of the Holy Spirit was most manifest. In a word, the Lord was there, and if we only look at the negative side of the blessing of these ten days, it cannot but be remembered with thanksgiving that there was so very little to mar the joy—such universal courtesy and kindness, such evident desire to seek, not every one his own, but every one another's welfare. Those who attended brought a blessing with them, as well as came to seek one, and can there be a doubt that this gathering will leave a blessing behind it? We believe that already very many souls have been gathered into the fold of Christ.

To those who are dwelling on the infirmities connected with this work, we would say, God is very tender towards his children; He has not said to the seed of Jacob, "Seek ye Me in vain," and when they cry, "Thy face, Lord, will we seek," He will bear with them, make them to lie down in green pastures, and gently lead them beside still waters, into the paths of righteousness, for his name's sake. When even the heathen feel after God, if haply they may find Him, He lets them know that He is not far from every one of us, for in Him we live and move and have our being; how much more then will He bear with his own believing children, and feed his flock like a shepherd, and do for them more than they ask or think?

We think that we shall most faithfully convey to our readers the character of this Convention by giving a few representative addresses; we have accordingly selected three, by Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, and M. Theodore Monod. In our next we shall give selections from other addresses, and we shall be very much obliged if such of our readers as are able to do so will supply us with any facts of special interest which came within their experience.

The weather until Saturday morning was beautifully fine. A boatman on that morning was heard saying to another, "The rain is coming at last." "No," replied his companion, "not so long as the Christians are here; they have been praying for fine weather." Does not this show how the world looks on, and how men would be convinced that God is with us of a truth, if they saw that our faith was firmly laying hold of the promises of God, and if the signs written in Mark xvi. followed them that believe. They surely would still follow, if our faith were equal to the promise, if our wicked unbelief did not hold back the power of God.

A Convention similar to this one is intended to be held at Leeds at the end of July.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

The first thing that strikes one in connection with the meetings of this Convention at Brighton, is the special and distinctive character of the movement. It is an assembly—a general assembly—of true believers. The conversation on all sides on the way to or from the Pavilion; the deeply-marked solemnity of the thousands in the larger gatherings; and the marked effects of the various truths as they are spoken, seen on the faces of all, either in calm joy or eager trembling anxiety, all clearly indicate that we are in the midst of a great course of the children of God, in the various stages of their life of faith.

Another thing, manifest enough, is, that a very great and widespread interest in the knowledge of the truth of God has at last been awakened. The hearts of these men and women are hungry. I believe that this is true of the whole Church at present; but this great gathering has brought the fact more fully to light. Perhaps nothing has gone further to prove this than the presence of continental pastors.

When hundreds of ministers from all parts of the Continent, many of them Christian teachers of note, have come over to tell us that, within the past few months, they have entered into fuller knowledge of God's truth; and that with this fuller knowledge there has come to them such an increase of the power of God as has given them victory to a greater extent over besetting sins, as well as far greater success in their ministry than in any past period of their Christian life: we have a fact which ought to command the attention of the Church of Christ.

But when, added to this, we hear similar statements made, not excitedly, but calmly yet firmly by well-known and well-tried Christian men from all parts of our own country, we are brought face to face with the great fact that this also is one part of the great work of the Holy Ghost; one part of that vast spiritual movement now shaking all Christendom. Those who look well and candidly into this matter shall find that our Lord is thus not only bringing thousands upon thousands of unsaved ones into life eternal, but that He is likewise leading all true believers into higher ranges of faith in the love of God as revealed in Himself.

Perhaps the most extraordinary of all the meetings are those held for conversational inquiry into this fuller knowledge. It is impossible to have been at many of these without observing many facts of interest; the chief of which, I dare say, is this, that while numbers profess to have been brought recently to clearer knowledge, and firmer trust, and more abiding joy in Christ, with correspondingly greater spiritual power, the very large majority are there with a deep and daily increasing sense of want in this direction, and of hunger for it. This is an important fact, because it is in itself a confession of dissatisfaction with present attainment of the Church and of belief in the possibility of progress. God has brought to this point; and He will bring the whole Church over Jordan into the land of promise, where alone we dwell on the true vantage ground for fight against the enemies of the Lord. It is a blessed feature of these inquiry-meetings, that the greater number of those present are men, and that there has been exceedingly little of the captious or even of the controversial spirit manifested, and certainly no bitterness. Many are distinctly enough stating difficulties, and complaining decidedly but very meekly and in love, that there has been much confusion of thought and seeming contradiction oftentimes in the way in which truth is being put; and in this they are right; only this is just what ought to be expected.

We cannot talk about anything which we may have received of the Lord without putting it in many diverse ways; because really it is but our individual experience of the blessing which we present. The blessing itself must be given by God through his own Word. Our talk about what we have got may and does arrest attention, and as men watch us and see the proof of blessing in our lives, they are convinced, and the hunger to receive it on their part awakened and intensified.

Now, at this point, our words should be silenced; and hungering ones should be directed to the voice of Jesus in his own words, and in them alone. I thank God that this is being realized in the Convention. Hundreds are now searching prayerfully the Word of God. One passes little kneeling groups, calmly asking light, or reading with quiet earnestness their Bibles, and talking together over the parts read. There is no controversy to be heard, and no excitement. It is as one well said, a "revival of the Scriptures." Men are coming to believe in a living risen Christ, who has expressed the whole mind of God in the Bible, and who Himself alone, knowing fully its depths, is by his Spirit declaring Himself to them its only expounder and interpreter.

We are turning more aside than ever from all other men's experiences of truth, at best but imperfect, and from their greatly varied modes of presenting them, and are saying, "Lord, here we are listening to thine own words. Tell me by thy Spirit which dwelleth in me thine own meaning of these words. Speak them into our hearts."

Surely, surely, his coming draweth nigh! These are but a few of the "signs in heaven and on the earth." We see in the great united evangelistic effort the ultimate fulfilment, as it were, of John xxi. 6. All the servants in their several boats, but at the word of the risen Lord alone, letting down the net in blessed co-partnership; but we see also the front ranks of the Church entering by faith into the place of dominion and power against the enemy, lifting up under the power of the Spirit of the Lord a standard against that enemy as he is pouring in like a flood, and in their calm reliance on their Lord's government and power, being qualified to reign with Him by and by over the nations of the earth. Lord Jesus, come quickly!

☞ "IN THE PRESENCE OF THE KING."—The hymn, "In the Presence of the King," which forms No. 6 of Songs and Solos, is written by Miss Armstrong, and is taken, by permission, from a small volume of Hymns and Poems recently issued by her, entitled, "The King in His Beauty," published by A. Richardson and Co., 10, Warwick-lane, E.C. The price is, we believe, 1s. 6d.

THE SCRIPTURES.

AN ADDRESS BY MR. E. PEARSALL SMITH, AT THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

Mr. Pearsall Smith addressed the meeting from, "But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament, which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away" (2 Cor. iii. 14—16). The Scriptures are not a lot of books thrown together without regard to order. There is a consecutive arrangement of them all through. Beginning with the scene of an earthly Paradise, the Scriptures close with the scene of a heavenly Paradise. Beginning with the tree of life, which was forfeited, it closes with a tree of life which shall be ours eternally. Beginning with man under probation, it ends with man in absolute and unconditioned grace. Beginning with an earthly marriage, it closes with the glorious scene of a heavenly marriage; and all throughout, from first to last, there is a regular gradation and development. In Genesis we find the story of God's trial of man in various conditions always resulting in failure—failure in Paradise, failure when men were without law, failure when they were under law, failure under the patriarchal system, winding up with the terrible bondage of the children of Israel in Egypt. The second book gives us the story of man's redemption. We have sometimes sought to take the redemption without placing the Red Sea between us and the world we have left. In the third book we find God's provision in our condition of infirmity and failure in having continual access to Himself. In the fourth book we have the people of God being brought forward into the glorious land of their inheritance, and trusting Jehovah, whose wonderful hand and power they had just experienced in being turned back into the wilderness for forty years. In Deuteronomy we have the second giving of the law, that deeper and more searching examination of our hearts in the light of the will of God which always precedes the more definite entrance on a life of full obedience and communion. In Joshua we have the story of their crossing Jordan, beginning with the words, "Up, sanctify yourselves; for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." I believe that is the word for our day here, that God is coming to do wonders throughout his Church, such as before we have scarcely dared to hope for. The story of Joshua is one of almost unbroken victory, and at the close of the book he says, "You know how, in all your hearts and all your souls, every promise God has made to you has been yours." Joshua died; and when those who had known him, and the elders which had crossed the Jordan had all died, then came a scene of failure; but our Joshua, our Jesus, never dies. We may have a life of victory even unto the end. There comes the story of the failure, but not as an example. God save us from taking the failures his book has recorded as our example instead of our warning! It is a very serious danger to Christians. And then He leads us on every here and there in the Bible, through fine vistas, such as in the Book of Ruth, in the Song of Songs, in Hosea, and elsewhere, especially in the great song of love which has its consummation at the end of the Bible in the marriage of the Lamb. Then we have the diary of Christ in the Psalms, and the heart of Christ unveiled to us. Then come the three books of Solomon—first the avoidance of evil, then that wisdom is better, and then the Song of Songs. There is a Sabbath of sabbaths, and there is a song of the consummated union of our hearts with our Lord and Saviour. Then come the prophecies of the coming of our Lord, with God's terrible denunciations of sin, and then for several hundred years the book of revelation is sealed.

The portion of the Bible I would immediately call your attention to is the four Gospels, which are the four narratives of our Lord's life. If you want a very vivid picture for a photograph, you take a stereoscope, and, looking with two eyes from two standpoints, the figure is projected into life-like distinctness; and so our God has given us four lives of our Lord Jesus Christ, each distinct, each portraying especially one side of his character. When I was young, I read often the life of the great hero of American history, George Washington. There was one biography written by a jurist, a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, which naturally looked at the character of Washington as a statesman. There was another, written by a soldier, which looked at the character of Washington as a general. There was another, written by a politician, describing his political career; and another brief narrative, written by his private secretary, describing his life at home. Each one was a distinct life, giving the outlines of his history, and bringing all the different features into prominence.

You have four pictures of a landscape. One has the castle in the foreground, and the rest is thrown into shadow. Another has the town with the castle in the distance; another gives the beautiful woods with the rest thrown in the shade; another is executed having the sparkling waters in the foreground, and all else thrown into the background, each presenting a picture of the same landscape; and to have a vivid idea of it we should have all four. The Holy Spirit has given us through four different mediums the story of our Lord's life. Who were the writers? The first was an officer of the Roman Government; the second was a servant; the third was a physician; the fourth was a man of philosophic character and loving temperament. The first naturally gives the character of our Lord Jesus Christ as King, and his pedigree is traced from King David as a king descended from a king. The second of these biographies is written by the servant John Mark, who gives no pedigree of our Lord, but commences with a vivid picture and resumé of his miracles and works. The third delineates the picture of our Lord as the Man Christ Jesus, and there we find the tender picture of the prodigal son. In the fourth we find the pedigree of Christ traced all the way back to the head of the human race, Adam. It says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." It at once commences with Christ's divinity. I could trace these things more fully, but the purpose of this meeting does not admit of it.

Now I believe that this is the order in which the human heart receives the Lord Jesus Christ. The first thing is, will we submit to Christ? Will we take Him as our King? A king is not a king unless he rules. A king could not suffer any rebellion in his kingdom, and when we take Christ as King, it means a complete and not partial submission of our whole will. Christ demands the thorough submission of our hearts. Obedience and faith are so nearly linked together that one can hardly distinguish which begins first, but if we were to make an analysis I think it would be found that the submission was the first thing. To believe in the Lord Jesus Christ is just as easy as breathing when the heart is perfectly submitted to Him. I want to bring you this morning, dear Christians, first to Christ as King. How willingly soldiers yield up their wills to the service of their king; and shall we be less submissive to Jesus than we are to an earthly sovereign? Have you any ambition apart from Christ and his glory? When Christ made Himself a servant, are ye seeking to set yourselves among the princes? When Christ, who was the only One who ever had a reputation, made Himself of no reputation, are you seeking to build up a reputation of your own for the purpose of pride and of self? Have you perfectly and entirely submitted yourself to the great King? If you would but take his own sweet words of grace, how gently the King would deal with you; but if you rebel, He must deal with you as a Sovereign. I know the tender yearning of a father over an obedient and Christian son, but if he was in the midst of his college career, I would say to him, "My boy, I would rather that all your bright hopes were dashed in pieces, and that you should lose your health, your means, everything that is bright before you, that you might be brought broken-hearted to the foot of the cross." We should dash in pieces our idols and break our brightest prospects in life, in order that we might have a higher joy and a more true happiness.

During the late civil war in the United States, the Vice-President of the Confederate States was sent with some Commissioners to meet President Lincoln, in one of the cabins of one of the large Monitors in Hampton Roads. It was a time when there was terrible slaughter going on. President Lincoln was so tender-hearted a man that he never heard a story of private distress without the tears coming into his eyes. They told him they would give up a very large part of what they had been fighting for, if they could have a certain part of the United States independent of the general Government. They pleaded with him for hours, for they knew the tenderness of his heart; but Mr. Lincoln sat silent and thoughtful, and when they had finished their arguments, he paused, and then, raising his hand slowly, and bringing it down upon the map before him, he said, "Gentlemen, this Government must have it all." He knew that there was a worse alternative than even this terrible slaughter and suffering. He knew that there might be the history of the Mexican Republics enacted over again, and that there might be generations of civil war if it was not settled now; and his only words were, "This Government must have it all;" and the Government did have it all. Oh, my brother, my sister, Christ is King. Christ must be the whole of the kingdom in your heart. Will you compel Him to take possession through agony, sorrow, and shame? Hear Him now wooing you in the tender words, "Give Me thine heart." Will you not yield yourself in complete obedience to the King now, as He is represented in the first of the Gospels?

Prayer was now offered up by the Rev. Mr. Hankin.

Mr. Pearsall Smith said: It is not till we have learned to take Christ as King that we can understand how He could be the one who washes our own feet—the servant, the one who bears all our cares and all our sorrows. In the second Gospel we find the Lord Jesus thus bearing every burden, every care, every sorrow. If we have Him taken as our King, we can then look upon Him as the Man of sorrows who came into our condition, was a man of like passions with us, that we might have a human sympathy with Him, and be able to cast all our care upon Him. If the Lord Jesus takes all the care, you can do the work. The Lord is by his grace carrying you all the way home to glory. Would you not let Him carry your cross too, that your heart may be quite free? For many years I have seen that the same Jesus who tells me I must not steal tells me I must be careful for nothing. What! for nothing? No, nothing—anxiously careful for not one thing. If I get the care upon me I am disobeying the Lord Jesus, and doing dishonour to the grace and love which would carry all my burdens. One who preaches these things must be able to witness that he does not have care himself, and though reluctantly I feel that I must honour the grace which God bestows. Oh, take the Word of God into your hearts, and it shall keep you from every care. God was so blessing his work upon the Continent, that I was extremely busy. I had thought it right to take some weeks of thought and rest before these meetings commenced, but was providentially prevented, and there came thoughts of care and anxiety, and I said, "Well, Lord, if I have gone wrong it is not my fault; I have sought Thy glory." And I came into these meetings probably with no more care than any one who attends them. My dear brethren in the ministry, are you anxious about your charge? The Lord will take charge of it far better than you can. Lay your load on Him who is carrying you to glory, and have no anxiety about it. It is one of the blessed results of the Oxford meeting, that many of the pastors tell us they are able to do twice as much work as they were able to do before, because they trust the Holy Spirit to guide them. In a solemn act of surrender, let us lay all our cares upon Jesus as the Servant of Men as He is described in the Gospel of Mark.

Prayer was then offered by the Rev. Mr. Rappard, and the 162nd hymn was sung, "I leave it all with Jesus, for He knows."

Mr. Pearsall Smith then said: Again our blessed Lord presents Himself to us as the Man Christ Jesus, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, one with us in all our infirmities and weaknesses, and yet without sin. If you have learned to yield perfect submission to Him as King, if you have learned to lay all your cares and sorrows upon the loving Jesus, you then can put your hand into his as your human Friend. There are those to whom the presence of Christ is more real than even the presence of those who are nearest and dearest to them. Oh that marvellous mystery, the union of the human and the divine! I am so glad that God has set a bound to human curiosity; I am so glad that men cannot investigate these things—that reason cannot penetrate into them. I am glad that I am called upon to believe when I cannot understand. Oh, friend, let faith and the Word of God negative all the thoughts which tell you you are unworthy and unfit for communion with Himself, and are not worthy to lay your head upon his shoulder, and be at peace! Your sense of the fitness of things would forbid it, but faith is above your moral sense; negative it all, and simply say, "God says so." As in the case of earthly sovereigns, so much the more in the case of Jesus, the infinite distance between Him and us brings a certain rest to our hearts, while we take Him in perfect trust as He comes to us, the Brother, the Friend, the Bridegroom of our souls. You can never know the blessings that God intends for you until you take Christ as He is revealed in Luke—the Man, the tender, sympathizing Man, Christ Jesus; not until you can, in a very definite sense, realize that the everlasting arms are about you, and that you are "safe in the arms of Jesus." You remember what Tennyson says—

"Where truth in clearest words shall fall,
That truth, embodied in a tale,
Shall entrance find at lowliest door."

I am so glad that our religion is not a system of dogmas, that it is not given to us as some of us who are very doctrinal would have given it, but as a person—all being summed up in the divinity, the humanity, the glory, and the work of a person, the man, the God—Christ Jesus. We cannot bear the glare of the noon-day sun, and the divinity of Christ would make us shrink into ourselves, and cower were it alone revealed, but it is veiled in his flesh and his perfect sinless humanity. Some of you know what it is in friendship or in love to come to a moment in which your hearts suddenly break all the barriers of reserve, and just pour themselves out in an abandonment of love. Love to Christ should be not merely the sentiment, but the passion of our souls. Now let the cold hard barriers of our nature all be broken down while we pour out our hearts to Him in love.

After a few moments of silent prayer, the Rev. Canon Battersby led the meeting in prayer. The 86th hymn was—

"More love to Thee, O Christ, More love to Thee."

and Mr. Pearsall Smith continued his address, and said: Now we come to the fourth Gospel, written by John, a man qualified by his high moral æsthetic nature, for a comprehension of Christ as the Son of God. We have, I trust, taken Christ as our King, our Burden-bearer, and our Friend—what a rest it is to the heart to come to the same Christ as our God. To fall at his feet and say, "My Lord and my God." To penetrate through the veil and to behold Him at the right hand of God the Father, still the man Christ Jesus, and yet assuming again the glory, the unveiled glory, of his divinity, and then to remember that when we see Him we ourselves shall be like Him! Oh, overwhelming thought! For one brief moment upon earth on the mountain the true glory of his person was revealed. It showed us his garments all white and glistening, and we shall be like Him as He is! Oh, child of God, were an angel to come into our streets to-day, clad in the livery of heaven, would not people fall down and worship such an one. Yet our position is higher than that of angels; they are but ministering spirits to us, watching over us continually. Those who have been taken down by Satan to the very depths of sin, are to be raised to the very highest of glory, to be seated upon the throne. Marvellous! And even now we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust, by believing God's great and precious promises. But the heart that has learned to submit all to Christ is in holy intimacy with Him, simply believes it and rejoices, and walks through all the homely circumstances of its life, whether it be sweeping the streets or sitting upon a throne, in the glorious consciousness of being a son of God. We can only get glimpses, faint glimpses, of this infinite glory. The best thing we can do is to bow and worship Christ the Life, the Eternal Life, and receive from Him not only the life, but the life more abundantly, till we are transformed into his own glorious likeness. Let us now bow in silent worship to Christ as our God.

THE LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY, 32, SACKVILLE-STREET.—The forty-ninth annual meeting of this excellent institution was held last week, the Rev. E. W. Dibdin presiding. The report stated that, at the present time, 105 pensioners were receiving the bounty, the average age of these being about eighty. The candidates must be over sixty-five, proposed by one or more subscribers of £2 per annum, and are received in rotation.

PLAYTHINGS FOR POOR CHILDREN.—Mrs. Meredith would be glad of some large, strong, old-fashioned playthings for the little girls in her Village. Some who have "put away childish things" may have a few such articles as a big rocking-horse, a cart, Noah's Ark, etc., the worse for the wear, that they may be pleased to get rid of out of their lumber-room. Anything of the kind will be acceptable, and may be sent, via S.W.R., to Adlestone, by goods-train, addressed to Mrs. Meredith.

THE OVERCOMING LIFE.

ADDRESS BY MRS. R. PEARSALL SMITH, AT THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

I wish to speak on the subject of "the overcoming life." I will not to-day call it "the higher Christian life," or any other name, but just the life of the believer. And, first, I will give you a little pyramid of texts on the subject, which I have built up, finding it a great help in studying the Scriptures. And one of the most interesting ways of doing so is to get texts linked together in your Bible, so that one will suggest another on the same subject. First, let me quote John x. 10, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Then I would have right alongside of that Gen. iii. 21-24, which shows why we have need of life. The reason we needed Christ to come and give life was because we had lost life. I feel that the passage which I have just read in Genesis is one of the greatest proofs of God's love, mercy, and justice which can be had. When the life which He had given man had been ruined by sin, the very kindest thing He could do was to take it away, and give in its place a life which would be a success. Other passages might be thus grouped together in reference to the subject under consideration:—Rom. v. 12; Eph. ii. 1-10; Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12; iii. 1-3; 1 John iv. 15, 16; iii. 24; John vi. 56, 57; xv. 4, 5; and, finally, Rom. vi. 11.

In all these passages—and these are but a few out of the many—it is set forth that there is provided a wonderful life, that that life is Christ living in us, and it must therefore necessarily be an overcoming life. It is called "newness of life," and the resurrection-life, and is a totally different thing from the old life we have by nature. As I said yesterday, the theological difficulties about this are probably very great; but I lay them all on one side, allowing them to take care of themselves, and try to get at the experience of the new life. And we do speak what we know when we declare that there is an overcoming life. I once met a celebrated and successful clergyman, who did not believe, he said, in this new-fangled doctrine. I asked the Lord to present to him that view of it—there are a thousand different views of it—which would meet his especial cast of mind. In the conversation the subject of life came up, and he then stated that the way in which he reached the top of the mount was this: he climbed up by the steps of prayer and by reading the Scriptures, putting his foot first on one promise and one position, and then on another, and, after very hard work, he reached the summit, and sat down to write his sermon. He would go on swimmingly till some one interrupted him with some domestic or other difficulty; and then, without a bit of effort, he would tumble right down flat again, and, before he could return to the top, he had to have another great climb. Sometimes, he added, he stayed at the summit two or three days, and even weeks occasionally; but he had never yet seen or believed that there was any kind of way in which he could ascend, and there remain. How delighted I was that I could say there is such a thing as being seated in heavenly places in Christ, and abiding in Christ, and living the life hid with Christ in God. I asked him whether he did not see that the difficulty was in his inward life; because, if it were right, it would live itself out easily and naturally, without such a great effort. He was living his life at such times by his own efforts and climbing, but what he needed was for his life to live him.

One of the greatest troubles of our human life arises from its inward limitations. Souls reach out in this and that direction, but are continually driven back by limitations. Some are careless by nature, some are narrow by nature, some cross-grained by nature; all have some little crook that is inconvenient to themselves, and disagreeable to other people; and the worst of it is that they cannot help it, because although by training and discipline a good deal may be done to rub off the rough corners, after all, if a man is careless, he is careless to the end of the chapter; and so with his weaknesses, if no new life comes to deliver him from the trammels of the old. When a soul gets a glimpse of the glorious possibilities of life, it is stopped short by these human limitations. How glorious, then, is the news that one can have a life that has no limitations, a life that is divine, that will go on developing day by day, and year by year, and even age by age, and find no limit anywhere. The reason of this is, that we are to be partakers of the divine nature. And the way in which this life works is this. It gets into the very springs of a man, into the very issues of life, and works from within him. How grandly this gives the key to all the difficulties, and the clue to all the mazes and perplexities that trouble us. It is a resurrection life. It is just as though one had died and been buried and had risen again, and now walked in resurrection, and looked at things from a resurrection standpoint. And oh, how different this must be to the earthly standpoint. Lazarus had been a man of business, for instance, absorbed in money-getting, before he died, and was buried, and rose again. He surely could not have felt the same afterwards; money must have seemed to him a very small and valueless thing. He could not possibly have looked upon the paltry affairs of human life which absorb so many as he did previously.

How do people get delivered from the foolishness of childhood? Not by being scolded out of it or making efforts to get out of it, but by growing out of it. When I was a little girl, I used to think that grown-up people wanted to play just as bad as I did, only there was a law against it, and that that law came in force when people were about fifteen or sixteen years old. And I dreaded growing older, because this time was drawing nearer for me. I think this is the way with a great many Christians. They think, "If I were a mature Christian, a devoted Christian, I could not have my playthings; I could not be spending all my energies about dressing myself, or fixing up my house, or getting money, or going to the opera and theatres;" and no doubt they pitied Christians who did not have those playthings. Oh, what wasted pity that was! What is required is to get a life that does not enjoy that kind of thing. It is a great and grand thing to give it up even when we enjoy it, but grander still to get to the place where we do not want it. And this is the salvation that the Bible contemplates. It is to have a life that is so right in its very issues, as to live right without effort or constraint. If a man is a thief at heart it requires all sorts of laws and penalties to keep him from stealing, and even then he will do it. But if a man is honest at heart, not even laws and penalties could make him steal. And so it is said of the Christian that the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made him free from the law of sin and death. And again it is said that they that have crucified the flesh and are walking in the Spirit, are not under the law. That does not mean that the right things are not done, but that they are done from the force of an inward life and not from the constraint of an outward law. "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

The overcoming life is such an easy, peaceful life. Sometimes people who hear it talked about think it means that people can get to a place where they do not have to keep God's law; but what is really meant is that they have got to a place where they can keep it, and love to keep it. I believe this is the life that the Lord Jesus Christ means every one of his followers to have. He means to be Himself their life, not that they should live, as it were, with one foot in self and another foot in Him, not living the Christ-life one day or one hour, and on other occasions living the self-life; but that self is to be dead, and their life is to be hid with Christ in God. Life does not mean a spasmodic effort for a little while, galvanizing a man for a few moments, but something inside that lives. When it is said that we are to live the Christ-life, it means that we are to be put right over into Christ, and are to leave our living to Him. Can it be conceived that a soul living that way will live as Christians do, absorbed in all the petty affairs of this world? Of all the types in the Scriptures, the one that gives the most beautiful idea of what this life should be is that of Joseph. Joseph passed through a sort of death and resurrection; he was put into the pit, into the dungeon, locked up in prison, and he came out of it, and reigned in the very land where Abraham failed. Abraham is a type of a Christian experience which is not yet able to reign over the things of the world, which has not yet come into the resurrection-life, but Joseph reigned in Egypt. All the things of sense were made subservient to him; he was king over them all. The very things that tempted Abraham were the things that served Joseph.

It is possible for a Christian to get to that stage of experience in which he can reign over the things of sense, and instead of their being a temptation to him he is triumphant over them. Sometimes a great sorrow will bring this about for a little while. I knew a lady in America who was a Christian, but a baby Christian, and had a good many playthings, her special plaything being dress. Her mother died, and she afterwards came to me and said, "Oh, Mrs. Smith, how glad you will be to hear I am not caring about dress any more;" but when the grief passed she went back to the old condition, though temporarily she had been delivered from it—she reigned over it. But force of outward circumstances gave her that victory, and not the force of inward life. But suppose she had got the reigning life in her, she would have reigned over it whether she were in sorrow or in joy. The subject which I am treating is, I know, a very difficult one in a theological point of view; but, as I said yesterday, I do not want to be listened to with theological ears. I have learned something experimentally which I want to tell to others. If people hear a piece of good news that very nearly concerns a friend, they do not wait to dress themselves up in their best, and to compose a proper speech, in which to tell their friend the news, but they just rush pell-mell, anyhow, so that the friend may hear it. This is how I feel in regard to the subject I am considering. I have not the time nor the sense to fix it all up in the most beautiful or proper way, but I want to tell it anyhow, only so that people will hear it and believe it, and then perhaps some that hear it may tell it to somebody else a good deal better. It is a subject that is difficult to handle, and if I were a theologian I do not think I would dare to touch it, but I think I can lay hold of it experimentally. I have found the overcoming life to be a glorious reality.

I invite your attention to the 6th chapter of Romans, which is a difficult chapter for theologians, but from which I have learned some very blessed lessons. I do not think that because a text means one thing it necessarily does not mean also another. Although water is used for drinking purposes it does not follow that it cannot be used for any other purpose. We are only beginning to understand the use of water, and to understand that there are a thousand things hidden up in it that we shall some day learn to use. So with the Word of God—every word of it has a thousand meanings wrapped up in it. If the meaning I put upon this chapter is not the meaning that some hearing me would put upon it, I ask you to believe, anyhow, that that is the light in which it appears to me, and if there is a good lesson to be learned from it I beg you to accept it.

The first five chapters of Romans give us the subject of justification by faith in various aspects, and clearly and for ever settle the truth that salvation is by grace through faith, and is the gift of God. The fifth chapter ends with the declaration that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. And at once the thought is suggested, that if this is the case, had we not then better continue in sin in order that grace may abound the more. Romans vi. answers this question. Paul does not say, "No; you must not sin, you shall not," but he says, "You cannot." "How can you," he asks, "that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Have you not found out that you have a salvation that delivers you out of that?" The very salvation that you have is a salvation from sin. If we want to know what God intends our salvation to be, we ought to go to the 6th chapter of Romans, and there we will find out. I would ask every one present to be definite as to your experience about this—Have I an overcoming life? Is my life a struggle, or is it ease? Did I live as I believe the Lord Jesus Christ means a Christian to live? How has it been with some of you during the past year? I ask you to answer the question honestly to yourselves—has your life been a life hid with Christ in God, or a life of struggle and effort, life that you have had to carry and nurse like a sickly infant? And if it is a life like that, do you believe that the Bible holds out something better? Every one should be clear and definite in answering the question. We have not come to Brighton to make eloquent sermons or speeches, but to help some in their efforts to obtain the overcoming life; and I would say here that it is to be got by faith.

But some may perhaps say, "Oh, if I could get faith, of course I could get salvation;" and therefore, I must explain it a little. God tells us in that sixth chapter, not that we shall be, but that we are buried with Him; not that our "old man" shall be crucified, but that it was crucified with Christ eighteen hundred years ago. What became of the "old man" I do not know, but I do know that all these expressions mean something real, that will help us practically in our victory over sin. I beg those who do not understand them at least to try to act on them, and learn their meaning experimentally. I knew a lady who was a Christian, but a very uncomfortable and unhappy Christian, and who made everybody unhappy around her. She had the special peculiarity that, while she kept good enough in her own room, when she went out of the family, all her prickles came out, and she was exceedingly disagreeable. She knew it was wrong, but she did not know what to do, and thought she would lose her reason. One day she had been as cross as she could possibly be all day, and in the evening she met a gentleman friend, who said to her, "If you will only take the sixth chapter of Romans and kneel down with the open book on the chair before you, and read it verse by verse, and ask the Lord to show you what it means, and if you understand it and believe it, you will get deliverance." She promised to do so, and when reading in her chamber that night, she came to the 11th verse—"Likewise reckon ye yourself dead unto sin;" she could not understand that. "I am not dead," said she, "it would be telling a story if I said that. When I go out of my room I know I shall just do the same as I have been doing all day." But the blessed Spirit would not let her rest, and at last she made up her mind to obey this command, and to reckon herself on that authority dead to sin. She turned to Gal. ii. 20, where Paul says, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." She repeated it over and over, and although she could not understand it, she claimed it by faith continually, and asked the Lord continually to enable her to understand it. She went to sleep doing it; she got up in the morning doing it; she did it as she went downstairs. "But how will it be," she thought, "when I get into the dining-room?" But she went into the dining-room saying it, and went through her breakfast saying it, and the Lord made it true—she was dead to her old temptation. After the breakfast was over, her mother said to her, "What is the matter with you? Has anything happened? You seem to be so happy." She replied that it seemed as if her soul had sailed out into heaven. Since then, for three years, she has been living the overcoming life, reckoning herself dead to sin and alive to God in Christ; and not for one moment has the old temptation troubled her. Any Christian can do that, no matter what their present condition might be. At the very moment when they are in the worst possible condition they stand most in need of it.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES, SURREY CHAPEL.

The eighth anniversary service was held in Surrey Chapel Schoolroom, and was presided over by Rev. Henry Grainger. Although the room was, for the most part, filled with the children and young people who usually attend the Sunday and Tuesday evening services, there were many parents, teachers, and friends present, all of whom evinced their prayerful sympathy with these special efforts for the conversion and spiritual growth of children.

Mr. S. Tyler said that he was unable to express the gratitude he and his co-workers felt towards their heavenly Father for his continued blessing attending these and similar efforts. Since the last anniversary, fifty-four dear children had confessed their simple and happy trust in the Saviour, and been received into the Children's Christian Band, and sixteen had been welcomed into church fellowship. It was also a very encouraging fact that nearly all the helpers who conversed and prayed with the children at the inquiry-meeting were those who had themselves been led to decision for Christ at the children's service, and were all consistent members of his visible Church.

The children were then very earnestly addressed by the Revs. Arthur Hall and Henry Grainger, and S. D. Rickards, Esq.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—God has greatly blessed the labours of Mr. John Vine during the last month. A large number have in that time been brought to Christ, through the services at the Amphitheatre. Men, women, and children were seen in distress about their souls, crying out in agony, "That's me!" "It's too late!" "I'm lost!" The services of an evangelist are greatly desired, to carry on the work so happily begun, Mr. Vine having left for St. Helen's, to fulfil a three months' engagement there.

JESUS CHRIST AND HIM CRUCIFIED.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS AT THE BRIGHTON CONFERENCE, BY REV. THEO. MONOD.

"And I, brethren," etc.—1 Cor. ii.

We ought, he said, to begin a little higher up in Paul's letter to understand the strength of these words. Just previously we read, "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." He is made unto us what we in our blindness and ignorance need, wisdom; what our guilt needs, righteousness; what our pollution needs, sanctification; what our perdition needs, redemption. And why is all this in Christ Jesus for us? "That according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." Paul has spoken of Christ and of glorying in Christ, but now what has he got to say about himself? "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." When Paul came, the word did not go around, "There is an eloquent preacher, there is a deep thinker." "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." There he stood, there we stand. We have just simply to declare the testimony of God. Any child can bear a message, and we have to bear a message, to repeat what God has said, and that is all. And what is God's witness? That He has given to us eternal life in his Son. But how in his Son? In the Spirit of his Son? Yes, but how? Through the blood of his Son. Everything was summed up for the Apostle in this one subject, in this one living "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

"And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling." I would pity him who, having to bear the witness of God, should not feel weakness, and fear, and much trembling. But how is it that that weakness had such power, that that fear taught people not to fear, that that trembling brought trembling souls peace? "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." No doubt he had learned a great deal about the way of preaching among the Pharisees, but he forgot all about that; he would not any more speak as they did; he spoke as the Lord did, with power. "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." "Observe the force of this reasoning. He might have preached with a great deal of human wisdom and with great excellency of speech, but after he had gone what would have remained of it all? The people would have forgotten his words, and they would have said, 'If only Paul came back again we would be alive again.' Their faith would have been founded on his wisdom. But when there was no Paul at all, when he could say, 'Not I, but Christ in me,' then their faith was founded on the power of God; and that same power that convicted them of sin, that same power that comforted them, and strengthened them, and filled them with peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, was always with them. Therefore when he went they lost the pleasure of hearing him, but they did not lose the power of his preaching.

"Howbeit we speak wisdom." It is not the wisdom of men, but it is not foolishness. The world thinks the whole thing absurd, that we should be reconciled to God because some one died outside the gates of Jerusalem eighteen centuries ago, and still more absurd that we should be able to do and love what is right by ceasing from ourselves, and receiving our life from God. The world thinks it is perhaps respectable if we are sincere in holding that belief, but "Really now, between ourselves," they say, "there is no sense in it." And yet there is great sense in it: there is God's wisdom in it. "Howbeit, we speak wisdom among them that are perfect." I will just remind you that Christ says, "Be ye perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." I would also point you to what Paul says, that the aim of his whole work is, "Warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." What I think he means is, that he brings every man into the truth, and then into a growth of progress in that life of Christ, until the man becomes a perfect man. If a mother shows me a beautiful baby, and I say it is a perfect baby, that does not mean that it is not going to grow; it means just the reverse—that it is a beautifully healthy child, that will grow into a strong man.

"Yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that comes to naught." Don't you think that we Christians have given a great deal too much of our time and thoughts to the princes of this world, thinking to ourselves, "What kind of figure do we make in the eyes of the great men of the world, the intelligent men?" We have nothing at all to do with them, but to bear our witness to them, and through Christian love to bring them to the Lord Jesus Christ. "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory." God wants us to glory in Him, and the wisdom is hidden, and if we would find it out we must go and hide just where it is hidden, "hidden with Christ in God." We have here to search into the deep things of God, and how are we going to do it? In a very simple way. If you wanted to know what I think on a given subject, you might ponder over it for many days and never guess aright; but if you ask me, and I tell you, you will know my thoughts. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." Ask Him. "Now we have received not the Spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

O brethren, this verse is enough to feast upon for a lifetime. All those things, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption, belong to us; but we do not know them, we do not take them, until the Spirit of God comes and shows us them. You ask me, "How do you reconcile these things? You tell us that we must believe, and give ourselves without reserve to God, and now you say we can neither understand nor do anything without the Spirit of God?" I do not know how these facts are reconciled; I do not know how and where the Spirit of God and the will of man meet, and how they act on each other. I do not know how my mind acts on my body, but this is perfectly certain that God takes no pleasure in the death of a sinner, nor in the sins of the saint; that He is ever perfectly willing and able to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask Him; and that without his Spirit we can understand nothing and can do nothing.

Happy is the man who can say, "I have received." We have received, that is what we are here for, and I know that many here can say, "I have received." There was no obstacle in the world to our receiving the Spirit of God, but that we would not have it or did not believe that it was ours. We are met in order to ask for the Spirit of God, in order to do the will of God, for we will not get the Spirit of God for anything else. If we are willing, then is God's Spirit freely given. If we are not willing, oh, let us ask God to break these miserable, stubborn hearts of ours, that we may be willing, and that his power may act upon us. There has been much unreality about our religious life. We sing, "Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove," but do we ever expect Him to come? If any one says to us, He has "kindled a fire of sacred love in my heart"—are we not apt to think that he is under a delusion? We must bring our daily life, our Monday and Tuesday's life, into harmony with what we preach and what we sing. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But He that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet He himself is judged of no man." That is, of no worldly man, for they do not understand Him. "For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct Him? But we have the mind of Christ." This is the tone of true, normal, regular Christian life. We want the mind of Christ Himself. And have we a right to expect it? Why, brethren, He has given us Himself, and if we have Himself in any true sense, in no metaphysical sense, we have the mind of Christ. How would you like to have your child with you in a metaphysical or metaphorical sense? No, we want to have Him in the real sense of having anybody with us; to have Him in our heart of hearts, and to say, "We have the mind of Christ." Now I say that this is simply the answer to a prayer of Christ Himself. He prays for all those who shall believe on Him; He prays for you, "that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them, and I in them."

CHRISTIANS OF SOUTH LONDON, HELP!

An Address delivered at the weekly Noon-day Prayer-meeting, Victoria Theatre, Wednesday, June 2, by Rev. W. A. Essery.

Dear Brethren,—We meet to-day as the people of God. Our special purpose is to pray for a rich blessing on the south of London. Within a few days this gigantic hall at Camberwell will be opened for the services of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and let us hope they will come amongst us anointed with the Holy Ghost and great power.

How can we Christians of South London help the campaign about to be opened in the name of the Lord? This is the thing we all need to understand. O Spirit of Light, shine upon all our churches, that we may see our duty, and arise to the demands of this great occasion. I will endeavour to show how all the Christians in South London may effectively help in this work of God.

We can help by recognizing the divine call of the evangelists. The Head of the Church is the Lord Jesus Christ, and in his sovereignty He can depart from the usual courses. When He pleases to visit the churches and the world with special blessing, He chooses his own instruments. As Christians, we have no right to stand aloof, and say, Who are these foreigners?—we know nothing of them; no right to say their ways are odd and strange, therefore we will have nothing to do with them. Rather it is ours to look at their credentials, examine them fully, and then act. Mark, then, their course since they began their mission, twenty months ago. What was done by them in Newcastle, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Belfast, Dublin, Liverpool, Birmingham? Did not God awaken hundreds of godless souls by their ministry? Were not backsliders reclaimed, prodigals recovered, and the guilty pardoned by faith in Christ? Are not many thousands in all parts of our land walking in the light of God's countenance as the direct and indirect fruits of their work? Are not thousands more rejoicing in the reviving baptism of the Holy Ghost? These seals of divine approbation should remove our suspicions, and cause us to hail with delight the coming evangelists as "chosen vessels" of gospel truth and grace.

Christians can help by sympathy with their purpose. We can easily discover the design of their unflagging labours. One of the evangelists uses a little hymn-book, the other appears before eager crowds with a Bible. One sings with tender note the strains of gospel love, the other proclaims with burning fervency the message of gospel mercy. They have no sectarian design, they do not labour to change sinners into Episcopalians or Dissenters, Baptists or Methodists. Their purpose is to awaken the unconverted, to tell them the love of Christ, to snatch souls as brands from the burning. It is their purpose to quicken the spiritual life of the children of God, that we might be clothed with zeal, and walk in the beauty of holiness. Surely all the Christians in South London can sympathize with a full soul in such a purpose. Are not myriads around us ready plunging downward to 'destruction'? Are there not thousands of godless homes and Christless hearts by our side? Do we not see slaves of the devil crucifying our own precious Lord? Do we not know that every day "the gates of hell" receive some of our neighbours to an unalterable doom? Oh, can we be cold or careless with such realities before us? Banish, banish all indifference. By the love of Jesus, and by the blood of Calvary, I pray you help by your holiest sympathy the work our brethren are coming to do.

And let us help by great expectations from the Holy Spirit. Men of all kinds have puzzled themselves to discover the secret of the success of this work. Some sneer at the American organ as "the important personage" in the revival. Others say the secret is the attractive solos sung. Others find it in the novelty of the meetings, and some in the machinery of advertising; but my belief is that all the genuine success comes from the power of the Holy Ghost, working with these chosen instruments of divine grace. We should look away from the men, and look up to the blessed Spirit. For four weeks, the huge hall yonder will be filled two or three times a day with vast assemblies. In those congregations you shall be able to find specimens of every sort of human depravity. Drunkards, blasphemers, thieves, harlots, worldlings, Pharisees, Sadducees, and infidels. How, I ask, are such to be transformed into saints, and made "heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ"? Not by sacred songs and fervent exhortations alone. No, brethren, such miracles can be wrought only by the force of the mighty Spirit of God. Let us have great expectations of his presence and power, for the promises are made to us.

By our earnest personal labour we can give great assistance. We can all help to gather the congregations. There are multitudes of our neighbours who will not come into our usual places of worship. They offer all sorts of excuses; they will be looked at, people will talk about them, or they have no seat or no proper clothes. You have tried on these in vain before. Now, Christians of South London, now is your time, up and stir yourselves. Go to your neighbours, wisely and earnestly invite them to a free church for once; tell them, no collections and no one to fear. Go and fetch them, and bring them with you. Let it be a rule, ye Christians, that whenever you go to Moody and Sankey's meetings you always secure some unconverted soul to accompany you. I know an employer of labour who has purchased a number of hymn-books, and given one each to his workmen. Go ye and do likewise.

We can all help by our united, incessant, fervent prayer. Every Christian is known at the court of mercy, and it is his glorious privilege to plead boldly before the throne of grace. Let the Christians of South London rally to the daily noonday prayer-meeting when it shall be held in this theatre. Why should not 4000 of God's children come hither every noon and storm heaven with their intercessions? Let us pray mightily in our congregations. Oh, I wish the pastors and churches of South London would turn every week-evening service into a prayer-meeting for a month. I would that from Woolwich to Wandsworth, and from London-bridge to Croydon, we could present one upturned sea of pleading faces to God. Let us pray in our closet for this work, and wrestle like Jacob with the Angel of the Covenant. And when we Christians attend the meetings, let our hearts be on fire with prayer all the time. You know how Aaron and Hur held up the hands of Moses, and then Joshua prevailed. The evangelists will be the Lord's warriors with the devil and sin; let us pray incessantly for them, and for the blind guilty thousands crowding the hall and hearing their voices.

I think I have said enough to show that every Christian in South London can help this crusade if he will. There is a place in this army for every true soldier of Jesus. The visitation of grace is surely near. The little cloud is swelling out to a greater magnitude; it hangs over our heads. O Lord God of Elijah, let not the cloud burst in lightning and thunder over us, but let it soon descend in showers of salvation upon all the souls of the people, making them to rejoice in Thy richest mercy!

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY AT THE BOW-ROAD HALL.

BY REV. T. RICHARDSON.

The last week of services was commenced on Tuesday, June 1, when Mr. Moody presided at the noon prayer-meeting, which has been held for many weeks in this hall, and Mr. Sankey sang.

About 1500 persons were assembled, and a deep interest was manifested in the exposition of Jer. xxxii. 17, "There is nothing too hard for Thee." Mr. Moody said he always took up this text at every place he went to. A solemn sense of God's presence pervaded the meeting, and, before closing, Mr. Moody said if any one was burdened about any relative or friend, would they present them to the Lord in prayer? Then followed a time of deep earnestness and struggling with God. One by one scores of persons offered prayer, such as, "Please pray for my four daughters;" and immediately followed by one of the daughters standing up, and saying, "Please pray for myself."

Those who wished to present themselves stood up in such numbers, that they were asked to retire to the inquiry-rooms, both of which were soon filled, and amongst those finding peace was the child of the mother referred to.

The evening meeting at eight o'clock was attended by over 9500, the subject being, "What think ye of Christ?" and again a large number of anxious souls came forward to be spoken to.

At the noon prayer-meeting on Wednesday, the petitions sent in were very numerous, and the number attending was about 2000. The subject was 2 Chron. xx. ("Jehoshaphat's Victory by Prayer and Praise"). God's power was brought out, and again the personal petitions were more numerous than the day before, one woman asking prayer "for my seven sons, all unconverted." The inquiry-rooms were filled immediately with many anxious souls, and many blessed fruits were gathered.

The evening meeting was full, the subject being "The blood in the Old Testament," and a most powerful exposition of atonement by blood was set forth, and followed by an after-meeting for the anxious, and much blessing vouchsafed.

On Thursday the noon prayer-meeting grew in numbers, and the subject was Psalm li. The necessity of a broken heart in connection with workers. All need to feel the value of immortal souls. Again petitions were poured forth, followed by a large number going right away to the inquiry-rooms, which were soon full.

In the evening, with equally as large an audience, the subject of "The blood" was traced in the New Testament, closing with the solemn question, "What will you do with the blood of the Lamb?" The whole of the workers were again fully occupied in pointing the inquirers to the crucified One, and with encouraging results.

At the Friday noon prayer-meeting, Mr. Moody took up the question of "The necessity for inquiry-meetings," from the example of John the Baptist, our Lord, and the Apostles.

Immediately after the personal petitions the inquirers retired, and it was remarkable to see the large number of ministers engaged with the anxious, showing that the value and use of the inquiry-room is becoming more and more accepted as it is understood.

The character of those coming to the inquiry-room at these noon meetings at once sets aside the objection as to the excitement, most of them being persons who will prove great blessings in their own centres of usefulness, so that the influence of these gatherings will go on and on till the Lord come.

In the evening the subject was "Decision;" 1 Kings xviii. 21, "How long halt ye between two opinions?"

Mr. Moody was most attentively listened to, and the hymn, "Nothing but leaves," sung by Mr. Sankey after reading a letter from a convert, left a solemn impression of the unprofitableness of a life not spent for the Lord.

The characteristic of the closing meetings in Bow-road Hall will ever be the noon-day prayer-meeting. Not that it has been peculiar to this week, for every noon prayer-meeting has had its charm, but the blessing and interest have been intensified, and many have said and realized, "Surely God is in this place."

WEST-END SERVICES.

During the past week evening services have been held in various churches in the West-end, in continuation of the meetings at the Opera House. Afternoon services were also held in Dr. Fraser's new church in Upper George-street. On Tuesday afternoon there was a crowded attendance to hear Mr. Spurgeon, who spoke with all his accustomed power and pathos, first to Christians and then to the unconverted. The subsequent afternoon meetings were addressed by Lord Radstock, Rev. C. Melville Pym, and Dr. W. P. Mackay of Hull. As will be seen from our notices, the West-end services will be continued this week.

OPENING SERVICES IN THE SOUTH.

Our readers will observe, from the announcement in our Forthcoming Meetings, that Messrs. Moody and Sankey commence regular services in the southern division of London on Thursday (this) afternoon, when Mr. Spurgeon and Mr. Aitken, of Liverpool, will give addresses. The meetings will be continued at Camberwell-green Hall during the remainder of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's stay in London.

CLOSING SUNDAY AT THE EAST-END.

Last Sunday's services at the Bow-road Hall were so evidently accompanied with the Divine presence and blessing, that we readily understand the feelings of deep regret with which many of our East-end friends have seen this special season of gospel privilege rapidly pass away. Their hearts have been so cheered and made glad by the welcome sight of sinners flocking to the Saviour "as doves to their windows," that some of them have told us they could wish their American brethren "not to sojourn, but abide" with them. We trust they may have faith to believe that when the extraordinary instruments have been removed, the continued presence of the Master Himself will cause the blessing to descend more copiously and steadily than before.

Little need be said about the early meeting for workers. In point of numbers, it was probably the best of all that had gone before, there being only a very few vacant seats. Mr. Moody's address on "How to study the Bible," is, we think, the most permanently profitable we have heard from his lips to Christians, and we hope those who had the privilege of hearing it on Sunday morning last will derive all the benefit it is fitted to convey.

The sight that met our view from the platform at the women's meeting in the afternoon was at once an inspiring and solemnizing one. The East-end sent forth of her thousands, and the great majority of the vast company that covered every inch of room were young women just on the threshold of life, with all its stern realities, its few solid pleasures, and many disappointments. "What a good thing if all these flowers of the human race could be safely planted in the garden of the Lord before the day closes," we thought. And how utterly saddening the thought that followed close behind, that in all human certainty many of them will, though "almost persuaded," yet postpone salvation to a more convenient season, which too often never comes.

After singing "Free from the Law"—is it right to ask unsaved persons to sing "Christ hath redeemed us once for all"?—and earnest prayer from Mr. Moody,

Mr. Sankey sang, "I am praying for you," the beautiful chorus being taken up first by the choir and then by the congregation. The oftener we hear this new melody of Mr. Sankey's—wedded as it is to words so full of meaning—the more we like it. And we are certain, from the effect it produced on the listening audience this afternoon, that it has a future of blessed results in store for it, wherever Mr. Sankey may sing it. Before it was sung, he told a very affecting incident about a conversation he had with an avowed infidel last Sunday evening, who said he never hoped to be saved, but he had a daughter who was a Christian. We hope, with Mr. Sankey, that this daughter's prayers will not ascend for her unbelieving father in vain.

Mr. Moody gave out the notices, amongst which was one that Mr. Wanamaker of Philadelphia would address Sunday-school teachers next Sunday morning at eight o'clock, at the Bow-road Hall, and Major Cole of Chicago would speak to the children and their parents on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

Mr. Sankey then sang the ever-fresh and new hymn, "The Ninety-and-nine," and it was a study to watch the faces of the audience, as he told out in their hearing, probably for the last time, the story of "the tender Shepherd's care" for the erring sheep.

Mr. Moody's address was characterized by the almost superhuman energy and agonized entreaty that mark his closing addresses. He spoke from God's command to Noah, "Come thou, and all thy house, into the Ark." We cannot attempt to reproduce the words with which he pictured that wonderful event so really that one could almost fancy it was happening before his eyes; but his application of the story was so striking and appropriate that we are constrained to give some of his remarks. Premising that visitation in grace almost always precedes visitation in judgment, he said, "I firmly believe we are living on the eve of some terrible crisis." Then he recounted how, a great revival of religion having swept over the United States, and gathered a million and a half of souls into the Church, it was closely followed by the war between the North and South, that brought half a million soldiers to an untimely grave. Many of them had been saved in the great revival, and died in sight of heaven.

After having described the building of the Ark and the scorn with which it was looked upon by the people of the day, he referred to the hall in which they were met, and raising his arm in a warning attitude, exclaimed, "This building itself ought to be a warning to every man, woman, and child in the East-end of London as much as ever the ark was in the days of Noah." He went on to say that the hall had been put up by God's people at great expense, and they had not been asked to contribute one penny towards it, yet he believed it was printed up in some of the public-houses that their object was to make money, and that they were leaving the East-end because they could not make it fast enough. With much warmth he denounced such statements as "damnable lies, forged in hell and retailed on earth,"—language, we think, not a whit too strong. The destruction of the earth by the flood brought him to remark on the coming judgment of fire that the Lord was to send on the earth, and he was dreadfully earnest in his appeals to take instant refuge in the Ark, and so be safe from the pending storm. "There is a time coming when Christ will be worth more to you than ten thousand worlds like this." From the words of God to Noah, "And thy house," he addressed a very plain and pointed appeal to mothers before him to labour for the conversion of their children. It was with evident reluctance that he drew to a close, and gave his parting advice not to leave the hall without coming into the Ark. A great multitude rose at his call, from the little girl of twelve to the aged matron of sixty, and after prayer by Mr. Richardson, the tent, as well as the inquiry-room, were thronged with those into whose hearts the word had entered with convincing power. A large prayer-meeting was at the same time conducted by Rev. T. Richardson. An overflow women's meeting was held in the tent, and addressed by Mrs. Grattan Guinness.

The hall presented a very different, but no less interesting and marvellous sight at eight o'clock in the evening. Instead of the bright and variegated colours of the women's head-dresses, there was a serried phalanx of open, beaming faces, some of them bearing traces of much worldly care and sorrow, but by far the greater part of them belonging to men in the prime of lusty life. A few hundred women filled up the remote corners of the hall.

The way in which the ten thousand male voices sounded forth the hymn, "Free from the law, oh, happy condition!" can only be compared to "the sound of many waters." Mr. Shipton followed in a prayer of great power and directness. Mr. Sankey, once again, sang "The Ninety-and-nine," having first told his brothers that he did not sing for their entertainment, but in the hope that the message in the song might cling to them when they were going about their daily work.

Mr. Moody repeated the notice of Mr. Wanamaker's address next Sunday morning, and said, he thought if they were not Sabbath-school teachers, and would come to that meeting, they would be inclined to become so without delay. If they were not Christians, let them become so at once, and then come and take a class in some Sunday-school next Sunday.

"Naaman the Leper" was the theme on which Mr. Moody dilated, applying the case of this ancient warrior to that of every sin-struck soul before him. "If every man here is half as earnest in desiring to get rid of the leprosy of sin as Naaman was to be free of his bodily disease, they would get rid of it to-night." Adopting the sarcastic vein, he showed how Naaman was the type of those who were willing to take salvation in any way but God's way. "My friends, do you see the lesson of the story? It is that if we are going to be saved it must be by doing what God tells us. If you want to get rid of the leprosy of sin you have only to obey. 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.' Is sin so dear to you that you will not give it up in order to receive Christ and heaven?" Very plainly he put it to his hearers that if they ever wished to be saved it must be by "an unconditional surrender." "I may be speaking to many of you for the last time; let me ask you while you are yet on the shores of time, where will you spend eternity?" He invited all who wished to get rid of the leprosy of sin to meet him in the tent, and the young men's meeting would be held in the large hall.

We close our notice of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's last Sunday in the East of London with the hope we expressed at the beginning—that God's blessing may rest on the seed sown so copiously within the past weeks, and that the fruits may continue to appear long after our brethren have ceased to labour in our midst.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING, BOW-ROAD HALL.

There was a very large attendance at the "praise meeting" this morning. After the requests and preliminary exercises, Mr. Moody read from the prophecy of Isaiah, and at once threw the meeting open for reports. "Let us have a real praise meeting," he said. He referred to the case of a young man who had come 500 miles to the meetings, and said if no one else had been saved during the week it would have been worth all the labour.

Rev. T. Richardson praised God for the conversion of a relative.

Mr. Frank White said if every one in the hall were to tell of the reasons for praise, it would take hours before the meeting was closed. He addressed a few earnest words to young converts.

A clergyman told how he had encountered a boy in the inquiry-meeting, moving and looking about. In answer to a question he said he was "looking for Christ." He spoke to him, and shortly afterwards he found him looking for Mr. Moody, whom he wanted to tell that "Jesus had saved him."

Rev. Mr. Park had gratifying intelligence to give of the results of the late meetings in Belfast. Some of the young converts there have begun meetings in private houses in almost every street and alley in the town. A very earnest Christian work was going on, too, among the women of the town. There had been no such meetings in Belfast and the places round about since the revival of 1859.

Mr. Sankey thought the great secret of the movement was due to the prayer that had been offered. He said he had scarcely ever seen such good, earnest work as at the inquiry-meeting for the women yesterday afternoon. He spoke of the encouragement it gave them to hear of the continued blessing that was visiting the places where they had been. He then sang two verses of "I am praying for you."

Rev. T. Richardson said a great many notes of praise had been received of blessings experienced yesterday, both afternoon and evening. He had a special service in his own church, and there were many anxious inquirers.

A gentleman in the body of the hall also testified of the seasons of blessing yesterday. He hoped it was only the droppings of the shower that was to follow.

Mr. Paton said there was a lady who had attended many of the Agricultural Hall meetings, and though she came to the last of them to find Christ, yet left without peace. She was suffering from an overdose of doctrine. Shortly afterwards her soul was set free through the words, "Only trust Him." She is now eagerly seeking to glorify God by trying to bring others to Christ.

Several interesting cases of companions rejoicing together in Christ were then related, and the speaker brought tears to the eyes of many by telling of the conversion of his own son at one of the meetings.

Mr. Moody said there was a little girl present who wished prayer presented for her uncle. He then asked those who were anxious about their own souls to rise, to which request a good few responded. Mr. Moody then offered fervent prayer for these special cases, and besought God to give great blessings at the remaining meetings of the week.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN CANADA.

We have to record the grace of our Lord in connection with the faithful labours of his servants. Brother Robert Mackay, who had been engaged in similar work in the north-west of Scotland, came to Canada last summer, and since his arrival amongst us has been much honoured of the Master. During the winter he was called to take part in a work of grace which had commenced under the ministry of the Rev. D. McGregor at Manilla. Other brethren also assisted in the work. The whole country around seemed to be awakened to the claims of Christ and the value of his salvation. For many weeks service was held nightly, eager throngs listening to the words of life; and a multitude was added to the Lord, both of men and women. The Congregational Church alone received upwards of one hundred into its fellowship, the fruits of this season of blessing. Other churches shared in the harvest, although not to the same extent.

He was afterwards invited to go to Warwick, where, in conjunction with the Rev. Robert Hay, special services were held. The Lord Jesus bore rich testimony to the word of his grace. Both at the principal station and at the minor ones a powerful effusion of the Spirit was vouchsafed. For many weeks nightly meetings were held. The people flocked to hear of "Christ and Him crucified." Many anxious souls sought guidance, and many found the precious Saviour.

On Mr. Mackay's return to Kingston, it was thought desirable to hold special services in connection with the church of which he is a member. A plan of operation was arranged. Miss Geldard and Miss Mudie were invited to come and hold afternoon services, one for ladies and one for children. An evening service, conducted by the pastor and by Mr. Mackay, was also appointed. This programme was carried out. After six weeks of continuous work we have to thank God for his favour and marked blessing. The meetings were largely attended to the close. Many from all the churches came and listened eagerly to the "old, old story." Young and old were blessed, and many will look back on this season of work through all eternity with gratitude and praise. K. M. F

FEMALE ORPHAN HOME, RICKMANSWORTH.—Will any friend kindly give a perambulator for the use of one of the orphans, aged ten, who is a cripple, and cannot walk?
S. LUSCOMBE, Superintendent.

GALWAY EVANGELICAL UNION.—Prayer is requested by the committee of the above society, on behalf of the union and the work going on at present in Galway and the West of Ireland, where God has been visiting his people, and bringing many to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

GOSPEL TENT MISSION, SHROPSHIRE.—On Wednesday, June 2, in a field near Walcott station, the first meeting was held. At 4 p.m., several ministers and friends met for prayer under the canvas. At 5 o'clock tea was provided, when about 220 partook, and at 6 p.m. the tent, holding 300, was quite full. Prayers for blessings were offered, hymns of praise were sung, and several addresses were delivered by ministers of various denominations. It was a time of great refreshing from the Lord. The effort is entirely unsectarian. Will the Lord's people pray that Holy Ghost conversions may be the fruit of the Gospel Tent Mission in many villages. The one blessed object is to make known to the unsaved the gospel of Jesus only. Requests for tent services may be sent to Thos. Radcliffe, Esq., Cheswell Grange, Newport, Salop.

SPECIAL SERVICES, MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

At Mr. Moody's request there have been two weeks of special effort in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, to be continued, if God will. For the first week Archibald Brown was the speaker, the Rev. William Stett for the second. The same earnest interest, the same blessed results, have been manifest as we are, in these days, privileged to witness, wherever and whenever the gospel of the kingdom is preached. How emphatically we live in the "year of grace," 1875; how determined must be the unbelief that says now, in looking down on a large congregation, "Can these bones live?"

The work in the hall has been of a very definite and unmistakable kind; one or two bright cases have come under our notice of souls entering into full peace during the address, and every night others have settled their souls on some simple passage of Scripture, and by its entrance received "light and understanding." Oh, that every section of our city had such a centre of effort, and such a hall as a standing testimony to the love and compassion of God.

The services of song have been excellently attended, and blessed also to the conversion of some. The work is only beginning; let us do the work of the Lord in making the dry valley full of ditches, and from the throne of God and the Lamb shall bountifully flow the living waters.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY.

"Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." These words of the Master are as capable of application in the present day as when He sat at meat in the house of Simon the leper, in the village of Bethany. A special opportunity presents itself just now for "doing them good." Hospital Sunday has come round again, and we cannot but think that a gift for this laudable purpose will be as pleasing to the risen and exalted Saviour as was the precious ointment lavished on Him by the grateful Mary, when she "anointed his body to the burying." There must be many men and women of this city who have been sinners, but whom Jesus, within these last months, has forgiven. Let them not miss the opportunity of making a thank-offering next Lord's-day, when the box comes round for "Hospital Sunday."

DEATH OF REV. W. ARNOT, OF EDINBURGH.

We have heard with the most unfeigned sorrow of the death of this beloved and honoured servant of God, on Wednesday last week, after a few days' illness. It is with a melancholy interest that we turn to our notes of the Convention held at the Opera House just a month ago, and there find it recorded that the tender cheery voice of "the old man eloquent," now hushed in death, opened the proceedings of both days with the reading and exposition of the Scriptures. We recall the pithy, pregnant sentences with which he interspersed the reading of Christ's interview with the woman of Samaria. "Thou wouldst have asked of Him, and He would have given." "There is a sequence of nature for the philosophers," said the venerable doctor triumphantly, "one that never fails." We sigh to think we shall hear his voice no more. We loved him from the first time we heard him; we could not help it; and every time we loved him more. He seemed to speak out of a heart full to overflowing with that compassionate love and pity for sinners that comes from close and long-continued intercourse with the Master Himself.

Dr. Arnot, from the first, took an active part in co-operating with Messrs. Moody and Sankey in their evangelistic labours in Scotland, and we shall not soon forget the speech we heard him deliver at the recent session of the English Presbyterian Synod—a speech that entranced every listener—in which he spoke of the "deep sea soundings" that had been going on in the low parts of Edinburgh, and the strange specimens of humanity that the gospel-net had brought to the surface. And now he is gone to his reward. Though we feel that we can ill spare him, yet we will not seek to grudge him the well-earned repose he is now enjoying. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

REV. SHOLTO DOUGLAS IN INDIA.

Mr. Douglas, writing from Bombay on April 7 to a friend in this country, says:—

"Since December 31 I have been at work almost daily in the land. 'The day' will tell of the results, as I have no newspaper here to mention it for the good of others, and I do not see my way to send an account. I thank God for open doors everywhere I call—in Bombay, Madras, and other towns in this vast empire. One thing which strikes all is the readiness to hear and the ripeness of the field. I have held meetings in most places for holiness, and the Bishop of Madras assembled all the clergy to a meeting on the subject, held in his own house, at which, of course, he took the chair. I have had most of the clergy here also, and Nonconformists, to confer on the same topic. Many are the meetings on this point which have been held in Bombay. I am, thank God, able now to get into many drawing-rooms, and there speak to those who will not come to church."

HEBREW CHRISTIANS AT PALESTINE-PLACE.

A most interesting meeting of Jewish converts to the Christian faith was held last week in the grounds of the Rev. H. A. Stern, 8, Palestine-place, Cambridge-heath. A fair number assembled to a substantial tea, in the tent that had been erected for the purpose, and which, by half-past five, was quite full.

The Rev. H. A. Stern opened by sounding the key-note—sympathy. Converted Jews need encouragement and sympathy. This they cannot get from Gentile Christians. They must get it from those who have been through the severe persecution which only a Jew has to bear upon becoming a Christian. Gentiles may have troubles and even persecution, but they have no idea what a Jew has to put up with, both from his own people, and from those who profess to be Christians.

The Rev. Dr. Rosenthal spoke on the unbelief prevailing as to the possibility of the Jew's conversion, and related how Dr. Schwartz was led to believe in it, and entreated his brethren to be earnest in proving to the Gentile Christians that the gospel has still the same power as when it was given to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile.

Mr. Helter, a missionary from Germany, about to leave for Russia, Mr. J. M. Meyer, Mr. Prince, Mr. Duckard, and several others, addressed the meeting.

An incident mentioned by Mr. Duckard is so painfully suggestive of the cause of backsliding in our churches, that we give it. May all who feel the truth it presses on our attention individually cease to do evil, and learn to do well. Speaking of the lack of sympathy shown by Gentile Christians to Hebrew converts, he related an instance of a young man he introduced to a church, thinking the officers would take him by the hand, and help him on. But when he saw him some time afterwards, the young man said, "Oh, they treated me so coldly, that if I had not been a Christian before I went there, I should never have been one afterwards." Mr. Duckard went to see how it was they had treated him so, and was told that they wished to see how he turned out before they had anything to do with him!

PREACHING AT ALEXANDRA PALACE.—Assisted by various brethren, I have for a number of years past been privileged to conduct open-air services at the Crystal Palace upon the occasion of the Annual Temperance League Fête. This year the fête will be held at the Alexandra Palace on Tuesday, July 6. I shall be glad to hear from those who are willing to help by preaching or singing, and also to receive tracts for distribution. 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N. W. FORBES.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—A few more Aarons and Hurs to come to the prayer-meetings, not to hear addresses, but to meet God, and to ask Him to bless the preaching of the gospel. A few more converted Sunday-school teachers to take the place of those unconverted. A few more tract distributors of the right sort, who, besides giving away the tracts, will speak for Jesus. A few more rich Christians who don't forget that they are merely stewards of the Great King. Application to be made at once to any God-fearing minister in the applicant's neighbourhood.

BIRMINGHAM.—The young men's meetings here have this last week increased in numbers and interest. The work still has difficulties in its way, and the faithful few earnestly desire to be remembered by all engaged in the Lord's work. There are hundreds in the town who were awakened by the preaching of Mr. Moody to consider their sins, and hundreds who gave themselves up to the Saviour, who, through lack of a little foresight, are not now to be found. May the Lord direct the minds of his children to this, that they not only wait upon anxious souls in the inquiry-room, but that they adopt some means to follow up every soul after the brethren have left our shores. In addition to the meetings in Needle-alley, at which there has been an attendance of 130 average, Mr. Joseph Armishaw has commenced open-air services in the Bull Ring, which the Lord is blessing.

CHINA FOR CHRIST.

It is already June. Those of your readers who have joined us in prayer that God would give the China Inland Mission eighteen missionaries this year, for the nine still unevangelized provinces, will be glad to know how far those prayers have been answered. Two of the eighteen have already sailed, shortly to be followed (d.v.) by several others.

The first, Mr. Henry Soltan, accompanied Mr. Stevenson to Burmah. They arrived in Rangoon, May 14th, to enter S.W. China, via Bhamo on the Irrawaddy, when God opens the way. Mr. Stevenson's nine years' experience in China will be very helpful. Let us pray for them.

The second, Mr. George King, embarked for Shanghai in the "Cybele" on the 15th ult., and has now probably reached the Red Sea. Ask a safe journey for him.

In China, Mr. M. H. Taylor, late of Nanking, has set out for Ho-nan, the first of the nine provinces. May I ask earnest prayer that God may protect and largely use his young servant among the twenty-five millions of this province?

I am about (d.v.) to issue a monthly illustrated paper, to be entitled, "China's Millions," to make them better known, and to plead their cause. The first number will be published July 1, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, price one penny. I shall be thankful for prayer for God's blessing on it, and for help in promoting its circulation

WOMEN'S PEACE AND ARBITRATION AUXILIARY.

The first annual meeting of this Society was held on the evening of Wednesday week, in the Library of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. After a social tea, the business of the evening began, under the presidency of Mr. H. Richard, M.P., who is well known for his arduous services in the cause of peace. In his opening speech, he defended the prominent part taken in this movement by women, and showed how they are deeply affected by all the attendant evils of war, which he depicted in all their naked ugliness. "It is a coarse, brutal, butcherly thing, which has no glory in it." "We believe there is a better way of settling international disputes than by an appeal to the sword." After defending arbitration on all grounds in preference to war, the president read a letter by Mr. Elihu Burritt, in support of the efforts of the Society, and another from Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of the United States.

The first report, read by the secretary, Mrs. Southey, Tressilian-road, Lewisham High-road, S.E., reviews the history of women's work for peace, and asserts that "anti-war Christians truly recognize the value of the soul, inasmuch as they will not sanction their fellow-creatures being made food for powder, and, at the bidding of their fellow-men, being hurried all unprepared into eternity." It also claims the Peace Auxiliary to be "an agency for clearing away impediments from the road of social progress, and for removing gigantic barriers to the spread of the gospel."

Mr. Leone Levi regretted that there should be any necessity in these later days for a fresh organization for the purpose of inculcating the principles of peace, but recognizing the sad necessity, he welcomed the co-operation of women, and appealed to all to use the influence they possess. Mr. Levi strongly deprecated the plaudits that had been showered on Miss Thompson, the painter of "The Roll Call," who had portrayed war rather in a favourable and glorious phase than a repellent one. Miss Becker, however, who spoke next, took an opposite view, and made a good point in favour of a wider diffusion of female influence on this question by quoting the words of the psalm, "The Lord gave the word; and great was the company of the women publishers."

After some pieces of music in praise of peace, sweetly sung by a small choir, Dr. Moffat, the venerable preacher of peace to the heathen, spoke shortly on the question of the evening from a Christian point of view. From his African experiences he gave some notable instances of the influences of women in bringing about peace between hostile tribes, and deduced a powerful argument in favour of the "Woman's Peace Auxiliary."

We cannot recommend the most Christian and humane objects of this youthful association better than by quoting the two passages of Scripture that adorned each end of the room:—"Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more"; "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men."

MR. GEORGE LAWRENCE has returned from Spain to recruit his health. He has recently lost two of his children. His address is, Monnow-street, Monmouth.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

BACKSLIDING. By W. P. LOCKHART, Liverpool. Hodder and Stoughton.—A useful book on what is, alas! a very practical subject. It should not be forgotten, in the midst of the high aspirations after spiritual progress which abound at present, that spiritual declension needs to be dealt with practically, and in relation to matters of detail of every-day life. An unusually high spring-tide may carry a vessel safe into port, over sands and shallows, but, on ordinary occasions, the chart needs to be consulted, and the buoys which mark out shoals and banks need to be carefully avoided. There is, of course, but one chart of any use to the Christian, but the value of this little book consists in the amount of Scripture light it throws upon the subject.

THE WOMEN OF INDIA, AND CHRISTIAN WORK IN THE ZENANA. By MRS. WRETBRECHT. Nisbet & Co.—An interesting collection of sketches of female life in India, giving such an insight into the oppression, degradation, and injustice which are the portion of the sex throughout our vast Indian Empire, as fills the heart with indignation, and with a burning desire to see extended that most merciful ANTI-SLAVERY movement, the Zenana Mission. We earnestly entreat every young Christian woman who has not yet found a worthy vocation in life to read this book, and then to ask the Lord, "What wouldst Thou have me to do?" The work is full of accurate mission history, and gives a clear and definite idea of the true nature of the mission work awaiting ladies in India, as well as brief biographies of the principal female missionaries.

HOLINESS, SCRIPTURAL AND PRACTICAL; with Prefatory Note by the Rev. J. T. WRENFORD. London: Hodder and Stoughton.—The salvation from sin which the Lord Jesus Christ came down from heaven to effect, has three aspects which should never be disassociated—salvation from the guilt, power, and presence of sin. "He is made unto us wisdom from God," (to wit), "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." We look back to his finished work on earth for righteousness. We look up to his priestly intercession as the ground and source of sanctification. We look on to his glorious appearing for the final change when "our vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body," "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." This little book, like many in the present day, confines its attention almost exclusively to the one aspect of salvation from sin, namely, "sanctification." If this be clearly borne in mind, and if its testimony to this one aspect of the great salvation be not allowed to dim the lustre of the other two, we have nought to express but hearty commendation of a stirring appeal to Christians to consider the Scripture teaching as to what should be the walk and ways of those whom God has justified, and whom He will glorify.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION. A Series of Lectures in Reply to Tyndall, Huxley, Darwin, Spencer, etc. Belfast: William Mullan.—From amongst the shower of missiles which have been falling upon the head of Professor Tyndall since his unwarranted attack upon Christianity, in the inaugural address to the Belfast Association last autumn, a few, aimed by cooler hands than usual, have been picked up and gathered together in this volume. In their pamphlet form, issued in succession after being delivered from a Belfast pulpit, they are already familiar to many who sufficiently appreciate their worth as to welcome their appearance in a more permanent shape. The names of the authors, who are amongst the most accomplished and able divines of Ireland, give to the papers in opposition to Tyndall, Herbert Spencer, and the new biological schools generally, a fair title to be heard upon such a subject, even though they are not written by professed scientists. If science invades their territory, they have not only a right but a call to defence. And one is glad to know that the Church possesses men sufficiently in the current of scientific thought to undertake the task without presumption, and to complete it with credit. Three out of the nine papers have undoubtedly a scientific as well as a theological value; a fourth contains an interesting deduction of the old argument from design, from the new facts of vegetable morphology in connection with fertilization; while the remaining five deal forcibly and clearly with questions of ordinary apologetics such as Miracles, Prayer, and the Divine Origin of the Bible.

AFTER DARKNESS, LIGHT. A Memoir of Mr. W. H. Dollin. James Hawkins, Welbeck-street.—A loving, faithful memorial of a loving, faithful life. Mr. Dollin's character was not free from eccentricity, nor, we suppose, was the Apostle Paul's. Mr. Dollin is associated with some of the brightest times of our life, and we are right glad to see a sketch of so lowly and God-fearing a life.

EASTERN BLOSSOMS: Sketches of Native Christian Life in India. By MARY E. LESLIE. John Snow & Co.—A sweet little book, enabling one to realize the heart-exercises and life-service of native converts in India. The story of Bedou, the Bible-woman, is life-like and touching. Oh that India had thousands of such humble but efficient evangelists! A good book to read at mothers'-meetings, to enlarge the sympathies of Christian women, and to touch the hearts of all.

MINISTERS WORKING TOGETHER WITH GOD, AND OTHER SERMONS. By F. W. BOURNE. Hamilton.—Mr. Bourne is already known to the public as the author of "The King's Son," etc., and in the volume before us he gives us eleven sermons preached before the Bible Christian Conference, and other bodies. We have looked into this very thoughtful volume, and the first, third, and ninth sermons, seem to us especially deserving of mention. The section commencing on p. 254, and ending on p. 258, on the question, "Are there few that be saved?" and on the vexed question of "Universal Restoration," is particularly clear, Scriptural, and to the point. We are glad to see the author intends to issue other volumes of a similar character, as the diffusion of such literature is greatly to be desired, and if called for indicates an appreciation of thoughtful Christian teaching, which must be very encouraging to all who, ministers or otherwise, are "workers together with God."

MILITIA SERVICES IN DEVIZES.—Some time ago, prayer was asked in these pages for blessing to attend some special services in Devizes, to be held by Mr. Opie Rodway and Mr. Marshall. The Oddfellows' Hall was hired for the Sunday services. One of the brethren and his wife visited London to attend some of the Agricultural Hall services, and returned with a strong desire to reach the men of the Royal Wiltshire Militia, just then assembling for the annual month's training. Moody and Sankey's hymns were well practised, in order to render the services attractive. The men were visited at their billets, and in some cases compelled to come in. Five services were held during the week, about sixty men attending each time. A closing tea was provided for them, which they thoroughly enjoyed. After a time of solemn appeal to them to decide for Christ, as many as fifty responded by raising their hands, and gave a promise, by God's grace, to resist the temptation to drink. Each man, on leaving, received a nicely bound copy of the New Testament. The Christians are greatly encouraged by the success of the effort; as many as ten converts were baptized, and many others are still anxious. Let our readers recognize this blessing as a gracious answer to their prayers, and take courage and ask still greater things.

DOVER.—I feel constrained to tell your numerous readers what God is doing at Dover. There is a loving unity amongst several of the churches. United prayer-meetings, where different sections of the Church assemble twice a week, have been oftentimes seasons of refreshing from God. Last Lord's-day, at a public experience meeting held in Peter-street Chapel, a great number publicly testified for Jesus, amongst them were Churchmen, Methodists, and others; some told of very remarkable conversions; some were converted to God at Christ Christ, others at Saint James, and are still members in these churches; many dated their conversions from the singing of Miss B. Garrett. During the service two precious souls were saved. A band of Christian young men has been organized who hold open-air services, and exhort in the halls. The Templars' Hall has been taken for a mission in the centre of Dover; and a new hall erected at the pier end of Dover in Round Tower-street, being one of the most neglected parts of the town; over one hundred pounds has been subscribed by members of different churches towards the erection of this hall. This building is open, and a good work is already begun in it; a school of neglected children has been gathered in, and an open-air campaign is being carried on amongst the fishermen and costermongers in connection with this hall; many have already been inquiring what they must do to be saved? A grand work of grace is being carried on amongst the youths of Dover, several have been saved, and a youths' prayer-meeting is being well conducted every night by Mr. Blackman at the Youths' Society. I ask the prayers of my country for Dover, that Dover may send the light of truth and the influences of Christianity to the Continent.—Yours in the faith of the gospel, JOSEPH DINWICK.

SOUTHAMPTON.—When the disciples went "preaching the Lord Jesus, the hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed and turned unto the Lord." And so now in this town, where the Lord Jesus is being preached night after night, this true stamp of God's approval is with us. We cannot count how many have been saved, nor how many impressed and awakened, but as day by day seekers are dealt with in the inquiry-room, and go away rejoicing, we can only use the Scripture reckoning and say, "a great number" have believed and turned to the Lord. I will not occupy your space with the intensely interesting details which came under our notice, the like of which are repeating themselves all over the country in these fruitful days of ingathering, more than to give an instance of a young woman on Whit-Monday, who, finding herself excluded for want of a ticket from the tea provided for some 500 in the Drill Hall, was overheard to declare her intention of going to the Common instead, the resort of all sorts of temptations and wickedness on these holiday occasions. She was asked by some Christians to wait a little, and soon room was found for her, and she stayed, not only for the address, but also went into the inquiry-room, from which she returned home rejoicing in her new-found Saviour. One characteristic of the work here is that it is an united effort on the part of several churches to bring the unconverted to Christ, and thus Christians are also much revived. On Wednesday, the 16th inst., we are to have a conference on evangelization, when several well-known Christians have arranged to be present, the object being to bring the responsibility of unitedly seeking to win souls to Jesus more prominently before Christians. Will your readers pray that this object may be abundantly attained, and that many of us may be stirred up afresh to yield ourselves to this great work.

SECOND

OF
The Christian.

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT,]

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

[12, Paternoster Buildings, E.O.]

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1875.

FROM MR. MOODY TO THE EDITOR.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am greatly taken with the idea of having a Special Number of THE CHRISTIAN, devoted entirely to Young Men. The work amongst the Young Men is, to me, one of the most cheering features of the present movement, and I trust this Special Number will give it a fresh impulse throughout the whole country. The account of the Liverpool Convention should be read by every Christian Young Man in the three Kingdoms.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

We think it is only right to express our special thanks to those friends (chiefly young men) who have kindly sent us articles and interesting intelligence for our two Special Young Men's Numbers. With their assistance, we trust we have been able to present to our readers some idea of one of the most important and hopeful features of the great religious awakening with which God is visiting our land. We send forth these special issues of our paper in the prayerful hope and expectation that they may be instrumental in arousing a livelier, a more universal interest in the work among young men. We repeat the announcement made in last week's Number, that "the two extra portions will be issued as one Special Double Number of THE CHRISTIAN for Young Men, price Twopence, for supply to Young Men's Associations throughout the world. It will contain matter of sufficient interest and importance to constitute it a manual for the conduct of evangelistic and other work among young men everywhere; and we would request those Associations which desire supplies to send us orders as early as possible."

EXTRACT FROM MR. MOODY'S PREFACE.

"I have thought no Addresses could be more suitable for the present times than these. They have been a great help to me; and many who are now preaching the gospel in America bear similar testimony. . . . I believe his [Mr. BAKER'S] Addresses will be the means of pointing THE WAY to multitudes who are enquiring."

HOW TO GET UP A YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

THINKING OVER IT.

First of all, pray about it. See if God wants you to get it up. If God does, be sure that you are really willing to do your part. Remember that Satan would give a good deal to have you let the thing alone, and be prepared to deal honestly with the excuses which he will put into your mind against it. Take up the questions of personal inconvenience, sacrifice of your time, possibility of losing certain friendships, and many others which will at once suggest themselves, and ask yourself candidly, "Ought I to let these things stand in the way?" Settle them at once for what they are worth, and give God the benefit of any bias.

Then, after counting the cost, if you really mean to go on, let every fear about consequences, every doubt about the success of it, every suspicion of failure, vanish. You have all the powers of heaven at your back, and you must succeed. Make up your mind to this at once, and go forward in the fulness of trust in God. Do not be frightened at your own inexperience, nor think how exceptionally "hard to move" your town is. It is God who is to do the work, and not you; so you may safely leave all anxiety in his hands. Above all, do not be afraid of making mistakes. Everybody makes mistakes; and the greatest mistake you could make would be not to begin at all.

PRELIMINARY STEPS.

Look out three or four other young men whom you think you might get to join you in it. In every district there are three or four young men who usually take the lead in such things; do not go to them. If they are worth anything, their hands will be already full; but that is not the reason. Young men would take it from them as a matter of course, and it would not have the same effect. Get them to pray for you, and counsel you, but let the new workers come to the front.

Remember it is quite as important to develop new workers as new converts. Therefore, pick out three or four new men, young men whom young men would like—Christians, of course. They may not be workers, very probably because they never get the chance. The Church has a wealth of such young men, men whom it is at once her loss and her sin that she has never set to work. Call on one or two personally; tell out all that has been passing through your own mind, how you have grown ashamed at never having done anything for Christ, how you have begun to yearn for the souls of the young men around you, how God has laid it upon your heart to make a humble effort to reach them. Do not get their answer upon the spot, but after a brief prayer that God will lead them to comply or refuse according as it will be for his glory, say you will call back again in a day or two. Spend the interval yourself in ceaseless prayer.

THE FIRST MEETING.

The first meeting will naturally be a workers' meeting. Let it be anywhere—in your own bedroom, for instance. If half-a-dozen come, it is well. If three come, thank God—God can work with three. It is not his way to work with crowds; it never has been. Individual men are his instruments—units. The New Testament itself is but a brief biography, and the pages of the Old are marked with the lives of men, not with the graves of nations. Therefore, be encouraged with your handful. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I." Let this meeting be continued every second night, say, for a week. Let it be a week of consecration and prayer. Let the workers get filled with the Spirit. Let them determine to take one month clean out of their lives and give it away to God. If they do, they will not need to be asked about the second month—it will be God's too.

Meantime, let a hall be engaged, a small cheerful place, unsectarian if possible, a place which would be popular with young men. A music-hall or an empty theatre may often be had in summer, or, as a last alternative, the school-room of a church; or, even at a push, a tent might be hired for a few pounds. Then let a few unpretentious tickets be printed. Let them be of the very best quality, containing a courteous invitation to the meeting. Any cost will kill the meeting at the very outset. Let the invitation be delivered personally to every young man in the neighbourhood, and accompanied by a respectful verbal request that it would be a favour if they could make an effort to come. It might even be whispered about that Mr. So-and-so (who had not been identified with "this kind of thing" before) was expected to preside, and young Mr. Blank (who had certainly never previously been known to "come out" as a Christian) would probably speak, so that, curiosity and surprise being awakened, an audience would be almost a certainty.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF THE MEETING.

Large platforms should, if possible, be avoided. A little table, a few yards from the centre of the room, with the chairs ranged round in semicircles, makes probably the best arrangement. This is, at all events, unostentatious, takes away the appearance of speechifying, or delivering set addresses, and gives that homely, informal character to the meeting which should be specially aimed at. Anything which will reduce the character of the speaking from speechifying to plain honest talking, even in form, is of more value in a distinctively young men's meeting, than one who does not know young men, might imagine. A harmonium, and a few leading voices to form a small choir, are, of course, a great acquisition. It is needless to add, that all who have an official charge of the meeting, such as handing about hymn-books, and showing the audience to their seats, should be gentlemen.

THE PROGRAMME.

The meeting should only last an hour. From nine to ten at night is undoubtedly the best time. Theoretically this late hour is ridiculous; but the stern law of experience has peremptorily proved it to be right. All the recent great work amongst young men throughout the country has gone on from nine to ten at night. There are a hundred objections to it—objections of great weight. They are all granted. It would be of immense advantage if an earlier hour would suit; that is all one can say. The reasons for the popularity of the late hour seem to be these: Many do not leave business till very late; some have evening-classes, over at nine; some have church work, home duties, and other engagements, which do not set them free earlier.

Then no one grudges dropping in to the meeting when the day is practically done; but an earlier one breaks up the whole evening, and this is a serious matter when the meeting runs on for weeks or months, as it ought to do, if there is any life in it at all. The less formidable the meeting can be made to those who are invited, who are not Christians (who naturally look on it as a kind of nuisance at any rate) the better; and young men are not going to lose a quiet row, or a smoke, or their innings at cricket, for a religious meeting.

Then the meeting should be held every night. It should run right on through everything—wet nights, fine nights, long nights, short nights. Do not say, "Well, we'll have it three nights a week to begin with—best to begin with a trial." No, it isn't! If you have faith enough for three nights a week, you may as well have faith for seven. You see, a young man comes on Monday night, and if you have no meeting for him on Tuesday, he goes to the theatre. The men who would do that are the very men you want to get hold of. Therefore let your meeting be an institution. If it should only be a small one, or a temporary one, never mind. Let it be an institution while it lasts.

THE CHAIRMAN.

A great deal depends upon the chairman. To young men he should be a sample Christian. He should be youthful, genial, sympathetic, natural, ready. Gentle withal, he should know how to be firm without being severe, and to respect the feelings of his audience more than the feelings of an individual. There are men who attract men. Therefore, if you have half-a-dozen men whose hearts are in the right place, choose him above all who is the most likeable, who lives in that mysterious atmosphere of natural magnetism, the influence of which is as difficult to define as to resist.

The chairman should be to the meeting very much what the chef de baton is to an orchestra—to keep time and tune. His stock-in-trade consists of a Bible, a hymn-book, a watch, with a seconds-hand, a cheery smile, and an eye "without any mud at the bottom of it," as Emerson would say. His duties are at once very simple and very difficult. The difficulty is in being simple; it is so hard to be unobtrusive. Then it requires great tact to gain influence over a meeting by familiarity without losing it in dignity; and great delicacy of handling, to let the sympathetic elements in the audience enjoy the sense of complete freedom, and the discordant ones at the same time the fulness of restraint. He fills the post best of whom, when the meeting is over, a stranger would say, "What an easy time of it the chairman had! Just to sit in the chair, and do nothing. Why, anybody could do that!" A touch so light as that is the perfection of all generalship. But, after all, it is only God who can subdue a meeting.

THE BILL OF FARE.

The speaking, of course, must be done by young men. If, as a deputation from some other town where there has been work, a stranger can be got to help (not to monopolize), it might give the work a better start; but the experiment has been tried with local men only, and succeeded to perfection. After an opening hymn, the chairman might call on some young man to read the requests, and lead in prayer—a novice if possible, for his own sake, if not for the meeting's; it would draw him out. Then another hymn, and a few verses of the Bible read by another, followed, perhaps, by a few remarks. After another hymn, two very short addresses, of ten minutes, concluded with prayer, the benediction and an earnest appeal from the chairman for the undecided to stay to the after-meeting.

The addresses may be anything but preaching—young men will not stand being preached at by one another. Individual testimonies to personal change of heart have been found most useful of all.

Every Christian has his own wonderful little history to tell; and when it bubbles right out of the heart, with the sole desire to glorify God, and bring sinners to the cross, no one ever thinks of the blundering and the faltering. And if an occasional tear has to be brushed away from the speaker's eye, at the memory of the forgiven but not forgotten past, there is an eloquence in strong men's tears which no voice can ever express. After the first night or two, the meeting will generate its own speakers. Men's tongues will be loosed. Those who never dreamed of speaking will find they cannot keep silent. Then, instead of having two addresses, the chairman might occupy the first twenty minutes himself, then throw the meeting open, and hear from half-a-dozen, two or three minutes each. By-and-by, a teaching-meeting for Bible study, for which the aid of more experienced Christians might be called in, should be started three times a week, an hour before the general meeting for those who had been impressed.

CONCLUSION.

Now for the conclusion, i.e., your conclusion. Do you think you will try it?

BOYS' MEETING, LIVERPOOL.

One evening, at the end of the young men's meeting in Newsome's Circus, it was intimated that on the following Thursday boys would have a meeting entirely for themselves, an hour before the young men's meeting began.

At eight o'clock on the evening arranged, about thirteen Christian boys took their seats on the platform, and there was immediate attention. One gave out a hymn, then another prayed to his heavenly Father for a blessing on their meeting that evening. Then Hymn 49 was sung—

"The great Physician now is near, the boys all rising and joining in the chorus. One after another the boys rose from different parts of the circus, and told simply the story of their meeting with this beloved Jesus, of whom they had been singing; and turning to their companions, they pleaded with them to come and trust this loving Saviour, and told them if they did so they would be very happy.
The sympathizing Jesus,"

One little fellow said, "I have a brother a sailor; I cannot think of him without crying. He is not yet a Christian, and the thought sometimes comes to me, if he were lost at sea, when I go to the right hand of Jesus I would never see him, and it makes me cry to think of it. Will you all pray for him?"

And then many of the boys bowed their heads and prayed that the Spirit of God would touch his heart that night while he was far away on the ocean.

At the close of the meeting many of the boys gathered together in groups over the circus while the Christians pointed the others to Christ.

The meeting is still carried on every Sunday evening, and we ask your earnest prayers for a great blessing. R.

YOUNG MEN AND THEIR HOLIDAYS.—I was present at the Convention in Liverpool, and heard a suggestion made which gave me the hope that the young men who have been so much blessed in our large towns will endeavour to carry the good news with them whilst enjoying their holidays. Would it not be a good thing if the Bible-classes which are held in the country districts for young men could receive a visit from any of those who have been so blessed of God? We have a Bible-class here which needs stirring up, and the members of which, conscious of their need, would gladly welcome any of the young men who will pay us a visit.

THE STRENGTH OF YOUNG MEN.

BY THE REV. ROBERT MUIR, M.A., HAWICK.

In the far off days of earlier Bible history, we see that Saul was made king because he was a giant among the tribes—a head and shoulders above the rest of the people. Those were the days when men still worshipped brute force. David, however, taught a better lesson when he, a mere stripling lad, overthrew the great champion of the Philistines, and thereby demonstrated that the fear of God and faith in God are stronger than brute force. His son, Solomon, had caught hold of the great truth, and laid it to heart when he wrote down the well-known words, "He that is slow to anger is greater than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

According to the Bible idea, more especially as unfolded in the New Testament, that man is strong who is strong spiritually. The gospel does not disparage the lower kind of strength—strength of mind and strength of body; but, on the other hand, in harmony with its many-sided character, it aims at the building up of the whole man. Hence its moral rules are a code of good health, and an enlightened Christianity is the friend and patron of all enlightenment. The moral, however, is the true basis of Christian manhood; and he is the strong man who has ceased to lean on the human, and who leans upon and derives all his strength from the Divine, who enlightens his mind with God's truth, who regulates his will by God's law, who lives and moves under the promptings of God's spirit, and who reposes his soul's trust upon One who meets his need with infinite sufficiency, and is to him wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. The strong man, in short, is the man who is filled with the life of God—the all-wise, all-merciful, all-righteous, and just; let this be the strength aimed at by all young men who may read these lines.

Young men are, or at least ought to be, the life and the hope of our churches. They are the connecting link between the church of the present and the church of the future, and it is for them to determine whether the spiritual interests about to be committed to their care will be improved under their management, and transmitted as a richer legacy of good to those who come after them. When the spiritual life of a church is high, it rises high in young souls. Young men and maidens, as well as old men, praise the name of the Lord; and that is guarantee that the spiritual succession of faith and hope and Christian courage and energy will be continued after the present actors have quitted the scene.

It is important to be remembered, too, that Christian young men are in many respects the flower of the spiritual army. If they want some of the virtues that come with ripe years and experience, they have at least the strength which is the attribute of their age. The grace of God within them has the quick force and exuberance of a virgin soil. It imparts to their ardour a peculiar freshness, and to their zeal a mighty enthusiasm, precisely at that period of life when men are most susceptible, and when, if they go in for a thing at all, they go in for it with a will, throwing the reins upon the neck of their zeal, and riding off upon the great purpose of life in a manner that sometimes calls for repression rather than stimulus.

For the very reason, however, that young men are full of impulses and precipitate of action, it is of the first importance that the divinely guiding and controlling hand of the Spirit of God be laid upon them when they are making their first start in life; for the natural force within them will work as a force somehow; and it depends on the direction given to it whether it will become zeal for God, or riot in wickedness. Therefore, young men, as you are now standing on the threshold of that time when you are about to put forth the strength that is in you, either for good or for evil, it would be well for you to consider where you are, and whither you are going; and especially it would be well for you to make sure of this, that if you would be true to your vocation as young men called to eternal life, and summoned to the great battle thereof, you must secure for yourselves that heavenly mind and temper, and clothe yourselves with that spiritual panoply, of which we have a detailed account in the New Testament, and which is summed up in the apostolic exhortation, "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

You need to be strong for two reasons—with a view, at once, to defensive and to aggressive action. You are in a world where, in the great struggle for life, lower and higher, only the strong things hold their own, while the weak go down and perish. What a weakling is the young man who enters upon life, especially life in our large cities, without the fortifying protection of Christian principle, without the shielding or deterring influence of godly companionships, and perhaps with all the innocence and unsuspectingness contributed by a rural upbringing. For a young man to maintain his integrity under such unfavourable conditions—evil circling him round, and no resisting force possessing his soul—would be next to a miracle. And besides, you must not only act on the defensive in this great warfare between God and the devil, but you must assume the offensive as well. You must work for God, more especially that kind of work which will engage your attention, and direct your efforts towards those who are young like yourselves. How to do it? How to acquire the requisite strength or force to do it? Here the answer is twofold. Your spiritual life has two sides—a divine side and a human. From its divine side it impels you to look to God, and to God alone, for spiritual supplies, bringing them down daily and hourly from above, through that power of appropriation that belongs to meditation and prayer—in one word, to communion with God.

A young man to be strong must be devout, coming forth from his chamber as the sun does from his, rejoicing like a strong man to run his race. And this is not all; not only must you be devout and heavenly-minded, but looking at your spiritual life from its more human side, you must be active and energetic. The contemplative and the active must be combined in your moral nature, otherwise you will never be strong. The grace given you in answer to prayer will be wasted, and you will be weakened unless you exercise it in doing good. It is by a beautiful law that your own personal growth in grace is made to depend upon the zeal with which you work for God and for the good of others! Ask a watchmaker, and he will tell you that the watch wastes much more by lying idle than by going. Take care that you do not go to pieces in your own sloth. Do not waste your religious life in reveries and dreaming, nor yet in mere empty declamation and impracticable schemes; but work it well and work it hard, and you will both exalt it for yourself, and turn it to good account, and to increasingly good account, in the spiritual welfare of others.

Let me remind you of the amount of good you may communicate by personal influence, by individual action. What is called weight of character, when accompanied by practical energy, not only accomplishes what it proposes, but it becomes irresistible; not only bearing down wickedness, but putting it to shame, and not seldom winning it over to God and to good. But if the spiritual force that is in you be great when working alone, how much is it multiplied by combination. Young men are gregarious; they go in herds. How they crowd to theatres and music saloons and dancing parties; and how the incitements to evil are kept up by association and the confirming influence of companionship!

How hard it is, how sometimes all but impossible, for a young man to break away from the set with whom he is connected, and to whom he is bound by so many evil cords. To break these cords you must bring him in contact with associates of an entirely opposite kind, and throw around him the protection supplied by the confederation of young men for purposes conducive to the cultivation of mind and character. Such social agencies for the restraining of the viciously disposed, and for the confirming of the virtuous in their integrity, are well exemplified in our temperance societies, our young men's literary societies, young men's Christian associations, and other like organizations. A strong protection those, and a capital training school to the individual members thereof, they at the same time serve the purpose of recruiting parties for enlisting the vigorous young life of our country into the ranks of the Christian army.

Let those young men's associations be encouraged and fostered everywhere, and wherever they are established let them present an open door to every point of the compass, and hold out an encouraging hand on the right and on the left, that so young men, when they leave the rural districts and smaller towns, and go up to our great centres of population and industry, may find that the attraction of the theatre, the dram shop, and the dancing saloon, is baffled by the counter attraction of meetings of ingenuous youth, where nothing is seen or heard or transacted, except what is fitted to inform the mind and to elevate the character.

But I must not extend this paper. Let me simply exhort every young man to do his very best to train his own heart and life to the service of God, and to get others embarked in the same glorious work. The Church in these days needs all the gifts and all the talents, and the non-use of these, as well as the abuse or mis-use of them is a great sin and great waste. In these days we utilize everything—that is the word now in vogue to describe how thrifty and deft we have become in the use of the material resources of every-day life. We find use now for the cuttings and parings of all things. One of the most flourishing industries in the town where I dwell is a powerful testimony to the fact that the waste of our mills, which a few years ago was turned adrift upon our rivers, can now be made to yield a rich revenue to the cunning brain and hand which know how to use it.

Let the Church, let young men, learn a lesson from such facts as these. For young men to squander their energies on the world and on pleasure, is to play the prodigal indeed; let them learn to devote themselves, soul, body, and spirit, to the service of the Saviour and of humanity; doing that they will soon make the discovery that they have found a task worthy of their powers to work upon—and a task which, when by effort and practice, as well as by the continued infusion of divine grace, it has become congenial, so works the love of itself into the soul of him who is engaged in it, that for its promotion no service is felt to be too great, nor sacrifice too costly.—Young Men's Christian Magazine.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

Our ordinary numbers of last and this week contain accounts of the great Christian Convention now being held at Brighton. We are glad that, in the multiplicity of meetings, the young men have not been neglected. The following report is from the Sussex Daily News :—

On the evening of Wednesday week a crowded meeting of young men was held in the Music-room. Mr. M. Wallis was in the chair. After prayer and praise he said: A great responsibility rests upon you and me, young men, in our being permitted to witness the arrival of a great crisis in the history of the Universal Church of Christ. Men throughout the world are wearied of systems and formalities which are called religion, and they are longing with an inflamed desire to know Christ Himself—a real personal Christ. When countless numbers are crowding into the glorious kingdom, what can be more fitting than that the young manhood of this country should lead the way, and engage in the work with the vigour of their intellects, the energies of their minds, and the consecration of their hearts. The men who are in this movement, who are men of prayer and service, are moved to-night to gather you together to warm your hearts and to endeavour to show you the joy of getting near to Christ, who is not only our Saviour from sin, but our exceeding kind Friend and Brother, who carries the burdens of which you have so many, increases your joys and soothes your sorrows. The beloved disciple has written to you and to me, "I have written to you, young men, because you are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and you have overcome the Wicked One."

Mr. Mayers then sung, very effectively, the hymn, "There were ninety-and-nine that safely lay," after which

Mr. T. B. Smithies said: Deeply impressed am I with the power that God has given young men. Much depends upon the members of our Young Men's Christian Associations as to the future of the young men of our country. I was walking along the Strand one night, and I came upon a fine tall soldier. I entered into conversation with him; and said, "There is one thing I cannot understand about the British soldier." "What is that, sir?" "Well," I said, "he is bold and daring: you could not insult him more than by calling him a coward. There are men amongst you would rush up to the cannon's mouth, even if you knew it would be certain death, and yet there are amongst you men who dare not kneel down in the barrack-room at night, and repeat the prayer their mother taught them when they were children." He paused and said, "That is true, sir." "What is the meaning of it, soldier?" He said, "You remind me of what took place in my own roll a few weeks ago. A young fellow came into our room, and the first night before going to bed he knelt down to pray, and instantly there was a noise and disturbance in the room. Caps and belts were flung over at the man, but he did not move. The second night there was a general cry, "Willie, try it again." Down he went on his knees again. Caps and belts were thrown again, and the men whistled. The third night he went again on his knees, and again on the fourth night, with the same result, and on the fifth night. And then," he said, "the greatest blackguard in the room cried out, 'Lads, he is genuine—he stands fire,' and from that night every one in the room respected him, and began to follow his example."

Now, my dear friends, in a large establishment in Birmingham, very similar to what many of you are in in this town, some seventy years ago, there was a youth who came from his mother's loving home in one of our beautiful villages. He had been taught to "stand fire," not to be ashamed of God or of prayer. The first night he retired to rest with several other youths. He knelt down to pray, and, as in the case of the soldier, he was instantly beset by the young fellows in the room, abusing him and ridiculing him; and everything was done to induce him to abstain from prayer, but he "stood fire;" he was not ashamed of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amongst them was a strong-built youth, who stood on his right, and who said, "My mother taught me to do that. I have been ashamed of doing it, but I will do it." That youth became the great, the noble John Angell James.

Oh, young men, if that youth had not stood fire the world might never have known or been blessed by the labours of John Angell James. The soldier told me what I want to leave with you. He said, "Sir, as a rule the fresh fellows who kneel down to pray do not do it a second night." Ah, young men, may that never be said of you. That explains the meaning of those words, "He stands fire." Do not be ashamed to acknowledge your Lord and Master.

Some time ago, in one of our great ships of war, there was a solitary sailor who was not ashamed to own himself a follower of Christ. For a long time he was alone; no other sailor joined him. His place of prayer was amid the noise and din of the sailors. One evening he perceived a shadow by the side of the gun. Another Jack Tar was creeping along, and said, "May I come?"

Oh, the joy of the young sailor to have a comrade with him! They met for many nights behind the gun, reading and praying. They became the butt of the men in two or three of the messes; but still they continued bearing and forbearing. It came to the ears of the commander, who was a Roman Catholic, but I mention this to his honour. The moment he heard that two of the sailors were meeting for reading and prayer behind one of the guns, he sent for one of them and instantly ordered a portion of the lower deck to be curtained off, and gave orders that no one should molest them. For some nights they were the only two occupants, but by-and-by the curtain was opened, and a blue jacket said, "May I come in?" He was welcomed. Another came, and another, and the last account I heard from that ship was this, that every night thirty-two men were meeting for prayer, thirty of them believed to be converted characters; and there, by standing fire, by standing firm, true to what was his duty, God has blessed that solitary sailor, and made himself a spiritual father to at least thirty of the men on board the ship.

Young men, go by God's help and do likewise. You may not have as much to bear as that sailor had; you have opportunities and privileges he could not have on board a ship, but God will bless persevering and loving endurance. Let others see by your example that you understand the Bible rule which ought to influence all Christian young men, "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." May God help you young men to be Bible Christians, men of business, serving the Lord whilst you are serving your earthly master.

The hymn, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by" was then sung, after which,

Mr. Henry Varley then addressed the meeting, and Mr. Mayers sung, amidst an impressive silence, the hymn, "Prodigal child, come home," and after prayer the meeting was closed, but numbers at the invitation of Mr. Varley remained behind for conversation and advice.

Rev. Mr. Hankin, speaking at the above Convention, said that at the consecration of the high priest, blood was put upon the tip of the right ear, the tip of the finger of the right hand, and the tip of the toe of the right foot, to show entire consecration to God. So must it be with them. This was consecration:—

"Take my life, and let it be Consecrated all to Thee;
Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of Thy love.

Take my feet, and let them be
Swift and beautiful to Thee;
Take my voice, and let me sing
Only for my Lord the King.

Take my lips, and let them be Filled with images from Thee;
Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold.

Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise;
Take my intellect, and use
Every power as Thou wilt choose.

Take my will, and make it Thine,
It shall be no longer mine;
Take my heart, it is Thine own,
It shall be Thy royal throne.

Take my love—my Lord, I pour
At Thy feet its treasured store;
Take myself, and I will be Ever, only, Lord, for Thee."

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH THE YOUNG CONVERTS?

1. Let the workers obtain from the converts, at the time they are conversed with, their names and addresses; also the church they have attended, or would like to join, and hand such communication in to the secretary, to be entered in a roll-book, and at the end of each week or month following, the names and addresses to be sent to the ministers of the several churches named.

2. Arrange the converts into companies of not more than ten members in each company, and let one member out of each company be selected by the committee as a leader.

3. Let each company meet as often as the several members of it shall decide (say half-an-hour before the general meeting) for the purpose of holding a Bible-class, and let each member take his turn in rotation as chairman, and not more than one night in succession. (This will conduce to bring each member out, and encourage him to practise expression of thought, which in a public meeting he would at first perhaps not like to venture). Twenty or thirty such classes could meet at one time, as in a Sabbath-school.

4. Let each of these companies, as the secretary may select, go to the various meetings, in and about the town, which have applied for help. No company should be required to go out more than once a week.

5. Let one evening, say one hour before the general meeting, be set apart for a general Bible-class, conducted by some competent person.

6. Let one evening, say Monday, be set apart as an open experience or testimony meeting, for the express purpose of telling the success which has attended the public efforts of the several companies during the past week, or of any individual who has been appointed to any special public work. (This will be a means not only of strengthening and encouraging the several workers, but also of communicating information of special procedure under peculiar circumstances.)

UNFAITHFULNESS.

'Twas the close of a day of labour,—
A day spent like other days
In treading the path of duty,
'Mid the turmoil of worldly ways.

I had seen and mingled with many,
Had heard and spoken to some,
But none, as Christ's ambassador,
To the Saviour had bid me come.

They had spoken of rain and sunshine,
Of the market and of the ball,
But I never heard any one mention
The Saviour who loves them all.

There were some who were slaves to money,
And Fashion called many her own;
And musing, I wondered how many
Would stand round the Saviour's throne.

One or two there were who had spoken
Of meetings for worship and prayer,
Where some eloquent preacher was with them,
But they did not say Jesus was there.

Then why, if any were treading
The blessed yet narrow way,
With Jesus to help and to strengthen,
Why had they so little to say?

So little to tell of the Saviour,
So ready to carry each load;
No kind invitation from Jesus
To enter the heavenly road.

Were they holding back from the Saviour
A service each Christian should give,
Of showing in word and action
How Jesus would have them to live?

Or were they, like foolish builders,
Tolling with patient hand,
To build them a tower of salvation
On Time's ever-shifting sand?

Then a voice of upbraiding rose in me,
For all day I could plainly see
I had spoken to no one the message
The Saviour entrusted to me.

ZEAL TEMPERED WITH DISCRETION.A FEW WORDS FOR YOUNG CONVERTS.

I rejoice at the blessed work of God among young men. It is one of the most cheering signs of the great revival, and is full of happy augury for the future of our land. I have witnessed at many large gatherings the bold and manly confession of Christ by young men of great promise, and some of these new converts are already doing noble work for the Master.

At all the meetings for young converts the constant burden of exhortation is, "Work for Christ; testify for Christ; preach Christ in season and out of season. Never be absent from the nightly meeting, nor yet, if possible, from the early prayer-meeting." And to this exhortation many of the dear young men respond by exhausting, self-denying labours, which are beautiful to behold.

But I would put in a kindly word of caution to the conductors of these meetings. Bear in mind that the great majority of young men have to toil all day at some calling or other, and their strength is often well-nigh exhausted by their necessary daily work. Many of them are hard-working clerks, requiring to be close at their office from nine a.m. till six p.m. Many are in shops from eight a.m. till eight p.m. Some are mechanics, requiring to be at their work at six a.m. There are few who are free from the severe strain of competition in this keen, pushing age. I have had considerable experience myself as an employer of young men, and I know well that the arduous strain of business is itself as much as most young men can stand. And when there is superadded to this the nightly attendance at exciting meetings, in hot rooms, with the severe nervous tension of speaking to anxious souls, it is only a question of time till the health breaks down, and a period of painful languor and spiritual depression often follows.

I speak from personal knowledge when I say that many young converts go through this experience. They are unduly stimulated by fervent appeals to work beyond their strength. Their conscience is tender, and they interpret in the most literal manner the addresses of the leaders of these meetings, and there is a strong tendency to neglect the common duties of life, and to give a wearied brain and a worn-out frame to their secular work. I have known young men whose zeal in preaching made them very bad servants, and I have seen good situations lost and characters injured by falsely thinking that duty to God excluded attention to common things. One rarely hears anything said at young men's meetings about such matters as fidelity to their masters, and the honest performance of the duties of their calling; and yet the Scriptures insist more upon these than upon outward service for Christ.

I would venture to counsel that more importance be given to practical questions such as these, and that young converts be left, to some extent, to choose for themselves how they are to employ their leisure time, and not be expected to account for every minute to their fellow-Christians on pain of being considered backsliders. Many men have weak health, and a feeble, nervous organization, and work which is a pleasure to others, is simply death to them; many have their small modicum of strength consumed in the unavoidable duties of their calling, and it is not fair to insist upon their undertaking work which unfits them for their daily duties.

These thoughts have often occurred to me when I observed the pale, jaded countenances of Christian young men as they came down in the morning to their office—a glance showed that they had not nervous energy for the necessary work of their secular calling, and when the strain of business came upon them they were not equal to it.

All the higher walks of business require a calm judgment and a clear intellect, to decide the complicated matters that constantly arise, and when the head gets feverish and overwrought, the judgment loses its balance.

The persons who speak, and exhort, and form the opinions of young converts, are often very zealous Christians, but men who have never had to work for their living, or who know nothing practically of the stern demands made upon a man of business. Their teaching is often very one-sided, and practically ignores a most important side of human life—one that our heavenly Father has not ignored, for it occupies a large part of his written revelation. Indeed, the original command, "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," is the primary law for mankind, as regards the employment of time; but one would almost suppose, from the teaching of some evangelists, that the command ran, "Seven days shalt thou labour, and do all God's work, and for thine own living the Lord will provide."

We wish young converts to get an harmonious conception of human life and duty; it is just as imperative upon them to make out an invoice accurately as to pray fervently at a meeting; to give their fair quota of brain-power to the employer who maintains them, as to distribute tracts in the street. We wish to see these young Christians growing into a beautiful manhood of uprightness and integrity. It is a sad spectacle to see how many wretched and disgraceful failures occur among Christian men.

In a pretty large experience of business I am bound to confess that I have not found Christians more reliable in business than other men. They as frequently fail, and their failures are as often owing to reckless speculation, and the dividends on their estates are just as often sixpence or a shilling in the pound, as happens among those who make no profession of religion. I have often thought this very unaccountable, the more so when you see such lamentable catastrophes among those who are active and earnest in Christian work. Surely there is some defect in the moral teaching given to converted men. Surely the vast amount of such teaching in the Scriptures is not to be ignored, because salvation is of grace.

I fear many young converts are led to believe that the moral law has little application to them, and their conscience becomes dull to the plain practical duties of life, even while it is alive to special religious work.

I hope your valuable paper will direct some attention to this subject. It is apt to be overlooked in a time of revival, and I trust these homely counsels will be blessed by God to some of your readers. S.

WORK AMONGST THE LIVERPOOL TELEGRAPH CLERKS.

The tide of blessing commenced, under God, during the recent awakening in Liverpool, has borne rich fruit in this office. A great number of young men have been converted, many of whom have openly testified for Christ, and are now actively engaged in the Lord's work. The clerks have opened a weekly converts' meeting amongst themselves, which is held every Friday evening, for mutual help and conversation upon the divine life, and which is generally briefly addressed by an experienced Christian. It is gratifying to state that, although some eight or ten weeks have elapsed since the meetings were commenced, the interest is not only being kept up, but is steadily increasing, the average attendance ranging from forty to fifty clerks, mostly young converts.

In addition to these facts, several have received very deep impressions, who have not as yet taken a bold stand for Christ.

A TELEGRAPH CLERK.

BIRKENHEAD.—As the secretary of the Birkenhead Young Men's Christian Association, it is with humble thankfulness to Almighty God that I have to testify to a blessed work which we have been able, by divine help, to accomplish. We took the Theatre Royal, and from October last, every Sunday evening, we have been carrying on services. The average attendance has been 2000, and we know of over 200 who have there, by the grace of God, decided for Christ, the larger proportion of whom are young men. The young men's meetings in connection with the Association have been very successful; and we are now determined, with God's grace, to labour more abundantly for his glory.

MR. MOODY AND YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS IN AMERICA.

BY THE HON. J. V. FARWELL, PRESIDENT OF THE Y.M.C.A. OF CHICAGO.

"There is a lad here which hath five barley-loaves and two small fishes; but what are they among so many?" The great question of the age is, how shall the multitudes be fed with "the true bread"? Perhaps the prayer of the Saviour, "That they all may be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me," may best furnish the key to the problem.

All the lads with their little store of loaves must put them in the hands of the Master, to be blessed and broken, and then none will need to go away hungry.

Every organization which serves to unite all Christians in the one work of saving souls, should command the thoughtful consideration and practical sympathy of the friends of Christ.

Mr. Moody may be justly honoured as one of the foremost champions in every movement, looking in this direction, and especially of Young Men's Christian Associations.

The Chicago Association, of which he was the spiritual father, had a permanent existence only when it was put in possession of a building of its own. Apprehending the importance of this, he proposed in a little circle of his friends special prayer, that the Association might have a home of its own, then following it with earnest efforts he ceased not until the first building of that kind in the world was dedicated.

The hall connected with it was placed at his disposal for preaching the gospel, by a vote of a large majority of the ministers of that city, most of whom, a few years before, would have advised him to "stay by the stuff," and not venture into the battle with sin with his little sling.

At the dedication of this hall Mr. Moody was called on for an address, the spirit of which I recollect very well. The point he pressed home with his accustomed vigour was the importance of the event they were then to endorse, as a practical demonstration of the unity of Christ's body, such as the world would recognize.

Said he, "This movement will not rest long. Onward over this state; onward over the length and breadth of this continent, and then breaking over the broad expanse of old ocean, it will seize upon the Christian hearts of the Old World, and not be stayed until the Church of Christ everywhere shall so feel its influence that the prayer of the Son of God shall be fully answered."

There are now elegant buildings in New York and San Francisco, and the Associations of the United States, America, have buildings valued at several millions of dollars; and, strangely enough, the father of this monument for Christian unity in America, is now doing what he can towards answering his own and the Saviour's prayer in England.

Surely the barley-loaves and fishes of this "lad" have increased wonderfully, under the hands of the Great Head of the Church, and the fragments are being gathered with abundant thanksgiving in the mother-country—whose pilgrims gave us the blood which has given life to this great movement.

May the mother outdo the child in the work of saving and uniting in Christian life the young men of this great nation. To do this successfully every one should have something to do. Young converts may not teach; except as their own experience may teach others the way; but work of some kind is absolutely necessary to growth in grace and usefulness. Young men's meetings will develop the capacities of those who attend—managed by judicious leaders—so that every large town in England may, within the year, have its own bands of evangelists, under the oversight of the churches, breaking the bread of life to the hungry masses; who must be reached, if reached at all, by going out after them. The object of this statement is to teach by example. What has been done in America may be done in England with more success, for the reason that here there is much more Bible study among the masses than there is there.

WHY OUGHT THIS WORK TO GO ON?

Let any one who has any doubt as to the importance or desirability of earnest Christian work among young men reflect on the following three facts:—

1. They form about one-seventh of the entire population.

2. Youth and early manhood is the time when the character is made or marred.

3. The powers of darkness are using every effort to lead young men to destruction.

As to the first fact, it is estimated that in Liverpool there are, say, 70,000 young men; in Manchester 75,000; and in other large towns there is no doubt a proportionate number. Let the thought of such an army sink down into the heart of every Christian man in the country, and let him cast his eye into the future, and endeavour to estimate what influence for good or evil this rising tide of earnest life is capable of exerting.

Some men object to think out such a subject. They cannot deny its importance; but they decline the trouble of finding a way to deal with it, their numerous other engagements being pleaded as an excuse. But are not these the very men who, when young men have been led astray, will read moral lessons to them, until "morality" becomes almost nauseous, and who will, with a wise shake of the head, say they "knew what it would come to." With all earnestness, let me ask such a friend, if you knew what it would come to, why did you not try to prevent it?

2. That youth and early manhood is the time when character is shaped will be at once admitted; this being the case, the question arises, Do we intend to avail ourselves of the opportunity? Delays are dangerous, and in nothing more so than in matters spiritual. A machine can stand still, but perpetual motion, sought for in vain in the works of man, is a ruling principle in the works of God. Every man we meet proves it in his life, and character as well as life cannot stand still. If we wish to mould it in others, let us choose the most pliable time, and let "He gives twice who gives quickly" be our motto. The character of every young man we know is forming, even while we think about him. Shall we try to mould it?

3. Consider the influences at work against young men! The world, the flesh, and the devil, a trinity of evils, the first to charm him, the second to debase him, the third to destroy him—three influences leading to three downward steps, viz., "Earthly, Sensual, Devilish," each with its multifarious agencies within and without, which beset young men, like gins and snares on every hand, and make it hard work for many to keep right, much as they wish. Who will enter the lists against such odds? We might well hesitate. We cannot do it; but the Lord He it is that fighteth for you, and "one man shall chase a thousand." Do we want to save our brothers? Do we want to win jewels for our crown above? and, highest of all, do we want to bring glory to Him who gave Himself for us? Then let us go forth determined to fight, and we shall realize that in God's work, that implies certain victory here, and a crown "laid up" above.

Liverpool.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

One Sabbath evening, at a meeting of the Belfast Young Men's Christian Association, a young man got up and said that he had been converted about four months before, and that he would like to speak a word for Jesus. He then went on to tell that he had got out of work in the place where he lived out of town, and that he had come here to get work, and that after being a little time here, he had been taken ill, and had had to give up everything, and was going home the next morning, as he believed, to die, but that he was perfectly content and happy, for he knew he had, as that beautiful hymn says, "a home overthere." He had to leave the meeting before it was quite over, and some of us went out to see him before he left, and while we were speaking to him he fainted away. As he was recovering, and opened his eyes, he said, with such a happy, peaceful smile, "Oh, what a glorious thing it is to be a Christian!"

YOUNG MEN'S CONVENTION AT LIVERPOOL.

[Concluded from last week's Special Number.]

THE EXTENSION OF THE WORK TO OTHER LOCALITIES.

After the delivery of Mr. Pitt's address on this subject, given last week,

Mr. MILLER (Edinburgh) said there were many of them who had only come to know Christ lately, while others had known Him for a long time; and the main question ought to be, "What amount of work have we been doing for the Lord elsewhere?" There had been a great waste of zeal; for, instead of going about the country telling the people of Christ, they had been too apt to remain at home. One of the most interesting features of the Edinburgh revival work was, that they had a large band ready to go through the country, and hold evangelistic meetings in nearly every district. This had been carried out as a sacred duty, and a great amount of success had attended this work in Scotland. He would suggest the appointment of a deputation committee, under whose auspices young men might be sent out to do similar work in England. They ought to look carefully after the work amongst young men. Last summer he (Mr. Miller) and a friend were sent to do evangelistic work in a little village in the North of Scotland. They went to the minister, and told him that they wanted to have young men's meetings. The minister was a good old man, a Highlander, one who disliked to get out of the old groove; and he shook his head, and said, "If you can show me any scriptural precedent, I may consent." They argued the point, and at last the old man yielded. The work was most successful; many were brought to Christ, and in less than a fortnight there was established a Young Men's Fellowship Association in the place. When they could establish fellowship associations such as these, they were like safety-valves, to let off their superfluous steam. About four months afterwards, when he (Mr. Miller) went back to the same village, they asked him to begin a series of meetings away over the hills, and he asked what was the use of beginning meetings there. The young men said, "Go and see if you can't raise meetings." He went, and found to his amazement that there was a large meeting, which proved the beginning of a revival. They had a school-house crowded, and many standing outside, earnestly desirous to get hold of Christ. The young men of that village afterwards went about telling others of the Saviour, and thereby many were brought under the power of divine truth. The news spread far and near, and, some time after, the whole country was ablaze to get hold of the Saviour. They had had showers of blessing in Liverpool, and he thought young men could not do better than form themselves into an evangelistic association, going about in pairs, to tell the people what God had been doing, and to point them to Christ. If they did this, they would soon find the whole district blessed by the effort, and multitudes brought to a knowledge of salvation.

Mr. WALKER (Liverpool) said a very important means of spreading the knowledge of the gospel was in the hands of many young men. The holidays were approaching, and many of them would soon be scattered all over the country—many in Scotland, and some in Ireland—and he thought there was an opportunity here of spreading a knowledge of Christ. He would ask every young man if the summer holidays would be merely holidays and nothing more, without any fruit being brought into the Saviour's vineyard—without an effort being put forth to bring some to the Saviour. Many might not be able to hold meetings; but all would be able to say a word in season, and no doubt many would be glad to receive them. Let there be earnestness in the work, and although some might laugh, let them remember that they were on the winning side, and go forward in the strength of the Lord.

The CHAIRMAN said he thought the suggestion particularly good, and hoped it would be carried out.

This closed the discussion on the second portion of the evening's programme.

THE QUESTION DRAWER.

The Liverpool Convention would not have been complete without "The Question Drawer," now so familiar a feature of the Conventions at which Mr. Moody presides. A large number of questions were handed in to the secretary in writing, and read out one by one for the Chairman, who had not seen them previously, to answer.

Mr. DRUMMOND stated at the outset that so far as the Question Drawer was concerned, he was a man of just one idea, and that idea young men and young men's meetings, and that he would not of course presume to interfere with questions upon other subjects.

Mr. NASH then proceeded to put the following questions:—

How should a Christian young man dress?—That is a great puzzler to begin with! I should say he ought to dress so that there should be nothing remarkable about it, so that after you had said "Good-bye" to him, you could not tell what he had on at all.

What are the fundamental requirements for a chairman?—First of all, I should say personal piety; secondly, geniality and good humour; then intense sympathy with everybody. There are hundreds of other things, but these are the most essential.

How shall we draw out young converts, and get them to work?—That ought to require a very close study of the young convert's character. Many young converts are entirely spoiled from this being disregarded.

Is it right to use a bell at young men's religious parties?—As little as possible. The bell, however, ought always to be there—as a kind of warning!

How are we to prevent chairmen from becoming bores?—I think it is impossible.

Should Christian young men attend theatres, and sanction theatre-going on the part of others?—I cannot say anything about that for others; I can only speak for myself. I think if a young man can look in his heavenly Father's face at night, and say, "To me to live is Christ," the question will never trouble him.

Is it a good thing for converts to give their experience in a meeting?—That is a vital question. In some circumstances I should say not. But it very much depends upon the motive. A young man comes in here, who has newly given his heart to God. Away in yonder gallery he sees half-a-dozen young men, once his companions in sin. They do not know he has changed sides; he knows they have not. Shall he not rise and say to them, "Young men, you know who I am, and what I have been. I want to tell you that God has been good to me. He has led me to Christ. I mean to try and follow Him. He is a good Master. May God help you to turn this very night for Jesus Christ's sake?" Would this not have more real effect upon them than all the sermons they ever heard in their lives? I know it has had upon thousands. Of course it may be carried too far, dangerously too far, but so may everything. If the convert speaks well, I should not encourage him to speak a second time, at least not ordinarily, or for some time to come. But if he just barely escapes breaking down, and feels thoroughly ashamed of himself when he sits down, I do not think it would spoil him to get him to speak occasionally.

Should unconverted men be allowed to sing solos at young men's meetings?—NO.

How are we to keep up the interest of these meetings in summer?—There will, no doubt, be a great deal of competition, and I would not interfere with much of it. Let cricket go on, for instance, but try to get the young men who play cricket with you one night to come here with you the next.

Should Christian young men become teetotalers?—I don't know. That is a question every man must settle for himself. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

Should we have religious addresses at young men's meetings?—Yes, most decidedly; but the difficulty is to get men to give them without preaching or becoming stale.

Should young men's meetings be varied, or what kind of meetings should they be?—Meetings for different classes are a splendid thing if the interest begins to droop—one night given up to clerks, another to carters, and another to telegraph boys; another to policemen, another to cabmen, another to sailors, and so on.

How shall we make Young Men's Christian Associations throughout the country more evangelistic?—I would send all the secretaries to spend a month in a "young men's meeting."

How shall we best extend the work?—By sending out deputations of young men to every town and hamlet round about.

Is it desirable to have young Men's Christian Associations in every town?—I think it is—of some sort or another.

How can we best work up Young Men's Christian Associations in other places?—As I said before, get a good secretary, and give him a course of young men's meetings for a month. Get him thoroughly on fire and then he will set every one else on fire.

Should women be admitted to young men's meetings? and if not, why not?—Obviously not. A young men's meeting is a young men's meeting. Let women have meetings of their own if they like, only if they call them women's meetings, don't let them let men in.

Should Christian young men smoke in the streets?—That is one of the questions for each man to settle for himself. I knew a young man who has spoken in this hall, who was a great smoker. He was brought to Christ a short time ago, and on returning home at night from the young men's meeting, he used invariably to smoke a cigar. One night, after a very spiritual meeting, on the way home he overtook a young man, and felt a burning desire to speak to him about his soul. But then he had a cigar in his mouth. Somehow or other it seemed to stand in the way. He could not well define it. "Speaking to a man about his soul with a cigar in his mouth!" he repeated to himself. There was an anomaly somewhere. Reason it out he could not; but somehow, it did not seem consistent. He must either lose his cigar, or his opportunity. He chose the former, and he never smoked coming home from the meeting again.

What do you think keeps young men from becoming Christians?—Some special sin which they prefer to Christ—I think, some one definite sin. In every life I believe there is some one particular sin outstanding only to oneself, different in different cases, but always one, with which the secret history is woven through and through. This is that which the unconverted man will not give up for Christ.

How can we get young men who are bashful and reserved to take part in these meetings?—In some cases it should not be done at all; God does not want all the world to be public men. In other cases these men become the best workers. I think the man who has just to be dragged out of his shell becomes generally of most use. Then he does it only for Christ. But one should not ask a bashful man right off to take a leading part in the meeting. Let him begin in a small way. Give him a chapter to read, or the requests for prayer; then get him to lead in prayer, and so draw him out by degrees.

Should there be a pledge-book at young men's meetings, for young men to sign the pledge?—That is a difficult thing altogether. Temperance is a very good thing, but we are not met here to talk about it.

How would you deal with sceptics and infidels? Is it well to enter into a discussion with them?—I think not. Certainly never in an inquiry-room. Few who come there are genuine; but one comes across a case of really honest doubting sometimes, which is worth following up, and which is entitled to it.

Should loafers be allowed to attend these meetings, whose manifest object is begging?—I am sorry to say there is such a thing as the "professional inquiry-man," who gets his living out of it. These men have been "anxious inquirers" all their lives, and the young men's meetings are a splendid reaping-ground for them. I am afraid it is the truest kindness to discourage them absolutely. They have been trod on some occasions from the doors of these meetings straight into public-houses. Some of them are very perplexing. I used to think it was almost worth while being taken in ninety-nine times for the sake of the hundredth who might turn out well. But even the hundredth often turns out only to be a more accomplished hypocrite than the others, and one really does not know what to do.

How can you get sleepy and lazy Christian young men to work?—I was in the rooms of a Young Men's Christian Association lately, and asked one of the members what he was doing in the way of evangelistic work. He said, "Nothing." I asked the reason. "Why," he said, "I've never got a call." I took him by the arm, and led him to the window. A young man was staggering past under the influence of drink. "There," I said—"there's your call; go and rescue your brother from his drunkard's grave." He left the room. I know not what the result was to the drunkard, but I know that this young man became the most earnest worker the Association had. Let us try to let others feel the burden of perishing souls; so that if a lazy Christian has no stimulus within him, he may have it without him at every turn of the street.

Should respectable young men be expected to go into the streets, to invite other young men to attend these meetings?—Every Christian should be respectable.

What are the main external hindrances to young men's meetings?—The main hindrances are criticising Christians and cold Christians.

Should boys be allowed to preach, and take part in young men's meetings?—I think not.

Is it desirable that boys should preach in the street?—No.

Should young converts preach in the open air, or some experienced Christian?—I should think one of each. Let one say how it is to be done, and the other how it has been done.

What are the right sort of men to preach in the open air?—The best men we have. I think street-preaching is spoiled because we think "anybody will do to preach in the streets."

How is it best to deal with a drunken man if he comes into the inquiry-room?—I have often thought about that, and can make very little of it. Perhaps the best way is to try and leave some simple but definite impression upon the mind, which will lie there until the brain is normal. All the better if it is a text, for that is something for the Holy Spirit to work upon. I remember a friend very late one night finding a man drunk in the street. He took pity on him, and volunteered to take him home. It was winter, and the man's home was away at the far end of the town, and after staggering along for a mile or two, the drunkard began to revive a little. He did not talk any, but seemed very sensible of the kindness paid to him. On reaching the door of his house, he was able to stammer out his thanks. "You have been very kind to me. If there is anything I can do to repay you, I will do it." "There is one thing," said my friend. "Will you promise me that you will prepare to meet your God?" They parted, and when my friend went in a few days to follow it up, he found the man in deep distress about his soul. "Prepare to meet your God" had been ringing in his ears ever since. He was brought to Christ, and died six months afterwards a most triumphant death.

HOW TO DEAL WITH YOUNG MEN INDIVIDUALLY IN WINNING THEM FOR CHRIST.

The Convention then proceeded to consider this subject, the discussion on which was opened by the Hon. Captain MORRISON, E.N. He remarked that before they took up this or any other work for the Lord, they must spend much time with the Lord. Persons were frequently heard to say, "Oh, I have got so much to do, I cannot spend so much time to-day over the Bible;" and there was a great danger of men, in their activity, rushing about too much and of praying too little. Martin Luther used to say that the more he had to do, the more time he must spend with the Lord; and this he strongly commended to their consideration. Prayer was essential if they were to succeed in winning young men for Christ. Kindness was also necessary. Let them approach young men in a kindly way. Some persons had got a very rough manner with them, which repelled those whom they desired to draw to Christ, which frightened them away. It was necessary first to get hold of the young, to interest them, before they preached Christ. A very useful way of doing this was to find out something that we had in common with them, and so to get into sympathy with them. We could then talk to them, and afterwards could point out the way of salvation. This was a work which required a great deal of perseverance. Only men whose hearts were in it succeeded. One of the reasons why they did not win more young men for Christ was that they were only half-hearted in their efforts. And it was a work which needed much tender love and sympathy. Let them always speak kindly and lovingly; then no one could take exception. He thought it unwise to send out men two together—one to speak to a man, and the other to look into his face and see how he took it. He would repeat that what they wanted was much prayer, much perseverance, much love, and much sympathy. When they had got them into the inquiry-room they should be earnest and anxious in dealing with them. He had often been pained by the way anxious souls had been dealt with there. Let them display great warmth in their communications with anxious souls. Never give a man a flabby shake of the hand which would chill him at once; and above all never press a soul to believe until they had shown what the soul was to believe. He constantly heard people saying to inquirers, "believe," "believe," when they had most imperfect notions of what they had to believe. First declare what Christ's salvation was, and then urge the inquirer to accept it.

The Chairman then announced that he had received a telegram from Mr. Moody in London, in which he said:—"May God's richest blessing be poured out upon your meeting to-night. We have been praying for you in the Opera House to-night."

Mr. W. P. LOCKHART also spoke of the importance of the evangelistic work in which they were engaged, and urged its continuance. Alluding to experience meetings, he said they were all very well when they told what God had done for them, but not when they came to say what they had done for the Lord. In this work there was an almost insolent way of dealing with young men that should be guarded against. If the Lord had brought them to Himself, they should be ready to go forth and labour to bring others to Him.

Mr. ROBERTS said it was by love that he was led to Christ. He always tried to keep that in his mind's eye. He urged upon them to treat all they met with kindness and cordiality. He had got into a regular habit of shaking hands, and he meant to continue it. When a young man came into a meeting, he at once went up to him, and shook him by the hand, and tried to make him feel at his ease, and that he was among friends. He would assure those who wanted to lead young men to Christ, that if they were to succeed, they must go in love.

Mr. WALTER CHAMBERS added a few remarks.

Mr. HERB RADOLIFFE said that one cause of the ruin of young men—a thing that should not be lost sight of—was, that they were brought to ruin through strong drink. Those who wished to get at young men should first get to know their need, and then try to bring them to the Saviour. He mentioned cases in which he had seen respectable, well-educated young men lying about drunk. These and others were the class that they should endeavour to bring under the influence of the gospel, and to whom their labours should be directed.

Mr. NASH said that they must get at young men before they dealt with them individually. They should get them alone, for he strongly disapproved of speaking to young men in the presence of five or six others about their souls. Then let them remember that they should say nothing unkindly. Let the person to whom they were speaking see that they were thoroughly in earnest. Another thing that they should bear in mind was, that they should never argue with a sceptic. Let them never say an unkind word to the Roman Catholics, or others of other religions who differed from them. Let them agree to differ, and approach all with whom they had to come into contact with love and kindness. Let God speak, and let them point out the necessity of salvation by showing them the Bible. Let God's Word speak in this work, for it would speak for itself.

Mr. PATRICK MURDOCK, of Edinburgh, in speaking in reference to the mode of dealing with young men, said the men they knew, and the man who knew them, should be the persons whom they should endeavour to get at.

The Rev. W. H. M. H. ATKEN said that in this work they should avoid anything like cant. They should endeavour to avoid, in talking with those with whom they came in contact in this work, anything which savoured of shop. Let them adopt a manly, healthy tone of life. One thing they ought to avoid was, that they should not enter into argument with a spirit of controversy, discussions with infidels and atheists should be avoided, for it was frequently found that any field atheist, if he might use such an expression, who read some trumpery atheistical prints, that were issued from a vile, atheistical press, would stand up and sometimes bowl over a Christian man. Although avoiding a controversy, they should be ready to give the reason for the hope that was in them. If the young man with whom they were speaking got the idea that they were very conceited, or very dogmatic, then not much good would be done. Anything like a melancholy countenance or puritanical gait, in those engaged in this work, should be avoided. They should not speak with levity about spiritual things, but still they should speak and act in a glad, happy, and cheerful way. He remembered a phrase applicable to those engaged in this work, that had been used by his father, "Let us be natural until we are divine." In conclusion he urged the young men present, and all who had taken part in that Convention—meetings which delighted him to see—to continue in the noble work in which they were engaged, the bringing of souls to Christ.

The Convention closed with praise and prayer, and before pronouncing the benediction, the Chairman suggested that even although this was a Convention, as the one aim of all their work was to win young men to Christ, there might be an inquiry-meeting held as usual. A good many responded to the invitation.

CONVENTION BREAKFAST.

On Friday morning, about eighty delegates and friends were entertained at breakfast by the Committee, at the Compton Hotel. Mr. Alexander Balfour, president of the Liverpool Young Men's Christian Association, occupied the chair, and was supported by Mr. Henry Drummond, the Hon. Captain Moreton, Mr. John Patterson, Mr. John Houghton, and other gentlemen. After breakfast,

The CHAIRMAN addressed the assembly, and expressed the great pleasure which it afforded himself and others who had taken an interest in the revival work amongst the young men of Liverpool, to see the delegates from distant towns. He regarded the present as a highly-interesting epoch for young men, and looked to the revival movement amongst them for still greater results than had already been attained. The teaching which one young man could give to another had not hitherto been used in the Christian Church in the way in which it ought to be used in the future. He did not undervalue the public ministry; but he maintained that besides the public ministry there was this laid upon them, that each man should teach his neighbour.

Mr. BOSOMWORTH, on behalf of the Christian young men of Liverpool, then presented to Mr. Henry Drummond a handsome gold watch and chain, as an expression of their warm esteem for him. He spoke at length of Mr. Drummond's work in Liverpool, which had been successful to an unusual extent; and that gentleman had won the warm love of the Christian young men, who would ever feel the deepest gratitude to him for the good he had been enabled to accomplish.

Mr. DRUMMOND thanked the Christian young men of Liverpool for the unexpected kindness. He was thankful if God had allowed him to do any good; but he felt that he had simply gathered round him a band of earnest young men who had themselves done the work.

A brief conversation ensued on the subject of the work amongst young men, in the course of which the Hon. Capt. Moreton suggested that this General Convention of Young Men should become a permanent institution. It should hold annual meetings in various parts of the three kingdoms, and it would be the means of extending and invigorating this work amongst young men to a very great degree. After discussion as to the best means of carrying the proposal into effect, it found desirable, participated in by Messrs. Drummond, Smith, Patterson, Nash, Anthony, and others, on the motion of Hon. Capt. Moreton, seconded by Mr. Drummond, it was resolved: "That another Convention of the young men of Great Britain and Ireland be held; and that it be remitted to the Committee of the Liverpool young men's meetings to take the necessary steps for carrying this into effect."

The proceedings then terminated.

MANCHESTER YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.—Our meeting was started more than five months ago by Mr. Henry Drummond, and has gone on without a single break every night since. At the present time the average attendance is eighty, but on some nights very much greater. We have to thank God that not one night has passed since December without some of the audience remaining to inquire earnestly as to the way of salvation.

THE POLICEMEN.—During the present revival, the policemen of Liverpool have been sharers in the blessing. Quite a number of the ordinary constables, besides members of the river police and fire brigade, have been led to decide for Christ. A committee has been formed, composed exclusively of policemen, who are working away with much success, endeavouring to induce their comrades in the force to attend the young men's meetings, where so many have been blessed. A Bible-class for policemen only is held in a small hall in the centre of the town once a week, with the most gratifying results.

A LIVERPOOL DERIVATIVE.

YOUNG MEN'S INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

OPERA HOUSE, HAYMARKET, LONDON.

A Convention of young men was held at Mr. Moody's request on the evening of Saturday week, the special attraction being the presence of the presidents of the Y.M.C. Associations of New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Mr. Moody presided, and Mr. Sankey was present, as well as many connected with the London Associations.

Mr. MOODY, in opening, said some one had asked him what his programme was, but he hadn't got any. He wished it to be a friendly meeting, and if any young man had anything to say, he was just to get up and say it where he was. He also said that if any one wished Mr. Sankey to sing any special hymn, they were to ask it. The practical result of this liberty was, however, that half-a-dozen shouted out for different hymns at once.

After a hymn and prayer, Mr. Sankey sang the solo, "Only an armour-bearer;" and Mr. Henry Drummond read the closing verses of Matt. vi.

Mr. Moody said the first note which had been put into his hand to-night was from a young man who said he had found peace in Jesus since entering the hall, and desired thanks to be rendered to the Lord. Mr. Moody hoped this was a token of what they were to have to-night. He gave a sketch of the origin and progress of Young Men's Christian Associations in London, how they had spread over the country, and had been taken up heartily in America, where there were now seven or eight hundred associations.

What you do in London goes round the world. The idea was taken up in New York. For a time they had no proper building, but their president went round to the merchants, and gathered a hundred thousand pounds, (500,000 dollars). They bought ground, and put up a splendid building. I wish we could get something done here. On Monday we have to turn out of this place, and we have tried to get a place, and have failed. I hope God will incline some one's heart to give £20,000 for a start. If any one feels inclined to give this he may get up and speak at any time. I am going to call on the man who was president when the New York Association was started.

Hon. W. E. DODGE, of New York, said: I thank God with all my heart that, most unexpectedly, I have been sent to London at this time, to feel the great influence of these meetings. Their influence is telling all over the world. I have heard many harsh, unkind words said about these meetings, by those who have never attended them; but, thank God, hundreds of thousands can say, "This thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

I thank Him for this, and pray that He may do still greater things. One thing is particularly sure, God always works by means; and wherever his people are thoroughly in earnest, and have learned to take hold of his word by faith, He will give success. But you must be ready to do your share of the work. I remember a large convention held in Montreal. At its close, a crowded prayer-meeting was held, and one short speech I heard there impressed me much. It was delivered by a great burly specimen of a Scotch soldier, bronzed by the Indian sun. He was the general in command of the forces in Canada, and he said, very earnestly, "I am here to-night because, if from my position I have any influence, I want to have the wholes of that influence on the side of Christ." That is what we want; the wholes of our influence on the Lord's side.

Having given a sketch of the work of the New York Association, he adduced the following illustration of its usefulness.

I remember a young man who came from Liverpool, the son of a clergyman who was dead. He had come over in the hope of getting employment. His funds soon ran out, he was turned out of his boarding-house; driven to despair, he was on his way to commit suicide.

Passing along, he saw our bills, inviting young men to our hall. He came, and our secretary saw at once he was starving, got a good meal for him, employment was obtained, and a boarding-house where he would be amongst Christians. That very night, an episcopal clergyman called to ask volunteers for his ragged-school. This young man volunteered at once, and there, in one day, he was rescued, provided for, and set to useful work. That's the true work for Young Men's Christian Associations, and their grand object is to lead young men to the Lord Jesus.

Mr. MOODY introduced the next speaker, with whom he had laboured for fifteen years, and who had been very liberal in his support of the good work in Chicago.

HON. JOHN V. FARWELL, Chicago, told of an old Scotch lady in Chicago who was the means of keeping up the noonday prayer-meeting, which has been made the instrument of much good. The attendance had been falling off, one time when Mr. Moody was away from home; and at last, when this lady went as usual one morning, she found no one there. However, she sang a psalm, and prayed that God would sustain the meeting. The next day, as she was again alone, a gentleman, who was detained in Chicago on business, came in, and the two prayed together. During the few weeks that he remained in the city, he threw his whole energy into the labour of resuscitating the meeting, and it has been flourishing ever since. Mr. Farwell then dwelt on the character of Abraham Lincoln, of whose prayerful Christian character he gave some instances.

Mr. SANKEY sang, "What are you going to do, brother?"

Mr. WANAMAKER, of Philadelphia, said that the hearts of prayerful Americans were stirred for London at present; and he thanked God he had seen these prayers being so graciously answered. He then proceeded to speak of the success achieved by Young Men's Christian Associations in America; which success he attributed first to "dead earnestness of purpose." If this was wanted in his city, how much more was it wanted in London, which is five times larger. Another secret of their success, was that they were "aggressive." They had every appliance that skill or experience could suggest, and all bent to this one point, "to lead young men to the Saviour." He hoped that the end of these meetings would be increased consecration to the Lord and his service, and then we might expect to see the work prosper. We were also called upon to exercise self-denial, that we might have more time and money to devote to the Lord. He closed by a few solemn words of warning and exhortation to those who were still out of Christ.

Mr. MOODY then asked the Christians present to rise and sing the 53rd hymn, when nearly every one in the house rose. After the hymn was sung, he said that he was anxious these young men's meetings should continue, and as a neutral hall could not be obtained, it had been arranged that for one week they should be held in Mr. Carmichael's chapel, Oxenden-street, every evening at eight o'clock. He then called for a show of hands from those who would support these meetings. About one-half of the audience raised their hands.

A gentleman in the body of the hall said that if young men would give up smoking, and devote the money thus saved to the Lord, much good would be done. The doxology brought the meeting to a close.

WORK AMONGST BOYS.

Few departments of work are more suitable for young men than working amongst boys. In choosing a field of work which it is to be hoped many young men will now be led to do, the idea of starting a class or a meeting for boys is worth considering. As an encouragement to any who may feel called upon to take up this most congenial task, the following extract is given from a letter from one of the Liverpool young men:—

Two years ago a society was formed here for working lads of fourteen years and upwards. It met with a fair amount of success, but the hearts of those who managed it yearned for some visible fruit. The centre of the work was a Bible-class conducted alternately by two young men.

The attendance for some time averaged from twenty-five to thirty, drawn chiefly from the large ship-building yards and foundries on this side of the Mersey.

One Monday evening, early in the year, the whole [class seemed to be under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and many wished in their hearts to go and speak to the teacher. Reserve seemed for a time to hold them back, but the deep anxiety compelled them to get the matter settled, and the workers at the Mission soon had the happiness of seeing many find peace by trusting in the Lord Jesus. Since then the work has gone on with wonderful increase until, at the present time, there are about 160 members attending the Bible-class, and many of these, we have good reason to believe, are at peace with God.

The character of the yards where they work is in many cases changed, and the influence of the work is most marked. In one foundry during the dinner hour, the men congregate for a prayer-meeting, and the attendance varies from two to three hundred. It is said that there is not now one scoffer in the yard.

THE WORK AMONG THE YOUNG MEN OF BELFAST.

Since the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to this town, the young men have been greatly quickened and stirred up, and both here, amidst the teeming population of this centre of industry, and in the country districts for a considerable distance round, they have been labouring for their Master with the most glorious results, and with the seal of his approbation resting on their work. Three young men, representing respectively the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Episcopalian Churches, visited one locality to proclaim Christ's gospel. They sought preparation for their work by wrestling with God for the spirit of prayer, and while they were yet calling, their prayer was heard and answered, and they were enabled so to present Christ to the hearts and consciences of the people, that a great multitude believed. As many as eighty waited in some of the inquiry-meetings, and nearly all who remained to seek went away with the joy of those who find.

An inquiry-meeting being announced for the succeeding day, for an hour only, and confined to those who were anxious, the place was so crowded that admittance could hardly be obtained; those most pressingly anxious to be spoken to had to be gathered into another place, and as many as fifty professed to lay hold on Jesus. With a larger agency and more time, twice that number might have been reached.

On a return visit to this place, with similar blessed results, I met an old man, who seemed near eighty years of age, and on asking him if he could trust in the Saviour, he grasped my hand, and, with an eye that sparkled through grateful tears, he said, "Thank God, I can, sir. Since your last visit here, I have been trusting in Christ as my Saviour." He was one of a group of nearly twenty inquirers to whom I had spoken at the previous visit (all of them men) who had professed to accept Christ.

But perhaps the most interesting feature of the work among the young men are the open-air services. A band of five in number, representing the Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Independent, and Methodist churches, has been formed, and presenting, not the creeds, but the cross, they have gone forth with their message to perishing sinners. In a little over a fortnight, more than a hundred and thirty souls at these services have been added to the Lord.

Some of the instances of conversion at the meetings have been cases of thrilling interest. An intelligent man lingered as an inquirer after a service which had been largely attended. He appeared to be familiar with Scripture truth, but could not personally realize his interest in Christ. He seemed to doubt the possibility of immediate conversion, and thought he must wait till the Spirit would draw him. He was directed to the Saviour, and urged to seek present salvation. He went away, promising to lay his case before the Lord in prayer, and to meet us afterwards at the young men's meeting. When leaving this meeting, the man, who, true to his promise, had come, came quickly across the house, his face shining with the unspoken testimony; and, to our joy, he told us he had found the Lord. If time had been given he would have spoken in the meeting.

An old woman, apparently a charwoman, was returning late with her washing in a basket, and hearing the favourite solo, "There were Ninety-and-nine," being sung, she was arrested, and became the subject of deep conviction. She cried out, "Oh that God would take the burden off my heart!" And while prayer was being offered on her behalf, with a cry of grateful praise she seemed to find peace in believing.

The question was asked at one of the meetings, "Does any one want to find Christ?" A poor woman, whose face was bathed in tears, said she did; and, ere long, the sought for treasure was found.

Three young men were spoken to at the same meeting, who surrendered to Christ as prayer was being offered on their behalf.

Two men, under the influence of drink, were passing by, and were arrested by the Spirit. One of them was in great distress about his soul, and he besought one of those who had been conducting the meetings to call and see him the next day.

A mother and her two daughters were seeking the Lord. The daughters first found the Saviour, and the elder of the two exhorted her mother simply to take Jesus at his word. The mother did, and is now at rest in Him.

At the last two meetings twenty-four found the Saviour. And so the work goes on, and while Christ pleads, "Still there's more to follow."

At a service in one of the churches here last week, there were about 150 inquirers, and it is believed that between forty and fifty of them found the Saviour before they left. In another church, on Sunday evening last, nine persons professed to lay hold on Christ as their Redeemer.

A large number of open-air services are being held throughout the town and country districts, with very blessed results. One band of five young men, representing four different denominations, who have linked themselves together for the furtherance of the Lord's work, have been greatly owned and honoured of God. They hold a service every night, and they have not held a single service without meeting with inquirers, and without some professing to lay hold of the Saviour. At some of these meetings as many as from eleven to fifteen were led to decide for Christ, and several of these converts are now trying to do something for Him who has done so much for them.

A sketch of one of these meetings might be interesting. The young men meet upon a vacant space of ground in the centre of a densely-populated district, and commence singing. Meantime the people are congregating round about, and joining in the singing. Then a brief prayer is offered up, another hymn sung, and one of the young men proceeds to tell the simple story of the cross, concluding with an earnest appeal to the people to come to Christ now. Then another hymn is sung, sometimes as a solo, and sometimes by the gathered crowd. Then there may be another one, or perhaps two, short addresses, interspersed with prayer and singing, and the meeting is closed with prayer. As the service is drawing to a close, you may see the evident manifestation of the Spirit's power in the earnest faces of the listeners, many of whom are evidently in deep concern about their souls, and you may see young men and women, as well as old people, bathed in tears. Before the last prayer is offered, sometimes those who wish to be specially prayed for are asked to hold up their hands, and you may see quite a number of hands held up. After prayer, those who wish to be conversed with are asked to remain, and the young men who form the band try to point them to Christ.

THE WORK IN LIVERPOOL.

The evangelistic work amongst young men, as conducted in Liverpool for more than three months past, originated during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The first meeting was held in Newsome's Circus on the evening of Sunday, 21st February, being under the direction of Mr. Henry Drummond, of Stirling, whose functions in establishing similar meetings in nearly all the important places visited by the American revivalist are already well known. At once, large numbers of active Christian young men rallied about him, and an earnest effort for the salvation of souls began. Since that first meeting was held, not an evening has been omitted, and it is expected to carry on the meetings right through the year. The audiences have never been less than about four hundred, nor more, probably, than twelve or fifteen hundred, but for weeks running there were frequently as many as a thousand every night, chiefly young men and lads. The character of the meeting has been mainly, in fact almost entirely, the delivering of testimony by young converts, and these statements have generally been of such an earnest, soul-stirring nature, that hearts have been touched, God's power through his Word made manifest, and every night some souls have been brought to see the Light of Life. After-meetings are always held, when the real work of the evening is done by the young men coming into loving contact with their fellows, and pointing them to Christ.

But not only have these nightly meetings been held, but the work has given rise to the establishment of distinctive services, the carters having capital meetings every Sunday afternoon. The sailors also have a night set apart for them every week or so. The policemen, too, have a meeting of their own, quite a work having been done amongst them. But without detailing all the meetings held, and the interests represented, there can be no doubt that a very widespread effort has emanated from this young men's movement. There are now between forty and fifty young men's meetings being conducted in Liverpool, Kirkenhead, Cloughton, and other places in this vicinity. But beyond all this outward evidence of work, there is great reason for thankfulness in being privileged to learn of the unspoken work accomplished, and constantly progressing in the hearts of young men. This personal work, so far as each man is dealing between God and his own soul, cannot ever be fully known here, but is accurately open to the eyes of "Him with whom we have to do."

Those engaged in the work here have been enabled to infuse a spirit of zeal elsewhere, deputations having visited Birmingham, Manchester, Southport, Chester, Bootle, Newport (Salop), Wellington (Salop), St. Helen's, Preston, Wigan, and other places. In Rock Ferry and Bootle the work has led to the establishment of Young Men's Christian Associations.

Much more might be told of this truly wonderful movement amongst young men, which the Master has so richly blessed; one might tell of the personal efforts in boarding-houses, in warehouses, of clerks and salesmen holding meetings in their shops, etc., but space will not permit.

HOW WE ORGANIZE OUR YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

BY ONE OF THE LIVERPOOL YOUNG MEN'S COMMITTEES.

In writing upon this subject, it is my desire to describe the various means by which the work of our meetings is performed, in the hope that the relation of our experience in Liverpool may be of some slight service to those who contemplate starting similar evangelistic agencies elsewhere.

At the head of the work we have an executive committee of seven young men. The burden of this work falls upon the secretary; and if every town had these duties as efficiently performed as they have been done for us by Mr. Samuel Nash, upon whom, under God, so much of the success of our work has depended, the spread of the young men's movement throughout the land would be more than a certainty.

Of course, a work of such magnitude as that which we have here could not be conducted by the executive alone; therefore the co-operation of a considerable number of young men, both young and old converts, was obtained, the work divided into departments, and sub-committees appointed to manage them.

This arrangement has proved, on the whole, very satisfactory in its operation for many reasons, particularly as it gives to a large number of young men a personal and official interest in our success, and because it secures the performance of the various duties with a degree of efficiency otherwise unattainable.

Having given our reasons for the formation of the sub-committees, I will now very briefly treat of their work, taking them in order.

1. The Invitation Committee.—The duty of this committee is to invite all young men to the meetings, by the systematic distribution of handbills, by personal invitations in the streets, by house-to-house visitations, by advertising, etc., etc. The executive of this committee consists of about eleven members, who meet weekly for the despatch of business. The General Invitation Committee is formed of about eighty other young men, who meet fortnightly, and who arrange among themselves for the regular and efficient discharge of the duties assigned to them.

2. The Reception Committee.—This committee takes in hand the work of receiving, welcoming, and making to feel at home all the young men induced to attend the meetings; also of keeping order in the meetings, by providing an efficient staff of amateur stewards, who are posted in the various entrances and passages, to see that everybody is comfortably seated, and to put down promptly any unpleasantness that might arise.

3. The Visitation Committee.—The portion of the work devolving upon this committee is probably the most important of all. It consists of visiting all the young men whose names and addresses we have obtained during the services, at their homes, of looking after weak converts and backsliders, and generally caring for their spiritual welfare.

In addition to the above committees, we have others, which undertake special duties, such as the Bible-readings Committee, Choir Committee, "Our Boys" Committee, Carters' Committee, Policemen's Committee, etc., etc.

The Deputation Committee deserves comment, as it is specially appointed to arrange for deputations from our meetings to other places, to assist in opening or reviving the work amongst young men elsewhere.

It will be seen that very little is left for the General Committee to do, except to control the expenditure, to provide suitable chairmen, and other officers, for the meetings; this they arrange at a meeting which is held every week.

In conclusion, I would venture to urge upon our brethren, the Christian young men of this country, the importance of starting, and that at once, similar special meetings, in order to reach the masses of our unconverted fellow-countrymen. Let us all begin from this time with much prayer, and much study of the Word of God, to strive to win every man his neighbour for the Master. Let us win them by our love, by our consistent, prayerful lives, and in all things endeavouring to follow in the footsteps of Him who has gone before us into his glory.

Let us go forth with this motto—

"THE YOUNG MEN OF OUR COUNTRY FOR CHRIST;"

and if this be done prayerfully and courageously, we shall find, as it is said in the 67th Psalm, that "God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him."

Brethren, pray for our great work in Liverpool.

WALTER CHAMBERS.

COTTAGE MEETINGS.

Here is another suggestion for those who are asking, What can they do for Christ? It comes from a young convert whose labour God has very remarkably blessed in many departments of work.

I think that the greatest work going on at present in our town is that which is carried on by young men, under the name of "Cottage Meetings." These are meetings carried on by two or three young men who band themselves together and get the loan of a kitchen for a weekly meeting, and then go themselves and try to get the neighbours in.

At the present time there are thirty-three of these meetings carried on by the Young Men's Christian Association alone. We are constantly hearing of conversions which have happened in them.

Two other young men and myself have been carrying on such a meeting for some time back. We are of different denominations, so that we have no difficulty in inviting all in. At first the meeting was not very large, but we kept praying to God, and trying in different ways to gather the people in. Sometimes we called on the people personally who lived near, or commenced to sing along the streets in the neighbourhood till we got a crowd to follow us, and then we went into the school-room. At other times, again, we would stand at the door, and some of us would sing, while others would ask the people to come in.

On the last night of our meeting we had about 120 people, and afterwards in the inquiry-meeting there were nine who professed to find peace. For some time back, I believe since we commenced the meeting, there has not been a night in which we have not had some conversions.

Four or five of us also have been trying the open-air work, and we find it has succeeded very well. We have only taken this up the last few weeks, and God has been prospering us very much. We have been holding the meetings very late for two reasons. First, we find that the people come out far better when it is quite dark, as they then are not seen, and they are not so afraid of being spoken to. And, second, we can have all the regular meetings over, and so do double work in one evening. We have been holding a good number of them of late, and nearly all of them commencing as late as half-past nine, and some of them not commencing till nearly eleven o'clock. I could give numbers of very interesting conversions at them if I had space. I will just tell one or two. One evening a poor woman who had been anxious for eight years, found rest in Christ. That same evening, a girl and her mother also settled the great matter of their souls' salvation, and the girl has since brought to one of our regular services five others to hear the words of truth.

One evening we were coming home from another meeting, it was nearly eleven o'clock, and some one proposed to have a meeting. At first we thought it would be better not, but at last we decided to have a short one, so we commenced to sing a hymn. At first there was hardly any one in sight, but gradually they began to gather round, and afterwards some of them told us that they had got up out of their beds to come. This seemed to be true of a number of them, for they did not look half-dressed, and some of them had nothing on their feet. But thanks be to God, some of them went home that night rejoicing in Christ.

There are still some of our number going out to the country districts and towns, and I could give some wonderful reports of work I have seen in the country if I had space.

And now I would like to say a word to young men. Be up and doing. God has been giving us great blessings, and He is not willing to stay his hand; if we be faithful trying to do what we can, and looking to God for the blessing, we will be blessed, for He will not break his promises. Oh let us then go forward in Christ's name and in Christ's strength, and never be content with anything less than the United Kingdom for Christ. H. W.

HOW TWO YOUNG MEN SPENT THEIR HOLIDAYS.

The Lord's way of doing things is very different from man's. For any important work we look to the great; God chooses the insignificant; so that, through the weakness of his servants, He may show the omnipotence of his power. This has been abundantly shown in the case of two of us young men, who were allowed to take part in the young men's work in Liverpool. We there had the blessed opportunity of speaking personally to many young fellows of our own age at the meetings, and pointing them to Christ.

After working quietly in this way for some weeks, it occurred to a dear friend of mine that, if we went to some town which had not been stirred up as we had been in Liverpool, and simply testified of the work which the Lord had done in our midst, and of which we had been witnesses, God would own it to his glory. After much prayer together (and this is a very important point for those who are going to unite in work, to pray often together for the guidance of the Holy Spirit) we were directed to Shropshire.

We broke ground at Wellington, where we were asked by an honoured servant of God, whose influence for good is widely felt in the town, to take the Sunday afternoon and evening meetings in his Mission-hall, which holds about a thousand people. The meetings were announced by bills stating that "two young men from Liverpool would tell of the work there," and that "Sankey's hymns and solos would be sung."

In the evening the hall was full; and as we sat on the platform before all these people, our faith failed; the thought of us two boys standing up and speaking to ten hundred was dreadful, and each of our hearts said, like Jeremiah, "Lord God, behold I cannot speak, for I am a child." But as the Lord caught poor sinking Peter when he cried to Him, so He strengthened us with this word, "Say not, I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak." We took God at his word, and never in any of our meetings was the Spirit of God so visibly manifest as He was that night. As we told of the blessing Liverpool had received, and simply held up the cross of Christ, the attentive faces and many moist eyes told that hearts were reached, and showed that the word of God is true, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

An after-meeting was held, at which we met not a few anxious, and several professed to find peace in Jesus.

On the Tuesday evening we had another gospel meeting at Wellington, and then began work at Newport, a small town of 3500 inhabitants. We commenced with two week-evening meetings in a schoolroom, kindly thrown open to us by the Independent minister. These meetings were blessed, and were so well attended, and the Christians of all denominations went in so warmly with the movement, that we were led to take the Town-hall. We then called on the ministers, and the principal men in the various churches and meetings in the town, and asked them to show their sympathy with the work by supporting us on the platform. This most of them did, which gave the meetings more influence, humanly speaking, than they would otherwise have had.

At the first meeting in the Town-hall, at eight o'clock on Sunday evening, after the churches were dismissed, about 600 were present, many being content to stand all the time, which, however, was not long, as our meetings lasted only one hour; and on the succeeding Sunday the hall was crammed to the door. Both at these and three week-evening services the Lord was with us, giving us words to speak; and the result was seen in "brands plucked from the burning."

A united prayer and praise meeting was also held, which was well attended.

This is, in a condensed form, an account of a fortnight spent by two Liverpool young men in Shropshire, and is given in the earnest hope that it may be the means of stirring up many others who have found the preciousness of Christ, and have taken the Lord for their King, to ask in the spirit of God's Word, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" CLAUGHTON—AN EXPERIMENT WORTH TRYING.

About four weeks ago it occurred to some of the Christian young men of Claughton to endeavour to reach their companions. Two Christian gentlemen placed their school-room at our disposal, and a series of meetings was commenced. These have been continued for four weeks, generally five nights each week. They commenced with an attendance of about sixty, but the numbers steadily increased, and at the most recent meeting, although seats were provided for 160, yet many were standing in addition. The wonderful work going on has become a prominent topic of conversation, on the Liverpool "flags" and the Exchange. God has been gracious to us beyond our weak faith, and the blessing has been truly marvellous. The meetings have been quite unsectarian, Churchmen, Dissenters, Quakers, Roman Catholics, and even Unitarians and scoffers, have been present. Many have come out boldly for Christ who are well known to most of the young fellows of Claughton. We had the privilege, one evening, in a crowded meeting, of hearing three brothers (who a few nights previous were almost adverse to the meeting) get up, one after the other, and confess to having found peace through the blood of Christ. It was a solemn time, and many strong men were moved to tears. One remarkable outcome of these meetings for young men, is the desire on the part of the mothers and sisters to share in the blessing. This hungering and thirsting has resulted in the commencement of meetings for ladies only, and already there are signs of blessing. I think it would be safe to say that, as an example, there are eight in one family rejoicing in Christ, whose conversion can be traced, humanly speaking, to these two classes of special services. E. YOUNG SOLDIERS.

The secretary of the Liverpool Young Men's Christian Association, sends us the following petition, enclosed in a letter, in which he says, "A deputation of little boys, from nine to thirteen years of age, has just this moment waited upon me with the enclosed petition, which explains itself. They have all been converted at the Young Men's Meeting, and now want to hold a meeting for boys of their own age, and a Christian woman has kindly offered to lend them her large parlour for the purpose"—

PETITION.

"We, the undersigned, have commenced to hold meetings for the spread of religion amongst little boys, and we wish for your co-operation and assistance to work these meetings properly. As we have no means to have these meetings advertised, we should feel it a great favour if you would kindly have printed for us some slips, same as those used for the Circus; and if you will not print them for us, would you kindly give us a donation towards getting them printed? And the Lord will bless you and give you in return double out of his abundant store for so helping his little disciples, who are striving to extend his kingdom all they can in their own humble way. As you know, sir, it says in one of Mr. Sankey's hymns—

"The children, too, both great and small,
Who love the name of Jesus,
May now accept the gracious call,
To work and live for Jesus."

Trusting, sir, that you will accede to our request,—We are, sir, your obedient servants in Christ,

[Signed by E. McC—, on behalf of himself and eight other boys.]

UNSPOKEN SPEECHES AT LIVERPOOL CONVENTION.

I have sometimes been pained by seeing Christian workers dealing with anxious souls in an obviously injudicious manner. The inquirer, let us suppose, has some particular difficulty or sin, which Satan has used in blinding him to the glorious gospel of peace; and the worker, instead of patiently and lovingly endeavouring to ascertain this, begins to hammer into him some portion of Scripture, or some of his own theories, not at all suitable to the case. I have met with cases of this kind, and the result has been in some of them that the inquirer has been stupefied. Would it not be well, first, to ascertain the particular disease of our patient, and then apply the medicine which is so liberally provided in the Word of God for every wound?

We have always been able to trace the source of dull and comparatively uninteresting meetings to a want of earnest prayer. We must not rely on the esprit d'corps of our meeting, but let us see to it that on each occasion our expectation is solely from the living God. I do not speak of a theory, as I say from practical experience that to be increasingly successful, we must have increasing prayer, expectation, and praise.

Deal with your inquirers alone, with no third person by. Deal with inquirers of your own sex, age, and class as nearly as possible. Avoid precipitancy on the one hand, and undue delay on the other. Have your Bible in hand, and give your spiritual patient chapter and verse—an infallible medicine. But vary your prescription according to the peculiar temperament and special form of soul-disease of your patient. Shun all argument.

In speaking with inquirers, perhaps the author of "A Pastor's Sketches" gives the best hint: "Conspire with the Spirit in deepening any positive impression He may have already made."

I would suggest the practicability of Christians inviting young men to their own homes for Bible-class purposes; but the name Bible-class had better not be used. A card might be printed or written thus:—"Your company is requested at a social gathering of young men for scriptural exposition, on Sunday afternoon next, at three o'clock, at my residence." Name and address to be stated. These cards could be given in the street, bus, shop, or sent by post. There is one thing, however, I deem important. Only young men of the same standing in life should be invited to come together, for equality would produce social combination, and make the gatherings attractive, for all like to make eligible acquaintances. Let each man, therefore, invite only those of his own sphere, or if they differ at all, let them be below, rather than above him; but the young men themselves on a social level. These meetings should be, as far as possible, for young men of the same locality. Christian Associations are sometimes too far off and too large (and therefore unsocial) to make them attractive. Make the young men comfortable and at home, and let there be a systematic study of God's Word, and, I believe, much good would result, and that these gatherings would become nurseries for the church and for the ministry.

THE FULCRUM AND THE LEVER.—Archimedes wanted a fulcrum on which to place his lever, and then he said he could move the world. Calvary is the fulcrum, and the cross of Christ is the lever; and by that power all nations shall yet be lifted.—T. de Witt Talmage, D.D.

I Am Praying For You.

"Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray."—Psa. lv. 17.

IRA D. SANKEY.

CHORUS.

2.
I have a Father: to me He has given
A hope for eternity, blessed and true;
And soon will He call me to meet Him in heaven,
But oh that He'd let me bring you with me too!

3.
I have a robe: 'tis resplendent in whiteness,
Awaiting in glory my wondering view;
Oh, when I receive it all shining in brightness,
Dear friend, could I see you receiving one too!

I have a peace: it is calm as a river—
A peace that the friends of this world never knew;
My Saviour alone is its Author and Giver,
And oh, could I know it was given to you!

5.
When Jesus has found you, tell others the story, [too;
That my loving Saviour is your Saviour
Then pray that your Saviour may bring them to glory, [answered for you!
And prayer will be answered—'twas

HALF A PAGE FROM A YOUNG CONVERT'S NOTE-BOOK.—It was my privilege to speak to a young man in the young men's meeting, a fortnight ago, asking him whether he was anxious after the welfare of his soul. He said, "Oh, yes, I so want to be happy like many I see here. I came to this theatre (where the young men's meeting was) to upset the meeting if I could. I had made up my mind to laugh at everything I heard, and make others do the same; but oh, sir! instead of laughing, I have felt so miserable! I cannot read myself; but do tell me what it is that makes you and other young men look so happy." I conversed with him for some time, and quoted that text (which has been blessed to so many), "Whoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The poor fellow seemed to think he was too poor and ignorant for the Lord Jesus to save. I prayed that God would bless us, and asked the young man to pray. All he could say was, "Oh, God, will you forgive me all my sins." And, thank God, I believe that young man left the theatre trusting in Christ.

The Christian.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

In looking through the successive issues of the Sussex Daily News, in which the addresses and proceedings were very fully and ably reported, we find it impossible to give any condensed summary which would convey an idea of the tone and character of the meetings; we must, therefore, refer our readers to the Report now in preparation.

We are struck, in reading these numerous addresses, with the amazing amount of scriptural exposition and practical exhortation, concerning which we do not doubt that every evangelical Christian would affirm, that not only is the true overwhelmingly in preponderance over that to which exception might be taken, but whatever is questionable is, with scarcely an exception, accidental, and not vital to the teaching represented. And we may go farther, and say, we do not think so large an amount of matter spoken at one time has ever been reported, to which there has been so little to object; and when it is remembered that the speakers were gathered from every leading denomination, and were men of very varied antecedents and present position, this is the more remarkable.

ATTENDANCE, ETC.

The estimate of the local managers was that there were 8000 visitors from other places, which was confirmed by the report of the station-master, we are told. In the Corn Exchange 2500 chairs were placed, and the adjoining Dome is said to contain the same number, making, with those standing, and the overflow meetings probably near 6000 persons present at once, with a large number who could not get in. On the latter days, probably 2500 were in the Corn Exchange at the early morning prayer-meetings, the doors of which had to be closed before seven o'clock, and the overflow taken into the Dome, where probably 500 to 1000 collected.

During the ten days about three hundred services were held, including evangelistic meetings for the unsaved in two tents, erected at the expense of the Convention, the Town hall, a large hired hall, and various chapels.

It is not wise to number Israel, but from hour to hour, and from day to day, a succession of reports came in from all quarters of persons professing conversion by scores. One evening over fifty stated that they had found the pardon of their sins. From the first the chairman of the meetings had privately and publicly asked for one thousand souls in conversion, and there is reason to hope that the prayer was answered. On Tuesday evening about 2600 were in the Corn Exchange at an evangelistic service, after the close of the Convention.

PASTORS FROM OTHER COUNTRIES.

It was very delightful to see present the representatives of twenty-three countries, viz.:—Germany, France, Switzerland, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Italy, Spain, Portugal, China, Persia, India, Sandwich Islands, Cape of Good Hope, United States, Canada, England, Scotland, Ireland, and Jerusalem, in the person and family of Bishop Gobat. Nearly all of them had made special journeys to be present, some of them coming thousands of miles. Many came disposed to criticize, but we know of no instance of any who did not lose his spirit in receiving rich blessings from the Lord. The German chaplains generously removed their military badges out of consideration for their brethren from France, and the French pastors said that for the first time all the remaining bitterness engendered by the war had passed away, so that they could with all their hearts embrace their German brethren with the feeling of being perfectly at one in Christ. The scene of the special joint communion of the German and French members of the Convention was one of feeling unparalleled in their Christian experience.

The name of "foreigners and strangers" was, by almost a necessity, dropped for that of "brethren from other countries." They were indeed "no more strangers and foreigners" to our hearts. Most liberal hospitality was exercised towards them, in addition to meeting their railway, lodging, and board bills. We saw one bill of a visitor to Brighton for 1317 meals, mostly given at his lodgings, to the brethren and sisters from other countries—he and his family in a most instructive way aiding the serving of the meals provided by his generous purse.

ORDER.

About seventy ushers, presided over by the efficient Mr. Hillman, kept admirable order in the various meetings, of which sometimes eight would be going on at the same time in the various halls and rooms of the King's Pavilion. The Dome and Corn Exchange are badly adapted for hearing, and it is owing to the admirable rules, strictly maintained, that the speakers were heard so well. We commend these regulations to the attention of other similar gatherings.

1. No one was allowed to enter or to leave during prayer, addresses, or solo singing.

2. Opportunity for changes was given frequently, sometimes in the middle of a long address, by the congregation singing a hymn or chorus.

3. The irreverent habit of moving during the Doxology or Benediction was entirely broken up.

In enforcing these rules the doors were fastened, and the ushers courteously peremptory. The moving of one person will destroy the hearing of a hundred persons sometimes, and it is only just to the audience to protect them thus. The ushers bore testimony to the extraordinary patience and courtesy of the great crowds often kept waiting outside for the opening of the doors.

The ushers were themselves earnest Christian workers, who had volunteered for this difficult service. At the close on Tuesday, the breakfast to them was a scene of deep and tearful feeling. The blessings of the meeting had descended largely upon them.

MONEY.

It was a very pleasant part of both the Oxford and Brighton Conventions that the subject of money was rarely mentioned, and never pressed. And yet at Oxford, instead of the outlay only of three hundred pounds being refunded, about sixteen hundred pounds were sent in, the surplus being for aiding Christian work on the Continent; while at Brighton there is an estimated surplus of two thousand pounds or more.

Four Christians, three of them unsolicited, guaranteed the sum of five hundred pounds each for the Brighton meeting, but no part of this guarantee had to be called for. About two thousand pounds were spent, mostly in the expenses of pastors from the Continent. No part of it went as compensation to any of those engaged in preaching.

One thousand pounds had been specially desired to be bestowed in local aid in connection with Mr. R. Pearsall Smith's proposed work on the Continent in the coming twelve months, but this sum was doubled by the generosity of a single individual, who gave this thank-offering of a thousand pounds—the same person who gave "an alabaster box" of a thousand pounds at Oxford. The word convert means turn inside out, and these meetings do marvellously convert the pockets of Christians.

From what we have known of other meetings of the same character, we believe that immense additions to the revenues of our missionary and other boards will come from these Conventions. We know of one instance of a thankoffering of near ten thousand pounds given to a single church purpose, by one who had received blessing at a consecration convention. Donald Matheson, Esq., and T. B. Smithies, Esq., are treasurers of the amounts collected.

INTERNAL ARRANGEMENTS.

The acting committee commenced on the plan of doing everything unanimously, and nothing to which each one did not agree. At their first meetings, when a difference of judgment occurred, they at once fell on their knees, and soon found themselves of one mind, or heartily consenting. Every movement was made unanimous.

In answer to prayer, a most experienced and suitable manager took honorary charge of providing lodgings, as a thankoffering for mercies received. It was no easy task to answer the quantities of letters received, and to find, on favourable terms, lodgings for so great a multitude. On one day alone two hundred letters were received, and eleven clerks, mostly volunteers, were kept at work till eleven o'clock at night. Much gratitude is expressed to Mr. Buchel for his quiet efficiency.

The superintendent of the Pavilion, Dome, etc., was like a member of the committee itself in his earnestness to forward the purposes of meetings, early and late suggesting and aiding in every way. The local committee, of whom Mr. Marriage Wallis was the centre, worked most effectively.

From the first it was asked that no one should lose the interior Sabbath of the soul in this great movement, and the prayer was answered to a blessed degree, the arrangements moving on from day to day almost without jar or confusion. A quiet, restful calm seemed to pervade every department, and to impress almost every one's countenance. The weather, too, was excellent.

HYMNS OF CONSECRATION AND FAITH.

This book was, by necessity, somewhat hastily put to press for the Brighton Convention, Mr. Pearsall Smith being much absorbed in the work on the Continent; but it is now being revised and enlarged, and a new edition will be issued as soon as it can be got ready. In the meantime, the Brighton edition is for sale by the publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott. The new hymns, many of them composed specially for this book, are received with much favour. We specially notice the beautiful new tunes to our good old hymns, Nos. 2, 4, 5, and 77; and the new hymns, Nos. 10, 18, 19, 24, 27, 43, 49, 59, 84, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 94, 95, 97, and M. Monod's hymn, No. 105. 110 pages, price one shilling.

MINISTERIAL EXPERIENCES.

The Rev. Theo. Monod said—Dear friends, I think that these testimonies are one of the most important features of these meetings, and are a means of grace. After all, it is the living witness that carries with him persuasion. It is one thing to speak for one's own sake and another thing to speak for the Lord's sake. I may say, with my brother Rappard, I was brought to God in a very definite manner. At that time I understood at once that [Christ was my righteousness, and that He was my strength. In fact, what led me to Him was not so much the sins of guilt as of weakness. I may say I never ceased to believe that He was the believer's strength; and that we had no strength outside of Him. I preached it, published it, and, in an emergency, or in the visits to beds of sickness, in proportion to the occasion, I would put myself in his hands, and I always found Him faithful. But between these emergencies, these moments when I thought I must have Him, well, I suppose I thought, indeed, I am sure I felt, I did not need Him so much. But it is a shame; it is a horrible sin to think we can do without the Lord Jesus Christ, now and then, and suit and please ourselves. And yet that was my life. And so it was with me for many years, not without some blessings from God in his wonderful patience. Well, one day last year, Mr. Pearsall Smith came to Paris, and the first time I saw him I told him there was one trouble with me. I said, "There are some sins, I like. There are some sins in which I find some satisfaction." Then he simply answered me with one verse from Scripture, "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin." I went to my Bible and found the verse there; but was it practicable? Could it be done? Was that the way to fight sin? I tried it and found it was; and every time I reckon myself to have died, it is settled in my own mind as a fact, then I am dead to sin, I find temptation, as it were, to drop down before this; it has been a very wonderful and blessed verse to me. I went on doing that now and then, but I soon felt that I had better do it all the while. One day I was led just to say to God, "I am Thine;" not, I wish to be, or, I wish I was, but, "I am." Well, did that make any great change? No; no extraordinary change. My duties were just the same, only I felt this, I knew this, that I belonged to God, I believed it on the authority of his Word: "Ye are mine." Then you ask me if I had failures. Yes, I had, and then I confessed to Him that I had turned from Him, and I felt more heart-searching, more sorrows for one transgression than I did before for weeks or months of conscious sin. He has led me since, step by step; I think that leading of Christ which He hath promised, is really true: "When He putteth forth his own sheep, He goeth before them." Let us expect and receive from Him abundance of life, of light, of love to obey Him cheerfully; to obey, I was going to say, plentifully: and to be like a full stream running over. He has promised as much: "He that believeth on Me, out of him SHALL flow rivers of living water."

A German missionary from India gave a short but interesting account of his labours there, in the course of which he related two remarkable circumstances. One was that through the prayer of a converted native, a woman, who was possessed of an evil spirit, was restored to her natural state of mind. The other was that of a native Christian girl, who was bitten by a serpent, for which there was no remedy, and it was fully expected that she would die. But a number of fellow-converts prayed for her all night, and the next day she was able to resume her duties.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, said it was seventeen years since he first knew the Lord. He was led to believe that he was not enjoying something that was the privilege of Christians, and his agony was intense at the thought of it. The great thing about Christianity was its reality, and if he did not feel this he should not care to preach it. Many saw that there was blessing in Christ—a life of high joy and victory; but they did not know how to enter into it. At last, seven years ago, he saw that his efforts to realize this life were mistaken, that simple faith was wanting. But he had no more success in struggling for faith than for holiness. God, however, changed his whole life in one moment, by telling him to leave the question of his faith, and but trust in His strength. This confidence was sufficient for all the exigencies of life. They were to look to Christ for "grace for grace," not regarding themselves and their feelings, but Him.

The Rev. M. Hesse, of Wurtemberg, felt a great desire to speak of what the Lord had done for him. He had felt a great interest in the movement, but he did not think it was likely to suit him. After a long time of misery and doubt, he read the passage, "Sin shall not have dominion over you, inasmuch as ye are not under the law, but grace." He decided on becoming a missionary, and went to the college at Basle to be trained for India. During years of study there he felt the power of sin grow mightier than before. He, however, went to India, and had great joy in the work, but failing health obliged him to return. After this he was still miserable, and then he first read of the reports of the movement called "Higher Life." Then Mr. Smith came over to Germany, and he heard him at Stuttgart. Then he tried to find out the sin that hindered him from having full trust and consecration to the Lord. From that time the thing was done. It cost him a terrible inward battle to confess; but he did it, and the sins were gone. From that time until now he had not fallen back into those sins, and he believed Christ would keep him from them for ever. He learnt clearly to understand and firmly to believe that his past sins were all forgiven through the blood and merit of Jesus. Before that time his theology, and one shared by many others now, was that a certain quantity of sin was necessary, not to orthodoxy, but to keep us humble. It might be that his sins were the means of keeping him humble, but still that theology was false. Now he had learned that as Jesus had pardoned his past sins, so He was able and willing to keep him from sin in the future. Formerly he was like a fish out of water, to use a homely illustration, and now like a fish in an ocean of love.

A Pastor from Wurtemberg said that, during the last few weeks, he had felt, in the words of the Apostle Paul, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me?" Yesterday he was at the small meeting in the morning, and then had a battle. No one saw it, but he had a battle. Afterwards the Lord said, "Come unto Me, all ye that are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." Then he went to the Saviour, and gave himself entirely to Him, without condition. But in the evening he again felt miserable and unhappy, "like a thief out of prison." He was ashamed to come to the meeting that morning, ashamed before the Lord. In fact, he never felt so sinful, so wholly unclean, in his whole life. Then the Lord spoke to him again, and said, "Thou art mine." Would that every one present would go to Jesus, and rest in his full mercy and love! What a great thing it would be if, as they left the building, every heart could truly say, "Now, Lord, I will be thine!"

A Pastor from Geneva said he had learned something in the last few days. "Jesus loves me," he had often read, but the word "now" had come into his vocabulary—"Jesus loves me now." It was not a doctrine of men, but it was a great and real blessing, and from the very depths of his heart he thanked the Saviour for that word "now."

A Pastor from Canton Vand said—I am a stranger among you, and I have been a Christian these twenty years, but it is only very lately that I came to know how great were the riches of my Lord's grace toward them that believe. Reading a letter written by one on sanctification by faith, that we had nothing to do but remain quiet, and the Lord would do everything for us, I put this teaching down as false, but a few days after the thought came to me that these brethren say they have renounced themselves and I have never done so. I had gone to India as a missionary, but I had not renounced myself as now. I have given up myself entirely to the Saviour, light has broken into my soul, and I found the truth in Christ. I would say to as many as do not understand the meaning of our preaching Jesus, begin to obey your Saviour when He tells you to renounce yourself, and then you shall. Believe first, and then you shall see. Satan whispered in my heart "It is a delusion," but I found it was not a delusion. The still small voice whispered, "Thou art Mine." We must ever remain in the attitude of expectation, not only to have, but to be filled with the Spirit, "Looking unto Jesus," and Him only. Since then I have known that the Lord is good, that He loves his children with an infinite love. I know that what Jesus says is true, that the Father loves us as He loves his only begotten Son. May the Lord give you to be filled with his love, and to live henceforth not mere children of the earth and the world, but as children of glory.

Another Minister said he stood amazed at the wondrous comprehensiveness of the salvation of our Lord Jesus Christ. Sixteen years ago his heart had been filled with love to God, but within the last three years he had been conscious of not possessing what Jesus had given to some of his dear children, and which Jesus was able to give to him. But how to lay hold of these things he did not know. He read his Bible, and yet, somehow or other, it seemed a sealed book. He thought he could not understand it as fully as he ought to do, and obtained every book he could on the person and work of the Holy Spirit, and yet he seemed to feel they were not enough, and his soul thirsted for the thing itself. His soul was ready to break with spiritual thirst. He had been led to see that he had been striving to make good his salvation by works. He knew that he came into salvation by faith, and it seemed to him that the finishing out of that salvation was by doing, whereas Christ offered to give the full salvation to those who trusted. On reading of one who had been a preacher, and successful in his work, but had not the soul-rest he wanted, that reminded him of himself. And he felt there was one thing he had not laid on the altar—his unbelief. He resolved he would go and give up his unbelief. To do it seemed like letting go a rope, or dropping from a rock to an infinite depth below; but the moment he said, "Lord Jesus, I now trust Thee to keep me from worry, care, fretting, and falling into the condemnation of sin; I now trust Thee," words could not describe how precious Jesus became to his soul. It seemed as if deep in his soul a happy conception of his presence rose up before his gaze, and this text came to him, "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save," and it seemed as if Jesus said, "Thou art as a little child at my feet; dost thou think I cannot carry thee?" He was reminded of the fable which just illustrated what he meant. A fly sitting on the horn of a bull said, "I hope I do not make your neck ache." "Ache!" said the bull, "if you hadn't spoken I shouldn't have known you were there." He felt then that though he could give up almost everything for God, there was one thing that would be trying, and that was to be laid aside by illness from his much-loved work of preaching; but when Dr. Mahan said in his sermon, "Will you fall thoroughly into the centre of the will of God?" he felt Yes; yes, I will. That brought rest and peace.

MEETING OF STUDENTS.

Whilst it is the privilege of hundreds—I may say thousands—to testify that, during the Brighton Convention, the manifest presence of the Lord was in the great congregations, it is my joy to bear witness to the fulfilment of the frequently-quoted, yet very precious, promise of Jesus to his disciples, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. xviii. 20).

A few students banded together for mutual help. From each meeting we went our different ways strengthened. At the first we were only about five or six in number. At the last we were fifteen or sixteen. This, our farewell meeting, will never, I believe, be forgotten by those who were present.

Amongst the denominations of Christians represented were the following branches of the Church:—The Lutheran, Spanish Evangelical, Presbyterian, Established (English), Free (English), Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational.

The following educational societies were represented:—The University of Utrecht, Holland; University of Upsala, Sweden; University of Lausanne, Switzerland; University of Bonn, Germany; University of Dublin, Ireland; University of Cambridge, England; Madison University, U.S.A.; Queen's University, Ireland; King's College, London, England; Corporate Law Society, England; University College Hospital, England.

At this last meeting, ten or eleven repeated each a passage of Scripture, and prayed for his fellow-students. Silent prayer followed. Then, standing up, we sang together, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." After which, we seemed loth to part, and so, as a sort of second farewell hymn, we sang (standing, and having hold of one another's hands, in token of the union of our hearts in one common Saviour and Friend), three verses of that well-known hymn—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

And then we parted, with a sure hope that His presence, which we had so fully realized in Brighton, would go with us.

As we shall be few amongst many, on behalf of my brother students, as well as for myself, I ask the earnest prayers of the people of God, that we may each be made a great blessing to the young men with whom we daily mix.

EVANGELISTIC MEETING.

On Monday evening there was an evangelistic meeting at the Town-hall, when Mr. Henry Varley gave a most earnest and heart-stirring address to a crowded audience.

I was seated near the platform, and scarcely had the speaker finished his address, when an old man, apparently seventy years of age, burst into tears, jumped from his seat, went up to Mr. Varley, and clasped his hand, saying—

"Oh! I am saved!" and more that I could not catch.

Just then, two young women, who afterwards proved to be this old man's two daughters, pushed forward to the platform. The sight was a most affecting one. Well, the meeting was concluded, and part of the audience left, Mr. Varley exhorting all who could possibly do so, to remain. I did remain, with some 200 others, and when Mr. Varley called upon all those of us who were for Jesus, and sought Him, to stand up, fifty-two rose to our feet.

I now pass to eight o'clock on the following morning. This was Tuesday, June 8, the eleventh and last day of the Convention. Mr. Pearsall Smith's last words almost were, "The Convention is over," and very many of the vast crowd were weeping. It was the early prayer-meeting, which commenced in the Corn Exchange every morning at seven. This morning the room was filled twenty minutes before.

In the course of an address by Mr. Varley, he said, "I wish all of you had been at the Town-hall last night. There fifty-two of the congregation rose up, and declared themselves for Christ," and here he told that incident of the old man and his daughters. He was about ending his story, when this old man, rising from his chair, said, "It is true! it is all true, every word of it! I am the man!" The effect on the audience was astounding. Mr. Varley immediately turned round to the Rev. Mr. Mountain, who was presiding at the harmonium, and who then led the hymn, "Hallelujah! Thine the glory," joined in by some thousands of voices.

At the close of the meeting, Mr. Smith asked each one present to give the right hand of fellowship to all of his nearest neighbours—a request, I rejoice to say, very heartily and generally complied with.

The following lines were read at the parting meeting, Tuesday morning. They are from the pen of the wife of Pastor Gobat of Basle, the daughter of the venerable Gobat, Bishop of Jerusalem, who was present at the meetings:—

FAREWELL WORDS

(ADDRESSED BY THE CONTINENTAL BRETHREN TO THEIR FRIENDS IN ENGLAND).

Strangers from a distant land
Led by Jesu's loving hand,
We have met upon this shore,
Strangers, foreigners no more.
JESUS was our meeting-place,
As we sought our Father's face;
One word made all hearts to glow:
"Jesus saves me, saves me now!"

Broken, broken at His feet,
Thus for His blest use made meet:—
Emptied of all things below
Him and only Him to know;—
Helpless, worthless, weak and poor,
He our strength, our boundless store;
Nothing we, nor great, nor small—
Jesus Christ our All in All.

Thus the pilgrim band returns,
And a fire within us burns,—
Fire of Jesu's mighty love
Kindled by the heavenly Dove.
Oh! we long to tell abroad
All the wondrous works of God,
While we triumph hour by hour,
In our David's matchless power.

Where the Alps majestic rise,
'Neath our glowing, southern skies,
In Germania, France, and Spain,
Over hill, and vale, and plain,
Wheresoe'er our feet shall tread,
May the glorious tidings spread,
As in joyful trust we bow:—
Jesus saves us, saves us now.

Jesus Christ the Crucified,
Jesus placed at God's own side,
Conqu'ror over sin and grave,
Jesus, mighty still to save;
Jesus, living, loving Friend,
Jesus, faithful to the end,
Nothing else would we proclaim
But the glories of that Name.

English brethren! fare ye well,
God's rich blessings on you dwell!
We would clasp your hands and say,
Ere we tear ourselves away,
"Oh! let this our watchword be,
'Jesus saveth even me.'
Let us trust, whate'er befall,
Let us trust Him—that is all."

Onward, onward, let us go,
Conquering over every foe;
Onward, till we see His face,
Each a trophy of His grace.
Out of every tribe and tongue,
We shall come to join the song:
Glory to the Lamb once slain,
Glory to our God. Amen.

Brighton, June 8, 1875.

Many of our readers will be interested to know that Conventions—similar to the one which terminates at Brighton to-day—are arranged to be held as follows, under the direction of R. Pearsall Smith:—Keswick (Westmoreland), June 29, 30, and July 1; Nottingham, July 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17; and Leeds, from July 24 to August 2. The Committee, by whom the necessary arrangements are being made at the last-named town, have requested the Foreign Pastors at the Brighton Convention—in number about 160—to send a friend or neighbour (who must of course be a Pastor as well) to the Convention at Leeds, and the Committee on their part very generously undertake to pay their railway expenses, and provide for them during their sojourn in Leeds.

During the past week it has been possible to hear a good many foreign languages spoken in social intercourse; and in one instance, singularly enough, the only means of communication was afforded by a dead language. This instance occurred at the breakfast to the Foreign Pastors, where a Silesian Baron, lately a Canon in the Romish Church, spoke across the table to Signor Grassi, of Rome, in Latin.

* * * We are requested to state that as the various addresses delivered at the Convention have not been examined by the speakers, it will be manifestly unfair to hold them responsible for particular expressions.

OVERFLOW PRAYER-MEETING IN THE DOME.

A correspondent writes —

Do let this little account of the prayer-meeting in the Dome on the last morning be included in the report, if possible. It was such a blessed little time, and though we went with disappointed hearts into the Dome, we came away feeling that God had indeed given us our portion too.

It has been such a blessed time, and so doubly blessed to know the best is yet to come, even the best of anything and everything we received there. I heard several say how strange it seemed to leave Brighton without regretting that the time was past, as we usually do when anything very bright and glad has been ours for a little. It seemed to me such an Adieu to the whole—nothing was past—we were but going to see the "so be it" in our lives. It was impossible to think we were leaving any blessing behind us in Brighton, for with the Lord Jesus so near to each one, we knew we must be carrying it all with us, for what is all blessing but Himself? Thank God for teaching us that.

The Corn Exchange, which holds over 2500 persons, being more than full even before seven o'clock, many hundreds of people were requested to go to the Dome, where a prayer-meeting would also be held.

After singing Hymn 102 the Rev. E. H. Hopkins asked if some of the brothers would express their testimony in a verse from the Bible. Among many given were:—

"My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour."

"Accepted in the Beloved."

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

"I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

"My grace is sufficient for thee."

"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."

"Whoso drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but whoso drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst."

"In Thy presence is fulness of joy."

"According to your faith, be it unto you."

"I the Lord hold thy right hand, saying, Fear not."

"The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him."

"In the light of the King's countenance is life."

"Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.... Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

"Blessed be the Lord, for He hath visited and redeemed his people."

"O taste and see how gracious the Lord is."

Requests for prayer and praise were then read, Hymn 43 sung, and after prayer by Lord Radstock, the Rev. E. H. Hopkins read Eph. iv. 1—17.

Pastor Theodore Monod then said, he believed almost all present had come into the Dome with a feeling of disappointment, inasmuch as this last morning of the Convention we wished all to be united in the Corn Exchange. But we must remember that our disappointments are God's appointments; we must not try to make the best of it, but believe it is the best. In reference to a few words spoken by a brother on the subject of prophecy and the book of Revelation, he said, he was much struck with the thought, for he believed we did not sufficiently study that book, to which a special promise of blessing was attached. Though there was much that we could not understand, there was more that we could, and the whole impression of the book was to lift us above earthly things. It was a great help to "setting our affection on things above."

He would leave two words with us to carry away—the first, "Thou." Our natural bent is to think of myself. At first we say, "I am vile; I am miserable; I am lost." Then "He," not I, but He; what He gives to us. "Jesus Christ is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." That is a great step, but there is one beyond. "He" is but speaking of Christ in the third person. Turn He into Thou; the thought into prayer. How naturally we find it in the Bible. In Psa. xxiii., "The Lord is my Shepherd;...He restoreth me;...He leadeth me;...yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me;" and again, in Psa. xlii. 5, 6, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me. Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him for the help of his countenance. O my God, my soul is cast down within me, therefore will I remember Thee." When we think much of God we feel our heart warming towards Him; we must not only think but speak. "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine." This is what we want, Thou, and not my sinful, not my Christian self. If you find comfort in your experience, it is, as a German has said, like trying to warm yourself in the moonlight. We learn that everything is in Christ; we want, not his gifts simply, but Himself. And the other word I would leave with you is, "Now."

It makes a little poem, very short,

THOU NOW.

Let past things remain in the past; do not try to light to-day's fire with the ashes of yesterday. Don't look to to-morrow; we know nothing of it. For aught I know, when to-morrow comes "everlasting joy" may be upon my head, and I shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing be fled away. And so it may be a help to us to keep saying, not to ourselves, but to Him, "THOU. NOW."

A brother from Holland then spoke of the blessing of losing ourselves, and being found of Jesus Christ.

After prayer and a hymn, three pastors from Italy and Germany each spoke of the blessing they had received at Brighton; of the joy of knowing the Lord Jesus more fully: of giving all cares into his hands, and looking into "the dear heavenly face of our Father in heaven." Those who had received special blessing at this time then sang the Doxology, and then all joined, with hearts overflowing with gratitude, in "Glory, honour, praise, and power

Be unto the Lamb for ever.
Jesus Christ is our Redeemer—
Hallelujah, hallelujah, Praise ye the Lord!"

THE SIXTH OF ROMANS.

Lines suggested by Rev. T. MONOD'S Address, in the Dome, Brighton, on Tuesday evening, June 1, by THOMAS RYDER, Nottingham.

"Buried with Christ," and raised with Him, too,
What is there left for me to do?
Simply to cease from struggling and strife,
Simply to "walk in newness of life."
Glory be to God!

"Risen with Christ," my glorious Head,
Holiness now is the pathway I tread,
Beautiful thought, as I walk therein,
"He that is dead is freed from sin."
Glory be to God!

Living with Christ, who "dieth no more,"
Following Christ, who goeth before:
I am from bondage utterly freed,
Reckoning self "to be dead indeed."
Glory be to God!

Living for Christ, my members I yield,
"Servants of righteousness," evermore sealed,
"Not under law," I'm now "under grace,"
Sin is dethron'd, and Christ takes its place.
Glory be to God!

Growing in Christ; no more shall be named
Sinful things whereof I'm ashamed;
"Fruit unto holiness" now will I bear,
"Life everlasting, the end" I shall share.
Glory be to God!

LIVERPOOL.

The evangelistic services which have been carried on in Victoria Hall ever since Messrs. Moody and Sankey left Liverpool, were discontinued the beginning of this month, except on Sunday afternoons and evenings. On these occasions addresses have been delivered by the Revs. W. H. M. H. Aitken and B. H. Lundie, Dr. Owles, and Mr. D. M. Drysdale, with much acceptance to large audiences.

The committee of the Young Men's Meetings, however, considering it most desirable that the evangelistic services should be continued, though not in so large a building as Victoria Hall, determined to carry them on in their large Circus, and Captain W. E. Smith, of the Evangelization Society of London, kindly sent down William Taylor (late a navy), who has been preaching with much success and blessing every night during the past week. These services in the Circus are to be continued.

The nine to ten young men's meeting is carried on as usual. The number of young men's meetings held night after night, on this and on the Cheshire side of the river is simply astonishing; moreover, they are decidedly on the increase.

The carters' meeting on Sunday afternoons in the Circus is a great success. On a recent occasion, when Mr. Aitken addressed them, there were something like nine hundred carters present.

On Friday evening, as many telegraph boys as were not on duty (some eighty or ninety) were entertained to tea at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, 44, Renshaw-street, presided over by Mr. Nash. Addresses were delivered by William Taylor and others, and the testimony of many of the boys was interesting and very encouraging.

Would the Lord's people kindly remember Liverpool in prayer?

It was resolved to hold a similar gathering on the following Thursday (the 17th instant), at seven p.m., when written testimonies of blessing received during the visit to Brighton will be read, and any oral reports welcomed from brethren "to whom He said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest, and this is the refreshing" (Isa. xlviii. 12).

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

FAREWELL SERVICES IN THE EAST-END.

For the third time we are called upon to record the closing of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours in one of the four divisions of the city. The voices of the preacher and the singer that have echoed so often and so sweetly among the wooden rafters of Bow-road Hall, will be heard there no longer. Other voices will be heard, however, and we trust that during the few weeks when the hall will remain standing, the voice of the gentle Saviour will often be heard by weary souls, calling them to rest.

On Tuesday week, the closing day, three services were held, and, as may be supposed, the attendance throughout the day was unusually large.

At the twelve o'clock prayer-meeting, there were, we should say, about 3000 people present.

Mr. Moody's expository remarks were directed to show the suitability of God's salvation to men, just as water satisfies and refreshes the thirsty body. God would not disappoint us if we came to Him really thirsty. Every one thirsts after something. It is this that fills the theatres and gin-palaces. If men had their eyes opened to that which they really needed, they would come to the living fountain, where alone their thirst can be quenched. The more they drink of this world's pleasures, the thirstier men become; but if they came to Christ, He would satisfy them. Mr. Moody told of a dying soldier who said, "Oh for a draught of water from my father's well!" and showed how the Bible opens with a river that flowed in Eden, and winds up with the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. "May God help us to drink of it here that we may drink it hereafter."

After prayer by Mr. Moody, and singing Hymn 59, "Give me the wings of faith to rise,"

Mr. Sankey spoke of Christ's having suffered thirst on the cross, and how He still thirsted for sinners to come to Him. Who would give Him a draught to-day? The only thing that would refresh Him was our heart's love!

A man in the audience prayed quaintly that many would open a banking account with God to-day. His was the only bank that gave 100 per cent. He prayed also that those who had an account there might to-day present a cheque, and draw all the balance at their credit.

Major Cole commented on the touching history of Hagar, who, with her child, thirsted in the wilderness. From God's gracious supply of her and her son's need, he drew a lesson for mothers to bring their children to the living Christ who was waiting to bless.

Mr. H. L. Hastings, Editor of the Boston Christian, said few in this country knew what thirst was. Those who had wandered through the deserts, and sailors who had been wrecked at sea, knew what it meant. Men had been known to tear their veins open and drink their own blood in the intensity of their thirst. God uses this terrible agony as a type of the deeper anguish of the unsaved soul. If there were any present who were thirsting for something better than this world could give, let them come to Christ. He related the sudden death of a passenger on board the "China," on his way to this country, and applied the lesson of the incident by entreating all who were unsaved to come to Christ without delay.

Mr. R. C. Morgan said the river of God was full of water. Our Father's well is running bank high now; it is like the river of Jordan, that overflows its banks all the time of harvest. If we want to drink of the water, it is in God's wonderful Book. He was speaking lately to a little girl, and asked her if she thought God loved her. Oh, yes! How did she know? She read it. Where? In the Bible. What effect did this knowledge have upon her? Oh, she loved Him! He thought it was one of the grandest confessions he ever heard; it was the nearest approach he had heard to the "It is written," with which Christ conquered the devil. He then gave an instance of the constraining power of the love of Christ as strikingly manifested in the removal of any latent feelings of bitterness between the French and German pastors, which has been a wonderful result of the Brighton Convention. They had drunk together of the living water.

Mr. Moody invited all the Christians who wanted to drink deeper of the water of life to rise, and nearly the whole assembly rose. To his second invitation, to those who wished to become Christians, to rise, a few responded, and these he asked to go to the inquiry-room, while the congregation sang the parting hymn—

"I heard the voice of Jesus say,
'Behold I freely give
The living water—thirsty one,
Steop down, and drink, and live.'"

Afternoon meetings have been rare in the East-end, but the attendance this afternoon was such as to encourage the belief that large audiences would have come together at that time of the day, if other arrangements had permitted the meetings being held. Doubtless the crowd was greater at this service on account of its being the last but one.

Mr. Sankey sang, "What shall the harvest be?" and "The ninety-and-nine," the last at the request of some friends who had come from the country to attend the service. He was listened to with breathless eagerness, and his singing seemed to produce a deep impression, as it invariably does.

Mr. Moody discoursed from the seven "I wills" of Christ, as recorded by the apostle John. The Saviour was very clearly and lovingly exalted before the listeners, and we trust He drew many to Himself. Mr. Moody closed his fervid and passionately earnest address with some suitable exhortations on the "I will" of the returning prodigal, "I will arise and go to my Father." He read a letter he had received from a lady, telling about her unconverted husband, who had seen several of his children die Christians without being moved, and asking prayer for him.

Before the final prayer, all who wished to imitate the prodigal, and say, "I will arise and go to my Father," were invited to testify it as usual by rising. From the numbers that rose, it was plain that Mr. Moody's words had gone deep down into many a soul, and if appearances were a reliable test, there must have been joy in the presence of the angels over many souls returning to the Father's house.

The evening gathering was, in many respects, a wonderful one. The crowd was so dense and so persistent in their efforts to get inside, that some of the passage-ways in the hall were seated with chairs for their accommodation, a thing almost unknown in these meetings, as the passages have, as a rule, been inexorably kept clear. There was a large contingent of foreign pastors, who were en route homewards from the Brighton Convention. At Mr. Moody's special request, a number of seats in front were vacated by those in possession and allotted to these visitors. Some little time was occupied before all who had gained admission were comfortably placed. We have no idea of the numbers who were, perforce, shut out, but they must have been very many. The service began about half an hour before the appointed time, and even then thousands of the congregation had been waiting patiently for hours.

Rev. Theo. Monod, of Paris, whose addresses at the Brighton Convention added much to the interest and importance of that concourse of Christians, had a seat on the platform, and offered the opening prayer—very short and pointed.

Mr. Sankey's farewell "sermons in song" were, to the Christians "Nothing but leaves," and to the unsaved, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." The singer seemed to throw his whole soul into his voice, feeling, no doubt, that they were the last messages he would, in the providence of God, be able to carry to the East-end of London, and hoping that even if all those that went before had failed, these might do good work for the Master he has so zealously served.

Mr. Moody's final words to this vast company were an expression of his yearning and intense desire to make the way of salvation so plain that every soul out of Christ might be left without excuse. He well-nigh exhausted his copious store of illustration and metaphor in seeking to impress his all-important message on the hearts of his hearers. He rung the changes on the words, "believe," "receive," "trust," "accept," etc., dwelling at most length on "receive," which he illustrated from the story of Eliezer's mission in search of a wife for Isaac, and Rebecca's affirmative answer to the question, "Wilt thou go with this man?" Mr. Moody was so earnest in pressing instant salvation on his audience, that he appeared loath to close.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock." Does your heart throb to-night? It is Christ knocking. "If any man will open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with Me." Who will let Him in? Who will pull back the bolts and say, "Welcome, thrice welcome, Son of God, into this heart of mine?" I want to leave you right here, with Christ knocking at the door of your heart.

And so ceased the voice of the messenger, whose words have been the instrument of many a bright and hopeful conversion in the busy East of London. We doubt not that there will be a goodly cluster of jewels in the Saviour's crown, and in Mr. Moody's too, at the great day of account, as the result of the services in Bow-road Hall. But, alas, one cannot help thinking of the myriads who remain untouched by this or any other effort. Will it be more tolerable in the day of judgment for Sodom and Gomorrah than for them?

OPENING SERVICES AT CAMBERWELL.

After three months' incessant labour in the North, East, and West of London, Messrs. Moody and Sankey might fairly have taken a week's rest before commencing their last month's campaign in the South. Not so, however; only one brief day was allowed to intervene between the closing meeting at Bow-road Hall and the opening one at Camberwell Green. One of the many things which our friends, and all their well-wishers in this movement, have to be thankful to God for in connection with it, is the comparatively perfect health of body vouchsafed to them throughout these months of arduous and anxious toil for the Master. The physical strain experienced by both evangelists must have been something most unusual, and we can only attribute their continued and apparently unabated vigour of body to the goodness of God in keeping their minds at perfect peace, because they were stayed on Him.

The opening service in the south division of the city was held on Thursday afternoon, and the presence of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, with the added attraction of addresses by Mr. Spurgeon and Mr. Aitken, of Liverpool, drew together an immense and nominally Christian audience. The new hall was filled to overflowing long before 3.30 p.m., and hundreds, if not thousands, were obliged to return as they came. With much difficulty we gained standing room at the back of the principal platform, and our efforts were rewarded with a sight which, four months ago, would have been looked upon in London as very wonderful, but which has now become familiar to all whom duty or pleasure or curiosity has led to attend with frequency at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings.

Though very similar to the Bow-road Hall in its general structure and internal appearance, Camberwell-green Hall is much more complete in its arrangements and appointments, and indeed seems to be as convenient for the purpose intended as a temporary building could well be.

The building, we understand, will seat about 8000. One half the platform is occupied with the choir, which has been in training for some time.

The public service commenced with the joyful strains of "Ring the bells of heaven," after which prayer was led by Rev. Dr. Hugh Allen, of St. George's, Southwark.

Mr. Sankey's first solo was "Nothing but leaves," a choice which was surely full of deep and solemn suggestiveness at the outset of these special meetings in the South. It was, too, a singularly appropriate prelude to the reading of the parable of the talents by Mr. Moody, and the addresses that followed.

Mr. Aitken was the first to speak to the thousands of professing Christians, and as we report in other columns his stirring and heart-searching words, we do not further comment on them here, except to say that our readers lose much when they lose the terribly earnest and telling delivery that accompanies Mr. Aitken's discourses. Mr. Moody and Mr. Spurgeon, who both sat, literally, at Mr. Aitken's feet, evidently did so also in the sense of drinking in and appreciating the powerful burning words of the speaker. It was an address worthy of the important occasion.

After Mr. Aitken's rousing call to action, it was fitting that Mr. Sankey should sing, "Here am I, send me," which he did in a way calculated to convey to the mind of every Christian present the sense of his personal responsibility in the great conflict between Christ and the powers of darkness. Mr. Sankey seemed to sing in this new building with much ease, and it need not be said that his fine voice filled every corner in a way that astonished some who heard him for the first time.

Mr. Spurgeon, after a few words of reference to Mr. Aitken's address, said: I cannot but feel happy, standing here in such a company of God's believing people gathered from all churches, and representing, I believe, every section of the great body of the Lord Jesus. I could hardly have believed that such a company would ever come together at all; and I do not see how they could have been brought together, except, in the providence of God, our two friends had come across the sea. When I was a boy I used to like sugar-candy, and used to wonder how the strings got inside, although I knew afterwards they were stretched across in order that the sugar might crystallize upon them. My brethren are strings upon which I hope everyone will crystallize—at least all those who have got the slightest bit of sugar in them. Those who have not, I suppose, must crystallize somewhere else.

It is all the better that our friends are foreigners—although I do not know that Americans can be called foreigners—because, coming from abroad we do not criticise them so much as we do our own brethren. My friend Varley is a great man, but he is greatest in America; and I suspect our friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey are greater here than if they were at home. They are going away soon, and perhaps it is fortunate; for if they were to stay here some of our ministers would be afraid they would take their congregations away, and they would not rally round our brethren as they do. Now, however, we welcome them, and I hope every congregation will be richer for the special services to be held here.

I thank God that our dear brethren do not commit themselves to any particular line of thought except the gospel, and take no concern in various matters which are in dispute with different sections of Christians. I hold that every man should teach the entire truth as he believes it, and if he be a settled pastor he must not keep back any part of it; but evangelists are to show forth only the great cardinal truths of the gospel, and this our friends do. Without compromising ourselves at all, we have no difficulty in believing the gospel our friends preach, and therefore we of South London feel we can work with them. I do not know how all my brethren feel; but I hope they all feel heartily in union with our friends. If they don't I do, and there are plenty more behind me who can say we do also. And by the grace of God we do mean to unite with our dear brethren in making these meetings a great success. I ask you to tell me whether you do mean to do this or not, to back up these friends with all your hearts and souls. If you do, I ask you to say "yes" (Mr. Spurgeon's question elicited a very general shout of "yes"). Well, then, the proper way is to come and help them with all our might, and believe that God will help us, because He will be glad to see such unity among his people, and the heartiness with which we gather around the cross. For whether we be Churchmen or Dissenters, Calvinists or Arminians, we do love the Lord Jesus Christ with all our heart; and I do not know who loves Him the most; we all desire, where Christ is to be glorified, to have a finger in the work.

We are happy to have our friends here, because, somehow or other, they have managed to get the popular ear. I remember going over the Alps in a railway-train, when there was a great deal of snow. We came to a stand-still, although the engine, a very powerful one, was in full work. I looked out of the window, and followed soon after with my body—for I did not like the look of things—and saw that, although the engine was making the wheels go round, the lines were so slippery, it could get no grip upon them, and so the train stood still. That is what some of us have to complain of in our churches. There are the wheels going round, but they cannot get a grip. It is the gospel, but there is no grip, and the train does not move. But our brethren have got a grip upon the masses, and they preach the gospel. We have had a great many voices that have not been very distinct, but this is very distinct. I know what Mr. Moody means when he speaks, and what Mr. Sankey means when he sings. They are about as plain men as could be to look handsome at all.

Mr. Spurgeon said, Perhaps some did not agree with the mode of action adopted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey; then let the objector come and help them to do that which was right. He had heard some very wise—he might say, extraordinarily wise—men find fault with the inquiry-room. They had never been inside, but they knew exactly how it ought to be done, and he (Mr. Spurgeon) would say to them—and some lived on that side of the water, and were present that afternoon—if there was anything wrong, let them set it right. If these persons did know better than any one else how to tell the way to heaven, but held aloof, and did not come forward, let them not find fault with those who did their best. Let us lay aside all carping criticism, but let us pray, and when we prayed, let us also work, and the Lord would send down blessings such as we never had before.

After these remarks, most suitable to the occasion, Mr. Spurgeon gave a short discourse to Christians from 2 Kings iii. 16, "Thus saith the Lord, make this valley full of ditches;" and from the mournful passage in David's history, recorded in 2 Sam. xi. His pointed words were full of warning and instruction. His closing exhortation was, "Get to work."

Mr. Moody having announced that the meetings would be held in the hall every day except Saturday, "right away," for the next thirty days, the Doroxy was sung; and after Dr. Moffat had pronounced the benediction, the great audience dispersed.

In the evening, to an audience that well-nigh filled the new hall, Mr. Moody told out the "good news" of the gospel, and we hope not a few received it, like Zaccheus, joyfully.

Mr. Sankey sang "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," requesting the choir only to join in the refrain of each verse. The audience, however, paid little heed to this request, but heartily chimed in. Mr. Sankey sang the closing verse alone, so as to give the full effect to the solemn words, "Jesus of Nazareth has passed by."

There were a few inquirers, as the result of the service; at the prayer-meeting, which followed, a goodly number stood up to be prayed for.

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD.—In giving a brief notice of evangelistic work here, in our issue of June 3, we mentioned similar efforts at Chesham. We ought to have stated that the work at Chesham is under the superintendence of Mr. J. E. Taylor, Chalfont, St. Peter's, Bucks, and that at Hemel Hempstead only in charge of Mr. Foskett.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The twenty-second anniversary of this useful and unobtrusive society took place at the Home for Little Boys, Farningham, Kent, on Monday, June 7. About four hundred members and friends went by special train, and much enjoyed the preliminary visit to the various Homes and workshops. After tea, the meeting was held in the chapel. Lord Ebury presided, and Mr. John Macgregor read the report. To the Rev. G. Elder followed Bishop Cloughton, the Chaplain-General. Mr. Barming, Mr. Kirkham, and Captain Hobart also took part in the proceedings. The weather kept fine, and the friends returned safely to town, with pleasant thoughts of hallowed fellowship, of delightful country, sweet song, and much profitable enjoyment.

LESSONS AND WARNINGS OF THE PAST.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS AT THE OPENING OF THE CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL, BY REV. W. H. AITKEN.

"Praise ye the Lord for the avenging of Israel, when the people willingly offered themselves."—JUDGES V. 2.

The children of Israel had got so low they could not betake themselves to their ordinary occupations without danger. They could not even go down to the well to draw water. They could not go out of their houses and attend to their work in the town but they were in peril of being carried away. The highways were unoccupied, and if we had been there, we should have seen those Israelites creeping about in by-lanes, afraid to be seen. And all this was because they had been unfaithful to God; the scourge of heaven was upon them.

In the picture of an unfaithful nation we have the type of an unfaithful Church. When God's people are unfaithful to his cause, similar phenomena exhibit themselves. Where the Spirit of God is there is liberty, but none without it. You may have an appearance of prosperity; you may have vast ecclesiastical organizations, but if you are not walking in the power of the Spirit of God, you can have no real liberty. What is the result? "The inhabitants of the villages cease." You notice when Christians get into a low spiritual state, and the church has backslidden, that the people are afraid to go "outside the walls of the city." They have got their regular church ordinances, but you will find very little in the shape of religious activity or life; there is very little to show that the people are really enjoying the glorious liberty of the children of God. When people get into this backsliding state, they regard all special agencies as works of supererogation. They do not see the good of meeting in their own houses, around an open Bible, and special meetings are an unheard-of thing. As for the profession of Christ before the world, it is looked upon as eccentricity. They are not proud of the title of an Israelite; they are ashamed of their colours.

How many Christians there are who answer to this description! You hardly know whether they are Christians or not; you cannot discover it by their conversation. They will talk very freely about politics, or the market, or the exchange, but if you mention "the one thing needful," they immediately draw themselves into their shell. "That is between my soul and God," they say; "the less said about these things in public the better. Let us wait till we get to heaven, and then we can talk about it."

Yet again. I find those unfortunate Israelites were beset at the very place of drawing water. Above all other places, one would like to be safe there. In a hot country, and under a torrid sun, one would like to have some little security there, in order to draw water from the sparkling spring. But we find they had enemies lurking round the springs. The archer's bow combined with the Midianites' rod, and many a stalwart Israelite was laid low on the field at the very place of drawing water. That is always the way in a backsliding church. We have got our places of drawing water, and many of us come away very thirsty, because we have not drawn any. There are our churches, our Bible-classes, the communion feast—all accounted places for drawing water. You Christians who are backsliding have hardly taken your seat there, before the twang of the archer's bow is heard. To-morrow's business, your daily cares, all the perplexities of life, intrude themselves; and instead of a season of blessed, hallowed refreshment, you go away with the feeling on your minds, "What is wrong? How is it I cannot pray?" You go away with a wounded, lacerated soul, and a guilty conscience. You feel that your very prayer is turned into an occasion of sin, instead of being a blessed opportunity of communicating power.

This is a very miserable condition for any nation or church to be in, and it is a great thing when it is felt, provided they do not go on too long in that condition. Some Christians spend the most of their lives groaning over their state, but there is no use in that, you know. Set to work, and find out the real difficulty, where the weakness lies. And if you put yourself under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, it will not be long before you make the discovery.

The Israelites could not always go on in this way, so they began to struggle, and pray, and cry, and ask what was to be done next. Then God raises up a deliverer. God will always have a deliverer ready, if we are anxious to be delivered. Deborah arises, and there is war in the gates. It is a hard thing to control an army if you have not a sword or a spear. I am afraid there are a good many congregations of which the same could be said. You ask a Christian where his sword is, and he feels in his pocket—he does not carry it about with him. It is hanging on the shelf, rusty, and he cannot use it. You do not know how to lead a poor sinner to heaven; you are all at sea. The result is, you do not know how to use your armour if you had it; many have lost it altogether. The first step towards victory is to feel our bondage; the second is to get our armour on. Blessed be God, there is armour for us! I do not know where the Israelites got their armour, whether they borrowed it, or stole it, or bought it; but we need have no difficulty about it. This book (the Bible) is the great storehouse of armour. The great God himself is our Armourer.

Then there begins to be a struggle. The people begin to show themselves in their true colours. In times of backsliding and coldness, you can hardly tell one Christian from another; but when the Spirit of God begins to work, you very soon find out who is on the right side, and who is on the wrong. There will always be middle-men, just as there were in this contest. "In the divisions of Reuben there were great searchings of heart." Reuben was a powerful tribe, and, as you know, lived on the other side of Jordan. They were tolerably safe there, and very rich in herds and flocks. And I have no doubt Reuben reasoned in this way: "Sisera has done us no harm, and there is no particular fear that he will come across the water and take us. If we share the fortunes of our brethren, and we are beaten over yonder, the victorious hosts of the Canaanites will sweep across, and carry us into captivity. The best thing we can do is, to stand quietly by, and watch the result. Our best policy is not to meddle in the matter. Then we have got our sheep to look after." Sometimes, no doubt, nobler impulses would rise within their minds, and they would feel, "We must go and join our countrymen;" and then, just as the nobler impulses rise, there was the sound of the bleating of their flocks. They begin to listen, and there is danger. "Perhaps we shall lose all our cattle; we shall be stripped of our possessions. We would like to go over, but we dare not risk it."

Are there no sons of Reuben here? Their life has been summed up in the terrible description, "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel." Sometimes all on fire, sometimes cold and faint. Oh ye sons of Reuben, why abide ye among the sheepfolds to hear the bleatings of the flock?

My dear friends, if we are going to fight the Lord's battle, and win the victory, we must put all compromises aside, and all worldly expediency. Let us have loss where the Master had loss. The Master trod the path of suffering. Let men point the finger at us and say we are carrying the thing too far. I tell you, there never was a Christian yet who carried the thing too far in the right direction. If men go off at a tangent into byways of their own, they can soon go too far. But let us have the will of God revealed to us, and we cannot go too far into the will of God; you cannot plunge too deeply into the counsels of the Most High; you cannot go amiss if you are filled with the Spirit of God. "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." When wine gets into a man, it takes full possession of him, and he is not his own master. So when the Spirit of God gets into a man's soul, it takes possession of all his faculties, in working out his own blessed purposes, and glorifying divine power.

Oh ye sons of Reuben, it is miserable work this, halting between two opinions. These men are not at all happy. The men of Naphtali and Zebulun, who jeopardized their lives unto death in the high places of the field, were as happy as if they were going to their bridal. Their hearts were cheered by the bright hope of coming victory. If any of you want to be miserable, if you want a recipe for misery, I can give it to you. BE A HALF-AND-HALF CHRISTIAN. It is the surest recipe I know! If a man gets right into the world, he gets a poor, painted bauble, that will break by-and-by, but has a sort of joy. If a man goes in for Christ, he gets true pleasure. But if a man tries to have the bauble and Christ too, he will most certainly fall to the ground between the two.

Let us go a step lower. "Why did Dan abide in ships?" Dan would have said he was far too busy to think about it; he had his ships to look after. He was occupied with half the commerce of the Mediterranean. He had a thriving trade. And Asher, why should he trouble himself about the matter? He dwelt in creeks—the word breaches is so rendered in the margin. He had only to build a good stout wall, and he was safe from the Midianites. He had the sea before him. He had his ships and his merchandise, and could do a thriving trade, though Israel were on the point of starvation.

Here, in Asher, we have your business-loving Christian, and in Dan your selfish Christian. We have got these specimens in the nineteenth century. I wish they were fossils, and that we could only find them by digging through the solid earth, to have them put in some museum. But there are only too many living specimens. Now, our dear brother Moody has been sent from America, as we believe, and God has been using him. What part are you taking in the matter? "Oh, well, I have read the accounts in the newspapers. I am a merchant, and I have a great deal to do." Yes, my busy friend, "Why did Dan abide in ships?" God asks that question. The day is coming when a more inexorable voice than mine will ask the question. There was work to be done. There was a glorious deed to be achieved, a glorious crown to be won. But Dan abode in ships; he was too busy to fight for his country. Are you too busy to fight the battles of your Lord? What a mercy He was not too busy to fight our battle. I suppose He had plenty of business to do when He was making the worlds up yonder, "For by Him were all things made that were made." Yet in the midst of the sublime counsels of eternity, He looked down upon this poor world falling to ruin. He saw men and women hurrying down towards everlasting perdition. His heart was full of love, and He made it his business to come into the cradle at Bethlehem, to walk along the lanes of Palestine, scattering his gifts of mercy broadcast; to go to dark Gethsemane and wrestle there for poor sinking humanity until the blood drops stood on his brow, to hang on the cross (while the heavens bowed at the awful wickedness) until He could speak of a finished business. "It is finished!" and He bowed his head and gave up the ghost.

My friend, your business is only worth having so far as it bears on eternity. If it has no bearing on eternity, you had better stop it. Put up your shutters and go to the workhouse, or go to the street and starve, if your business leads you to surround yourself with the concerns of time, and leaves you no time for the concerns of eternity. If that is your business, it will take you to hell, whatever your professions are.

Let me say a word or two to any selfish Christian. You think you are safe enough yourself, and you really do not see why you should take trouble about other people. It is not your vocation. It is all very well for Mr. Moody, and of course you admire him for it, but really—. Well, what are you doing? "Oh well, I have not got many opportunities." I do not ask what opportunities you have. What are you doing? "But I have so few talents." What are you doing with the one you have got? Have you buried it? Are you saying to the Lord, "If Thou hadst given me ten talents, I would have tried to do something with them; but since thou hast given me only one, I do not intend to do anything?" Oh selfish Christian! Selfish Christian? Is not that a logical contradiction? If a man is selfish, is he a Christian? If he is a Christian, can he be selfish? A selfish follower of an unselfish Jesus! The thing is outrageous. Oh Asher, the battering-rams will bring down your walls. All that ye trust in will end in disappointment, unless you come out to the help of the people of Israel.

But, say some, it would not be expedient. That is the spirit of Reuben again. I remember dear Duncan Matheson saying in a meeting of evangelists, "There are just two p's, and ye maun choose atween them; ye maun choose atween p for policy, and p for power; ye canna hae them both." The man who is really going to have God's power is the man who trusts God's policy. If we put ourselves into his hand and go right, even if it be through a brick wall, He will break it down before us. He is bound to vindicate his own word.

One step lower. One little place comes in for a terrible message. "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Why was Meroz to be accursed? Did they do worse than Dan or Asher? Just the same thing. The men of Meroz most probably said, as those of whom we have been speaking, We have got such little power; we are only a tiny city. We are so weak, and we may just bring down the wrath of Sisera upon our heads. Yet there comes this tremendous curse. Have any of you ever taken the trouble to ask why Meroz was so bitterly cursed? It seems probable that the answer lies in this. The little town was situated just over the battlefield, on the hill side, that gazed down into the valley, where Sisera's iron chariots came down. The men of Meroz were on the hill side; they could see their neighbours going forth panting to the fray, and they could see the battle waging down there, now for Israel, and now for Midian, while they stood on their walls calmly admiring the spectacle, as if from the box of an opera house.

There are many Christians just like them. And this is a solemn lesson to those Christians who have great opportunities. I suppose Meroz never had such an opportunity before or afterwards. In a Scotch war a certain victory was decided by a little band of haymakers. They saw the Scotch and the English joining battle. All of a sudden they raised a great shout, took their pitchforks, and dashed right down on the flanks of the enemy. The English, thinking they were armed with spears, cried out, "Here are reinforcements!" Panic took hold of the host, and the victory was gained by a few pitchforks.

Now the Christian people in the South of London have got a splendid opportunity. There has been a good deal said about London being stirred. It would be an exaggeration, perhaps, to say that the whole city has been stirred, but it would be no exaggeration to say there has been a stir in the whole city. Now the last month of our dear brethren has come, and we want it to be their best month. May God Almighty grant it! But we must look to the Christians. You are in the position of Meroz; you have got strength, if you only know how to use it, and God looks for you to "come to the help of the Lord against the mighty." There is a battle going to be fought here. You Christians do not come here to enjoy yourselves. I do not say but you will have enjoyment, but that is not your object. I always feel that I am going to a battle-field when I go to a Mission service. I should like very much to go to some such Convention as that at Brighton, and enjoy myself; but when I go to Mission work, I go to fight; and you have all got your part in the battle. You may be like Aaron and Hur; prayer may be your work. You may bring others to the meeting, your friends and relatives, or those in your neighbourhood. You can scatter everywhere you go the blessed tale of God's love, and lead people to the conviction that a work of the Holy Ghost is going on here.

Then you will have your share in the triumph. The men of Meroz, I daresay, could have decided the battle at any moment. If they had gone down at some critical moment they could have turned the fight. At any rate they had the opportunity of doing it, and there, no doubt, was Barak, anxiously watching to see what they would do. But he watched in vain. Deborah's eagle eye, too, watches for some encouraging sign, but she waits in vain. By-and-by the battle is won, and Sisera is lying dead in Jael's tent. I daresay the men of Meroz would come out and make their very best bow to Deborah and Barak then. "We present our most humble congratulations to you on the victory achieved." And there are plenty of Christians who can do that. When success is gained they see it then; very strange they never saw it before. Deborah cursed them before them all. They lost their chance; my brethren, do not lose yours.

Turn to the other side. What have we got here? "Out of Ephraim there was a root of them against Amalek." What a shame! Ephraim was one of the most mighty tribes, yet there was but "a root of them." People say they have got "the root of the matter" in them. But what is the use of having roots if they don't sprout? See to it that the root brings forth its branches, its leaves, and its fruits. God will not be satisfied with the root only. I do not want to discourage you. If you are rooted in hatred of the powers of darkness, and rooted in the love of the Lord Jesus Christ, God be thanked for it, but it must be something more than root. Do not flatter yourselves that you are all right, if you have only got the root, since you have got such great opportunities.

"Out of Machir came down governors, and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer." I want to say a word or two about them. If Barak had not had them, he never could have put his army in order. Do not think of anything you undertake as secular, if it is undertaken for God's glory. It may be only keeping the accounts, or acting as a steward, or being a door-keeper. The humblest post that is really taken for the Lord, depend upon it, He will accept it. The Lord hath need of such work as that.

I do not say that you are to be satisfied with it. "Covet earnestly the best gifts." But whatever you do is not thrown away. "Nothing is small," a friend of mine said, "that you put God into."

A few words about Barak; and first, some things not to his credit. He gets hold of Deborah, and says, "If thou wilt go with me, then I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go." Think of him getting behind the skirts of a woman! He ought to have said, "I do not care who goes, I will go." That is the kind of faith we want. There are many Christians like Barak; they get behind somebody else. "If so-and-so will undertake the work, I have no objection to help them." It is a good thing to have a walking-stick; but a far better thing to be able to do without it. Try and use your crutch in such a style as to be able to walk all the better when you have laid it down. But best of all try to get the strength that other people have. It comes from the same source as that from which you may draw yours.

But Barak, afterwards, made great amends. He was sent on foot into the valley. He got as much as he bargained for when he took Deborah with him. I daresay if the prophetess had not been there he would have been disposed to get out of the valley wherever he went to. It was a terrible thing to face those 900 iron chariots on foot, and if Deborah had not been there, Barak would have been asking how he could outflank them. But Deborah sends him. He was sent, and he had the grace of God to go. It is a grand thing to be sent, but a better thing to go. And he goes on foot. But he has received his orders, and off he goes. What do we read? The stars in their courses are fighting for him. He never thought he would have such allies as those. God had got better allies for him than the men of Meroz. They did not know what it was that made their horses plunge and upset one chariot on the top of another, until the vast torrent of iron was piled up, and the course of the tide was stayed. Instead of victory came defeat, instead of power came weakness, and instead of glory shame. Don't be afraid of going on foot through the valley. We go on making a toil of what ought to be a pleasure. If we put ourselves into Christ's hands He will lead us on to victory.

Christians of South London, be up and doing. Put yourselves in Jesus' hands. Be as arrows in the hand of a giant. Prove yourselves children of the Most High. Let your energy, your self-devotion, your complete abandonment of yourselves to Him be Christ's triumphant answer to his enemies. May God bless you all.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES AT BOW-ROAD HALL.

On Saturday, June 5th, there were between 9000 and 10,000 children present, and Major Cole again conducted the service, assisted by other friends. Over 2000 boys were from nine to fourteen years of age, filling entirely the centre block of the chairs, the side blocks being filled with the girls and young boys.

The subject was "Daniel," and at the close each child was presented with a "Daniel's Band card." These services have become very popular amongst the children, and much good has been done in making these children missionaries to their parents. What a blessing to East London if only one in ten adopt the principles commended on the card, accepting of Christ, and abstaining from intoxicating liquors, tobacco, and other bad habits.

Major Cole said good-bye to each child, but the interest has been so great it has been decided to continue them for another month.

THOMAS RICHARDSON,
Vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney.

PASTOR MONOD AT THE BOW-ROAD HALL.

It having been decided to continue the services in Bow-road Hall, Mr. Moody announced at his closing services on Tuesday, June 8th, that Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, would preach the three following nights.

Accordingly, although there was no time to issue special notices, a fair number gathered on Wednesday evening, when the text was Prov. xxx. 20, "I have done no wickedness." It was, from its fruits, of a most searching character. One person in the hall, when addressed, said "he would come no more, as evidently someone had been speaking to the preacher about him," and another worker on the following night returned with the testimony that the subject of the preceding night had been with "burning effect." Certainly it was followed on Thursday with a doubled congregation, when Pastor Monod took the text, 2 Cor. v. 21, "He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin;" and again on Friday evening the subject was, "I am the way," John xiv. 6, when the audience was still larger, and manifested a deep interest.

Every night there were anxious souls gathered in.

VICTORIA THEATRE.

The work is going on here steadily, and with most encouraging results, under the direction of Major Cole, of Chicago. In consequence of the opening of Camberwell-green Hall, the choir and most of the workers who had previously supported him were withdrawn to the new sphere of labour; but Major Cole sees in this fact only an additional reason for more energetic effort on his own part, and more complete trust in God, who can work by many or by few. The service on Sunday evening last was the most largely attended of any, and many tokens of the Divine presence and power were vouchsafed. At the close of the general meeting the stage was filled with inquirers and workers, and several very hopeful conversions resulted. We hope next week to give some of the most striking incidents of Major Cole's work at the theatre, and we would bespeak the believing prayers of our readers for him, labouring, as he is, almost single-handed, in this dark and sin-stained district of our city.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING VICTORIA THEATRE.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's daily noon prayer-meeting was this day transferred to the Victoria Theatre, where it will be held during the remainder of their stay in London. There was a very gratifying attendance.

Mr. T. A. Denny read the requests, amongst which were many notes of praise for blessing vouchsafed at Camberwell yesterday.

Mr. Moody read the 23rd Psalm, and expatiated on the fulness of blessing to be found in Christ as our shepherd. The love of the Good Shepherd towards lost sinners was set forth by Mr. Sankey in his exquisite hymn, "The Ninety-and-nine."

Mr. Hastings shortly addressed any wandering sheep in the audience, inviting them to come back to the Saviour's bosom.

Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Glasgow, said seventy persons in his congregation had been brought to Christ during Mr. Moody's visit, and the Christian life of the community generally was very much elevated and deepened. The good work was still going on there.

Major Cole told of a wandering sheep from Glasgow, who had broken his arm near Victoria Theatre, and coming into the meeting had found Christ. He gave other very touching incidents in connection with the work in the theatre, and asked for prayer.

EDINBURGH ROYAL ASYLUM AND THE REVIVAL MOVEMENT.

Sir,—Will you be so good as to find a place in THE CHRISTIAN for the following letter, which appeared in the Daily Review? It is fitting that the true character of a statement, widely circulated, as to the increase of cases of melancholia during the past year in the Edinburgh Royal Asylum, should be given, with no uncertain sound, in England, as has already been done in Scotland.—I am, etc.,

W. D.

Sir,—Absence from home and the pressure of more urgent duties have prevented me noticing at an earlier date the letter signed "J. P. C.," which appeared in the Daily Review, of the 15th inst. That letter gave an extract from the British Medical Journal, in reference to the increase in the number of cases of melancholia during last year in the Royal Edinburgh Asylum. The writer of the article referred to by your correspondent draws the inference that this increase is to be ascribed to the extensive religious revival here. As I have the best reason to know, the facts of the case warrant no such inference, and if the writer in the British Medical Journal had taken the trouble to make the necessary inquiries he would have learned that the idea of there being any connection between the revival and the number of cases in the asylum never occurred to our excellent medical superintendent. In conversation, too, with the chaplain, he mentioned to me that, so far as he knew, he was not aware of any case directly resulting from the religious awakening here. All who are acquainted with the management of asylums know that they sensitively reflect on their surface every important incident in public life, down even to such events as the Tichborne case. It is stated by those best able to judge that about three thousand persons in Edinburgh profess to have become new creatures in Christ Jesus during the time of awakening. When we consider what that change is and involves, it would be strange indeed if such an event was not reflected on the surface of an asylum containing 750 patients. But, granting this, I am in a position to state that those directly concerned in the management of the asylum did not consider that there was any appreciable influence on the institution in the way of increasing the number of patients. The inference drawn, therefore, by the anonymous writer in the Medical Journal was not warranted by the facts of the case.—I am, etc.,

DAVID DICKSON,

Chairman of the Managers of the Edinburgh Royal Asylum.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who, we very much regret, has been laid aside by illness for five weeks past, has now sufficiently recovered to be able to return to London, and partly resume his superintendence of the house-to-house visitation. He wishes specially to meet as many of the superintendents and visitors as can possibly attend at the prayer-meeting, to be held at 48, Great Marlborough-street, W., next Saturday evening, at eight o'clock. It is much to be desired that the visitation work should be vigorously carried on, and, if possible, brought to a close before Messrs. Moody and Sankey leave London. At present there are about 460 districts in which the visitation is going on. Some 66 districts have yet to be taken up, in order to complete the visitation of London proper. Of these, about half are in the South of London, and adjacent to the Victoria Theatre, where the noon meeting is now held; the others lie a good deal in the East-end; in the North there remains but one district to be taken up.

Will our friends who have not taken a part in this work, permit us to impress upon them the necessity of coming to the help of Mr. Radcliffe and his coadjutors, so that the South and East may not lack the needed service for house-to-house visitation? The blessing that has followed this work in the South hitherto has been something wonderful; quite a large number of conversions have been the undoubted result, and the reception of the visitors has been all that could be desired. We earnestly trust that Mr. Radcliffe, in his season of bodily weakness, will speedily have the gratification of seeing all the outstanding districts taken up, and that this work, to which he has devoted so much of his time and energy, may be carried to a successful termination.

EPHING FOREST.—A correspondent points out the wide field for evangelistic effort that presents itself at this season of the year among the thousands who pass by road to and from Epping Forest on the Lord's-day.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS.—These evangelists are now holding very successful meetings at Memphis, Tennessee. The Greenlow Opera House was so crowded, that the services were removed to the Exposition Building. Mr. Bliss conducts the singing in a most happy and persuasive way, assisted by his wife. The evangelists are warmly supported by the presence and prayers of the ministers and members of the various churches in the city.

PROPOSED MISSION TO THE CABMEN OF NORTH LONDON.—Owing to the near approach of the Mildmay Conference, and the workers' recess which follows, it has been thought better to defer the intended cabmen's tea until later in the season. The various Missions connected with the hall will then have resumed work, and arrangements could be made for commencing the religious services for cabmen proposed in our circular. We heartily thank the kind friends who have sent us funds sufficient to defray the expenses of the supper, and to procure a good lending library for the Mission. Something will remain in hand towards the purchase of the Dalston "Shelter," but not enough to warrant our giving orders for its erection. We are anxious to do this at once. Will not our Christian friends place the means at our disposal? E. A. G.

"OUT OF DARKNESS INTO LIGHT."

Brethren,—I assume, from the name of your paper, and from your known reputation as Christian men, that you do not wish, either editorially, or through your correspondents, to misrepresent any individual. In view of these facts, I may safely conclude that you will allow your readers to weigh the following corrections of statements made in your notice of my late work entitled, "Out of Darkness into Light."

You say, for example, comparing me with other advocates of the "higher life," "He is a much more avowed opponent of the theology of the churches on this subject, and boldly claims 'perfection,' refusing to give way to the prejudice which would avoid the use of the term." Now you will search in vain for a single statement in this book which, in the remotest form, justifies the assertion that I "boldly claim 'perfection.'" I nowhere make any approach to the setting up of such a personal claim. On the other hand, I most carefully guard the reader against the idea that I set up such a claim. The following are the only statements I do make bearing at all upon the subject:—"No question like this ever arose among us, namely, What shall we call this state to which we have attained?"

Again, "If I am asked, 'Do you, as Paul did, serve God with a pure conscience?' I answer, as Paul did, 'Yes.' 'But do you never commit a sin?' I answer such a question in the words of Paul, 'I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but He that judgeth me is God.'" There the reader has every word I utter about my personal relations to "perfection." Where is the basis for the affirmation that I "boldly claim 'perfection'?" Can any one more carefully guard against the idea that he sets up such a claim? God forbid that I should ever affirm that God never sees a sin in me. This, and this only, I do affirm, that, by divine grace, I do "serve God with a pure conscience."

In regard to any prejudice which may exist against the use of the term "perfection," and other kindred terms, I repeat what I have written in that book, that, to such a prejudice, "I give place, by subjection, no, not for an hour." There is hardly an important word that can be named that is of more frequent use in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, or has a more fundamental and fixed place among "the words which the Holy Ghost teaches," than have these. The truth of this statement none will deny. The fixed law of my utterance, as a teacher of God's revealed truth, is to "speak the things (truths) of the Spirit of God," "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." The religious teacher that is afraid or ashamed to say to his people, "Be perfect," "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," "Let us, as many as be perfect, be thus minded," and "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing," has, in my solemn judgment, good reason to repent in deep humiliation before God. Either his theology or his "heart is not right in the sight of God." The manifest duty of all teachers of divine truth, and believers in Jesus, is to carefully determine the meaning of these words, as employed with such obvious frequency by our Saviour and his inspired apostles, and then teach the great truths represented by such words, "in the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth."

You say that my "view of the seventh of Romans is, for instance, different from that of Mr. E. Pearsall Smith." In reply, I must say that I most fully and heartily endorse all that such writers as Messrs. Smith, Boardman, and Evan Hopkins say on this subject. The only difference that does obtain between us is this: I suppose that Paul here describes a legal distinction from a faith experience, in its strictly universal form; while they seem to suppose that the apostle sets forth the same distinction in reference to a particular and specific case. My view includes theirs, and endorses it as of infinite importance, but simply extends further than theirs. I maintain that Paul intentionally includes all that they affirm, but takes a wider range than they appear to suppose. I suppose that Paul intends to describe the experience of every person, whether he is a Christian or not, who "seeks righteousness, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law." They suppose that his exclusive design is to describe the experience of a believer, who ceases to "walk by faith," and "seeks righteousness" in accordance with the legal method. I suppose that while Paul intended, and this was his main intent, to be understood as including the Christian in his representation, he also intended to teach that every person, whether a Christian or not, who "seeks righteousness, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law," will remain "carnal, sold under sin," and will utterly fail in all his purposes of obedience. I take this view, because, as shown by such writers as Professor Tholuck, of Germany, and Professor Stuart, of America, the entire primitive church up to the time of Augustine so understood the apostle, and he has ever been so expounded by all the leading commentators on the Continent of Europe. It is in the same universal form, that the Apostle John sets forth the same great truth, namely, "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Christ?"

Again, you say of me, "In many respects he differs from other teachers of this school," teachers of "the Higher Life."

For more than thirty years I have been in very intimate association with these very teachers, and they have never found the difference to which you refer. No person can be on terms of more perfect confidence than I am with all such teachers. Neither in our writings, nor in our public teachings, do any differences appear which we, or the public, deem essential.

I will notice but one other statement in regard to my teachings. "God's order in the attainment of holiness," you say, "would seem to be, first, to show the believer his standing in Christ, tell him to appropriate it by faith, 'reckon yourselves,' etc.; and then, as a consequence, 'Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body.'" This, however, Dr. Mahan reverses. If "filled with the Holy Ghost, and with the power of Christ resting upon him," he may with all assurance reckon himself dead," etc.

If the reader will turn to the chapter entitled, "The true and proper food for the lambs of the flock," he will find the identical "order" clearly laid down, the order which you say "Dr. Mahan reverses." When the convert has become conscious of the forgiveness of sin, and has learned God's method of justification, I add, "What he now needs to be taught most fully is, his relations to Christ in the whole matter of sanctification, as well as justification." The next turn in respect to which, as I state, he needs to be taught is, "God's exceeding great and precious promises." Next to them, I add, in another and succeeding paragraph, that "the convert should be most fully taught, in respect to his relations to Christ as the Son of God, who baptizes with the Holy Ghost." Will you say that such teachings are not in accordance with "God's order in the attainment of holiness"? The "order" which I teach in this volume, and everywhere else, is absolutely identical with that which you have laid down, with this difference, that you omitted, unintentionally no doubt, all reference to the believer's relations "in the attainment of holiness" to the Holy Spirit, a very essential omission, as you will readily admit. You certainly cannot, as you seem to do, intend to impute error to me in teaching the believer that "if filled with the Holy Ghost," and with "the power of Christ resting upon him," he may "with all assurance reckon himself dead," etc. Can the believer, with any other than a presumptuous assurance, "reckon himself dead," but upon the condition that he is "filled with the Holy Ghost," and "the power of Christ does rest upon him"?

I regret to be constrained to affirm that in no particular are the views set forth in this book correctly represented in the article which has called forth these remarks. Of the book commented on, the conductors of The Pathway of Power, of whom Mr. E. Pearsall Smith is the chief, thus speak:—"A book is the author's life-blood, laid up for a purpose beyond time. Milton's estimate of the value of a book applies with especial force to one which portrays the inward life, for half a century, of one whose profession it has been to learn and teach the analysis of mental and spiritual conditions, and whose walk before the world has been the exemplification of the faith he has taught. Our brief extracts are better than any commendations. They will, we hope, lead many to read the book prayerfully for themselves."—Yours most respectfully,
ASA MAHAN.

[On receipt of Dr. Mahan's book for review, it was sent to a gentleman who is a calm, moderate, and scholarly Christian minister, well instructed in the Scripture, and whom we consider well qualified to give a candid and unprejudiced opinion. We have submitted to him the above letter of Dr. Mahan, whom, let us say, we regard with the sincerest Christian respect, and of whom one well acquainted with him, though he differs from his views, says that he is the holiest man he knows. Our reviewer makes the following reply to Dr. Mahan's letter. We must now leave it to our readers to form their own judgment in the matter.—Ed.]

I am truly sorry that Dr. Mahan thinks that he has been misrepresented. I can honestly say that nothing was further from my intention. I thought when I read his book, and I think still, that his language fairly justifies one in ascribing to him a claim to perfection—not absolute, I did not use that term—but such perfection as is commonly understood by the expression, "sinless perfection." With his disclaimer of absolute perfection now before me, I should call it, "conscious perfection," and that he does claim this is clear from his quoting the words of the Apostle Paul, "I know nothing by myself," as his own answer to the question, "Do you never commit a sin?" Such an answer plainly means, "I am not conscious to myself of committing any." If this be not conscious perfection, it is hard to say what is.

If the Apostle Paul had given such an answer to the question, "Do you never commit a sin?" it would surely be fair to say that he claimed sinless perfection. The passage, however, 1 Cor. iv. 4, from which Dr. Mahan quotes, contains no such question, and it is evident from the context that the Apostle was dealing with certain definite charges of ministerial unfaithfulness brought against him, which he could with a good conscience deny; of such he could say, "I know nothing by myself," or, as Dean Alford renders it, "I am conscious to myself of no official delinquency." Of sinlessness in the abstract he is not here speaking.

The other points on which Dr. Mahan dwells hardly call for notice, for he virtually admits (1) that he does differ from Mr.

R. P. Smith and others as to the interpretation of Rom. vii.; and (2) he admits differences (though deeming them unessential) from other teachers of that school; and (3) he shows that while in other parts of his book he may follow "God's order in the attainment of holiness," he nevertheless reverses it in his exposition of Rom. vi. 11. "Can the believer," he says, "with any other than a presumptuous assurance, reckon himself dead," but upon the condition that he is "filled with the Holy Ghost," and "the power of Christ does rest upon him?" to which I reply, the command, "Reckon yourselves dead indeed to sin," is addressed not to advanced believers, nor to those "filled with the Holy Ghost," but to all believers as such, to the very youngest babe in Christ's flock. If Dr. Mahan puts in, "upon the condition that," God's Word knows of no such condition. Rom. vi. is baptismal teaching for the youngest convert, and knows nothing of a higher stage as a condition for its fulfilment. It is because Dr. Mahan insists upon this condition that he fairly lays himself open to the charge of reversing God's order in his exposition at least of this chapter.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE BEATITUDES OF THE KINGDOM. THE LAWS OF THE KINGDOM. THE RELATIONS OF THE KINGDOM. By J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D. Nisbet.—These three little books constitute a valuable treatise on the Sermon on the Mount. The occasion of that memorable discourse of our blessed Lord is so vividly presented to the mind in the first of these volumes that we must find room for an extract. After describing how a number of doctors of the law and Pharisees "sent, most probably, by the ruling party in Jerusalem," had followed Jesus into Galilee, "to watch Him and to concert with the local Pharisees against Him, in order to counter-work and damage his influence among the people." "In those days," it was as Luke emphatically notes, just on the back of a coalition of enemies so formidable; when Jewish enmity had broken into Galilee, to poison its more honest population, and, as He foresaw, to alienate the people from his side, when by so much the cross was drawing nearer, and his own public teaching growing hazardous, then it came to pass that He chose the twelve. This measure was, so to speak, his answer to the enemy, the revenge of his love. As they have advanced a step, so will He. They strengthen themselves with allies, so will He; and the more men seek to crush out the kingdom of God in its very birth, the more will his divine grace provide for its maintenance and propagation. Yes, Him they may destroy; but in his room there shall be twelve, and from the twelve how many more? Up till this, it can hardly be said the kingdom of God was set up. True, He had spoken a great deal about his Messiahship and his kingdom; but He preached, like John, a kingdom to come. He had drawn a number of followers to believe in Him, and had even called a few of them to leave their trades, and be his constant attendants; but there was as yet neither office, nor organisation, nor authority: in a word, no kingdom. Preaching there was, not rule; words which might alarm ecclesiastical officials indeed, but no overt act of which the law could take notice; the prophet's part played, not the king's. Now there is an end to this. He takes exceeding solemn and marked action. He selects a band of special ministers, equal in number to the tribes of the Hebrew kingdom. He invests them with office, not to preach simply, but to rule, under Him, the kingdom of God. To that end He binds them to his person as Chief or King. He formally commissions them with supernatural powers as their official equipment; and through them He promulgates in legislative accents the constitutional principles of the kingdom. At the hour of his widest popularity, yet at a crisis of gathering peril, in face of the people and the adversary together, He virtually sets up his kingdom, arrogates kingly rights, and, for the first time, commits Himself to the consequences of his claims to be God's Christ. It was a moment of decision. It was a policy of safety, because a policy of boldness. It was an act of calm, foresighted courage, full in its simplicity of the moral sublime." We had intended, had space permitted, commending strongly these thoughtful and interesting volumes to our readers' attention. Let the above extract, however, be taken as a specimen of the author's style and manner of treating his subject.

OUR SAILORS IN FOREIGN PORTS.—A correspondent, writing from Hamburg, says:—"A new institute is needed, to meet the wants of our sailors who frequent this port. The large number of sailors who avail themselves of the privileges afforded shows how thoroughly they appreciate it. The meetings are largely attended that the Bethel room, on Sunday evening, is invariably crowded to excess. The increased accommodation recently provided is still quite inadequate to meet the wants of the increasing numbers who desire to attend. The work from the first has been signally successful, under the superintendence of Mr. Hitchens, who has laboured most arduously amongst the sailors, and has gained the esteem of nearly all who come to this port. A larger institute has become an imperative necessity, if our sailors are to be rescued from the evil influences abounding in Hamburg. 'Come over and help us.'"

A SPECIAL NUMBER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

The Young Men's Numbers of THE CHRISTIAN have excited so much interest, that it has been proposed to issue one shortly for young women. Will those engaged in any special work kindly send a short account of how they began, and what they have found the most successful plan, with any suggestions that might aid others in commencing a similar work, to C. H., Stoke House, Stoke Newington, N., before the 26th inst.

MISSIONS IN NEED.

Among the various Missions requiring aid at the present time, we must mention those of Mrs. Meredith—the Prison Mission and the Village Homes at Addlestone. We have reason to know that these invaluable institutions are at present in pressing need, which we trust will be liberally supplied. Also the needs of the East-end Mission, under the superintendence of Rev. W. Booth, are equally urgent. The same is true of almost every other Mission in London. Edward Wright asks help for the opening of a new tent.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

For the present the special services in connection with Moody and Sankey's meetings have been brought to a close. They have been continued for three weeks, and have led to the salvation of a goodly number of souls. The preachers have been Archibald G. Brown, Finlay Gibson, William Stott, John Wanamaker, and W. B. Culliss. Last Sunday a new feature was added, viz., a meeting for Christian workers, at eight o'clock in the morning. About 800 attended, and the word the Lord gave to his servant, Mark Guy Pearce, was full of interest and power. His subject was the familiar one of Philip and the eunuch (Acts viii.), from which he showed that the true secret of successful labour was prompt obedience; and that if the Lord's servants have the Lord's direction, they would never labour in vain. So good was it to be there that another meeting will be held at the same hour next Sunday morning. Not the least remarkable feature of this memorable meeting was that two brethren who have recently had desert experiences were selected to offer the opening and the closing prayers. These were J. Hudson Taylor and Joseph Samme, both of whom have been laid aside, and are now by God's good mercy, being restored to health and strength again.

ROYAL HOSPITAL, CHELSEA.—A gentleman and his sister, working amongst the inmates of the Royal Hospital for disabled soldiers, which accommodates about 500 men, are anxious to give them a tea, and would be glad of help for that purpose. The special object of the tea is to reach the new men, who have entered since the beginning of the year, owing to an unusual number of deaths. Address, E. Harry Edwards, 19, Pelham-place, South Kensington.

MISS LEE'S HOME FOR DESTITUTE LITTLE GIRLS:—A Bazaar was held in the garden of the above institution on Wednesday and Thursday, 26th and 27th ult. A tent had been erected, and well filled with articles, useful and ornamental. The bazaar realized about £70. There are nearly fifty children in the Home, which is at present barely furnished, nearly all the subscriptions being swallowed up in providing food, clothing, rent, coals, and other necessaries.

LA SPEZIA.—An American ship of war having been stationed in the Gulf of Spezia for a long time, Mr. Clarke, previous to its departure, gave a tea to some of the more thoughtful of the men of the ship "Alaska." After a devotional service, a suitable and earnest address was delivered by the minister above-named, urging the men to seek immediate salvation in Jesus Christ. A young official, who has been led, by God's blessing on Mr. Clarke's teaching to find peace, is now entertaining the idea of an entire consecration of himself to Christ as a minister of the gospel. Another pleasing circumstance was the opening of one of the rooms in Albert House as a sailors' reading-room, which now contains a small library, the gift of the Religious Tract Society. Her gracious Majesty the Queen has also contributed to the same; and as it is desirable to enlarge this library, contributions of books appropriate would be very acceptable, with the addition of a first-rate atlas.

WHAT I SAW AT ILFORD.

BY MRS. H. G. GUINNESS.

The Ilford station of the Great Eastern Railway presented an unusually animated appearance on Wednesday, June 9th, when five or six hundred of the friends and well-wishers of the East-end Juvenile Mission passed through it, en route to Mossford Lodge, Barkingside (Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo's Home for destitute girls), where an interesting ceremony was expected.

The occasion of the gathering was the ceremony of laying the foundation stones of ten of the cottages of the new Village Home for destitute girls, which Dr. Barnardo is building in the immediate vicinity of the present Home. After earnest prayer by the Rev. T. G. Driffeld, of Bow, this ceremony was performed by the Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, at each of the ten cottages in succession, as well as at the Chapel.

We have no question that in years to come the young Christian Earl who officiated on Wednesday will feel it an honour to have taken so important a part in the initiatory stage of what will, we hope, prove a great and good undertaking.

A substantial lunch had been prepared in a large tent pitched for the occasion in the park; the sixty or seventy girls, who are already inmates of the Home, were seated on a gallery at one end, and sang sweetly during the repast. They were neatly and prettily attired, in uniform, but not ugly or unusual, costume; the look of health and happiness was unmistakable, and not less remarkable was the increase of intelligence which we traced in some of the faces.

In a short address, Lord Aberdeen alluded to the terrible world of meaning included in the word "homeless," and to the wealth of various blessings implied in having a home, especially to girls. He expressed much sympathy with the work.

Dr. Barnardo subsequently gave a sketch of the history and plan of the Village Home that day being founded. His labours among boys had often brought before his notice cases of destitution among girls which he had longed to relieve. There is, in fact, even more need for efforts of this kind for them than for the boys. Girls are numerically in excess of boys, and destitution and neglect involve to them consequences more terribly serious.

This place, Mossford, had been given to him by a friend, with a view to his residing there, and establishing a Home for girls, as he had done. But, after fair trial, he had found that weighty objections exist against training girls in large numbers together, and he had been led earnestly to desire to try the family system. The family is God's institution; it is his plan for the training of children, nor can there be any question that it is the best where it can be carried out. While considering this question, Dr. Barnardo heard that five and a-half acres of land, immediately contiguous to the Mossford property, were to be sold. He resolved to try and obtain this ground, with a view to building cottages on it, in each of which eighteen or twenty girls might be received, and brought up under a "mother" as her own family. A few friends promised the money, and he bought the land, which is freehold. It was not enough, however, to carry out his scheme of making provision for 600 girls. Two and a-half acres more were subsequently obtained, immediately adjoining, making in all about nine acres, which have been secured in perpetuity for the objects of the charity. The ground was marked out with poles and flags on Wednesday last. It is oblong in shape, and the cottages, called, with two exceptions, after the wild flowers, are to be semi-detached, each with a small garden, and will be arranged round the outer edge, leaving a large open space in the centre. There will be one school, one laundry, one infirmary, and one chapel, to seat about 800, i.e., the future inhabitants of the village, and others who may wish to attend. In addition to these, there will also be a school for teaching cookery, where girls designed for cooks will get instruction, and a certificate of competency before leaving from a proper teacher from South Kensington.

Dr. Barnardo mentioned the way in which some of the cottages had come to him since he made known his purposed extension. Each is to cost £450. One—the first—had been given to him at the Oxford Conference by a gentleman, in memory of a dear daughter. The second was the gift of an invalid lady, who, in giving it, gave nearly all she had. The third came thus. A child playing on the beach near a well-known watering-place observed a lady being drawn about in a Bath-chair, apparently suffering much, and offered her a copy of the "Children's Treasury." The lady read it, and read more, and soon wrote to Dr. Barnardo:—"I have been for many years living to myself. My own maladies have engrossed me. But I am now waking up to a consciousness that the world is full of greater sufferers than myself, and I find it a relief to send you of my plenty for them. I beg to enclose a cheque for £450 for one of your cottages, in the name of the Lord Jesus." Another came as the result of the efforts of a lady living near Clapham who had collected the amount, and another from the undergraduates and citizens of Cambridge, as the result of a lecture delivered there. "These two will be called respectively the "CLAPHAM" and "CAMBRIDGE" cottages. We have not space to give the story of each. Of the chapel, the stone was laid in faith, for the £800 needed to build it are not yet in hand, but we are glad to say Dr. Barnardo has since Wednesday received the £450 for an eleventh cottage, and that it is confidently hoped that ere long there may be an EDINBURGH cottage for the reception of little Scotch lassies.

There are about seventy or eighty girls at present in the Home, which was visited by most of the assembled guests. It was impossible to detect in the happy, healthy, merry children any evidence that the present system is a failure. But they are very young now; it is at a later age that the want of individuality, and the power of self-adaptation to circumstances, becomes a painful defect in girls who have been institutionalized. The class of girls received necessitates their being taken into the Home young, before they are spoiled by adverse influences; and Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo are more anxious to do their work thoroughly and well, than to do it quickly. Some of the dear children whom we saw will have to stay at least ten years in the Home if spared, but the future village at Barkingside will, it is hoped, ultimately send out a considerable supply of first-rate domestic servants, fitted to fill any position, with satisfaction to themselves and their employers.

May God's own smile rest on the effort; may the children be doubly rescued, and each adopted into the family of God! And may the energetic and earnest founders of the Village be able, on the anniversary of this day, not only to open these ten cottages, but to lay the foundations of the other twenty. If any of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN feel now moved to help in this special branch of a most blessed work, we urge them to remember the Divine precept, " whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccles. ix. 10).

I have only to add that the office of the institution, to which all communications should be addressed, is 18 & 20, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

PARIS.—MISS LEIGH'S HOME.—We are happy to be informed that the sum necessary for the alteration of the house is now complete. We are requested to state that any further donations will be applied to the extension of the work and to the maintenance of the Home.

WARDOUR CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, CHAPEL STREET, SOHO.—On Monday evening, June 7, the church and congregation of the above place of worship met to take farewell of their pastor, T. Henry Taylor, who, after a two years' ministry among them, has accepted the invitation of the Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, director of the East-end Training College, to undertake an evangelistic tour of the West Indies, Texas, California, New Zealand, etc. Tea was provided in the school-room, after which the chair was taken by the church treasurer, Mr. G. Britten, who felt much pleasure in recording the fact that since Mr. Taylor's coming among them, the membership had grown from twelve to seventy; they had lost their heavy debt; and the spiritual deadness of two years ago had given place to a good degree of life and working power. Mr. Thornton, after a few kind words, presented Mr. Taylor, in the name of the church, with a handsome pocket Bible. In thanking the friends for this most valuable gift, Mr. Taylor said he well remembered his first visit to Wardour. The audience consisted of two dear old ladies and a chairman. He was asked if he would raise a tune; he tried, and had the privilege of singing a solo. However, from that time the Lord had been with him, and he was now overjoyed to see so many who had been brought to Jesus by the word he had been privileged to minister in their midst. Mr. William Pean, one of the tutors of the East-end Training College, who next spoke, had known Mr. Taylor for some time, and had no doubt of his being fitted to undertake the work on which he had set his heart, and urged those to whom Mr. Taylor had been ministering to look upon his leaving them as a call to them also to arise and work in some way in the Master's vineyard. Other addresses were delivered, and during the evening a small purse of gold was also presented to Mr. Taylor.

THE EAST KENT MILITIA.

The three months' mission amongst the East Kent Militia at Canterbury, is now ended. With profound gratitude to God we review the past. Meetings have been held three times a week for special prayer and gospel addresses. They have been numerously attended; all classes of our citizens have met at the hall, and great numbers of our trained soldiers and still greater numbers of the militia, have heard the glad tidings of salvation.

The numbers attending these meetings have so greatly increased that we have been compelled latterly to hold them in the largest hall in the city, and this room, which holds from six to seven hundred persons, has been repeatedly filled. Great kindness and attention have been paid to the militia during their stay. A substantial tea repast has been repeatedly given to them; sometimes twice a week. A citizen, who heartily espouses the good work, gave a tea last Monday to 200 of them. The number at these parties has ranged from 50 to 200.

Striking cases of conversion have come under our notice. It is believed a considerable number have been made savingly acquainted with the way of salvation. Their delight is now in the "sympathizing Jesus!" Backsliders have also been reclaimed; some who were lukewarm have been revived and cheered, and many more have been greatly moved and affected by the services. Nor can we overlook the spirit of Christian union which these meetings foster, both in our city and the neighbourhood around us. Ministers of all denominations have rendered us their valuable assistance.

One result of the movement is the opening of a mission-room, where meetings for prayer and Christian instruction are held, and the number who attend is encouraging.

As an experiment, a meeting for prayer and a gospel address has been held twice on a Lord's-day evening, from quarter-past eight to a quarter-past nine, thus not interfering with the regular services in the city. The large hall has been crowded. Our great aim is to induce those who are rarely seen in our churches or chapels to frequent these hall services. In this, by the divine blessing, we hope to succeed.

It is in contemplation to erect a tent in the vicinity of the barracks, for religious services during the summer.

NORTH FINCHLEY.—A week of special united services was held here last week, in the Independent, Baptist, and Wesleyan Chapels alternately. Earnest addresses upon the blessing of a full consecration were given by several resident ministers, and it has been a very precious time of refreshing to the people of God. We trust also the result will be the ingathering of many souls.

KIRKBY LONSDALE.—It will gladden the hearts of all Christians to hear that a remarkable spiritual awakening has recently taken place in this town, such as many of the inhabitants do not remember to have witnessed before. Special services have lately been held by the Rev. E. Stainton, of Sheffield, in the Concert-hall, which was crowded in every part, many anxious inquirers remaining afterwards to be dealt with personally. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that this gracious work may be continued?

BRIGHOUSE, YORKSHIRE.—Crowded meetings were held last week by the Rev. R. Stainton in the Town-hall at this place, with manifest tokens of the divine blessing. During one of the inquiry-meetings a father was deeply affected, and filled with gratitude to God, on account of a son and daughter, for whom he had been praying eleven years, having that night surrendered themselves to Jesus.

THE LIVERPOOL CARTERS.—A carter writes.—"I cannot help but write you a few lines to tell you of the way that God blessed our Carters' meeting on Sunday week. The Rev. Mr. Aitken was the preacher, with an audience of upwards of 800 persons. God was working mightily in our midst, and at our after meeting we had twenty-five inquirers, most of whom found peace before leaving. The master carters have provided us with 250 Bibles for the use of our meetings. God is blessing us greatly, and I hope you will take the London carters in hand, and start them also.

The Christian.

NOTES FOR THE PRESENT TIME.

THE movement for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness is being very closely scrutinized; and it is well that it should be. Nothing can be more necessary than that the teaching which is to affect our condition for time and eternity, should, with unremitting attention and prayer, be compared with the Scriptures of truth. But this should be done in the love of the truth, and he who criticises his brother in any other spirit than that of the love which hopeth all things, which suffereth long, and is kind, which rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, is himself far more in need of correction than he who makes an unguarded statement, or who has an imperfect apprehension of the truth. And he who has the beam of uncharitableness in his own eye, is little qualified to take the mote out of his brother's eye.

Then, on the other hand, it is very necessary that all teachers of others should regard the pointing out of any defect as good service done to them, and to the cause of truth.

"If a foe have kenn'd,
Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout sides,
Think it God's message, and with humble pride,
With heart of oak replace it: thine the gains"—

Our safety and our usefulness must depend upon our adhering strictly to the Word of God, and having the authority of "It is written" for every statement made, and for every counsel given. The subject of gravest importance, and that which is, more than any other, now occupying the attention of those who are pressing onward in the divine life is, the operation of the Holy Spirit. Many souls, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, are seeking to know the truth on this subject. Not a few are waiting for the baptism of the Spirit. On this subject there are before the Church of God at present two distinct lines of teaching, one of which inculcates the need of waiting for the baptism, the other urges the command, "Be filled with the Spirit." It appears to us also that the idea conceived by many persons of the baptism of the Spirit takes the form of some conscious manifestation, whether physical, mental, or spiritual, and is supposed to be a great crisis, if not the great crisis, in the spiritual life. Now, without questioning the reality or the divine origin of any such manifestation, we must remember that our sheet-anchor is the Scripture, and concerning that wonderful manifestation—the Transfiguration on the Holy Mount—the vision of the Kingdom of God—one of the three who saw "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eye-witnesses of his majesty," adds, "We have also more sure THE PROPHECIC WORD, wherunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts." The Scripture takes precedence of the vision, as testimony that Jesus is the Christ. The remembrance of manifestations may change or pass away, but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever; for every expectation of blessing, for everything for which we pray, it is essential that we have definite Scripture warrant. Visions and trances and prophesyings are no sure signs of grace. Saul was among the prophets, yet the Lord rejected him. Balaam fell into a trance, but he said, "I shall see Him, but not now; I shall behold Him, but not nigh." Nadab and Abihu were with the seventy who went up into the mount, and saw the God of Israel, yet they offered strange fire before the Lord, and died.

One who took a prominent part in some of the inquiry-meetings at Brighton writes:—

"I think it immensely important at this time to have the bright, and blessed, and clear light of the New Testament brought out on the obligation resting on all Christians not to wait for ANY baptism of the Spirit, but to receive, yea, take, by trust, into their hearts and souls, the Holy Spirit's teaching as to walking habitually in Christ's straight way of holiness and righteousness, which is indeed a walking in the light, and is the only true rest."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "CHRONICLES OF THE SCHONBERG COTTA FAMILY."

It is no new thing; yet now it seems to me as if I had only half believed it.

I never believed in any Saviour but a Saviour from sin; I never dreamed of any salvation but a salvation from sin. Yet now everything, every word of the Bible, every relation of human life, everything in nature, glows, becomes translucent, with new glory and significance.

I should not use the phrase, "higher life." It seems to me the life, the normal, natural Christian life, which we all ought to be living, not merely a few of us—which we ought to be living always, and not merely now and then—the life which, thank God, some amongst us do live always.

To walk in the light is surely the simple, natural order, it would seem almost the inevitable order, of true Christian life.

Our Sun is not a revolving light, alternately bright and dark. Why should our path be through alternate streaks of light and shadow?

It is simply, I think, the translation of the past and the future into the present; in other words, of then and by and by into now—of time, with its alternations and its decadences, into the eternal, with its ever-living youth.

The tenses of Christian life are not mere narrative tenses; they are perfect and present.

"Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, and hast made us kings and priests." That is, we are redeemed, and do belong to God now; we are not our own, but his; dominion over sin is not a vague promise in the future, but a possibility and possession now in and through Him who lives in those who trust Him. The consecrated, sacrificial, sacerdotal life is not for a future age, or a limited number, but for the whole Church every moment, now and for ever.

It is simply the translation of possibilities into acts. As Coleridge said, "To restore a common-place truth to its first uncommon lustre, you need only translate it into action."

That is, when the Master says, "Abide in Me," we are not vaguely to reply, "Enable me to abide in Thee;" but "I do abide in Thee;" not only "I will," far less "I fear I shall not," but "Now, at this moment, I do."

And the Master's response is, "He that abideth in Me, and I in Him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."

The beneficences and endurances, the sacrifices of the believing, obedient life are not constructed painfully as works, but spring forth naturally as fruits.

As Alexander Knox said, "From the sentence in the Litany, 'That we may diligently live after thy commandments,' which is much, we should go on to the following petition, for 'increase of grace to hear meekly thy word, and to receive it with pure affection, and to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit.'" It is not "Without Me ye can do but little," but "Without Me ye can do nothing."

It is not "That ye may have a little broken, interrupted joy," but "That My joy may abide in you, and that your joy may be full."

And then if we continue—as we continue—beholding Jesus, the Spirit who manifests Him will reveal depth after depth in Him; the Babe in the manger, the Child "subject to his parents," "coming not to be ministered unto, but to minister," "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

THIS is the Christ who lives in Christians. This is the life which, through his disciples, He would manifest to the world, "that the world may believe."

Holy, Immaculate, patient Lamb of God, to each one of us, can it indeed be possible that Thou hast committed this, even this? To manifest Thee, by our living, by thy life in us.

Tremendous responsibility, unutterably, blessed possibility. To manifest Thee!

Can it indeed be true that Thou hast not only promised, but commanded this? For thy command seems to me to involve, if possible, even a stronger assurance than thy promise to manifest Thee.—Contributed to the "Pathway of Power" for July.

TESTIMONIES.

FROM GEORGE LAWRENCE, OF BARCELONA.

Thanks for apprising the readers of THE CHRISTIAN of the object of my coming at the present time from Spain to England. I am thankful to say that my stay at Brighton has been beneficial, and in this many of the Lord's children will see answers to prayer. As the body has been helped, much more has my spirit been refreshed during the Convention. I now see the Lord has thrust me out for a time from Spain, to bring me to see how marvellously his hand is glorifying his Son, and recompensing the travail of his soul, in the salvation of men, and in a fuller and deeper sanctification of his people by the Word and the Spirit of truth.

I cannot say I was prejudiced against the work God is using Mr. P. Smith to do, but certain things in his ministry I did not understand I now understand. I am not given to relate my inward experience, but this I must say, that God used, ere I left Spain, the loss of my dear son to give answer to two or more years' prayer, expressed in lines often sung before—

"Oh for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame!"

And great has been my joy during my visits to the meetings to hear so many hundreds of God's dear children and servants manifest their trust, their peace, their joy, by increased knowledge and apprehension of the value and power of the blood, the priceless blood, of atonement, and of the preciousness of the inspired Word, which sanctifies as it enters every chamber of body, soul, and spirit. What refreshment was it to me, the "least of all saints," the "least of all apostles," the "chief of all sinners," to see such a vast assembly, and amongst them dignitaries secular and ecclesiastical, high and low, rich and poor, together setting forth the Lord's death on the last night of the Conference! I had the great privilege, in connection with foreign pastors, of giving thanks for the bread and cup, and of opening up from the Word three great points set forth in the holy supper—Bread, one bread, one cup; thanksgiving, "He gave thanks;" broken bread.

"Jesus bruised and put to shame
Tells me all Jehovah's name:
God is love, I surely know
By my Saviour's depth of woe."

It was heaven on earth to see that vast sea of believers shadowing that oneness for which our glorious Head prayed, and now by his priestly place in the heavenlies is seeking to maintain, "that they all may be one, even as Thou, Father, art in Me."

That night's meeting gave me great joy in seeing, in measure, many years' prayer and action fulfilled; and I came away with renewed desire to be so plastic in the hand of the Spirit, so as to be always seeking to keep, and in no wise break, the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; and I am sure this was the general feeling, and particularly so of the foreign brethren who were present next morning (Tuesday) at the farewell meeting.

And what a meeting! We knew that many of us would soon be away from the hallowed influences of the communion of saints, and be again in the midst of conflict, with everything trying to flesh and blood. But the quiet, the stillness, the holy worship, which, like the cloud of glory, rested upon the large assembly at the early morning meeting, I shall never forget. The feeling of all seemed to be, "Lo, God is here; let us adore!" Fittingly was our gratitude expressed by the lines written by one who assisted at the meetings; and when the final signal came for separation, our eyes laughed out tears to see neighbour embracing neighbour, and to hear the general hum of fervent prayer for each other's blessing.

"And if our fellowship below
In Jesus be so sweet,
What heights of rapture shall we know
When round the throne we meet!"

I rejoice to say that God is visiting his people in Spain; and before I left, I saw manifest signs of their desire to go on to the perfection of knowing and doing the will of God from the heart. We shall yet see glorious things. "Said I not unto thee, if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?" What a rebuke to unbelief is the resurrection!—I am, yours in Him, GEORGE LAWRENCE.

FROM ONE WHO WAS NOT AT THE CONVENTION.

Last week I wrote to you, asking for the prayers of the Convention, that I might receive blessing with you; and now I again take the liberty of writing to say, "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together! I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears." I have given all to the Lord, and He has graciously taken me, and now it is peace. I have had no rapturous emotion, but a calm and sweet rest and light have seemed to fill my whole being, and every day to deepen. And I want to tell you what a glorious day I had yesterday. I am a lay preacher, and, after giving myself to the Lord during the week, I, of course, rolled the burden of my services on the Lord, expecting Him to give me the message He would have me deliver. I started to walk to the place where I had to preach (about five miles distant), without knowing what I had to say; but on the way the Lord talked so gloriously to me, giving me both words, and illustrations, and all. Then the thought came, "Oh, if I could only remember all this when before the people!" which was instantly met by the Spirit suggesting, "He shall bring all things to your remembrance," etc.; and I need hardly say He did. I had two services, and on the way to the second it was suggested, "You can't expect Him to help you always;" but again this was met by "Always having all sufficiency," etc. Glory be to his name for ever, it is grand to have the privilege of speaking for Jesus!

Having asked prayer, I rejoice to ask also that the Lord's name be praised. I give you my name and address, not for publication, but simply that I may not seem afraid of doing it, and may give the lie to Satan.

At one of the prayer-meetings for foreign pastors, a Frenchman rose, and asked the prayers of his German brethren. He said, "I want you to pray for me. I want to love you, but I feel in my heart that I hate you; pray that I may love you." Another fact that may be noticed, as showing the spirit of brotherly love that prevailed at the Convention, was that the Germans avoided wearing their decorations of honour obtained in the late war, out of consideration for the feelings of their French brethren.

A Pastor from Holland, in the Dome on Tuesday morning, June 8: Dear brethren, I only want to testify, in a few words, of what my heart is full of. When first I came here, I remember well I was sitting in yonder corner, then moved on to the platform, thinking I would hear better there. My sole object for coming here was to report, and I often sharply criticised that which I heard. Oh, you cannot think how strangely your words sounded to us Dutch theologians; and in the beginning, I may as well confess it here, in our dogmatical views we just stamped down the whole as error.

Thursday night came, and in this very same place, leaning against that pillar, I heard our dear brother Monod urging us to trust Him who is worthy of all our trust. For sixteen years I had laboured for the Lord, preaching the gospel faithfully, and although I had told others to trust Jesus, I felt I never had surrendered myself to Him without reserve. My Saviour seemed to stand before me: "Will you not trust Me now?" Oh, what could I answer? "Yes, Master, I'll trust Thee; I'll trust Thee now." My heart feels broken. I can only rejoice as a little child in that infinite love. How can I express my thanks to you dear English brethren for the blessing you have been to me and mine in your kind hospitality? You brought me nearer to my Lord. Brighton will for ever be a bright town for us. It may be I shall never see it again; it does not matter. I praise my Lord for his mercy, and will do so with fuller notes in the heavenly choruses up yonder, for ever and ever. Amen.

I desire to offer my heartfelt thanks to God my Saviour for revealing to me, within these ten days, the exceeding riches of his love by the lips of his servants, and I pray that the glad tidings so faithfully preached by them, that "He saves us now," may be accepted as truth by all who have been privileged to join the Convention.

Its commencement found me in Egyptian darkness, as regards this great salvation; but thanks be unto God I have seen and do see the light. May I be strengthened by his Holy Spirit to walk in the light, "looking to Jesus."

My dear Friend,—By the infinite mercy and love of my blessed Saviour, I have received from Him the blessing of power to give myself to Him in a manner I have never done before. The memory of this night can never be effaced. During the five minutes of solemn silence the power was given. Oh, praise my precious Saviour with me! As an offering to Him, I propose to put into the treasurers' hands in the morning £50 of what He has given me.

On Sabbath morning, June 6, at the close of Mr. Varley's address, in the Dome, a brother from the Hague begged permission to say a few words. He seemed overflowing with joy, and spoke with such earnestness and feeling as to carry all hearts along with every word. He said that he had just been at the Communion service held that morning for foreign pastors, and that it had been a time of such wonderful blessing, that he had felt as if he must bring some of the grapes away to show those who had not been there what precious fruits there were in this land of full trust. "We have met here at Brighton," he said, "brethren from many different nationalities, some with prejudices against one another, some with bitterness, some even with hatred. We did not feel as if anything could ever unite us. But the love of Christ has conquered all. We have found ourselves here to be one in Christ, and He has made us one with each other. At our Communion just now, a German brother rose and confessed how he had come to Brighton with hatred towards his French brethren; but said that it had all gone now, and love had come in its place; and he felt that he could embrace them all. Then a French brother arose and made a similar confession, and the two brethren shook hands, and we all shook hands with each other. And now," he continued, "I can only wish that all of you had been spies with me, and could have gathered the grapes for yourselves. But since you were not there, I felt I must come and show them to you."

This recital of the uniting power of the love of Christ produced a deep effect upon the meeting, and all eyes seemed wet with tears of joy and thankfulness. And then we read, and, as never before, understood those blessed words, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free; there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

I am going to depart. I feel I cannot go without shaking your hand, at least in spirit. When I got off from home, I prayed God that the sea might sever me not only from the geographical Continent, but also from the strong and sorrowful continent of all the doubts which troubled my poor soul. I feel God has done so, and I am going with the peace of God, and with the hope that I have got the powder behind the cannon-balls. My tongue is not able to express my thanks. God bless you and your work!

I had from the first intimation of the Convention months ago made my request to Him not for very vivid enjoyment of them, but for a real, deep, lasting blessing which should bless others, and He has granted it so abundantly. I got it that Wednesday morning, at the early prayer-meeting, when you (by the Spirit's guidance, I am quite sure) sent us to our knees for five minutes. I have known the Lord nearly thirty years, and have for some ten years past known more and more of the "rest of faith," and the secret of an over-coming life; but my trouble has been interrupted communion. I believe unconsciously I have been thinking I had to try and maintain it myself. I say unconsciously, because had any one asked me if I had to do so I should have said, "Of course not." But at the same time I was not definitely trusting Jesus to do this also. On that morning, I put it completely into his hands, and I am looking, moment by moment, to Him to keep me in unbroken communion, and I know He will. He showed me clearly what broke it, viz., cares and distractions of this life, and these He enabled me to put into his hands. I am not filled with any special joy about it; but I am trusting.

The Sussex Daily News, of Tuesday, 15th inst, says:—

"During the late gathering of Christians of different denominations, and from various parts of the world, at Brighton, a meeting of Congregational ministers (including several Baptists) was held at Union-street Chapel, for the purpose of conversing freely together on the design and probable effects of the meetings. Between fifty and sixty gentlemen from all parts of the country were present. The number would have been larger, as there must have been many others attending the Convention; but, in consequence of the shortness of the notice of the meeting, they could not be called together, and some were obliged to leave Brighton before it took place. A number of addresses were given, which, without exception, expressed a high estimate of the value of the Convention, and sometimes even an enthusiastic gratitude for benefits received. Two things were especially to be noticed—that several spoke of the strong prejudices against the meetings with which they came to Brighton as having completely disappeared, and that others testified that the blessing they had received nearly a year before at the Oxford Convention had remained with them. It was then thought well that the opinions and experience of so many who had enjoyed the opportunity of seeing and judging for themselves should not be lost; and by the vote of the meeting three gentlemen were selected (the Rev. Bryan Dale, M.A., Halifax; the Rev. M. Robertson, B.A., D.Sc., Cambridge; and the Rev. Wade Robinson, Brighton) to receive the testimonies of their brethren, and to prepare them for the press."

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT BRIGHTON.

Your readers are aware that I stayed behind for a short time to follow on in the preaching of the Word. I rejoice to say how the interest continued to increase; every meeting was succeeded by another of increasing power. Surely hundreds have been saved and are now rejoicing in the Lord. In the last evening meeting, which was densely packed, hundreds were unable to get in; nearly every one rose to say either that they had found Christ, or that they had received so definite a blessing that they joyously testified the same. My soul is full of his praise, and I cannot but see how very much needed is the kind of ministry these meetings yield—a ministry in which the saints of God receive as really as the unsaved. How truly we found the spirit of his love pervade our gatherings, and how little to attract the spirit of discussion; this spirit cannot live in such an atmosphere. I was very much struck with the inability of the ordinary religious reporters to give the spirit of the meetings, nor is it easy to any, save they drink of the Spirit that cannot be printed or simulated.

Will you kindly intimate why I am unable to take my place at Mildmay on Thursday? My beloved father has just passed away home, and I am leaving this morning for his funeral. I shall return on Thursday, if the Lord will, and join the Conference.

Will your readers pray for me in connection with services in Liverpool, that my unexpected call to that town, as the result of death's busy hand, may be the time of life to hundreds, for I shall preach in Victoria Hall. How wondrously does the gospel change the ministry of death!

"It takes its terror from the grave,
And gilds the bed of death with light."

HENRY VARLEY.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON PRAYER-MEETINGS, VICTORIA THEATRE.

The earlier meetings of the week were devoid of any special interest. On Tuesday, Mr. Moody sought to elicit testimony from young converts, and several women spoke, but, as a rule, they were not well heard by the audience.

Thursday's meeting was one of unusual variety and freshness, and revealed an additional chapter in the volume of testimony that daily comes to light as to God's wonderful working amongst us in the salvation of sinners.

Mr. Denny presented over 270 requests for prayer, chiefly from Christians for their relatives and friends.

We were gratified with the singing of one of our earliest favourites in Mr. Sankey's book, and one that we have seldom heard of late—"The Gate Ajar." Heresy hunters claim to have detected unsoundness of theology in this hymn, but the ordinary, though perhaps unthinking, Christian worshipper never seems to suspect anything unscriptural in it, but often finds soul-refreshment in its story of God's long-suffering mercy.

Rev. Thos. Richardson, of Stepney, read from the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus, the Mosaic law with respect to the goat for the sin-offering, and the scapegoat who bore away the sins of the people into the land of separation and death. Then he brought out the glorious truth shadowed forth in these typical observances—viz., that "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all" (Isa. liii. 6); that He is "the Lamb of God which taketh (margin, beareth) away the sin of the world" (John i. 29); and that He, "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (margin, to the tree") (1 Peter ii. 24). As God took care that the scapegoat should never come back again, so Christ took care that sin should not come out of the grave again.

After this comforting bit of exposition, Mr. Richardson read a request that had been sent to the meeting at the Bow-road Hall. "Prayer was asked a short time ago for a father and mother, both backsliders, also for their four sons and three daughters. The four sons and two of the daughters now desire to praise God that they are trusting in Jesus. Will you please pray that they may be kept faithful unto death, and that their father, mother, and sister may soon find peace?"

Mr. Moody prayed very earnestly and very tenderly for this family, and also for a father who had renounced intemperance, but had not become a Christian. After prayer he said arrangements were being made for the women to meet by themselves, where they could talk freely and be easily heard.

Mr. Sankey related a case that came under his own observation the previous night at Camberwell, of a young man who had been sitting under one of the best ministers in London for many years, but had never been brought to decision for Christ. The lesson which Mr. Sankey wished parents to draw was, that it was not enough for them to be sure their children went to church regularly; they must be brought to Christ.

Mr. Sankey then sang that most delightful gem of song, "I left it all with Jesus." We wish it were sung and experienced in every home and every heart in the land. Then we would willingly let our American friends take ship at Liverpool, and wish them a fair voyage.

A gentleman on the platform then gave some decided personal testimony as to the blessing he had experienced through these meetings. He also spoke, from undoubted evidence, of the good effects of the movement in Ireland on the Roman Catholic population.

Mr. Graham, who used to read the requests for prayer at the Haymarket, gave some details, just received, of the continued good work at Glasgow, especially in connection with the breakfasts to the poor, which have now been resumed for the summer season in the tent on Glasgow-green.

Mr. Radcliffe made a strong appeal for superintendents and visitors for the remaining districts not allotted in the house-to-house visitation, and gave some very striking instances of conversion that had happened in the South of London through this instrumentality. In order to incite the Christians to undertake this work, he told of an Indian officer who was home for the sake of his health, but who had undertaken visitation work, and had been greatly blessed in it. At one place he visits there are about seventy skilled artisans. Instead of going home at seven o'clock, these men gather into a room, the use of which is granted by their master, and listen to this officer telling them of Christ. Now he has undertaken the superintendence of a district; and though he wants twenty visitors to assist him, he has not got one. A lady, well known for her philanthropic self-denial, has got a large district, not a mile from Victoria Theatre; and, with the exception of one relative, instead of having twenty to help her, she is going into the work single-handed. Why, our brethren will have been in America twelve months before she can finish her district, unless some of the South London people come to her help. Mr. Moody's heart is wholly in the matter, and some ten days hence he is going to meet all the visitors and superintendents; but it is obvious he cannot devote time to it himself, and I want to get London finished before he goes.

Such was the gist of Mr. Radcliffe's remarks. We were glad to see him able to speak with his accustomed fire and energy, and we hope his appeal was freely responded to.

Rev. Thomas Richardson quoted the testimony of an actress in the East of London to show that the theatres of the locality have been so lacking in attendance since the work commenced there, that she is unable to obtain her salary regularly, and she is deeply concerned as to how she can give up that occupation. If the movement had this effect on the theatres, how much more would the homes of the people be influenced by it. "The proprietor of one of the large gin-palaces," said Mr. Richardson, "is also greatly concerned about getting out of that business." He then read a letter, detailing the unspeakable blessing that had come to the writer through the services in the East-end.

Mr. Moody, after stating that he had that morning received a letter from a minister, telling of the conversion of an atheist of twenty years' standing, who was now engaged in leading others to the knowledge of God and salvation, read another letter, which he said had been handed to him since the meeting began. This was the purport of it:—

"I beg to ask the prayers of the Lord's people on my behalf for strength to overcome the evil one. I was at the prayer-meeting on Monday last, although I had said many things against your good work to my friends, and had mocked at you and your dear fellow-worker. I could not resist your words about our blessed Saviour's love to poor sinners, and it took such a hold of my sinful heart, that I determined to hear you again on Tuesday. On Tuesday I came, but only got more sorrow to hear how sinful I was. I came on Wednesday, although I told my wife I would not. For the fourth time I went last to Camberwell, and with what joy I left it I cannot here express, for I had found the Saviour. Oh, sir, how can I praise his name sufficiently? How can I serve Him enough? Had you not been at the theatre, I might never have found peace."

"Somebody said we had made a mistake in coming here," said Mr. Moody. "Perhaps the Lord just sent us here in order to save that man." The writer also requested prayer for his wife and children, and closed by stating that he was going to stay at home this evening, to allow his wife to attend the meeting. Mr. Moody prayed most earnestly for the conversion of the wife; and this hour, so full of encouragement to our brethren and their co-workers, terminated with the doxology and the benediction.

Taking refuge in the front seat of the gallery of the Victoria Theatre at Friday's noon meeting, for the sake of hearing, we could not help being struck with the large number of real working-men, who, with hands and face begrimed with honest toil, had run in for the hour. And how they appeared to drink in every word that was said! The working-man element was conspicuous by its absence when the noon meeting was held at Exeter Hall and the Opera House. Here, however, we have a proof that the sons of toil are not insensible to the privileges of the "sweet hour of prayer," when the place of meeting is accessible to them. It was pleasant, too, to see so many mothers present with babe in arms, though it was not calculated to promote feelings of quietude and devotion when assailed on all sides by the cries of the same babes, some of them not by any means weak in the lungs. For the sake of the mothers, however, we repress an inclination to grumble.

The requests were read by Mr. Denny, as usual, and comprised prayer "for an unconverted clergyman," "for a lady dying from the effects of intemperance," for a member of the choir, who is seriously ill," and praise for conversion through the hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul."

Rev. Mr. Mayers, Bristol, whom we found singing a solo as we entered the theatre, offered prayer, and the hymn, "Oh to be over yonder!" was sung by Mr. Sankey and the whole congregation in alternate verses.

Mr. Moody read from 1 John iii., and said: "I want to speaking a minute about a class of people who are running away from the old gospel—being led away by false spirits. A woman came to me last night and said a spirit had told her to come to me, and she wanted to know my opinion about spiritualism. I gave it to her in three minutes—it was of the devil! I told her there were a great many false spirits who were getting people away from the true gospel. Didn't I believe there were some good spirits, and that it was a good spirit that told her to come to me? Well, I told her to get away from all the spirits and from spiritualism, as Lot got out of Sodom. If you want to see the fruit of spiritualism, go to our country. It has been a blight in our country. I consider it the greatest plague that could come on any nation. I would a good deal rather have the cholera, or some terrible disease, sweeping over the nation, and taking away hundreds, than have God's people running after spirits. What do we want to know from departed spirits, if we have the Son of God? It must grieve the Master. I notice that the people who get under the power of those spirits soon get to talking against the Bible. The idea that spiritualism has got anything to do with religion! It is stamped as coming from the pit of hell. Why, if an angel should come here preaching anything against this Word of God, I would not believe him. Have nothing to do with any one who talks against the blessed Son of God, who casts any reflection on our God, or hints at any insinuations of that kind. If a man came to me and began to cast reflections upon my wife, do you think I would invite him into my house? If he were there he would have to get out of it very quick.

My friends, do not let these doubts come into your minds. We are living in dark days. Let us consult Christ, and not departed spirits. Mr. Moody then expounded the latter part of the chapter, setting forth five precious possessions of the believer—life, peace, love, power, and boldness.

After prayer and singing, a clergyman on the platform gave his first experience of the inquiry-room the previous evening at Camberwell, where he and his daughter had the joy of leading some souls to Christ.

Rev. G. M. Murphy asked prayer for those who wished to come to the meeting, but could not. He offered prayer, and was followed by Rev. W. H. Aitken and Mr. Henry Varley.

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

Our readers are already aware that these coloured friends have paid us a second visit, in furtherance of the object that brought them to this country some two years ago. What object can be more laudable on the part of these gifted sons and daughters of Ham, or more worthy the support of a professedly Christian nation like ours?

[[The educational enfranchisement of four and a half millions of their lately-emancipated brethren and sisters is a gigantic task, and must have been undertaken in a spirit of assured confidence that it was a righteous one, and that they would not be deterred either by its magnitude or by any difficulties that might cross their path. It lies with us, who have but lately made large endeavours and some sacrifices to bring a fair education within the reach of every child in our land—it is for us to show our entire sympathy with our Jubilee friends in the work to which they have devoted themselves.

We did so on their former visit. With the fruits of their talent and skill, they were enabled then to rear the material structure at Nashville which will for ever be associated with their race. But their task was not at an end. Funds are still wanted to complete the furnishing of the new building, and for the establishment of an endowment fund, so as to bring the blessings of education within the reach of the poorest negro in the United States. And so our Jubilee friends have a second time braved the perils of the ocean, and are ready to undergo the discomforts of a tour up and down the land in pursuit of the goal they have set before them. We sincerely hope their unselfish labours may meet with at least an equal, if not a larger meed of success than before.

We feel that many reasons could be urged in favour of their mission, but we prefer to let them speak for themselves—or rather, to let one of their number speak for the whole. They are just now giving up their time and strength to the help of the Lord's work in the East-end of London. And this without the remotest idea of remuneration, but because, being themselves "lovers of the Lord," they heartily wish to throw their weight and influence into this good work.

On the evening of Tuesday week, as elsewhere reported, Mr. Loudin, who is gifted with a magnificent bass voice, made some observations, which we hope will plead their cause with our readers better than anything we can urge.

After apologizing for intervening between Rev. Mr. Aitken and the audience, he said—

"As I have been requested to say a word with reference to our mission here, I will endeavour to do so as briefly as possible. And in the first place let me say a word with reference to who we are. It is a matter almost too recent to be called a matter of history, of which I tell you when I say that we who are here known as the Jubilee Singers, were goods and chattels, liable to be bought and sold. And since the emancipation of our race in America, through the great civil strife which raged there a few years ago, we have found that we are anxious to obtain an education in order that we should the better perform the functions of life, and fill the position we are called upon to occupy in society and in the world. In order to do this, institutions have been formed all through the southern part of the United States—that portion of it in which we were held as slaves. The American Missionary Society, under whose auspices these schools have been organized, has found it necessary to ask the help of others; and for this purpose a band, known as the Jubilee Singers—students from one of these institutions, the Fisk University at Nashville—visited this country and a good portion of America, during the past two years, in order to secure funds for building that institution. They have succeeded in that, and now we are labouring again, in order that we may finish the furnishing of the building, and also commence an Endowment Fund. It is for that reason we have visited Great Britain again."

Mr. Loudin then stated what we have already referred to, that their appearance in the East-end at the present time was apart from their regular mission, and was prompted by a sole desire to aid in the good work of saving souls. He asked the audience to forget, while they sang, all about the singers, and think only of Him whose love was the theme of their song. "These songs," he continued, "are the pure waters of our affliction. They gushed forth from us when we were smitten by the hand of man, as the waters gushed from the rock in the wilderness when smitten by the rod of Moses. These songs came to us, as it were, fresh from the hand of God, as He gave them to us, in order to give utterance sometimes to our woes, and sometimes to our joys. Sometimes it was—

" 'Nobody knows the trouble I see, Lord;
Nobody knows but Jesus.'

Sometimes it was—

" 'You may bury him in the east,
You may bury him in the west,
But I'll hear the trumpet sound in that morning.'

Glory be to God for what these songs have furnished us—how they lightened the burden of our affliction as we passed through a long night of sorrow!"

In the words of Dr. Parker, at a recent meeting, we would add, "How these songs twine themselves about our hearts, and move our souls to their very depths!" As a mere sensuous musical entertainment, giving pleasure to the finely-strung ear, we know of nothing to equal these songs. Add to this the thrilling sentiment of the quaintly expressed, and sometimes apparently grotesque, words to which they are set, the peculiar history of their production and growth, and, above all, the great and noble cause which brings their exponents once more among us, and surely we have reasons abundant for showing, in every possible way, our practical and hearty sympathy, as Christian men and women, towards this little and devoted band of Jubilee Singers.

AN EVENING AT BOW-ROAD HALL.

The departure of Messrs. Moody and Sankey from any given locality has so frequently been the precursor of a wholesale reduction in the attendance at further meetings, that it was with no ordinary pleasure we found, one evening last week, on entering Bow-road Hall an hour before the time of meeting, a large concourse already assembled, and a steady stream of people pouring in, as if afraid they might be too late. The cause was speedily discovered on the large posters which announced that the Rev. W. H. Aitken would preach, and the Jubilee Singers would sing. Such a combination is very rarely to be found; and we were not surprised at the crowds, though we fear we are uncharitable enough to believe that the sweet singers, and not the powerful preacher, formed the main attraction. Nevertheless, we were heartily rejoiced to see the multitudes, and also to see that they were of the very sort one never finds in church, and too seldom in the gatherings of our American brethren—the real East-end working-men, in working dress, with their wives, and a sprinkling of a lower stratum still.

The hour passed in waiting for the meeting to begin was by no means wasted, as we had a preliminary service of song, led by the choir that assisted Mr. Sankey. We had occasion, at the opening of Bow-road Hall, to express our approval of the manner in which this choir discharged their duties; and we are compelled, in justice, to say another word or two for them. The appreciative way in which they render the beautiful hymns in Mr. Sankey's collection is very delightful, and ought in itself to be a large attraction to the East-end population, apart from the still greater but temporary attraction of the Jubilee Singers. The Agricultural Hall choir has become a permanent institution, and is doing good service in the North of London in assisting at evangelistic meetings, and holding services of sacred song. With a judicious leader, the East-end choir might do similar work most effectively; and if the other engagements of the members will permit, we should like to see them devote some of their time to singing for Jesus in the East.

Our feelings on this subject of sacred song are very forcibly expressed by Dr. De Witt Talmage, of Brooklyn, in a recent issue of his paper:—

"We are glad that the increasing effort everywhere being made to sing the race to heaven. There are tens of thousands of people who cannot be touched by argument, or facts, or rhetoric, who immediately surrender to sacred song.

"Mr. Sankey in England, Mr. Bliss at the West, and Philip Phillips everywhere, and many other Christian men whose names do not at this moment occur to us, are, with silver wedge of music, splitting open the barred dungeons of the soul, to let God and heaven go in, and take full possession.

"Let us band together the sweet singers of our churches and Sunday-schools, not into stilted and formal choirs, but into crusading parties, whose business it shall be to rouse prayer-meetings, and visit sick-rooms, and serenade with sacred carols the homes of the unbelieving. When preaching, and solemn admonition, and a square talk fail of their work, try singing. Thousands have already climbed heavenward on the right notes, and we imagine that, in coming time, a large proportion of the race are to go up on the same ladder."

Some time before eight o'clock, the hall was full to overflowing, and the doors had to be closed. An overflow-meeting filled the tent, and a second was held on the vacant space in front of the hall. The entrance of the Jubilee Singers close in the rear of Mr. Aitken caused quite a movement in the throng, which only subsided when the entire audience rose and sang "God loved a world of sinners lost." The crowd outside appeared to have taken up the same hymn, as its strains came floating into the building after we had ceased, somewhat to our distraction when occupied in prayer.

Then rose the Jubilee Singers, and gave us, in their inimitable way, what seemed to be an anthem, commencing, "Who are these in bright array?" It is a very difficult and almost impossible task to describe the singing of these coloured brethren and sisters. It is so impassioned, so apparently spontaneous, so full of strange surprises, and altogether so thrilling, that one can only sit entranced, and drink in with ears and eyes, the delightful sounds now concentrated into a wild and startling solo, and now grandly swelling out into a burst of most exquisite harmony. The performances of the Jubilee Singers are, in our experience, something altogether unique, and one ceases to wonder at the crowds that flock to Bow-road Hall to hear them.

But they can speak as well as sing, as the excellent little address of Mr. Loudin, which our readers will find in another column, amply testifies. His native and easy eloquence produced a very deep impression on the East-end audience, and one could not help feeling how much has been lost to the world through the suppression these many years of the gifts with which God has endowed this race.

After the reading of Scripture by Mr. Aitken, we had from the Jubilee Singers a quaint but striking song, with the refrain—

"Lord, I want to live up yonder,
In bright mansions above."

Then came Mr. Aitken's address, and it is not too much to say that he kept the 10,000 souls before and around him spell-bound for over half-an-hour by his irresistibly earnest appeals, both to saved and unsaved, from the words, "Be ye also ready." The world to come was brought very vividly near, and one trembles for the fate of those who could sit unmoved during such an address, and go away unrepentant.

Mr. Aitken's closing words were supremely solemn. "I would like," he said, "to go down and plead with you, one by one, to get hold of you by the hand, and look into your eyes, and beseech you on my knees, in God's name, be ye also ready, and be ready now—before you leave this hall. 'Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.'"

The preacher followed his appeal with very earnest prayer, and as he ceased, the Jubilee Singers struck up—

"Oh, the rocks and the mountains shall all flee away,
And you shall have a new hiding-place that day."

The hymn was singularly suited to clench home the truths of the address, and we hope it had this effect.

Whether impressed or unimpressed, the crowd thronged out of the hall at the close of the general service, and left but a couple of hundred or so Christian workers and anxious souls together to hear a brief but most pointed second address from Mr. Aitken, after which the anxious were spoken to individually, while the young men's meeting was proceeding in the tent. All this speaking and singing for Jesus must be powerful for weal or woe to countless souls. God grant it may be the former and not the latter.

Mr. Aitken remains at Bow-road Hall till the close of this week, and the Jubilee Singers will sing on most of the evenings. May many believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, through their joint testimony.

A very delightful meeting of some 7000 children was held in Bow-road Hall on Saturday afternoon, presided over by Major Cole, and at which the Jubilee Singers were present, and sang. We regret our report of the meeting is crushed out for want of space.

SPECIAL SERVICES, WESTMINSTER.

Since the closing of the Opera House services, an effort has been made to continue the evangelistic movement in the West-end by special services in various churches and chapels. Among others, St. Margaret's and Christ Church, Westminster, have been thus occupied during the past two weeks. At the former, the Rev. C. M. Pym, and at the latter the Revs. R. C. Billing and Thomas Richardson have preached. These services have been largely attended, many inquirers remained after each for further instruction in the way of the Lord, and not a few were led to praise God for accepted salvation.

A wide-spread spirit of inquiry is apparent among the people, and a noble opportunity lies before the various churches of the West-end for gathering in many wandering ones to the fold of Christ. The Lord seems to be saying, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Will the churches of God enter in? Will the ministers and their people who have been revived by the late showers of blessing consecrate themselves more fully than ever to the blessed work of soul-winning for the Master?

DEMERARA.—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Marsh, missionaries to Demerara, having for a long time been in failing health, are ordered home by their medical man, for rest and change in England. They are expected in London on or about the 26th inst. Many of our readers are, no doubt, interested in the work for God in Demerara, and letters for Mr. and Mrs. Marsh may be addressed to the care of Mr. C. G. Dwyre, Victoria Hall, Lancaster-street, Friar-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL.

The first week's services in the South have been full of promise that the last month will be at least as fruitful of results as the three that have gone before. Mr. Moody has almost invariably, at the noon meetings, made some encouraging references to the services at the new hall on the previous day, and has thanked God for what he has been permitted to see of the Lord's working there.

We have heard many regrets expressed that the Camberwell-green Hall is not so easy of access for those at a distance as the buildings in the other districts of London were. This, and the unfavourable condition of the weather during a great portion of the past week, will account for the fact that, now and then, the hall has not been crowded—not even quite full. Some of the evening meetings have disclosed fresh and wonderful manifestations of Divine power, and not a few striking cases of conversion are known, the details of which it would serve no good purpose to publish.

As our space forbids a specific report of each meeting during the week, a sketch of Friday's services may be taken as representative of the others.

At the afternoon Bible-reading there was a large gathering, though there were, perhaps, a thousand empty chairs or so.

Before singing "Nothing but leaves," Mr. Sankey told us one of those little and touching incidents with reference to the hymns, of which he must, by this time, have a long and very encouraging list. A lady had written to him from a distant village in the country, stating that she had been an invalid for nine months past. On the previous Sunday morning, being disappointed in getting to church, she went out into the garden, and she heard a sweet voice singing in the adjoining garden. She listened, and found it was a little girl, and the song was, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." The invalid lady felt it to be as good as a sermon to her, and she re-entered the house with a glad heart, there to sing it for herself.

And so every week reveals fresh proofs of the deep hold that these songs have taken of the hearts of our people. And not the British people only, for they have found their way, one might say, to "the uttermost parts of the earth," and we suppose we should not be wide of the mark if we say they are sung "from China to Peru."

Just one more instance of the power of sacred song, taken from another letter to Mr. Sankey, and about the hymn he sang on Friday afternoon, "Nothing but leaves." We give the following extracts, and regret not to be able to give the letter entire:—

"Although I could not hear distinctly the words sung, nor follow, by reason of the small print in the book, still I carried home the impression with me. I committed the hymn to memory, and sang it to myself when alone, or when I walked the busy streets of the city; every line, every word, told plain, undeniable truths that went straight to my heart. I overhauled my whole life—over fifty years—and could not find a single ear of good grain—'Nothing but leaves,' withered leaves.

"Twice I stood up in Burdett Hall to be prayed for, and I bless God the prayers offered up on my behalf were answered, and peace came to my anxious and weary soul.

"May the Lord bless you and Mr. Moody, and increase your powers of winning souls to Christ a hundred-fold."

Such testimony as that ought to shut for ever the mouths of all unreasoning objectors to "singing the gospel."

Mr. Moody's subject for Bible-reading was "Faith." The teaching of Scripture, both doctrinal and historical, as well as many familiar and homely incidents, were utilized to expound and elucidate this elementary principle of the Christian religion, and the personal appeals at the close, "Who will believe the record to-day? Who will set to his seal that God is true?" were largely responded to. Mr. Moody's wonderful skill in moving men and women's hearts to an immediate decision was exhibited anew, and the inquiry-rooms were repaired to by the anxious ones, and those who desired to lead the way to that rest of faith which is the privilege and duty of every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.

At the evening meeting, which was almost a full one, Mr. Sankey and the choir sang a new but delightfully sweet and simple song, "We shall meet by and by," and later on Mr. Sankey gave a solo, "Scatter seeds of kindness," to the evident enjoyment of many.

Mr. Moody's text was "Where art thou?" and his triple application of it to professing Christians, backsliders, and unbelievers was marked by many tokens of God's convincing and converting power. Quite a large number stood up to be prayed for at the close. Both at this and the afternoon service we were much struck on seeing little groups of standing ones—in one case what appeared to be several members of one family, and in another four young men, apparently companions. How gladdening was the sight!

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

If the history of this remarkable movement could be fully set forth with all its attendant circumstances, what a strange volume it would make; how it would illustrate the aphorism that "Truth is stranger than fiction." It was stated in our hearing at Camberwell-green Hall to-day that a man had walked all the way from Tunbridge Wells, a distance of thirty miles or so, to be present at to-day's meetings, and that he was to walk back to-night. It has been no uncommon occurrence for people to come many hundred miles by train for the express purpose of sharing in the blessings that so many have received from God by the mouths of the two evangelists; but we have not before heard of any one walking sixty miles to accomplish this desire. The fact can only be regarded as an additional test of the unusual reality and stability of this awakening. We trust this zealous friend was spared the toil of walking home again. Within recent weeks, there have been a goodly number of excursion trains run from provincial towns in order to allow friends at a distance to attend the services, and a couple of thousand "strangers' seats" are specially set apart at Camberwell-green for the accommodation of such visitors.

The rain that seemed imminent on Sunday morning did not deter the "Christian Workers" of the South of London from flocking to the eight o'clock morning meeting. The hall was almost full. Mr. Moody's pointed address was from John i. Translating the word in the text, "fellowship," into the modern term "partnership," he showed the privileges and responsibilities of bearing such a relation to God. The "sleeping," or as it is in America the "silent partners" of business firms, had their numerous counterparts in the Church. Some were sleeping and yet not silent partners; these Mr. Moody termed "snorers," who, while doing no good themselves, were a cause of disturbance to others in their work. He exhorted his hearers to keep short accounts, and strike no bargains with God. Those who did so in the parable gained nothing by it. He expressed his conviction that the past week's services had been the most successful of any of the opening services they had had in London.

Mr. Sankey stated a fact at the opening of the afternoon service for women, that invested it with a very peculiar interest to himself and Mr. Moody, and also to all who have traced the growing success and usefulness of the labours of our brethren in this country. He said it was at this afternoon hour, exactly two years ago, that they opened their mission in Great Britain. And how the Lord had led them! What blessings had accompanied and followed the preaching and singing of the gospel! Who will not join in the hope and prayer he expressed, that the next two years may be better still than the two that have just gone to their account.

In grateful remembrance of the past, Mr. Sankey then sweetly sang a hymn, of which the first stanza runs:—

"He leads us on by paths we did not know,
And well He leads us, though our steps are slow,
Although we often falter by the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure the day;
But when the clouds are gone,
We know He leads us on."

In discoursing to his female, or nearly female, audience, on "Regeneration," Mr. Moody advised every unsavee hearer to read the third chapter of John, and nothing else, until they understood its importance and acted accordingly. He very plainly pointed out that regeneration was something altogether apart from any religious observance or ceremony. He abominated the doctrine that the new birth came by baptism, and said he could not help condemning it. One of his most telling stories of the American war, about a dying soldier who found peace in the words of Christ to Nicodemus, "As Moses lifted up the serpent," etc., formed a very thrilling peroration to his impressive sermon. We hope that many, if not all, of those who stood up with bowed heads at the close, experienced that renewing of the Holy Ghost, the necessity of which Mr. Moody set forth with great force, and which had come to himself twenty years ago. Amongst those who stood up was a grey-haired old man, who audibly asked that prayer should be offered for "an old sinner like him." Mr. Moody complied with his request in very tender and earnest words.

There was a magnificent gathering of men at the evening meeting. Mr. Sankey sang, "I am praying for you," and "The Ninety-and-nine," and Mr. Moody followed up his afternoon address, on the need of the new birth, by an exposition of the remedy for sin, typified by the brazen serpent in the wilderness.

BY REV. ROBERT TAYLOR, UPPER NORWOOD.

I leave to your regular reporter, whose full and faithful weekly narrative, in common with your other readers, I greatly enjoy, the task of presenting a detailed daily chronicle of the services, and content myself with noting a few things that have specially impressed me.

And to begin with, I have been much struck and unspeakably delighted with the wonderful growth of brotherly love and sympathy among the ministers and other servants of Christ engaged in the work. The southern district of London has enjoyed the advantage of the experience reaped in other districts; and there has been here, I am inclined to think, a somewhat more perfect agreement, or I should rather say organization, than elsewhere in this city, among the local ministers of all denominations for co-operating with the evangelists. And if I may judge of the experience of others by my own, I may confidently say that we have already enjoyed the assurance of the blessed Master's benediction on our brotherly co-operation, and have felt, in unwonted measure, "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." I laboured for about six years as a minister in the immediate neighbourhood of the hall, and while I have reason to rejoice in the brotherly kindness which I enjoyed at the hands of dear brethren of other churches, it seems to me that I have known more of the "communion of saints," as such, outside my own denomination, during the last fortnight than during all these years. It is unspeakably delightful to fall back on "the name which is above every name," and to know each other simply as disciples and servants of the Lord Jesus. And it is yet more delightful to realize this communion of saints in connection with evangelistic efforts that have reference to no "cause" but that of our Lord and Saviour, and the aim of which is not to increase the roll of this church or that, but to add to the Lord and to his living spiritual Church such as shall be saved.

The next thing that it occurs to me to note is the amazing freshness and power—I think, the increasing power, of the preacher. Delivering the same addresses here, as in the other parts of London, even those who have heard them more than once listen with as much interest and with no less impression than at first. Indeed, I am free to confess that, even when I have, of purpose, anticipated the preacher in some graphic bit of dialogue or pathetic narrative with which I had become familiar, I have found the smile or the tear coming unbidden, and in spite of me, in answer to the masterly touch that commands and controls the keys of emotion in the souls of others. Many affect to wonder at Mr. Moody's power. It appears to me to be easily enough explained. No one who believes in the Holy Ghost can for a moment doubt that the spiritual and saving results are wrought by Him. The new life which multitudes experience through means of these services, is breathed into them by the living and life-giving Spirit. But we do not honour the great Worker by disparaging the vessels, albeit they are earthen, which He has fashioned and fitted for his own use. This preacher may come short of conventional standards, and may show traces both in the structure and the style of his addresses, of the want of the culture and training which most men who have wielded a like power have enjoyed; but he has gifts of no ordinary kind which have been cultivated by constant exercise, and consecrated with rare thoroughness to the work of winning souls. The critics may be sure that the speaker, whom thousands of all classes hear gladly, has got something to say, and knows how to say it. There are passages in many of his addresses that would not be out of place on the pages of Bunyan—racy dialogues, sparkling with mother-wit and lambent with shrewd humour, graphic pictures which bring the distant near and make the past live again, and narratives or strokes of pathos that go straight to the heart, and constrain listening thousands to bow the head to conceal or wipe away the falling tear. Some one has said that the most popular preacher is the man who is "making points" all through his sermon. Mr. Moody scores "centres" by the dozen. His quotable sayings are without number.

But I fear I weary you and your readers with this sort of criticism. After all, the grand peculiarity of this honoured evangelist is his passion for the glory of Jesus in the salvation of souls. He never forgets his audience in his theme. He speaks not before them, but straight to them. And what is more important still, he never forgets his Master either in his audience or his subject. He gives you the impression that he speaks only and always, as Christ's ambassador, with a yearning desire for the salvation of his hearers, and with a happy assurance that Jesus is not only willing and able, but eager and ready to save. I count it as at once among the highest privileges and purest enjoyments I have ever had to listen from day to day to the glorious gospel of the grace of God, as proclaimed by this preacher.

I do not require to add anything to what has been so often said and so freely owned regarding the invaluable contribution made both to the attraction and the impressiveness of the services by the singing of Mr. Sankey. The serenity and elevation of tone, as well as the wonderful tenderness of feeling with which he renders the now well-known gospel songs, never cease to delight and move the hearers. And it must be a source of much joy to this honoured worker to learn, from so many of the awakened ones, that the arrow that laid them wounded at the feet of the great Physician, was a line, winged with song, from one of the hymns.

The only other note with which I shall trouble you at present is respecting the method adopted by the preacher to bring the hearers to decision, and with this view to get them into the inquiry-room. All who have attended these meetings have been thrilled by the solemnity of the moments during which, after the sermon, the preacher prevails on those who have been impressed, and who desire to become Christians at once, to manifest it by rising. It may be doubtful how far such a method of bringing the awakened to decision would be advisable in connection with regular ministrations, or in small meetings; but I think it impossible for any one to watch the operation of it in Mr. Moody's hands without being persuaded that it is at once a perfectly legitimate and an eminently effective way of accomplishing the end in view. It must be owned by all preachers that there is an immense amount of unproductive impression in connection with the earnest proclamation of the gospel. Men are convinced, but not persuaded; touched and softened, but not really won to the Lord. It is surely a great thing to bring them to decision, and it seems to me that any way of doing this is perfectly legitimate, that at once leaves them free from constraint, and is at the same time in the line in which the Holy Spirit works in persuading and enabling sinners to accept Christ and salvation as offered in the gospel.

Now, in regard to the first point, I think it must be plain that not only are those impressed left free to comply with or to refuse the appeal addressed to them; but that a resolute effort of will is required on their part to stand up in the presence of others, the great majority remaining seated, and thereby to take the first step, as it were, towards the kingdom of God. And then, as to the Holy Spirit's work in converting souls, that work does not set aside human agency, but on the contrary, embraces, owns, and blesses it. The some sort of objection that on these grounds is taken to the inquiry-room, or to the way adopted to induce the anxious to enter it, might be offered to eloquent preaching, or, for that matter, to preaching at all; in short, to any and every way by which one man seeks to influence or persuade another to be reconciled to God.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

Ground was broken among the young men of Camberwell on Sunday evening, when the nine to ten young men's meeting, which has become an institution wherever Messrs. Moody and Sankey have worked, was inaugurated. The lecture-hall of the Presbyterian Church, immediately adjoining the Camberwell-green Hall, was crowded to the door with young men, and scores had to be turned away for want of room. Personal testimonies of thrilling interest were given by several of the young converts. On Monday the meeting had to be held in the church, and on the following evening the lecture-hall was again crammed to the door, and an "overflow" even larger than the parent meeting was simultaneously convened in the church. The interest was maintained all through the week, and the workers are greatly encouraged, and look forward to a month of great blessing. In none of the districts of London has there been such a good start for the young men's work. The Christian young men of the district are entering into it with great energy, and no young man can come within a thousand yards of the hall without getting a pressing invitation to the meeting. Young men's meetings have now been started in many parts of London, and fresh fields are being attached every week. The Y.M.C.A. at Camden Town begin their series this week, and if the faith of the workers is any guarantee of success, good results are more than a certainty. The West-end meeting has been transferred to the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. in Great Marlborough-street, and all the friends of the young men's movement in the West-end are invited to rally round Mr. Pearce and his co-workers, whose faith has been so much tried by their temporary exile in Oxenden Chapel. The Islington meeting put forth an extra effort last week, which, we believe, met with every encouragement. Reports from Liverpool are still most cheering, and the interest among the young men is still as wonderful as ever. We are glad to hear that the Manchester young men are trying to follow their example, and have taken a Circus in a leading thoroughfare, where, on Saturday night, they began a work of which we shall hope to hear more by-and-by.

VICTORIA THEATRE.

These meetings, conducted by Major Cole, and now in their fourth week, have been growing from the beginning. On Sunday last, at three p.m., he addressed Christians. It was the largest number of Christians gathered at the theatre since the meetings began.

Though his address was exclusively to Christians, at the close he gave a word of invitation to any poor wanderer from God to remain and talk with Christians. Among the number was a poor dissipated woman, twenty-eight years of age, who, not quite ten years ago, left her husband (in her own words, "a noble true husband"). "A dear Christian mother has been trying to save me. I have two sweet little girls. But I am lost! lost! lost!"

There was an air of refinement that drew one to her, and her humility and longing to be saved from her sin—drink—made those who conversed with her believe she was sincere. She was able to say at the close of the evening meeting, "I will trust myself with Jesus. He has saved me." We believe He has. May her mother be blessed in trying to lead the wanderer that has returned home to a mother's love—and her little ones.

On Sunday evening at 7.30 Mr Smith, with his silver cornet, was at his post, Mrs. Cole at the organ, and the choir with them. Soon the sweet music was floating on the air, with the familiar words—

"Sweetest notes in seraph song,
Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung—
Jesus, blessed Jesus."

and as the outside gate and doors were thrown open, the call was responded to by the gathering outside; many who,

a few days since, were lost, came in singing, with their faces all aglow, "Jesus, blessed Jesus."

By eight o'clock there was a greater number present than at any preceding meeting, large numbers standing in the passage way and court. Major Cole spoke from John vii. 37: "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink." During the address the entire chapter of the seventh of John was touched upon, and in such a manner that the audience were held as closely as when giving the most interesting incident. Certainly we felt we were at Jerusalem, and our blessed Jesus was being accepted by some and rejected by others.

God honoured his word, as the second meeting on the stage was literally packed with Christians and inquirers. God has certainly placed his seal upon this work in the Victoria Theatre, for it is the work of the Holy Spirit. Among the most active labourers in the inquiry-meeting may be seen young converts.

On Thursday evening four women were led to decide for Christ through the singing of "Almost persuaded" by Mr. Smith and Mrs. Cole. Two of the number were seen last night pointing this one and that one to Jesus; and we could hear, "Simply trust Him," "Just trust Him, my friend," "He will receive you," etc.

A lady who found Christ at one of the meetings last week, and who is now going to Canada with her husband (who was miraculously saved from the ill-fated "Vicksburgh" recently crushed in the iceberg), desires the prayers of Christians that God's goodness in sparing his life and in leading her to Christ may be the means of drawing him to our loving Saviour.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING, VICTORIA THEATRE.

After an exposition of the first Psalm by Mr. Moody, reports were called for.

Mr. Paton read some extracts from letters bearing testimony to the work, notably one from a clergyman's daughter, who stated she had never before been spoken to personally about salvation. He made an earnest appeal to parents on this point.

Mr. Sankey intervened with his sweet hymn, "I am praying for you," and followed it with earnest prayer that a blessing might rest on the preached gospel everywhere.

Rev. Thomas Richardson spoke of the blessing received by ministers of the East-end, and now being communicated to their congregations. He urged his brethren to cultivate more the habit of personal conversation with people about their souls. He told of the "gleaning" at Bow-road Hall, which he said was almost better than the "vintage."

Rev. E. Taylor, of Norwood, gave a very striking case of conversion he had met with at Camberwell, told in a very touching way.

A gentleman told of two friends who had come up by excursion train from Hampshire, had both found a Saviour, and were going back rejoicing. After another encouraging instance of conversion, Mr. Moody closed with prayer.

LEEDS CONVENTION, JULY 24 TO AUG. 2.—Arrangements are being perfected for this meeting, which, it is expected by its friends, will be larger than the one at Brighton. George Pearce, Esq., 9, Paternoster-row, London, E.C., is the honorary secretary for the invitations to continental pastors. It is proposed to invite one hundred, and to furnish return tickets and entertainment at Leeds.

PORTSMOUTH.—Mr. Dowkontt writes informing us of special services in connection with the Royal Counties Agricultural Society, and adds: "During the last three months great blessing has attended our labours in the reclamation of the fallen. Mr. Christian and Miss White of the Midnight Meeting Movement came down in March and assisted in starting the work. Six midnight meetings have since been held, a temporary refuge started, and a ladies' committee formed, and the result has been that no less than 49 have come to the 'Refuge,' of whom 24 are in 'Homes,' 3 at the hospital, 3 at their own homes, and 8 are in service; one of the latter, who was led to Christ in the refuge, is in service with a lady who was converted through hearing our dear brother Mr. Moody, in London, a few months since. Others there are who have become new creatures in Christ Jesus,

THANKSGIVING MEETING OF MINISTERS.

Mr. D. L. Moody desires to meet the ministers of the gospel for praise and thanksgiving prior to his return to America. He therefore proposes a meeting to be held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Monday, July 12th, from two till five o'clock, to receive their testimony relative to the Lord's work during the time he has been in the United Kingdom. Those who propose being present are requested to apply for tickets of admission, and naming the congregation to which they minister. Those who cannot attend the meeting, and yet desire to bear witness to blessing received either by themselves or their congregations, are requested to communicate with Mr. Moody, care of Capt. Moreton. All communications and applications for tickets to be addressed to Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, London, N.

MR. MOODY AND THE HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITORS.

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Mr. Moody has expressed a desire to meet the house-to-house visitors and superintendents, in Mildmay Conference-hall, on Saturday evening next, June 26, at seven o'clock. It is intended that the meeting should be confined exclusively to these superintendents and visitors, as they, without admitting any strangers, are sufficient to fill this large hall twice over. Admission, therefore, has, of necessity, to be by ticket only, and the tickets are supplied to the superintendents for their visitors, on the application of the superintendents at the House-to-house Visitation Office, 48, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

The tickets are not transferable to strangers, and therefore it is desired that the superintendents confine their applications for those of their visitors only who intend to be present, and immediately to return any tickets not so required.

For this unusual gathering of thousands of volunteers, all engaged in one object, with all classes of the population, most earnest special prayer is desired.

A very few tickets will be reserved for the superintendents and visitors (applying through their superintendents) of Dublin, Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol, and the other towns where this visitation has been taken up; but these must be applied for by letter at the latest on Thursday, or personally on Friday next.

As was stated in THE CHRISTIAN last week, there are still a few districts spotted over London for which superintendents are needed, and it is very much desired that these should be taken up ere Mr. Moody leaves. But besides this, there are some noble superintendents who are toiling in very large districts almost single-handed, or with far too few visitors helping. Some of these are tried ones who have borne the burden and heat of the day for years. They have forsaken ease and fashion, and have sought out poverty, misery, fever, famine, and distress. This I know. God knows it, and I can scarcely write as I dwell on these workers, but am driven from contemplating such labourers to appeal to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest, for it is indeed plenteous; but such toiling ones as these are few (Matt. ix. 37, 38). To Him—to Himself is the appeal. Will He refuse to answer? Never! He will—this Lord of the harvest will, give the word, and great shall be the company of those that publish it. (Psalm lxxviii. 11.)

May the thousands here and throughout Britain who have, as it is called, "found peace," go everywhere and hunt for and find misery, and poverty, and distress, as Jesus went about doing good, and then how many gloomy homes of England shall be made to smile indeed. An army of visitors, who have now gone through Manchester, Liverpool, and London, can bear witness that many of our aged, and sick, and widowed poor in the large towns are not looked after as Christ would have them.

When three thousand poor sinners were laid hold of by Christ at Pentecost, they straightway in their new mind, which was the mind of Christ, laid hold of the poor and the needy. (Acts ii. 45; iv. 35; vi. 1—6).

Many who read these words will speedily be scattered out of London. And let us pray that this house-to-house visitation may not only be scattered throughout Britain, but specially through the homes of the Continent, in no precise or formal way, but according to Acts viii. 4, in the natural, normal way of early Christianity; so amongst the large towns of America, amongst the seaports of the world, and especially amongst the heathen millions.

Where the more public preaching of the gospel exists, such visitation will be a great help to it, and will be greatly helped by it, as Mr. Moody's preaching has so greatly helped it in London; but where no public preaching can penetrate, still this may go like oil finding its way down into marble. And has not Christ told us to penetrate everywhere? (Mark xvi. 15.)

"THESE LITTLE ONES."

MATT. XVIII. 6—10.

A great responsibility has been laid on the Church. That command of long ago, "Feed my lambs," comes with renewed force to us in these days of blessing, when so many are being brought into the fold. How is the Church acting? Has she entered on this work with earnestness? There is joy in heaven in the presence of the angels at the sight of sinners returning to God. How is it among Christians? Does the same holy feeling of thankfulness fill their souls when they see so many entering the kingdom?

We know that some do feel joyful and thankful. Many are in sympathy in this great matter with the heavenly ones who see the Father's face continually. But sad it is to be obliged to say, with many Christians it is not so. There is a large body in the Church of those who for years have professed to know Christ, who yet turn away coldly from the young converts, who speak slightly of all outcome of new-born love and faith; who seem by their words and looks to say to their younger brethren, "We believe not in you; go back again to the world." Instead of a hand held out to help these trembling ones along the road to Zion, they, in fact, put a stumbling-block in their way.

To such Christians these words of our Lord's should come as a solemn warning, to take care of what they do, "Whoso shall offend (or cause to stumble) one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

In this verse, we see the Lord true to his parental character. These young believers are his little ones, his helpless ones, the babes of the heavenly family, wholly dependent upon their Father. And He is jealous for their welfare. No one can with impunity do them harm! Old professor, it may seem a small thing to you to speak slightly of one of these children of the kingdom; it may seem to be your duty to restrain their young love's enthusiasm, to throw doubt upon their profession. But sometimes, when thus engaged, let these words of our Lord come to your mind—stop and think that these are his little ones, who keeps safely all committed to Him, and that He says, "Whoso toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye." Say to yourself, "The most tenderly kept in an earthly family are the little ones, and the earthly is but a faint type of the heavenly. I have therefore sinned in this great matter; but I will sin no more. Lord, teach me to be tender with thy lambs."

As individuals and as a church, let us be then very watchful that neither by word, or deed, or look, we trespass in this matter of offending the lambs. Let even our thoughts be guarded. Further on, in the tenth verse, the Lord gives warning in this respect, when He says, "Take heed!" These words are the danger signal; and what follows? "That ye despise not one of these little ones." For many are the swift-winged messengers ready to bear on high the tale of their insults, and a ready access have these holy ones into the audience-chamber. They always behold the face of the Father.

Truly "they are well kept whom God keeps"; so fear not, little ones; but fear all ye who think not with God in this matter.

TO OUR READERS.

Many of our readers can very effectually and largely increase our circulation, if they think the spread of the intelligence we publish is a worthy object, and if they will devote a little time and effort to the object.

A friend in a country village, remarkable for the "high" doctrine which prevails in the locality, has voluntarily undertaken to canvass the neighbourhood, and thus writes:—"It is a great happiness to me to know that the last two Numbers of THE CHRISTIAN are being read in nearly thirty families in this dark village. I see in this a door of hope for the place. I shall go round again to-day, to try to increase my subscribers."

A lady on the south coast also writes:—

"A few weeks ago, I ordered, through the book-stall at the railway-station, six copies of THE CHRISTIAN, for which I said I would be responsible if not sold. The experiment was successful, though I had great difficulty in getting the lads in waiting there to exhibit one, they always hiding them away under the Illustrated, Punch, etc. At last I threatened to make a complaint to head-quarters. This was successful, and they were all sold. Next week we had more, and so on for five weeks, till, on asking for one on Friday, they gave me their last (though a double number). I said, 'How many have you had this week?' 'Twenty-six,' was the answer; 'And how many are you going to order for next week?' 'Thirty-two.' So I thought I would tell you of the success. I give one copy in charge to the waiting-woman (who is a Christian), and it lies on the table (I let her take it home at the end of the week), and tell her if any one expresses a wish about it that copies are to be had at the book-stall. I hope the sale will go on increasing."

SUCCESSORS OF THE APOSTLES.

We turned into the People's Hall, Whitechapel, last week, where Mr. Booth and his fellow-workers were holding their anniversary meeting. On our arrival, the refrain of a hymn was being sung for the last time, loudly, not to say noisily, enough to offend a critical taste and a refined ear. Then followed prayer from two of the preachers; but though they cried with a loud voice, it was sometimes difficult to distinguish the prayer from the responses. This was a little trying, and an element almost ludicrous was introduced by a woman or a boy, who, in a shrill voice like a whistle, inserted an "Ah-meen," with, to say the least, unnecessary frequency. It was, we confess, difficult at once to realize that God was there; and an inward struggle went on for a while, in which we were trying to worship in spite of the seemingly undevotional mode of worship.

Soon, however, we got into the spirit of the meeting; and we have written our opening sentences for the purpose of emphasizing the wisdom of letting out our hearts in sympathy with men and brethren who are seeking the glory of God, and the salvation of souls, whether their method be or be not in harmony with our own taste, or our own school of thought.

The opening and hearty address of the chairman, Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, led the way for a very informal communication of the report by Mr. Booth, from which we learned that, during the year, five new stations have been opened—at Soho, Hammersmith, Cardiff, Stockton, and Middlesborough; that there are now twenty-eight paid workers in charge of stations, an increase of twelve on the previous year; that there have been held weekly 138 indoor services, an increase of 29, and 166 outdoor, an increase of 68; that the public speakers had increased from 235 to 325; that the average indoor attendance has almost doubled, from 10,760 to 19,540; that the number of inquirers has been 3141, an increase of 600; that three new halls, accommodating 1400, have been opened in London; and that the contributions of the people have amounted to the large sum of £2178, an advance of £695 upon last year; while the income from friends outside the Mission (for general purposes, exclusive of building) was £1900—less by £200 than was raised by the people themselves. We regard this as a most cheering statement, proving not only that the working-classes can be and are through this Mission reached by the gospel, but that they are willing to pay for it.

Mr. Stafford Allen, M.P., followed with several valid reasons for his love to the Mission, and then, interspersed with frequent opportunity for making a joyful noise unto the Lord, came a series of addresses from the preachers at various stations, which, wonderful for their rugged eloquence, and for the "dead earnestness" of the men, were still more remarkable for the signal victories won by the power of God over the strongholds of Satan, and the stalwart sinners who had become the obedient servants of Jesus Christ.

If Mr. and Mrs. Booth had done nothing more than call forth this grand band of devoted men from the haunts of sin to be preachers of God's gospel, they would have left a deep mark on their generation. We look back a dozen years, when Mr. Booth was called from his settled pastorate to this evangelistic enterprise, and we can but adore the glorious power which has produced such great results, and gathered so many thousands of the poor into the kingdom of God. When he was asked where he would get his preachers from, he replied, "Out of the public-house," and so he has. And when some of these rescued slaves of drink have been asked whence they expected to draw their congregations, they also have replied, "Out of the public-house," and so they have.

The experience of some of these preachers takes us back to the days of Wesley and Whitefield and Howel Harris, whose preaching ground was often like a battle-field, and who occasionally returned home covered with mud and blood.

Every heart was moved when Mrs. Booth, at the close, said that she thanked God for the past ten years, but they had been so filled up with labour and sorrow, as well as joy, that she was thankful they had been lived. Never mind, faithful hearts, you shall rest from your labours, and your works shall follow you, and when you fall, the friends whom you have made by the gospel shall receive you into everlasting habitations.

We invite our readers to transfigure the mammon of unrighteousness into righteous riches by imitating the wife of Herod's steward (Luke viii. 3; Matt. xxv. 40).

EVANGELISTIC WORK AT SOUTHAMPTON.

A great work has been going on here for several weeks past, and still continues. Charles Edwards, of the Evangelization Society, commenced to preach on April 23, and has continued almost without intermission to the present. The services have alternated between the Victoria Rooms, the Philharmonic Hall, and the Drill-hall of the Hants Artillery. These spacious rooms have been mostly full, and often overflowing; and when, on special occasions, two of these halls have been used simultaneously, they have been well filled. The preaching of the simple gospel has proved most acceptable to the people, and the effects have been most blessed. The Lord's people have been very much helped, both in getting clearer views of the great truths, and thus more solid peace, and also in getting into active work for the Master. Many a careless one has been drawn to the services, and, by God's grace, led to the cross. Some who have been inquiring for years, and yet have not found their souls' need, have been led to confident trust. Some of the cases of conversion have been very marked. The working and lower classes have been fairly reached, and most of the telling results have arisen amongst them. Many young men and women have decided for Christ, and are now actively engaged in promoting the success of the meetings.

It was felt that a united Conference on "Evangelization" would, under God, be conducive to bringing the Christians into yet more sympathy with the work, and one was arranged for Wednesday last, when there was an afternoon and evening meeting. Many friends came from neighbouring towns, and both meetings were crowded to their utmost limits, although admission was by ticket.

The subject for the afternoon was "Christian Unity," and for the evening, "Christian Work." The chairmen were Major-Gen. Tryon and R. C. Hankinson, Esq., and the speakers included the Rev. C. Melville Pym, Messrs. J. Weatherley, J. Wood, and C. Edwards, of the Evangelization Society; Mr. J. Fegan, of Deptford; Mr. R. C. Morgan; Rev. J. Bullen, and Mr. E. Ashby, the secretaries, and others.

The subjects were followed out in powerful addresses, and very enjoyable meetings took place. An evangelistic service was held the same evening in another hall, and after this a service especially for young men, who were addressed by Mr. Pym and Mr. Weatherley. A large meeting is expected on Monday last of working-men, in their working clothes, and provision will be made for supplying them with refreshments, so that they may leave their work and come directly to the service. Since this movement commenced, the waterside missionaries and Bible-readers have been much encouraged in their work, and doors have been opened to them which for years have been closed.

GLASGOW-GREEN GREAT TENT.

When the man who was journeying from Jerusalem to Jericho was stripped, and wounded, and left half dead, it was the good Samaritan that not only looked upon him but had compassion and "came where he was," in order that he might be lifted up out of his misery and cared for by him. The work on Glasgow-green now going on amongst the poor and wretched and down-trodden, is like this—it is going to where they are.

Ten minutes to eight o'clock on Lord's-day (13th), found us there, to see the first breakfast given to these poor ones in these summer quarters.

A large tent is erected, capable of holding 2000 people, furnished in the centre with seats and a platform, and with an harmonium and a good staff of singers. In a few minutes all begin to sing.

An old face and well-known friend to these poor ones is present, and will speak to them. He had been out to India to preach Jesus, and had only a day or two returned. This was the Rev. A. N. Somerville.

The hundreds of children, which form a fringe of about ten deep to the centre mass of faces, are asked to be quiet while a blessing is asked by Mr. Scott; and then, out from behind the platform are run basket barrows of bread and cheese. The bright eyes of the children, and pale faces of the older ones, tell that these bundles of food will be well appreciated. Long rows of bright cans filled with hot tea are all ready, and in a few moments the hundreds of willing workers are feeding them all.

Half-an-hour seems to go very quickly, and Mr. Somerville spoke of Jesus to them in telling language. The One who is now "mighty to save." Never were words more eagerly listened to. Tears ran down the cheeks of unhappy mothers and wicked fathers as he asked them, in the name of Jesus, to let God save them now.

Miss Bonar then sang a sweet hymn, which I think is quite new—"Who will be the next to follow?" Dr. Wallace had by this time arrived to speak to them. I shall never forget the short but earnest address he gave. He had heard the words from the lips of Miss Bonar, and he would like to know "Who would be the next to follow?" He told of one who heard him preach years ago in the theatre, and was impressed, and asked him to meet him at the Monument at ten o'clock at night. He went, and found a man who had been very successful in business, but through "drink" had only the banks of the Clyde for a sleeping-place. He received Christ, became a total-abstainer, and for fear he should break the pledge, wore it round his neck next to his body. He had followed Christ and died and gone to glory. "Who would be the next to follow?" he asked. The voice of the speaker faltered, and the tears stood in his eyes as he asked this, and looking on the vast sea of faces, said, "Will it be you, Mary?" "Will it be you, Thomas?" "Will it be you, Jeannie?" Men were broken down and sobbed, and on all sides it was a scene of the Spirit's deep work. Under this canvas roof, and by the river side, these masses of people hear the word of life; and, which is so like the Master's way, have the food provided for them for nothing.

We left the tent deeply moved with this work, and the impression produced by it is that it is of God, and is a mighty means of getting thousands to hear the gospel that will not go to any other place. I felt, as a stranger from London, a yearning desire to do something more than we ever have done to get the sweet story of the Cross to be heard by the teeming thousands of our great cities.

HANWELL.—On Tuesday week we had a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord when special services were held in Union Church, "from early morn to dewy eve." Many local ministers, as well as eminent preachers from London and other places, took part in the meetings, and it was felt to be a most profitable season.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES, GLASGOW.

The following communication, which comes to us anonymously, under date June 5, is very encouraging to us in many ways, showing as it does how the Lord is still working among us, and that He is owning our efforts in other directions in our desire to win souls among the young.

"A mother desires to render thanks to our heavenly Father for another lamb safely gathered home, a boy of six years of age. He greatly enjoyed, and was much benefited by, attendance at the children's Saturday meetings. The good Samaritan was the last lesson he heard there. The mother desires to express her heartfelt thanks to the gentleman who gave the address on Abraham offering up his son Isaac. That lesson seems to have shown her boy, as he had never seen it before, the great love of the Father in giving up his Son to death for us. On the evening of the day he heard that lesson, he said to his mother, 'Do you know who I love best?' 'Yes,' said his mother, 'I think it is Jesus.' He replied, 'Yes, I love Jesus, but I think I love God just as well.' The mother prays that a rich and continuous outpouring of the Spirit may be granted at these Saturday meetings, so that all the children may be led to Jesus."

The two lessons above referred to form portion of a series, illustrated by very beautifully painted life-size oil paintings, on cloth. These are the work of half-a-dozen gentlemen artists in the city, and were originally painted for the children's Sabbath afternoon meetings in the Drill-hall, already noticed in your columns, when about twelve hundred of the poorest and most miserable of our street children are being gathered in, taught both by ear and eye, and fed. These illustrations have proved so successful in interesting the motley gathering, that it is the intention of the originator of the scheme greatly to extend the series. This he is enabled to do by the kind assistance of his willing coadjutors, the artists above referred to, who are delighted to find that they can employ their talent so directly in the cause of their divine Master. And what has been found so useful in the case of the poor and ill-taught gutter children, the touching communication given above shows to be equally adapted to the case of the carefully nurtured lambs in our Christian households, who are brought, Saturday after Saturday, to the Ewing-place children's meeting.

LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

FOURTH BAND FROM THE GLASGOW ORPHAN HOMES.

Another milestone has been reached, and as the summer again returns, we have to think of starting in life those dear children who have been rescued and trained, for the most part, during the past year.

The Lord's hand has been manifestly with us all the way through, guiding us in every step. Many objections are raised to the children leaving this country, but that this is the best way to secure the greatest results, has been fully manifested in the cases of those who have gone out in previous years. This fourth party numbered sixty-five in all; fifty-one from the Glasgow Home; seven from Edinburgh, and seven from Leith. Not a child has been sent away, except those who have been specialy paid for. I mean that friends contributing the £10 for each child have specialy wished it to be devoted to emigrating one to Canada. A more interesting band of children we have never had, and we were cheered by the presence of our dear friend, Miss Macpherson, at the farewell meetings. On Monday afternoon a number of friends met to commend the children to the care of our heavenly Father, and in the evening all the relations of the children were invited to meet them at tea. On Tuesday the vessel sailed, and the last service held in the Home was peculiarly interesting and touching. After a little reading, and a few parting words to the children from Mr. Quarrier (who has been the means, in God's hand, of carrying on this work in Glasgow), he, in the name of the boys of the Home, presented a handsome Bible to the matron and her husband as a token of esteem. The money had been saved up among the boys from their "reward pennies," and their spending it in this way is a marked proof of their gratitude.

An omnibus was in waiting to convey the children to the ship; and as they left for the ship, tears were not wanting, as they left the only place they ever knew as home. The interest of the general public in the children was very manifest, for the road was lined with people as the children passed, and at the wharf many thousands had gathered to witness the departure, whose cheers and good wishes followed them.

The Messrs. Allan, with their usual kindness, had made every possible arrangement for the comfort of the children, and the officers and crew of the good steamer "Waldensian" were not wanting in doing their part. As the vessel sailed from the wharf, that appropriate hymn was sung—

"Shall we ever all meet again?"

and responded to—

"Yes, we may all meet again;

If not on earth, in heaven we may all meet again."

And we have good hope too that those who have left for Canada will meet us on the other shore, where parting will be no more; for many of them have given evidence that they have indeed passed from death unto life; and it is our earnest desire and prayer that these dear ones who have been told of Jesus here will go forth unto that new land as little missionaries, carrying the glad news of a Saviour's love wherever they go. We ask your prayers, beloved friends, that they may have a good voyage, and be much blessed on board the ship.

There are still thirty-seven children in the Homes who are either not suitable for Canada, or require more training before we could send them, and many more are anxious to gain admission; so, in the name of the Lord, we go into another year's work, depending wholly upon Him for all we need.

Glasgow, June 18.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The monthly meeting of workers took place on Wednesday. The attendance was thin, owing to the number of other meetings, but, nevertheless, the hour sped as happily as it has ever done, and all seemed in a prayerful spirit. Mr. Merry asked special praise for the safety of Miss Macpherson and himself, who, on a journey from Scotland that day, had been exposed to great danger of a railway accident of a serious nature.

Mr. Thom gave a good report of the success of the Home at Hackney, where he believed much quiet but real work was going on in the hearts of the children. Mr. Hudson Taylor spoke most impressively of the needs of the nine unevangelized provinces of China, and amongst other facts that made the heart sad, mentioned that in one alone of these there are sixty millions of children under ten years of age, and earnestly appealed to those present, "What are you going to do for these sixty millions of children?" The last half hour was given to particulars of the Home Mission connected with the institution. A good band of young men gave information of their various departments of work, adult classes, house-to-house visitation, work in the lodging houses, etc. Their brief statements were full of prayerful zeal, tempered with humility, and Miss Macpherson never seemed happier or more encouraged in all branches of her enterprise. It was proposed that the next meeting should consider the subject of Home Missions, and how to forward their operations. It is hoped that the next band of children will sail in the middle of July.

"THE CHRISTIAN" ABROAD.

Some of your readers are in the habit of sending their copies of THE CHRISTIAN to ministers in the colonies. It may encourage them to read the following extract from a letter of a Canadian pastor, to whom I had posted THE CHRISTIAN for some time. As he was unknown to me, except by name and address, fearing this paper might not reach him, I wrote to ascertain the fact, and in reply received the following information:—

"It comes very regularly, and is gladly received. I have read it with inspiring interest. It has promoted in me more and more of the evangelistic spirit; I am now in the midst of such labours among my own people. Many are seeking, and four have last week found the Saviour. I am sending out again your little papers, that they may continue in well-doing."

It is surely unnecessary to add a word in order to induce others to aid the great object of your paper in this simple way.

REST FOR THE WEARY.—Can any of your readers give information of decent, respectable places where weary labourers in the Lord's vineyard could spend a fortnight or so by the seaside, at moderate charges?

"A DAY IN THE COUNTRY."

What with our Bank Holidays, Saturday half-holidays, and quick modes of transit, every weary Londoner, who has a few shillings to spend, can now enjoy this inexpressibly precious boon. But how many thousands of our poor fellow-townsmen, women, and children, have scarcely got enough to eat and to wear—certainly nothing to spend. None the less do they long for and need the pleasant change and happy associations that a day in the country brings in its train.

Will our friends who are favourably situated in this respect assist us to gratify our less favoured brethren and sisters, and especially the little ones? We have received appeals from the following Missions, and shall be happy to dispense any aid our readers may send us:—

Hackney-road Mission, E. John Girling, Hon. Superintendent.

Bycross-street Ragged-school and Mission. George Fraser, Hon. Secretary.

Watercross-sellers' and Flower Girls' Gospel Mission. J. A. Groom, Secretary.

The "Good Shepherd" Christian Mission. D. Anderson, Hon. Secretary.

New Cut Mission-hall Sunday-school. Benjamin Kay, Superintendent.

Homerton Ragged-school and Gospel Mission. B. Heward, Secretary.

Old Ford Mission. Mr. Farnan.

Gray's-yard Ragged-school. Edwin Humfrey, Hon. Secretary.

Kentish Town Ragged-schools. J. Mercer.

Sunday-schools, Clerkenwell. Rev. A. S. Herring.

CROMER MISSION.

This quiet town on the Norfolk coast, far from the sound of railway whistle, and still free from gaslight, has just had a week of Mission services. The special preacher was the Rev. James Malcolmson, of Deptford. That a rich and full blessing might accompany the setting forth of "the unsearchable riches of Christ," no denominational barrier was allowed to mar that calm and sweet spirit of Christian union which exists at Cromer, and which has been strengthened and nourished by the prayer-meetings at Colne House, the residence of Lady Buxton.

The esteemed and laborious vicar, Rev. F. Fitch, formed a band of pious men and women, Church people, Wesleyans, etc., to go from house to house, and cottage to cottage, so that every soul in the parish might have an earnest, loving, special call to attend the gospel feast. So hearty were the people, that the shopkeepers gladly closed their doors at a quarter to seven o'clock each evening, to enable their assistants to be present at the late service.

Night after night a thousand earnest and anxious men and women met together in Cromer Church, to listen to the gospel, and to learn of the love, grace, and power of Jesus. About a hundred fishermen, pictures of health and strength, raised their hearty voices in singing "Hold the Fort."

When the people assembled for prayer in the schoolroom and on the lawn, at Colne House, every heart seemed to be kindled anew by God's Spirit. Believers in the Son of God were edified and comforted; and those who had hitherto been careless and neglectful, were mercifully brought to seek and find the Redeemer. Between two and three hundred of God's children took "bread and wine," in remembrance of their crucified Lord.

The last service was one of "thanksgiving," and fervent indeed were the praises which ascended to Him in whose name, and love, and fear the Mission was begun, continued, and ended. "The Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations" (Psa. c. 5). J. C. P.

"SINGING FOR JESUS."—I work in an engineering factory, among some eighteen lads; and on being brought to the Lord in September last, I began to pray unceasingly for my shopmates. Before I was converted, there was but one Christian among about two hundred men. Until a month ago, I could see no answer to prayer; then, in three weeks, three were brought to the feet of the Saviour, principally through my singing at my work; and, as they have since told me, I always looked (and I was too) so happy. The good Lord is still working in our midst mightily. H. S.

ORPHAN HOME, HACKNEY.—The annual meeting of Mrs. Parson's Orphan Home was held this week, when the report was read and various subjects for praise were brought forward. Twenty-seven children are now in the Home, and it is greatly desired to have accommodation for a larger number, as applications are frequently being refused. The present occupants gave the best and strongest testimony to the value of the training of the Home by their pleasant appearance and happy faces. Many, too, have been soundly converted to God.

The present widely-spreading evangelistic movement is daily calling out new tract-distributors, and the appeals for tracts are altogether beyond our power to supply. If, therefore, those of our readers who are not called to this work themselves, but who have confidence in tract-distribution as one of God's means of spreading the gospel of his Son, will contribute to our Tract Fund, they will usefully employ many zealous young converts, who are as unable to buy tracts as others are to distribute them.

NOTICES.

HELVETIA HOUSE.—Home for Foreign Governesses, who are either disengaged, friendless, or suffering. Invalid Homes at Seaside, medical treatment free.—Among thirty thousand foreign teachers in England, great numbers are dismissed for eight weeks during the vacations, some in June, and thousands on July 22. Those generous Christians who received homeless strangers last year had the joy to bring them to Christ, and it is again in the name of the Lord that this appeal is made. Some, who were only recently converted through Mr. Saphir's preaching, would think it the highest privilege to spend their vacations in a Christian family, whilst others also long for light and peace.

NORTH WALES.

The Christians of Llandudno and Penmaen-Mawr have had a time of refreshing during a twelve days' visit of Mr. Denham Smith to them. Great love and unity were manifested by all classes of Christians, and Mr. Smith spoke to large audiences, in the Presbyterian, Welsh Baptist, Methodist, and Congregational Chapels, as well as at the Cambrian Sanatorium and St. George's Hall. The presence of the quickening Spirit of God was blessedly realized in every service, and many never seen in a place of worship were won to the feet of Jesus.

A SCOTCH HYMN.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation."—JOHN XVI. 23.

Gang in gladness, Christian freens, tae yon sunny, sunny hame,
Whaur earth's mony, mony waes ye sall never taste again;
There are thoosan's about us that wad like tae see us fa',
But through oor Elder Brither we will overcome them a'.

There are blossoms that hae budded, been blihted i' the cauld,
An' lammies that hae perished, because they left the fauld;
But cower in aneath His wings wha died upon the tree,
An' gaithers in His bosom helpless weans like you and me.

In the warl there's tribulation, in the warl there is wae;
But the warl it is bonnie, for oor Faither made it sae;
Then brichten up yer armour, an' be happy as ye gang;
Tho' yer sky be aften clouded, it winna be for lang.

D'ye see Him gaun foremost, d'ye see His thorny croon?
Are ye watchin' hoo He's conqur rin, and trampin' foemen doon?
Just press ye on ahint Him, dinna wanner far awa,
But bide ye near oor Captain, an' through Him we'll conquer a'.

Oh, the years they pass awa', like the snaw-flake on the river!
If we dinna tak' Him noo, He may gang frae us for ever;
But then if we tak' Him noo, oh how happy we will be!
Ye ken, we're wearin' aye the nearer to oor ain countrie.

Oh, the bicker an' the din, an' the sabs o' weary men!
They are aften sair to bear, but they're comin' tae an en'.
Oh, the birdie's sang is sweet in the sunny month of June;
But the music o' His foot has a sweeter, sweeter soun'!

Sae, then, dinna look forfoughten, but min' there's help abune,
An' the sabbin' an' the sighin' will a' be ended sune;
The cluds that wreathe the hill-tap gang awa' at break o'day;
Sae will it be wi' us, freens, for oor Faither wills it sae.

Then buckle on oor panoply, an' sing we as we gang,
The sough o' Jordan's river-wave will gladden us ere lang;
For through Him we've conquered a', and to Him let praise ascen'.

Hosanna and hosanna! Hallelujah to the en'!

Jesus errettet mich jetzt.

JNNIG.

NACH EINER ENGLISCHEN MELODIE.

1. { Hörst es, ihr lie - ben, und ler - net ein Wort, Das euch zum Se - gen ge - setzt, . . }
 { Sprech es mir nach, und dann sagt's wei - ter fort : " Je - sus er - ret - tet mich jetzt. " . . }

Sind eure Sünden gleich blutroth und schwer,
 Ist das Gewissen verletzt,
 O so sprecht gläubig (vergeast es nicht mehr) ;
 " Jesus errettet mich jetzt."

Wenn euch die Welt mit Versuchung anficht,
 Satan euch nachstellt und hetzt,
 So wiederholt es und fürchtet euch nicht,
 " Jesus errettet mich jetzt."

Wenn euch in Leben manch' Trübsal and Noth
 Thränend die Wange benetzt,
 Sagt nur ganz ruhig im Aufblick and Gott :
 " Jesus errettet mich jetzt."

Kommt ihr dann hin zu dem finsternen Thal,
 O so sprecht jubelnd zuletzt :
 Nun geht's zur Herrlichkeit, freut euch zumal,
 " Jesus errettet mich jetzt."

The following has been written as a translation of the above, transposing the third and fourth verses. Your readers will, perhaps, improve this translation, or write a new one, or compose a new hymn, as they may feel disposed.

Hearken, beloved, and learn this grand truth ;
 Learn it, and heaven you know ;
 Sing it together in age and in youth—
 " Jesus saves me now."

CHORUS—Jesus saves me now,
 Jesus saves me now ;
 Yes, Jesus saves me all the time—
 Jesus saves me now.

If sin defleth with deep crimson stain,
 Doubts ne'er one moment allow ;
 Trustfully, joyfully sing forth again—
 " Jesus saves me now."

If tears of sorrow your face should bedew,
 If grief should heart-furrows plough,
 Cheerfully sing forth this truth ever new—
 " Jesus saves me now."

What though the world and the devil allure,
 Tempting to yield up your vow ;
 God's word is certain, experience is sure—
 " Jesus saves me now."

When to the lonely, dark vale you must come,
 Glory will beam on your brow ;
 Triumphant shout, " Angels welcome me home ;
 Jesus saves me now ! " J. M.

A NEW HYMN WANTED.

While R. Pearsall Smith was preaching in Carlsruhe, Baden, he remarked :—" I can speak but one sentence in German, but that one, spoken in faith, is enough to carry me safely all through life, and finally up into glory." The sentence is, " Jesus errettet mich jetzt." Pastor Ernst Gebhardt, of Zurich, the Sankey of Switzerland, caught up the thought, and wrote the hymn, " Jesus saves me now."

It has been caught up over Germany, and sung by tens of thousands ; and hundreds, it is said, trace the reception of saving faith to the singing of this hymn of present realization, which has its application not only to deliverance from the guilt, but also from the power of sin.

At the breakfast of Continental pastors, attention was called to the argument of Paul as to the character of our Lord, based on the letter " s." He saith not, " And to seeds, as of many ; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." So the gospel is not, " Save me, Jesus ! " but " Jesus saves me." The German chorus was translated into French, Italian, and other languages, and one of the most touching scenes of our lives was to hear the same thought sung in a chorus of so many languages at once, by brethren from twenty nationalities.

It is now decided, while retaining this chorus, to have, in a new edition of the " Hymns of Faith and Consecration," used at Brighton, a hymn expressing present salvation from the guilt and also from the power of sin. Will our friends who have the gift of song do their best, and send their verses to R. Pearsall Smith, Monkham, Woodford, Essex, not later than June 29th, by whom they will be gratefully acknowledged ?

N.B.—The tune requires the metre to be 10.7.10.5. The last line of each verse must be, " Jesus saves me now."

"FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE."

ADDRESS BY MR. MOODY TO THE SUPERINTENDENTS AND VISITORS OF THE HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

In the course of his remarks at the meeting of visitors at Mildmay Conference-hall, on Saturday evening last, and after hearing various reports as to the London visitation, Mr. Moody said:—

What these men have told us has set me all on fire. It has carried me back to the days when I used to be visiting from house to house; and I learned this by experience, that the first time you visit a house, you do not accomplish much. The second time you will do more, and the third time still more. If you, friends, have got a district to visit, I hope you will keep to it, and will not think of giving it up. The oftener you go, the more they will welcome you; and those who, perhaps, have slammed the door in your face will open, not only their doors, but their hearts, and will be glad to receive you in a little while.

There is one district in Chicago that I had for twelve years, and every year my influence increased there. When I first commenced, it seemed as if the very stones in the walls and on the side-walk frowned on me. There were whole streets where there was not a door open to receive me. There is not a family now but would welcome me—Jews and Gentiles, Roman Catholics and Protestants; but it took a long time to do it.

Let me give you a few facts. I remember once getting a young lady into my Sabbath-school. She was a Roman Catholic, and her brother was studying to be a priest. She had got a Testament at the Sabbath-school; and her brother, when he came home, found it out; her mother had told him. The mother could not keep her away from the school, and the daughter had locked her Testament in her trunk. When the brother heard of it, he broke open the trunk, and burned the Testament. I went to the house, as she ceased to attend, and found she was not at home. Some time after, she came to me, and said she could not attend any more on account of her brother. I watched my chance. I thought the brother would, perhaps, be reached some time, in some way. Every vacation, when he came home, he was very bitter against our school. One day, however, he was sick, and I thought, "Now is my opportunity." I went to the house, and sat right down by the bedside, and began to talk to him. I did not talk about his soul, or about religion; I spoke about his sickness, and asked if I could do anything for him. I went out, and got some fruit for him. He asked me to come back again; and after I had gone, he asked his mother who I was. She told him. Well, he had asked me to come back again, and he did not know what to do. However, the door was opened to me, and, to make a long story short, the young lady soon after found peace in believing. They were both consumptive, and she shortly afterwards died a triumphant death. I did what I could to keep him comfortable in his last days, and he too died a most triumphant death. I was thinking to-day of their being together in heaven. But it took day after day, and week after week, and month after month, of visiting and kindness to overcome their prejudices. I do not believe there is a Roman Catholic family in London but could be reached. We do not want to talk against their religion, but simply to hold up Christ. I have had a rule for years in my church, that if any man talks against the Roman Catholics, I will be content to see him if I am anywhere near him.

Then I know that Roman Catholics are very much opposed to receiving tracts, so I never give them a tract. We get pictorial papers, such as the British Workman, and there is no Roman Catholic family which would not be glad to get a good pictorial paper. We put a notice of our Sabbath-school and prayer-meeting on these papers, and these get carried into the homes. We have circulated thousands on thousands of these papers, and I do not know that I have seen half-a-dozen of them torn up. If you want to win the mothers, get hold of the children. Sometimes the children invite you back, so that you have an excuse for going, and if you take a few pictorial papers with you, they will be glad to see you.

Then there are the publicans, of whom we speak so much, and whom we condemn so much in our meetings. I believe they can be reached if we go to them in the spirit of the Master. It may take long months or years. Almost the last man to join our church before I left was a publican, a man I had been after for twelve years. I suppose I have been at his house from 200 to 300 times, and have spent two or three days, if it were put together, talking with that man. One day we said we would call on our friend D—. We went, had prayer together, and asked him to the meeting. He came to the meeting, and the Lord met him there; he was converted. Very soon he brought his wife, and his daughter, and his son. He is out of that hellish traffic now and working for God; but it took twelve years to reach him. I do not believe you are going to do very much good by going once to these houses. Go every week, and there will be thousands of families reached in this way. Let us never give up a man, and bear in mind that we have God with us. He is above everything, and will help us if we only persevere.

I am coming to the conclusion that if we are to accomplish much, we must have more perseverance. Mr. Moody related, in illustration of what might be done by persistent effort, how he had been instrumental in the conversion of an atheistic publican, who had now given up that business, and, with his family, were now working in connection with his Church, and among his best friends, in Chicago.

Another thing we must have, boldness. If God is with us, let us go into the darkest dens in all London and preach the gospel; God will go with us. I came home one day, and got a note from two men to be at the opening of a large billiard hall. I went and asked them if they were in earnest. Yes, they said, they were. Very well, I said, I would come; had they any objection to a friend coming with me? No. I told them that if anything went wrong I might call on my friend. Oh, they said, they did not want to have any praying. I said I could not go where I could not take my Master with me, and where I could not pray to Him. Well, they said, I had better not come. But they had invited me to come. Oh, they did not want me. But I said I was coming. Well, they would not let me in. So I asked if they would compromise the matter by letting me pray now. In order to get out of it they let me pray. I got down between those two rum-sellers, and prayed that God's withering curse might rest on their business, and that their souls might be saved. I believe God helped me to pray; at all events, in three months that billiard hall and public-house were closed up, and one of these men is now a shining light in our city. The time has come to open a war of aggression upon the enemy. During our war, the generals who were all the time on the defensive never succeeded, but those who took the aggressive and carried the war into the enemy's camp carried all before them. Supposing they do slam a few doors in our faces. Shall we be above our Master? If we are to carry the gospel into these homes, let us go in his name; let us have more courage, and God will help us. He could not use Elijah when he was hiding away in the wilderness; but when he stood on Mount Carmel, against Ahab, and the whole nation, God could use him.

There was a time in our city when the Roman Catholics opposed me, so I thought I would go and see the bishop. I went to his house and rang the bell, and one of the sisters came to the door. I pressed right in before I got an invitation, and told her I wanted to see the bishop. She said I would have to write down what I wanted, and he would let me know. I told her it was a private matter, and that I must see him in person. He was very busy, she said, and I must come again. I said I would wait till he had leisure. She tried to get me to go out, but I had no idea of going out when I had once got in. Presently she went upstairs and told him. He came down, and received me very courteously. I thought I would just let him hear how I was converted. I told him how I had gone to work to try and reach some of the poorest, and how some of his people had come to oppose me by throwing stones and brickbats. I said if I was wrong and they were right, they ought to come to me in the spirit of the Master, and if I was right and they were wrong, surely I deserved to be treated better. Well, he said, if I would go into his church he would clothe me with power. But, said I, I was converted in a prayer-meeting, and you don't have any prayer-meetings; I do not know what I would do without the prayer-meeting. Then, I said, he allowed all these rum-sellers into his church; that I believed they were doing the devil's work; and if I were to join his church, I could not possibly have any fellowship with these men. Well, they had thought a good deal about that; but if they put them out of the church, they were afraid they would go down to purgatory. I said they would go to purgatory whether they were in the church or not. Well, he would not discuss that, but if I would go into the Roman Catholic Church I would have great power. After some conversation, he told me that only ignorant Roman Catholics thought it was wrong to pray with a Protestant; the intelligent ones would do so. Well, I asked would he pray with me. Oh, yes. Then let us pray together. We went down on our knees, and I prayed for him, and he prayed for me. I never heard a more orthodox prayer in my life. When we had prayed, he took me by the hand, and said I was the first Protestant who had ever come to him in the spirit of Jesus Christ, and that I should have no more trouble from his people. And as long as he lived I never had. There was not a minister in Chicago who treated me better. Let us go to them in the spirit of the thirteenth chapter of 1st Corinthians, and I do not believe there is a heart, however hard, or black, or depraved, but can be reached.

Let every worker who has taken a district go right on, visiting year in and year out. The longer you visit the more you will get blessed. Do not think of letting this work stop. I hope there will be something practical come out of this meeting, and that there will be a band of workers who will carry the gospel into the homes of the people. It is a very good thing to carry the gospel into China and India, and I hope those who go to these lands will be greatly multiplied. But there is plenty of work to do in this city, and each one of us ought to be missionaries. We speak of mission halls and churches; every church of God ought to be a mission church. If we have not the desire to go from house to house to tell the story of the cross, we have not the spirit of Christ.

At a subsequent stage of the meeting Mr. Moody strongly urged the formation of bands of Christian workers to go out in all parts of London on Sunday evenings and invite the people to the churches and chapels in the neighbourhood. He said that in Chicago they had a list of all the people in their district, with the churches and chapels they attended, and if there were those who went nowhere, they made special efforts to get them to go. He also laid great stress on kindness and attention being shown to strangers in a church, so as to encourage them to come back, and to feel that some one took an interest in them. Elsewhere we give a brief account of the meeting at Mildmay.

THE HOLY SPIRIT'S RELATION TO CHRISTIAN LIFE.

We all rejoice in believing that the divine Agent of our regeneration is the Holy Spirit. The new life, new nature, or new man, which is produced in us in regeneration, is born of the Spirit.

Do the New Testament scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit permanently dwells with and abides in the regenerate child of God? The answer is unequivocal: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. iii. 16.) "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" (1 Cor. vi. 19.) "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. viii. 9). These passages illustrate and fulfil our Lord's declaration concerning the Spirit of truth: "Ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John xiv. 17). Clearly, if any one be a regenerated child of God, in that person God the Holy Spirit dwells. This is the normal and constant condition. The passages quoted declare what is the fact as God is pleased to disclose it to us. It behoves Christians absolutely to believe, to repose heart-confidence in, these divine declarations. We must not wait until we feel that the Holy Spirit dwells in us, but believe it to be true on the authority of God's word, and true from the first hour of each Christian's life unto the last. Thus the Holy Spirit is revealed to us as being in the Christian always.

Another class of passages declares that the proper and habitual condition of the believer is that of being "in the Spirit." Thus, in Rom. viii. 9, we read, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you;" that is, upon the assumption that they were Christians, it was to be held as true that the Holy Spirit dwelt in each one of them, and equally true that each one was "in the Spirit." So again, we are said to have "joy in the Holy Spirit" (Rom. xiv. 7). Moreover, John tells us, in his first epistle (ii. 27), that "the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, . . . ye shall abide in Him."

The book of Acts describes the inauguration of the era of the dispensation of the Holy Spirit. The day of Pentecost was the fulfilment of the Baptist's announcement, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." The Pentecostal day was as truly special as the day of Christ's nativity in Bethlehem was special. Pentecost was emphatically the day in which the Lord baptized his disciples with the Spirit.

The case of Cornelius, narrated in detail in Acts x., is adduced as having some speciality characterizing it. It is said (ver. 44), "the Holy Spirit fell on all them which heard the word." The Jewish Christians were surprised because that on those who were not Jews "was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost." This was special, because the next verse says that they spoke "with tongues."

The ground upon which Peter urged their baptism in water was, not that they spoke miraculously, but because they had received the Holy Spirit as well as the Jewish believers. It is not called by the inspired writer a "baptism of the Spirit."

The narrative in Acts viii. 14—16, agrees with the account given in Acts xix. 1—7, in this, that in both instances there had been imperfect teaching, and that, consequent on the fuller teaching concerning Christ being set before them, both those at Samaria and those at Ephesus "were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." The inspired narration of these two examples shows that the apostles held that, as soon as persons truly believed the full doctrine of Christ's gospel, then they received the Holy Spirit. In neither case is it stated that it was "a baptism of the Spirit."

Such expressions as "Grieve not the Holy Spirit," "Quench not the Spirit," are in perfect accordance with the truth that the Holy Spirit abides in the Christian. The earthly father, though grieved by some actions of his child, does not think of abandoning the home circle. An act of disobedience toward God results in the obscuration of Christ's light in the soul, but does not cause the Holy Spirit to forsake it.

If it be asked, Where shall we find in Scripture full and clear teaching concerning the great truth of justification? we answer, in the Epistles. So, as to the great question of living: a sanctified life, we must ask Paul, Peter, John, James, and Jude for decisive teaching. What is there in the inspired Epistles to establish or favour the opinion that Christians, after they had been justified by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, were to seek, either immediately, or at some subsequent time, "a baptism of the Spirit"? We know of no single verse in these Epistles that either asserts or supposes any such thing. These Epistles do speak of saints as having "received," as possessing the Spirit, but they make no allusion to their having been baptized of or in the Spirit, nor do they urge believers to seek it.

St. Paul says to the Ephesian Christians, "Be filled with the Spirit." Several times reference is made to those who were "full of the Holy Ghost." This we understand as being in perfect harmony with the fact that they were possessed of the Holy Spirit. But this is a very different thing from an exhortation to seek a "baptism of the Spirit."

We know that the minds of many earnest Christians at Brighton were perplexed as to this matter. They did not see the solid platform of truth as to walking holly before the Lord, which is plainly revealed in the Scriptures. We most honour the Holy Spirit by using his truth, yea, Christ's truth, according to his own revealed will. To bid Christians to seek a "baptism of the Spirit," is to turn their attention in upon themselves and upon the conceived action of the Holy Spirit on the soul. The prerogative of the Spirit is to take of the things of Christ and reveal them unto us. Let believers but appropriate these most blessed truths with fullest confidence, making them the basis of every day's life; then will they experience the sweet peace, light, and power of walking in the Spirit without fulfilling the lusts of the flesh.

"In the last day, that GREAT DAY OF THE FEAST, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto ME, and drink. He that believeth on ME, as the SCRIPTURE hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on HIM should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that JESUS was not yet glorified" (John vii. 37—39).

RENFREW.—A good, steady evangelistic work has been going on at Renfrew since March, 1874, when a weekly gospel service was begun in the new Town-hall, and continued ever since. It has been blessed to many souls, especially to numbers of young men and women, who, a twelvemonth ago, were on the world's side, but who are now, by life and labour, helping on the work of God.

MEETING OF THE EVANGELISTIC CHOIRS.

Mr. Sankey desires to meet the members of the several choirs who have assisted him in the service of song at the special meetings in the north, east, west, and south of London, on Monday, July 12, at ten o'clock a.m., at Camberwell Hall (south side). After a service of praise and thanksgiving, continuing one hour, those holding choir tickets will join an excursion to the Crystal Palace.

BOYS' MEETING, ABERDEEN.

After Messrs. Moody and Sankey left this town, which they did on June 29, 1874, a men's meeting was carried on in Free Trinity Church each evening from eight to nine o'clock, in which not a few were led to decide for Christ. This meeting was continued without intermission until Tuesday, August 18, when a tea-meeting was held under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. Truly the Lord manifested his presence that night. From that date it was proposed to have the meetings on Tuesday, Thursday, and Sabbath evenings. It was also proposed to have a Boys' Prayer-meeting on Friday evenings from eight to nine o'clock in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and all the boys present who wished to become members were asked to remain at the close. A good number responded to the call, and on the following Friday the first meeting was held, at which there were about forty present.

Mr. Shirreffs, who is now secretary of the Y.M.C.A., was, and has been, chairman ever since, and it is to his untiring zeal, under God, that much of our success has to be ascribed. After this meeting the attendance gradually seemed to decrease, until at last it had come so low as eleven. Still the meeting went on, and some of those who had come from the first, still continued to do so, and often from the closet, as well as from the meeting, did the prayer arise, that the Lord would hear our cry, and begin a work in that place.

Gradually the number increased until it had reached between seventy and eighty. The prayers seemed more fervent, whilst one and another of the boys stood up and read a text, at the same time pleading with the unsaved ones present to come to Christ, telling them how happy they themselves were, and the result has been that not a few boys, we believe, have been savingly brought to a knowledge of the truth. At the last meeting several remained at the close, seeking to be pointed to that loving Saviour, and left rejoicing in having found Him.

The attendance still increases. At present there are 115 on the roll. A committee has been appointed, who go round and visit the boys at their homes when they are absent from the meeting. They have also commenced to go round several of the streets before the meeting commences, and invite boys to accompany them, and the effort has met with success. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name be the praise."

I trust you will give this a space in your valuable paper, as I think there should be such meetings held in every town. There may be many difficulties in the way; but it is not in our own strength we are to undertake any work for the Lord, but in his.

The Lord has greatly blessed the effort in Aberdeen. Will He not do so in other places? "And the boys grew."

We ask your earnest prayer for a great blessing on this and all similar meetings. ONE OF THE BOYS.

FAIRLOP SERVICES.—May I call the attention of your readers to the fact that the Fairlop Services will be held on the 2nd of July (Friday next), at the Rev. Archibald Brown's Tabernacle (see advertisement), close to the Bow-road Hall, and all that is required of Christian workers for admission, is their names and addresses, or particulars, and tickets will be sent to any applicant by return of post. Workers, and converts moved to begin lives of usefulness from the recent revival services, are especially invited. There is work in the East for more than the 1000 workers we are asking for at present.

G. J. KNIGHT.

MISSION AT CURZON CHAPEL, MAYFAIR.—A Mission-week is being held at the Rev. W. Haslam's church, Mayfair, conducted by the Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken. Many will remember what a time of blessing was enjoyed last year during a similar week of special services. We are unfeignedly glad to learn that Mr. Aitken, in view of the present need of, and vast openings for, evangelistic effort, has resigned his charge of Everton, and will devote himself to gospel work wherever God may lead him.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

Another Mildmay Conference has passed, and it has been as hallowed a season as any that have preceded it. That two or three thousand Christians should assemble together for three days to consider the Glory of the King, the Power of the King, the Presence of the King, is in every way an important and significant fact. It gives the honour where honour is due; it puts Christ, and not experience, in the foreground.

The subject proposed for consideration was second in importance to none which could be named, and one on which the Church of Christ needs as much instruction as on any other.

We do not attempt a verbatim report of the addresses, as a volume will, as usual, be issued, containing a full report, price 1s. 6d. paper, 2s. 6d. cloth, with 3d. extra for postage, obtainable from the Hon. Captain R. Moreton, Conference Hall, or by local purchasers, from Mr. Skinner, 88, Mildmay-park.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23.

MORNING MEETING.

Scarcely had the clock in the great hall ceased to strike the hour of eleven, when Mr. S. A. Blackwood, who presided, rose and, addressing a crowded meeting, said: Beloved friends, it is to meet, not each other, but "The King," that we are now come together. Let almost the first words that are heard be those of the King Himself, as found in Isa. vi. We will spend a moment or two in silent prayer before I read to you the Word, so as to prepare you to hear his voice.

After silent prayer, Mr. BLACKWOOD read the passage mentioned. Then was sung the hymn commencing—

"O holy, holy Father,
O Christ ascended high."

Rev. DANIEL WILSON, vicar of Islington, offered the opening prayer, and another hymn being sung,

Mr. BLACKWOOD said: Let me ask your attention for a few minutes only to a passage in 1 Chron. xii. We read there of a great conference. It took place at Hebron, which we know means "fellowship." And "truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." There were 240,822 persons there—a great deal larger than this. Part of the conference was composed of a number of people who, in previous days, had been looked upon with suspicion—the tribe of Reuben, the tribe of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh. In ver. 37, we read of them that they were no less than 120,000—half of the whole conference. They had left the place that they had chosen for themselves and their cattle on the other side of Jordan, and now, with perfect heart, they had come to Hebron to make David king.

And we read, in ver. 39, that "there they were with David three days, eating and drinking." And that is just what we have come for—one purpose at least—for three days' fellowship with "Great David's greater Son." He says, "Eat, O friends; drink, yes, drink abundantly, O beloved." "What their brethren had prepared for them." We read at the end of ver. 40, "There was joy in Israel." Now we believe our God has prepared for us, though our brethren have come with thoughts arranged, and words chosen and prepared. If their preparation is worth anything, it is of the Lord Himself, and we are not to look to them, but, as some one said this morning, at our early prayer-meeting, "We are not to look even through them to the Lord; but we are to see the Lord in front of them, and them behind Him."

One great feature of the company was—it is several times mentioned—they could keep rank. I think it has been a noteworthy feature of these Conferences, from the very commencement, and for which all praise is due to the Captain of our salvation, that our ranks have been kept, and that there has been no jarring, that there has been sweet, lively, happy harmony, because there has been "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." And we cannot but believe that this Conference will be signalized by the same. We may have differences of opinion on many points. We come not to discuss them, but we come to see the King, the Lord of Hosts, to hear of Him, to speak to Him, to behold his beauty. Looking away from the points wherein we differ, let us look at the great Centre of all, and let us keep in rank!

But the grand feature of this conference was that they all had one object. They came to make David king; not to look at him merely, but to make him king. And they came with undivided heart for this one great purpose—a perfect heart, a sincere heart, a guileless heart. This is expressed in ver. 38 in a negative form. Of Zebulun it is said, "They were not of double heart." What is a double heart? It is mentioned in Psa. xii. "With a double heart do they speak." These 240,000 and more had one object; they had a perfect heart in the matter. They had come from all quarters of the land to make David king. And the Lord says to us this morning, "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect." Surely we may be perfect in this matter. The one great object of each soul here to-day shall be TO MAKE JESUS KING. Not to make Him King in one sense. We shall hear of his coronation by men, and of his coronation by the Father. He is KING. "Yet have I set my King on my holy hill of Zion," saith God. We cannot make Him King in this sense; but cannot we make Him King more fully than ever in our own hearts? What will it profit us if we hear of the glory of the King to-day, and see some of it, as we trust we shall? What shall it profit us to hear of the power of the King to-morrow, or to realize the presence of the King, not only on the third day, but now, unless there is the making Him King now and in every heart here? This Conference will be but an occasion of loss to your souls unless you come to Hebron to-day with a perfect and sincere heart, and with the one object paramount, to let Jesus be King, though He rule in the midst of his enemies. Surely we may be loyal to Him; we may accept Him now in a fuller, deeper, more glorious sense than ever. I beseech you, as I want myself, that at the very commencement of this Conference we should give Him the highest place, the only place which by right belongs to Him.

Let us, dear friends, exalt Him in our hearts, and extol Him very high. Let us take Him as our great and glorious King. Then there will be joy in Israel. He will give you such a happy conference as you never had before. The Lord grant it, for his name's sake!

The subject of conference for the day was

"THE GLORY OF THE KING."

Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD offered prayer, and, after reading of John xvi., said: The Spirit of God is in our midst to-day, and in this passage we learn from our great Lord what his office is. I believe it to be his exclusive office here on earth, just to show us Jesus, to open our blind eyes, to quicken our naturally dead understandings, to reveal unto us Jesus. He has no other news to give us but the news of Jesus, no other object to show us but Jesus, no gospel to proclaim but the name of Jesus. May we each realize the fruition of this blessed promise of our ascended King to-day! May the Holy Ghost reveal to us his glory!

There are very many glories of the King, brethren. Glories there are belonging to Him of which we cannot speak, because they are unspeakable by human tongue, and inconceivable by human mind. There is the glory of which He says He had it with the Father before the world was; we do not now speak of that glory. He hath a glory personal, in that He is God-man; we speak not of that glory. He hath a glory as the Mediator, the Daysman, between God and man; we enter not into that, though we reap the benefit of it. These glories, united in his own glorious person, are inseparable the one from the other; and we have, in some mysterious way, our share in them all, for He tells us so in that wonderful prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John—"The glory Thou gavest Me I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one."

What, then, is the glory of the King we are to speak of to-day? Read it in the titles that Jehovah hath given to Him. "The King of Glory," "the Prince of Peace," "the Lord of Life," "the Resurrection," "the Salvation of God," "the life, and peace, and power, and wisdom, and sanctification, and righteousness of his people. This is his glory. Jehovah hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name above every name. He hath put all things under his feet, and made Him to be Head over all things to his Church.

Read it in the promises, which are all in Him yea and amen for us, to the glory of God the Father. Every promise is sealed in the Lord Jesus Christ, and is to be communicated to us through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is his glory. Read it, brethren, in the wondrous purposes of Jehovah concerning Him. I remind you of the tenth verse of the first chapter of Ephesians, where we read the marvellous statement that He is the Head of all things. That is his glory. Here you have the Creator and the creature headed up in one; the Jew and the Gentile headed up in one; sinners of every shade and every colour, every race, every age, and every nation, saved in the Lord to an everlasting salvation—headed up in Jesus Christ.

Brethren, He wants a crown from each of you. God has given Him many crowns. Is there a poor backslider who has come in here? He wants a crown from you to-day. Give it to Him, brother or sister. His name is your introduction to the throne of grace. Is there a poor ignorant one here who has never touched even the hem of his garment? Give Him a crown; He longs for your crown. We have all a variety of infirmities, and sorrows, and temptations. There are no two of us alike, just as there were no two stones alike on the breastplate of the high priest; but the Lord Jesus wants a crown from each of us.

You remember when Moses asked God in Exodus xxxiii. to show him his glory. The Lord answered in chapter xxxiv. that He would make his goodness to pass before him. That is his glory.

Mr. Rainsford then gave an exposition of that beautiful proclamation of the name of the Lord given to Moses—"The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and in truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; who will by no means clear the guilty." He then referred to his glory as revealed to Abraham, as proclaimed by the angels at the nativity, and dwelt on the glory of Christ as manifested in his life, death, resurrection, ascension, and giving of the Holy Ghost. He will return in glory. He comes to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe. His throne will be a throne of glory.

Then his glory is manifested in the instruments He uses to do his work on earth. "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, the weak things of the world to confound the mighty." He makes his strength perfect in our weakness. He takes a poor sinner to whom He has revealed Himself, and makes him a mouth-piece to tell others of the glory he has tasted a little of himself. Let Him come into our hearts to-day.

After prayer by Rev. J. Denham Smith and Rev. C. D. Marston, and singing.

Dr. PATTERSON gave the second address on the subject of the day. In opening, he read and commented on the latter part of the 24th Psalm, heaven's challenge to earth—"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?" etc., and earth's answer, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in!"

But it is not the glory of Christ our King simply as a mighty worker, a wonderful ruler, that we have to consider in a world like this; it is the glory of our King as the King of men, who is to subdue his enemies under his feet, and deliver up the kingdom to God his Father. I fear we sometimes look aside at the mere external matters connected with the kingdom, and forget that He exercised his kingly power in the depths of his passion and humiliation. It was Christ's self-sacrifice that was his true glory, his true gain, and his true service. We must not forget the power of Jesus' blood, but do we know the sympathy of Jesus' heart, manifested in the shedding of his blood, and in his coming down here to do the will of his Father? How this bears on us in the times of our distress and need, so that we can come with confidence unto the throne of grace, knowing that He is able and ready to hear us! The true glory of Christ was in his humiliation; the deepest depth to which He goes is the grandest height to which He ascends. We need to think of this, that we may ponder his own words, "Let him that is greatest become the servant of all; for the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." If we would be great, it is by going down; if we would be kingly, it is by becoming the slaves of Christ.

So in Christ's exaltation, too, I think his greatest glory is not merely in that He holds the reins of empire, but in that He is so patient, tender, and kind in his government still. It is the glory of his grace that truly exalts a king. We talk about imitating Christ, but I do not think we can do it by studying this action or that, and trying to imitate it, but by bending our wills to his will; so that, "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image." It is not by studying this duty or that action of Christ that we become like Him, but by knowing Him, and being won by the knowledge of Him, so as to have his glory shining in us.

I thank God that, in these times, many hearts are aspiring to a higher and holier life, but have we studied deeply enough what holiness means? It does not mean victory over this temptation or conflict, over this or that specific sin. It means the heart being filled with God's love, that we shall live after the manner of Christ, and desire that God in all things may be glorified.

The first meeting was closed by singing the 20th hymn in the collection, and prayer by Rev. W. H. Aitken.

AFTERNOON.

At half-past three, a numerous company assembled in the large hall for a Bible-reading on "Fellowship with God" (1 John i. 1-7). Although termed a Bible-reading, the meeting would be more properly described as a series of addresses on the subject for consideration. We are only able to give the leading thoughts dwelt upon by the various speakers, many of whose names we cannot give, as they did not announce themselves.

Mr. BLACKWOOD (who presided at all the meetings in the large hall) read the passage chosen, and briefly opened the subject. It was, he said, perhaps the most mysterious and wonderful of all subjects; yet it clearly appeared from the Word of God that to have fellowship with man was at least one of the great purposes of God in redemption. He traced through the Scriptures the wonderful way in which God had held converse with man, from Adam downwards, and how He had restored communication with him when man's sin had caused it for a time to be broken. It might almost be said that God's happiness as well as man's was involved in this relation being sustained. It seemed to open up a wonderful vista of glory to think that sinners like us should be absolutely needful to the eternal joy of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The first speaker said that as all the land of Canaan that the feet of the children of Israel trod on was their own, so Christ was ours just as we used and appropriated Him. We could not realize the power we have through Him until we put it into action.

Rev. E. H. HOPKINS dwelt on the words, "Abide in Me." We were in Christ, first, as to standing, and then as to fellowship. Every believer was in Christ in the first sense; were they all abiding in Him as to fellowship? This does not mean that we are to imitate Him, but that Christ is to live out of us.

Rev. C. D. MARSTON said there was three kinds of fellowship mentioned in the passage read—fellowship with the Father, with the Son Jesus Christ, and, further down in the chapter, there was indicated fellowship between the saints. He urged the importance of having fellowship with the Holy Ghost in bearing witness for Christ.

Rev. CLAREMONT SKRINE referred to the distinction between union and communion. If we walk in the light, as Christ is in the light, we will be very sensitive to the presence of sin.

Rev. WEBB PEPLOR pointed out that God at the first walked with man; then Enoch and Noah walked with God; but the union was now closer still, as expressed in the words, "That Christ might dwell in your hearts by faith."

The next speaker spoke of the necessity of coming continually to the Word of God for guidance, of walking in the light, and not looking to any man, or building up our life on his particular views. As we get nearer to the great centre of truth, we get nearer to each other, just as the spokes of a wheel come nearer to each other as they approach the centre of the wheel.

Rev. Mr. TURNER, Deddington, insisted on the necessity of faith in the matter of fellowship, and a continual coming to the blood of Christ. This speaker said the passage in Rev. xxii. 14, translated, "Blessed are they that do his commandments," ought to read, "Happy are they who are washing their robes."

The succeeding speaker, referring to the words in the passage under consideration, "These things I write unto you that your joy may be full," based thereon an encouragement to hope and look for the second coming of Christ, when our joy would be consummated.

Rev. DENHAM SMITH, in closing the discussion of the subject, expressed the feeling of love and communion that pervaded the meeting, and the remarks of those who had spoken.

Having sung the hymn—

"Great the joy when Christians meet, Christian fellowship how sweet," the meeting was dismissed with prayer and the benediction.

EVENING.

The morning's subject was continued, and

The Rev. E. HOPKINS gave the first address, dividing his remarks into the twofold manifestation of Christ's glory as seen by his saints, and as seen in his saints.

After prayer by Captain Moreton, the Chairman presented several special requests, that had been sent in.

Dr. MACKAY, of Hull, then gave a powerful address, in the course of which he traced the various ways in which God manifested his glory to his people, as disclosed in Scripture. When man sinned at first, he was driven outside and away from the manifested glory of God. After the redemption from Egypt, the cherubim were placed inside the tabernacle, so that God and man could again meet together. His manifested glory was a source of protection and enlightenment to his people, but brought confusion to their enemies. "So I believe," said the speaker, "there is no book so calculated to confuse and bring darkness to the infidel as the very Word of God that reveals his glory."

God's glory in the giving of the law was next set forth, and traced down through the time of the priests, and of the kings, when God manifested his presence in the temple—all Scripture being made to revolve around Christ in his glorious attributes as Son of David, Son of Man, and Son of God. Then came the incarnation, when the glory that had departed returned again, and the glimpse of it that was vouchsafed to the three favoured disciples on the mount of transfiguration. The first New Testament martyr, Stephen, being filled with the Holy Ghost, looked up, and saw the glory of God—it is in heaven again—and Jesus standing at the right hand of God. His face shone like an angel, and the people stoned him. Men do not want to see angels on the earth; and the more angelic we become, the more the world will hate us.

How is the world to see the glory now? We are to be the mirror to reflect the glory that is in the heavens on this dark earth. And by-and-by the whole earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord. God has promised it, and his word cannot be broken. Then we will rejoice, not in the glory of the King, but in the King himself, who has made us what we are, and given us all that we have received.

"The bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear bridegroom's face;
I will not gaze at glory,
But on my Saviour's face,
Not at the crown He giveth,
But on His pierced hand:
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land."

THURSDAY, JUNE 24.

MORNING.

The Conference was resumed at eleven o'clock this morning in the large hall, when there was a very crowded attendance. After silent prayer, Mr. Blackwood read part of the fifth chapter of Revelation, and a hymn was sung.

Mr. GEORGE MULLER, of Bristol, gave the opening address on the subject of the day,

THE POWER OF THE KING.

At the outset he addressed some words of affectionate appeal to any unsaved or backsliding ones in the audience. Then taking up the passages of Scripture in the printed programme, he expatiated briefly on each. The first, "I am a great King, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Mal. i. 14), he used to inculcate reverence for God, which he said was in danger of being lost sight of. From the next text, "Where the word of a King is there is power" (Eccles. viii. 4), he urged much prayer on behalf of all who sought to speak the words of God to the people. If there was little prayer there would be little result of their labours, and the more abundant was their believing expectant prayer, the more would the word of God be powerful to subdue sin in the heart, and to subdue the enemies of the King. "The sceptre of the King is a right sceptre" (Ps. xlv. 4). "The King that sitteth on the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes" (Prov. xx. 8), and "He must reign till He has put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. xv. 25), were the remaining passages, and were shortly and simply expounded.

After singing a hymn,

Dr. HOBATIUS BONAR, of Edinburgh, spoke. Having quoted the words of our Lord, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and the invocation of the redeemed saints, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power," he said it was interesting to trace back all that is written of Jesus to the first promise that seems the fountain head of everything in the Bible. "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." It is not the power of an omnipotent God we speak of, but the power of Him whom God hath anointed King. Here we discover the greatness of his power, and what it was He was anointed to do. It was as the undoer of evil, and not as the doer of miracles, that God anointed Him. This power is a righteous power. So that when we preach the gospel, it is not simply pardon, but a righteous pardon that we proclaim, a righteous grace, a righteous salvation.

Mark also that this first promise includes the bruising of the heel of the King as well as the bruising of the head of the serpent. It was in this double way that the power came. What does this bruising of the heel lead us to? To the altar; to the sacrifice, the blood, the propitiation. Though that altar at which Abel worshipped may seem insignificant in itself, yet it was out of that altar that the power came by which the evil was to be undone, and God's universe established for ever.

Christ is a King, and as a King He has power. He is also the Son of a King in two senses. His Father and our Father is King of the universe, and He is also of the race of Adam, who was earth's king.

You find the power of the King running through Scripture, and always flowing from the fountain-head I have spoken of. In some of the books you find it more prominently than in others. In the Psalms the power of the King is again and again made the object of praise, especially in undoing the evil. You have it very fully also in the book of Isaiah, and it is also brought forward in Daniel. In the New Testament it is everywhere; in the Gospels it takes the form of undoing the evil in the shape of disease that had been introduced by Satan. You find it at Pentecost, and passing over the time of the Apostles, you find it all through the Revelation—that book is full of the power of the King, and reveals God's idea of kingly power.

We have seen much of the power of the King in many different aspects and unfoldings. I wish to close with a few words on the spiritual power of the King. It comes from the same source, from the old altar, from the cross. That cross was but the altar fully unfolded in all its meaning. We find there, as it were, the King receiving his full investment of power. "Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins." There is the mighty King proclaiming his mighty pardon, for He is able to save to the uttermost. There is no sinner on this side of hell to whom He does not extend the sceptre of his cross. And He is not only our Sin-bearer, but our Burden-bearer too. He is also our Peace-giver.

I close with these gracious words of everlasting life—it may be, the words of everlasting life to some soul here, dead in trespasses and sins—"In the last great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink."

After a brief season of silent prayer, and the presentation of various special requests by the Rev. W. H. Aitken, embracing most of the Continental countries, and other parts of the world, and also the house-to-house visitation,

Rev. A. N. SOMMERVILLE, of Glasgow, gave the closing address. He said that the power of the King was mentioned no less than fifty-five times in the books of Ezekiel. He related the story of a shipwreck in which one of the passengers essayed to swim to the shore with his wife and child, but his strength failing, he was compelled to shake off his child, in order to save his wife. In strong contrast to this he brought out the power of the King, who is "mighty to save." He dilated with great force and vigour of expression on the power of Christ to save the very worst. The world is perishing for lack of Christ, and for lack of the gospel of Christ being rung out in the ears of the nations. He proceeded to dwell on the duty of Christians to reflect the glory of the cross, and in order to illustrate this point, he described, in terms of remarkable beauty and appropriateness, how the inland lakes of his native land had reflected on their surface all the glory of the heavens and of surrounding nature, as well as sent forth rivers of water to bless and fructify the land. He then drew a picture of the Christian fulfilling the saying of Christ, "He that believeth in Me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Referring to the number of special requests for prayer on behalf of various nations, he asked, What are we doing to fulfil our great Master's commission to go and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost? He described the funeral procession that accompanied the remains of Nelson to St. Paul's in 1805, and compared the single blast of thirty trumpets at its head to the blast of the gospel trumpet that Christians ought to blow, not, however, over a dead hero, but at the command of a conquering, living Leader.

AFTERNOON.

The subject for consideration in the large hall this afternoon was

"HOW TO FOLLOW UP THE PRESENT RELIGIOUS AWAKENING."

After singing the hymn that has become so familiar in connection with the religious awakening, "Hold the fort,"

MR. S. A. BLACKWOOD, chairman, read from the 28th chapter of Isaiah. It is there recorded how God teaches the plowman, the thresher, and the husbandman, where, when, and how to sow, and the right instruments to use for bringing fruitfulness out of the seed, and making the proper use of the harvest. How much more will He guide his servants who are sent into his own harvest-field, to do work which is for his own eternal glory. He has opened to us wonderful times of usefulness, and wonderful fields for service. All classes of society have been reached, and religious activity was immense, compared with what it had been. There was a great army of workers, and it was doubtful whether all were doing the right work, or doing it exactly in the right way. They were come now to get some guidance from those who had been ploughing, reaping, and sowing for a long time. Many were of opinion that we are on the eve of a wonderful development of the work of God. God's purpose might be to herald in the glory of the King, or it might be but the commencement of an evangelistic work the like of which had never been seen. Let all be ready to take up the service God should appoint, in God's strength and wisdom, and for God's glory.

DR. H. BONAR opened the discussion, and gave an interesting account of the work begun at Edinburgh, under Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It was there in what might be called a manageable shape, and could more easily be controlled than perhaps it could be in London. He spoke of the perfect unanimity there was among the ministers of the city who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and the earnestness with which all joined in the work. Reverting to the immediate subject of the hour, he urged the preservation of calmness in the conduct of the meetings. The more calmly the work went on, the more likely it was to be the work of the Spirit of God. In Edinburgh, they had endeavoured to extend the work in many ways. They took charge of all converts and watched over them. Their names and addresses were not merely sent to their respective ministers, but they were regularly visited, and it was gratifying to be able to say, on the testimony of these visitors, that very few had fallen away, and many of them were growing in Christ. The young converts were also taught publicly to the number of 600 to 1000 every Monday night. Evangelistic work was also carried on in the adjoining villages, and efforts were made in every possible way, in private families, in the public streets, etc., to perpetuate the movement. Dr. Bonar recommended a close study of the Acts of the Apostles, as a guide book in connection with this awakening. Something would be found there to meet the necessities of every case.

Rev. Mr. CHARLESWORTH, Rector of Limehouse, testified as to the reality of the work in the East-end, and made some suggestions as to the preparation of the young converts for confirmation.

Rev. THOS. RICHARDSON, of St. Benet's, Stepney, advised all the ministers to enter into the work of the inquiry-room. He had never seen one who tried it but had become converted to the work. He had the names and addresses of over 500 persons to whom he had spoken personally at Bow-road Hall, and had written to them all, thus clenching the truth which they had heard at the meetings. He said there were thousands of persons in all the churches and chapels ready and willing to be spoken with, and urged all Christians to be on the outlook for an opportunity of saying a word for Jesus.

DR. PATERSON spoke of the value of sympathy and friendly intercourse in strengthening the young converts. He then dwelt on the necessity for Christians to exhibit Christ in their daily life. It was possible not only to mar the work by undue interference, but to hinder it by their indifference and worldliness. If all the Christians in London were thoroughly devoted to Christ, the city would soon be moved.

After a few remarks by Rev. Mr. Jones, of Tunbridge Wells, Rev. G. Everard, of Wolverhampton, also urged sympathy with converts, especially those who had to suffer persecution for Christ's sake.

NED WRIGHT, in giving some personal reminiscences, said that he had found those to hold out best who had been set to some work as soon as they were converted.

MR. BUTLER asked the Christians not to forget testifying for Christ during their summer holidays.

DR. MACKAY, in closing the discussion, said the first thing to do was to follow the guiding hand of God, just as Moses followed up his victories over the Egyptians by moving when God's presence moved, and resting when it rested. It was borne upon his mind that all this awakening was preparatory to some impending judgment. He believed this movement had been mere solid and permanent than other movements of the same kind, because the Word of God had been brought to the foreground; excitement and sentimentality were nowhere. He entreated the Christians to see that the young converts were "housed" under some pastor as quickly as possible. He also advocated the distribution of gospel literature. He had found the preaching of the Word to be most powerful in arousing the careless, but the reading of the Word to be most powerful in confirming the weak believer or the anxious soul.

EVENING.

The evening hour brought together a crowded congregation in the large hall, when the consideration of the morning's subject was again taken up. After singing and silent prayer, Mr. Blackwood read the 45th Psalm. Rev. H. G. Guinness followed in prayer.

Rev. W. WEBB PEPLON was the first speaker, and founded his address on the five passages of Scripture given in the programme, and which we have quoted in our notice of Mr. Muller's address. The power of the King here spoken of was not his absolute possession, but was a power delegated to Him by the Father for us. During Christ's life on earth his kingly power seems to have been confined almost to Himself. He was setting up an example of righteousness throughout his life here, and then He died to destroy him who had the power of death. He stands forth as a risen King. How is it that all things are not yet subdued to Him? Because when He rose from the dead He had all authority given to Him, but not all power. The speaker then quoted several passages in which the word "power" should more correctly be rendered by the term "authority." The fulness of power would not be exercised by Christ till His second coming. What a glorious day to which to look forward, when He shall be Lord of lords and King of kings! This prospect is set before us that we may have the privilege of becoming sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, and further, that we might share in the development of the power of Christ. We have not yet received the full manifestation of the power of the Lord Jesus Christ, because, though at his resurrection He brought to nought the power of the devil, He has not yet taken away the existence of Satan's power. After the resurrection the devil is never called "the prince of this world," but "the prince of the power of the air." Jesus has the rightful authority now, and the time is coming when Jesus shall appear, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of God and his Christ.

After a few remarks by Mr. H. Edwards, also based on the texts already mentioned,

DR. MACKAY spoke. It would be profitable, he said, to study the power of the King as manifested in the physical world, in flood and sea, in mountain and river, in thunder and calm; or in the more silent and minute forces of nature. His power can be seen in what He descends to, as well as what He builds up in the majesty of his might.

But creation, as far as our little speck of it is concerned, has drifted away from God, and now we are bounded on every hand by death. At seven miles' distance we are encircled with a band of death. The peculiar manifestation of the power of our King begins where man's power ends. The Cross—not only death, but the death of a felon—is the power of God. The moment that creation work was marred, God came in with the promise of the bruising of the serpent's head. This doctrine of the Cross, though the most unpopular with the world, was the rallying point for Christians in these last days, as it would be the theme of the redeemed to all eternity. Dr. Mackay went on to speak of Christ's power in resurrection, in intercession, in the gift of the Holy Ghost, as deposited in the earthen vessels of his people; and finally in his coming to take full possession of his kingdom.

Dr. PATTERSON closed the meeting with prayer.

FOREIGN EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

ROOM NO. 5, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The meeting having been opened with prayer, the chairman, D. Matheson, Esq., read some interesting extracts from a letter regarding the proposed establishment in Rome of a ladies' school for the upper classes; and from another, referring to the Lord's work in the city and suburbs of Lisbon; after which, the hon. secretary, the Rev. Horace Noel, explained that the peculiar work of the Society was to assist the private evangelistic efforts that are being made in different parts of the continent of Europe, of some of which he gave several interesting particulars. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Noel mentioned that Miss De Broen, at Belleville, has at length succeeded in getting a site for her iron room; the ground, together with additional expenses, costing about £3000, of which £1500 has been raised; and that she much needs lady-helpers who will undertake the superintendence of sewing classes, and visit from house to house. Another Christian lady has begun an important work, in which she will need a helper next winter, among university students in Paris. Exhorting those present to practical consecration, the speaker suggested that Christians, when travelling on the Continent, should endeavour to do as much good as possible in each place to which they come, and, with a view to this, should seek out the believers in those places, and inquire what has already been done. As an instance of true consecration, he mentioned the case of two ladies who were so much impressed with the spiritual need of the inhabitants of Auxerre, when detained there by the illness of one of them, that they remained there as evangelists for the rest of their lives.

M. Nicolet next gave an interesting and earnest address on the work in Belgium.

Mr. George Pearse spoke of the vast field presented at present in France.

The Rev. J. Heck appealed on behalf of the Christians, about five hundred in number, most of them labouring people, amongst whom he is working near Vienna, and Lord Radstock gave a most encouraging account of the prospects of the gospel in Russia.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of this association was held at the mulberry tree on Thursday afternoon. Mr. T. A. Denny presided.

After a few words from the chairman, the secretary, Mr. Brown, stated that exactly one year ago, when the first public meeting was held here, they had but six colporteurs; now they had twenty-seven, showing a very steady and rapid increase. The particular evil against which their efforts were directed was the cheap pernicious literature which literally flooded this country, and of the extent of which few had any conception. The first annual report showed that they had sold, in round figures, 5000 copies of Scriptures, 44,000 Christian books, and 18,000 religious periodicals. The colporteurs often obtained opportunities of speaking for Jesus; and Mr. Brown related several interesting incidents in illustration of the manner in which the man carried on their work.

Dr. W. P. Mackay said colportage was a work which specially commended itself to him, and he had always great pleasure in commending it to others. It enabled one to do good standing on a level with those whom they sought to benefit. Giving away tracts was very good, and by all means he would say carry on the work of tract distribution, but try to sell books at the same time, for after all, giving away anything looked rather like a patronizing way of doing good, which a man of independent spirit would resent, but by asking him to buy, you placed yourself under an obligation to him, and so you won him. Our Saviour did this notably when He asked the woman of Samaria for a drink of water. He put Himself under an obligation to her, and so won her. Then again by selling a book you secure its being valued by the purchaser.

His congregation now supported three colporteurs (not in connection with this association) and a number of ladies were volunteer colporteurs, going round, not giving, but selling, books and periodicals, and they were doing an immense deal of good. He would recommend the ladies present, who had time on their hands, just to do the same, and perhaps by-and-by they might see their way to having a full-fledged colporteur down amongst them, spending his whole time in this work.

Mr. Russell Hurditch and other gentlemen also spoke commending the work.

WORK FOR CHRIST AMONG DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

This gathering was held in No. 4 Room on Thursday afternoon. After a few remarks from Lord Kintore, chairman, Captain Neville Sherbrooke said the subject of conference was one dear to every Christian. He spoke of the great privilege of working for Christ among the little ones, especially the destitute, and mentioned the great good done by Mr. George Holland and Dr. Barnardo. He said there was an old Jesuit saying, "Give me a little child till it is seven; then you may do what you like with it"—showing the great power obtained over those of tender years.

Dr. Barnardo, in the course of a long address, said there still existed in this great city numbers of Arab and gutter children, the vast majority of them without parental care, and exposed to crime. He then gave instances of street-life. Thousands are deserted by one or both parents every year among the lower labouring classes. The children are turned out into the street; what becomes of these children if left to themselves is too well known. Those who love the Master must take them by the hand. If not, there are others who are ever ready to do it, and lead them into crime. Out of 188,232 persons committed to our jails in England, Scotland, and Wales, in the past year, 10,558 were juveniles, 16½ per cent. being under the age of sixteen years. He then advocated the work among girls, and produced photographs of both boys and girls, and showed the method of dealing with them both in the Home and when they left.

Mr. George Holland, in a few words, gave very touching accounts of work among children, and urged all to go to work in some way. Prayer was good, but prayer without effort was hypocrisy, and effort without prayer presumption.

A SKETCH FOR THOSE AT A DISTANCE.

Come with me, and see what is going on. This noble building in which the meetings are held was erected by the Rev. William Pennfather, five years ago, to take the place of the Iron Room, first erected at Barnet, and then brought to London. Standing a little to the south of Newington-green, between Newington-green-road and Mildmay Park, it is tolerably free from noise, though the tinkle of the tram-car bells, and the sound of the trains on the North London Railway, are distinctly heard.

Let us first look into the largest basement room (No. 4). Here the early morning prayer-meeting, from seven till eight, has been held during the three days of the Conference. This is the only new feature of the Conference, and proved to be a most acceptable addition. Punctually at seven—for punctuality in commencing the meetings has been very marked this year—Mr. Blackwood announces the hymn, and between singing, prayer, and brief expositions, the hour is gone all too soon. Those who have weak bodies feared they could not stand this meeting in addition to the others; but they did, and said they enjoyed it most of all. Early meetings are freshest, as the early manna was the most delicious.

Now we will look into the garden. That large tent on the south side is for refreshments, and that small one is for the new organization which bears the attractive title of "Flower Mission." During the day, the ladies who manage it so admirably will explain to their numerous visitors how they receive the flowers from the country, make them into charming bouquets, and carry them off to hospitals, etc. In the refreshment tent the stewards are assembling for breakfast. They number about fifty, and give their services freely and heartily. At nine they assemble in Room No. 6—a kind of drawing-room seating 250, where the daily noon prayer-meeting is held in ordinary times. Here is a service which they call their own, where they receive refreshment for their souls prior to their work. The Rev. H. Webb Peplow conducted it the first morning, Mr. Blackwood the second, and Capt. Moreton and Capt. Liebenrood the third. In addition to the stewards, are some of the deaconesses—about twenty-five of whom reside in the adjoining house—and the servants of the Deaconess Home: also the orphans from the Orphanage close by. Mr. Blackwood's remarks on the dew and the lion in Micah v. 7, 8, will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to hear them.

But now let us look into the large hall, which will seat 2500. It has six entrances, and the arrangements are so complete, that the police outside, and stewards inside, will see the people into their places quickly and without confusion. The doors open at ten, and before eleven every seat is full, and chairs and camp-stools are placed in the aisles till there cannot be far short of 3000 souls. Now they are hushed into silence ere they sing the first hymn. The proportion of time given to prayer and praise show that the object of the beloved founder of the Conference is still adhered to, viz., that we come to meet God rather than man, and that He loves to have his people wait upon Him. Nearly half the hymns in the Conference Hymn-book were written by him, and are still sung with deep feeling and earnestness. The platform has been enlarged and heightened this year, so that the occupants of the galleries can now see and hear with greater comfort.

Then comes dinner, soon after one, in the aforesaid tent, followed by happy fellowship while walking round the garden. Then there are the sectional meetings at half-past three, six of them being held at the same time. Here we have the claims of the Lord's work at home and abroad, and doubtless much may be learned; but I always find the people restless, not settling down to one meeting, but going from one to the other, without having made up their minds which to attend. The heat, however, is very trying, and I feel those make the best choice who select the familiar mulberry-tree rather than the indoor gatherings.

At five we again assemble for tea, and then seek the mulberry-tree for a very pleasant hour of sacred song. "Sacred Songs and Solos" are used here, and it is wonderful how many people have become familiar with them. Then Mr. Spiers gathers the children together in the east garden, and holds a children's service. And at half-past seven we are all again in the large hall, always leaving the garden with reluctance, on account of its fresh air and cool shade. Another impressive gathering, and about half-past nine we are all away again.

The most impressive gathering of the whole Conference was the Lord's Supper, on the afternoon of the last day. Truly the glory, the power, and the presence of the King were all realized there, for each of us could say, as the venerable Dr. Bonar spoke of our Lord, "He brought me into his banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love!"

So ended the Conference. The fine weather, doubtless, contributed very largely to the success of the gathering; but on spiritual grounds all seemed agreed that it was one of the very best of the nineteen which have been held. Dear Mrs. Pennefather was there for the first time since her sad bereavement, and many were greatly rejoiced to see her.

I leave others to report the speeches, and tell the names of the honoured servants of the Lord who spoke; but whether present or absent, there will be wisdom shown in ordering a copy of the official report, which is promised to be issued in about two months' time. G. KIRKHAM.

[We are obliged to postpone the report of Friday's large meetings, as well as some of the smaller gatherings, to next week.]

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

On Saturday evening last the large hall of the Conference buildings at Mildmay Park was crowded with one of the most interesting and representative gatherings of Christians that London has ever seen. About 3000 of those who have been engaged in the house-to-house visitation in the metropolis, together with some of those who have been similarly employed in Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol, etc., assembled to meet Mr. Moody, and to receive reports of the progress of the work thus far. Mr. Moody presided, and on the platform were Mr. E. Radcliffe, general superintendent of the London visitation, Col. Field, and many others who have taken an active interest in the work.

The meeting was opened at seven o'clock by singing, "Here am I, send me," after which Mr. Morgan offered thanksgiving to God for success given to this effort, and besought the Divine blessing on the proceedings of the evening.

Mr. Moody read part of Acts xx., where it is recorded that Paul taught publicly from house to house at Ephesus, Mr. Moody remarking that this house-to-house visitation was nothing new. He said that probably they had met together, expecting an address from him, but his idea in coming was simply to preside, and to hear the reports of those who had been engaged in the work. He thought if the women could be got to speak they would have something encouraging to say. In his experience women made by far the best visitors, and he should like to see in London 10,000 women missionaries at work all the year round. There were hundreds of ladies in London who were dying for want of something to do.

Mr. E. RADCLIFFE, on being called upon, gave a short address, at the outset of which he announced the number of districts in London still unallotted (about sixty) and made an urgent appeal to those present to volunteer their further services, so that the work might be in a fair way to completion before Messrs. Moody and Sankey closed their labours in the metropolis. He said that from ten to four o'clock each day, some one would be in attendance at Great Marlborough-street, W., to give information and enrol workers. The British and Foreign Bible Society had presented the Visitation Committee with a large number of copies of the Old and New Testament, on the understanding that they were only to be given to families who did not already possess a copy of the Scriptures. Such cases were unhappily to be found. Other valuable presents, such as pictorial papers for children, had been given to them, and these could be seen at the office at Great Marlborough-street also. He then made a very satisfactory statement as to the expenses of the visitation, which had all been paid up to date, and which had amounted to about £400 instead of £1000 as was anticipated. He followed with an eloquent appeal for continued effort in the good work begun, and which was spreading not only to the provinces, but to the Continent, the United States, and even as far as China and Australia. He asked for special prayer for Mr. Hudson Taylor's work in connection with the millions of China.

Reports followed as to the success of the visitation in different parts of London, and they were almost uniformly of an encouraging nature. Mr. George Holland spoke of the visitation in two districts of the East-end, where 6000 to 8000 visits had been made in some of the lowest neighbourhoods with marked blessing. He gave some highly interesting incidents in connection with the work. Mr. Herbert Taylor had a similar story to tell; and Col. Field, who has conducted the correspondence relating to this work, could speak of at least 350 cases of conversion that had come to his knowledge as a result of the visitation.

After some striking incidents from Capt. Moreton, Mr. Moody gave a short address, the substance of which our readers will find in our opening column. Further encouraging testimony was given by Mr. T. B. Smithies, Rev. Mr. Stott, of St. John's Wood, etc.; and after the general meeting dispersed, a second meeting of women only was held in one of the rooms below, Mr. Moody presiding, to allow the "better half" of the visitors an opportunity of giving their experiences of the work.

A crowded and enthusiastic meeting of ladies was then held in the room below the hall, where, after a few reports had been given of the visitation work, arrangements were made for ladies to hold meetings for women in the different quarters of London. The first was announced to be held on Saturday next, at seven p.m., to be addressed by Miss Cotton.

KENSAL NEW TOWN.—Praise God with us for the blessing He has given on the children's services held in the Appleford Room, Kensal New Town. Within the last few weeks, more than thirty children have thanked God for salvation received. Mr. Andrew Forbes, who is engaged in the house-to-house visitation in this district, invited two young girls, about fourteen years of age, to attend this meeting, and both left it rejoicing in Jesus. The principal labourer in this portion of the Lord's vineyard is a servant who last year was converted at one of the tent services held in this neighbourhood, and her sole desire now is to spend and be spent in the Master's service.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY AT WINDSOR.

Among the most interesting episodes of this evangelistic movement in Great Britain will be reckoned the service held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey on a beautiful June afternoon in a little garden, almost under the shadow of the Royal Palace at Windsor. The history of this meeting is a somewhat strange one; but it may be told in a few sentences.

There are upwards of nine hundred boys at the well-known public school at Eton, which closely adjoins the Royal borough. A number of these boys and their parents—we cannot say how many—had expressed a strong desire that Messrs. Moody and Sankey should hold a service somewhere adjacent to Eton College, so that those boys anxious to attend might have the opportunity of doing so. Notwithstanding the onerous and unceasing labours of our American friends, they consented to gratify the wishes of the boys and their parents, and arrangements were accordingly entered into as quietly as possible, whereby the boys should be able to attend the meeting to be held on Tuesday, June 22, in a tent erected outside the College grounds. The authorities of the College were duly consulted and informed of all the proposed arrangements, and the Head Master of Eton, who, in such matters, has absolute jurisdiction, willingly agreed not to put any obstacle in the way of the boys attending.

Matters were in this position when Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, M.P., being informed of the service, and having some connection, past or present, with Eton College, from motives which we do not wish to impugn, took steps to prevent the meeting; if possible, and published a correspondence he had entered into with the Provost of the College in some of the daily newspapers. Whatever may have been Mr. Hugessen's motives for his intervention, it is very certain that his description of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services, as being a "semi-dramatic performance," etc., and of the evangelists as "itinerant vendors of religious wares," was not only based on total ignorance of the character of their meetings, but revealed an unmistakable animus against them. No little excitement was caused by this unexpected turn of affairs, and the matter was deemed of sufficient importance to be brought up for discussion in the House of Lords on the Monday evening.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and the friends who had arranged for the meeting, saw no reason to alter their plans in consequence of what had occurred, and accordingly went down to Windsor shortly after mid-day on Tuesday. Before they reached there, however, it transpired that there was every probability of there being a disturbance if the meeting were held in the tent that had been erected near the College, added to which the presence of the local county constabulary could not, for some reason, be obtained. The idea of meeting there, was, therefore, wisely abandoned, and an attempt to get the use of the Town-hall was also frustrated. At this seemingly awkward juncture, Mr. Caley, a leading tradesman in Windsor, generously offered the use of his garden, and this offer was accepted. Thither Messrs. Moody and Sankey, along with the friends who had accompanied them from London, repaired, and the hour or so that intervened before the time of meeting was pleasantly spent in inhaling the fresh country breeze, that was delightfully tempered by the oblique rays of the afternoon sun. It was a very agreeable transition from the crowded Camberwell Hall.

Shortly after three o'clock, a number of the Eton boys appeared in the grounds, to the number ultimately of two hundred or so; and before four, when the meeting proper commenced, the garden was quite filled with a standing audience of about a thousand persons.

Mr. Sankey's close companion, the American organ, had preceded him, and chairs were provided for the contingent of the Opera House choir that came from London to assist. A few hymns were sung before Mr. Moody took his place. The Eton boys, many of whom seemed to look on the proceedings from the "curiosity" point of view, did not at first join in the song, though all were provided with the familiar little hymn-book, and preserved a most decorous demeanour throughout.

At length Mr. Moody emerged from Mr. Caley's house, and found his way through the crowd to the "pulpit," which was pitched under the protecting shade of a spreading chestnut-tree.

Save in the unusual surroundings, and the somewhat unique character of the audience, the service differed in no respect from those to which we have been accustomed any day these last three months. After singing the 100th Psalm, and prayer by Lord Cavan, Mr. Moody took the subject he almost invariably chooses when speaking to a new audience—"The Gospel," as declared by Paul in the words, "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures." He exhibited considerable tact in making use of illustrations supplied by the peculiar circumstances and surroundings of the meeting; as, for instance, when declaring God's message of love in Christ to be "good news," whoever the messenger might be, he said, "Since I came up here, some one brought me a despatch, and I just read it, and found it was good news. It stated that the governing body had met in London, and had sustained the head master, thus removing all obstacles out of the way of this meeting. Thank God for that! That is good news." This announcement evoked signs of hearty approval from the crowd.

Again, speaking of the way in which salvation was to be received, he pointed to some soldiers in uniform right in front of him, and deduced, from the way in which they became soldiers, when they accepted the Queen's shilling, the truth that salvation is ours the moment we accept Christ. The incidents employed were well chosen, and equally well told. In the middle of one, and when speaking of a mother's love, Mr. Moody, addressing the Eton boys, said: "I know many of your mothers, and, since we thought of coming here, have had letters from many of them. I know of some of them who are at this hour praying for their boys. May God answer their prayers, and save their sons! Let me plead with you not to make light of a godly, praying mother." His earnest appeals and touching illustrations had a most perceptible effect on the special portion of the audience. The air of amused indifference gave place to that of hushed, unbroken, and in some cases tearful, attention; and we hope Mr. Moody's prayer at the close, that those who were being trained to labour for the Church and State, and who might one day wield great power in this land, might look back with thankfulness to that afternoon, will receive a full answer.

Before the address, Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety-and-nine," his voice ringing out beautifully on the clear summer air. By general request, he afterwards left the instrument, where his voice was somewhat drowned by the closely encircling crowd, and, taking Mr. Moody's place in the rostrum, he sang "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." How long he might have continued to sing if he had carried out the wishes of all, it is difficult to say; but, remembering that the evening meeting at Camberwell Hall was before him, he judiciously declined; and, after another hymn was sung by all, the meeting dispersed, feeling, we should suppose, that the hour had been a most pleasant, and, we trust, also a profitable one.

Before breaking up, Mr. Graham read the despatch to which Mr. Moody referred, and said a few words in commendation of the conduct of the head master, which were received with acclamation.

Our own feelings can only be expressed in the words quoted on the homeward journey by a friend, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee; the remainder of wrath shalt Thou restrain."

We have received the following from the Editor of the Leisure Hour :—

Sir,—Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen receives the credit of having stopped the proposed service of the American evangelists at Eton. He might have forbidden his own boy to go, without seeking to prevent others from attending. There are many fathers who will agree with me in thinking that boys may get more good from an address on the Sermon on the Mount, or the Parable of the Prodigal Son, than from the very silly fairy stories which Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen prepares for the edification of the young. That more than 200 boys went to the service at Windsor, in spite of public censure and the ridicule of their companions, is a proof of pluck and good feeling very honourable to present Etonians.

I have witnessed in Chicago the immense good done by Mr. Moody, not so much by his personal appeals as by the quickening influence of his fervent zeal upon the ordinary ministers and teachers of religion. In this country, none but Romanists and Ritualists have opposed the good work done by these evangelists. The approval of men like Mr. Gladstone and Lord Chancellor Cairns attests that there is nothing fanatical in their proceedings, and nothing dangerous to the Church of England.

But my special object in this letter is to protest against the international discourtesy of this interference. It is the custom in America, in the States' Legislatures, in Universities and Colleges, and even in Congress, to invite English ministers to conduct services, although having no public or official mission. This they do, both to honour the men, and to show respect to the Old Country. The officious interference of Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen and his friends is a slight cast upon America, and an offence against English courtesy, as well as Christian charity. JAMES MACAULAY, M.D.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.
CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL.

BY REV. ROBERT TAYLOR.

On Monday evening, last week, the hall was densely crowded before the service began; many hundreds having to go away disappointed from the closed doors. The subject of the address was, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found." The vivid pictures and impassioned appeals of the preacher produced a deep impression on the vast multitude; and many stood up at the close in testimony of their desire to become Christians at once. The inquiry-rooms were filled with those who were seeking the Lord; and not a few, we are persuaded, left saying gladly with one of old, "We have found the Messiah."

On Tuesday there was no afternoon meeting, the evangelists having gone to conduct the service at Eton which the House of Lords has helped to make famous. The evening address was on "the Blood." Mr. Moody's manner showed traces of fatigue, as if the railway journey and the anxieties connected with the afternoon work at Eton had somewhat impaired, for the time, the perennial freshness and vigour with which this unequalled worker acquits himself of his Herculean daily task. But the audience was well in hand notwithstanding, and listened eagerly to the graphic exposition and illustration of the solemn theme.

The first "Bible-reading" for the week was given on Wednesday afternoon, the subject being "Heaven." The preacher was in a tender and pathetic vein: the audience was held captive throughout; and the numbers who repaired to the inquiry-rooms showed that his appeals and entreaties had prevailed on many to begin that day their pilgrimage to heaven. It is not necessary to enter into detailed description, as these addresses have often been characterized in your columns before. But I may devote a few sentences to the work of Thursday, which seemed to me the most remarkable day of the week. The afternoon Bible-reading continued the subject of the preceding day. It is scarcely possible to overstate the power with which the poor, miserable life of the worldling was exposed on the one hand, or the glory and grandeur with which a true and earnest Christian life was invested on the other. We have seldom listened to any address that more thoroughly roused and rallied all the forces of the higher life in the soul: and we feel sure that the hearts of many of God's children present burned with a holy and heroic ardour to lay aside every weight, and to run with patience the race set before them, looking unto Jesus. In the evening the subject was "The Compassion of the Lord Jesus Christ." Grace seemed poured into the speaker's lips. Selecting a few illustrative cases from the gospel narrative, he portrayed in the liveliest colours the graciousness and divine pity of Him who is not ashamed to call us brethren. Nearly all seemed the whole time as if on the edge of tears, while not a few listened with bowed head, to hide the emotion they could not suppress.

A larger number than usual stood up to be prayed for. And yet we confess to a feeling of disappointment and wonder that there were not many more. Indeed, we are often surprised that thousands do not rise instead of hundreds. This at least is plain, that when in a gathering of nearly 8000, not more than 200 or 300 rise as inquirers, they are not influenced by the sympathy of numbers. They act, on the contrary, in opposition to the forced example around, and give evidence of a measure of resoluteness and courage that bode well for the future of that heavenward journey of which this may prove the first step.

On Friday afternoon the way of peace through trust in the Lord Jesus was made so plain, that one could not but cherish the happy conviction that many believers were getting out of "Doubting Castle" into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and that many anxious ones were taking the Lord at his word, and entering at once into the peace and joy of a present and sure salvation. The hymn, "Only trust Him," was sung at the close, prefaced by a few words from Mr. Sankey, characterized by the simplicity, directness, and tenderness that make his spoken preludes—if we may so write—so impressively prepare the hearers for the songs. The subdued fervour, so full of soul, with which the chorus was rendered by the thousands of voices, showed that many of the singers were the while looking unto Jesus. The evening meeting was full to the doors, and the power and glory of the King were seen, as witness after witness was summoned in quick succession to answer the question, "What think ye of Christ?"

Last Lord's-day will be long remembered by many of those privileged to be present as one of the days of heaven upon earth. The sweet sunshine of the gracious June morning accorded well with the joy of many in their risen Lord; and when the song of praise burst forth from the lips of the eight thousand who crowded the vast area, we felt as if we had indeed come to Mount Zion, to the city of the living God. The address was joyous as the song, and bright and cheerful as the sweet summer morning. I am certain that in many a pulpit and Sabbath-school and Christian home the work of yesterday was done as it had never been before. Mr. Moody was pre-eminently happy in illustrating the need of tact in winning souls. He referred to a good brother who put a tract into his own hands, as he came to the meeting, accompanied by the question, in tones earnest, but somewhat loud and harsh, "Is your soul saved?" and pointed out the need of a courteous gentleness of voice and manner, illustrating his meaning in his vivid dramatic way, contrasting the question as put to himself that morning with the earnest half-whispered undertone in which the stranger might have arrested by his earnestness, and at the same time, won by his sympathy, as he said, while handing the tract, "I hope you are a Christian?"

The afternoon meeting for women, and that in the evening for men, were both filled some time before the appointed hour, and large overflow meetings were held in the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. Some 20,000 in all must have heard the blessed message at the Camberwell Hall services on Sunday. Both afternoon and evening the inquiry-rooms were crowded, especially after the men's service. Mr. Moody had a large number round him in one of the galleries, and many of the workers had to address groups of six to twelve at one time. The Lord is working gloriously. His hand is with his servants, and great numbers believe and turn to himself. Yet we feel joyfully persuaded that, during the next two weeks, the last of these wonderful two years in England, we shall see yet greater things still.

FROM A LADY.

I wish I could give some idea of the very wonderful work that still continues in Camberwell. The daily meetings, both in the afternoon and evening, are largely attended. Many inquirers remain for conversation afterwards, and night after night many anxious ones enter into joy and liberty through Christ; looking with earnest inquiry into the Scripture—our wondrous guide to life—while a Saviour, the sin-bearing and sin-forgiving One, is pointed out to each, and there and then received by the needy heart.

A young man entered the inquiry-room the other night, to ask the three following questions: "How can this salvation be obtained?" "What are backsliders?" and, lastly, "If I now believe, must I make a profession?" On seeing that in the Word of God, "the good confession" must always follow a "true faith;" that the command is more than once repeated, "Hold fast your profession," he left the room, we trust with a new view of eternity, and with a new determination to live for God, and for Him only.

Requests for praise are daily sent in to the prayer-meeting at the Victoria Theatre, and many of these are the heart-offerings of those who, in hearing the proclamation of the gospel of Christ, have "believed and received," and now send in the glad testimony of thanksgiving to his power and grace.

Would it not be well, during the last precious weeks of these meetings, that parties from the country should be organized, for the purpose of spending the day at Camberwell, and hearing these addresses, which are being so mightily blessed of God? Working men and women, in very large numbers, have been admitted in this way during the past weeks, and certainly this branch of the work has not been without its success.

NOON MEETINGS, VICTORIA THEATRE.

During the past week the noon meetings have been full of interest. On Wednesday, Rev. A. N. Somerville, lately returned from his mission tour in India, was present, and gave an address from Phil. iv. 6, 7. He was also present on Friday, and gave an interesting sketch of his tour in India. His son, who had accompanied him, and had conducted the singing at his services, also spoke of the great acceptance Mr. Sankey's hymn-book had met with in India, and stated that the hymns are now being translated into the Hindostanee language.

The address at the noon meeting on Thursday was given by another eminent evangelist, Mr. H. Moorhouse, who has recently returned from the United States, where he has conducted a series of successful services. He spoke from the word Hath, and dwelt on the blessedness of assurance of salvation founded on God's own promises.

At the meeting on Monday praise was offered by a father for the conversion of nine of his family, and also for the conversion at Camberwell of one who had been eighteen years an infidel. 272 requests for prayer were presented for friends and others; twenty-five were from persons who wished prayer for themselves. Special prayer was asked for 240 persons coming from Croydon to Camberwell on Tuesday afternoon. Many of the requests had reference to "the accursed drink;" one case was specified where the victim was "drinking his mind away," and another where a young man had left his home for the third time through its power.

Rev. Mr. Bland, of Kerry, read from 2 Sam. xxviii., where we find the exploits of David's mighty men. Addressing the Christians he said that, having passed into the relation of children of God we must not forget that, at present, we are in the position of servants. He compared the sword used by one of David's men to the sword of the Spirit, which we ought always to use in our work, until it becomes almost a part of us, just as this warrior's sword stuck to his hand, though he was weary in body. Speaking of the defence of the piece of ground with the lentiles on it, he said it was not the value of the ground that made it worth defending, but because it was David's. So there was nothing worth defending except for the relation it bore to the truth of God. His expositions were exceedingly forcible and suggestive, as, for instance, when he said, speaking of the three men who broke through the ranks of the Philistines to get David a cup of cold water, that in eternity there would be no mention of the works of the world, such as the electric telegraph; but the cup of cold water given in the name of the Master would not be forgotten. Then, addressing those in the audience who were not servants of the King, he set before them a free, complete salvation in Christ Jesus. His closing remarks were followed up by the singing of "Nothing, sinner, great or small."

One of the most striking and affecting scenes we have witnessed in the course of these services ensued. Mr. Moody asking all to bow their heads in prayer, invited any in the meeting to present for prayer their unsaved friends. A perfect stream of requests flowed in response from all parts of the house, many of them in such feeble and broken accents as to be inaudible. Among those that reached our ear were "For my five sons unconverted"; "For my husband, for seventeen years prayed for"; "For a family of fourteen, whose mother has been dead twenty-three years, and twelve of whom are still unsaved"; "For my dear father, still unsaved"; "For my four children"; "For my dear mother, eighty-four years of age."

Then Mr. Moody asked those who desired prayer for themselves to say so. Quite a number kept rising, some of them only having the courage to nod the head in answer to Mr. Moody's question whether they wished to be prayed for, and others expressing themselves in words that must have touched every sympathetic heart. One young man stated he had come thirty miles to find Christ. Mr. Moody prayed very fervently for those who had stood up, and invited all who were really anxious to go into some of the boxes at the close, where they would be spoken with. Time did not allow of reports being given in, but every one must have felt that it was a most hallowed season of God's presence and saving power. Mr. Moody prayed that the two weeks still remaining of the work in London might be better than all that had gone before; we heartily say "Amen."

MR. MOODY AND THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

Mr. Moody has desired us to publish the following letter from himself to Mr. White, the musical director of the Jubilee Singers:—

My dear Brother,—I am in fullest sympathy with the work which has brought you to this country with the Jubilee Singers. The uplifting of the long down-trodden African race claims the special interest of every Christian, and the means you are adopting to accomplish this must commend themselves. Fisk University, for which you solicit support, has undertaken the education of promising Africans, who shall in time be instructors of their brethren in America, where there are four and a-half millions of coloured people, and also in Africa itself, where they will be sent as heralds of the cross. I believe there is no better way of evangelizing a nation than through its own sons, who have been brought to Christ; they can get to the hearts of their brethren in a way which no foreigner can do.

I think it most desirable that you should, in your efforts to raise funds, keep prominently before the public that the singers are missionaries.

I do very strongly commend your mission to the sympathies of Christians. The singers now in this country have rendered valuable help in the evangelistic work in which I am engaged with Mr. Sankey. Night after night they have sung the gospel at the Bow-road Hall, at the East-end, to tens of thousands. The Rev. W. Hay Aitken has preached, and much blessing has been the result.

A friend of mine has kindly promised £100 towards the fund, and I trust others will follow his example. A. F. Kinnaird, Esq., 2, Pall Mall East, has kindly consented to act as treasurer.—Yours faithfully,

D. L. MOODY.

POSTPONEMENT OF CONVENTIONS.

My dear Brother,—You will be surprised at my leaving London so suddenly, but after the long and undue strain for so many months on Mr. R. Pearsall Smith, I am only astonished that he was not sooner brought to a stand, and I felt it to be only kind and brotherly to accompany him to Paris. He is keeping his bed to-day, and very poorly with low nervous fever. Still he hopes to have strength to join his party in Switzerland in a few days or a week.

The meetings for next week at Monkham, Woodford, Essex, as well as those at Nottingham and at Leeds, are postponed. He will certainly be unequal to any exertion for some time, as he has serious symptoms of the complaint for which he came to England two years ago.

With your kind permission I will write you about the work in a few days.—Yours affectionately in Christ,

GEORGE PEARSE.

THE BOYS' HOME, DEPTFORD.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, in forwarding us a copy of a letter containing the transfer of this Home by the Committee to his sole charge, says:—

"I am happy to look back upon three years of unbroken fellowship which we have enjoyed in the work, and to know that it is only an unselfish desire for the increased success of the Home, that has led the Committee to retire from its executive management.

"In cheerful dependence upon our heavenly Father to endue us with wisdom from on high, and to supply us with all that is needful to train our large family for Him, I now enter upon this new responsibility, beseeching your increased remembrance in prayer."

FEMALE ORPHAN HOME.—Among other deserving institutions for the protection of our female youth, we are requested to draw the attention of our readers to the Home for Female Orphans, who have lost both parents, 1, Grove-road, St. John's Wood. It is in every way, both as regards the objects it has in view, and the manner in which it is conducted, worthy of sympathy and support, and our readers will find it well repays a visit.

HOME OF INDUSTRY, SPITALFIELDS.

DISTRIBUTING HOMES, CANADA:—BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO; GALT, ONTARIO; KNOWLTON, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

My dear Canadian friends,—My last long winter spent in your midst has endeared many of you to my heart, and though now fully absorbed in this wondrous city of living men, my thoughts often revert to many of the loved scenes of the past, where, in your churches and schools, it has been my privilege to join you in worship and in sowing the seed in thousands of youthful hearts.

You all know that it has been a season of deep trial to our mission, and yet, through your prayers, we have all been kept by the loving heavenly Father in his pavilion in "perfect peace" above the strife of tongues. Indeed, all has been so sweetly overruled, that we can in the fullest way say, "All things work together for good."

The heavy trial of our Belleville Home being a second time removed by fire, was mixed with so much mercy in the spared lives, and all our books of record saved, that we took courage, and the Home is again rising, but this time being built of brick instead of wood and plaster.

Accept my most grateful thanks, one and all, for the kind contributions sent to aid us in refurnishing the Home and restoring the children's store-room.

Nor shall I ever forget the wonderful way, from many towns, my own lost earthly gear was more than replaced ere I left your shores.

As a little memento of loving remembrance, accept this copy of THE CHRISTIAN. May the words recorded from Mildmay Conference cheer the reader, as they have done thousands of God's saints who have heard them.

Continue to remember in prayer the wonderful labours of the beloved brethren from your shores who are still daily toiling among these teeming millions. In every quarter of our great city the inquiry is, How can we best follow up this great work? You ask which class of the community. My reply is all—rich and poor, young and old, learned and ignorant. Our need on every hand is "instructed scribes," able to deal with souls impressed with eternal realities.

Pray for me. I find myself surrounded by thousands of young women in factories as ignorant as the heathen, willing now to come and hear of Jesus, who before would only enter a theatre or a circus.

We have all learnt new lessons, such as aptness in illustrations, and the charm of sweet songs, accompanied by the wondrous power of prayer.

As a nation, with one voice we thank our blessed Lord for sending us Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. May they, in their anticipated return to America, go in the fulness of power to do a still greater work in your midst shortly.

You will all rejoice to hear that Mr. Varley is continually being owned in blessing to souls, and is very fully occupied preaching in the halls built for Mr. Moody.

For the present my way is hindered returning to Canada with either of the two bands of children about to arrive; but may I commend them, and the more than two thousand that have already been distributed throughout your Dominion? They are mingling in the families of your congregations, forming part of your households, growing up with the youth of your land, being educated in your schools, listening to the gospel message from your pulpits, and mingling their songs of praise with the children of your Sabbath classes. May I ask for them an interest in your prayers, and a word of counsel or encouragement when you meet with them in your visits?

Thus you can share with us the joy of giving the cup of cold water, and become fellow-workers in training these boys and girls to habits of industry and obedience.

I shall be grateful at any time to receive tidings or a photograph of any of our children you may meet with, addressed to either of the above Distributing Homes which is nearest to you. Not a few, we trust, have been born again, and we long for their growth, that they may be shining lights in the families where they dwell, and in due time become workers for Jesus.

As a Mission-band, we would thank you heartily for the measure of co-operation you have given to our efforts, and hope to secure a continued and increased interest in this work now extending throughout your Dominion.

I shall be glad to forward further information respecting this Mission work among orphan and friendless children from either of the above Homes on application.—Yours sincerely, in work for Jesus,

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

THE FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

The Society of Friends, as its late annual gatherings abundantly proved, is not without its share in the great wave of revival that is passing over the Churches of the land. Indeed, it began somewhat earlier amongst the Friends than in most other religious bodies, if we may believe what was stated in the closing sitting by a venerable minister who came over from America twelve years ago, and who said that the first yearly meeting he attended in London had been to him a painful one, but that from that time to this he had noted a yearly improvement, and now he could testify to this yearly meeting having been a very blessed and encouraging one.

The Friends have long been accustomed to benefit by that interchange of ministerial visits between England and America, which have lately been instrumental in so much blessing in the church at large, and a yearly meeting rarely happens without our having some gospel ministers from the other side of the Atlantic. This year we had four, three lady preachers, and one gentleman. Amongst the former the most conspicuous was Mrs. Caroline Talbot, a lady whose experience in the "Women's Whiskey War" furnishes her with most startling anecdotes of wonderful conversions, especially of infidel young men. Mr. Allan Jay, from North Carolina, is a most earnest, loving winner of souls. He took the lead in several deeply-interesting fellowship-meetings, in which scores of young men and women testified their love to the Saviour, and their trust in Him, by simply repeating an appropriate text, part of a hymn, or offering a few words of prayer. The last of these meetings, which began at eight o'clock in the morning, was particularly sweet and refreshing; at none was there any appearance of excitement.

The new life, which has been long showing itself rather in individual and local effort for the Saviour, than in church action, has this year resulted in an aggressive move by the Society at large, the yearly meeting having named a committee to assist in the initiation of a series of evangelistic services, under the name of "general meetings." This has already been done on a very large scale in the Western States of America, where the Friends form some of the most healthy and vigorous churches; and lately it has been essayed with astonishing success even in so unfavourable a locality as the South of Ireland. In England, where there exists at the present time so great an appetite for spiritual food, it cannot but be cause for rejoicing that this small but influential section of the Church universal has been led to make a renewed effort to go out and "rescue the perishing," and in this they will doubtless have the sympathy and prayers of Christians generally.

EPSOM RACES, 1875.

For the eighteenth time, Miss Alexander, of Epsom, in connection with the London Open-air Mission, gathered her noble, brave, and devoted band of labourers to carry on evangelistic work at Epsom during the Derby week.

Never has there been so much to encourage the promoters of this grand work as this year—few enemies to fight, little opposition and blasphemy, no stones or flour, but many inquiries after Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Some decent people told us to keep our preaching for places where it would be valued; others said, "Let us alone," but many good wishes, quiet, zealous co-operation, volunteer keepers of order, and almost at all the meetings unobstructed singing and speaking the "good news." Many encouraging conversations with bookmakers, hawkers, musicians, gipsies, card-sellers, tramps, fallen sisters, the outcasts of society. How the people were held, how they listened, how large the congregations, how readily the tracts were received, how many inquired for more to take home to wife and children, we have not time to tell!

All the booths and tents were visited, and the sick and dying found in them cared for. Thousands of individuals were spoken with concerning the great salvation. By these means thousands are reached with the gospel message who would not have heard it otherwise; and many instances of usefulness of past and present efforts; but what will the harvest be? Whence is this mighty, blessed change in the temper and conduct of the masses of the people who visit these races? We believe it is the Spirit of the Lord poured out from on high according to his promise, in answer to the prayers of hundreds of his children, who have been pleading with Him on behalf of those who visit these races.

[The above should have appeared earlier, but was crowded out by other matter.]

"CHINA'S MILLIONS."

We wish to draw special attention to the new illustrated periodical, edited by Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, and published at this office. We should be rejoiced if every one of our readers became a subscriber; it would abundantly repay the small outlay of 1s. 6d. a year.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS IN ISLINGTON.

The hon. sec. to the committee in connection with these services (commenced during the recent meetings in the Agricultural Hall), writes to us of their continued progress:—

On Sunday, May 9, the last meeting in St. Mary's Hall was held, and on the following day we removed to our new quarters in Islington Hall. These are most commodious, and well suited to our requirements. In addition to the hall, which, capable of seating 600, is well lighted and ventilated, comfortable, and good for speaking in, we have a large room, seating about 300, separated from the hall by folding-doors, and so available, if necessary, for large gatherings. In this room we have an apparatus for making tea and coffee, both of which beverages can be obtained every night except Sunday, at the small charge of one penny per cup. This has proved a great boon to the young men, if we may judge by the quantity sold. We have also a committee-room and lavatory.

The method of conducting the meetings was, on our removal, entirely altered, the programme agreed upon being as follows:—Sunday, gospel address; Monday, testimony-meeting; Tuesday, gospel address; Wednesday, prayer-meeting; Thursday, Bible-reading; Friday, gospel address; Saturday, workers' meeting.

The meetings commence at 8.30 P.M., and close at 9.30 P.M. punctually.

Special requests for prayer are presented each evening; young men desiring an interest in our prayers for themselves or others are invited to send their requests to the secretary.

In connection with our work, we have arranged the following special meetings:—A weekly boys' meeting, already commenced, the attendance having reached 230; a children's service on Sunday evenings, at 6.30 P.M., etc.

We earnestly ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to remember us specially in prayer.

Before closing this notice, we wish to appeal to every young man resident in the North of London who may read this to give us his hearty and prayerful sympathy and co-operation in this special effort to win the unconverted young men of North London for Christ.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

The one hundred and third annual meeting of this old and useful society was held on Monday, June 14, in the Wesleyan Mission-house, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., kindly lent for the purpose by the Committee of the Missionary Society.

After tea, at six o'clock, the chair was taken by Robert Baxter, Esq., and the report was read by Mr. J. Atkinson, the secretary, which detailed the work of the past year. The Memorial Hall, in Bethnal Green, was stated to be now covered in, and was expected to be ready for opening in August next. This hall was to serve the purpose of a home for the society, and for a local Mission in a much neglected neighbourhood. About £2700 of the £4000 required to complete the undertaking had been subscribed, and an earnest appeal was made for additional subscribers, so that the premises might be entirely the Lord's.

The actual work embraced seven workhouses, where 140 sick and other wards, with 5000 poor people in them, were visited every week, with most blessed results. About forty lodging-houses, with 2000 lodgers in them, one Female Refuge, three Mission-halls, and fourteen open-air stations, where 681 services had been held. The following summary was given, viz. :—142 members, 10,808 services held, 11,799 addresses delivered, 341,932 hearers, 185,563 tracts distributed.

All this work, besides free breakfasts and teas, and a treat to all the poor people in the workhouses, and other relief to the poor, had been done for about £500.

Addresses were then delivered by Revs. C. B. Gibson, M.A., W. Tyler, J. I. Hillocks, R. Tabraham, Dr. Ellis, and Mr. G. Kirkham; and an excellent meeting was closed about nine o'clock.

We have received another list of applicants for participation in this Fund. What our readers desire to do in this matter, we trust they will do quickly, as the longest day is past, and the bright summer weather is speedily passing too. THE LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.

On Monday evening, June 21, the members of this Union invited a number of law clerks to tea, and a subsequent meeting at Doughty Hall, Bedford-row. The hall was well filled, Mr. Baron Pollock occupying the chair; and on the platform were several barristers and solicitors, many of whom were well-known in the profession.

The meeting was opened by a hymn and prayer, and several addresses were then given, the speakers being every one engaged in the practice of the law.

Mr. Robert Baxter gave a remarkable testimony to the stimulus exercised by the present movement in London on religious interest, and by such Conferences as those of Brighton and Mildmay in promoting spiritual life and Christian activity.

Mr. W. Larkins and the Hon. T. Pelham urged the importance of carrying Christianity into every-day life.

The meeting was then thrown open, and several of the law clerks spoke briefly and earnestly, carrying the observations and hints of previous speakers into more minute details in connection with the routine of the profession.

After a few words from Mr. White, the Chairman gave an earnest testimony to the indispensable assistance and necessity of constantly looking for help from above in the discharge of professional duties. As a judge who, in the exercise of his functions, had to leave town after town in which were confined men, some of whom might be under sentence of death, he said he should be weighed down by an overwhelming sense of the responsibility of his position, were he not sustained by divine support.

The meeting was characterized throughout by great attention and earnestness, and many present must have been stirred to renewed efforts in the cause of Christ, and to perseverance in a quiet and consistent daily walk with God. A profession whose very object is to seek out and administer justice, is one which most essentially requires divine aid in maintaining the strictest integrity, and a Prayer Union such as this, with the Christian intercourse it promotes, is a means of great assistance and encouragement to those seeking to glorify Christ in the pursuit of a necessary, yet often difficult profession. Were the Union more extensively known, there is no doubt that more would avail themselves of its assistance, and the secretary, Mr. H. C. Nisbet, 35, Lincoln's-inn-Fields, would gladly supply any information to any member of the profession who desires to join it or become more acquainted with its objects.

GOSPEL TENTS.

An accredited evangelist is greatly needing a tent for village work at once. Cost, £35. E. Shrubshall, Loughton, Essex.

George Heath, evangelist, Old Hall, Wellington, Salop, will (D.V.) travel with a gospel tent during July. There is a large attendance, and tracts much needed.

Mr. H. Lloyd, of Newport, Mon., also writes as to the pitching of a tent in the same place, in the centre of the town, as last year, and requests help for the purchase and the fitting up. Address, H. Lloyd, Esq., Kingsmill-terrace, Newport, Mon.

ST. IVES, HUNTS.—Four days of special children's and young people's services have been conducted here by Mr. J. M. Wigner, B.A., of New Cross. Deep interest was manifested, and many dear children at the closing service were rejoicing in the Saviour's forgiving love.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE DIVER: An Illustration. MOUNTAIN EMBLEMS.—Two exquisite little parabolic penny books, by an excellent lady, sold for the Lord's work in Ireland, at the Depository, 4, Kildare-place, Dublin. We hope a good many of our readers will order a few dozen copies each, and thus at once help the work in Ireland, and benefit those among whom the books are circulated.

THE NAMES ON THE GATES OF PEARL, and Other Studies. By Rev. C. H. WALLER, M.A. Sampson Low and Co.—This is a most interesting book, and one that opens up a vein of Scripture study too often neglected. The names of the twelve tribes of Israel found in Rev. xxi. upon the gates of pearl of the New Jerusalem, have suggested to the author the value of a closer investigation than is generally to be met with into the Scripture teaching as to the characters and histories, not only of the sons of Jacob, but also of the tribes to which they gave their names. The reader is rewarded by the gathering together of much valuable Scripture light upon this point, and the bearing of all this upon Christian experience is traced with no little research and wisdom. Christians are too apt to separate the history of the Church, whether viewed corporately or in the individual experience of its members, from the teaching of the Old Testament, forgetting that "salvation is of the Jews," that we are "grafted in among them, and with them partake of the root and fatness of the olive tree," that the names of the twelve tribes of Israel are to be found on the gates of pearl of the New Jerusalem, as well as the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb on the foundations of its wall. We heartily commend this interesting volume of Scripture studies, for such it is, to all who desire to dig a little beneath the surface of the Word. The author seems a man of true Christian spirit, faithful in maintaining gospel truth as well as deeply versed in the Scriptures. We should say, judging from this volume, that the London School of Divinity, of which the author is tutor, is highly favoured in having the teaching of one so well fitted, both by learning and experience, to unfold the meaning of the Word of God.

CURRY MALLETT, SOMERSET.—A series of meetings for the promotion of "Holiness" have been held at Curry Mallet, near Hatch, in the Baptist Chapel. The Rev. Silas Mead, who is a native of the place, presided. No new truth was propounded, but increased attention demanded for neglected truths pertaining to our life in Christ. The meetings were well attended, and productive of much good to God's people, and there were also a considerable number brought under conviction of sin.

REV. W. TAYLOR AT DEVONPORT AND PLYMOUTH.

—I have been with Mr. Taylor during his three weeks of work at Devonport and Plymouth. At Devonport there was a remarkable work going on amongst the children in the Sunday-schools (principally, I believe, amongst the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists). Of about 250 spoken with there, more than half were children. At Plymouth, with a fortnight's work, about 350 were spoken with, and their names forwarded to the minister of their choice for pastoral care. Mr. Taylor has gone to Liskeard for a week. Next Sunday he comes to this place for a week. He intends to leave for New York in the course of July.

NEWTON ABBOTT. S. PULBERT.

PARKSHOE BAPTIST CHURCH, RICHMOND.—Four weeks of special services have been held in this place with most encouraging signs of the Divine blessing, both to the quickening of professors and the conversion of sinners. The first and second weeks' series were for the unconverted; the third was set apart for believers. These were sustained by the pastor, Rev. J. Hunt Cooke. Last week addresses were given by several gentlemen connected with the University of Cambridge, who were spending part of their holidays at this beautiful town. The young people of this church have just commenced two preaching-stations right in the centre of Richmond.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For rich blessing which has attended the labours of Messrs. Mowl and Champney, two undergraduates of Cambridge, in the town of Southwell.—For the removal of obstacles to a union prayer-meeting in the town of Reigate, for which prayer was asked a short time since in THE CHRISTIAN; also for deepening blessing week after week. Praise also for wondrous blessing on a week of evangelistic services held in this place by Rev. W. Haslam.—For much blessing at the meetings prayed for, held by Mr. Haslam, in Kent, on the 21st and 22nd inst.—For fruit following work for Christ in a militia camp, just ended. May it continue, and abound!—For four brothers brought to Christ.—For great blessing received at united services held for the last three months in the largest hall in the city of Norwich.

PRAYER.—A young man, who holds a prominent position in the Christian Church, desires the prayers of God's people on his behalf, that he may be enabled to give himself wholly to Jesus, and have power to overcome and conquer a besetting sin, that is dragging him down to destruction in this world and the next.—That a suitable man may succeed the Rev. R. Maguire to the living of Clerkenwell.—For Richard Weaver, who is in a very prostrate condition of health.—For an intelligent man, an engineer, who is causing his wife much sorrow.—For a believer, striving to give up opium-taking and intemperance.

PLACES.—For a special blessing on a Mission to be held in the parish of Armaduff, Ireland, in July.—For the village of Winterborne Stickland, Dorset.—For Harlington, W., and the neighbourhood. A noon-day prayer-meeting is held every Thursday.—For a mighty awakening in the town of Ardrossan and neighbourhood, during a series of special meetings, to be conducted by Messrs. Hill, Dunn, and Weeks, evangelists, beginning July 6.

CONVERSIONS.—For one long seeking the Saviour, but still unsaved, and at times almost hopeless.—For the dear blind children, that spiritual light and life may be given them.—For a dear and only brother, his wife, and eight children.—For a young man, who is desperately wicked, and causing deep grief to his family.—For father, mother, and five brothers.—An aged mother for her two sons, and a grandson, aged fourteen, who is much given to falsehood.—For one deeply anxious for her soul's salvation.—For a great sufferer, whose heart is far from God.—For an uncle, who is nearing death, unprepared.—For a mother, who is sadly tried by the habits of her sons.—For several children, brought up seriously, but who have forsaken God's ways.—For a young man and his wife.—For a young girl, in consumption, that she may be saved without delay.
