Feeble ones in Him victorious,—

Who that bond of love can sever?
All so fair—not one is fairer,
All so dear—not one is dearer,
All in Christ,—all Christ's for ever.

WEST WELLOW, WILTS.—Mr. George Heford, of the Evangelisation Society, has been the instrument in God's hands of stirring up the Christian people here, and of gathering numbers into the Saviour's fold. A correspondent describes his closing meeting in the tent as a time never to be forgotten by all who were present. Mr. Heford is now in Wales, but they hope for his return to West Wellow.

OLD CASTLE-STREET JUVENILE MISSION, BETHNAL-GREEN.—Three years and a half since, in broken health, disappointed in the results of our efforts, weighed down by a debt on the building I was unable to remove, I was compelled to relinquish a work that had for five years and a half endeavoured to raise a standard for the Lord in the midst of terrible sin. After vainly striving for more than twelve months to get other Christians to carry on the work, the ground was sold by the landlord, and the building by the holders of the mortgage, to the London School Board. May I add here my solemn conviction, compelled by a sad experience, that for Christians contemplating an extended sphere of usefulness to go deliberately into debt, in the hope of making it up at a future time, is the death-blow to all spiritual blessings? Had I waited the Lord's time, and gone on only as far as present funds justified, the Mission would have continued to the present time. The new Board School in Old Castle-street was opened in January; and, having received promises of help, after prayerfully seeking the Lord's guidance, I engaged a portion of the premises for a Sunday-school and children's evening service. After nine months' efforts, with fluctuation in the attendance during the hot weeks in summer, we have now an afternoon school of over 250, and an evening service of over 300, which in a few weeks we hope will reach 500—about the number we can accommodate. Nearly thirty teachers, mostly members of Providence Chapel, assist in the work. From the commencement we have had tokens of God's favour; at times quite a wave of blessing has passed over us. We have quite forty hopeful cases of conversion, more than thirty being in membership in a "Young Christians' Band," who meet every Thursday evening for Bible study. I am thankful to add further that all expenses have been met, and we are free from debt—having always to pay rent (£44 a year) quarterly, in advance. Believing we are doing God's work, I should like to ask a remembrance in prayer from believers who feel it laid upon them to plead for the various objects which are laid before them in THE CHRISTIAN.—Yours faithfully, WILLIAM JARVIS, Supt.

P.S.—Any books suitable for a juvenile library would be very acceptable.

GOSPEL MISSION, OXFORD.

DURING the summer months, assisted by a few devoted helpers, I have been preaching in the open air in "The Friars"—a densely populated and very poor neighbourhood. On the Lord's-day evenings the congregations have been very large, and great interest has been awakened. Some have been blessed, and, did your space permit, I could give some interesting cases proving the power of the Word.

As the longer evenings came on, I began to be greatly concerned about the future of the work. But the Lord was moving in the matter for me. I received a communication from a Christian friend to the effect that he was moved to offer me the use of a room accommodating nearly 300 people, rent-free, that the Mission work, in which he had become deeply interested, might not be stopped by the approaching winter. This offer we have joyfully accepted, not doubting but that the Lord, who has thus opened for us this door of service, will provide the means for carrying on the work.

Freewill offerings towards the general objects of the Mission or towards the expenses of free breakfasts and teas, which we propose to give, will be gratefully received.

PRAYER FOR MEDICAL MEN.—It is suggested that Oct. 18—the day on which many remember "Luke, the beloved physician"—should be fixed for united prayer on behalf of all medical men, including all branches of their useful profession.

THE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY OF OPERATIVE SILK WEAVERS, who are the descendants of the Protestant French refugees, appeal for £400 to build class-rooms as an appendage to their new chapel. The Rev. David Blow, 103, Finchley New-road, St. John's-wood, N.W., is Treasurer.

REV. W. H. M. H. AITKEN requests to make the following correction in the programme of his proposed labours for the next six months:—His visit to Burton-in-Lonsdale is postponed till Dec. 5; his meetings in Brighton in January will be held at All Souls, not All Saints. Mr. Aitken also states that his correct address is Holmestide, Haastwood, Derby. (See CHRISTIAN of Sept. 23, p. 15, for full list of services.)

MISSIONS AT GOSPORT.—Lt.-Col. Urmston, of Southsea, writes to us enclosing a report of Mr. Henry Cook's multifarious mission-labours at Gosport and the adjoining ports, and adds:—"I may truly say the half is not told of all this faithful servant's various efforts. We are most deeply interested in all his undertakings, and if you could draw the attention of the Christian public to it you would be helping a really blessed work. His motto is JESUS ONLY. It deserves to be widely known and liberally supported."

THE HOP-PICKERS.—Reports have reached us from Mr. Kendon and Mr. Chinn of successful evangelistic services among the hop-pickers. They have been visited from bin to bin, and open-air services have been held, as well as free teas; all these opportunities have been used to preach Christ, and some have given evidence of "receiving with meekness the engrafted Word." Thousands of tracts, leaflets, gospels, &c., have been distributed. These efforts will be continued for a short time yet, and those labouring among this class ask an interest in the prayers of their fellow-Christians.

GREAT BRITAIN AND CHINA.—The Times of Wednesday last week, in a leading article, says:—"It would be useless to hide the gravity of the news from China. One cause of the disagreement is said to be the demand of our Minister, Mr. Wade, that the Yunnan officials shall be punished on account of the murder of Mr. Margary, and another is the refusal of the Chinese Government to publish its treaties with us in the Peking Gazette. We have yet to learn whether it is resolved to fight rather than yield. There has, at least, been no open rupture, for our Minister has not yet left the Court of Peking; but he seems to have sent an ultimatum, and to have intimated that he would quit his post on Oct. 13 unless the Chinese Government should comply with his demands. Such an announcement is sufficiently grave." We need hardly ask our readers to be much in prayer that these difficulties may be removed and war averted. [We are glad to notice that later telegrams point to a peaceful settlement of the difficulty.]

PRAYER FOR THE JEWS.—I read with much interest, in the admirable closing address to the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland for this year, by the Moderator, Dr. A. Moody Stuart, an earnest appeal for intercession to be made on behalf of the Jews, on the Day of Atonement, Saturday, Oct. 9; that whilst they are confessing their sins, and seeking pardon "without shedding of blood," we may be pleading on their behalf the precious blood of the Great High Priest, who "by his own blood" entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. The notice is short, but if you will kindly insert this note in next week's issue, surely many of your readers will remember the children of Abraham on that day, and ask that the Holy Ghost may reveal to them Jesus of Nazareth as their own Messiah, who ever pleads for them and us at the right hand of the Father.

A LOVER OF ISRAEL.

MAJOR COLE AT GLOUCESTER.

"God is faithful," is still our happy song of praise, as with hearts brimming over with thankfulness we record his grace. Unitedly we cried to Him to fill the Shire Hall with eager listeners and with the power of the Holy Ghost. He has indeed done both.

On Sunday morning (Sept. 26) there was a large attendance at the meeting for Christians. "Jesus himself" was in the midst, and the Holy Spirit revealed Him to some present as their precious Saviour for the first time, while others who knew Him as such were brought into closer fellowship with Him, and resolved in his name and power to "rescue the perishing."

In the afternoon by 2.15 the hearers began to assemble for 3.30, and, as at all the services, hymns were sung till the service commenced. Efficient help was rendered by Mr. James Fielding, who leads the choir. Numbers stood as closely as possible down the aisles and outside the door, and hundreds were unable to find entrance. Many, many hearts were melted as Major Cole uplifted the crucified Saviour. His description of his sufferings for us made us ashamed of our cold-heartedness. The trio "Look and live" was then sung by Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole, and was most appropriate. Again in the evening our hearts were deeply moved, and our eyes filled with tears of joy as we saw the multitude under the power of God, which kept them all intent upon his message of love, whether preached or sung. Again hundreds had to turn away disappointed of getting in. Major Cole spoke of "The Prodigal Son" with great reality and power.

Many were blessed; amongst them a poor man, who said he had been just like that prodigal. Overflowing meetings were held both afternoon and evening, and some who had been awakened in the Shire Hall were enabled to rest in Jesus at the Theatre services. One such left the next morning for her home in Cornwall, rejoicing. A young man who was about to leave for the West Indies was asked to come in by a lady in the street, and was enabled to take Christ as his Saviour. He then resolved to go home to New York, and be a comfort to his mother, instead of pursuing his journey to the West Indies.

All the week there have been large audiences, and most precious results at every meeting. One evening Major Cole asked a man—"Are you a Christian?" "No, sir." "But Jesus bore our sins in his own body on the tree. He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life." "Is it as easy as that?" He accepted Christ. His son was sitting near, and accepted Him also, and, just as Major Cole was leaving them, he saw this man's little daughter, and said—"My little girl, do you believe that you are saved?" "No, sir, but I wish I was." "Isn't it real good that Jesus came to earth to bear your sins? Do you believe it?" "I do, sir, now." The three were brought together for prayer—father, son, and daughter,—and said they would trust Jesus and raise the family altar. They prayed for the mother's conversion.

It has been so sweet to see those who were blessed at the first of the meetings bringing their friends and getting Christians to lead them to Jesus, and speaking to them themselves, looking so radiantly happy all the while. Amongst these was one who had derided the movement, but was afterwards awakened at the first meeting.

Many prayers have been answered. A lady asked prayer for her husband, who for months had not come home sober, that that night he might do so; and prayer was answered. She believes that he is deeply convinced of sin, if not fully decided for Christ.

Two evenings the ministers and committee met Major and Mrs. Cole at tea, when much important testimony was given, and fervent thanksgiving offered the Lord for their visit. Every denomination was represented. The ministers said how much Major Cole had endeared himself to them, and how thankful they were, from the depths of their hearts, for his visit, which would have a lasting influence upon their ministry. One said that he rejoiced over a letter of welcome which he had written to Major Cole more than over any he had written in his life, and told how some of the very worst people in the city had been rescued. Others had much to tell of the grace and love of Jesus in reaching those who were afar off, and very happy fellowship was enjoyed.

Many were unable to get inside the Shire Hall at the farewell service on Friday. It was densely packed in every part and outside the doors. After prayer, Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole sang "I think when I read that sweet story of old" most sweetly, and many hearts were touched. Then Major Cole read Isa. liii., and said that as the Spirit of God wrote the Bible we must go to its Author for the explanation. With the utmost earnestness he entreated his hearers, as he expected to meet them in Eternity, to rest in that word—God "hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." "Believe it, and break loose from the devil." The devil is a liar, and I hate him, and I hope God will make you hate him. I like to call him the devil better than Satan; I like to call him by the meanest name I can think of. I'm on the Rock Christ Jesus to-night. You will never find rest till you find it in Christ. Don't go to insure your house when it is burnt down. Now, say, 'I will rest my eternal interest in Christ.' I praise God I have the privilege of going to any man in the world, and telling him that Jesus "bore our sins in His own body on the tree." Silent prayer followed, and then the sweet, gentle strains of "Come away, come away to Jesus" fell on the ear, and entered many hearts. All remained with bowed heads during the last loving appeal to decision that they would ever hear from the beloved friends from whom they were sadly parting.

The Rev. J. Bloomfield then asked all who were thankful for Major Cole's meetings to raise their hands. All were raised immediately. The devoted family was then commended in prayer to God. Many anxious souls remained, and numbers lingered for a parting word with those who had become to them dear friends in Christ Jesus.

Many went at an early hour to part with them at the station, perhaps till we meet "at the beautiful gate." Prayer was offered by Major Cole, and the hymns "The Lord will provide," "Rock of Ages," and "Shall we gather at the river?" were sung, while several could not restrain their tears at parting with those in whom so much of Jesus Christ shines forth. A Noon Prayer-meeting is established in Gloucester, at Wellington Hall, Longsmith-street, from twelve to one (daily, except Saturday).

ACTON.—The Children's Services held in the Assembly Rooms here during the past week by W. Mowll, Esq., of Cambridge, have been greatly blessed. The room has been filled to overflowing night after night, and the presence of the Master has been realized in a very marked degree; many, both children and adults, have been brought to the Saviour, and are now rejoicing in Him. A permanent service for children at 6.30 on Sunday evening, and a boys' class at seven on Tuesday (both in the Assembly Room) have resulted from these services; and prayer is asked that the Lord's work amongst the young in this place may be greatly owned of Him. A service has also been held daily amongst the navvies employed on the Great Western Railway, during their dinner-hour, when Mr. Sankey's hymns have been sung by lady helpers and others, and an address given by Mr. Mowll. On Wednesday last a supper was given to 120 of these men, when a powerful address was delivered by Mr. Somerset Gardiner. Many of them have been converted to God, are now leading consistent Christian lives and trying to win others to Jesus.

LADIES' BOARDING-SCHOOLS.—Two teachers or principals of ladies' boarding-schools, in Bath and Exeter respectively, having received spiritual blessing through this year's services on Weston-super-Mare sands, has resulted in my being invited to visit these schools in the two cities. Should this meet the eye of other teachers who are anxious for the souls of their young charge, and wish for a similar visit, they might make known their wishes to Rev. W. and Mrs. Bradbury, Mildmay Lodge, Weston-super-Mare. We believe the promise may be claimed by teachers as well as parents, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." This year, after the Brighton Convention, Dr. Winslow, Mr. Varley, and myself addressed nearly 1000 pupils and teachers belonging to the first-class schools of that town, in the Corn Exchange, and, as Dr. Winslow observed, it was one of the most interesting and beautiful of all those famous gatherings. For about a year Mrs. Bradbury has addressed a large class of such pupils in our drawing-room on Sunday afternoons. Several of the pupils were from Ireland. An occasional tea was given for their encouragement.—WALTER BRADBURY.

WALTER PENROSE'S MISSION.—Few are aware, who pass up and down City-road, of the good work carried on among the costers and the inhabitants of the Vinegar-ground. Nearly four years ago Walter Penrose was led to take a house in this ground, which very soon became too small for the work. Another was therefore taken, which again, in time, became too crowded. Now, by the kind permission of Lady Charlotte P. Stur', the school-room of the Vinegar-ground is placed at his disposal. There are preaching services out of doors as well as indoors on Lord's-day evenings; also children's service on Wednesday evenings, as well as mothers' meetings on Tuesdays. The work is entirely unsectarian; any Christian brother is cordially welcome to help in the good work. In various ways assistance is earnestly requested.

MR. NEEDHAM IN NORTH AMERICA.

It is some time since you heard in a direct way from me, and I take the opportunity this morning to send you a brief report of the work in St. John, N.B., whilst waiting at the Truro railway station for my train to Picton, N.S.

On my arrival at St. John, on Sept. 1, I found the Young Men's Christian Association had made arrangements for three daily services, and from the very beginning we had a realization of God's power and presence in a very marked degree. The eight o'clock morning prayer-meetings were largely attended, and it soon became apparent that the Christians were beginning to apprehend the possibilities of faith. Previously, according to their confession, there had been no marked or special work for years, and the few who walked with God were lamenting over the great deadness and barrenness of spiritual life. There was, however, an immediate response amongst Christians to the truth of their position, privileges, responsibilities, &c., as children of God. The Bible-reading meetings increased in numbers daily until there was an attendance of at least seven hundred. The evening services had to be removed from the large hall of the Young Men's Christian Association to the largest public building available, and even then the anxious crowds could not be accommodated, an overflow meeting on one occasion more than filling a large neighbouring Presbyterian church.

In the seven days of my stay there I was enabled to have twenty-three services in all, and I do not know of one at which we had not signal blessing given us. Both the number of the services and the largeness of the congregations were very encouraging, but better things remain to be told. At some of our inquiry-meetings hundreds remained behind, and the scenes witnessed were very affecting. There were several interesting cases of conversion and restoration of backsliders. One is that of a young man who had been converted in Dublin, but for four years had wandered far astray. At the first evening service he was arrested and restored, and is now actively engaged in the work. Many who were heads of families confessed Christ, and in some instances whole families were led to the Saviour.

Before leaving St. John a daily prayer-meeting was organized, also a children's weekly service. I left the dear people last night, and am now on my way to the Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of the provinces, where I expect to meet with the leading workers of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward's Island, &c. There is a deep desire at such conferences for an increase of Bible knowledge and opportunities given to meet with earnest brethren and confer with them regarding evangelistic work generally.

My route at the present is from Picton to Charlotteville, P.E.I.; Halifax, N.S.; and other towns in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; returning to my home in Philadelphia about Oct. 1. I am hoping soon after to bring my family to England for six or eight months, joyfully anticipating the pleasure of meeting you and other dear brethren again in the flesh. If the way opens, we will (D.V.) leave New York about Nov. 1, tarrying for a season at Liverpool on our arrival, and making arrangements while there for an evangelistic tour in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Will you and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for us and the work in our hands? GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

2308, St. Alban's-place, Philadelphia, U.S.A.

EVANGELISTIC MISSIONS.—Mission Services have been held at St. Mary's and Christ Church parishes, Wakefield, by the Rev. Walter Bradbury, who will hold Mission Weeks (D.V.) at Stevington Church, near Bedford, Nov. 7-14; and at St. Denys, Southampton, Dec. 17-24.

Mr. PHILIP GIBSON, who is known to many of our readers, has been led to settle in Market Rasen, Lincolnshire, where he hopes to give himself to evangelistic work. He asks for the prayers of friends, and would also be glad to receive Gospel tracts and papers for distribution, addressed to him at Market Rasen.

SPA GOSPEL HALL.—Contributions are received at the office of THE CHRISTIAN; and also for "Gospel Hall, Spn," at the Salford and Manchester Bank, St. Ann's-street Branch, Manchester. God is owning the effort by inclining his servants to give; it would be a very happy thing if the £500 still required were collected this month. ESTHER BEAMISH.

PARSON'S-GREEN HOMES.—We would again remind our readers of the effort Mr. Thomas is making to secure these homes for his rescue work. He has devoted much labour and anxious care to this matter, denying himself the usual holiday in order to accomplish the greatly to be desired object. It will be seen by our advertising columns that his wants are still considerable.

MR. VARLEY IN YORK.

About three weeks ago our Presbyterian brethren arranged a week of evangelistic services in one of our public halls, conducted by Revs. Dr. Mackay, D. Lowe, and others, assisted by clergy and ministers of different denominations in the city. This effort was blessed to some souls, and formed a prelude to the labours of our dear brother Mr. Varley, who came amongst us at the invitation of our United Prayer-Meeting Committee.

The Corn Exchange, secured for his services, has been crowded night after night by a most attentive audience, and our brother has preached the glorious Gospel of Christ with great clearness and power. We have met with cheering cases of many who have professed to trust in Jesus through the declaration of the word, but we believe a much greater number have heard the truth, and gone away quietly, accepting Christ as their Saviour.

The Bible-readings, given every afternoon, have been a source of great help and blessing to hundreds of Christians. The daily prayer-meetings have been sweet hours of prayer and praise. The requests for prayer have been very numerous, and bespeak an earnest solicitude on the part of many for the salvation of souls.

On Sunday week, at half-past seven a.m., Mr. Varley gave a very useful address to several hundred Christian workers. In the afternoon he spoke to a meeting of women only, and in the evening to men only; there must have been about 1100 or 1200 present on each of the two latter occasions. A very happy feature in the work is the fact that our friend has been supported by at least twenty clergy and ministers of all denominations, who have worked heart and hand together. There has been no excitement, but the blessed Spirit is quietly, yet forcefully, at work in the hearts of many in all classes of society.

Previous to the commencement of the meetings, about forty Christian friends undertook to visit every house in the city twice. Many thousands of tracts were distributed, and their labour of love has been blessed to themselves and to others.

Mr. Varley's invitation to breakfast last Monday week was accepted by ministers representing the following Christian Churches:—Church of England, 11; Wesleyan, 3; Primitive Methodist, 2; Methodist Free Church, 2; Wesleyan New Connexion, 1; Baptist, 1; Presbyterian, 1. Several laymen and other ministers were prevented from attending by absence from York. The occasion proved a most happy one, and will long be remembered. The greatest unity prevailed, the Holy Spirit being manifestly present, speaking through his servant in earnest and appropriate words of counsel and instruction. The Bible-reading and evening Gospel meeting were seasons of much blessing both to the Lord's people and to sinners. To the regret of all, Mr. Varley was obliged to leave us on Tuesday, but was succeeded for the rest of the week by our dear friend Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, to whom the Lord gave almost an entirely new audience, consisting largely of the working-classes, some of whom, who have not attended a place of worship for years, have professed to trust in Jesus. Mr. Hurditch's Bible-readings have been times of refreshing to Christians.

Major Cole (accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Cole) commenced meetings here to-morrow. Will the Lord's children plead earnestly that his dear servants may be strengthened physically, and be filled with the power of the Holy Ghost, that many souls may be brought out of darkness into the light as it is in Jesus? GEO. BENNETT.

Y. M. C. Association, York, Oct. 2.

KIRKBY LONSDALE.—The Rev. R. Stainton, of Sheffield, has been holding a series of special services in the Concert Hall of this town, which have been very largely attended by a class of people seldom seen in a place of worship. Each evening the interest has increased, and the blessing of God has manifestly rested on the meetings.

BOYS' HOME AT WERNETH, OLDHAM.—A local paper says:—"It is an establishment where a number of boys, snatched from among the waifs, strays, &c., of our large towns, are fed, clothed, and cared for in every respect; where they are taught to follow industrial pursuits for their own advantage, and for the benefit of society; where the broad principles of religion are instilled, and the beauties of morality set forth. For a period of four years has this society been carried on, and something like 500 boys have passed through it, many of whom are now in good situations, and bidding fair to be most respectable members of society." Mr. John Street, the founder and manager of the Home, seeks to make it self-supporting, but it is not quite so, and one of its chief supporters has recently died.

THE NOTTINGHAM CONVENTION.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

This Convention commenced on Sunday, Sept. 25, by a preliminary prayer-meeting in the Lecture Hall at 8.15 in the evening. The hall was crowded. On the following evening, so great was the interest excited, that the Lecture Hall was again crowded, and an overflow meeting was conducted by the Rev. E. H. Hopkins, of Richmond. Both meetings were characterized by deep solemnity and great spiritual power.

There are many meetings each day, commencing at seven in the morning and concluding at 9.30 in the evening. The interest in the teaching given is evidently most intense, and at the early morning meetings there are from 800 to 1000 persons present. In the evening there are about 1800 present.

As so many addresses are given, it would be impossible to give more than a brief summary. I shall, therefore, endeavour to give your readers a short account of the teaching we are receiving, about which there is so much interest excited in the country, and concerning which there is, I think, not a little misconception.

The first point insisted upon by the various speakers is that God's children present should submit themselves to the searching examination of the Holy Spirit, with the object of perceiving their low state of spiritual life, and the many failures resulting therefrom. All true Christians mourn the feebleness of faith, the lack of zeal and courage into which great numbers of professing Christians have sunk. Moreover, are not many Christians, as Mr. Varley said, making idols of wife or children, or business, or money, or reputation, and are consequently not only losing the fulness and the sweetness of their fellowship with God, but are also exhibiting before their families and the world a life which is dishonouring to the Saviour? How important, then, that we should submit ourselves to the searching of the Holy Spirit, in order that our inward and outward sin might be clearly revealed to us, and that in the light of God's presence we should loathe it, and put it away!

One of the sweetest of the hymns of Dr. Bonar is the following, which has been sung several times during the meetings:—

"For lack of love I languish,
For lack of light I pine;
Lord Jesus, soothe my anguish,
And heal this soul of mine.

"For lack of strength I'm sinking—
Oh! give me strength divine,
And let me still be drinking
Each day thy heavenly wine.

"From lack of faith I'm falling,
Hand, heart, and head are low;
Exulting and prevailing,
Come on my hellish foe!

"For lack of joy I'm losing
All heart to work for Thee;
At every pore out-oozing,
Life goeth fast from me."

Does not this hymn express the general tone of spiritual life throughout Christendom, or at least of vast numbers of the Lord's true children? It is therefore asked, and the question is most momentous—"Is the Christian experience set forth in this hymn the normal and scriptural experience of those who are the followers of Jesus?" Is that the scriptural Christianity which, after revealing Christ as the pardoner of sin, leaves the believer to exclaim—"For lack of love I languish! for lack of strength I'm sinking! from lack of faith I'm failing!"?

This leads up to the second point—namely, that the design of Christ is that his followers should on earth be delivered from the power of sin, and, as the Apostle Paul prays, might "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world" (Tit. ii. 12). This point has been fully dealt with by the Chairman, Mr. Croome, the Revs. C. Graham, E. H. Hopkins, W. Peplow, C. B. Sawday, and Mr. Varley. Numbers of texts have been brought forward in which holiness or sanctification is inculcated upon the Lord's people. Indeed, throughout the meetings hitherto there has been a constant appeal to Holy Scripture, and great light has been thrown upon many portions of it with reference to the privileges and duties of the believer.

A third and most important point is that there is no such thing as sinlessness for the believer on earth. I confess to having been deeply gratified by the clear utterances on this part of the subject. In the words of the Chairman, it is "deliverance from the power, not from the presence of sin."

The words of every other speaker were equally clear on this matter. Indeed, at almost every meeting the Lord's Prayer has been said aloud by the people, led either by the chairman or by some other speaker. Time after time it has been stated that the holiness or sanctification of the believer on earth is progressive, and is conditioned by our knowledge and by the progressive work of the Spirit in the heart. This Convention promises to be one of the most useful I have attended, in calling forth clear and scriptural views on this one point, as it is chiefly with reference to it that so much misconception prevails. And I could not help regretting the absence of the devoted men of God who have expressed themselves as unfavourable to the opinions which they have thought the teachers of this movement hold; for had they been present, they would no doubt have seen that they had been labouring under misapprehension. Every speaker here, while testifying most distinctly to the power of Christ to give the victory over sin, most distinctly repudiates the very idea of sinlessness. Yet each speaks of having received a most surprising blessing—a life of present deliverance from the power of sin; a life of unbroken fellowship with God; a life of perfect rest and peace of soul amid the numerous trials and sorrows of life; a life of progressive holiness, progressing more and more until we come unto the "measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

This leads to the fourth point—How can this glorious life become ours? The answer given is—by trusting the Saviour, Him alone and entirely. We are to have no confidence in ourselves, having received, as the apostle says, "The sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (2 Cor. i. 9). Our entire trust for all spiritual blessings is to be in our Redeemer. The Chairman, who, by the way, seemed specially fitted for his responsible position, spoke of our needing trust for four things in particular—first, for pardon of sin; second, for guidance in all providential matters; third, for power for active service; and fourthly, for deliverance from the power of sin. He stated that many are trusting God for the first three, but not for the fourth, and that consequently their life is one of bitter and fierce conflict, and very frequent failure. We are to bring every sin to Jesus, and by faith let Him give us the victory over it. The Rev. C. B. Sawday told us of a member of his church who came to him and said, "I must give up my class in the Sunday-school, for though I am a Christian I have such a bad temper that I am quite ashamed of myself." Mr. Sawday replied, "You are quite right in being ashamed of yourself, but you need not give up your class." "What, then, must I do?" he was asked. Mr. Sawday replied, "Don't give up your class, but give up your temper—give it up to Jesus, and He will give you the victory." The advice was taken, and at the end of the week Mr. Sawday's friend came to him and said, "It's glorious! Since I trusted Christ with my temper He has given me complete victory." And, added Mr. Sawday, fifteen months have passed away since then, and his friend gives the same joyful and victorious testimony. And Mr. Varley well expressed the gist of the teaching we are receiving, when he said—"If Jesus can save my soul from condemnation now, and hell hereafter, surely it is but a small thing to believe that He can give me the victory over every conscious sin, and enable me to walk in the light. But He cannot save a man from the guilt of sin unless that man trusts Him for this, and so He cannot deliver a believer from the power of sin unless that believer trusts Him for this blessing also." And, repudiating sinless perfection, it may fairly be asked—What limit can we put to the power which our Almighty Saviour is ready now to exert in the heart and life of the believer?

The closing meeting of the Convention merits special notice. This took place at seven o'clock on the Saturday morning. There were about 1000 persons present. The keynote was struck by the singing of "My God, I am Thine.

What a comfort divine!
What a blessing to know
That my Jesus is mine!"

After prayer, persons were asked to give testimony, or to repeat any portion of Scripture that was upon their minds. Brethren and sisters from all parts of the hall arose and repeated such portions of God's Word as set forth their determination to be wholly the Lord's, or such as expressed their fulness of joy and peace in Him. After this the Rev. J. Mountain sang as a solo:—

"In God I have found a retreat,
Where I can securely abide."

And as the assembly joined in the chorus—

"O what comfort it brings,
As my soul sweetly sings,
I am safe from all danger
While under His wings,"

the joy on every countenance told of the peace which dwelt in the soul.

The Rev. Webb Peplow then gave a parting exhortation on the words:—"Commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator" (1 Pet. iv. 19). After this the assembly arose and read aloud Psalms cxlix. and cl., thus praising God for all his goodness during the Convention. Then came "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and never do I remember hearing it sung with such vigour, and devotion, and joy. A few moments of silent prayer, the benediction, and the Convention was over. The meeting lasted almost two hours, but numbers stayed behind to sing the charming hymns, or tarried about to bid the speakers and each other good-bye. I confess that I felt as I left the hall and mingled in the streets with the thousands who, alas! know not God,—I felt somewhat as the three disciples did when, after seeing the glory of the transfigured Saviour, they came down from the mountain to meet face-to-face the sick and sorrowing, the palsied, epileptic, and these possessed with devils. But as the transfiguration was intended to be a preparation for work for the divine Christ, so this Convention, it is hoped, will stimulate those who attended it to all holy work among the dying children of men.

Much has been said against these Conventions, and much more will, perhaps, still be said against them; but, judging impartially of what I have heard here, I should say that the keynote of every prayer, and hymn, and address, is in that one name, the name above every name, the name of "Jesus."

Turning now from the teaching, I have only to say that a very great charm in the meetings was the singing of the hymns of Consecration and Faith. The Rev. J. Mountain had charge of this part of the service, and sang several of the solos. He was also ably assisted for two days by the Rev. J. W. Mayers. The choir, consisting of about sixty persons selected from the different churches, sang many of the tunes with great taste.

Mr. SHULDHAM HENRY requests us to state, in order to avoid misunderstanding, that in removing to the South of France for the health of one of his children, he does not purpose in any way to relinquish evangelistic work in England. He will be at the Iron Room, Clapton, during the present month, and requests prayer for services to be held by him in November at St. Servan, St. Malo, and Dinard.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN THEATRES, &c.—A conference of the committee, managers, and stewards of the Association for Providing Religious Services for the People in theatres, halls, and mission-rooms, prior to the resuming of these services, was held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on the evening of Monday week, and was numerously attended. Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's-churchyard, who occupied the chair, gave a sketch of the origin and progress of these services. During the past year there had been 361 services, attended by 281,700 persons, and since the commencement of this movement there had been 2816 services attended by 3,119,600 persons, a large number of whom had been gathered into the churches. The population of London was increasing at the rate of 75,000 a year. The churches and chapels could not keep up with this increase, and the need of additional religious services was consequently becoming greater year by year. This Association had eight or ten theatres and halls open, but more than double that number were needed. Mr. Sawell, the Secretary, and the Rev. J. H. Wilson, Secretary of the Home Mission, followed with some observations, from which it appeared that the services are not so numerously attended as they were formerly, which was attributed to the novelty having worn off, and to the fact that whereas at first some of the more popular of the clergy and of the Nonconformist ministers took part in the services, they did not do so now to the same extent, and that it had become absolutely necessary to employ laymen to carry on the work. The meeting then proceeded to discuss the question, "How to make the services attractive," and on this point a variety of suggestions were offered. One which seemed to meet with general acquiescence was that measures should be taken to improve the singing. Another, which was received with equal favour, was that there should be "more fire" both in the pulpit and on the platform, and that the sermons should not be too long. While the diminished attendance was admitted and deplored, several of the speakers stated that the services of the past year had been more productive of good than those of any previous year, the conversions having been more numerous. Incidentally it was stated that the subscriptions fell short by about $250 of the expenses, and a hope was expressed that the Christian public, when its attention was called to this fact, would supply the deficiency.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

INSTANT AND FERVENT PRAYER

is earnestly requested for Messrs. Stevenson and Soltau, that God's blessing and protection may be granted them in their important and perilous enterprise. The following extract is from Mr. Stevenson's letter, dated Rangoon, Sept. 2:—

"The day before yesterday I had the joy of again welcoming my dear brother Soltau to Rangoon, and I do bless God for what He has done by and with him in Moulmein. I have no doubt that the training and experience acquired during his short sojourn there will be of immense help to him in his future labours in Western China.

"We are looking forward to leave this next Thursday (Sept. 9) for Mandalay (the capital of Burmah). I am happy to say that Mr. Rose, an able and experienced American missionary, has decided to go with us, and take with him a Burman preacher. I think it is very kind and good of the Lord thus step by step to open up our way. I have seen God's guidance in our movements ever since this Western China Mission was proposed, and He who has guided us thus far will continue to do so until the end. We are busy making arrangements for starting, and propose to stay about nine or ten days in Mandalay, and wait upon the King to inform him of our intentions, and ask for permission to reside in Bhamo. I cannot say that we should not go, even were he to refuse, but at any rate it seems right and proper to pay due respect to the sovereign ruler, and even as a matter of policy (forgive the word, I'm ashamed to use it) it is better to be straightforward, and tell just what we intend to do. If we took a contrary course our presence at Bhamo would be reported at once to the King, and we should naturally be regarded with suspicion—unnecessary suspicion, I imagine."

May I also request prayer for two brethren who leave us (p.v.) during the month for China. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

6, Pyrland-road, Stoke Newington-green, London, N.

MR. VARLEY'S MOVEMENTS.—Kindly intimate that I am (p.v.) at Plymouth from Oct. 6 to 16, Bristol 17 to 23, Liverpool 24th to end of month. Pray for me.

HENRY VARLEY.

GURNESEY.—An interesting feature in connexion with the work now going on here is the formation of a young women's meeting, commenced last week, which is steadily increasing, and now numbers about seventy young women, who meet twice a week. These meetings have been greatly blessed. It is arranged next week to have a series of evangelistic services in the Assembly-rooms, to be conducted by ministers of various denominations.

SALISBURY CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE will be held (p.v.) at the Council Chamber, Salisbury, on Wednesday and Thursday, 13th and 14th inst. The subjects are:—Wednesday, 11 a.m.—"Union with Christ"; 3 p.m.—"Union with One Another for Christ's sake"; 7 p.m.—Sermon, by Rev. W. Saunders, Bristol. Thursday, 11 a.m.—"The Return of the Lord Jesus"; 3 p.m.—"Christian Work"; Miss Weston will tell of her work among sailors. Evangelistic services both evenings.

VICTORIA HALL, LIVERPOOL.—This spacious building, the scene of so many "wondrous gatherings" during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Liverpool, has been reopened for continuous special services during this month. This week Rev. W. H. Aitken conducts the services; Rev. W. Mayers, of Bristol, from Oct. 11 to 15 inclusive; Major Cole from Oct. 17 to 22; and Mr. Varley from Oct. 24 to 31. Will our readers pray in faith for the conversion of many souls as the result of these meetings?

ROMAN CATHOLIC PROGRESS.—While the Pope and his subordinates are apparently losing ground on the Continent, events show that they are widening their borders in our midst, and there really seem to be grounds for the assertion of Signor Gavazzi that they intend, if possible, to compass the reconquest of our land to Popery. Cardinal Manning has been laying the first stone of a new church at Hemerton, and his remarks show that he is at all events wise in his generation. Surely Protestant Christians might well imitate the zeal of the Romanists in their laying hold of the children. At the Hemerton service the Cardinal said:—"It was but the other day he had laid the first stone of the schools in the district, when he was told that wise, good, and experienced friends had said that there would only be found 150 Catholics in the neighbourhood. However, Father Akers had got over 200 children in the school, and if that number of children were in the school, they might be sure there were 1000 or 1200 Catholics somewhere. Father Akers had begun his work in the wisest and surest way, the gathering together of the children, for the hope of the harvest was in the handful of good seed. The hope of the future was in the training up of the young ones of the flock, as they became the heads of families and of a parish."

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.

THE Seventh Anniversary of the commencement of these services for working people was held on Sunday. Notwithstanding the continuous downpour of rain, a congregation of about 2000 assembled in the afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson conducted the preliminary part of the service, being followed by the Rev. R. C. Billing, vicar of Holy Trinity, Islington, who gave a brief address. In making the annual statement as to the work of the Hall, Dr. Davidson mentioned that the afternoon services had now been conducted for seven years, and that for the past year there had also been an evening service at eight. He had observed it stated that the attendance at the religious services at the theatres had somewhat declined, but there was no apparent indication of diminished interest at the Agricultural Hall, the numbers being greater during the past year than they had ever been. He had been assisted by clergymen of the Church of England, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Baptists, in nearly equal proportion, and found the greatest willingness on the part of the ministers of religion to aid him in the work. The Bishop of London, in sanctioning his clergy taking part, had truly called these meetings "open-air services under cover," and all denominationalism and ecclesiasticism were forgotten in this Hall. During the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey the services had been for nine Sundays merged in these great meetings; with this exception they had been carried on without intermission under his care, and he was thankful to say he knew of many cases in which irreligious persons had been induced to attend them, and ultimately to join a Christian church. In the evening there was a service of sacred song, the Rev. R. C. Billing again giving an address.

CHRISTIAN UNION IN MEXICO.

MR. JAMES PASCOE, writing to a friend from Toluca on the 12th, says:—"One bit of news will make you glad, I know. An attempt is being made now in Mexico to make a grand evangelical union of all the congregations. When I was in Mexico, Mr. Hutchinson told me that he had been led to wish for a union; that he, for one, would gladly suppress the name of Presbyterian, and work in union with all the brethren. He asked my opinion. I told him that we here in Toluca had made that a matter of daily prayer now for many weeks. He asked me to prayer over the matter, and we would think. I said, 'No, don't think nor pray any longer; just ask the Lord to open the door, and go to work.' He thought it was premature. I said it never was premature to seek the Master's glory.

"This conversation took place on the Thursday. Next day we had a meeting of Mr. Hutchinson, Dr. Butler, Mr. Davis, Mr. Butler, jun., and myself. It was preliminary, of course; but the matter has spread. They have had daily meetings ever since I left, but I have not heard what arrangements have been made. What I propose is, for all Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, and we of no name, to give up any and every habit, custom, or fashion not clearly sanctioned by God's Word, and, sinking all distinctive appellations, call ourselves Gospel churches, and help each other. Where one body cannot send a preacher, let another do so; have union meetings and a free interchange of pulpits. Now, this would be a glorious union, and God must bless it. The good old Bible is our only rule and guide, so that before I left Mexico I gave my hearty consent and approval beforehand to whatever may tend to draw us nearer to one another in Christ's love and work."

THE DAY OF INTERCESSION.—In accordance with the recommendation of Convocation, Nov. 30 will be observed in the English Church as the day of intercession for missions.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—The Moravians were the first to lead off in the modern missionary work. As early as 1730 they proclaimed that the Church of Christ was a missionary Church, and every member of it a practical missionary. Acting under the influence of these sentiments, they have accomplished wonders in the salvation of the world. They have missionaries in nearly every part of the globe. The following are the last published statistics of their missions:—Stations in Labrador, Greenland, among Indians of North America, Mosquito Coast of Central America, the West Indies, Surinam, South Africa, Australia, Thibet, 92 in all; 333 missionary agents, of whom 28 are natives; 1389 native assistants. Of the total number of persons belonging to the missions (69,322), 2745 are Esquimaux, 1344 Indians, 9329 South Africans, 55,750 negroes, 151 natives of Australia and Thibet.

IRISH EVANGELIZATION.

IN response to our request, two weeks since, several encouraging reports have reached us of a good work of evangelization going on in Ireland. A correspondent, writing from Fintona, says:—

"Mr. Burrow's visit here has been the most successful of any we have had for years. Every evening the folding-doors were drawn aside, and both school-rooms crowded. He has a good clear voice, and great power in both singing and preaching. The Christians here have been much refreshed by his visits, and many sinners have been led to the Saviour through his instrumentality. I believe there were souls saved at every meeting, but at the open-air meeting on Sabbath, at which there were about 1000 present, besides about 200 more on the roadside (many of whom were Roman Catholics), there was a most wonderful breaking down. At the close of the service he invited the anxious ones to follow him, singing an appropriate hymn; that he might address them for a short time longer in the school-room, and that he and other Christian friends might point them to the Saviour.

"There was a regular rush into the school until it was literally packed; and, oh! such a glorious, gracious night of blessing I believe I have never witnessed. Among the many professing to be saved that night were two drunkards, one of them especially a most abandoned character for years, going about the streets begging halfpence for drink. To our gracious God be all the praise.

"On account of Mr. Burrow's success in this neighbourhood, and believing there was much need for such meetings in Omagh, the Rev. Mr. King (the Church clergyman here) and I got an opening for him there in the Protestant Hall. Mr. King drove down almost every evening the first week to assist him, and I took another Christian friend down with me two evenings, as the greatest difficulty the first week was to get Christian workers for the after-meetings. I am glad to say that most of the Protestant ministers joined in the good work there.

"To give you some idea of the blessed results of the Omagh meetings: the first evening I was there the hall was packed: about fifty or sixty remained for the inquiry meeting, one-half of whom perhaps were Christians before, and I do believe ten or twelve were enabled to cast themselves unreservedly on the Saviour, and rejoice in a full salvation. The evening I was there, the second week, I never saw equalled for blessing (except the open-air Sabbath meeting at Fintona). At the after-meeting there were about eight workers, and I never experienced the anxious ones so easily led to Jesus. I do think five were enabled through my own feeble instrumentality, and some of the others were also very successful in directing souls to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. It becomes us with adoring gratitude to wonder and exclaim, 'What has our God wrought!' To Him be all the glory."

Another correspondent writes:—"You wish to hear some particulars regarding the Lord's work about Fintona and Donoughmore, in Ireland. I have been in correspondence with the Rev. Mr. Hamilton, lately nominated to Drumcroe, where a great work has been going on. Above 200 have professed conversion during the past year in that parish and the surrounding neighbourhood. The Rev. O. T. Leonard, an American evangelist, now employed by the Irish Evangelization Society, has had great meetings and abundant blessing at Athlone, Fербane, and Fintona.

"He has had meetings of 700 persons, and writes to me that 200 have professed to have found peace in believing during the meetings of the last two weeks, and the blessed work is still going on. The Roman Catholics were beginning to come to the meetings, for whom he asked our prayers."

THE Jewish World of the 1st inst. has an article five columns long, reviewing the Jewish year 5635, which has just closed.

BRAZIL.—The Secretary of the United States Southern Presbyterian Board of Missions not long since visited the missions of that Society in Brazil, and now reports his conviction that the end has come to the power of Roman Catholicism in that country. It has held sway for three centuries, and has plunged society in ignorance and degradation. The present generation, however, have cast off the power of the priesthood, and by an imperial edict the Jesuits have been expelled. Thousands of copies of the Scriptures are scattered through the country, and the missionaries are constantly appealed to, to explain the difference between the religion of the Bible and that of the priests. All this spirit of unrest and inquiry indicates, without doubt, the dawning of a brighter day for Brazil.

THE FULTON-STREET PRAYER-MEETING, NEW YORK.

THE letters which come to this meeting are not less than fifty a day on the average. And, be they never so numerous, they are always received with gladness, as evidences that the Spirit of the Lord is abroad among the people. One of the letters of to-day says: "I was in this meeting on Friday of last week, and asked for your prayers. God answered them, and I am with you to-day to tell that the Lord has spoken peace to my soul. I praise his dear name! O, how good God has been to me."

Another says: "We are all rejoicing in what the Lord has done for us. Forty-two souls have been converted, as we believe, in answer to prayer—both yours and ours. One of the converts was a Roman Catholic, one a Universalist, and another a gambler of the worst type. For seven years I have been repeating my requests that you will pray for the salvation of this people, and I have never asked in vain."

A brother spoke of his being lately in great financial distress; his efforts were constant to free himself, but all seemed in vain. One morning he awoke early, not knowing what to do or which way to turn. He said: "I was strongly impressed that I ought to go to the Fulton-street Meeting and ask for prayer. I came here and asked you to pray for my deliverance, and deliverance came, with this assurance, 'My God shall supply all your need.'" Who can tell how many in trouble in these days of distress have found comfort from these words!

A young preacher arose and said: "Eleven weeks ago to-day, I came into this meeting and asked you to pray that God would help me to go to England, and help me back again, and help me to be useful while there. The very first night I preached, twenty-seven found peace in believing. I preached in the very city where I had served the devil so faithfully, and had been busy in doing his will. How awful is that infatuation that prompts men to sacrifice their eternal well-being for the pleasures of sin for a season."

A poor mother sent for prayer, to-day, in behalf of her son who has been brought up religiously, but who has lately told his mother that he was going to have the world at any cost, life, peace, joy, salvation, heaven, and Christ, all should go rather than the world. The world he is going to have at all hazards.

"Dear Lord, give us the simplicity of little children," was the opening utterance of a brother in prayer to-day. The brother thus praying had just given a touching illustration of the confidence of a little child. His father lay sick nigh unto death. They had told him they could do no more for him. His little boy, a beloved son, ran away to his chamber, and, falling on his knees, said, "Dear heavenly Father, please make father better." And then he ran to his father's room, and going up to the bed, said, "I have asked God in my prayers to make you better, and He is going to do it. Don't you feel better, father?"

The father recovered, for Jesus, who hears the prayer of the smallest child, and honours the simple faith of the little ones, restored him to sound health. Thank God! his promises will never wear out. They become brighter and brighter, the older they grow. The meeting is full of faith and prayer.

American Paper.

THE CHINESE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION of San Francisco, it is said, numbers 250 members. The Association is doing a good work among the Chinese of that city.

PERMANENCE OF THE SCOTTISH REVIVAL.—The Rev. Wayland Hoyt, of America, describing a Sunday which he recently spent in Edinburgh, says:—"It must be evident to the most casual observer that there is a very deep and abiding religious interest in the city. The visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey has been productive of the profoundest good. Everywhere I hear them spoken of in terms of the highest and most grateful praise. Still vast meetings are held on Sunday, and often on week-days in the Free Assembly-hall. And there have been set in motion very efficient outdoor religious agencies. Walking down High-street after service, I was attracted by the sound of singing. Joining in the crowd, I found men and women standing there singing together hymns like 'The old, old story,' 'Almost persuaded,' &c. When numbers had been thus collected they were asked into a room near by, furnished with seats and cabinet organ, and there for half-an-hour—it was nine o'clock—Christ was pressed upon the attention of those whom the churches had not reached, but who are thus reached. It was a grand thing to gather thus some of the outlying throngs. I thanked God for that service, and for all He has done in this Great Britain through those true servants, our dear brethren Moody and Sankey."

ABERYSTWITH.—ANSWERED PRAYER.

SINCE Christmas last a prayer-meeting has been sustained in this place, where a few earnest men and women have daily met to pray that God would remember their town for blessing, even as He was doing the happy towns and villages of England during the late revival. As a sequence and answer to public and private pleading, it has come to pass that God has directed hither the feet of labourers. House-to-house visitation is still in progress, with cheering results; evangelistic-meetings, Scripture-readings, consecration meetings, children's meetings, have been held—"One sowing, another reaping"—many have been saved. Some of us leaving this week ask God to send more labourers into this promising vineyard. Many have gathered night by night to hear the simple Gospel of the grace of God. On unsectarian ground, in a large temperance hall, kindly lent on generous terms, crowds of those of different sections of the professing Church have sat side by side to hear of Jesus and join in singing the sweet hymns of Mr. Sankey. Last Sunday, after other services were over, hundreds went away, although the hall holds a large number. Too many Christians and anxious ones remaining at the close to be dealt with personally, a "mass" inquiry-meeting had to be held, and, towards its close, a good many, among a people naturally reserved and shy, held up a hand to signify that they had just trusted Jesus. The fields are "white unto the harvest,"—who will come? Hundreds may, will be gathered in, if prayer continue here, and labourers full of Christ will come and work. Will those who read this help us to lift to God much praise for what has been done?

MATILDA BASS.

Aberystwith, Sept. 27.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A BRIEF CONCORDANCE OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES. By the Rev. JOHN BROWN, Haddington. Blackie and Son, Paternoster-buildings.—To every diligent, and especially every young, student of the Bible, a Concordance of some kind is almost indispensable. In some cases the price, and in most cases the bulk, of such aids is an objection. Both these objections are met in this little volume, which costs but one shilling, while it is about the size of an ordinary pocket-book. At the same time it seems sufficiently complete for ordinary requirements.

READINGS IN HOLY SCRIPTURE FOR YOUNG CHILDREN—"LIFE OF JESUS." By WILLIAM BINNS, Author of "Systematic Primary Instruction." Hamilton, Adams, and Co.—Among various smaller publications forwarded to us by the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union, we are glad to notice a series of thirty-two brief scenes from the life of our Lord, got up in the same style as the "Green Pastures," "Words of Comfort," &c. They are mounted on rollers, and printed in large readable type, fit for nurseries, schoolrooms, or hospitals; price 6s. The scenes are well chosen, and, in a very small compass, present an admirable summary of that blessed life. This series, as well as "Words of Jesus" and "Bible Narratives," may also be obtained in book form, price 2d.

LITTLE SERMONS FOR LITTLE PEOPLE. By W. LOCKE. Partridge.—In other words, simple thoughts on serious subjects, written originally for Our Children's Magazine. They are now issued in a cheap book-form, cloth—one more of the invaluable aids to mothers and nurses with which we are now so richly provided.

THE LAND WE LIVE IN; OR, ENGLAND'S HISTORY IN SIMPLE LANGUAGE. By the same Author. Nisbet.—A charming little summary of English history, prepared for the use of children in Sunday- and ragged-schools, but fit for all children.

HYMNS AND SPIRITUAL SONGS FOR THE SUFFERING AND SOBROWING. Religious Tract Society.—A collection of favourite hymns and poems, suitable for the sick-bed, in large type, and selected with care.—Also, REST FOR THE WEARY; OR, WORDS OF LOVE FOR THE SICK AND SOBROWING. Religious Tract Society.—A small volume of brief prose articles, written to assist those engaged in visiting the sick. The Scriptures chosen are appropriate, and the expositions of them sound and simple.

EFFIE'S LETTERS TO BOYS AND GIRLS. Nos. 1 to 4. Book Society, Paternoster-row (4d. per dozen, 2s. per 100).—Very attractive, both as to matter and style, and likely to do much good if widely circulated. Two of the series are addressed to the undecided, and the remaining two to young Christians.

LIFE ON THE DEEP: MEMORIALS OF CHARLES MARCH, COMMANDER, R.N. By his NEPHEW. Religious Tract Society.—We are sure this book will do good. It is a truthfully written record of a Christian sailor's life and death, and bears evidence which a sailor will appreciate, that strict principle may be maintained, and high spiritual life nurtured, by him whose duty it is to traverse the high seas. We heartily commend the book to our readers' notice.

MISSION TRACTS. By the Rev. ERNEST BOYS, M.A. Bemrose (1s. 3d. per 100).—A series of twelve tracts, intended for use during a mission-week. The subject-matter and style are both appropriate to the object in view.

CASELL'S BIBLE DICTIONARY. Illustrated. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.—Judging from one number of the thirty-six which are to complete this work, we can commend it as likely to be a useful companion to the study of the Bible. We are glad to see that on such a vital point as that of the Atonement it manifests no sympathy with the Rationalism of the day. It is refreshing, in the midst of so much false teaching which abounds upon the subject, to meet with such a passage as this: "Under the Christian system, the spiritual life is indeed promoted, and it is informed and animated by the teaching of Christ, and also by his blessed example of piety, beneficence, patience, humility, purity. All this is certain: but while by these and similar means the Christian is edified, it is not thus that he is saved; for he is saved—so we learn without doubt from the uniform testimony of Christ himself and the Apostles—through faith in that one blood-shedding on the cross, which Christ accomplished when 'He bare the sins of many,' and died, 'the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God.'" We wish success to a work which can speak so faithfully upon so important a point.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

BIBLE-READING COLPORTEURS and distributors, to labour in San Domingo and Mexico, as also the Southern States, are appointed by the American and Foreign Bible Society.

A CHRISTIAN NATIVE, one of the returned students from America, is now at the head of the educational department in Japan. This gives new strength to missionaries in that country.

A JAPANESE SECULAR JOURNAL says—"Christianity seems to be becoming more popular and powerful, while our religions are moving in the opposite direction, and are decaying."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK has within a year made progress in Madagascar. The entire Bible has been given to the people in a cheap edition. Congregational singing has been revived, and a penny hymn-book is circulated by thousands.

A NATIVE HINDOO CHURCH at Nagerool, near Cape Comorin, supports its own pastor, a catechist, three schoolmasters, two Bible-women, and a hospital assistant. Besides all this, it aids liberally various outside charities. Here is an "example of the believers."

Miss MARY E. GALBRAITH is expected to sail this month, under the auspices of the United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, from San Francisco for Hong-Kong, and thence for Canton, China, to labour in that field, as the first female missionary of that Church sent out to work for the evangelization of her sex there.

JUVENILE LITERATURE.—Mr. Alderman Knight, while dealing with a case of felony by a boy at Guildhall recently, complained of the great harm done by the circulation of tales of the "Jack Sheppard" type, and said magistrates ought to have the power to stop the publication of such abominable trash.

RITUALISTIC ADVANCES IN INDIA.—The Bombay Gazette says that the Cowley Fathers, who have been attempting a "revival" of religious observances, which some people, heretofore known as Protestants, deem to be needless, have taken an important step in advance by establishing the confessional in their church in Bombay.

FRANKLIN, INDIANA.—There has been a revival here under the auspices of the same brethren who have been labouring so successfully at Madison, Seymour, Aurora, Brownsville, and elsewhere in Indiana. The pastors and people of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist Churches are hearty supporters in the work, from which the professed conversions, it is estimated, already number 300 persons.

MAYBOLE.—From the Maybole Evangelist we learn that a great work of the Lord is going on in Maybole. Perhaps at no other period of the revival in this place has the Holy Spirit's power been so marked as now. A deep and general anxiety of soul seems to have laid hold upon the unsaved in great numbers. The simple message of God's love to a perishing world has been carried home with remarkable power. Souls are eagerly asking the way. Heavy-laden sinners are finding rest in Jesus, and have already begun to learn of Him.

TRINITARIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The Committee offer prizes of £25, £50, £100, and £200 for the four best essays on the origin, growth, and effects of the circulation of Romish and other corrupted versions of the Holy Scripture in foreign countries by a large section of Protestant Christians, and on the best means of putting an end to this superstitious practice. A list of publications bearing on the subject, together with further details as to terms, may be had of Rev. E. W. Bullinger, 96, Newgate-street, London.

WOE TO JUGGERNATH!—An immense block of stone has been planned from the central dome of the pagoda of Juggernath at Pooree. The Indian Mirror says—"There is a prophecy, which is much talked about in Pooree in these days, that when the first stone is unfashioned the temple shall not stand. The repairs, say the Oorians, will take at least fourteen years, and during all this time no public worship or festival in Pooree is allowable. A suspension of fourteen years, if it can be enforced, will cause, we think, the utter extinction of the worship of Juggernath."

THE GOSPEL OF ST. LUKE, translated into Japanese by a body of American missionaries for the American Bible Society, has been published at Yokohama.

SALT LAKE CITY.—In the home and branch Sunday-schools of the New Methodist Church here 800 scholars are already gathered, most of them from Mormon families. A year ago the school numbered only 200.

THE FOREIGN SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION reports Sunday-schools planted or fostered by its agency in Germany, Switzerland, Spain, France, Italy, Brazil, Chili, New Granada, Mexico, Zacatecas.

AN ENGLISH EVANGELIST, J. B. Anderson, has been for several weeks conducting services in a tent at St. Louis. More recently he has been holding meetings at Calvary Presbyterian Church and Biddle Market Hall.

NEWFOUNDLAND.—By the recent census the population is 161,386, having increased 14,860 since 1869. While the membership of the Church of Rome has increased during these five years nearly 5 per cent., that of the Church of England has been 7 per cent., the Kirk of Scotland 17 per cent., the Wesleyans 21 per cent., and the Free Kirk 20½ per cent.

THE FIRST PROTESTANT CHURCH IN JAPAN.—The Japan Gazette of July last contains a lengthy report of the opening of the first native Protestant church in Japan. The congregation was organized in the March of 1872, and consisted of nine recently-baptized young men. It is called the Japanese Christian Church, and will be placed under the superintendence of a native minister.

Dr. KALOPOTHAKES, Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Board to Greece, reports that their Bible colporteurs, as a general rule, find the people ready to buy the Word of God, and the bishops its greatest enemies. Dr. Kalopothakes has translated Dr. Hodge's "Outlines of Theology" into modern Greek, and is publishing it by the help of English friends.

SUPPRESSION OF SWISS CONVENTS.—The Convents of the Sisters of Charity in Switzerland are suppressed. Their character and influence had become so well known to the inhabitants of the country, and were believed to be so injurious to its best interests, and so opposed to its prosperity, that the Grand Council of Geneva, by sixty-four votes against seven, were led to adopt a resolution for their suppression.

PRAYER FOR OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—The Sunday-school Union Committee, remembering the signal blessings attending the seasons of special prayer in 1873 and 1874, again call upon all Sunday-school teachers and friends of religious education to set apart a season in order to seek an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Sunday-school work throughout the world. The committee suggest the setting apart of Oct. 17 and 18 for this purpose.

THE WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON BIBLE-READING at the Conference Hall, Midway-park, has recommenced, with a good attendance, and will be continued each Wednesday at half-past three. It is conducted by the Rev. D. B. Hankin, the new Vicar of St. Jude's. The subject under consideration is the Epistle to the Philippians. This Bible-reading was commenced by the late Rev. Wm. Pennesfather, and has often proved a valuable help to a large circle of the Lord's people.

MONKS IN SUSSEX.—The Brighton Daily News, in an interesting account of the Carthusian monastery at Parkmore, states that new buildings are to be erected, to accommodate some sixty or seventy monks. They will cost, it is estimated, some £30,000; and when they are completed the present house will be reserved for visiting brothers, rooms being specially set aside for the bishop. The buildings are to include a handsome church. The present monastery is, therefore, only the nucleus of a monster establishment. At present there are twelve inmates, five of whom are Frenchmen, and two Irishmen.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH has lost its oldest missionary among the Indians in the death of the Rev. Asher Wright. He was the only male missionary who had acquired a proper knowledge of the Seneca language. His Seneca hymn-book has been in use for a considerable time, but his translation of the Gospels has just been introduced, and at the time of his death he was preparing to have the people taught to read it, and to have readers go from house to house. It is hoped that his widow, who has admirable command of this language, may be able to finish the translation of the Book of Acts, which Mr. Wright left in incomplete form.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY has added to its other organizations what the Americans would style a "Women's Board"; in English phraseology, a "Ladies' Committee." If it prove as executive and influential as some of the American "Women's Boards," the Society has seldom taken a wiser step. The great and pressing problem, "How shall the female population of India and China be educated and evangelized?" can never be solved until a far larger number of enlightened Christian women devote themselves to the task of elevating their dark and degraded sisters. This Ladies' Committee is to have the charge of raising funds, to increase the staff of female missionaries, also of training suitable candidates when accepted by the Board, of corresponding with them subsequently, and of advising and assisting the general board with reference to the female department of missionary effort.

THE Alliance News announces the adhesion and enrolment of another noble lord, the Marquis Townshend, who has now become a member of the Alliance. The News adds—"We are informed that the noble Marquis has suppressed all public-houses upon his estates."

THE HEBRIDES.—Again and again the cry is made to the West Coast Mission from some dark spot or other, "Come over and help us"; and surely such a work of faith and labour of love as that in which they are engaged deserves from those who regard themselves as the Lord's stewards, encouragement of no ordinary kind. Above all, let Christians, especially British Christians, be stirred up to more earnest prayer and believing effort on behalf of those destitute places, bearing in mind the Master's words, "Beginning at Jerusalem." Any wishing to aid this good work may communicate with the Secretary of the West Coast Mission, 172, Buchanan-street, Glasgow.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS has offered for competition an exhibition of the value of £80, tenable for two years, to students who shall be approved as candidates for missionary work in India and the East. The exhibition is open to members of the University of Cambridge who have completed at least one academical year of residence, and have passed the previous examination. The first examination will take place in November, and the subjects will be Scriptural knowledge, Greek and Latin translation and prose composition, and elementary mathematics up to the differential calculus.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S VISIT TO INDIA.—When preaching recently at Exeter, the Bishop of Oxford referred to the subject of missionary work in India, and observed that we probably were on the eve of a time of much more general acquaintance with India. He should be very much mistaken if the visit of the Prince of Wales to India, whatever else resulted from it, did not open up a large amount of information respecting that great Empire to many English men and women who had not from various causes been much interested in this subject hitherto. He firmly believed that one great reason why the whole work of Christian missions had sometimes languished was simply a want of knowledge.

THE CHINESE LANGUAGE.—A committee, of which Sir Rutherford Alcock is chairman, having been formed to confer with the authorities of Oxford University in regard to the founding of a chair for the promotion of the study of the Chinese language and literature, the Rev. Dr. Legge has been nominated as the first professor. The London and China Telegraph says:—"No wiser choice could be made. His merits as a Chinese scholar are so conspicuous and so well known that his name will at once occur to all our readers as the most fitting occupant of such a position." Dr. Legge has been recently awarded by the Académie des Inscriptions Belles-Lettres de Paris the Jullien prize for the most valuable work on Chinese literature recently published.

CHINA AND CUBA.—The Chinese Government has absolutely prohibited the continuance of the coolie trade with Cuba, until the Spanish Government can secure better treatment for the Chinese who emigrate to that island. Spain, however, has a treaty with China which sanctions coolie emigration, and regards this prohibition as a breach of its conditions, whilst China defies Spain to go to war with her if she will. The quarrel will probably be referred to the arbitration of foreign ministers at Peking, and will most likely end in the sending of Chinese Consuls to Cuba as protectors of their countrymen. This step would be an important one in advance for China.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The last monthly meeting of open-air preachers took place on Tuesday, 28th ult., at Crouch-end. Tea was provided in the school-room of Park Chapel, all the arrangements being most kindly and efficiently carried out by a few ladies connected with the place. The Rev. Canon Harvey, Rector of Hornsey, afterwards presided at a lecture in the Drill Hall by Mr. Cooper, on the "Antiquities of Egypt," illustrated by numerous diagrams. Canon Harvey, who is far advanced in years, remained to the close of the meeting, although he was going to leave on the following day for three months. He said that he had come entirely to show his sympathy with the open-air preachers, and spoke in the warmest terms of the character and work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

 "I AM FULL OF POWER, BY THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD."—MICAH III. 8.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—That the believer prayed for twice in THE CHRISTIAN during this year has been given great strength to struggle against opium-taking and intemperance. The case appeared hopeless to human judgment when the first prayer was offered: now ask God to complete the cure.—For God's abundant goodness to a young man, and for sending a faithful servant of his to our parish.—By one who has been delivered in great measure from a state of great bodily weakness, depression, and doubting, accompanied by fierce mental conflict.—For great blessing, specially to saints, at Tisbury, Wilts.—For great blessing received at the Nottingham Convention.—For much blessing vouchsafed at the Acle Mission.—One who has been graciously and almost miraculously restored to health of mind and body, desires to unite her thanks with many friends who acknowledge in this an answer to their prayers.
 PRAYER.—For a minister in affliction, that God may raise him up, and permit him to return to his people in the power of the Holy Ghost.—For a lady-worker at Southsea, that she may be speedily raised up and permitted to resume her labours for the Lord.—For a young man about to enter the ministry, that he may receive the Holy Spirit in large measure.—For a widow with nine children, that they may all be led speedily to embrace the Saviour.—For a brother-in-law, the slave of intemperance, that God may bless the means used for deliverance that he may be led to Jesus.—For the Rev. W. Haslam, that he may be restored to health and enabled to resume his ministrations, and whilst laid aside be greatly blessed of the Lord in his work of writing for Him.
 PLACES.—For Houghton Regis.—For services at Harrogate, conducted by Rev. R. Stainton, of Sheffield.—For much blessing on mission work at Alderby Edge, near Manchester. Oct. 11-17; and Huddersfield, Oct. 17-25.—For evangelistic services to be held at Pant and Doregay, from Oct. 11 to Oct. 24, to be conducted by the Rev. L. Weaver.—For young men's meetings at the Lecture Hall, Edgware-road.—For one month's evangelistic services to be held in villages in North Norfolk, commencing Oct. 3, to be conducted by James Henry, London.—For conference and evangelistic meeting to be held at Portsmouth on the 7th inst.; also for suitable workers in house-to-house visitation.—For services next week in Colchester.—For six days' united evangelistic services at Ryde, Isle of Wight, from Oct. 6 to 11, conducted by Lord Radstock and others.—That a great blessing may attend a week's services to be held in Ashbourn by Wm. Taylor, of the Evangelization Society, commencing Sunday, Oct. 10.
 CONVERSIONS.—For a father and daughter, who, though knowing the way of salvation with their heads, are not walking in it.—For a young man, a professing Christian, who is very busy, and living far from Christ. Also for my parents and four brothers, all unconverted.—For the conversion of a talented young man living in the City, away from his relatives, and whose widowed mother has long prayed and looked for his salvation.—For a young woman earnestly seeking God and in deep affliction of soul.—On behalf of an aged father and mother and four sisters.—For two brothers, one of them the slave of intemperance.—For one who has given up attending God's house.—For myself, that the Lord will be pleased to make himself known to me.

The Christian.

A VISION IN AFRICA.

It was at the close of a long day's journey in the service of the King. I had left that morning two dear brethren with whom for three days I had enjoyed fellowship in prayer and in the Word, and a sweet season of private prayer. On my way I had visited another brother at his post, had spoken to some of my fellow-preachers of the power of the King, had told some children of the glory of the King, and had spoken with my brother of the presence of the King. We had read together how the King met Saul going to Damaseus.

I was now alone. I had met Kaffirs on the road, and had told them of the salvation of the King. My heart was full. I had prayed Him to show Himself to me by the way. The sun was setting; I dismounted to ease my faithful horse, and with the bridle over my arm, I walked along a valley leading to a house where the King had provided me a home, a brother and sister, and many children, according to his word and promise to those who leave home for his name's sake. I had been specially praying the day before (which was my birthday) that I might realize the King's presence and power in my future life, more than hitherto, and I had just been repeating with fervent desire the lines—

"Lord Jesus, make Thyself to me,
A living bright reality."

In the visions of my mind, suddenly, I was with the King! He was standing on the top of a high mountain. At his feet lay all the kingdoms of the earth. It seemed as if the empire of heathen darkness covered all that part upon which He was looking. My eyes followed his. Around the kingdom of darkness I noticed flashes of white light in various places, and at uncertain intervals; as an old soldier I thought these were the puffs of the rifles of the King's advanced posts, but herein I was mistaken. Long and earnestly He looked, and then He spoke these words, "Why do not they obey my command?"

Now it was made known to me that by "they" He meant the mass of his servants, who, as I heard by certain sounds, were in camps and cities in that part which was behind the King. There were much singing, talking, and other noises in these camps. The King turned. As He did so I noticed that an angel looked intently into his eye, and, in an instant, put a trumpet to his lips, and blew so loudly that all heaven and earth rang with the sound. Quicker than thought the King was in the midst of the camps, and I was still with Him. Before Him stood his people. It was a wonderful sight, which I cannot well describe. There was solemn silence. Thus He spoke to them:—"Many days ago I gave you this command: 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.' Why have ye not obeyed it?"

Now I looked at those who stood before Him. Many, very many, hung their heads in shame. I received power to know all concerning this vast assembly, although, in fact, what each one was, was manifested so plainly in the light of the King's presence, that I had scarcely need of this power. The occupation, position, talents, and character of each were written on their faces or garments. Some there were, who, the moment the King appeared, looked up into his face with intense joy, and it seemed that as they looked their faces shone brighter and brighter with his glory. These did not look down at his question. He had given them calls to special service in his home camps, and they had by his grace been faithful. Many of them I knew; I will not mention their names, for they are too many. Thousands I did not know.

Now, I noticed that those were gathered nearest to the King who seemed to be most full of love to Him. Around their brows was a halo of golden glory. Their faces, beautiful and bright, but thin withal, told that theirs had been a life of trial. Most of them were women, and in the glory around their heads was woven the word "Prayer."

Now, when the King asked this question, I heard for a moment a slight murmur, "My church," "My wife," "My home." But the words were not uttered above a whisper; none dared to speak aloud.

Then said the King, "Ye know my word, 'There is no man that hath left house or brethren for my sake and the Gospel's, but shall receive an hundredfold, now in this time, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life.'"

The King said no more to these. I bethought myself why He did not reply concerning the Church. Then I remembered that He is the Head of the Church, and that He is able to take care of that, even if all his professed ministers were to go and preach his name in those lands where it has never been heard.

Among those who hung their heads, a few did so for sorrow, and not for shame. These sometimes looked up into the King's face, and tears rolled from their eyes. The King now looked on these with tender compassion.

"Why are ye sorrowful?" He asked them.

"Lord, Thou knowest we desired to go as witnesses for Thee to the heathen of other lands, but we were poor, and we could not go. We asked church, bishop, congregation, and synod, but they said Thou hadst not called us, and that we were not fit. We pleaded the power of the Holy Ghost to fit us, but we were told we had not been to College."

The King smiled on them, and said, "Be of good cheer." He then passed on, and I continued with Him.

Now, in the many wonderful things which were shown to me in that vast assembly, I noticed these very specially: the garments of the rich were made of gold, and on their garments was written their possessions in houses, lands, money. These garments were so stiff that they looked like new smock-frocks; and they were so very ugly—the gold being all blackened and dirty—that the wearers wished to get out of them, but they dared not move in the presence of the King. I looked for ritualists, but I could not see their vestments. But just as the King came into the camp, I had noticed certain men who looked as if they were being stung by hornets. These were ritualists, who were frantically trying to get rid of their vestments, and to hide them from the eyes of the King. They now stood before Him astonished and ashamed. I saw no priest of Rome.

Now, as the King moved away, I noticed one man alone. The King walked towards him: it was my dear friend———. He did not speak to the King, for he knew that the King knew all things. "Blessed are ye which sow beside all waters," said the King, as he looked with tenderest love on my dear brother. I would have spoken to the latter, but I was restrained. I, however, thought of those I had seen in gold smock-frocks, and I hoped that the King would tell them to give him some of their gold for the preaching of his name to China's millions.

While I was thus thinking, I found myself again with the King on the top of the mountain. The power I had received from his presence enabled me now to see very clearly all before us. The white flashes I had mistaken for smoke of rifles, were little white flags of peace, inscribed with the words, "God is Love," which the King's heralds were waving within the outer walls of the camp of the prince of darkness. It was a wonderful, marvellous sight. No wonder the King stood transfixed as He watched his heralds. No wonder the angels, of whose presence I was now conscious, looked on in silent awe. I remember the days when I was a soldier, and how, in the midst of a heavy bombardment, I had watched the gunners standing by their guns while the shot from the enemy tore the air around them. I thought, then, how great the power of God to make men so brave, so calm, so patient. But now my eyes were opened. It seemed as if all the powers of earth and hell were combined against the King's heralds of peace. Satan and his angels fought against them with devilish cunning. The men to whom they were speaking, deceived by Satan, worked against them. They were far from the camps of the King: many of them were quite alone; some were sick in body and weary in spirit from the desperate fight. But there was a light around them unseen by mortal eye. Angels carried to them from time to time, according to their prayers, heavenly succour; and if apparently they were beaten down by the powers of hell, a voice which is almighty thundered on their enemies, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm," and they were saved.

Now, I saw the way in which the bravest of these heralds proclaimed the Gospel. In his left hand he held firmly the flag of peace, which he lifted high, and waved continually. His right hand was held towards heaven in prayer, or else given in love to some poor slave of the prince of darkness. The sword of the Spirit hung from his wrist by the knot of faith, and whenever he needed it was in his hand. It was never used in vain. One point from the Word of God pierced devil or man.

The King moved. I looked at Him. "Let us go," he said. In a moment we were in the thickest part of the struggle. The angel whom I had seen before was with us. I scarcely dared to breathe. Surrounded by enemies, by pitfalls, and snares on all sides, which he could not see, was one of my fellow-men. He was fainting in the toil. His enemies were rejoicing. As his strength failed he sank on his knees, holding aloft the King's banner, and he cried, "Lord, help me." The King was even then touching him. How sweetly He smiled on his faithful servant. The powers of darkness saw Him and fled. He put his hand on the herald's shoulder and said, "I am with thee." The herald looked up, and it seemed as if he could see Him who spake. His face became lit with joy, and he said aloud, "Yea, my Lord and my God, I know Thou art with me," and then, rising with renewed power, he said, as he looked up to heaven, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God, and will make mention of thy righteousness only, even of thine."

Many such we visited, and it was delightful to notice how the King cheered and helped his servants.

A word from Him, or a word spoken by the angel from his book, at once revived the most downcast and weary. There were, however, some places where the prince of darkness had overcome the King's heralds, and by various wiles had got them to cease their work of proclaiming his message. I would rather not note this, but I must write what I saw. We came upon two such unfaithful ones; they were basking in the noonday sun; they had no swords; their flags were lying in the dirt, stained and torn, and a serpent was entwining them. The heathen were looking at them and laughing. We listened to their converse. They had been reading some missionary paper, and they were speaking jealously and maliciously of the work of a brother who had given praise to the Lord for blessing in his labour. The King looked on them in sorrow, but did not speak. The angel, however, spoke to them thus—"Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. Take heed that no one take thy crown." They were startled, and looked anxiously round. The angel then said to them, "Put off all these—anger, wrath, malice," and admonished them out of God's Word.

Quicker than I have been able to write these lines we visited the King's heralds from one end of the earth to the other. He knew all the circumstances, the needs, and trials, of each of his servants. His smile was so sweet wherever He found them obedient to his Word and waiting on Him in prayer. Often while they were praying He was standing by them looking on them in tenderest love. I soon learnt that he remembered all their prayers, and that the strongest, bravest, and happiest in spirit are those who are most earnest in prayer. Many wonderful answers has He given to their prayers. They are not known now, but will be made known hereafter.

We soon came to the last posts the King visited. These were the places of greatest suffering and trial. The King visited them last that He might give most time to his most tried servants. Varied were their tribulations. Satan and man had given them much suffering—neglect of friends and brethren; want of prayer and sympathy from the churches which sent them out; the trials of life which fall heaviest on the solitary and exiled: sickness, bereavement, persecution, opposition, hardship, death, one or more assailed them with the fiercest temptations of Satan. How lovingly and tenderly the King looked upon the sufferers. Wherever their heads were bowed in prayer or in woe, He lifted up his right hand over them in blessing. Their flags were white, their swords were bright, and angels watched around them. He commanded deliverance. Some He called to his home in glory; others He restored, some to active service in the field, others to a season of communion with Him in prayer and of testimony to his churches in their own land. He blessed his Word and his servants everywhere.

I was wondering at the depth of the riches of his wisdom and love to all his servants, especially to those most tried and afflicted, when in a moment He was gone, and I found myself alone. I have prayed to be guided whether I should write this vision of my mind. A voice within me bids me "Write, for these words are true and faithful."

AN ENGLISH CHURCH CONVENT, in connexion with the English Church of St. Clement's, Boscombe, Bournemouth, was formally opened on Sunday afternoon, following a high celebration in the parish church.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN AMERICA.

LAST week we chronicled the departure of Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, and Professor Bliss, from Northfield, while Mr. Moody stayed for a short time, continuing to hold services there until the winter's programme had been fixed upon. A few additional items with respect to the closing meeting held by the four evangelists will be welcome to our readers. At Mr. Moody's request, Mr. Bliss sang one of his own songs, suitable to the occasion—"We are going home to-morrow." We regret we cannot now present our readers with the music of this sweet hymn; but nevertheless, we think they will be glad to have the words:—

"We're going home,
No more to roam,
No more to sin and sorrow;
No more to wear
The brow of care—
We're going home to-morrow.

"For weary feet
Awaits a street
Of wondrous pave and golden;
For hearts that ache,
The angels wake
The story sweet and olden.

"For those who sleep,
And those who weep,
The mansions rise
We're going home to-morrow.

"Oh, joyful song!
Oh, ransomed throng!
Where sin no more shall sever;
Our King to see,
And, oh, to be
With Him at home forever."

We quote from the Springfield Daily Union the following paragraphs with reference to the closing part of this farewell meeting to Northfield:—

"After remarks by Major Whittle and Mr. G. H. Stuart, Mr. Sankey sang 'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' and after it said, with much feeling,—'I wish all would find this out here to-night. I remember that while coming over the sea, one Sabbath-day, the rain was falling very hard, and in the storm many were sick. I had my little boy with me, and he did not want to stay down below with the others, and together we went on deck. The sailors had put up a sail, making a tent-like covering at one side. We sat down there for many hours alone. The storm was raging all around, but at last he climbed up and, pillowing his head upon my breast, he went to sleep. I did not want to disturb him. He had such confidence in me that he slept peacefully through the storm. I thought that to-night Jesus is here; he loves us more than I could my boy; lay your head on his breast, come to Him. These are my last words—look away to Jesus to-night. I put my trust in Him. Don't look to Mr. Moody, or these men here, but to Jesus; He will help, He will save; and safe in the arms of Jesus you are safe indeed.'

"Prof. Bliss then rose and said,—'I want to give you one Scripture text—if you forget all else that has been said—remember the word of God: "And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark." It is that little word "Come." Again, "Come let us reason together, saith the Lord," &c. If the Lord can forget my sins, I can. Again, "Come unto Me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden," &c. Come unto Me—not unto these men—not unto the Church,—but unto Jesus, and He will give you rest in the celestial city. Come, there are three steps only—to say I ought, I can, I will. You have taken the first two, will you take the other, and say "I will"? A young man told me, to-day, that he had resolved to come, the other evening, as I sang "Is anyone waiting and watching for me?" Oh, thank God! I was thinking of those who are waiting and watching for us on the other shore. If you have no other friends there, Jesus is. If I should go this night I should find my dear child and parents, and that sister of Mr. Sankey, whom he lost a short time ago. Oh! will you not want to meet the friends gone before, and meet Jesus? Come to Him. My last word to you, to-night, is—Come.' Prof. Bliss then sang the song, 'Is anyone waiting and watching for me?' amid the almost universal weeping of the audience.

"Silent prayer followed, and Mr. Moody extended the invitation to all who wished for prayers, to rise. Whole sections of the house stood up, and Mr. Moody prayed that they might have souls for their hire. Professor Bliss closed the meeting by leading in the singing of 'Coronation.' The benediction was pronounced, but many lingered after the general hand-shaking and words of farewell to Messrs. Sankey, Bliss, and Whittle, for religious conversation. Though the people had been dismissed, and it was after ten o'clock, yet in one corner of the church might be seen Mr. Sankey in the centre of a circle of fifty or more, with bowed head, offering prayer, and here and there in the room each one of the evangelists was kneeling, with one or more persons, both young and old, in the pews, repeating prayers, line by line, after the leader. It was a season of intense interest and awakening, and it was nearly eleven o'clock before all had left the church. There was much genuine and deep sorrow at the parting with Messrs. Sankey, Bliss, and Whittle, to whom the people have looked as to men sent from God. The widespread religious concern that has developed in Northfield and vicinity is no shallow curiosity to see men talked about, but a true visitation of the Holy Spirit, and each successive meeting has proved it by a steady increase of attendance and attention. Mr. Moody's presence at least two weeks longer in Northfield will serve to strengthen the new converts as well as interest still others. The people have learned to sing wonderfully well under the influence of Messrs. Sankey, Bliss, and Whittle; and though those gentlemen have now left Northfield, yet the 'new song' will remain in the mouth of the people for ever more."

Writing from Northfield on Sept. 19 the correspondent of the Tribune says:—

"Mr. Moody concluded his exposition of 'Heaven' on Friday night. He was in his happiest humour, and made his talk one of unusual interest. The weather was forbidding and chilly, although it did not rain, and the church was only comfortably filled. A part of the congregation came from Brattleboro' and neighbouring towns in Southern Vermont. The singing was led very successfully by Mr. F. W. Clark, of Northampton, who had come up for the purpose, and Miss Mary Dutton played the organ. Mr. Sankey is missed, but there is no lack of spirit in the singing nevertheless. The Rev. George F. Humphreys, of Amherst, was present, and made the opening prayer. Mr. Moody read several requests for prayer which had been sent to him by mail, not only from persons in the vicinity, but even from New York and Brooklyn. Mr. Moody, in the course of his remarks, said—'This world is a place for work. What we want to-day, to upset the infidelity of the times, is a Church of workers; a Church right with God—all united, pulpit and pew—all at it. Then Christianity would be like a red-hot ball of fire rolling over the earth. The Church does not want any more sleepy Christians, it does not want any more silent partners. Every Christian ought to be useful, and turn at least one to Christ. Every Christian should do something. The reward will come by-and-by. Do not seek the applause of the world, and go with the current. Go against it. You can always tell a dead fish, because it goes with the current. Your reward is not here. Look at Paul. He was scourged five times. Yet talk of Alexander turning the world upside-down with his armies! Why, I see him now going from city to city to preach, with his little bundle in his hand, putting up at cheap hotels, and saving souls. I wish we had a few more Pauls now. Infidelity before such men is like the dew before the morning sun.'

"Mr. Moody extended the usual invitation to all to rise who really wished to be prayed for. Twenty-three stood up while Mr. Moody offered a powerful prayer in their behalf. 'In the sweet by-and-by' was sung in closing."

Various statements have appeared in the New York papers with reference to the expected visit of the evangelists to that city; but according to the latest accounts nothing seems to have been definitely arranged.

As an indication of the feeling among the New York ministers with reference to the expected awakening, we give the following remarks by the Rev. G. H. Hepworth, of that city, in his sermon on September 19. Many of the other ministers have made favourable reference to the anticipated labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

"I am the more and more convinced," said Mr. Hepworth, "the more I know of the weaknesses and predilections of human nature, that we need to be periodically aroused. Our tendency is toward indifference, then to drowsiness, and at last to heavy sleep. . . . Now, there may be a revival this winter, and I hope there will be. There are young men among us who are wrongheaded and wronghearted. Let us pray God that these evangelists may come. The clergy of New York will, I am sure, welcome them. If there be any jealousy which would keep them away, it is not mine. If there be any man whom God has raised up who can touch the hardened hearts of men grown callous in this world, in God's name let him come. Let us all act toward him, should he ever come among us, in that large-hearted, generous, and, in one word, that true Christian way, which becomes us, and all will be well."

The Springfield Union thus speaks of the results of the meetings at Northfield :—

"Mr. Moody's work here has been a great thing for the old North Church, and has infused new life into it. They have not seen such a visitation for many years, and no wonder the pastor, Rev. T. J. Clark, is encouraged, and preached this morning with more than usual power. His text was from John xvi. 8-11, and his theme was 'Conviction by the Holy Spirit.' The church was full, and that has seldom been the case during the past dozen years, since the unfortunate division in the society on the matter of selling the pews. The preciousness of such a season to such a people cannot be over-estimated. Old wounds are healed, and long estrangements are forgotten. Among the young converts are a number of the old residents who, before Mr. Moody's coming, had not been in the old church for a decade.

"One of the most conspicuous conversions is that of a prominent business man over fifty years of age; a man of wealth, but a notoriously profane man. He is a leader in the town; a man of the kind that you can always tell where they are—outspoken, bluff, hearty, and profane. He attended Sunday-school to-day, and broke down during the singing of an old hymn familiar to his childhood. He wept like a boy, and he was not ashamed of it either—not he! He had taken two days to consider the matter, having attended the meetings, and having become interested. Mr. Moody's business way of putting the subject had caught his attention where forty ministers had failed to do so. It is worth something to have such a man come out and boldly tell his old associates that he 'is as far for God now as he was for the devil before.' This man is not alone. We heard to-day of another prominent business man, over fifty years of age, who has also come out emphatically 'on the side of the Lord and Brother Moody.' Of course, it is impossible to say just how many have met with a change of heart during this revival; for the number of those almost persuaded is always large; but there is every reason to believe that among the North Church people alone there are already over twenty converts fully persuaded and beyond the slightest hesitation. The homely words of a big, brawny farmer to his son, as they two drove away from the church to-night, ahead of us, are quite true, and may be taken as very just testimony of a more or less general application: 'I tell you what, Jim, I think that man has done me a good deal of good, that's what's the matter.'"

A correspondent writing from New York says :—

"There is an intense spirit of expectancy in the large cities of the United States concerning a revival. The public mind is a good deal occupied with the probable results of the preaching of our beloved brethren Moody and Sankey when they once again stately resume their work. The more earnest and thoughtful Christians rejoice that such a feeling of expectancy exists, but they lose no opportunity of testifying that the early Church waited for the promise of the Father, and not for any particular instrumentality. In New York a most healthy sign has just appeared in the establishment of a new daily prayer-meeting in the up-town part of the city—viz., at Lyric Hall on Sixth Avenue between Forty-first and Forty-second-street. The initiative in this matter has been taken by a leading merchant, Mr. Alexander Lyle, to whom the ministry of our beloved brother Mr. Henry Varley was especially blessed. Evidently there is an increasing spirit of prayer growing up among Christians in New York, and therefore we may confidently expect that the Lord will speedily revive his work in this city by whomsoever it is the good pleasure of his will to accomplish it. A REVIVAL of great power is reported in progress at Florence, Alabama, U.S.A.

A JOURNEY.

LETTER TO THE LADIES' THURSDAY NOON MEETING AT PITLOCHRY.—FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

YOUR prayers sent up last Thursday were answered to us all in Dundee. Just when your meeting was over we were arranging for the place. Before going to the pretty chapel, up a stair in Euclid-street, a letter came which was in full harmony with the meeting, at which Miss Sturrock, from Africa, was to be commended to start afresh for that field. The letter was from Miss Jane Malloch, Linwood, asking us to remember her setting out from her home on the 28th for London. With eight other ladies she is to be sent out from Mildmay, in October, to India. She is one who received blessing when Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were in Edinburgh, suffered not a little for the name of Jesus, has unceasingly worked since for souls and with much success, and now has to give thanks for many turnings to the Lord in her native place. It is one of the cluster of places around here where praise has been going up within eighteen months back.

In the reading of her letter to the crowded women's meeting, some standing and some on forms in the passages, we all seemed brought in sight of the heathen field, and the recompense of the reward further on. Mrs. Duncan Morison opened the service and gave out "Stand up for Jesus." Will you sing it to-morrow at your meeting, and remember Miss Malloch and the eight others? All through the meeting the Lord was very near; heart was meeting heart, though the faces were unknown. There had been many very solemn times during the Dundee Conference.

There were few speakers compared with Perth, but the Lord did his gracious part to overshadow with his love. Mr. Sommerville, of Glasgow, whether in telling of India, or speaking to believers on the three children in the fire, or to the unconverted, was borne up as on eagle's wings. Mr. Müller, of Bristol, also spoke powerfully at every diet we were at.

The women's meeting was a not-to-be-forgotten time. Some will yet give themselves to the foreign field. We sang four lines—

"They in the wilderness that dwell,
Bow down before Him must,
And they that are his enemies
Shall lick the very dust."

I got done to leave at four for Perth. Found cabs had all been taken, and the ladies' room locked, as there were no more trains for some time. The key was got, and soon came in a milliner's girl with a cap-box to be left for a lady. As we sat she told me Christ was hers these many years. She had never got out to hear Mr. Moody. I asked her if she was able to do anything for Jesus. "Yes, I took a companion to the evangelistic meeting the first night of the Conference, and I believe she decided that night." All the intercourse as we waited together, and during our drive back, when the cab did come, to near her place of work, brought out the solidity of the work of God in many a young heart. She entreated prayer for her father, whom I found from others to be a victim to drink. We parted on the lamp-lighted way to be friends for ever.

The next day there was again, through a mischance, an hour to wait at a station. This time it was a worn-out old woman, who sat by her burden waiting for a train. A little girl, a convert of last year's women's meeting, crept up to listen as we spoke, and no one else was near. The old face was shaded by the yellowish hair that does not soon turn grey, and the eyes were shut, so that for a time I thought she slept.

On being asked if she knew Jesus, she said, "Aye, don't I!"

"And do you tell of his love?"

"Whiles, and I get a clash back, but some listens."

"It's a great love, isn't it?" I said.

"Aye, a love that your mind 'll never fathom, search it as you will—never get a bottom in't."

"Did you ever hear Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey?"

"Once, just."

"Have you known our Saviour long?"

"Twenty years."

"How came it? We have a long wait here; you might tell me."

"'Twas on a fast day. All I know up to then was a want—a want of something I had not. I went into a kirk—not my own. The minister's name I never asked, and I mind not now what he said. But the Lord spake to me. My soul was free just sitting in the seat there—free! I tried to tell the neighbours, but they only said, 'Old S—— has gone mad!' One of my sons believed and his wife." She wept as she said this. "Alas! he preach't and he teach't, but business exposed him to drink, and, oh! he fell, and ruin followed. I dare not speak to the rest now, they only cast up that."

We went into the waiting-room, and she poured out her soul in prayer, and God heard the two agree to ask for her son salvation from the power of sin. The little convert crept close in behind us at the prayer.

The watch said an hour had gone when we had to part, but it looked more. God has been with us all here at the meetings.

MEETING OF MACHINISTS AT BRISTOL.

VISIT OF MISS MACPHERSON.

AN interesting meeting was held at Bristol on the 8th inst., in the lesser Colston Hall, in connexion with the Young Workwomen's Home and Institute, 14, King-square. This institution was recently formed for the purpose of seeking the social elevation of the class named, among whom are found a considerable number of persons of good character, but who have suffered much undeserved reproach through the evil conduct of some of those with whom they are necessarily associated in the manufactories. The Home was opened on Oct. 3, 1874, and is much appreciated by those for whom it is designed, as shown by the fact that the house is full, the beds (fourteen in number) being all taken, at one shilling and sixpence per week. Various meetings are held during the week for prayer, social intercourse, and Bible-reading. The work is conducted by a committee, of whom Miss Gibbs is the president, Mrs. Webb being the manager of the Home. The institution is to a small extent self-supporting, but a large balance is left for donations and subscriptions.

The meeting at Colston Hall was the annual tea-meeting; there were about 500 present. After tea the chair was taken by Joseph Storrs Fry, Esq., who, after singing and prayer, briefly addressed the meeting, dwelling chiefly upon the value and importance of Christianity in daily life.

Miss Macpherson gave an earnest address, grounded upon the story, in the Gospel by St. Luke, of the woman who was loosed from her infirmities. Regarding the many temptations of young women as infirmities from which they needed to be loosed, she pointed them lovingly to Jesus as the friend on whom they might rely to give them relief, illustrating her remarks in her usual touching manner by incidents from her own experience.

The meeting was then addressed by Mr. W. Morgan and Mr. Nobbs, and shortly after brought to a close—not, we trust, without some lasting impression having been made.

BOYS' HOME, LEITH.—This excellent institution is doing for the Scottish capital what Dr. Barnardo and Miss Macpherson are doing for London—rescuing the perishing children. A recent occasional paper says:—"There are at present thirty-nine boys in the Homes—thirty-one at Musselburgh, and eight at Bonnington. The majority of these are non-emigration cases, and as many of them are quite young, years of keeping and training will be needed ere they are ready for industrial occupation. Our heartiest thanks are due to the kind friends who have given their personal help, and especially at this time are we indebted to those at Musselburgh, who have, of their own accord, come forward and cheered the house-father and mother there by their sympathy and active assistance. We much regret, however, that of late not a few openings of usefulness in working among the lapsed (including the continuance of the services of a Bible-woman), and the admission of one or two needy cases into the Home, have been made impossible, partly through the want of funds. Mrs. Wallace, 30, Howard-place, Edinburgh, is treasurer. The mission work in Leith in connexion with St. Andrew's Gospel Hall continues to be carried on, and though no general revival has yet been vouchsafed, we are cheered now and again with manifestations of God's power in the conversion of souls."

"DEAD TO THE LAW."—ROM. VII. 4.

"Know ye not, brethren (for I speak to them that know the law), how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So, then, if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead [marginal reading—"being dead to that"] wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Rom. vii. 1-6.

I HAVE lately endeavoured to show that "dead to sin" does not mean that sin is dead to the believer, but that he has died to it judicially in the person of his Substitute. It is no less needful to free from current misconception the truth that the believer is "dead to the law," for the great majority of commentators and teachers fall into the strange mistake of expounding Rom. vii. 1-6 as if it taught that the law has become dead to the believer, rather than that the believer has become dead to the law.*

This misunderstanding has arisen from mistaking the nature of the illustration used by the Apostle Paul to make his meaning clear. He is addressing those who might demur to the truth he had stated in Rom. vi. 14: "Ye are not under law." He is showing not only that death dissolves legal obligation, but that in a particular case—which exactly illustrates the position he contends for—the death which so dissolves the obligation need not be that of the person to be liberated, but of a legal representative. The husband actually dies. The wife virtually dies, in his death, to that marriage-law which held her hitherto. She is now free so that she may marry whom she will. So Christ has actually died, and the believer has virtually in Him "become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that he should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that he should bring forth fruit unto God." There is, however, no question entertained here of the wife being dead to the husband, but of the wife becoming dead to the law which held her bound to her husband. "She is loosed from the law of her husband." The law to which she dies is not to be confounded with the husband whose death is the cause of her freedom. He is dead, it is true, but the marriage-law is not dead; and so in the truth illustrated, whoever or whatever the first husband be, it is not the law of God, for that is no more dead than the marriage-law in the illustration, though the believer "has become dead to it through the body of Christ."

What, then, is the first husband? We get much light on this point from the last chapter, Rom. vi. 6, "Knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him that the body of sin might be destroyed," &c.

It is the old nature, in which the believer was held, and fast held, by the law of God; held, so as to be responsible for all deeds done in the body. Believers may now say, "Now we are delivered from the law, being dead (to that) wherein we were held." This is the marginal reading, and, without doubt, the true one.

Christ in his own person sustained representatively on the cross the legal responsibilities of all for whom He died. He died—they died in Him. Therefore the believer can claim that, in virtue of his substitutional death, the old man, the flesh, has been got rid of—destroyed (judicially, of course, as that is the theme of Rom. vi. 1-11). The soul is now free, and may sing with David, "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped." But in order that liberty be not turned into licence, it is added,

* I refer to the common view that the first husband—in the illustration—means the law. Those who hold this cannot avoid thereby making the Apostle represent the law to be dead to the believer.

"That we should be married to another, even to Him that is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

There is therefore no contrast here between the law and Christ, as if the law was the first husband, and Christ the second; but there is between the flesh ("when we were in the flesh," v. 5) and Christ raised from the dead. These are the two husbands, to one or other of which each soul must be united. Happy they who can say of the past—"When we were in the flesh," and of the present—"In Christ, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law," &c.

This view of the passage has the following advantages over the one currently held. It keeps close to the illustration, which the other does not; and it avoids the serious error of representing the law of God to be dead, as those must who identify it with the first husband. Moreover, it is an old view; held by Augustine, and adopted from him at the time of the Reformation by Beza and Melancthon. Why it should have fallen into disfavour it is hard to say; perhaps the spurious reading, now universally rejected, "that being dead wherein we were held," may have had something to say to it: but it only needs the careful attention of the intelligent reader to see that in the illustration the marriage-law stands for God's law; the husband's death for the death of the flesh in Christ's death, and not for the death of the law; the wife's freedom from the marriage-law for the believing soul's freedom from God's law; and the re-marriage of the wife for the believer being married to another, "to Him raised from the dead, to bring forth fruit to God."

FOR THE YOUNG.

HYMN FOR A LITTLE CHRISTIAN.*

I belong to Jesus; 'twas a happy day
When his blood most precious washed my sins away,
When his Holy Spirit changed my "heart of stone,"
Set his mark upon me, sealed me for his own.

I belong to Jesus, so I'll try to spend
All my life in pleasing my Almighty Friend;
Since He is so holy, I must watch and pray
That I may grow like him, more and more each day.

I belong to Jesus, therefore I can sing,
For I'm safe and happy underneath his wing;
But so many round me are all dark and cold,
I must try to bring them into Jesus' fold.

I belong to Jesus, soon He will be here;
If I love and trust Him, what have I to fear?
Round about Him gathered will his people be;
And I'm sure that Jesus will remember me.

CHICAGO.—A meeting of the Evangelical ministers of Chicago was held on Sept. 13, for the purpose of discussing the question of inviting Messrs. Moody and Sankey to inaugurate a series of revival meetings in that city. After a full and free consideration of the subject, an executive committee was chosen, consisting of the following-named persons:—J. V. Farwell; H. G. Spafford, Presbyterian; G. Kean, Methodist; C. H. Case, Congregationalist; E. G. Keith, Reformed Episcopalian; B. F. Jacobs, Baptist. It was also voted to hold a meeting, consisting of lay delegates from the churches, to obtain a fuller expression of Christian sentiment in regard to the proposed series of meetings.

ASTON TYRROLD, BERKS.—The Rev. Thos. Curry, of this place, writes:—"Scarcely a week passes but I hear of some fresh instance of blessing received through the Gospel Tent Services which were held in this neighbourhood in July last. Some one convinced of sin there is either seeking further counsel, or has just found peace through believing. In visitation from house to house, and speaking with the people personally about their soul's salvation, I have been amazed and saddened at the ignorance which prevails regarding spiritual things. I have met with men who could not tell me who the Lord Jesus Christ was. From personal contact, I know that many of the people are not in a position to profit by the ordinary preaching of the Word; they must be visited in their own homes, and the Gospel explained at their own firesides. I cannot overtake this work unaided, and I appeal to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to send me an evangelist. Those willing to help may address me as above."

OUR "BLUE-JACKETS."

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS AND HELPERS,—I know that many readers of THE CHRISTIAN look for some tidings about our brave "blue-jackets." Amidst the thundering of guns, the shot, shell, and powder and all the warlike bustle of a man-of-war, how does the cause of the Prince of Peace progress? Thank God, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up the standard, and many are drawn to it.

On board an ironclad, well known to me, a prayer-meeting and Bible-reading is carried on, with the full consent of those in authority, who have not only given a retired and suitable place, but have even stationed a sentry there to prevent these dear Christians from being disturbed. The Valorous has come back from the frozen regions, bringing the last news of our Arctic discoverers. The most cheering to me was not the high spirit or the determination of the men to brave all dangers, but a message brought to me by a blue-jacket, "Tell Miss Weston that the good seed sown at our happy meeting in Portsmouth is springing up, and souls are being blessed." Let us thank God, and pray that during the awful darkness of the Arctic winter, Jesus, the Light of Life, may shine into their souls. Over China a war-cloud is hanging, but, thank God, we can count the Lord's dear children by scores in the Chinese squadron.

In this great centre of naval stir and work I have to tell of the Lord's goodness. Amidst dust, and mortar, and confusion we have carried on our Sunday meetings; our workers in the streets have had much to put up with; the enemy has not let the work go on without a struggle. Many a sailor and soldier have turned from the invitation "to come in and hear of Jesus" with an oath. Lads brought to the door have been ridiculed by passers-by, and have dived under the friendly hand stretched out to them, and escaped; and yet the Lord has given us precious souls almost every Sunday. A young sailor, brought in with great difficulty, was arrested by some of the first words which he heard—the Holy Spirit worked powerfully in his soul. He stayed to the prayer-meeting, to the inquiry-meeting, and with tears said that he had not been voluntarily to any place where he could hear of Jesus for seven years. A soldier of the 14th Regiment found Christ the same day; and a sailor, who used to be a troublesome fellow a few months ago, coming in and laughing at all that went on, gave this testimony—"You remember me, and how I behaved. I was a hard nut, but the hardest nut can be cracked; and now I'm Christ's."

We have nearly completed our small hall. All the principal alterations and repairs in the house are done, but I am looking to the Lord for £900 for the fittings and furnishing. Our place will be very attractive. The publicans admire it, but say that they mean to try and cut us out. Not one farthing of debt has been contracted. Unless God sends me money to go on, work will have to be stopped; but this He has never done, and, I believe, will never do. He never fails those who trust Him. I am anxiously looking for a man and his wife, without children,—they must be Christian abstainers and interested in the Master's work—the man to serve in the bar, the wife as plain cook; but the money, the workers, and the blessing will all come in answer to prayer and trust.

EVANGELIZATION IN GLASGOW.—A report of the summer work of the United Evangelistic Committee and Young Men's Christian Union has just been issued, and shows no abatement of the good work that has resulted from the services there of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Speaking of the Sunday breakfasts and dinners, the report says:—"Since the breakfast-meetings began, in July, 1874, two hundred and fifty-eight thousand four hundred rations have been dispensed to old and young. We know that some object to this way of doing good, but the Lord has so manifestly set his seal to it, and continues to supply all our returning wants so liberally, that we dare not for a moment think of changing our method. No one who has watched the progress of this work can have the slightest doubt that a great amount of good is being accomplished." Further help is needed to complete the Evangelistic Hall being erected. Mr. J. Scott, 81, Gordon-street, Glasgow, will be glad to receive contributions

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-METING.

UNANSWERED PRAYER.

At the Moorgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting, on Wednesday, 29th ult., an address on this subject was delivered by the Rev. J. R. Wood. He founded his remarks on Deut. iii. 21-29, which records the refusal of God to grant Moses' prayer for permission to enter the promised land. While there was daily evidence in this meeting (he said) of God's willingness to answer prayer, most, if not all believers, had an experience, at times, similar to that of his little girl, who said the other day, "I do ask God to help me in conquering my bad habits, but He does not seem to hear." Looking at unanswered prayers as exceptions to the general rule, let us see what comfort concerning them can be got from God's Word.

Others have walked in the same path, and wrestled with the same difficulty. The case of Moses is one in point; so is the case of David, when he prayed for the life of his child; as also that of Paul, when he asked to be delivered from the thorn in the flesh. Then, God's delays are not necessarily denials. We have, both in the Old and New Testaments, the promise and the record of instant answers to prayer, but in other cases, weeks, months, and sometimes years pass, and no answer apparently comes; but the delay may not be a denial. As a matter of spiritual discipline, the delay is often productive of good. Another thought is that our prayers go up in one form and the answer comes down in another. The answer to our prayer may be close to us, lying by our side, and we do not recognize it as God's answer to our prayer because it does not happen to be the thing we expected. Observe, again, what a blessing there is in prayer itself. Whether or not God gives you the thing you specially ask for, I believe there is not one here who would give up the unspeakable blessing and privilege of prayer.

Further, if God does say "No" to our prayers, as sometimes in his wisdom and love He does, is not that "No" an answer? Just as we are sometimes obliged to refuse the requests of our children for their own good, so God's "No" is often the very best answer that can come to our prayers.

In the course of the conversation that followed, a friend said it was a humbling thought, that, at such a meeting, the requests for praise were so few compared with those for prayer. There is a great deal more that passes for prayer than we are conscious of being definitely answered. Our prayers are often so general that it is difficult to observe a specific answer. There were reasons why Moses' prayer was not answered. He was the representative of the law, and as he had on one occasion broken the law, there was great reason for his not obtaining entrance into the promised land. If in our prayer, our will really meets God's will, and God's will meets ours, then our prayers will be answered. This subject touches us on many points. "If we regard iniquity in our hearts, the Lord will not hear us." If we do not listen to God's word we are not in such communion with Him that we can, with confidence, ask, nor can we expect an answer.

Mr. Hodder said that one reason, perhaps, why we do not get definite answers to our prayers was that sometimes we were tempted to engage in speaking to God before the Spirit moved our hearts to prayer. It was better that there should be silence, and even a hitch in the meeting, than that we should pray just to fill up the time. John, in his Gospel, gives us the condition of successful prayer from the lips of the Master Himself—"If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." If we obey this condition, we must get the answer, or this Book is not true.

Mr. B. Paton quoted a recent utterance of Mr. George Müller's with respect to recording answered prayers, which we append at length:—

"I would particularly advise all, but especially the younger believers, to use a little book, in which they may note down on the one side the requests which they bring before God. There are certain matters which God has laid on our hearts, and we should note them down. It would be helpful to us to write, 'At such-and-such a time I began to pray for such-and-such a thing'; and then to continue to pray with regard to this matter. If we do so, we shall find that sooner or later the prayer will be answered.

"Then let us mark on the opposite side, that it has, at such a time, pleased God to answer that prayer. After some time, read over the memorandum-book, and you will find how again and again it has pleased God to answer your prayers—and perhaps regarding matters about which you little expected the answer to come; and soon you will find the wondrous effect of this on your heart, in increasing your love and gratitude to our heavenly Father. The more careful you are in marking what you ask, and what God has given, the more distinctly you will be able to trace how again and again it pleased God to answer your prayers, and more, you will be drawn out to God in love and gratitude. You will find precisely as the Psalmist found it when he says, 'I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.'

On Wednesday, the 6th inst., the following interesting statement was made by the Rev. J. T. Wigner, of New-cross, illustrating how the masses in London have been reached by the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey:—

A few days since I was travelling on one of our main lines of railway. We had just commenced our journey, when a passenger who sat directly in front of me said—"Sir, you'll excuse me, but did I not see and hear you, too, at some of the Moody and Sankey meetings?" "Very likely; I was often at them, and occasionally took part in them." A man sitting by my side, who heard these remarks, at once volunteered some most defamatory language concerning both Messrs. Moody and Sankey, branding them as "two of the vilest hypocrites that ever were," and "that they had made thousands of hypocrites as black as themselves." Directly opposite to this man (whom I have ascertained is a terrible backslider) there sat a very clean, respectable-looking man, whom I should judge to be of the artisan class in its highest condition. I saw his countenance flush, and the tear of emotion start in his eyes, and, looking steadfastly at this defamer, he said, with emphasis, "Hypocrites, sir! Moody and Sankey hypocrites, sir! why, before they came to London I and my wife and family were on the broad road to ruin, and our house was a hell on earth. Now we are all converted—five of us,—and there is not a happier home in London. I and mine bless God that they ever came to London. They hypocrites, sir! would there were many more such!" Two others in the same compartment bore similar testimony. There were four out of nine passengers, and one of these four spoke of four in his family, besides himself, who had been blest. The slanderer had not one in the compartment to side with him, and, had he not been lost to shame—"twice dead, plucked up by the roots,"—he could not have been unmoved at what was said to him ere our journey ended. I feel sure that much fruit will yet appear to the glory of God from the visit of our dear friends Moody and Sankey.

CONFERENCE AT NEUCHATEL.

THE Union Liberal, the daily political paper of Neuchatel, has a leading article on the recent meetings for consecration held there (Sept. 20-23). After describing the great crowds that were drawn to the meetings every day, the writer gives what appear to him to be the reasons for such gatherings. First, he puts the felt need of union among Christians; and, next, the need of affirming evangelical truths in the face of the growing presumption of infidelity and rationalism.

He says of the doctrines preached at the meetings:—"That a Christian life of words, combats, and failures should be succeeded by a Christian life of acts, deliverances, and triumphs, has been the groundwork of the teaching;" and concludes: "For many years we had not seen our town so generally and so powerfully moved by religious questions. What will be the result? Those who have taken part at these meetings should teach us. Will we see more self-denial, more love to one's neighbour, more devotion to the true interests of humanity? Whilst waiting for a proof of the contrary, we indulge in a hope that this will be the case."

THE PERTH TOWN COUNCIL has adopted, by fifteen votes to seven, a by-law prohibiting passenger traffic on Sunday at the harbour.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETING, formerly held in the Tent at the back of Bow-road Hall, has been continued since the Hall was taken down in the club-room of the Edinburgh Castle Coffee Palace, Rhodeswell-road (kindly lent for the purpose by Dr. Barnardo). The interest has been kept up among the young men, who have formed themselves into a society for the purpose of carrying on the work. The committee hope very shortly to be in possession of an iron building, capable of holding between four and five hundred, which they intend opening four nights a week, to which they will remove their Wednesday evening meeting (a class for Bible study, conducted by B. Tabrum, Esq.). The other nights will be occupied with evangelistic addresses, Bible-readings, lectures on Bible subjects, prayer-meetings, &c. The committee earnestly desire the prayers of all God's people that this branch of work in his vineyard may be blessed with his guidance and sustaining power, and that they may be accounted faithful servants among the young men of the East of London.

THE "UPAS TREE" OF INTEMPERANCE.

EVERYBODY seems to admit that intoxicating drinks are a prolific, if not the most prolific, source of the sin and sorrow that afflict the British nation. It is also undisputed that our influence for good, as a professedly Christian people, upon the other nations of the globe (especially the semi-civilized ones) has been most seriously hindered and prevented by reason of the drinking habits and customs which have been introduced and propagated among these nations by our countrymen. It is, further, a painful, but we fear an undoubted fact, that notwithstanding all the legislation, whether restrictive or the opposite, and despite all the efforts of Christian philanthropists, during the last quarter of a century or more, to bring about an abatement of this evil, it continues at work with undiminished, if not increased, power in our midst.

In view of this, we think it was not without good and sufficient cause that Messrs. Samuel Morley, M.P., Jonathan Grubb, and T. B. Smithies convened a conference of those interested in the temperance cause at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, to consider "what further steps could be taken to lessen the evils of intemperance in our land." The conferences extended over the afternoon and evening of both days. They were not largely attended (probably not more than 100 persons being present at one time), but those who did attend were chiefly gentlemen and ladies who had worked, for a longer or shorter period, for the accomplishment of the object in view, and who were consequently prepared to adopt any fresh and comparatively untried means that the collective wisdom of the Conference might decide on.

Mr. T. B. Smithies presided at all the sittings (in the unavoidable and regretted absence of Mr. S. Morley), and in his opening remarks said he and his friends had felt that by coming together and praying about the matter they would be guided into right channels of thought and action. He thought there had been a neglect of the duty of prayer in connexion with their efforts. A brief season of silent and uttered petition to God followed, and we think it would have been a decided gain and strength to the Conference if Mr. Smithies' hint on this point had been more largely carried out. There was plenty of disposition to address each other, though too much could not be said: we should have liked if an equal disposition had been manifested to "move the Arm that moves the universe."

We cannot attempt anything like a detailed or consecutive report of the many speeches that were delivered both by ladies and gentlemen present, though all, or nearly all, of them were excellent and to the point, especially those of the ladies. All we can hope to do is to summarize the suggestions that were put forth, in the hope that out of the multitude of these proposals, all of our readers who recognize the vital importance of this subject—and surely every Christian does!—may find something that will guide them into intelligent and fruitful action. There was perfect concord as to the magnitude of the evil; there was a slight disagreement as to its extent. The Chairman asserted strongly at the outset that, while a great improvement had perceptibly taken place among the so-called working classes, the reverse was true of the middle and upper classes, and especially the female portion of them. This opinion was demurred to by Rev. J. H. Wilson, of the Home Missionary Society; but Mr. Smithies' view of the case was strongly supported, and we think conclusively established, during the after part of the Conference. The facilities with which ladies may obtain wines and spirits at the shops of grocers and confectioners was strongly animadverted on, and the Chairman hazarded the statement that Mr. Gladstone, by his, no doubt, well-intentioned Wine Bill, had inflicted a curse on our land which would be felt for generations to come.

We note, first of all, the experience and advice of the lady speakers, though they were not first in point of time. Mrs. Whiting said she had been engaged in holding meetings for ladies throughout the country, many of whom, she said, did not seem to think they had any duty to perform in the matter. She said most truly, as the women's crusade in America had clearly proved, that if the ladies of our land took up the subject, how much might be done! In Leeds, the ladies had met and prayed over the matter; they had also sent suitable letters to every minister, to every medical man, and to every publican in the town. Constant reference was made to the immense influence wielded by the ministers over their flocks, and the great responsibility devolving on them. Miss White, representing Glasgow, spoke of the impetus that

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's testimony had given to the cause there, and how the young converts were directing their energies to the rescue and recovery of the destitute and vicious. The ladies there had also combined much prayer with efforts similar to their sisters in Leeds. Miss White advocated a Women's Temperance Prayer Union for Scotland, and mentioned, incidentally, that Miss Annie Macpherson, of the Home of Industry, had come to the conclusion that she must work more in this line of effort. Mrs. Coates, who labours in the East-end, proposed women's temperance prayer-meetings in all the four quarters of London—a proposal which it would surely not be difficult to carry out, and would in many ways be fraught with great good. As an illustration of the power of sympathetic persevering effort, she related, in most affecting terms, how she had been enabled to rescue a confirmed drunkard in the East-end, and thereby restore comfort and happiness to his once desolated home. Mrs. Balfour, in the course of an excellent and telling speech, stated that during her long temperance career she had known a great many men reclaimed to become ornaments to society; but she could count on the fingers of one hand all the women she had ever seen restored after they had once become the victims of intemperance. She considered that nothing could be more fatal to the best interests of a nation than that its women should become addicted to drinking, and made a fervent appeal to her sisters to give themselves to temperance work. She stated, on the authority of the Pall Mall Gazette, that no less than 300 inquests takes place yearly on children, from three to five months old, who are suffocated in their beds through the intemperance of the mothers!

We must condense the utterances of the gentlemen into a few sentences, quoting as they come those only that seemed to us to be suggestive. Mr. Jonathan Grubb, after long experience and prayerful consideration, had come to the conclusion that the only remedy for the crying evils they deplored was for the Christian people of the country to banish the drink from their tables and houses, whatever sacrifice it might be supposed to require. As Christ laid down his life for us, we ought, if necessary, to be ready to lay down our lives for the brethren. Mr. Eli Jones, from personal knowledge of the facts, vindicated the success of the Maine Liquor Law. Dr. Ridge said there was great ignorance of the physiological facts relating to this question, and advocated a wide diffusion of them among all classes of the community. This was frequently urged throughout the proceedings by many speakers, and the lectures by Dr. Richardson on this phase of the controversy were strongly recommended. Mr. Whitworth, M.P., stating that he was so convinced of their utility that he had distributed over 500 copies. Two other volumes recently published were referred to—viz., "The Temperance Reformation and the Christian Church" (Hodder)—a most invaluable and comprehensive treatise; and Rev. Dawson Burns' "Christendom and the Drink Curse" (Partridge), which bristles with facts and statistics.

Rev. W. McCree thought more attention should be given to the enforcement of the law against those engaged in the traffic for permitting drunkenness in their houses, and that more stringent laws should be passed respecting the supply of liquor to persons of tender age. Rev. Thos. Richardson, of Stepney, asked what sacrifices Christians were making for Christ's sake, and considered that a very practical outcome of the many meetings for consecration now held, would be a deeper interest in this drink question. He counselled more aggressive effort, and bore testimony to the usefulness of appropriate temperance placards. Mr. Downing spoke, among other things, of the necessity for more cohesion and combination among temperance reformers. Mr. Law would have a national appeal sent forth, in view of the approaching Christmas, entreating parents to withhold all intoxicants from their children at that festive time. He also pleaded for the introduction of books, treating popularly and comprehensively on this subject, into all the schools of the land. Mr. Thomas Cook wanted reliable statistics procured. Mr. Geo. Holland thought a great desideratum was good speakers at temperance meetings, who could argue the question sensibly. He also spoke of the value of female missionaries, and implored temperance men to spare no effort to keep public-houses closed whenever they were closed from any cause.

On the afternoon of the second day's conference the chief topic of discussion was the best way of approaching those engaged in the traffic. Several statements were made to the effect that many such, both publicans and brewers, would willingly relinquish the business if they could without temporal ruin, and much sympathy was expressed with them in their difficulties in this respect. Mrs. Balfour, in this connexion, forcibly remarked that while sharing in this sympathy, she had no very great respect for those who felt so dreadfully alarmed about their bread-and-butter, but cared nothing about their souls or the souls of those who were being ruined by their instrumentality.

The closing sitting was mainly devoted to the medical aspect of the question. It was agreed on all sides, even by members of the profession, that the doctors were the greatest stumbling-block to the progress of the cause in the present day, and various proposals were made as to how their minds should be enlightened, and their consciences appealed to. There was not a perfect consensus of opinion as to the propriety of the Conference approaching the medical men, and ultimately it was agreed that this part of the subject should be referred to the National Temperance League. Formal resolutions were passed embodying the main features of the two days' Conference, and a committee appointed (Mr. T. B. Smithies convener) to carry into effect the various propositions that had been made. We can heartily say God-speed to these proposals, and trust these deliberations may result in the deliverance of many a drink-bound slave, and, better still, in the complete salvation of many souls as well as bodies.

MAJOR COLE AT YORK.

THE LORD has blessed the efforts of his servants, Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole, here this week, in bringing souls from the bondage of sin into the liberty of his children.

Last Sunday morning (Oct. 3) several hundred Christians gathered in the Corn Exchange at 7.30, whom Major Cole, in a very appropriate address, urged to loving and persevering effort in winning souls to Christ, giving various instances in Sunday-school work, and other departments of Christian labour, where the most hardened and unlikely persons had yielded to kind, faithful persuasion, and had become earnest Christians. The Hall was completely filled in the afternoon and evening, when some professed to find shelter on the "Rock of Ages."

On Monday in the Corn Exchange, Tuesday in the Temperance Hall (the Exchange having been engaged for a political entertainment), and during the rest of the week in the Exchange, the audiences have increased, and sinners have been brought to the feet of Jesus. One evening a man came purposely to chaff, sitting in one of the front seats. Major Cole spoke to him first, immediately at the close of the first meeting, when he confessed why he came, but said the Holy Spirit had melted his heart through the words spoken. A young man, who was made happy in the Saviour's love a few evenings ago, going from one of the meetings saw an old companion coming out of the Circus, to whom he spoke a few words of kind remonstrance, which went to the heart; the companion came to the meeting last night, and trusted in Jesus during Major Cole's address. A man living several miles away was invited to the meeting; he came last night, and took Jesus as his Saviour before he left.

The trios sung by Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole have been most appropriate and impressive. A woman (a Roman Catholic) who has only been in the city a few days, was attracted to the meeting the other night, and was enabled to rejoice in the Saviour; she told us afterwards, "It was the singing that knocked me over." That very day, at the noon prayer-meeting, we had asked the Lord to bless the singing to some souls. Last night we had the best attendance (the hall being crowded), and the greatest blessing of the week.

Our noon prayer-meetings have been precious seasons; Major Cole has a happy way of conducting them, removing any restraint or formality by throwing part of the hour open for quotation of promises, verbal testimonies for Christ, &c. His remarks at these meetings to Christians have been most opportune, and, we believe, have stimulated some to greater zeal for Christ's service. Several ministers have spoken of instances of blessing they have found in visiting in their parishes or districts.

We thank all Christian friends who have been praying for York. Please plead on; we need your prayers. Ask the Lord abundantly to strengthen and bless his dear servants, physically as well as spiritually; pray for the masses of professing Christians in York, many of whom attend these meetings, who do not (though urged to do so) help to speak a word to sinners who sit next them, or leave with them; pray that we may realize in its fulness John xvi. 24. We need very much a large Young Men's Christian Association building here, with hall adapted for evangelistic work and capable of holding several thousand people, with conveniences for carrying on other general Christian work. This was one of the last wishes dear Mr. Moody expressed to some of us before leaving England. As his work in Great Britain commenced in this city (though many mistaken notions are abroad respecting it), would not the erection of such a building in York be a suitable thank-offering to the Lord from Christians in various parts of our land where our brethren laboured?

THE CHRISTIAN'S BATTLE-SONG.

Comrades, come take up your cross,
Count your earthly gain but loss,
Crowns instead of earthly dress

Wait us over there!

Wave the streaming banner high!

Let its crimson glories fly!

"Christ and Home," our battle-cry,

Ring through the air!

Round us throng unnumbered foes,

Sins, temptations, bitter woes,

Yet o'er all our Saviour rose,

Conqueror for aye!

We but follow in his train,

Tread with Him the battle-plain,

He doth all our strength sustain:

We shall win the day!

Why, with worldly doubts and fears,

Worldly gain, or burning tears,

Do ye waste life's sacred years?

Rise to battle now!

Lay your cares at Jesus' feet,

Cast them all on Him complete;

Haste ye on, your Lord to greet,

And before Him bow.

Chariot-wheels are coming near,

Soon the Bridegroom will be here,

Then his saints with Him appear,

Clothed in spotless white.

Farewell then to vanished dreams,

Sorrows deep and darkest streams;

Welcome! Heaven's glory beams,

After life's long night.

Oh! the friends in counting o'er

I shall meet on Heaven's shore,

Where the partings come no more,

'Mong the ransomed blest!

Oh! it's worth a lifelong fight,

Worth the toil in darkest night,

There to dwell in realms of light,

There in full to rest.

'Tis not "Victory or death"—

"Victory" our only breath:

"Victory," the Saviour saith,

"By my blood is won."

Onward then, with joy and song

Though the fight be hard and strong,

Heaven's rest will come ere long

Ev'ry toil be done

Mothers there their tears shall dry,

Sisters there no longer sigh,

Friends united join the cry,

And their crowns will bring.

—"Worthy is the Lamb that's slain!"

This the universal strain;

"Crown Him, crown Him!" our refrain,

"Glory to our King!"

BIBLE-FLOWER MISSION.—A small depot in connexion with this mission has been opened at the Christian Institute, 321, Fulham-road, S.W., for the supply of some of the West-end hospitals and unions. There is a great scarcity of flowers and gifts for the sick, and the secretary thinks that many readers of THE CHRISTIAN residing at Croydon, Balham, Sydenham, Streatham, &c., might like to assist in this labour of love, did they know that all gifts would be welcomed if sent on Wednesdays to the depot, viz the Chelsea Station. In answer to many inquiries, will friends kindly address all contributions for the Christmas Trees (mentioned in Miss Macpherson's letter to THE CHRISTIAN, Sept. 23) to the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields.

"SOW BESIDE ALL WATERS."

We are glad to notice symptoms of a widely extending desire on the part of many Christians to scatter abroad with a generous hand the good seed of the Word in the shape of tracts or portions of the Scriptures. We hail this as a proof that Christians are awakening to a sense of the evil that is being done in our own land through the dissemination of a vast quantity of pernicious, unhealthy literature, and the good that is being left undone in other lands from the entire lack of that knowledge of the Scriptures which is able to make wise unto salvation. We have received many communications on the subject of distributing Scripture truth in various ways, and in different lands. As our limited space forbids our giving these papers at length, we are compelled to content ourselves with giving such extracts as will be useful to those of our readers who are endeavouring to do something for the Master in this way. We trust also that many more will be stimulated to obey the injunction to "Sow beside all waters."

TRACT WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

A correspondent writes:—

"During five weeks spent at Spa we often longed for such a work as has since sprung up there, as we found the peasantry always glad to receive tracts, while in some cases in the town a scoffing infidelity seemed already to have taken the place of Popish superficialism. One of our party, while here, wrote a French tract, 'L'Indicateur' (since printed), closing with an exhortation to the reader to purchase the Word of God, and giving the addresses of booksellers in Paris and Brussels where the New Testament could be bought, and stating the price. This information is most important, and ought to be given in all cases of new tract publications.

"In Germany and Switzerland we never found a tract refused. Many opportunities occur for sowing the precious seed among the servants in hotels and attendants in shops, among the guards and porters at railways, on the steamboats, and in public gardens. But perhaps our most remarkable experience was in Austria, where, along the road from Salzburg to Gastein, the Italian and German navvies seemed delighted to receive the fluttering messenger as it lit among them from the passing carriages. This readiness of reception in Austria made one long that a vigorous and systematic attempt might be made now, while the devil's opposition slumbers, to circulate truth broadcast in that dark land.

"At Nice, our residence on the Villefranche road afforded us many occasions for putting the 'words of this life' into the hands of the numerous young soldiers whose blue coats and red caps may be seen all day long passing and repassing along that 'road of Paradise,' as the Nicolis delight to call it. On Sunday this road is the promenade of the whole bourgeois population, and thousands of tracts might be given away by a diligent hand. Indeed, with all its influx every winter of English money and English Christianity, little or nothing is done at Nice for the teaching of the native population, amongst whom, notwithstanding, there is without doubt a willing ear.

"Our great difficulty during our whole tour was to find depôts where Bibles and Testaments could be bought. Large supplies cannot be carried.

"I would therefore suggest that you should use your extended influence to collect the addresses of such shops at all places on the Continent where they exist, and publish a caude mecum for the British traveller, to which at each stopping-place, be his stay long or short, he may refer without loss of time. The little book should include the name and address of at least one Christian worker, in every place where they are known, by which the great mutual benefit of hearty co-operation would be secured in numerous cases where now it is impossible."

[In response to our correspondent's suggestion, we may say that we shall be glad if friends who possess the knowledge will send us the information referred to, which we will be happy to furnish to our readers as it reaches us.—Ed.]

"THE OVERLAND ROUTE."

Another friend writes detailing the opportunities at the disposal of those journeying from England for India. He says:—

"Those proceeding by the ordinary P. and O. route by Southampton and the Mediterranean will most probably have a short time both at Gibraltar and at Malta for distributing English books and tracts to the British soldiery, and Spanish and Italian publications to the natives of those places.

"At Alexandria, at the various railway stations where the train to Suez stops for the passengers' refreshment, and at Suez, there will be found many opportunities for giving away French publications; and nowhere in the world could God's truth be better distributed, as regards necessity for its being known and acted on. A few English and Italian publications will also be useful at this stage of the journey.

"At Aden there are barracks with English soldiers, two or three miles from the landing-place, to be reached by a carriage. At the town close to the harbour there are a few French people, and many Mahomedans and Hindoos—the former reading Hindustani, the latter Guzerati and Maratti probably.

"In the harbour, as at Galle, will be seen very probably two or three large English or American sailing-ships, which can be visited by a boat to be hired alongside. But most sadly interesting of all at Aden are the poor despised Jews, who sell ostrich-feathers, &c., on board the steamers, and who profess some of them to be able to read Hebrew.

"Amongst the 300 or so of human beings with whom Christian travellers will come in close contact on board ship—for a fortnight, at any rate, of their journey—there will be not infrequently some sick and dying ones who may be ministered to; but they must be sought out ere it is too late. How often nothing is known on the subject until the quiet preparations being made warn the experienced traveller that there is going to be a 'funeral at sea.' A few kindly words of converse with the ship's doctor at the commencement of the voyage will lead to useful information as to his patients."

FRENCH ILLUSTRATED PERIODICALS.

It is the earnest wish of friends that evangelical truth should be disseminated among the French residents in this country, of whom there are thousands, by the circulation among them of L'Ami de la Maison, and Le Rayon de Soleil, published in Paris by Bonhours, 48, Rue de Lille, and sold by Partridge and Co., 9, Paternoster-row, London. It is intended to send these attractive monthly journals, gratuitously, to foreign governesses, nurses, &c., in England, in the desire that it may be a help to them in training the children under their care. Any friends who would collect, or take an active part in the distribution of the above-named periodicals, are requested to communicate with Mrs. Filby, 10, Chapel Field, Norwich, who acts as treasurer of the fund.

MR. MOODY'S CHURCH.—The walls of Mr. Moody's Church at Chicago, in aid of which so many Sunday-schools have contributed their mites, are now going up. Work on them was suspended in his absence.

WOOLWICH.—During the past week a good many anxious souls have been won to the Redeemer, and those already brought to Christ were greatly strengthened and refreshed. A very cheering feature in the work here is the apparent steadfastness in the faith of those who had been previously converted. Most of these have attached themselves to Bible-classes and Church work, showing their love to a newly-found Redeemer, "not in word only, but in deed and in truth." Will Christians remember us in prayer, that the work of conversion may go on, and that every one of these converts may be preserved from backsliding? Mr. S.A. Blackwood, Mr. Russell Hurditch, and others, have promised us a week early in November.

MISSIONS AT GOSPORT.—Mr. H. Cook writes:—"I am happy to inform you that a good work is going on here among our military friends. For want of funds, however, we are often much cramped. As I write I have not a penny in store for all the work. There is a small sum in the bankers' hands—out of £50 recently given by the Marquis of Cholmondeley for the enlargement of the Soldiers' Mission Hall and Institute, which had become too small for our soldiers, who most gladly attend our special services. The enlargement of our Mission Hall and Soldiers' Institute, with new stools, &c., will require still a large sum. Another gospel hall, on the Fareham-road, Gosport, about a mile and a half out, being vacant, the former tenant begged me to take it. I felt I had enough to do, but being still urged I committed my way to the Lord, and felt led to take it. It is surrounded by the poor, many of whom used to live at Gosport."

SINGING FOR JESUS.—On Tuesday, Oct. 5, an interesting meeting was held at Penge Hall, in connexion with the Anerley Young Men's Christian Association. The choir was taken by Mr. Betson, and the South London Choir having volunteered their services, a selection of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hymns were sung, and suitable addresses given by Major-Gen. Gryndon, Rev. J. Halsey, Mr. Stapley, and Mr. Hodder, forming a most impressive and enjoyable evening's service. The beautiful hymns, "Knocking," and "What shall the harvest be?" being sung most impressively as a duet, while "Sweeping through the gates," and "The Prodigal Child," each prefaced by words of exhortation, were effectively and pathetically sung by the chorus; and the evident interest and emotion of a crowded audience can leave but little doubt that such methods to reach hearts and point the erring ones to a loving, merciful Saviour, cannot but be followed by God's blessing, and help forward the great work of winning souls for Christ. Indeed, we have reason to believe that one soul was brought to Christ before the meeting ended.

MILDMAY PARK.

WINTER WORK AT THE CONFERENCE HALL.

A PUBLISHED list of meetings to be held at the Mildmay-park Conference Hall during the present month, shows both the catholic character of the institution and the practical nature of the work carried on in connexion with it. First come a week's special mission services, conducted by Mr. Herbert Wilbraham Taylor, the singing being led by the North London Evangelistic Choir. Then a course of lectures on Singing and Psalmody is to be given by Mr. Joseph Proudman, and designed to improve the congregational singing of the neighbourhood. These were commenced in the Large Hall last Tuesday, and will be continued every Tuesday evening for twenty-two weeks. The Tonic Sol-fa system is the one adopted.

Woman's work is represented by the quarterly meeting of the Association of Female Workers, held last Thursday under the presidency of Mrs. Pennefather. Foreign mission work is prominent in the dismissal of nine English ladies, going to India as Zenana missionaries, in connexion with the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, and including among them Miss C. M. Tucker, better known to the reading public as "A. L. O. E." This meeting, held last Monday, we hope to report in our next issue. Woman's work is further represented by the men's night-school, also opened last Monday. This is probably the most remarkable school of its kind in London. It is held three nights a week from October to March. It is superintended by the Secretary of the Hall, but its twenty-two classes are taught entirely by ladies, chiefly the deaconesses of the adjoining Deaconess House. Last winter for sixty-six nights the average attendance each night was 113.

Various public bodies and institutions are also represented. On Thursday, the 14th, a public meeting will be held on behalf of the Home for Little Boys at Farningham. On Thursday, the 21st, an open-air mission meeting is announced. On Monday, the 25th, the annual meeting of the Children's Special Service Mission will be held, and presided over by its President, Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, the Superintendent of the Hall. On Wednesday, the 27th, the Postmen's Annual Tea-Meeting will take place, and on the following day a special Temperance Meeting for Policemen. The public will, however, be admitted to both these gatherings.

Mr. Sankey's North London Choir seems to make the Conference Hall its head-quarters, as there are three Saturday Evenings of Sacred Song during the month, each being preceded by choir practice under Mr. Proudman.

The attendance at the Sunday services continues steadily to increase. Mr. Kirkham will occupy the afternoons to the end of the year by a series of lectures on "The Night Scenes of the Bible"; while Mr. Herbert W. Taylor is the evening preacher for this month. Sunday afternoon is a busy time for classes. Mrs. Pennefather is a firm believer in consecutive instruction imparted in classes, and takes a large class of men herself. The other classes include two for young ladies, two for young gentlemen, and two for servants.

Daily there is a prayer-meeting at noon, and among the weekly engagements are a Wednesday afternoon Bible-reading conducted by the Rev. D. B. Hankin, the new Vicar of St. Jude's, and a Bible-class for the Mildmay Young Men's Christian Association held on Wednesday evening by Captain Moreton. The monthly list to which we have referred closes with a monthly gathering of Christian workers on Sunday morning, the 31st, being a continuation of those held by Mr. Moody in the Agricultural Hall.

EVANGELICAL SCHOOL AT CISANELLO.—The friends who have so kindly assisted in building the much-needed school-house here, will rejoice to hear that it was opened on Friday, the 1st inst., and that the school is now divided, the boys and girls being taught separately in the two large, airy school-rooms. We shall be delighted to receive a visit at any time from Christian travellers who may wish to see the schools; but as a difficulty has sometimes been found in finding out Cisanello, we would request intending visitors to call at the Bible and Tract Depot, in Via Vittorio Emanuele No. 11 (the street which leads to the station), where the depositarian will be happy to give information, and, if desired, will procure a carriage to drive them out here. Will the reader pray that, now we have plenty of room, many more parents in the neighbourhood may be disposed to send their children, as hitherto we could not accommodate more than about fifty-six pupils at a time; but now sixty in each room could be easily seated—and more, if needful. S. H. CARRUTHERS, Sec.

Cisanello, Fuori Porta alle Piagge, Pisa, Oct. 6, 1875.

WHAT THE REVIVAL HAS LEFT.

THE Rev. J. P. Chown preached the opening sermon at the meeting of the Baptist Union held last week at Plymouth. Speaking of the recent religious movement he said:—"First, the work had left in almost every part of the land an awakened interest in Christian fellowship, which they would do well to take advantage of. In many parts there were hundreds who till lately were never conscious of the claims of Christ and the needs of humanity, who, if they could be but wisely led and brought into an earnest and active endeavour for the extension of Christ's Kingdom, would bring results that had not been equalled from the beginning.

"Then, in many parts Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work had left behind it a great amount of its instrumentality and power for labouring in various ways in the Church of Christ, that if rightly used might be productive of great and glorious results. He referred to the bands of men who had shown great zeal combined with a tact and a gentleness most commendable, in the conduct of the various services, and in going out as pioneers into districts which had been neglected, and which as a consequence made them have no need to go out of their own land for scenes of darkness and cruelty—men who went with their leaflets and tracts, and, what was better, with tender words of burning Christian love, inviting those who lived amidst scenes of poverty, ignorance, and vice to come where they could have abundant blessing.

"In this connexion he would not forget the choirs, whose services formed no inconsiderable part of the attraction by which multitudes had been drawn to hear the words of salvation. Then, there were those who had been ready to give of their means, and those who had collected of others that there should be no lack in the Lord's treasury. Many also had been employed in house-to-house visitations, which would be as needful in the future as they had been in the past. As these instrumentalities were continued, so would the work yet accomplished be beneficial in its character and lasting in its results. They had now provided ready for use that, which, instead of being a merely occasional expedient, should be a permanent and ever-growing power, one capable of expansion as well as distinguished by some measure of centralization.

"The movement of Messrs. Moody and Sankey had left behind a great number of persons whose consciences had been aroused but not savingly converted, and it was for the various sections of the Church to take up the work thus left, and bring those persons into full fellowship with Christ. The movement had also left them an amount of power in the public press. He did not refer simply to the kind and favourable way in the main in which these and kindred efforts were spoken of in the daily press, nor did he refer to the extent to which they had been reported with becoming accuracy and propriety, and thus multiplying the preacher's message ten-thousandfold, and sending it into places where otherwise it would never be heard, nor did he refer to that special literature which the movement had called into existence; but he took the conduct of the press towards the movement as an indication that if the Church was only true to herself, the press, the rail, and the telegraph would assuredly be among her instruments, as the Sunday-school, the tract, and the ministry were now, bearing her winged words through all the land, fulfilling the Divine purpose of Him who had given this wondrous power to man. The movement of Messrs. Moody and Sankey had also left an amount of devout expectancy and anticipation on the minds of many in connexion with the Church of Christ, which they were bound to seize upon and turn to good account."

THE BIBLE-WOMEN'S MISSION needs help for the rebuilding of one of the dormitories and the enlargement of the Central Mission-Room.

WEALTH AND SPIRITUALITY.—In a sermon at Plymouth last week, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon said: "Many of our members are not what they should be. There are many outside the Church who are better; and it would be better if they were outside, for then they would be in their proper place. There are some men who cannot be trusted with a little wealth. No sooner do some men prosper in business than straightway they absent themselves from the prayer-meeting. Some in London who go up to the City for three or four hours and deal with thousands are so tired out that after dinner they cannot go out to any religious services. This sort of feeling is growing in the Church, until at last I feel sorry when I see men getting on in business. Some, however, consecrate their wealth to God; and would that millions poured into their coffers, for they would use them well! With others, just in proportion as their money-pile goes up, their spirituality and love of Christ go down."

CLIFTON CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

THE thirteenth Annual Conference of believers assembled at Clifton on Oct. 5 and 6, in the Victoria Rooms. The subject for consideration on the first day was "The Rest into which God's people do enter" (Heb. iv. 3), and in the evening "The rest which remaineth for the people of God" (iv. 9). The line of thought on the first day was plain and intelligible enough; but while it was evident that the programme indicated heaven as "the rest that remaineth" from the present to the future, it was equally evident that some of the speakers regarded it as remaining from the past to the present, and the καταπαυσις of the third verse, and the σαββατισμος of the ninth, as substantially the same. Perhaps the truth was best expressed by one who said that there is only one Rest of God, whether it be the rest given to the heavy-laden or that found by the yoke-wearers (Matt. xi. 28, 29), or the consummated rest of 2 Thess. i. 7, Rev. xiv. 13, Job iii. 17, and it is all summed up in one word—JESUS.

The morning meeting was, as usual, presided over by Rev. S. A. Walker, the convener. Dr. Elwin offered prayer, and Mr. Walker then introduced the subject for the day by reading Psalm xxiii. The Rev. Mr. Bennett, Mr. Bliss, and the Rev. C. B. Snapp followed.

In the afternoon Mr. Harvey, of the China Inland Mission, gave an interesting sketch of recent successful missionary work in China, and, describing the needy condition of the immense populations in the several provinces, entreated the Lord's people earnestly to pray for more labourers, and to inquire whether God would have them go themselves.

An interesting Bible-reading was held, the subject being "Jesus the High Priest," Messrs. Curme, Elliott, Bennett, and others, taking part in the conversation.

A meeting was also held in another room to hear reports of various evangelists, when Messrs. Vicary, Nobbs, and others, gave brief addresses.

In the evening the speakers were—S. A. Walker, Rev. W. Elliott (Plymouth), Rev. Mr. Clifford (Clifton), and Mr. Wright (son-in-law of Mr. Geo. Müller, and co-director with him of the Orphan Houses).

On the second day the speakers were—Mr. Inskip, Mr. Grattan Guinness, Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, and Rev. Mr. Barne. We have been at some pains to get a report of these addresses, but we find our space so occupied that we are quite unable to give any résumé that would do justice to them.

On the afternoon of Wednesday Miss Macpherson addressed a large company on her work. She spoke favourably of the Education Act as having done its work efficiently, and thus in most cases rendered her work among the little ones unnecessary; and she therefore contemplated during the coming winter devoting her efforts to the benefiting of poor factory girls, whose degraded condition she sketched in a touching manner. She also read extracts from a report giving a favourable account of the conduct and success in life of some of the poor children who had been taken to Canada.

Mr. Guinness then gave an address to the same meeting on the Nestorian Church, briefly sketching its history, its location in Khoordistan, the present needy condition of the people spiritually, and their appeal for Christian missionaries. There was present on the platform Deacon Khanaan Marous (from Khrouma), in his mountaineer's dress, who also said a few words in English, and gave illustrations of the Syriac language.

A Bible-reading was held, in which very great interest was taken, so that it was found necessary to occupy a much larger room than usual.

WINTER CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.—A correspondent sends us a useful and inexpensive plan of making a good warm quilt, which may briefly be described. Gather all rags and odds and ends, and sew together into a long string; then knit in common knitting, on a pair of very long wooden needles, in strips not half-a-yard wide; three strips, two yards long, make an excellent quilt.

HEALING BY PRAYER.—A very interesting monthly meeting was held last week at the House of Faith, Tower-street, Hackney. Baron Andreas addressed the meeting, and read several letters which he had received during the past month, which testified how wondrously the Lord had owned his prayers to the healing of several cases of sickness after all medical means had failed to relieve. After some explanatory words on the healing of sickness by Scriptural means, one after another of the inmates of the Home rose up, telling what their bodily ailments were when they first entered the Home, and how the Lord had graciously healed in answer to prayer.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HOW TO ANSWER OBJECTIONS TO REVEALED RELIGION. By Miss E. J. WHATRELY. Religious Tract Society.—If objections to revealed religion are worth answering, few could do it better than the authoress of this little volume, to whom has descended much of the power of mind and facility of pen of her gifted father. The impression, however, that all such books make upon the mind of the thoughtful Christian is, that it is beginning at the wrong end to deal with the objections raised by the opponents of revealed religion. If there is such a thing as revealed religion, it is plainly the first thing to establish the fact of this revelation, and to show where such a revelation has been made. That being done, the objections appear in a new light; they are now objections to Him who has made the revelation, and as such few will have the hardihood to urge them. Miss Whatrely hardly escapes the inevitable tendency of such a mode of dealing with scepticism, which is to make concessions to an extent that the letter of Scripture does not warrant. In order to make the account of the Deluge more palatable to the sceptic, we are told that it "does not necessarily imply that it spread over the whole globe." Now, if "all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered" (Gen. vii. 19), does not necessarily imply this, it is hard to know what language means. However, with the exception of a few undue concessions of this kind, there is much to be said in praise of the ability with which the sceptic's objections are answered. This is especially the case in regard to objections to the Atonement, which are admirably met.

LITTLE SUFFERERS AND LITTLE WORKERS; or, Stories about Medical Missions. By ANNIE R. BUTLER. Book Society.—This little volume was written, says the preface, to interest children in Medical Mission work. It seems to us well fitted to awaken the interest and sympathy of all sorts of readers in what we look upon as the ideal kind of philanthropic effort—Medical Missions; but doubly so in the case of children. Its conversational style and skilful grouping of touching facts, quoted from many sources, will be sure to fix the attention of all the young folks into whose hands it may be put. Winter is upon us, with its crying need of help for the poor; Christmas is not far off, when our well-to-do children are taught to give; the extensive circulation of this little book just now would be timely and helpful.

"I LEFT IT ALL WITH JESUS," AND OTHER POEMS. By ELLEN H. WILLIS. Shaw. (2s. 6d.)—That exquisite hymn which gives the title to the book is itself worth the price of the whole, and if Miss Willis had written nothing else, she would be entitled to an honourable place among the hymn-writers of the day. We call to mind Mr. Moody's eulogy of it, and the fact of its appearing in Mr. Sankey's collection proves his estimate of its worth. This beautifully got-up little volume, however, contains many other pieces of merit, though none, we think, so characteristic as the one we have referred to. We have transferred one to our Column for the Young.

A GREAT GRIEVANCE.—The following speaks for itself, and has our strongest sympathy:—"Let me bring to your notice what I consider a great grievance—I mean the long hours a female, in many instances, is obliged to work in the drapery trade, and the little time there is for quiet reading and prayer, or recreation. I am an assistant in a shop; I breakfast at 8 a.m., being allowed fifteen minutes for that, twenty minutes for dinner, and ten minutes for tea. Then I work on, as a rule, until half-past nine at night, and Saturdays till eleven and twelve. Now, I wish to ask, Cannot all shops who employ hands be brought under the Factory Act?—which would at least benefit me one hour and a half daily, and four or six hours on Saturdays. Seeing Mr. Frederick Smith's proposition for giving rest to us poor workers, I feel that we may hope for better times, and heartily thank him for it. Will you kindly think this over and see if anything can be done to relieve us poor fagged-out females?" We commiserate the case of our sisters; their lot seems little better than slavery.

THE FRENCH IN LONDON.—The thirteenth annual report of the Rev. J. Du Pontet de la Harpe's Mission to the French in Bayswater, just issued, contains many encouraging items. For instance—"One day we went to a hospital to see a Swiss girl who wished to see us. We found her better. 'The body is getting well,' said we, 'but how is the soul?' 'The soul is all right, sir,' was the answer; 'I am converted.' 'And how and when did this take place?' 'On last Good Friday, sir. You were then preaching on that beautiful text, 'And because I live, ye shall live also.' And since then, I live.'" The good pastor is anxious to open both a day-school and a home for governesses; but, at present, funds are insufficient. Speaking of his work generally, he says:—"We are working among persons who come chiefly from French-speaking countries, from every corner of France, but also from almost every country in Europe, and who, for the most part, are to be scattered again in every direction. This work is essentially a missionary work, and among missions may we not say that it is an important one? With this work you have kindly consented to be associated, and you have helped us to carry it on. For your past services we beg to tender to you the expression of our deep, heartfelt gratitude. As regards the future, we will continue to wait on the Lord, but we hope also that we shall retain your sympathy, and continue to have your prayers and your material help."

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

SHEFFIELD.—On Sunday week, Rev. R. Stainton's services were recommenced for the winter season in the Albert Hall.

AN EDITION of the Bengali New Testament, in small print, for the pocket, has just been issued from the Serampore press.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—On Sunday evening week Mr. C. H. Spurgeon had an addition of fifty members to his church.

SATURDAY LAST was the Jewish Day of Atonement, or White Fast, which is strictly observed by all Jews for twenty-four hours.

THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT has recently appointed a member of the Protestant community on the Board of Public Instruction, and in other ways is showing increased favour to the Protestants.

FULTON-STREET PRAYER-MEETING.—The eighteenth anniversary of this meeting was held on the 23rd ult., and is stated to have been one of the most interesting of these commemorative gatherings.

BOSTON, U.S.—A meeting was held recently in the library-room of the Boston and Albany Railroad, to organize a railroad praying-band of railroad men for work among their fellows. The meeting was an enthusiastic one.

THE SOUTH-WESTERN STEAMBOAT COMPANY, who have a fleet of some thirteen or fourteen steamers, have recently cut off the grog rations, and given captains 6s. per week cash instead, and chief officers and others 4s. per week extra.

DR. TALMAGE says in his Christian at Work:—"The great religious interest which has been witnessed in the Brooklyn Tabernacle for the last two years still continues, a hundred persons last Sabbath-night after sermon arising for prayers."

THE FRIENDS.—On Monday evening last week a large meeting of the younger Friends, convened at the request of Mr. Jonathan Grubb, was held at Devonshire House, London. Many young Friends made public profession of their faith in Christ, and many offered prayers.

GRAVESEND GARRISON.—God is wonderfully blessing the meetings which are held every night for the benefit of the Wesleyan soldiers of the garrison and those of other denominations. Large numbers attend, and many a sin-burdened soldier has lately found that "Jesus is merciful, Jesus will save."

FACTORY LABOUR.—The Times, referring to Mr. Redgrave's report on factories and the improvement made in the condition of factory workers since 1848, says that the full advantages of the improvement are enjoyed as yet only by the adult male operatives. In the matter of the labour of children and of women there is still much one could wish to see altered.

CHINA.—It will doubtless be remembered that at the Conference of Presbyterian Missionaries which met in Chi-fu, in August, 1874, it was agreed to issue a circular calling a general conference of the missionaries in China, to be held in Shanghai in 1876. Owing to unexpected difficulties, it is believed the Conference will not take place.

AN INTERESTING FACT.—An application has been received by the American Bible Society from the "Society for the Education of the Blind in Japan," asking that a portion of the Japanese Gospel of John be printed in the English raised letter and sent to them, as a means of determining whether the Roman character or the Japanese Karakana will be the most suitable for use in the instruction of the blind. The Bible Society Record says that the request will be granted.

"THE END OF THESE THINGS IS DEATH."—Here is a sad commentary, too common, alas! in these days:—"Yesterday morning (3d inst.), Patrick Docherty was executed within the South Prison, Glasgow, for the murder of John Miller, in May last, at Rutherglen Bridge. The convict attributed his position to drink and passion, and requested the priests to tell this to the reporters that others might be warned."

WHITBY.—Mr. Thomas Johnson, one of the evangelists from the Evangelization Society, has lately been labouring twice in this town, and both times with great acceptance. Many souls have been led to cry out like the Philippian gaoler, "Men and brethren, what must we do to be saved?" The Evangelization Society have very kindly permitted their agent to stay another week in the town. Christians are praying for the permanence of this movement. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for Whitby?

Mrs. SPURGEON.—Speaking of the Baptist gathering at Plymouth last week, the Freeman says:—"A gloom has been thrown over the assembly of the brethren by the telegram received on Tuesday while our honoured brother Mr. Spurgeon was preaching in the Guildhall, announcing the serious illness of the preacher's long-afflicted wife. Preacher and audience were very deeply affected when it was announced by Mr. Aldis that the state of Mrs. Spurgeon's health was such that her husband was in hourly expectation of hearing of her decease, but that she had that morning telegraphed to him that, though upon her dying bed, she wished him to proceed with his services at Plymouth, and not return to London at once as he had proposed." We are glad to have later intelligence that Mrs. Spurgeon is somewhat better.

THREE THOUSAND BIBLES were last year supplied to 1300 cars, on sixty railroads, by the American Bible Society.

HOBART TOWN, TASMANIA.—Evangelistic meetings, similar to those led by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have been in progress here.

TEXAS.—Nearly fifty new Sunday-schools are reported as organized in Texas, as one result of the visit there of Messrs. Paxson and Reynolds last spring.

AT IPSWICH, Miss Grimwade has initiated a series of weekly religious meetings in the Town Hall for the members of the borough police force. Alderman Grimwade was present and took part in the first service.

PHILIP PHILLIPS was, at last accounts, in Australia, interesting many by his Services of Song. His family are with him, and he intends making a circuit of the globe, reaching Calcutta about Dec. 1.

A CABMEN'S SHELTER was opened at Dundee on Monday, when a procession of cabs preceded the ceremony. The shelter is the first in Dundee, and is the gift of an ex-bailie of the town. It has cost about £120.

IN SPAIN, where there are 9 archbishops, 93 bishops, 100,000 priests, 14,000 monks, and 19,000 nuns, out of a population of 15,000,000, less than 1,000,000 can read or write. It is no wonder that the Papacy retains a strong hold on that country, and that Protestantism makes progress but slowly.

A CHINESE TEACHER recently told a missionary that the Bible could not be so ancient a book after all, because the first chapter of Romans gave an account of Chinese conduct such as the missionary could only have written after full acquaintance with the people. The mistake was not an unnatural one, but it is a heathen's testimony to the truth of the Bible.

BRITXON.—Meetings for conference and consideration will be held in the Gresham Baptist Chapel from the 18th to the 23rd inst. The Revs. John Allen and Asa Mahan, Admiral Fishborne, and others, will take part. Ladies' meetings, every afternoon at three o'clock, will be conducted by Miss Mason and Mrs. Irving. Tea will be provided. Communications addressed to J. T. Swift, 82, Poplar-walk-road, Brixton, S.

YEOVIL.—On Thursday, Sept. 30, a Young Men's Christian Association was successfully inaugurated here. Mr. James Pearse attended as a deputation from the London Association, and gave many important particulars as to the need, and mode of working such associations. The committee have secured very suitable rooms in the centre of the town, and the Association in Yeovil bids fair to become a great success.

MADAGASCAR.—Rev. George Cairns, of this mission, says that its wonderful success is owing to the aggressive, pioneer work of the native Christians themselves. Christian soldiers or slaves sent into the country where no missionary has been, observe their Christian duties, their example is observed and followed by the heathen, and before long a congregation is formed, wanting Bibles, hymn, and spelling books, and finally a teacher and minister for the Church that is sure to be formed.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH has issued a second pastoral address on the religious revival and evangelistic work. Referring to the revival, the committee state:—"That this is a work of grace, however sceptically some might speak of it at its earlier stages, no one who has had the opportunity of obtaining a correct and intimate knowledge of its varied results will now, we hope, venture to deny." The committee recommend house-to-house visitation as the only effective way of reaching the careless.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN FRANCE is becoming unpleasantly manifest. M. Licheret, of Maubeuge, has been fined 25 francs for conducting a Protestant service in the house of a gentleman at St. Aubin, and a similar sum for distributing unstamped tracts. The curé of the village not only preferred the charge against M. Licheret, but made a violent speech on the following Sunday in his chapel, in the course of which he openly cursed every one of the sixty persons who attended the Protestant service.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.—A correspondent of the True Catholic, writing from Oviedo, in August last, says:—"Since the priesthood have regained status, and to some degree power, they have used both as much as they dared. Pastoral after pastoral has been issued by the Bishop of Oviedo, and these transmitted to every priest throughout the province, warning their flocks against Protestantism, urging the people to refuse their books and to give up any they may have received. You can easily imagine the effect on a simple population, sincerely, blindly attached to the religion of their fathers and forefathers. Latterly a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society was compelled to flee from a village to avoid bodily harm or even save his life. This same man, eighteen months ago, went over the whole province, no one saying to him even an uncivil word. . . . Tract work cannot be carried on now as before; the tracts would be handed over to the priests to be destroyed. But the present state of matters will not be of very long duration. Of El Cristiano, in former days, we sold 100 a week in the streets; but the priests abused the boys who sold them, so much so that they declined to sell for us any longer."

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL, E.C.

THE following are the subjects and speakers for the current week:—

OCTOBER.	SUBJECT.	SPEAKER.
Thurs., 14.	—What the Christian should know, believe, experience, and determine (Ps. xxviii. 7)	Rev. W. Marshall.
Fri., 15.	—“Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof” (Matt. vi. 24)	J. Culross.
Sat., 16.	—The journey to Emmaus	Mr. George Holland.
Mon., 18.	—“The cloudy pillar”	Rev. S. McAll.
Tues., 19.	—“A new song” (Rev. xiv. 3)	J. Lewis Pearce.
Wed., 20.	—Christ the Atoner and Baptiser	C. Clemanoe.

BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.—Mr. B. W. Witten who conducts this Mission, sends us a sketch of its operations which are, of course, very similar to those of kindred efforts in other places, and adds:—“The work at Brighton is but in its infancy, having been open only since last April. There have been, however, since that date 1123 attendances at the Dispensary, and 350 visits paid at the patient's homes, to all of whom the Gospel has been proclaimed and medicines provided without money and without price. The work needs but to be known to insure for it the sympathy and support which it deserves, the object being to save precious souls.” Mr. Witten's address is College-road, Brighton.

LORD COLERIDGE, speaking last week at a missionary meeting at Ottery St. Mary, said:—“A man who was indifferent as to whether other persons did or did not believe in Christ, was apparently careless as to his own belief. He could understand a man, though he did not agree with him, saying that Christianity was one form of worshipping God, but was no better and had no higher authority than Buddhism, Brahminism, Mohammedanism, the fire-worship of the Parsees, or any other form of religion; but he could not understand a man who, professing to believe in Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world, was indifferent whether other nations shared his belief or went on in the belief of Buddha, Brahma, or Mahomet, or in the wild superstitions of Central Africa or the Pacific.”

THE RELIGIOUS WAR IN BELGIUM.—Religious intolerance (a Brussels correspondent writes) is progressing in Belgium. The late M. Heppmann, of Ghent, has left one-fourth of his fortune to the Protestant poor of Ghent. As the Protestant Consistory there has no corporate rights, the Communal and Provincial Councils have refused their authorization for the acceptance of the legacy. The question will have to be decided now by the Ministry. Similar instances have, however, occurred frequently with respect to the Roman Catholic parishes, which have also no corporate rights, and the Communal Poor-offices were always authorized to accept the legacies for the benefit of the class of poor designated by the testator. The Roman Catholic press, while supporting strongly the refusal of the benefit of the legacy to the Protestant poor of Ghent, does not mention these cases at all.

KILBURN TRAINING-HOME FOR SERVANTS not only affords shelter to little waifs and strays, but makes them of service to the community, by training them to become useful domestic servants. The home-training is greatly assisted by the ladies in the neighbourhood, who receive the girls daily into their households, where they learn to do every kind of domestic work. Two years' experience enables the committee to speak with confidence of the success of this method of training, and entire satisfaction has been expressed by those ladies who, after the training, have taken them as servants. The committee ask that help may be afforded them in their endeavour to teach girls the art of domestic service as a trade, whereby a good and honest livelihood may be gained. The Hon. Treasurer is Miss Frith, 71A, New Bond-street, W.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For much blessing on the mission in Gosforth, Cumberland.—For souls brought to God at Kidderminster.

PRAYER.—For a young lady about to become a governess, that God would enable her to bring up her pupils in the right way.—For a husband, that he may find the Saviour, and in his strength conquer intemperance.—That I may have grace to overcome a besetting sin.—For a young Christian invalid whom God has been pleased to try with a long and weary illness, that He would use it as a means of blessing to him.—For my brother and his wife, who are “halting between two opinions.”—For my brother, who once appeared to be converted, but now says that he does not believe in Jesus; and for myself, that I may not be ashamed to confess Christ.—For the recovery of a lady who suffers much from rheumatic pains brought on by over-exertion in nursing others.—A clergyman who is very ill earnestly begs the prayers of the Lord's people that such a measure of spiritual and physical strength may be given him that he may henceforth devote himself entirely to the furtherance of the Lord's work.—For an awakening in a country parish, and for a special blessing on a particular family in the parish.—That a young lady may be specially guided in an important crisis at this time.—That a Christian young man in business, surrounded by worldly associates, may be “kept by the power of God.”—For the father of a large young family, who has grievously fallen under the influence of strong drink.

PLACES.—For eight days' special evangelistic services in Dumfries, commencing on Lord's-day, the 17th inst.—For a continued blessing on special services at Woolwich.—For the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on the services held during the winter in the Shortwood Room, Nailsworth, Gloucestershire.—For an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Lymington and its neighbourhood; and for special services to be held there by John Johnson, of the Evangelization Society, from Oct. 17 to 24.—For a blessing on the great Camp of Exercise at Delhi, where some twenty regiments will be gathered in honour of the Hair-Apparent's visit.—That a great blessing may attend a week's special Gospel services to be held in Southgate by preachers from the Evangelization Society, commencing Sunday, Oct. 17.

CONVERSIONS.—That the truth, long known with my head, may be brought home to my heart.—For two schoolgirls, that they may be enabled to give themselves to Christ.—For a young man, an author, that he may taste of God's goodness, and may in his writings have always an eye to God's glory.—For the conversion of one who through drink is bringing himself and family to ruin; also, for a brother abroad, and other relatives, who have been deeply convinced of sin, but are now apparently little concerned about their souls' welfare.—For two ladies who were recently under conviction of sin and seeking salvation, but have now become careless.—For a young and only son, just leaving England, that he may be led to Jesus.—For five brothers, that they may be converted.—That all my Sunday-school class may be brought to the Saviour.—For a young servant, that she may find Christ; and also for an elderly relative dangerously ill, that she may be brought to the foot of the Cross.—For a young clergyman who holds Ritualistic views, now wholly laid by in hopeless consumption, that he may be converted.—For a mother, who seems on the verge of eternity, apparently without a care or thought about her soul.

THE PRINCE OF WALES' VISIT TO INDIA.—We gladly comply with the wish of a correspondent in suggesting to our readers that “Special prayer should be asked by clergymen and ministers from the Christians in their flocks about the visit of the Prince of Wales to India. All who know him and his staff, and anything of India, feel that a mark will be left for good or evil that can never be undone.” Will Christians pray that this visit may result in nothing but good both to the Hair-Apparent himself and the great dependency over which he may one day rule?

DAILY TEXTS.

"JESUS SAID, 'WHAT SEEK YE?'"—JOHN I. 38.

Thurs., Oct. 14.—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "I will seek Him whom my soul loveth."—Matt. vi. 33; Cant. iii. 2.

Fri., 15.—"Oh God, Thou art my God, early will I seek Thee." "Your heart shall live that seek God." "They shall praise the Lord that seek Him, your heart shall live for ever." "He that seeketh, findeth."—Psa. lxxiii. 1, lxxix. 32, xxxii. 26; Matt. vii. 8.

Sat., 17.—Woman, why weep-est thou, whom seekest thou? "When Thou saidst 'Seek ye my face,' my heart said unto Thee 'Thy face, Lord, will I seek.'" "He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."—John xx. 15; Psa. xxvii. 8; Heb. xi. 6.

Sun., 18.—"Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified; He is not here, for He is risen." "Mordecai the Jew was next unto King Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews, and accepted of the multitude of his brethren, seeking the wealth of his people and speaking peace to all his seed."—Matt. xxviii. 5, 6; Esther x. 3.

Mon., 19.—"One thing have I desired, that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." "They that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country."—Psa. xxvii. 4; Heb. xi. 14.

Tues., 20.—"Seek Him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning." "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, seek righteousness, seek meekness." "The Father seeketh such to worship Him."—Amos v. 8; Zeph. ii. 3; John iv. 23.

Wed., 21.—"Seekest thou great things for thyself, seek them not." "Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come."—Jer. xlv. 6; Heb. xiii. 14.

"SEEK THE LORD AND HIS STRENGTH, SEEK HIS FACE CONTINUALLY."—1 CHRON. XVI. 11.

BELFAST.—The Earl of Cavan and Mr. Henry Moorhouse held meetings in this town all last week under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. The evening services were attended by great crowds. Bible-readings were also held each afternoon.

MISSION WORK AMONG SEAMEN.—On Monday week the quarterly conference of workers connected with the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, in St. George's-street, London Docks, was held at the reading-rooms adjoining the chapel. About forty of the friends assembled, most of whom are gratuitous workers. After tea the meeting was presided over by the Rev. T. J. Hill, and reports were received of the open-air services, Bethel meetings afloat, ship and lodging-house visitation, adult Bible-class, Sunday-school and chapel work. From these reports it appeared that, besides seamen, many of the most degraded characters in Ratcliff-highway and neighbourhood had been brought under the sound of the Gospel, and in some instances with gratifying results. Altogether the work had been far more successful than during any previous quarter. Arrangements were made for special efforts for the winter months, and after praise and prayer the meeting closed.

THE CIRCULATION OF THE BIBLE.—The Earl of Shaftsbury was present on Monday week at a meeting, held in Glasgow of the National Bible Society of Scotland, and in the course of address on the progress of the Society's work, said that at the present time there were many operations on the Continent, especially in France, of a very encouraging nature, but there was also a very great deal that was not encouraging. Very lately they had very cheering announcements. They had got from Russia, from which our version of the Bible had been excluded for a considerable time, full permission to print and circulate the Scriptures throughout the whole of the Empire. They had also obtained from the authorities at Constantinople that which had some time previously been taken from them—the right to print the Scriptures in Turkish in the city of Constantinople. That would, some measure compensate for the difficulties now thrown in the way of the circulation of the Bible in France.

MONMOUTH.—This town has recently sustained a serious loss by the death of the Rev. Dr. Stewart, who was called to his rest rather suddenly. For several years this aged minister had given special addresses on Sunday evening at the Working Men's Institute, with evident tokens of Divine blessing. Mr. George Hefford has been addressing large meetings in the Market Hall. Each evening the place is filled, and some are evidently wrought upon by the power of the Word. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for Monmouth? A great and effectual door has been opened, and there are many adversaries.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE BLOOD.

ALTHOUGH it is now long since Gambold, the pious Moravian, wrote:—

"Oh, all ye great, ye wise, ye just!
Who the blood's doctrine have discussed,
And deem it mean and slight,
Grant that I may—the rest's your own—
In shame and poverty sit down
By this one well-spring of delight," yet we still find the controversy which existed in his day between "the great, the wise, the just," and those to whom the doctrine of the blood is a "well-spring of delight" as ripe as ever.

The Christian World recently, in an article entitled "The Revelation of Love," commends to its readers an extract from a sermon of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, as likely to "help those readers who are anxious simply to know the truth, and to be made free from hurtful superstition." The passage quoted from Mr. Beecher is intended to be an explanation of the doctrine of the Atonement, "around which (he thinks) there has been thrown an amount of nebulosity and obscurity which has gone far to confuse the minds of men, and keep them from a true experience of joy."

How, then, does Mr. Beecher propose to remove these clouds and mists? By the following view of the Atonement, which he propounds as being the only true one.

He first points out, that "in all of Paul's writings he was (for the most part) addressing the Jews, and was attempting to remove a national and educational prejudice which they had against Christ, and to bring them into a personal and sympathetic relation to Him. The terms which he used are Jewish; and they are to be looked at entirely in the light of known Jewish ideas. The blood of Christ is spoken of as being equivalent to his death. Death and blood mean the same thing."

So far, so good. But a little further on we meet with the following strange description of what Mr. Beecher imagines might be seen in the courts of the Temple:—

"If we should see sheep and bullocks slaughtered at one of our festivals, and we should see the walls covered with blood, and we should see the gore running under the rock and into the valley below, and we should see the priest with his bloody hands take a bunch of hyssop and dip it into the blood, and sprinkle the blood upon the door-posts of the temple and upon the people, we should be struck with horror. Such a scene would empty one of our churches almost as quick as a fire; but to the Jew with his associations, and educated to that sort of thing, it had a sweet and comely aspect. It was agreeable to his every sense; but we might as well try to talk Hebrew, because the Old Testament was written in Hebrew, as to repeat Hebrew symbols which have lost their significance. And instead of saying 'We are saved by the shedding of Christ's blood,' why should we not say 'We are saved by Christ Himself'? Instead of saying, 'Our sins are washed away by the blood of Christ,' why should we not say, 'Our sins are washed away by Christ'? Why should we use an illustration that needs to be interpreted? What is an illustration worth that does not make the thought plainer? An illustration that you have to go back and explain is an incumbrance and a nuisance."

Now, passing by the palpable ignorance which Mr. Beecher here displays of the subject on which he is speaking—confounding that which took place in Egypt and at Sinai with what took place in the Temple 500 years afterwards—we would only ask, if blood means death, as stated before, why is all allusion to death here omitted? If "death and blood mean the same thing," why should we substitute for "our sins are washed away by the blood of Christ," "our sins are washed away by Christ," and not "by the death of Christ"? This at least would be consistent with the explanation given before; but we fear that Mr. Beecher, in trying to get rid of the word "blood" by substituting "death" for it, really aims at getting rid of the idea of death altogether. Does not the passage just quoted show this?

And if it did not, what follows only too clearly proves that it is the old Unitarian view of pardon without blood-shedding that Mr. Beecher is endeavouring to maintain:—

"We are educated to talk of our sins being washed away by the blood of Christ. Did you ever see a drop of blood applied to any human being for such a purpose? It is foreign to every custom and to every religious notion of our race; and yet, after a thousand years, we continue to lug in that worn-out symbol, and thus confuse and perplex the simplicity of the New Testament idea—namely, that God forgives sin by the sweetness of his own nature. He forgives your sin as the father forgives the sin of the son, or as the mother forgives the sin of the daughter; and having been once interpreted to the ancients through forms and symbols, you may drop the forms and symbols, and take the thing itself."

Now at length we find the undisguised repudiation of that foundation-truth of Christianity—"without shedding of blood is no remission." We feel almost that an apology is due to our readers for the pain which the above extracts must cause every rightly-constituted Christian mind, containing as they do so melancholy an exhibition of the hostility of the natural mind to God's truth. But it is well that Christians should be put on their guard as to the real enmity to Christ's great work of atonement contained in the writings of men who are accounted Christian teachers, and whose names are idolized on account of their flippant wit and versatile talent. It is well, too, that the carping criticism so freely lavished upon the late work of evangelization in London should be traced to its true source. The doctrine of the blood so faithfully preached by Mr. Moody is that which has given such offence, and called forth such unseemly language as we regret to see that the Christian World indulges in when, in introducing this extract from Mr. Beecher, it says:—

"At a time when there is so much mere ignorant shouting of 'Blood! Blood!' by uncultured preachers, quite after the manner of the old Druids—but without their excuse,—it is necessary to be ever advising people to at least consider what they mean by the use of the words they utter."

It is, indeed, most necessary to consider well what words used in connexion with so solemn a subject mean, and God has in this matter not left himself without a witness. On the very day that the Christian World published this attack—for it is virtually such,—upon the doctrine of the Atonement; God's ancient people, the Jews, scattered throughout the world, commenced at sunset a solemn fast of twenty-four hours, in obedience to a command issued at Sinai more than 3000 years ago. "On that day . . . ye shall afflict your souls by a statute for ever" (Lev. xvi. 31). Marvellous testimony in this sceptical age, not only to the truth of Scripture, but to the importance attached in Scripture to that great truth which "the tenth day of the seventh month" was intended to proclaim! "It is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the Lord your God" (Lev. xxiii. 28). "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. xvii. 11). All who accept the teaching of God's word in Lev. xvi. must unhesitatingly reject that of Mr. Beecher and the Christian World.

"CHINA'S MILLIONS."

THIS new monthly, conducted by our devoted brother Mr. Hudson Taylor, continues to give deeply interesting accounts of the mission work in China—especially important at the present time, when the political horizon of that land seems dark and foreboding. In the October number there is a paper by Mr. Henry Taylor, on "Pioneer Work in Ho-nan," a portion of which we quote, as showing a marvellous state of preparedness among the Chinese for Gospel teaching:—

"At noon we crossed the boundary into Ho-nan, it being the ninth day of our journey. Preached at several places next day, and sold many books. We walked about twenty-five miles over bad roads, and under a burning sun, so that we felt quite worn out on reaching our resting-place for the night. We came to an old temple in a dilapidated state. Inside, on the floor, were heaps of rubbish, among which were the remains of idols, some without heads, arms, &c. Oh! how ridiculously sad it all looked!

"On coming to the town, distant about two hundred yards, Mr. Chang drew a crowd around him, and told them with affectionate earnestness of the folly and wickedness of worshipping such things as those in the temple outside. The people made no attempt to justify themselves. One would think, from the light way in which they speak of the idols, that they had not a vestige of faith in them.

"Next day preached at one town, and reached a county city in the afternoon, forty-eight miles from our destination. We wished to spend a day at this city, but our barrow-men objected, for, not being paid by the day, they were desirous of getting to their journey's end as soon as possible. We made it a matter of prayer: the Lord heard, and sent rain; so that the coolies could not move till the roads became hard. Where the Lord's guidance is plain, his blessing may be expected. It soon became known that we had come, and the people crowded in to see me. In answer to prayer, God gave them the hearing ear; they listened till we were tired of speaking, with more attention, I think, than I have seen manifested at any other place. God moved our hearts, and theirs seemed under the same influence; we saw the tears rolling down the faces of some, and imperfect utterance did not interfere with the effect of God's Word. We spoke to them till it was quite dark, and then dismissed them for the night, for some of them were loth to go away.

"After breakfast the next morning they crowded in again, till the shed where we were was filled. The landlord objected to so many coming upon his premises, so we thought it best to go to some empty space outside. When once outside, our congregation swelled to several hundreds; we spoke till almost exhausted, and then began to sell our books. We emptied our bag in a few minutes, and twice again filled and emptied it; the only disturbance we had was the little they made to get near to buy books. The crowd must have jostled us sorely, had we not taken the precaution, before beginning to speak, to place our backs against the wall. We had at last to refuse to sell any more books; so we returned to our 'hotel,' followed by some still wanting to purchase. The remaining part of the day we stayed indoors, speaking to those who came. We had an opportunity of speaking individually to them, as our host sternly refused to admit more than a few at once. Thus ended the day's work—precious work, leading our own souls nearer to Him whose name we had sought to make known—not, we believe, without success."

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS.—For a week or two past Union religious services have been held at the Opera House, Saint Paul, Minnesota. Large congregations have been present. Messrs. Whittle and Bliss are now assisting.

GREAT EVANGELISTIC CONVENTION IN GLASGOW.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE most important religious meeting since Messrs. Moody and Sankey left Scotland, thirteen months ago, was held last Thursday in Glasgow. During that long interval the revival movement has been slowly but steadily making its way throughout Scotland, and it was felt by the projectors of the Glasgow Convention that a central meeting for the purpose of calling attention to this result, and discussing the best methods of extending it still further, would give fresh impulse and encouragement to every department of the work.

The Glasgow Committee—Mr. Moody's invaluable legacy to the city—made all the arrangements, and secured the spacious Crystal Palace in the Botanic Gardens—not, however, without considerable misgivings as to whether they could draw an audience large enough to fill it. It must have been peculiarly gratifying, therefore, when, on Thursday morning, they found the crowds of ministers, office-bearers, Sabbath-school teachers, workers, and Christians generally, coming in such numbers that, in spite of torrents of rain, thousands had to be turned away. There was certainly nothing very remarkable on the programme to account for such a result, and there could be no more splendid proof of the great and abiding interest in the truest forms of evangelicism throughout Scotland, than the almost unexpected success of last Thursday.

The Glasgow Kibble Palace is perhaps the most picturesque meeting-place in Britain. After the great rough halls at Bow and Camberwell, or the covered sheds at Birmingham or Liverpool, or even the really fine interior of the Dublin Exhibition, the perfect symmetry and beauty of the great crystal Rotunda in the quiet grounds of the Botanic Garden are at once refreshing and unique. In the centre of the structure there lies a pond of clear water, with a little island in the midst, all covered with lovely plants, which are grouped in circles round a tall and graceful palm. Round this pond, just outside the fringe of green fern, the seats were arranged in rows, reaching to the back of the building, while one side was occupied by a large platform. Around the platform, and all throughout the audience, were scattered most exquisite specimens of palms, acacias and other rare exotics, which added wonderful freshness and beauty to the scene. In such circumstances, the singing and the silent prayer were particularly striking; on one occasion especially, when the hushed stillness of the latter was broken by the wonderful strains of "Steal away to Jesus," rendered with the exquisite pathos which the Jubilee Singers alone can throw into the simple chords of this angelic melody. Indeed, the singing throughout the day was a special feature of the Convention, the Glasgow choir being well known for its splendid efficiency; and the Jubilee Singers, coming forward most kindly, added much to the interest of the gathering.

The Convention was opened at eleven o'clock, and closed at four, the evening being devoted to evangelistic addresses. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Dr. Andrew Bonar, Dr. Alex. Wallace, Dr. Marshall Lang, Rev. Professor Douglas, Dr. George Jeffrey, Dr. R. T. Jeffrey, Rev. W. Taylor, Rev. A. N. Somerville, Mr. James Scott, &c., Glasgow; Mr. Reginald Badcliffe, Liverpool; Mr. George Müller, Bristol; Dr. Macarthy and Rev. Mr. Inwood, Dublin; Rev. Frank White, London; Rev. James Robertson, Rev. W. Fraser, Rev. W. Cullen, and Mr. McLaren, Edinburgh; Rev. J. M. Sloan and Major Ross, Aberdeen; &c.

Any report of the various addresses would, from want of space, be much too condensed to be interesting, but a sentence or two to indicate the leading lines along which the various discussions ran may not be out of place.

The first hour was devoted to the question "Daily union prayer-meetings—their importance to the movement; practical suggestions as to their formation and efficiency." From want of time the discussion was meagre, but some useful hints, especially in Dr. Lang's opening speech, came to the surface. The ordinary union prayer-meeting occupied the second hour, the prominent feature of which was an address full of ripe experience on "The power of the Spirit," by Mr. George Müller.

For the next two hours the Convention was occupied with Mr. Moody's watchword, "Advance!" or, first, "What more can be done unitedly to carry the Gospel to the destitute at home?" secondly, "Can any united effort be made to advance the Kingdom of Christ in other lands?" This was the central subject of concern to the majority of those who were really interested in the Convention. It was opened with an earnest address from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who has probably seen more real evangelistic work than most men of his time. He was followed by a number of five-minute addresses, which were for the most part interesting, but wanted connexion with the general subject. In fact, to one who was looking for definite results, the general impression of these two hours must have been a little disappointing. In the circumstances this was probably unavoidable; but to have given a real impetus to evangelistic work throughout Scotland, during this coming winter the committee would probably have required to have devoted the entire five hours of the Conference to this most important practical question: As it was, very little real headway was made, although particular points of considerable interest were frequently urged with freshness and ability. The Rev. A. N. Somerville (to whom, and to Mr. James Scott, the Committee of Arrangements owe so much) had the last hour all to himself, which he occupied with one of his powerful and fervid addresses on the twofold subject of "Holiness" and "Christian Unity."

In the evening Dr. McOrthy, Rev. J. Robertson, Rev. Mr. Sibon, Mr. James Scott, Mr. Frank White, and others, delivered evangelistic addresses to an immense audience.

AMONG THE SWISS CHILDREN.

MR. HENRY HILL, jun., sends us an interesting sketch of children's services held by him in various parts of Switzerland during a recent holiday tour there, from which we can only make the following extract:—

"Herr Daendliker is the director of a large institution for deaconesses, which stands on the Blumenberg (flower mountain)—an appropriate name, for it is a lovely spot. It is in the midst of extensive gardens, overlooks the river and the grand old city (Berne), while in the distance are the mighty Alps with their everlasting snows, forming the background of the picture. The deaconesses are here trained, and then sent out as nurses to the hospitals throughout Switzerland and elsewhere.

"Here Mrs. Daendliker carries on a Sunday-school for girls dwelling in the surrounding country district. These scholars were brought into the room. There were about thirty; most of them in their teens. They were poorly dressed, and their suburban features and general appearance clearly indicated that theirs is no easy life. Their hours are probably mostly occupied in hard labour in the fields. They sang very nicely a long piece about the lost sheep, and I then said a few words, which Herr Daendliker interpreted. I remained the rest of the day, and further religious exercises closed one of the most interesting and happiest Sabbaths of my life.

"The next day, when I arrived at the hall a little before the time for commencing, I found numbers of boys and girls, many of them just come from school, making their way in. Already several hundreds were seated, and still they kept pouring in, until eventually there must have been an audience of 900 or 1000. We had several hymns; and I sang in English 'If I come to Jesus,' some ladies joining in the chorus, and each verse being translated before being sung. We read those beautiful verses Mark x. 13-16, which form the blessed and imperishable charter for our work amongst the dear children everywhere. I took as the subject of the address 'The great salvation,' and Herr Daendliker interpreted. The behaviour of the children was first-rate. Notwithstanding the tedium caused by the continual breaks in what they were listening to, and the interposition of what was to them gibberish, there was the most pleasing and marked attention, and I would fain hope that impressions were made by the good Spirit which will result in eternal fruit. Probably there never had been such a gathering for such a service in that city before. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray earnestly for the children of Switzerland and Germany and France? Oh, if these were won for Christ, what different nations they would be!"

THE OPEN-AIR SERVICES, HYDE-PARK, in connexion with Hyde-park Hall, were brought to a close on the 26th ult. The numbers gathered and the interest evinced throughout the summer have been most encouraging. Streams of people—sometimes as many as 200—have followed the preachers to the Hall, where many decided for Christ, while others were written to, some replying to the effect that they had found Christ. Last night a tea-meeting, for the purpose of gathering together the young converts, was held in the Hall, followed by a service of thanksgiving and praise, when several stood up and testified to the good they had received through the open-air preaching. One of these, a young lady trained for the stage, was about to fulfil an engagement in the provinces. This she gave up for Christ.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN SWANSEA.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

At the beginning of 1874, the ministers of all denominations called upon the Christian people of Swansea to assemble every evening for a week in the Music Hall (a large building capable of holding about 3000) to plead with God for the salvation of the town. Although it happened simultaneously with the general election, the Hall was crowded almost every night, the services being marked by great solemnity and deep earnestness. A mid-day prayer-meeting was started and has been carried on ever since. In October, 1874, a nine days' mission was held with glorious results.

In June last a series of services for young men were organized, in connexion with the Y.M.C. Association, the ministers in the town heartily co-operating. At the end of July, it was arranged to hold capable of holding 1000 persons. The services of several gentlemen who had taken part in Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services in London and Liverpool were desired, but could not be obtained, and application was therefore made to the Evangelization Society. Mr. Cleworth, one of their evangelists, opened the services at the tent on Aug. 18, which was erected in one of the poorest districts (Swan-street, High-street). Since then it has been thronged every night, with the exception of Saturdays and on some evenings when the weather was particularly unfavourable; and the number of anxious inquirers has been continually increasing. On the first Sunday about 1500 persons assembled in the afternoon, and nearly 2000 in the evening, to hear the Gospel; and it was necessary to throw open the side curtains of the tent in order that the crowds outside might be able to join in the services. On succeeding Sundays we have had even larger congregations.

Districts were previously apportioned off to several of the young men, who went out two by two and made a house-to-house visitation with handbills and invitation slips, containing appropriate texts, urging the people to come to the meetings. This system has been adopted in all parts of the town where the tent has been stationed, and several thousands of these slips have also been circulated broadcast.

On Aug. 30 the tent was removed to a district called St. Thomas, where had been working earnestly for years. A few months ago, services were commenced during the dinner-hour, at a railway-waggon manufactory in the neighbourhood, for the benefit of the workmen, numbering about 400. These have since been carried on regularly once or twice a week, with marked success. About the same time, evangelistic meetings were started in this district, and resulted in great blessing. When the tent arrived here the place was ripe for the harvest, and there was a glorious ingathering of souls, even greater than at Swan-street.

On Sept. 9 the tent was again removed to a locality called the Sandfields, which more than any other seemed to be hardened against the Gospel message. Here the tent remained until Sept. 25; and the power of God's Holy Spirit was never more manifested than in the number of souls that found Christ here. The blessing exceeded even that at St. Thomas.

A MEETING FOR CHILDREN

has been held in each of the above districts, and at every successive meeting the attendance was larger than before. At the Sandfields about 1500 assembled to hear the words of life. A wonderful work has been going on amongst the young during these mission services. A meeting for young converts was held on Thursday, the 23rd ult., admission being by ticket. There were about 800 people present, of whom perhaps 200 were older Christians interested in the work, the remainder being the fruits of the late mission.

Simultaneously with the removal of the tent from Swan-street to St. Thomas, a mission hall, capable of holding 400, at Greenhill, in the neighbourhood of the former site, was opened, and services have been held there every evening, excepting Saturdays, up to Sept. 27. The results of these meetings have been very encouraging, and great blessing has attended them. The services here were suspended temporarily in consequence of the removal of the tent to another district not far from the hall. At the same time, a gentleman, who is taking a leading part in the work, opened a mission room, capable of seating about 250, specially for the benefit of his workmen. Many souls have also found Christ at the services held here.

On Sept. 29 the tent was erected in a district called "Hafod," where there are hardly any English places of worship, although a considerable portion of the population do not understand Welsh; and at no other place have we had such great blessing. The tent will remain here as long as the weather permits, and we look forward to greater things every night.

MID-DAY PRAYER-MEETINGS

have been held every day excepting during the removal of the tent, and have proved seasons of much refreshing to the Lord's people, and strengthened the workers for their evening duties. Sunday morning meetings for prayer and praise have been held every Sunday at eight o'clock, and have been glorious times for the Lord's people. The attendance increased from 250 to about 600. On Sept. 26 we had a special meeting for praise, and numbers rose in response to Mr. Cleworth's invitation to return thanks for the great salvation they had received.

The most remarkable manifestation of God's power during this mission is that amongst the workmen at the largest steel works in the neighbourhood. One of these men attended a service at the tent whilst it was in St. Thomas, and found the Saviour there. He went away full of the love of Christ, and afterwards brought with him several of his fellows. They had to pass over a toll-bridge in order to get to the meeting, and he paid their tolls, and supplied them with hymn-books at his own expense. Several more were led to Christ, and, through the new converts continually bringing their friends and companions to the tent, the work has spread so rapidly, that the proprietors and managers have already been struck with the marked improvement in the conduct of their men. Those who had received blessing immediately took steps to institute a mid-day prayer-meeting in the works, and at their earnest request the owners placed at their disposal a room where they might hold their meetings. They also took the first opportunity of soliciting Mr. Cleworth to give them an address at the dinner-hour. This he has done two or three times, each service being accompanied with great blessing. The workmen in other works are now urging him to do the same for them, and the good news is spreading far and wide.

[A list of striking cases of conversion in connexion with the mission follows here, which, we regret, the exigencies of space prevent us from quoting.]

One of the most remarkable features of the work is the large number of cases in which two, three, or more in the same household have received salvation. A great many requests for prayer and praise are also being sent in daily. Frederick Monk and John Waite (late working men, and now evangelists), and a local member of the Evangelization Society, have assisted Mr. Cleworth in his work by conducting the Mission-Hall services, and occasionally relieving him at the tent. We would earnestly request all Christian people to join with us in praise to God for his great mercy towards us, and in prayer that far greater things may be in store for us.

All our meetings, from the commencement of the work, have been superintended by the Evangelization Society, and carried on in accordance with their rules. Salvation through Jesus Christ, and this only, has been offered to the people; and we can confidently assure all who may apply to this Society, that they will receive every assistance they require, and that of the most efficient character.

Swansea.

THE REV. J. DENHAM SMITH writes:—"I have been having a happy time on the Continent, preaching at Montreux, Lausanne, and other places. Especially was there much blessing at Lausanne. At Paris I preached to large congregations both English and French." Mr. Smith is preaching on the Lord's-day evenings of this month at St. George's Hall at seven, the hour at which Mr. Voysey formerly occupied that building. Next month Mr. Smith preaches on the Lord's-day evenings at Upper Clapton.

CARD-PLAYING.—I feel it is high time a voice was raised against this pernicious habit. The so frequent use of cards at present in many family circles of the Lord's people, and their introduction into others under guise of other names for the amusement of the young, is a most serious matter. Can any parents who are praying and waiting for the conversion of their children consistently expect an answer when they place in the hands of their children that which has been and still is a snare and ruin to thousands? Let those of His children whom it concerns destroy the accursed thing from their midst, as it assuredly hinders much blessing.

GOOD CHEER FROM JAMAICA.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—I think the accompanying extract from a letter received from one of our students, now labouring for the Lord in Jamaica, will interest your readers.

The writer, who was working in a tailor's shop when I first met him, left us sooner than he would otherwise have done, because his lungs became delicate, and his immediate removal to a warmer climate was deemed desirable. He was recognized soon after his arrival as co-pastor of the veteran minister the Rev. J. Clarke, of Browne's Town, who has several stations and chapels under his care, and who is now laid aside from active duty.

"Bethany, Alexandra Post-office, Jamaica, Sept. 4, 1875.

"Dear Mr. Guinness,—I have some bad, and some good news to give you. The bad is that my health is a little shaky again; but I think I have myself to blame. I have rather too much work just now (Mr. Clarke being laid aside): three large stations fall to my share; yet having made an engagement to preach for a brother (now in England for his health) at a place called Salmouth, where is the largest chapel in the island, I rode all the way, twenty-eight miles, under a vertical sun in the hottest part of the day, which brought on a headache. The same week, while out on a tour, I rode 125 miles, and preached ten times. Bless the Lord, souls were saved, but I have not felt well since. Many decided for Christ; the meetings were crowded.

"At Browne's Town, also, God is working. I baptized a large number of men and women in the sea last week, sixteen of whom profess to have been converted through the message the Lord was pleased to give me. I mention this to his glory. Were I a Jewish rabbi or a philosopher, it might be said, 'What hath this man wrought!' but when it is a youth of uncircumcised lips, the least of all his servants, we can only say, 'The Lord hath done great things for us.' The rest I baptized for Mr. Clarke. There were about 5000 persons present to witness the ordinance, which took place at six o'clock in the morning. Many came from a distance of thirty miles, walking all the way, so that they were going down in flocks the previous day, so as to rest over night, and be fresh in the morning to start for home.

"I was about to retire to rest about ten the previous evening, when an uneasy feeling came over me, and I felt as if I ought to go down to the place where the baptism was to be at dawn. So I got my horse, and started in the darkness, for there was no moon, for the spot, which was about ten miles distant. I found 3000 people assembled, and the devil had been beforehand with me, for a rum-shop was already set up on the ground, and fiddler and tambourines were going. A band of Christians were singing and playing, but the fiddler and dancers had the best success. The rum was being sold right and left, and, as it went round, of course the more like beasts they became. Lifting up my heart to God for direction and guidance in all this confusion and noise, I dismounted, gave the reins to a young man standing by, and went into the dancing-booth and rum-shop. The dancers were just about to commence a new reel, when I stepped right into the centre of the ring, and, with no other carnal weapon than my riding-whip, I dared the musicians to strike another note. They did not!

"I then began, and spoke to them a few solemn words, when first the fiddlers then the dancers made their way out, one by one, until I was left all but alone in the centre of the ring formed for the dance. I then went to the man who was selling the rum, and spoke to him in the same manner about the reckoning-day. He listened awhile, and then sat upon the counter with his back to me. Having finished my address to him, I cleared the people from the rum-shop out before me to a man. Mounting a high wall, with a lantern in my hand, I began to sing; soon a crowd quite as large as my voice could reach gathered round me. Having prayed, I spoke for about half an hour, then made them sing a well-known hymn; asked some one to pray; spoke again; sang, prayed, spoke again, sang and prayed—for about three hours, and then came down from the wall to rest.

"It was a blessed midnight; not one went back to the dance, and only new comers went to the rum-shop. 'Twas a glorious time! I only wished some of the dear brethren from Stepney were there to help me. I spoke and sang until I could only speak in a whisper, and still the people stood. . . . Oh, for a brother in the ministry with a kindred spirit to my own! But I cry in vain. Never until now did I know what it is to stand alone for the defence of God's glory without the support of Christian fellowship; but I know something of it now, having no one but Jesus to go to with my burdens, my cares, my griefs, my need. But it is sweet—sweet indeed. God's Word is to me another book since I was converted. I dearly loved my Bible, but now it has become like a part of myself—I cannot do without it.

"I am not living at Browne's Town now; the sister church, Bethany, is now under my charge. I think I have told you about it. The chapel is seated for about one thousand. There is also a nice mission-house, where I am living all alone. . . . Although Bethany is under my charge, I still assist Mr. Clarke at Browne's Town and Stirge Town. Browne's Town is eight miles off, Stirge Town eighteen miles: all this I have to accomplish on horseback. This is what tries me most—the long rides under a scorching sun. I am very anxious to get some sort of a spring-cart or gig, but have no money. I do not know another missionary who has not a conveyance, but I am contented to wait until the Lord sees I need it, then I'll have it direct.

"Thank you, dear sir, so much for the kind present of hymn-books and New Testaments you have sent me. I have not yet received them, but expect them soon. Many a 'Lord bless de dear Buckra!' (white man) came from my people when I told them of it. I am longing for the hymn-books, as I have at present a singing-class every fortnight at Browne's Town numbering three hundred. I am teaching them the Tonic Sol-fa notation by writing out the notes of Sankey's hymns upon the black board, so that they have learned the tunes of most of the hymns and their first verses, but they have no books, so that the box you have so kindly sent will be hailed with loud cheers without a doubt.

"I delivered your message of Christian love at all the three stations, and I assure you many a fine set of ivories were shown when I told them of your work and its purpose, and who it was that was thus interested in them. Some said—'Tell de dear Buckra fo come see we'; others said—'Tell him de black man will pray for Mr. Guinness and his young men'; others said—'Oh! do tell him send ministers to de poo faderland' (Africa), &c., &c. Poor creatures! within the past eight months it has been hard times with them, and, until the coffee comes in in March, it will be little better, owing to a terrible hurricane that swept through the island in November, 1874, breaking all their plants, on the fruit of which they depended for support. I have seen at least four die of sheer starvation. I shared with them my last shilling, but as the missionary in this country (among the Baptists, at least) depends, not on a society, but on the liberality of the people, we have also suffered by the hurricane, and have not been able to help the needy as we would gladly have done. Never a day passes without some poor thing coming to the door and saying, 'Oh my, Massa, fe me eat notting a day, I beg you for a tup' (1½d.). I could spend £50 in cornmeal and flour to-morrow, and then not be able to alleviate half the distress I know of. May the Lord move those whose coffers are heaped up and overflowing to help in this matter.

"But I must bring my long letter to a close. Much Christian love to all the brethren, known and unknown. Tell them to make the best of the time they have given to them under able tutors, or they will repent it all their lives! O that I had that precious season to go over again! No one should have to reproach me for negligence! May the Lord reward you a thousandfold, dear Sir, for all you have done for me! From my inmost soul I thank you! May your work, as you widen its borders, increase in spiritual power. Pray for me, the least of all, but, by the grace of God,

"Yours ever in our Risen Lord, J. JOHNSTONE."

We have also tidings from Mr. Adams, in Burmah, whose health is already suffering from the hot climate, and who asks our prayers. We have received into the Institute, within the last few weeks, two young brethren from Brazil, commended to us by Dr. Kalley (formerly of Madoira). They speak Portuguese and wish to labour in Brazil, where, as your readers will be glad to hear, a wide and effectual door is at present open for the Gospel, and where labourers are greatly needed. We have also received two Italians, who will, we trust, become valuable evangelists in Italy. I hope next week to report progress about the Nestorians, and in the meantime heartily thank your readers for help kindly sent towards their expenses.

I would also ask their prayers that a great and sanctifying blessing may rest on the students of this Institute, now re-assembling after their summer vacation. The success which has crowned the evangelistic efforts of many of them, during the holidays, has caused through us thanksgiving to God. In many towns and villages in Norfolk, Lincoln, Hertford, Essex, and Cumberland, as well as in Scotland and Ireland, young converts are now rejoicing in Christ, who have been gathered in through God's blessing upon their labours.—Believe me, dear brother, faithfully yours in Christ,

H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

HOME OF INDUSTRY, SPITALFIELDS.

DEAR FELLOW-WORKERS,—Our work among children becomes more and more necessary as drunkenness increases. The Education Act has put away the necessity of our being match-box manufacturers, giving us thereby time to work out the question of the day, "What is to be done with our elder girls?" Our family of rescued little ones is day by day increasing; we have already to provide clothing and food for eighty-five daily. The Scripture-seed is being sown, and we believe many a nimble finger, at the bidding of a warm heart, is now busily preparing the outfits for the one-thousand we hope to help when the bright spring days come.

At family altars please remember the loving women who go forth to make bright the hospitals, workhouses, and almshouses with their songs and gentle words, and bright flowers with the precious texts attached.

We hear the cheering sounds from many quarters that fruit for the twenty Christmas-trees will not be wanting.

Our widows are again at work, re-making old clothing. Will the wealthy Scotch manufacturers remember and send their toiling countrywoman among the millions a few bales of material, or sacks of oatmeal; for it is heart-breaking to see widows in want, ekeing out a threepence to buy a halfpenny-worth of sugar, a halfpennyworth of tea, a pennyworth of bread, and one penny for the firing—making several meals even from that hard-earned sum. With gratitude we record that we have no debt, and £117 towards the payment of the present month's bills in connexion with the six homes.

With these facts before us, and leaning upon the arm which never has, and never will fail us, we would press on, realizing more than ever the shortness of time, the worth of souls, and the power of a crucified and risen Lord to prepare hearts for his precious seed, which, with his blessing, we will scatter broadcast, trusting to his promise that it shall not return unto Him void. May He who knows the worth of the immortal soul (because He paid its price) enable each one of us to realize how great it must be when it cost the Son of God his life, and that we have each one something to do for Him. To one He has given five talents, to another two, to another one. Hide them not! He will come and reckon with us! Shall we, then, allow the dust of earth to gather over the treasure committed to us, or shall we use it for his glory, and even now enter into his joy, over souls rescued from sin and misery, over little feet which we have helped to move from the mouth of the terrible pit, and at last rejoice with Him over a harvest of precious souls, who with us shall stand in his presence for ever?

Yours, in his blessed service, ANNIE MACPHERSON.

A CAUTION.—Last week, thinking to help one of our Master's "little ones," I took home a young man who appeared to be in a very distressed condition, professing to be a converted Jew. He borrowed money of a friend, and robbed myself. He gave the name of Silver, and appeared to know the following languages:—Hebrew German, Dutch, and Swede.

THE LATE REV. T. RYDER.—We hear with much regret of the death of Mr. Ryder, late of Nottingham. His demise took place in America, where he had recently gone in search of health, and whence he was on the point of returning to resume his pastorate. He took a deep interest in religious and temperance questions, and our readers may recollect that his musical skill was brought into happy requisition at the meetings of the Brighton Conference. He wrote a hymn on the sixth of Romans, which appeared in our issue of June 17 last.

REV. W. B. CULLISS has been engaged in evangelistic work in Worcester and in Birmingham. Mr. Culliss, besides being an eloquent and powerful preacher, also possesses the advantage of being endowed with vocal and musical powers of no ordinary kind, which, with wonderful tact and skill, he brings into the service of the Gospel. The number of anxious inquirers at the after-meetings in Gloucester was considerable, and not a few professed to have found the Lord. From Worcester Mr. Culliss went to Birmingham, where he still continues to labour with remarkable success. We understand it is his intention to go next to Wolverhampton, where ministers of different denominations are preparing to receive and to co-operate with him in the work. After that he is expected at Stafford, where the large Market Hall has been secured for his services. Will our readers remember this dear brother and earnest fellow-labourer in their prayers?

INCIDENTS OF THE REVIVAL.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Messenger and Missionary Record for October, writing of work in the inquiry-room during the recent revival movement, gives the following cases:—"The number of those I met with in the inquiry-rooms, who appeared to decide for Christ, was, I think, ninety-three; but some of these I have seen much less of than I should have liked to do.

"At the Haymarket we were much interested in some of those who came to the special services for the women engaged in shops, &c. One of these seemed much impressed during Mr. Moody's address, but quite refused to go to the inquiry-room, saying, 'I will never consent to go in there.' She at length consented to remain seated where she was for a little, and before she left, though not very bright, seemed to decide. Just two days later a message was left at our lodgings that a lady and her friend wished me to meet them that night in the inquiry-room. On going there, I was astonished to find that it was the very same person who had before refused to enter it. I should scarcely have known her, she seemed so full of joy, as she said, 'Christ has made me so happy ever since I trusted Him.' I found that she had never rested till she got her companion to come too, and her words seemed to be the means of leading that companion to Jesus. Just the other day I accidentally entered the shop to which they belong, and this second girl at once came up to remind me where we had met, and spoke out quite fearlessly before all the others there. Another girl we know, who was converted at the Opera-house meetings, has since been the means of bringing both her father and sister to Christ. They told her they could keep away no longer when they saw how happy she was in believing.

"At Bow, one young girl, though otherwise rejoicing, was in great trouble as to how she could venture to tell of her conversion to her mother, who was often very violent, especially when not quite sober. That very night, however, she did speak out, and even got her mother's promise to come to the next meeting. There the mother accordingly went, and the same night a talk with Mr. Sankey seemed the means of turning her, and since then she and her daughter have been going on most happily together.

"At Camberwell, one young lady, of whom we saw a good deal, had come from a long distance on purpose to seek a blessing at the meetings. Days passed on, and she only seemed more and more despairing. She had hoped, she said, 'to hear some new way of being saved, and, after all, it was just the same texts she had always heard.' The last night of her stay came, and, to her, all seemed so hopeless that she would scarcely go to the inquiry-room again; but there she met a lady whom she had never seen before, and who then and there was the means of bringing her to the light; so that she did go home rejoicing. We have since had a letter from her, in which she says she dare not look at feelings, but she rests on that word: 'This Man receiveth sinners.'

"Another case was specially interesting to me, as being connected with my own. A lady came up to me one night at the Opera-house, and, reminding me that she and I had both been among the group of inquirers whom Mr. Moody had talked with some weeks before in the Islington inquiry-room on Easter Sunday, she said, 'You looked so miserable then, and you seem quite happy now; will you tell me what has made the change?' I was so glad I could tell her that it was just trusting Christ. I went to see her at her house next day; and, while we were talking, her face suddenly lighted up, and she exclaimed, 'How stupid I have been! I see it now. I have been trying all this time to make myself better instead of taking Christ and coming to Him just as I am.' She added, 'I have been so miserable, and my husband has often told me I was just Moody-mad. Now I long for him to come in that I may tell him I have got Christ.' Last week I saw her again, and she seemed as joyful as ever, and said, 'I have no doubts or fears; how could I, now that I know it's all Christ, and nothing at all of me.'"

BOULOGNE.—During a recent visit to Boulogne I was enabled, by God's help, to hold some religious services at the French Protestant Church, kindly placed at my disposal by the Pasteur Monsieur Perrier. These meetings were entirely evangelistic in their character—a branch of the Lord's work totally new in Boulogne, but heartily responded to by Christians of various denominations. The meetings were held for eleven days without intermission, the attendances on each evening being very encouraging, and the interest evinced very great. Many testified to the wonderful blessing the meetings had been to them. To God be all the praise.

MAJOR COLE AT YORK.

"PRAISE, O ye servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord" should be the burden of our song on reviewing the Lord's dealings amongst us in connexion with Major Cole's last week of meetings in this city.

Last Sunday a good number of Christians assembled at 7.30 a.m. and spent a happy hour, when Major Cole gave a short Bible-reading on "Separation," and also devoted part of the time to personal testimonies for Christians, in which many of the audience took part. The afternoon and evening congregations were the largest we have seen in the Exchange, the standing space being fully occupied. Major Cole spoke with much fervour and power, and we believe very many were pricked to the heart; some we know went away rejoicing in the Saviour. Up to Sunday evening, as many Christians had attended the meetings, we asked the Lord to send more of the unconverted. On and after Monday evening the audiences have consisted mainly of the hard-handed sons and daughters of toil residing in the back parts of the city, very many of whom we have seen vainly endeavouring to restrain their feelings produced by the impressions wrought in their hearts by the Holy Spirit through the words spoken. On Wednesday evening especially the power of the Lord was made manifest in the conviction of many persons, a goodly number of whom stayed behind to be conversed with.

Last night (Friday) the hall was quite full, and a feeling of solemnity pervaded the service as Major Cole pleaded with the unconverted, urging them to accept Christ. Many lingered behind at the close to say a few parting words to these friends, who have endeared themselves to many hearts. It has been our joy to point numbers to the Lamb of God in the inquiry-meetings, but we are persuaded that a still greater number have quietly (without saying anything to others present) received the truth, and the truth has made them free. A soldier from Chicago came to one of the meetings, and before he left enlisted under the banner of Christ. Several of the servants in the family where Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole were welcomed as guests during their stay here, have been led to Christ. One of these had indignantly left one of the meetings because she was asked at the door if she was a Christian, and said she would not come to the meetings again. The other day, however, Major Cole—being asked to speak to her in the house—first prayed the Lord to open the way, and afterwards went out of the room and found her standing near the stairs, earnestly desiring to know Jesus, whom she at once received. An old woman, seventy-seven years of age, trusted in Christ on Thursday night.

Major Cole was blessed in speaking to the operatives employed at the railway works during their dinner-hour last Tuesday. On Thursday, before coming to the meeting in the Corn Exchange, he gave an address at the barracks, where the 1st (Royal) Dragoon Guards are stationed, from Matt. xxvii. 27, and following verses—"The soldiers of the governor took Jesus," &c.—showing that it was their sins that crucified the Son of God. Nearly all showed their desire to become Christ's, and all consented to join the Bible-class commenced at the barracks. The noon prayer-meetings have continued to be most blessed and helpful occasions; many have gladly taken packets of tickets for the evening service (with passages of Scripture printed at the back) as they have left the meeting, and given them to unconverted people during the afternoon. A few brethren formed a praying-band each evening in a side room of the Exchange whilst Major Cole was addressing the congregation in the large hall.

The Committee propose (p.v.) to set apart Monday evening in each week, commencing in November, for holding a united evangelistic service. May I ask the Lord's children still to pray for blessing upon York?

G. BENNETT.

Y.M.C.A., York, Oct. 16.

OPEN-AIR MISSIONING IN ST. GILES'S.—During the summer, open-air services have been regularly held in the very heart of St. Giles's, under the conduct of Mr. W. Harrison. Thousands of the poor inhabitants of the district have thereby heard the Gospel who would under no circumstances have entered any house of prayer. These services were brought to a close last Sunday week, and it was pleasant to learn from Mr. Harrison's closing statement that no interruption had occurred during the season, but that at every meeting the preachers were listened to with attention and respect. The work during the winter will be carried on in the hall in the Five Dials, where all seats are free and every inducement is offered to win the class whom the mission is intended to benefit.

ENGLAND'S DAUGHTERS FOR INDIA'S NEED.

On the day when the Prince of Wales left our shores to pay his state visit to our Indian Empire (Oct. 11), an unpretending ceremony took place at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, which may be fraught with more important issues to that far-famed land, though neither heralded by trumpets nor chronicled by the daily press. This event was the leave-taking of nine English ladies who have given themselves to mission work in connexion with the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. The meeting was announced to be held in Room No. 6, but the numbers pressing for admittance necessitated an adjournment to the large hall, where, at half-past three, the Rev. D. B. Hankin, who presided, called for silent prayer, and then announced a hymn which had been composed for the occasion. He then read from John xii. the incident of the Greeks who desired to see Jesus; dwelling upon the declaration of our Lord, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me," which, he said, revealed the motive power for Christian work and its success. He then spoke of India's need, alluded to the visit of the Prince of Wales, and rejoiced that brighter days were dawning on that country. The Rev. Joseph Fenn, of Blackheath, one of whose flock was among the nine, offered prayer.

The valedictory address to the ladies (who occupied one of the front seats) was delivered by the Rev. H. C. Milward, Vicar of St. Clement's, Neshells, Birmingham. He reminded them of the wonderful privilege they would have in carrying the bread of life to some of the fifty millions of the women of India who were perishing for the lack of it. The circumstances of the times were favourable. The Government had so far recognized the importance of Christian missions as to speak highly, in a published official document, of the quarter of a million of Christian converts in that land. Nevertheless, the difficulties they would have to contend with were great. First, there was the difficulty of maintaining their own spiritual life in the midst of the heathen. Then there was the difficulty of the work itself. They must give a distinct testimony for their Master, and yet exercise patience and forbearance to those among whom they laboured. Again, there was the difficulty of acquiring the language, the knowledge of which was absolutely essential. But for all these difficulties there was a full supply of grace treasured up in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Sir William Hill, Hon. Secretary of the Society under whose auspices this little band goes forth, also addressed the missionaries, naming each one separately, and also the particular place and kind of work each of them would occupy. Silent prayer was then offered, while the Chairman read out the list of names, and the meeting closed by singing another special hymn.

That prayer may be offered intelligently for our sisters, we add their names and destination. Miss Fuller is returning to Lahore, where she has already laboured for seven years. Miss C. M. Tucker, better known as "A. L. O. E.," is going (entirely at her own expense) to Umritzur. Miss Ada Smith and Miss Malloch will labour at Lucknow, chiefly among the Mohamedans. Miss S. Appleton and Miss M. Appleton are destined for Bombay, the most populous city in India. Miss Brandon and Miss J. Brandon will take charge of a school at Masulipatam, founded by Robert Noble; while Miss Hadden goes to Jellapore. May their self-sacrificing zeal lead many of their English sisters in Christ to say—"Here am I, send me."
G. K.

Another correspondent sends us a sketch of the meeting, and says:—

"If we glance but a moment at the subject of our national responsibility in reference to India, and if we allow ourselves to contemplate the sad condition of our heathen sisters—the women, the wives, the mothers,—of that mighty empire, we must unitedly rejoice at the fact that nine of our own countrywomen have been moved as by one impulse to go forth together that they may proclaim to them the story of a Saviour's love. Brethren, pray that the word of the Lord may run very swiftly, and that He may be glorified through numbers of women in India being won for Jesus. I hear that in February last three ladies preceded the nine now on their way, and that three more are to follow next month, making fifteen designated to various spots distant from each other, but all included in India. May this accession of labourers in 1875 be followed by a larger number in 1876, for 'there is very much land to be possessed!'"

PERSONAL APPEAL.

A HINT TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

If you could kindly find space in THE CHRISTIAN for the following, I think it might help and encourage other Sunday-school teachers:—

I had a girl in my class for some time. She was what I called one of my best girls: always in time, no trouble, &c. After some time she passed into a higher class, and then left to go to service. After about three years I thought I would call upon her mother, and hear about her. She was doing very well, and her mother said she should call upon me. Soon after she did so. She was very pleased to see me again, and we talked about the school, her home, and, in fact, everything except herself. I felt I ought to ask her if she was trusting in the blood for salvation, but I did not like to. I had never spoken to any but the children of my class before, and she was almost a woman. However, I felt I dare not let her go till I had asked. So I made the effort; and thank God I did. She said "No, she was not saved; she had often wished to give herself to Jesus, but did not know how." I tried to point out the way, and then prayed with her. Still no light came, and then she left. All I could do was to pray that Jesus himself would teach her. Two or three days after, I had a letter from her, saying my prayers were answered, and she was resting in Jesus. Since then I have often seen her, and she is always at perfect peace.

It has been such a help to me in my efforts to speak for Jesus, that I hoped the telling it might encourage others who are working in a Sunday-school to speak a loving word or two. I always now keep one of the class for a few minutes to speak to her alone. It makes the teaching more real, and they will often tell you things that they would not like to tell before the whole class. Four of my children have lately given themselves to Jesus, and I believe it is chiefly the loving, earnest talk we have had after school that made them think that Jesus meant each one for herself to answer the loving invitation, "Come unto Me."

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER.

"TO DISTRIBUTE FORGET NOT."

We have often wondered, as we waited at some suburban station for a lagging train, who the good friends were who supplied the waiting-rooms with those rolls of Scripture texts; and we have waited a silent prayer that many a journeying brother and sister might, by their aid, "Look and live." We are, therefore, glad to receive the sixteenth annual report of the "Society for Distributing Scripture Truth by means of Rolls of Texts, &c.," and to see, by the numerous and gratifying letters of testimony quoted in that report, that these silent messengers are doing effectual work in many ways. The Society's operations cover a wide area; they supply railway and other waiting-rooms, mission-houses, hospitals, navy and merchant vessels, ferry-boats, refugees, ragged schools, &c., &c. Their labours even extend to some of the colonies and continental countries. Recently they have undertaken to place on board all vessels conveying emigrants to our colonies, &c., a supply of their publications for reading on the voyage, and to be given to adults on their leaving the ship. It is manifest that all this means a heavy outlay, and the additional effort will severely tax the resources of the Society. It seems to us, however, that such a work as this only has to be made generally known to be heartily supported. Last week we indicated various ways of sowing the good seed of the Word; we can commend the operations of this Society with equal, if not greater, confidence. The rolls of texts and similar productions are not so likely to be thrown carelessly aside as the ordinary tract, and their power for good must be, therefore, more continuous and abiding. We observe, from the report, that the rolls may be had in raised characters for the blind. Such a useful Society as this is ought to be encouraged, and we shall be glad to receive any help Christian friends may be moved to give: or they may communicate direct with the Treasurer, Rev. C. D. Charlton, Tunbridge Wells. Applications for books to be sent to the Secretary, Mr. W. Woodhouse, 62, Seaside-road, Eastbourne, Sussex.

WHITBY.—A correspondent writes to us of three weeks' very successful meetings at Whitby, conducted by Mr. Thos. Johnston, of the Evangelization Society. The meetings are largely attended, and many inquirers are nightly spoken to. "Many," says our correspondent, "meet Mr. Johnston as he passes to and fro through the streets, or go to his apartments, inquiring the way of peace."

GOOD TIDINGS OF THE JEWS IN PERSIA.

THE following letter has been received by the Rev. Adolph Saphir from an American Medical Missionary in Persia, and will be read with interest at the present time when we have representatives of the little Nestorian Church amongst us:—

"Oroomiah, Persia, July 21, 1875.

"I take pleasure in communicating to you some of the details of a recent movement among the Jews here which gives promise, through the blessing of God, of leading some of them to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. A young man belonging to one of the leading houses of the Jews here, while in Russia, received instructions from a Christian there, through which he was led to abandon the traditions in which he had been brought up, and to reject everything as a foundation of faith and practice except the Word of God. He had not, apparently, received sufficient light to enable him to accept Christ as the Messiah at this time, yet on his return he entered so earnestly into the work of reform that he soon enlisted a number of others with him in the work.

"This did not fail to arouse a spirit of intense hostility on the part of those who refused to accept of his views, and attempts were made to ostracise the reformers, and even to drive them out of the city. To accomplish this, false accusations were brought before the Governor of the Christian community (which includes all who are not Mussulmans), and, as is usual in such cases, he was doubtless well bribed. He showed a disposition to further their scheme, on the pretence that as these men were obnoxious to their fellows, and were likely to give him trouble, they should sell their houses and remove to another quarter. At the request of the sufferers we entered a vigorous protest against such manifest injustice, and, finding the Governor rather tardy in acceding to our demands that justice should be done, we intimated that the matter would be taken before a higher court if he persisted in his course. This had the desired effect, and the case was amicably adjusted.

"The reformers, to the number of fifteen heads of families, and representing mostly leading families among the Jews, finally came to us stating that they wished to find the truth of which they were in search, and that they wished to form an organization and to sign a covenant, in which they renounced all of their religion which was not based upon the Word of God. They also asked to be instructed in the truth, and asked that a school might be established for the instruction of their children.

"After due deliberation, feeling satisfied that the movement was not actuated by mere party spirit, but by a desire to know the truth, we acceded to their request, and opened a school in a room provided by one of their number, with two teachers, a Nestorian and a Jew. The school has been well attended, and has been, so far, continued through the summer. Instruction in the New Testament and in the principles of the Christian religion is a prominent feature of the course of study.

"Among the number of adherents to this movement was a leading Rabbi, who often attended services in the Mission chapel with others, and who stated that he had been for some time inquiring the way. He has since died, but there has been no falling off in interest in the movement—on the contrary, several others have recently expressed a desire to sign the covenant.

"The language spoken by the Jews of Oroomiah, of whom it is estimated that there are 2000, is largely composed of Syriac words, and the two races can converse with each other without much difficulty. Many of the Jews attend the preaching services in Syriac, and understand them. Since the opening of the school, regular services have been held at the school-house, and at the private houses of the Jews, by Deacon Baba, and though none have, as yet, openly professed the name of Christ, there is great reason to hope that the Spirit is doing a good work in the hearts of some of them. Would it not be a glorious thing if in our day should come the glad tidings to Jerusalem that her warfare is accomplished, and her iniquity pardoned! And may we not trust that this work is the Lord's doing, and that the seed which He is sowing in these hearts will be nourished by Him until it springs up and bears fruit a hundredfold to his glory!

"If you will take the trouble to interest the friends of Jewish evangelization in the remnant of that nation here, and send to us such publications as may be useful for that purpose, I have no doubt that they would be eagerly demanded and read. There has recently sprung up, in other quarters, a demand for Hebrew Bibles, greater than we are just at present prepared to supply; we expect more soon from Constantinople. In regard to our own special work here among the Nestorians and Mohammedans, I can say that I could not have believed the half had it been told me. From every hand come the most encouraging tidings, Mussulman villagers asking for the Gospel, Mussulman priests asking for baptism, the book-room in the city thronged with Mussulmans, Jews, Armenians, and Nestorians, inquiring what they shall do to be saved; a large sect which almost accepts of Christ, and who receive Christians as brothers; the door seemingly widely open, and only waiting to be entered.

"In my own special work, as might be expected, I have my hands full. The dispensary is always thronged, and to the multitudes who gather for the sake of having the ills of the body healed, there is an excellent opportunity of presenting the claims of the Saviour, whose blood cleanseth from all sin. To-morrow I expect to open the new hospital and dispensary, which will give me much better facilities for treating the sick, and (what I have most at heart) training up a class of native physicians, who will be enabled to multiply my influence for good. I have already accepted one student, an exceptionally intelligent young man, a Mussulman, from Tabriz, belonging to a family of rank, upon whom I have great hope that the grace of God will exert a regenerating influence. He is our teacher in Turkish, whilst we teach him English, and I am inclined to think him the most apt scholar of the three. A number of others have applied for admission to the hospital as students, from almost all the different nationalities; but I intend to accept only such as give fair promise of future usefulness."

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

ON Wednesday afternoon last (Oct. 13) a meeting was held in the Mildmay Conference Hall, No. 6 Room, to commend to God two brethren connected with the China Inland Mission, Messrs. Brounston and Easton, who are to leave for China about the 21st of this month.

After an appropriate address by Rev. D. Hankin, Vicar of St. Jude's, who presided, Messrs. Brounston and Easton were introduced to the meeting by Mr. Hudson Taylor, who expressed an earnest desire that God would lay it on the hearts of those present to pray for these brethren. Real blessing would descend upon them in answer to their prayers. One or both of them were going to labour in Noble-land (Kroci-chan), one of the hitherto unevangelized provinces. He mentioned that in a letter received that morning from a former resident in that province, he had been told that in its capital city there were now two Roman Catholic cathedrals, with no less than nineteen European clergy and one bishop. He reminded them, also, that these brethren had a special claim upon their prayers, for in that room, amongst other places, at the beginning of the year, earnest prayer had been offered that God would raise up eighteen men, two for every one of the hitherto unevangelized provinces of China. Here were two of them.

Then followed a stirring, soul-refreshing address by the Rev. W. G. Lewis, after which the two young brethren were committed to God in prayer by the chairman.

CHRISTIAN LANTERN MISSION.—The summer work is ended in connexion with the Prudhoe-street Mission House, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and we have much to thank God for. Night after night in the courtyards and streets God's grace has been proclaimed. The lanterns were lit, and ladies went from room to room giving tickets to those who never go anywhere to worship. They came in hundreds—first the children at six, then fathers and mothers at eight o'clock. For ten nights the room was crowded; the choir sang, and brethren spake of Jesus. The pictures showing forth his life made it profitable to all, and God added a great blessing. J. V.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY.—We have seldom read anything more painful than the twenty-second annual report of this Society. The revelations it makes respecting the early age at which numbers of our sisters are drawn into a life of shame and ruin, are fearful to contemplate. All honour, however, to those who, out of love to Christ and perishing souls, are looking this question fairly in the face, and are straining every nerve to carry on a work of prevention and restoration. We hardly like to comply with the wish of the Committee, to circulate the report, it is such a sadly painful volume, but whether our readers are made acquainted with the aims and wants of the Society through the medium of the report or not, they may rest assured that the Society is doing a great and blessed work, and that any help afforded to it is well bestowed. The offices of the Society are 85, Queen-street, Cheapside, E.C.

RUTH.

She came to the fields of Boaz,
 The gleaner's portion to find,
 To follow the reaper's footsteps,
 And gather what fell behind;
 And Boaz came with a blessing
 For reaper and gleaner there:
 His was the field and the harvest,
 And the master's sheltering care.

He has marked the dark-eyed stranger
 With meek and sorrowful brow;
 The words of his loving-kindness
 Have soothed her sore heart now.
 "Abide here to glean, my daughter,
 Keep fast by my maidens' side;
 By the fields and the sheaves of Boaz
 And his reaper-bands abide."

"Nay, why dost thou show this kindness
 To a stranger wandering here?"
 But not as a stranger speaketh
 Did his answer meet her ear—
 "Thou hast left thy home and kindred
 For a land thou knowest not;
 In Israel's God hast thou trusted,
 He will bless thy chosen lot."

She sings with the joy of harvest,
 Her heart need no longer grieve,
 Not now as a lonely stranger
 She gleans what the reapers leave:
 "Handfuls of purpose" cast for her,
 Till there on the harvest plain
 She beat out that she had gathered,
 Its inmost treasures to gain.

And now 'tis the calm of evening,
 The burden and heat are o'er;
 Glad is the heart of the gleaner
 Sharing her plentiful store,
 Till Naomi asks with wonder
 Of where her daughter has been.—
 They will know who see our treasures
 That in Boaz's fields we glean.

How long that harvest has vanished!
 And those hearts lain still and cold:
 But, as buds the sunshine opens,
 Does time those fair types unfold.
 Our Boaz, the King of Glory,
 And priceless his harvest plain;
 In the everlasting Gospel
 Our sheaves of golden grain.

That harvest-field you may enter,
 A stranger, sorrowful, lone;
 But you'll find the "handfuls of purpose"
 On your gleaning pathway thrown.
 In the ages past He saw you,
 Your life's inmost story knew;
 Foreseeing the need and the hour,
 He gave those bright ears for you.

Then the rest which the Master giveth,
 When harvest is gathered in,—
 For the people of God remaineth
 A rest from sorrow and sin.
 As the Bride with the Bridegroom shareth
 His crown and his palace-home,
 So Christ's rest and his place in the glory
 Will be ours in the days to come.

ELGIN, N.B.—The Free High Church has as its mission district a large section of the town, with the two adjoining villages of New Elgin and Bishopmills. There has been erected, by the exertions of Rev. S. R. Macphail, the minister, a beautiful central hall for evangelistic meetings, and there are other two mission houses in different parts of the district. There are about sixty engaged in house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, and similar Christian labours. Three mothers' meetings are carried on, and many cottage meetings are held throughout the district. In connexion with the congregation there is a largely attended children's church, and upwards of seventy Sabbath-school teachers are regularly employed. How many congregations with ample resources are doing next to nothing for those who are perishing around them! May they hear the voice of the Master saying to them, "Go work to-day in my vineyard."

GEORGE BREALEY AT KIDDERMINSTER.

ONE of the ten thousand indirect results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit has been a week of special evangelistic meetings in this town. In April, a lady wrote Mr. G. Brealey, of the Blackdown Hills, asking him to come and speak at a mothers' meeting. He thought it was too far to go for one small gathering, but said, in reply, that if the way were opened at a future time for him to go for a series of meetings, he was willing to be sent. The friends at Kidderminster laid it before God, prayed, invited others with them, formed a numerous committee representing the various Nonconformist denominations in the town, and, by the co-operation of a number of ladies, carried on a house-to-house visitation, and invited the people. A series of united prayer-meetings, very largely attended, preceded the services. They were held in the churches of different denominations, and were conducted by Revs. G. Hunsworth, J. Boseley, J. Caley, T. Fisk, and J. Heath, assisted by various laymen.

Mr. Brealey arrived on Thursday, and his first address on that evening was heard by a crowded meeting in the Music Hall. Night by night anxious souls have remained behind, and from personal conversation and observation we believe that many have trusted Jesus and been saved. The work goes on this week, and it is proposed to continue the meetings after Mr. Brealey has left.

A correspondent of The Shuttle writes:—

"Although a stranger to many in the town, we are heartily glad to welcome Mr. George Brealey amongst us, and doubt not that if the movement is taken up heart and soul by those who should deem it their privilege and duty to work in the cause, the same measure of success accorded to Messrs. Moody and Sankey in other quarters will be achieved here. Kidderminster is not behind other large towns in scenes of vice and drunkenness, atheism and indifference. . . . What we want is more earnestness in the Church, more utter abnegation of self, more point in the sermons, and less talk about church ceremonies; while Christ the Great Founder of our faith should always be lifted up, and the true way of salvation pointed out at least once a Sunday; a Gospel sermon would then be the rule rather than the extreme exception."

After a few days at home, Mr. Brealey is invited to similar work at Leominster and in the neighbourhood of London.

By means of the work of our American brethren, God has set an open door before men like George Brealey, whom He has endowed with the gift of an evangelist, as well as those whom, like George Müller, He has made pastors and teachers. And there must, we suppose, be many such who have been hitherto little known beyond their own locality, who would find their own souls enlarged by visiting new scenes and carrying their treasures to other circles. There are those, on the other hand, who have been long moving about, to whom a few months or even a year or two of stationary work would afford opportunity for repose of spirit, study of the Word, meditation, prayer. While Bristol and Blackdown give to the Church and the world the ministry of the brethren we have named, they may also afford an opportunity for a time of settled service to those whose changeful life has supplied them with material and experience which would be as useful and interesting to them as that which they for a while give up would be to the places visited by the evangelist and pastor whom they send forth. This may not so pointedly apply to these particular places, because the long ministry of these two brethren has raised up men whom their absence will bring to the front, and by whom their places will be well supplied. But there are other localities where the greatest boon to pastor and people would be to release the minister for a season of evangelistic work from place to place, his lack of service at home being supplied by an evangelist. And there is little question that the administration of this service would not only supply the wants of the saints, but be abundant, also, by many thanksgivings unto God (2 Cor. viii.).

R. C. M.

Mr. Brealey writes to us on the 13th inst.:—"The Theatre on Monday and Tuesday was crammed to excess, and many hundreds had to leave, unable to get in. Both of these services have been greater in results than any previous one, as far as the class intended to be reached is concerned. Most of the people attend no place of worship. Last night we had to clear the Christians out to make room for the inquirers, except some of the ministers, their wives, and a few other helpers. We then grouped the inquirers in companies of ten to forty in each, and spoke to them in this manner. We trust many found peace ere they left. Some cases are very interesting."

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE AT SALISBURY.

SOME of our readers will remember the bright and stirring little conferences which for two successive years were convened at Gloucester by the Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, then rector of Blaisdon, and will have observed that the recent waking-up of that ancient cathedral city, prior to, and by means of, the visit of Major Cole and his family, is—to some extent, at least—traceable to those gatherings. In the providence of God, Mr. Thwaites has been removed to another cathedral city (Salisbury), and on Wednesday and Thursday of last week gatherings very similar to those at Gloucester were convened by him in the Council Chamber, the use of which was kindly granted by the mayor for the occasion.

During two days the subjects of "Union with Christ," "Union with one another for Christ's sake," and "The return of the Lord Jesus," were spoken of in brief addresses, very much to the edification of all present. All was short and to the purpose, and the opportunity given for spontaneous remarks not exceeding ten minutes imparted to the meetings something more of the character of a conference than is general at gatherings of a similar kind. Everything was done by the clock, and accordingly there was no failure in fulfilling the order sketched out in the programme. The singing was effectively led by the choirs of Fisherton Church, of either sex, who volunteered their services. From first to last all was cheery and hearty, and we anticipate that the results to which we have alluded at Gloucester will find their counterpart in Salisbury.

We cannot attempt to reproduce the addresses. The speakers were Lord Cavan, the Hon. Cowper-Temple, Revs. E. N. Thwaites (the chairman), W. Saunders, Bristol; Wm. Etches, Longborough; R. Graves Walker, Stroud; J. R. Cotter, Blandford; Mr. R. C. Morgan; and others. Miss Weston occupied the second afternoon with an account of her work among the sailors of the Royal Navy, which, we need not say, was of thrilling interest to her large audience. Mrs. Colonel Urnston addressed a meeting of men on the first evening, and of women on the second, in Fisherton School-room; while Lord Cavan and Mr. Morgan spoke to similar congregations in the Council Chamber. We doubt not that fruit will appear from these meetings, as well as from the evangelistic meetings which followed on Friday and Sunday.

There was a service for men at the booking-office of the South Western on Friday afternoon, when Lord Cavan spoke to sixty persons, thirty-four of whom were porters, &c.

A travelling circus occupying the market necessitated the removal of the congregation in the evening from the Market House to the Council Chamber, and amidst band of music and shouts Mr. Thwaites stood and preached, and then the people sang on the steps of the Council Chamber. The Lord had the victory. Never was the Council Chamber fuller since built, and the Law Court full of overflow, about 700 persons altogether. The blessing was wonderful; we did not leave (says our correspondent) till half-past ten. Many anxious ones professed to find peace.

No part of the conference was more interesting than the hour each day after dinner, on the former of which accounts of evangelistic work were given, and on the second several friends briefly narrated the circumstances of their conversion. But we must reserve our notes of these for next week.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.—An editorial note in the quarterly report of this Society for October says:—"We entreat our friends, and especially our ministerial brethren, to make our Society known, and to endeavour to obtain for us a largely increased income. Every day makes it more apparent that we must greatly extend our operations on the Continent. The journals of our agents in Italy give proof of the growing activity and animosity of the Romish priesthood. The Society for Catholic Interests is circulating works directly attacking Protestantism and the Bible as sold by our societies. Everyone knows how uncertain is the future of religious liberty in Spain. Meanwhile no pains should be spared to disseminate the truth as widely as possible. In France, the extraordinary activity of the Ultramontane party, the new universities which they are about to establish, and the extravagant pretensions which they are putting forth, are rousing the attention of the whole country, and it is, therefore, more important than ever that, amid this great strife, the voice of truth should be heard, and our brethren there should receive our hearty support, and, where possible, new missions established. Another subject of importance is the condition of the French Protestants who live far from the chief Protestant centres. Something more must be done for their spiritual instruction." The office of the Society is 18, South-street, Finsbury.

A RIPE HARVEST FIELD.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Record writes:—"There are between 80,000 and 100,000 men, women, and children living and floating up and down our country, passing through large centres of population, between Land's End and John-o'-Groat's, who are the most uncared-for, forgotten, neglected, drunken, ignorant, and degraded human beings in this our boasted land of civilization.

"There must be a complete organization or a Canal Missionary Society formed, in which a large number of warm-hearted, God-fearing laymen—men accustomed to boating, the better—must take a prominent part. At any rate, they should go first to break up the ground, as they understand the boatmen, their habits, their faults and failings, better than anyone else, or, in other words, they would be the sappers and miners to attack the citadel. Money should be raised, places of worship on the banks of our canals, where large numbers of boats are collected together from time to time, should be built; not by one or two, but by the hundred. Pence should be collected from amongst the boatmen and others; all classes should be set to work, and then they would take interest in it.

"To each place of worship should be connected a lightboat, or spiritual lifeboat, something after the plan stated by me in the Daily News and Hour and other papers some time ago. These should be used to collect the men and women, and youths of both sexes living in the boats that are lying at the wharves on each side of the canal, to take them to the school-house or chapel, or make a school-house or chapel of the boat, and teach them in that. Boatmen do not 'tie up' always at the same place, and owing to the bridges or other crossing-places being a considerable distance apart, great inconvenience to boatmen would result, and many would be prevented attending service. I would have the school-house, or floating chapel, placed at the most suitable points, and in course of time the result would be that the boats travelling would 'tie up' for the Sunday at these halting-places, thereby lessening the vast amount of Sunday travelling and Sabbath desecration."

MIDDLESBOROUGH.—On Wednesday evening, 6th inst., an interesting meeting was held in connexion with the Baptist Young Men's Christian Association here. From the quarterly report read, we learn that this Society, which originated last year with seven young men, now numbers eighty-seven, and that the efforts of the young men, by their Bible-classes, open-air preaching, and tract distribution, had been greatly blessed of God, especially among the young men of the town. A spirit of hearty union and devotion to the work of winning souls pervaded the meeting, and the Association are about to extend their efforts by opening a mission-room in a destitute part of the town.

BELGIUM.—A lady correspondent, writing from Brussels, wishes to qualify somewhat the view presented by our brother Mr. Pearse in his recent letters to us respecting the progress of the Gospel in Belgium. She states that public preaching was carried on in the streets of Brussels for twelve or fifteen years under the protection of the police, until the death of the Flemish pastor, Mons. Van Ealde, three years ago. After detailing the very large number of tracts distributed since 1862 by the Missionary Church of Brussels, she says:—"As Mr. Pearse remarks, the population of Belgium receives tracts or any other books most willingly, but there is a wide difference between accepting a tract and seeking after truth. The majority of the nation speak freely against the priests, and condemn the abuses of their Church; and yet the greatest apathy and indifference reign concerning salvation. Romanism has completely scared the conscience, and it needs the experience of years to understand the difficulties attending the evangelization of this and other Roman Catholic countries."

DUNFERMLINE.—On the afternoon of Saturday, Oct. 2, a Christian Conference was held here. "The Secret of True Church Prosperity" was the subject taken up by the Rev. Mr. Macgregor, Dundee. During the second hour the Rev. Mr. Russell opened up the subject of "The Importance of Christian Knowledge." Instruction on the main points of the Christian religion, he said, was required before conversion; and increase of knowledge was needed also after conversion. In order to grow in grace, the means of grace must be diligently used. During the third hour the subject conferred on was "Christian Work." The Rev. Mr. Graham gave the opening address. He said that although he believed the present agencies were quite insufficient to overtake the vast work of evangelizing the world, he had great faith in the power of God's grace. The Rev. Mr. Schiach, Mr. J. Clarke, Mr. D. Lamont, and others, then followed each other with remarks on the subject before the meeting, and the Conference was brought to a close at six o'clock. An evangelistic meeting was held on the Friday evening preceding, when the Rev. D. Macgregor, Dundee, delivered an address. There was also a very interesting meeting of Christian workers.

OUR CONVICT POPULATION.

A LESSON FROM AMERICA.

We have already made extracts from the annual report of the Young Men's Christian Association Convention held at Richmond, Virginia, in May last. We make one more, relating to a class of the community that seems almost forsaken as far as any special Christian effort goes. Mrs. Meredith and her helpers are spending their strength and sympathies to good purpose among discharged female convicts. The only thing open to men in that position, so far as we can see, is to return to their old haunts, there in all likelihood to learn another lesson in the school of vice and crime.

The following address by a speaker at the above Convention will show that our American brethren are alive to the needs of this section of society, and are doing something to supply them. No doubt many chaplains in our own gaols could tell similar tales; we should be glad to know of them.

"In arresting criminals the first thing we need is the warrant. We have it here in the Bible. If you study to see how much of the Bible is devoted to the consideration of those that are classed as criminals or prisoners, the destitute and depraved, you will wonder that anything at all is left in the Bible relating to polite society. In Psalm 102 we read: 'From heaven did the Lord behold the earth, to hear the groaning of the prisoner, to loose those that are appointed to death.' And our Lord Himself, in the very midst of his dying agony, heard the cry of the dying thief.

"With this warrant in our hands we come to criminals to bring them under the power of the Gospel. The next thing is to know where they are. Not all the criminals are in the gaols and penitentiaries; only about one out of every hundred that should be there. 'Mich'l Marphy, how often have you been convicted?' 'Never before, sir.' 'How often have you been arrested?' 'One hundred times, I reckon, sir.' One out of the one hundred is the portion thrown into prison, whom we know just where to find.

"The criminal classes come from those who have had none of the natural moral defenses which have been thrown around your childhood and mine. They are the homeless children and the neglected boys of the streets. And I want to say here, that there is no work commending itself more heartily to the Associations organized in our towns and cities, than that of rescuing the boys of the streets. The difference between criminals and other classes of sinners is, that in one sin is manifest, open, and going beforehand to judgment; the others are sinners not yet found out; but they will be, or their sin will find them out, unless these sinners be blotted out by the blood of Christ.

"But it is not enough to detect these men. We never can do anything with them until we arrest them. My brother from New York (CHRISTIAN, August 19, p. 12) has indicated what can be done with the very worst of characters by proper tact: take your coat off, throw it over the shivering forms of the wretches. It gives them a practical illustration of Christ's love which they can appreciate. Then consider the circumstances which have caused them to become criminals; they are such as exact your sympathy. After arresting, the next thing is the taking hold of the hitherto neglected or hardened heart—a heart that never knew joy, that never felt the influence of home, that never clasped the friendly hand of love in the struggles and trials of life.

"BILLY BUFFIN.

"Billy Buffin, in our prison, a boy sixteen years of age, a bright, beautiful lad as ever you saw, had been all over every land; a more thorough boy I never knew, and yet for him to be a quiet prisoner seemed impossible. Night after night he went into the dark cell with no supper, his bed a plank. He came to my school and I urged him to be better; he said 'I will,' and then he would not. He went on from bad to worse. One night, the old deputy, as the prisoners called him, an old man with grey hair, who had been there for thirty years as the deputy warden, enforcing the discipline of our State Prison, and who is not supposed to have any heart, said to him, 'Billy, what in the world makes you do this? There's a man in you, Billy, if you would only get it out. I am sorry for you, Billy Buffin!' 'When the old deputy told me that, I just looked up in his face. I didn't believe he could be sorry for anyone. I saw a tear in his eye, and that went through me, and I just talked as I walked during the night up and down the dark cell. I could find nothing to say but 'Billy Buffin, there's a man in you! I am sorry for you!' I said it over and over until morning, and every once in a while I thought of the tear in that old deputy's eye, and I would say, 'I wonder if he is sorry; I must be a very bad boy for the old deputy to cry over me,'" and said he, 'before the sun rose I said to myself, "If there's a man in you Billy, God helping me, I will get it out.'" He gave me this history on a visit, where I met him the confidential and trusted partner and financial agent of one of the largest manufacturing establishments in our State. We must arrest the boys on their way to prison; we must deal with them tenderly in the prison. Let me say to the Associations here that I have been in every gaol in our own State, and held religious services. Sometimes the sheriff will say to me, 'There is only one, Mr. Byers, and it is hardly worth while.' 'I am glad of that,' I reply, 'It will do him no harm, and may do him some good.' And God has blessed the word as I sat down for a little talk with him.

"Of all helpless and hopeless people on earth, the discharged prisoner is almost the worst. The brand of the felon is upon him. What is to be done with these? I am glad to say that in our cities in Ohio there has not been a single discharged convict but has sought the friendly aid of those prison associations which have been organized for their benefit. It would be a wonderful help to them if this work was put under the auspices of the Association.

"JOHN CLARK.

"Let me mention another case. It is that of a man whom the Governor pardoned, 'because,' said he, 'the man that can write such a letter as he has written me, is a safe man in the community.' Some time ago I went to see the pardoned prisoner. As I stood before his shanty, a woman came to the door, and I said to her, 'Does John Clark live here?' 'Yes.' 'Is he home?' 'No, he is away in the harvest-field.' 'Well, you are his wife and these are the children, I suppose?' 'Yes,' she said. 'Well, tell John that Mr. Byers has come to see him.' 'What!' was her reply, 'My dear man's best friend stands forinist the door and does not come over the threshold. If you only knew how he takes on about you every day. He talks about you the most of the time to the children. I could never tell John that you stood in the rain forinist the door. Come over the threshold.'

"So I went over the threshold. 'Now, my child, haste you and tell your father—I never do know your name—that his best friend is here; he'll know who he is, and will come right away from his work to him.'

"I found the man in a two-storey house, with four acres around it, owned by himself, built up by hard work since the Governor let him go free. He calls me his best friend, and it is enough,—it sounds a little egotistical, but I am not ashamed of it. You and I are working for Jesus, and it is for us to make such friends out of these depths as shall demonstrate the power of the Gospel. A preacher said to me not long ago, 'What is the use in bothering with these hard nuts?' We don't deal with them without cause.

"When we stand some day before the eternal judgment-seat, and the Son of Man comes again in his glory, it will be sweet for us to hear, 'I was sick and in prison, and ye ministered unto me.' Oh, in that day to see these rescued ones inside the eternal gates, bidding us welcome, and saying 'Come over the threshold,' 'This is our best friend!' Surely that will be enough to satisfy the highest emotions of the Christian soul. Let me commend these poor outcast classes to you. Let me say there is only one way to win them, and that is by sympathy. It is all very well to have your profitable literature and libraries, and to make your rooms very attractive. I am not speaking in censure or criticism, but you need not make such provision for these classes; all you need is to go to them with a warm heart and open hand, with the spirit of the Man who died for them, and you can reach the worst."

The speaker read the letter which John Clark had addressed to the Governor of the State, and on the receipt of which he was pardoned, and added: "He is a poor Irishman, and the last time I saw John I asked him if he was still a Christian, 'I am sir, by the help of God,' was his reply."

AN INTERESTING CEREMONY followed the ordinary evening service at Marylebone Presbyterian Church on Sunday last—the admission by baptism of a young Jew into the Christian Church. After a suitable sermon by Dr. Fraser, the pastor, showing the essential connexion between the Old and New Testaments, Rev. Mr. Myers elicited from the young man his profession of faith, which he gave with modest yet firm emphasis. Mr. Myers then performed the baptismal rite, repeating the usual formula in Hebrew, and concluded the impressive proceedings with short and appropriate addresses to the convert and congregation. Dr. Fraser announced that the efforts for the ingathering of God's ancient people in connexion with the Presbyterian Church are to be increased in the East-end of London.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

ACCORDING to latest accounts, the plans of the evangelists for the winter have not yet been matured. We lately noticed the fact that Mr. Moody had declined to preach in the Unitarian Church in Northfield, and was said to have expressed himself strongly with respect to Unitarian doctrine. From the reports in the American papers, it appears that a growing controversy on the subject has arisen out of this incident. Meantime the large cities in the States are urging their claims on the services of the evangelists, and a general expectation of a wide-spread revival seems to prevail.

The Sunday School Times of Philadelphia, just to hand, says:—"The most hopeful sign of a true revival in one of our great cities is given in the action of the representative Christian laymen of Chicago, who, having invited Messrs. Moody and Sankey to visit that city as soon as the providence of God may open the way, now decide to take immediate measures for inaugurating union evangelistic work in Chicago. The Chicago workers propose to trust God and begin work without waiting for these evangelists. This indicates, as The Interior suggests, that 'they are already revived,' and that whether Moody and Sankey are present or absent, the Lord's people are to have a blessing according to their faith in God."

"THE SLUMS OF DEANSGATE."

THIS is a little pamphlet, price one penny, written by Mr. A. Alsop, of the Boys' Home, Deansgate, and published by J. Heywood, Manchester. It tells a terrible story of human vice and misery.

"Through Deansgate," says the writer, "the ceaseless rolling torrent of iniquity sweeps its black waters along with lightning speed among its outlets and inlets, deluging the houses and making complete wrecks of what would otherwise be noble characters, the pride of society, adding to the stores of arts and sciences; but no! they are lost, carried away by the flood of lustful passions, and swept over the wide chasm dividing time from eternity. Deansgate, with its fairs, gin-palaces, haunts of vice, dens of infamy, hotbeds of guilt, cursed imprecations, deadly struggles, whirlpools of gaiety, and round of empty pleasures: the finish—constitution ruined, and soul damned."

Such is a part of Mr. Alsop's introduction, and a perusal of the subsequent pages of the little volume convinces us that the black picture is by no means overdrawn. It is relieved here and there by a few bright touches telling of the rescue of some of these perishing ones, but this only throws into deeper shadow the picture as a whole. What is to be done? Shall we leave these victims of sin and Satan to their fate? Surely not. Says Mr. Alsop, "If the religious world did but know the many heartrending stories these weeping Marys could tell, there would be sympathy in place of scorn, love instead of hate." What would Jesus do if He were here? We leave the question with our readers.

BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE.—Will you please to draw attention to the alteration in the place at which our friends are invited to gather at the morning meetings of our Conference. Owing to alterations which are being made at the "Exchange Rooms," the meetings on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday mornings, and the side meetings in the afternoon—announced by circular to take place in the Exchange Rooms—will be held in the Temperance Hall, Temple-street, which leads out of the chief street of the town (New-street). All the meetings will be very near together, though those in the afternoon will be held in two different buildings. (Nov. 27, 28, 29.) H. G. THWAITES.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE AND MISSIONS.—On Monday week a service of unusual interest was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle to commend to the care and blessing of God five missionaries, who were about to leave for their respective spheres of labour. Between two and three thousand were present. The missionaries were Mr. Gammon, going to Turk's Island; Miss Thorn, to Delhi; Miss Burnett, also going to India; Mr. Easton and Mr. Brounton, going to China. After interesting addresses and a few words more from Mr. Spurgeon, there followed a scene of a deeply affecting character. Mr. Spurgeon took Miss Thorn by the hand (the whole congregation rising as he did so), addressed to her a few words of warm sympathy and encouragement, and then in earnest prayer commended her to the guidance and blessing of God. As with one voice at the close of his prayer the thousands present said, "Amen." This was repeated in each case. Then a few words more of prayer by Mr. Spurgeon, and a meeting, which for solemn and affecting impressiveness will be long remembered, was brought to a close.

HENRY VARLEY AT PLYMOUTH.

AGAIN the Lord has graciously manifested his power in the testimony of his word. After the Baptist Union meetings were over, several of the ministers met me, and we arranged a series of meetings in different places—George-street Chapel, Courtenay-street Mechanics' Institute, and King-street—the largest Methodist church in the town.

Lord's-day last I had the joy of preaching in the Presbyterian Church on the strengthening might of the Holy Spirit; it was a season of real refreshing. At night, St. James's Hall was crammed with one of the most deeply interesting congregations I ever preached to, for in the afternoon I went out, accompanied by a number of brethren, and held about twenty-five meetings of about two minutes' duration each, simply quoting the Word of the Lord. It was an intensely interesting afternoon, and I have already heard of one poor backslider (a young man) arrested by the word—"He restoreth my soul." Hundreds gathered in the streets, and I do not think any one service lasted more than two minutes.

The evening meeting was full of power; the Lord was there, and many were led by the awakening voice to arise from the dead. The early prayer-meetings at seven o'clock have been well attended, growing in interest and numbers, until on Saturday morning the church was very crowded downstairs, and many in the galleries.

The Bible-readings at 3.30 have been inconveniently crowded during the latter meetings, but surely we have seen a wonderful quickening among God's children; the putting away of unbelief, the unforgiving spirit, and many spiritual forces of evil that hinder the life of Christ and keep back its sweet generous power; real breaking of bonds, liberty attained, and the joy of the Lord permeating hundreds of hearts; deepening of regard for the Word of God, and a thorough coming out from worldly fellowships into the place of separation to God; these are among many of the blessings received during these hallowed days. The evening meetings have seen just as wonderful gatherings, and the brethren, the ministers, and helpers busy with anxious souls. I think one evening in one of the vestries twenty or more found Christ; and whether in private houses, social gatherings, or the dense crowding of the fine King-street Chapel, all these meetings were simply as a mass of material upon which the Lord, who giveth life, operated. Surely we have seen his glory in the meetings, and the interest in the town is very deep; and, if the Lord will, I shall return shortly for more special work. Will your readers pray for Plymouth? The sin of that town is terrible, though I suppose not worse than many others. I found some opposition, but the Lord graciously swept it away, and gave me the opportunity of giving some practical issues, as Rom. xii. 19-21.

What a glorious power this Christ-life is; how it proves the ease with which Matthew v., in its practical aspects, can be lived, especially verses 44 and 45. I can only add, My soul rejoices as in harvest. Surely Peter is right, "It is joy unspeakable and full of glory."

The work opens here blessedly. The great Colston Hall was crowded with men this afternoon at three; it was must have been between 3000 and 4000 present; it was a grand sight, that mass of men. The Lord gave me his presence, and opened my lips for his praise. It was every way a significant beginning. Pray for me. Power, power, divine power; this, this is my yearning. Fellow-Christians, help! I go to Liverpool (p.v.) on Saturday; follow me in prayer. Yours sincerely, in Christ Jesus,

Bristol, Oct. 17.

HENRY VARLEY.

SWATOW, CHINA.—The Medical Mission here, under the care of Dr. W. Gauld, of the English Presbyterian Church, has been very active during the past year. Dr. Gauld ends his report thus:—"As might be expected, the effect on the many who attend the hospital meetings varies greatly. Some are apparently unaffected by what they hear, and return in that state; others are interested enough to make them willing to become Christians where no trials, social or other, attached to the abandonment of their idolatrous customs; while a few, through the Spirit of grace given them, are so convinced of the truth of the Gospel and of their need of its salvation, that they gladly receive it at all risks, and become true Christians. During the year a few of the last class, as we hope, have been received into the Church by baptism, and for them we are thankful as the most precious fruits of the year; while grateful also for being enabled to do good to the bodies of many, by the blessing of Him in whose hand are both the souls and bodies of men. We tender our best thanks to the friends who have helped us by their contributions to the hospital."

A NEW MISSION IN CAMBERWELL.

DEAR SIR,—I think that many of your readers will be interested in hearing of a work which has sprung up in the South of London in consequence of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services, and I trust that all over London those who have been quickened in the last few months of blessing will be led in a similar manner to seek to serve the Lord.

The work to which I refer was commenced by Mr. Duncan Drysdale and a few friends about the time of the close of the great gatherings. A very convenient room was secured at Southampton-street, Commercial-road, Peckham, known as the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms. It is large, well lighted, has a good piano, and three or four very convenient rooms for inquirers (a most important point). An effective choir of male and female voices has been formed, and there are services at 11.30 a.m. and at 7 p.m.

Besides these, there are five other meetings (including open-air preaching) on the Sunday, and during the week five more at the houses of friends of the work. Many have been gathered in who did not attend any place of worship. Latterly the private rooms have become overcrowded, and friends have subscribed and taken a mission-room, where meetings can be held every week-night, in addition to the Sunday services. It has been my privilege to conduct the services on three Sundays, and I can testify that the Lord is giving his blessing.

For obvious reasons it is not advisable to mention details of cases which are most interesting (one having been brought to Jesus when just on the point of entering a convent, &c.), but I trust that I have said enough to enlist the sympathy of all who desire the spread of Christ's Kingdom, and to show that a quiet work is going on in humble dependence on the Master, and for his glory alone.

May I ask Christians to remember this effort in their prayers, that the meetings may grow not only in size, but in fruit to the glory of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

PROTESTANTS IN THE HIGH ALPS.

THE Rev. R. H. Lundie, of Liverpool, writes to us detailing the needs of the Protestants in the two villages Pierre-Grosse and Forgillarde, Hautes Alpes, France, from the former of which he dates his letter. After describing a very interesting service on Sunday, the 19th ult., in which he took part, he says:—"My heart is full upon this subject, but I must forbear. Can we do anything to help these fellow-Christians in their good fight of faith, and their seven months of snow? Through the kindness of Christian friends I have been enabled to send them some substantial aid for the building of a Protestant school in Forgillarde, which I have had the satisfaction of seeing almost completed. It will be opened as soon as the snow falls; yet many little helps are needed. The people have fields and oows and mules, but little money. Some of the school-books used have been thumbed by the grandmothers of the scholars, and maps are greatly needed.

"I have also had the pleasure of sending a little fund to supply the 'temples' of Forgillarde and St. Veran with stoves; hitherto the floor of the latter church was in winter in part paved with ice. But the scarcity of fuel detracts from the value of the gift. A five-pound note or two would conquer that difficulty. The people cut their wood only with measured care, and during the brief summer they toil from dawn to night. The parsonage from which I write is a tasteful little building, but not in all respects complete.

"A little help, given without almost an effort, would encourage and strengthen our simple-hearted friends in the mountains. The present pastor here is a man of faith and zeal, admirably adapted for his work here. Frequent temptations have come in his way to leave that post for an easier one in the plains. I feel it to be of the greatest consequence that his services should be retained for these valleys.

"If any of your readers would like to help these children of Felix Neff, I should be glad to take care of contributions sent to me at 6, Beech-street, Liverpool."

SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS IN AMERICA.—The Presbyterian Ministerial Association of Pittsburgh has expressed itself very strongly upon the publication of Sunday newspapers. It denounces the selling and buying of such papers as an unlawful traffic, and calls upon Christian people to discountenance their circulation.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE IN AMERICA.

HAVING just returned from a ten weeks' Gospel campaign, embracing within its limits some of the most populous of our States, it may interest your readers to hear of the progress made in temperance reform during the heated term in this country. All over our land, religious camp-meetings have been held, and in almost every one of them the subject of temperance has had special meetings set apart for its consideration. Two years ago such a thing had not been mentioned, and even last year only two meetings made the subject a specialty.

The great meeting of the season—and we might, perhaps, say of the world—was held in August at Orchard Beach, situated twelve miles south of Portland, in the State of Maine. Here, on August 17, over 5000 people met together in camp for the purpose of holding a ten days' national temperance camp-meeting. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Francis Murphy, a reformed rum-seller and drunkard, of whom mention was made in a former letter. The address of welcome was delivered by the Governor of Maine, who is not only a thorough-going temperance man, but an earnest Christian. His speech was one of power and interest. Coming as it did from the highest authority in the State, it will exert an influence for good all over this land.

During the ten days in camp we had excursion-trains each day bringing people from every direction, and many of them from great distances. It was estimated that over 50,000 different persons were in attendance. The largest gathering any one day was on the Sabbath, when the vast multitude numbered over 15,000. The service began each morning with a prayer-meeting at six o'clock. Seven meetings were held each day, closing with an evening prayer-meeting, which usually terminated about ten o'clock; but one evening the interest was so great, and so many were on their knees seeking salvation, that the leader, Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, found it impossible to close at that time, and not until the clock struck eleven could she induce the people to disperse.

Hundreds of drinking men signed the pledge, and scores were converted to God. One day a drunken man came staggering up to the speaker's stand so under the influence of rum that he could scarcely keep on his feet, but seeing upon the platform an old chum with whom he had drunk many a glass, and who had been a drunkard for twenty-three years, he said to him, "Charlie, what are you doing here?" Charlie replied, "I am on this side now. I signed the pledge seven weeks ago, and I have kept it ever since." "Well," said the poor drunkard, "if you can keep the pledge, I can, and God helping me, I will." Taking Charlie by the arm, they walked around behind the stand; there taking the bottle from his pocket, pouring its contents upon the ground, and casting away the flask, they again returned to the stand, where, in the presence of 5000 people, he signed the pledge, and falling upon his knees, implored the people to pray for him.

On this ground, where all the Christian denominations and all the orders of temperance were represented, a national temperance camp-meeting association was organized (under a charter from the State of Maine), with Mr. Francis Murphy for president. We attempted at one time to obtain a list of the prominent workers and speakers in attendance, but they were so numerous that we gave it up.

From this meeting three of the Brooklyn Crusaders accepted an invitation to attend another temperance camp-meeting fifty miles away on the beautiful shore of Sebago Lake, in a neighbourhood where they have never had a church, Sabbath-school, or camp-meeting. Here we began with an audience of about 400, which in four days increased to over 5000. A grand victory was won for temperance. Old men and young men, middle-aged men and boys, drunkards and moderate drinkers, came forward and recorded their names, until 616 had signed the total abstinence pledge, many of whom sought and found salvation.

DEPTFORD GOSPEL MISSION.—We have received an extremely interesting communication from Mr. Fegan with reference to his reclamatory work in connexion with "The Boys' Home," which we are sorry being obliged to keep over till next week. We hope our readers will then bestow upon it a careful and prayerful perusal. Mr. Fegan requests us to state, in order to remove or prevent misconception, that he has no connexion with, and does not in any way sanction, a scheme that is being propounded in Deptford for raising a Home for Girls.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

GRAIN, and other Poems. By A. L. W. Orphans' Press, Leominster.—Ten short poems, depicting, with Bea, incisive strokes, and in rhythmic, musical verse, some of the numberless ills that flow from the "upas tree" of intemperance. One of the most touching is entitled "The Fatal Three"; we quote four lines:—

"She has chosen the path of sin and shame,
She is now their helpless prey,—
And but for the Dress, and the Dance, and the Drink,
She had not been led astray."

THE BEST THINGS. By Rev. RICHARD NEWTON, D.D. Putridge.—A very attractive volume for the young, written by one who has earned a well-deserved reputation in this department of Christian literature. The happy mingling of narrative and sermon, combined with the beautiful and appropriate illustrations, all printed on fine toned paper, render this a most desirable gift for our older children. We hope it may have all the success it deserves.

THE EXPOSITOR. Edited by Rev. SAMUEL COX. Hodder and Stoughton.—A monthly journal, devoted, as its name implies, to the exposition of Scripture, and manifesting considerable ability in many of its articles. In the number for September there is an article on the Atonement, by an anonymous writer, "Carpus," which, we are sorry to see, shows a very defective view, to say the least, of Scripture truth upon this vital subject. The all-important doctrine of the efficacy of the blood of Christ to cleanse from sin is explained thus:—"In the mind of the Apostles the blood stood for the death, for the sacrifice of Christ. The sacrifice of Christ was the supreme and consummate expression of the love of God for men. That love when apprehended by faith kindled a corresponding love in them. When once this responsive affection was kindled in them, it drew them away from the sins by which they had offended God, and drew them toward the righteousness by which alone they could please Him." According to this, "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth," should have been, "our love to Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin"! Alas! how little such a writer must know either of the guilt of sin, or of God's mode of dealing with that guilt, by visiting it in judgment on his Son. No wonder that in treating the subject he says:—"I am not about to cite and discuss texts; for it is this habit of relying on scattered and isolated passages of Scripture, and on the letter of them, rather than on the animating spirit, which has given rise to most of the errors and divisions of the Church. The letter killeth; it is the spirit of Scripture which giveth life to thought, as well as to souls." As to this, we must say that in 2 Cor. iii. 6, "the letter killeth" is spoken not of Scripture, but of the law. But, passing by this, it is inconceivable how any writer of intelligence can imagine that, if the Scriptures be from God, there can be any other mode of attaining knowledge on this or any other subject that God has been pleased to reveal, than that of quiet, careful study of the very "words which the Holy Ghost teacheth," comparing, weighing, searching, and so becoming "wise unto salvation." To discard the reverential use of the letter of Scripture is as foolhardy an act as that of a mariner who, trusting to his own instinct to guide his ship, should go to sea without compass or chart. So long as the breeze is gentle and the coast remains in view, perhaps his foolhardiness may seem justified; but when the winds and clouds and billows rise, he may, perchance, find himself upon the rocks. Would that the many who are thus treating the compass and chart which God has given us in his Word would be wise in time, and learn, before they make shipwreck of the faith, that "every word of God is pure": "The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth purified seven times." "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant."

CHELMSFORD.—Evangelistic services for eight days (from Oct. 31 to Nov. 7) are to be held in the Mechanics' Institute, by James Neech (late a working man), connected with the Evangelization Society. Will the Lord's people kindly remember these meetings in prayer?

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.—A friend in Ireland sends us the following, received by him from a correspondent in San Francisco:—"You will be glad to learn that thousands have been led to Christ during the past winter through the labours of Mr. Hammond on the Pacific Coast. In all the places where he has been, the Evangelical clergy have united heartily in the work. He made a journey of 2000 miles from San Francisco through Oregon, and over the waters of Paget's Sound through British Columbia to Alaska, holding meetings all the way in the principal cities and towns, even among the Indians and Esquimaux. In many places where he went, no buildings were large enough to contain the thousands who flocked to hear him; therefore meetings were often held in the open air. He often refers, with gratitude to God, to the blessed work that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have been enabled to carry on in Great Britain. It is possible that, as he has been invited, he may visit your shores again this winter."

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

BRANDON.—The first annual report of the British Workman here shows that it has been self-supporting.

CAPT. COTTER, a converted liquor-dealer in Brooklyn, U.S., has been instrumental in closing 1000 of the liquor saloons in that city. We sadly want him in London and Liverpool.

TOTTENHAM.—A mission hall for the purpose of preaching the Gospel to the out-patients of the Evangelical Protestant Deaconess Institution was opened on Tuesday evening, 7th inst.

A STARTLING FACT.—It was stated in the course of evidence given at a pending trial that at one pawnbroking establishment as many as scores of wedding-rings are put in pawn in a single month!

THE VIRGINIA BIBLE SOCIETY is doing all in its power to supply the great destitution among the coloured people of the State. They are very eager to secure the books, and in a great many instances are ready and willing to pay for them.

Mr. JOSEPH WEATHERLEY, who accompanied Messrs Moody and Sankey to America, has just returned, and has sent us a deeply interesting report of his travelling experiences and the condition of religious work in the States. We regret that a press of other matter prevents our giving it this week.

WE ARE INFORMED on very high authority (says the Rock), that among the instructions given by his Royal Highness the prince of Wales, with reference to the details of the Indian tour, prominence has been given to the command that care shall be taken so to arrange movements as to avoid journeying and secular work on the Sunday.

MODERN MISSIONS.—To compute the results of modern missions is simply impossible. Figures cannot express them, nor are they visible to the human eye. But it is interesting to know that outside the bounds of Christendom there are 4000 centres of Christian work and Gospel teaching, 2500 congregations, 273,000 communicants, and 1,350,000 nominal Christians.—Extracted.

EDINBURGH.—The weekly meetings for the young in the Free Church Assembly Hall were resumed on Saturday last for the season. From the interest and success with which these meetings have been carried on during the last two years, and the care always taken to make the services suitable, we have no doubt there will continue to be a large attendance. We commend these meetings to the countenance and co-operation of all interested in the young.—Review.

BELL-STREET, EDGWARE-ROAD.—A most interesting meeting took place at the Workmen's Hall on Thursday last, on the occasion of the return of Miss Shipman to the work which she maintains by her munificence and personal superintendence, after her absence for rest and change. An address was presented to Miss Shipman; and at the same time a presentation was made to Mrs. Cook, the Bible-woman who had most efficiently taken charge of the work during Miss Shipman's absence.

PARIS HOME FOR ENGLISH GIRLS.—Miss Ada M. Leigh writes:—"Will you tell your readers that the alterations of the Mission Home in Paris for English Girls are progressing satisfactorily. We hope, please God, to open it free of debt very shortly; meanwhile, gifts—bedding, blankets, &c., and warm clothing—will be very helpful, and may be sent, up to the end of this month, to Mr. Elliot, 15, Princes-street, Edinburgh, or to myself, at Clarence House, Manchester."

GREAT ARTHUR-STREET MISSION.—The fifteenth anniversary of Mr. R. May's work in the above neighbourhood was held on Wednesday last. After tea a public meeting was held, some 750 persons being present; the interest being maintained for nearly three hours. The platform was crowded by Mr. May's personal helpers and sympathizers, including some score of missionaries, Scripture-readers, &c., not connected with the Mission, but being engaged in the same work in adjoining districts, who had come to testify to the good work carried on by Mr. May and his helpers.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. H. Holloway has been the means of bringing many to Christ, and awakening many, at his services in the Ebenezer Hall in this town. If you could see the visages of some of those poor besotted mortals who frequent our meetings, and see how subdued they are under the preaching of the Gospel, it would touch your heart. I could give you instances of black and hardened men who have been melted by the love of Jesus. Mr. Holloway, after taking a short rest, goes to conduct a mission at Mr. George Hatton's Chapel, Little Wild-street, London, starting on the 31st inst. J. O. R.

SOUTH AFRICA.—From Lovedale the accounts continue to be cheering. Seventy-nine native Africans have been baptized as fruits of the recent revival, and the movement is affecting the out-stations also. Mr. Moir writes, "Very many have been awakened to a sense of sin and danger." Speaking of the new Mission to Lake Nyassa, Dr. Duff said, "The whole expedition had been organized thoroughly, and a staff of very remarkable men secured—remarkable, because they were all evidently endowed by the Spirit of God with great zeal and energy, and with many special professional qualifications. There were eight of them, and he was sure it was the most notable mission staff that had ever been sent forth from Scotland."

THE REV. J. R. MACDUFF, D.D., has produced, as a companion to his "Gates of Prayer," "The Gates of Praise."

THE CHICAGO WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE UNION advocates the erection of fountains in the crowded parts of the city, and the payment of labourers on Monday.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS OF BALTIMORE, it is said, have a regular attendance of 42,000 against 39,000 attendance on the public schools.

RANGOON.—A note from the Rev. C. Bennett, of this place, says, "There has been of late an ingathering of Burmans in the valley of the Irrawaddy, and fifty-one have been baptized. Some of them have been converted through the reading of tracts, and had never had the teachings of a missionary."

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—Evangelistic services have been conducted in this town in the Town Hall and Great Hall by Mr. and Mrs. Croxford. The meetings have been well attended, and the power and presence of the Lord have been felt; there is every reason to believe that the Lord will own his own word in this place, and that fruit will be seen after many days.

OUR CHILDREN.—As previously announced, special prayer was offered on Sunday last on behalf of the young in our families. At many of the churches special services for the children were held in the afternoon. A large and interesting gathering met in the Agricultural Hall, when Dr. Thain Davidson addressed his youthful audience from the words, "My jewels" (Mal. iii. 17). We should be glad to hear of any well-ascertained results of these special gatherings.

BROMLEY.—At the second anniversary meeting of the Iron-room Mission here, which is under the fostering care of our brother Mr. Hodder, an interesting address was given by Mr. R. Paton, Secretary to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee, in which he detailed some of his experiences during the late season of special evangelistic work. Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's-churchyard, also spoke, and bore testimony to the reality of the movement.

EDINBURGH.—The attendance at the Noon Meetings has continued to be large. There can be no doubt that the "sweet hour of prayer" in the Free Assembly Hall has been a time of much spiritual refreshment to a great number. From many parts of the country there are frequently coming in grateful acknowledgments of benefits having been received during opportunities of being present, and also encouraging information of the influence which intelligence of its being maintained has upon earnest Christian workers everywhere.

ROMISH TARIFF FOR CONDONING CRIMES.—The Times' Prussian correspondent directs attention to the Bolla di Composizione annually sent to Sicily up to the year 1868 by the Pope. This Bull, containing "an explicit catalogue of crimes, with the sums required to secure forgiveness," was not only sold by the priests, but "speculators purchasing a thousand or so, turned an honest penny by circulating these promissory notes on Paradise," and until the fall of the Neapolitan monarchy, "the Bourbon Crown realized about £8000 a year by its share in the speculation."

THE AMERICAN SABBATH.—The City Tract and Mission Society of Philadelphia have distributed over that city, from house to house, during the months of September and October, a four-page tract, entitled "The American Sabbath." This is an example good enough to be followed in other cities. Two hundred thousand two-page leaflets have been received by the Society from a private individual for general distribution to police-stations, engine-houses, for out-door meetings, and in public institutions for benevolence.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.—The Noon Prayer-meetings are now held in the building lately known as the Museum, in Peter-street, now the central offices of the Young Men's Christian Association. The last of the meetings in the Religious Institute was held on Thursday, the 30th ult., when Dr. Ziemann urged upon all present the full consecration of themselves to the Lord, and spoke of the power for good that went forth from the prayer-meetings. The first of the Museum Noon Meetings since the alterations was held on Friday, the 1st inst., when there was a large assemblage of worshippers. The Rev. Prebendary M'Donald presided, and gave an address based on Luke xxiv. 15, on "Christ as the centre of his people." The reports given at the meeting on Monday morning, the 4th inst., were cheering to the hearts of the Lord's workers, many of whom were present. The number of inquirers after the evening services at the tent in Pendleton during the past week had been large, and many had decided for Christ. It was intended to remove the tent after Monday evening, the 4th inst., but there was such a yearning to hear the Gospel preached, by the very class that it was desired to reach, that it was resolved to continue the services for a longer period. It is in contemplation to take a large room, where the services can be carried on when they can no longer be held in the tent. During the week ending Saturday, the 9th inst., there was an average of nearly 100 inquirers each night, and many were brought to the Saviour. It is intended during the ensuing winter months to hold evangelistic services every Sunday afternoon in the Skating-Rink, a large building near the Alexandra Park. The prayers of the Lord's people are requested on behalf of these services.

THE HIGHLANDS AND ISLANDS.—The Ladies' Association for the Religious Improvement of the Remote Highlands and Islands, according to their report for the past year, have six schools in the Island of Harris, seventeen in Lewis, four in North Uist, thirteen in Skye, one in Barra, two in Tyree, one in Mull, and twelve on the mainland—in all fifty-six in active operation. Copies of the last annual report, with list of stations and map of the field of the Association's labours, with any further information, will be gladly given by the Rev. Dr. M'Lauchlan, Viewforth, Edinburgh.

THE IRISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSION to New Chwang finds that its one ray of light is the opening for the sale of the Scriptures and other books. In about a month Mr. Carson and a young man sold more than 1300 Gospel publications—New Testaments, Gospels, &c. These sales were effected at the inn, consequently the Gospel will be carried to more, probably, than a thousand homes. Mr. Carson met a man who was no fewer than twenty-two days on the road coming here. What a glorious field lies fallow in Manchooria and Mongolia! The Gospel is unknown, and thousands of places remain unvisited by the missionary.

A LONG-FELT WANT.—It is proposed to prepare a guide-book for the use of clergymen, evangelists, Bible-class teachers, and district visitors, containing the names of places where young women's Bible-classes are to be found, both in London and the country. Anyone holding a Bible-class for young women is invited to communicate with Miss Ely or Miss Weibrecht, "Young Women's Christian Association," 19A, Great Portland-street, W., stating the name and address, the hour of meeting, and for whom the class is specially intended under the following heads:—1. Young women in business. 2. Factory girls. 3. Other respectable young women. Also, if the class is in connexion with any church, chapel, Sunday-school, or carried on independently.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN THEATRES, &c.—Mr. Sowell, the Secretary of the Committee for carrying on these services, says, in a circular just issued:—"The Committee regret that for the first time in the history of this movement they commence a new series of services with, for them, a large deficiency (£150); but they have every confidence that with the late wave of blessing which has passed over the metropolis, and the reawakened zeal in the hearts of Christians for evangelistic efforts, the necessary means will be forthcoming. Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., has generously offered £50 towards clearing off the deficiency, if others will co-operate with him. During the past year the Committee have made several additional grants to mission rooms, out of the special subscriptions forwarded for this object."

INDIA.—Singing the Gospel, though a comparatively new method of evangelizing, seems to be blessed and used of God wherever it is adopted. From Bengal we hear of a "Kurrupooker Singing Society," which is an interesting example of spontaneous effort on the part of native Christians, and which shows that in the case of races which have the natural gift for music, singing the Gospel may be a most feasible way of spreading it. This little Society has been at work for the last three years, so they did not receive the notion from Mr. Sankey; they have laboured in twenty or thirty different places, and have seen abundant fruit result from their humble work. Poetry and music have such a power over the Hindoo mind that we trust native Christians in all parts of India may be led to follow this good example.

BURNING OF AN ORPHANS' HOME.—We learn with deep regret that the premises at Essendon, near Hatfield, used for the last four years as a home for orphans, were destroyed by fire on the night of the 9th inst. The whole of the boys, forty-five in number, were providentially saved, and have been temporarily housed in the village. A private circular, detailing the circumstances, says of the home:—"Providing, as it does, for the orphan boys of domestic servants, and others in circumstances where it is needful to secure for them an immediate home without waiting for election, it has proved a great blessing to many a fatherless boy and many a widowed mother." We trust the liberality of Christian friends will enable our brother, Mr. A. O. Charles, to secure another building for the purposes of this good work.

A DARK PICTURE.—Preaching at Eccles on Sunday last, the Bishop of Manchester spoke chiefly of the tendencies of the age. He said the public mind was at present distempered. It craved every morning for something new in the newspapers, and the more startling, the more shocking and revolting this something was, the more the public mind seemed to be satisfied. As in the United States of America, our best citizens were withdrawing from public life to a large extent. Municipal, and even the higher offices of public trust, were handed over sometimes to the most reckless, sometimes to the most wealthy; very rarely to those who had the most public spirit, and could be trusted to devote their energies entirely to the public service. The tone of political parties seemed to be sensibly lower—to have become, he meant, more partisan and less patriotic. Religion, which was his main concern that morning, had degenerated largely into controversy. Superstition on the one hand, and infidelity on the other, were creeping stealthily forward, and occupying hearts in which once burned, or seemed to burn, the flame of a sober and rational piety; and yet all the while there was an aching sense in men's hearts of a great void, which all these things could not fill.

DAILY TEXTS.

"THE SCRIPTURE HATH CONCLUDED ALL UNDER SIN, THAT THE PROMISE BY FAITH OF JESUS CHRIST MIGHT BE GIVEN TO THEM THAT BELIEVE."—GAL. III. 22.

Thurs., Oct. 21.—"The thought of foolishness is sin." "Who-soever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law." "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."—Prov. xxiv. 9; 1 John iii. 4; Rom. xiv. 23.

Fri., 22.—"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."—Ro. vi. 23; John viii. 24.

Sat., 23.—"The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked: but He blesseth the habitation of the just." "Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about."—Prov. iii. 33; Ps. xxxii. 10.

Sun., 24.—"The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment." "Let not thine heart envy sinners; but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long."—Job xx. 5; Prov. xxiii. 17.

Mon., 25.—"To Him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins." "And by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."—Acts x. 43; xiii. 39.

Tues., 26.—"I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto me; for I have redeemed thee." "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Isa. xiv. 22; Rom. v. 8.

Wed., 27.—"I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."—Isa. lxi. 10; Rom. iv. 7.

"AND THERE SHALL BE NO MORE CURSE; BUT THE THRONE OF GOD AND OF THE LAMB SHALL BE IN IT; AND HIS SERVANTS SHALL SERVE HIM, AND THEY SHALL SEE HIS FACE."—REV. XXII. 3.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—That two friends have come to Christ, and found Him to be a precious Saviour; one was prayed for through THE CHRISTIAN.—For many souls led to Jesus at Clay Cross in answer to prayer.—For the safe arrival in Australia, after a stormy passage, of friends who were prayed for in May last.—For much blessing on services lately held at Worcester.—For the healing of sickness, and much spiritual blessing received in the House of Faith, 6, Tower-street, Hackney, E.—For a mighty work of grace at Mullafarry, Killala, and Ballinglen, Ireland.

PRAYER.—That the Lord would open a way for one in great trouble; and also that the wife of the writer may be converted.—For my dear husband, who is giving way to habits of intemperance.—For my mother, old and in poor health, that the Lord would enable her to yield herself to Him.—For a young believer, that recovery from a very trying state of health may be vouchsafed.—A young minister, about to begin work in a large town where much formalism and sin prevail, asks the prayers of God's people that he may be filled with the Spirit, and be greatly used by God in leading many souls to Jesus.—For the deliverance of a young man from a besetting sin.—That great blessing may attend the distribution of "A Saviour for You" in the neighbourhood of a town in North Germany.—Guidance for a young man about taking an important step.—For a family who are sufferers from a commercial fraud.—For one in great distress of mind and body.—For my husband, who is living a life of sin against light and conviction.—For a brother, whose mind is deranged, the effect of intemperance, that this great affliction may not be lasting, and may be the means of his conversion.—By a widowed mother, for one of her sons who is wandering far from God.—For my father, who very decidedly opposes my going to China, where the Lord seems to be calling me to engage in mission work, that he may be led to see the matter in a different light, and may be converted; also that my way may be made very plain.

PLACES.—For a week's special services to be held at Clay Cross, commencing Oct. 24, that many souls may be saved.—For a great blessing for the Sunday-schools at Iver, that many boys and girls may come to Jesus.—For a blessing on special services in Worcester, to be conducted by Rev. C. B. Sawday, of London, from Oct. 17 to 24; and by Mr. Frederick Newman, of Eynesbury, Oct. 25 to 31.—For special services at Ramsgate, from Oct. 23 to the first week in November, by Mr. and Mrs. Croxford.—For a Bible-reading held at the No. 1 British Workman, Derby; and for house-to-house visitation and cottage Bible-reading to be carried on through the winter at Duffield, near Derby.—For a blessing during the visit of W. HOME FOR MISSIONARIES.—The need of a temporary home or resting-place has long been felt by more than one missionary returning from a foreign land to recruit health and strength, to enable them to go forth again to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to perishing souls; and others labouring at home need at times to respond to the Master's invitation, "Come ye apart and rest awhile,"—but where to go, and with whom, is not so easy to answer. I purpose, with the Lord's help, commencing a home for the servants of Christ labouring at home and abroad, open to all holding foundation-truths and walking consistently; and have taken a house well adapted for the purpose, to furnish which, in addition to what I already have, will require about £100. I will gladly and thankfully receive donations from any of the Lord's stewards desirous of having fellowship in this work, which will be commenced and carried on in dependence on the Lord for supplies. "I was a stranger, and ye took me in," is followed by "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

SPECIAL EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT SWANSEA.

A sum of about £250 more required. Subscriptions to be paid to the Swansea Bank, or office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings.

PARSON'S GREEN HOMES, S.W.

The Committee have arranged for a Special Meeting for Prayer and Praise, to be held (d.v.) at 200, Euston-road, N.W., on Wednesday Evening, November 3rd, at 7 p.m.

Friends residing in the Metropolis, who may desire to attend the proposed meeting, are requested to apply at once for tickets of admission; and in order to prevent mistakes, each one is asked to send with the application a stamped envelope addressed fully to themselves.

Christian friends residing in the provinces, who may desire to unite in prayer and praise, are informed that the meeting will be held from 7 to 9 o'clock.

Subjects for praise and prayer:—

For having disposed the hearts of His servants to establish Homes for Friendless and Fallen Females; for having enabled the Committee, especially during the last six years, to admit every suitable applicant; for enabling the Committee to restore so many to friends, and place others in respectable situations; for having led many to repent of sin and trust in Jesus; for having supplied all temporal necessities thus far; for the special help to secure the Homes at Parson's Green. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory."

Contributions received towards the £1900 required,—£1400. The Lord who has helped thus far will doubtless provide the £500 still needed.

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, will receive contributions.

200, Euston-road, N.W.

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS."

Address of the Rev. W. G. Lewis, of Bayswater, to Messrs. Brounston and Easton, at a meeting of friends of the China Inland Mission, in Mildmay Conference Hall, prior to the departure of these brethren as missionaries to China.

MY DEAR BRETHREN,—Nearly nine and a half years ago our loved friend Mr. Taylor asked me to speak a few farewell words to a party of eighteen, of whom he was one, then going out in the good ship Lammermuir to China. Well, I had long ago forgotten every sentence I then spoke, except the text; but since then I had so often heard from different members of the band in the field, and from the lips of those who have returned, how greatly the Lord blessed the message to their souls, that when Mr. Taylor asked me to address you on this occasion I felt impelled to take the same words as the foundation of what I may say. You will find them in Hebrews xii. 2—"Looking unto Jesus."

A very brief reference to the connexion in which they are used will suffice. The inspired writer having spoken of the faith of the heroes of the Old Testament times, and of the great things wrought by them, refers to their testimony as left to the Church,—for the primary work of a witness is to testify. Having such a crowd of testimony, let us run, looking off them unto Jesus. We might say, "Look to Paul, the most able and successful of missionaries"; but Paul would say, "Look higher; you will need a more perfect example than I can furnish; you will often stand in need of encouragement eminently beyond any that I have power to give you."

1. "Looking unto Jesus." Do this, in the first instance, considering always Christ as the Supreme Director of your work. It has pleased God, by his gracious Spirit, to call you to preach the Gospel among the heathen. In you we trust that the Divine Spirit is about to accomplish the same work as was accomplished in the ministry of the Apostle. We trust you are sent "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto God." Now this work is not of man. This undertaking is not the result of any combination of human wisdom, or philanthropy, or holiness. This, the cherished purpose of God, has a distinguished prominence from the most ancient times in his sacred Word. "All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God" (Isaiah lii. 10). He has even appended to this purpose pledges, expressed in the most solemn language that could enter human ears—"As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Numbers xiv. 21, Habakkuk ii. 14).

This is the work of God, then, that you are about to undertake, and this should be most distinctly cherished in your convictions, and bear its impression upon all your labours. This is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, which He himself came to accomplish, in his incarnation, in his sufferings, in his death, and in connexion with which He retains an interest, far loftier and more profound than that which has been entertained by the holiest and best of his followers and friends upon earth. Calvary did not exhaust the Saviour's love to souls; it was an expression of that love unparalleled and unapproachable. But that same unchangeable compassion of the Son of God is still ever associated with faithful, simple, earnest, self-denying efforts to make the Gospel known among the sons of men. By the grace of God we will never forget to pray for you, but we are far too fickle to be depended upon. But be assured that Jesus never will forget you. So long as you adhere to the simple consecration you have professed, rest assured your heavenly Lord and Master will never lose sight of you. You will be very dear to Him. You will be always in his thoughts. And do you never lose sight of the Lord and Master. Be very confidential with Him about all the details of the work. Consult Him in every step that you take. I do not know whether you have read that precious piece of biography, "The Memoirs of Mrs. Winslow." How deep, how practical is her remark, "I tell Jesus everything; I ask Jesus everything." As long as this is the leading rule of your action in missionary work for Christ, you will never be at a disadvantage, for his omnipotence will never fail, his wisdom will never be perplexed, his compassion will never be exhausted. Go forth in his strength, leaning on the arm of the Beloved. Seek such fellowship with Him as when one human heart responds to the beatings of another heart. As long as He is the Supreme Director of the work, you can place before Him all its results and all its responsibilities. If you had to find all its requirements, your prospect would be a poor one indeed. But "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," your hands shall be upheld, and your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. On Feb. 17, 1682, when Francis Bamfield was preaching in the city, a constable came up to him, saying, "Mr. Bamfield, I hold a warrant in the name of the Lord Mayor to stop you." "I hold a warrant from the Lord Maximus to go on," was the reply. The Lord Maximus is He whom you serve and follow.

2. Then, again, I would urge upon you the habitual "looking unto Jesus" as the unfailling source of all fitness for the work. Every instrument requires adaptation and fitness. Suppose you were going forth as the delegates of Western civilization to awaken the dormant curiosity of the many millions of China; to bring them into the regions of sympathy with all living things; to indoctrinate them with all the recent developments of science; to familiarize them with Western literature; to soften their manners, and not suffer them to be brutes,—you would want great adaptation and much care and preparation. But it would be trifling to what you want now. Let me mention two things you require.

(1.) A very high degree of spirituality of mind. This is to be obtained only by "looking unto Jesus." Here is the great need of our prayers for you continually, and of your own prayers. It is hard for some of us, surrounded by privileges as we are, to keep the heart near to the Lord and Master. But you, my brethren, dearly beloved, the very echo of your steps upon the shores of the land where you go will ring through the dark halls of Satan, and his counsels will be stirred up to ensnare your feet, and to put obstacles in your path. Only the almighty grace of Him you follow will be sufficient to maintain a needful degree of spirituality of feeling. Your ears and eyes will be met by the most atrocious crimes and sounds. Nothing will keep you through all this but the daily and hourly recurrence to the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. May the loving God keep you very near to Himself in spirituality of heart and life.

(2.) The enterprise is one which demands a very eminent degree of prudence and strength of moral character. It is not every man that is fit to be a missionary to the Chinese. You are going to the most astute of the peoples of the earth—a race that is a very paradox to us. The stratagems of political finesse, and the shrewdness of commercial sagacity, find it scarcely possible to bring them into the comity of nations. In the conflict in which you engage, Saul's armour will not serve for your defence, nor Saul's weapons for your attack. The Chinese are to be won, not by the sulphurous cruelties of war, but by the loving power of the everlasting Gospel. Your battle is the Lord's, the warrior and his weapons must be the Lord's, and the victory shall be entirely His. Take constant counsel with the Saviour. He will preserve you—and that will not be a small thing—from indiscretion, from shortness of temper, from unwisdom in causing offence, from unseasonableness of zeal, from haughtiness of manner. Ever recognize the fact that all your strength is in Another—that is, the Lord Jesus.

3. Once more I charge upon you this "looking unto Jesus" as your refuge in all times of distress and trouble. Do not wait until the heavens have become all black, and the storm bursts; but when the small cloud is on the horizon, flee to the Saviour. I do not know, but it may be, but in a very short time you will have your faith in Christ sternly tried. Perhaps when you have found the distance of a few hundred miles between you and this land, the heart-strings will relax, and the spirit will sink. Perhaps as your voyage lengthens, home will cling about your memories as it never did before, and thoughts of the friends of your childhood may try very forcibly the strength of your resolution. In every conflict of the kind may your remedy be "looking unto Jesus." We do not know, but your voyage out may be over stormy seas and exposure to bodily peril. We know this: our Christ will be with you in the typhoon and the tornado as really as in the church and in the assembly of his worshipping people. You will have to meet all sorts of difficulties and trials; you will awaken the hostility of Satan; you will want sustaining power. Look to the Saviour; think of his faithfulness unto death. It may be, though we will earnestly pray that God will preserve your health, that you will be exposed to bodily pain and suffering. If lingering in sickness in some lonely hut, or boat, and dependent on strangers for help, may He be near to you who says, "I am Jehovah-Rophi" (the Lord that healeth thee). We do not know, it may be, that He who sends you forth may call you to an early triumph and an early reward. Brethren beloved, may you in that hour be "looking unto Jesus."

4. May this be your spirit and conduct, a continual looking to Him as the truest Friend of your work, and the faithful Promiser of a large reward for its continuance unto the end. He has engaged to crown every one of his faithful servants. It is the spirit of the labourer He thinks of. He is sending you to do more good to yourselves than you could do to anybody else. If it were not for the welfare of the labourer, we should all be displaced by Him, and angels would take the work. But our faith needs to be strengthened, our love enlarged, our meetness for the Kingdom matured.

Brethren and sisters, we charge our brethren about to leave us to be "looking unto Jesus": may we show [758] the sincerity of our wishes by walking in the same direction ourselves. Let us strive to find in Him more and more intensely "the chiefest of ten thousand," our all in all, for time and for eternity.

Brethren beloved, God speed you. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Though we shall never meet again as this afternoon, by the grace of our heavenly Saviour be it yours and ours in his time to hear the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Amen.

THE INQUIRY-MEETING.*

I.—WHAT IT IS.

"AWAKENED sinners are as prone to fall into the Slough of Despond in our day as they were eighteen hundred years ago, when so many thousands were sinking in it, and the first great evangelistic service was of necessity resolved into an inquiry-meeting.

"The place of inquiry may be the open air, as when, in the wilderness or on the banks of Jordan, the people, the publicans, and the soldiers, awakened under the preaching of the Baptist, stated their difficulties, and John cut the knot in each case in his own decisive way. Or the inquiry-room may be the street or the temple porch, as when Peter dealt with the three thousand inquirers, and answered the question, 'Men and brethren, what must we do?' Or it might be in a chariot, as when Philip instructed the eunuch; or in a gaol, as when Paul answered the question of the awakened gaoler; or in a private room, as when the same apostle answered the questions of his inquiring countrymen in 'his own hired house' at Rome.

"Some imagine, or affect to believe, that an inquiry-meeting is a kind of confessional. Nothing could be further from the truth. There is no priest, no confession of sin, and no absolution. There is no secrecy, no mystery, and nothing in the conversation that might not be proclaimed from the housetop. On the part of the inquirer it is in substance the asking of the question, 'What must I do to be saved?' On the part of the Christian worker it is the opening up of the divinely inspired answer, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved,' in an honest attempt to explain the simple plan of salvation, with earnest prayer for the teaching and grace of the Holy Spirit. Conversation, or a free, friendly discussion involving question and answer on the one side and on the other, has been a recognized mode of instruction since the days of Socrates, ay, even since the time of the patriarch Job. In fact, for the elucidation and communication of truth, the catechetical method, or, in other words, conversation, is not excelled by any of the other modes of instruction, and possesses invaluable advantages of its own. The decay of this method indicates, we fear, the advent of a shallower age, or at least an age whose knowledge is at once more extensive and less profound. At all events, if for one half of our sermonizing we could substitute the old-fashioned diet of catechizing, there would be a clear gain to fulness and accuracy of religious knowledge, and inquiry-meetings would be at once less a novelty and less a necessity. Meanwhile, there is surely nothing unreasonable or unscriptural in persons competent in point of knowledge and Christian wisdom giving answer to the earnest question of the inquirer, 'What am I to do to obtain salvation?' 'At a fountain in one of your streets,' said Mr. Moody, 'a stranger from the country sought to refresh himself the other day. There he stood with the empty "Dealing with inquirers is difficult work, the most difficult perhaps within the circle of Christian effort. Few are able to trace the subtle movements of the human soul, especially when it becomes the theatre of a spiritual war. When the spirit and the flesh, truth and error, the love of sin and its recoil on the conscience, the tangible, ever-present, all-powerful interests of time, and the more distant but tremendous realities of eternity, strive for the mastery, the conflict is terribly real. Let not the eye of idle curiosity look on this momentous struggle; let no fool intermeddle with this awful strife. Grim and ghastly memories of the past, present evil in portentous shapes, and ominous forebodings of judgment to come, mingle in the scene. When fears, stings of self-reproach, pangs of remorse, the bitterness of wounded pride, the gall and wormwood of baffled effort, the sense of God's wrath, and the shadows of despair possess the soul, one can understand the psalmist's experience—'The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me.'

* From a valuable book, now in the press, entitled "Revival, and Revival Work," giving a comprehensive account of revival movements, with special reference to the remarkable work of God in this country, during 1873-75, under Messrs. cup in his hand, vainly endeavouring to fill it; he did not know how to touch the secret spring. At length despairing, for not a drop would come, he threw down the cup and was going away. A little shoe-black, taking pity on him, touched the spring with his dirty thumb, and out gushed the water in a crystal stream. Now, that dirty little shoe-black did better than a bishop could, if the bishop did not know how to touch the spring. Why, then, should not one who knows the way of salvation explain it to one who does not know?

"There are some who enter the Kingdom of God with scarce a struggle. They are born in great peace. Their light comes in like a fair summer morning. Like Cæsar Malan, they are awakened up to a new life, under the quickening breath of Divine love, as a babe is awakened by its mother's kiss. The Holy Spirit leads them gently, even as a tender nurse leads a delicate child, and they learn to walk almost without a fall. But the trouble will come; the battle must be fought one day. There is no crown where there is no victory, and no victory where there is no conflict. To some the bitterness of life's cup lies at the bottom; but it is in the cup to all. If sharp pangs of conviction come not before conversion, or in conversion, they will assuredly come afterwards. This knowledge of sin is one of the fine accomplishments of the saint, and must be learned some day and somehow. True it is indeed that the way of salvation is plain to the enlightened eye, and easy to the foot of faith; but so long as man is what he is, so long as ignorance and pride, unbelief and foolishness, are bound up in the heart, so long as the great adversary is master of the situation—and he is master, ay, until cast out by a stronger than he—so long will awakened souls be found in the Slough of Despond, floundering in the mire, and unable even to see the steps.

"Now, under God, to guide the oppressed and struggling spirit in the line of safety, to raise no false battle-cry, to display no ill-omened flag of truce, to hurry on no unholy peace, to shout no premature cry of victory, and yet to press the banner of the Cross to the forefront, to sound the trumpet-call of immediate decision, and urge the matter to a speedy and successful issue on the side of truth, is a task demanding the highest Christian wisdom. To discover and expose the crafty shifts of an awakened soul, in its restless wanderings within the enchanted circle of dead works, needs no little skill. For this work it is not enough to possess clear views of the way of salvation; knowledge of human nature and Christian experience are needed no less. To guide the inquirer, it is often necessary not only to teach, but also to contend. Error in its most refined and truth-like forms, sin in its most subtle and deceptive guises, unbelief all the more fiendish that it is clothed as an angel of light, and the prince of darkness making a final stand for his trembling empire, conspire for the mastery of the soul at the time of its most earnest inquiry and agonizing efforts to escape. In contending with principalities and powers on the terra incognita, the mist-shrouded field of the inquirer's heart, your efforts will sometimes be baffled and your weapons shivered, and you will be made to feel as helpless as you would in a personal conflict with Apollyon in the Valley of Humiliation. You can only cry to the Captain of salvation for succour. Hence, all other things being equal, the best qualified guide of the inquirer is the believer who is filled with the Spirit. Such an one alone possesses the needful skill, courage, sympathy, and faith. Even such an one, although he stands in the full light of God, panoplied over with all grace, will sometimes be foiled and beaten, and compelled to leave the inquirer in the hands of Him to whom nothing is too hard. You are made to feel the force, if you do not quite comprehend the meaning, of the Lord's words, 'This kind goeth not forth but by prayer and fasting.'

ROTHERHITHE GOSPEL HALL.

THIS new iron structure was opened for service on the 8th inst. by a tea and public meeting. The attendance was large, and very encouraging to the promoters of this much-needed mission effort. H. J. Bristow, Esq., presided, and he, as well as several neighbouring ministers, made speeches full of hearty sympathy and friendship. Mr. S. Golding and Mr. Trevor Francis, who have undertaken the burden of the work connected with the mission, also spoke, the former giving a brief history of its origin and progress.

On Saturday evening following, a "praise meeting" was held; and on Sunday morning, at eight, two excellent addresses were given to Christian workers by the Revs. J. A. Brown and Samuel Wilks. The meeting at eight on Sunday morning, we understand, is to be continued, and the attendance of all "workers" is invited.

Mr. S. Golding writes to us:—"Every night since its opening this hall has been crowded, and upon some evenings numbers have been sent away unable to gain admission. The Divine power has been manifested, too, in an especial manner, and many of God's dear children have been aroused to a sense of their responsibility, and not a few hardened sinners brought to trust in Jesus. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for us that we may have still more abundant blessing?"

HOLLOWAY.—Mr. J. Trotman, jun., of the Rustic Works, Holloway-road, has, at his own expense, fitted up a small Gospel hall in connexion with his premises, and has conducted services there and in his gateway throughout the summer. Help has been rendered by various evangelists, and members of the Open-Air Mission, and fruits of these efforts have appeared from time to time. Visitors who would help in the work will be gladly welcomed, also tracts for distribution.

ALDERSHOT.—The Rev. A. Beable, Bible-Christian minister, has moved to Aldershot, and is endeavouring to cope with some of the prevalent ungodliness. For this purpose he desires to hold Gospel services every Saturday night in the Assembly Rooms, in order to attract, with the help of good singing, the crowds that throng the drink saloons on that evening. We commend this effort to the consideration and aid of those who know the great need of the locality and are willing to help, and shall be glad to receive their offerings.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG MEN.—The committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, have appealed to the clergy and ministers of London to make the case and cause of young men a matter of special attention in their sermons on Sunday, Nov. 14, and to move their congregations to special prayer for young men in all public and domestic services of prayer during the week. Suggested topics:—Sunday, Nov. 14: (1) Sermons to young men; (2) Prayer for a blessing on such sermons, and on all the agencies employed by the Young Men's Christian Associations; (3) Prayer for a blessing on all agencies seeking the conversion of young men. Monday, 15: For young men brought up in the light of the Gospel, that they may be truly converted to God, and may thus be enabled to withstand the assaults of scepticism, and the numerous temptations to immorality. Tuesday, 16: For converted young men, and especially for such as are living in isolated positions, without opportunities of Christian fellowship—that they may be built up in the Christian faith by the operation of the Holy Spirit, and be beacons of light in the world. Wednesday, 17: For young men brought up in ignorance of the Gospel, and especially that God may put it into the hearts of some of their more favoured brethren to carry the Gospel to them. Thursday, 18: For young men in the army and navy. Friday, 19: For young men engaged in commerce (including sailors of the mercantile marine) and in agriculture, and for young men preparing for, or entering on, the learned professions. Saturday, 20: For young men preparing for, or already engaged in, the Christian ministry, or as home or foreign missionaries.

REST FOR OUR WEARY SISTERS.

DEAR SIR,—The case of the drapers' female assistant published in your impression of the 14th may well be described by you as "little better than alavery." Alas! there are hundreds of shops where the assistant's lot is harder than the one that has called forth your commiseration—shops kept open every night till eleven o'clock, and where the poor girls are compelled to pull off their boots on account of the suffering occasioned by the swelling of their ankles! I must not, however, dwell on these things, knowing that your space is required for other subjects.

I will, then, address myself to your correspondent's question—"Can anything be done to relieve us poor fagged-out females?" My answer is, Yes! In a note I have just received from Lord Shaftesbury, in reply to one I addressed to him on my "seats movement," his lordship says, "I have long been aware of the sufferings to which the various classes of shopwomen are subjected, and I shall be very glad to hear of any effort that shall be made on their behalf." Few as are these words, they will carry comfort to thousands of "fagged-out females." But 'this is not all; several of the leading journals—medical and general—have declared themselves strongly in favour of the movement. I will now explain my plan of operation, and point out how THE CHRISTIAN may aid it.

Plan: To get the subjoined schedule filled in; when I have been furnished with 400 or 500 cases, to have the schedule printed and distributed amongst the members of both Houses of Parliament and throughout the country. Taken up by Lord Shaftesbury in the Upper House (on which I think we may assuredly rely), and by — in the Lower, and backed by the public press, we should not have to wait long for legislation on the hours question, while the seats question would commend itself to every reader of the schedule.

By the publication of this letter and the schedule you will be helping the "fagged-out female" assistants to help themselves, and your more fortunate readers to help their distressed sisters.

Yours very faithfully,
Leeston, Weston-super-Mare, Oct. 15. FREDK. SMITH.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

THIS great gathering of Christians, which met last week at Belfast, was inaugurated by a prayer-meeting on Tuesday afternoon in the Music Hall, which was largely attended. A meeting for reception of the delegates took place in the Ulster Hall in the evening. Lord Waveney, the President of the Alliance, took the chair, and gave an address in which he sketched the conditions of the religious world leading to the formation of the Alliance, and the benefits of such an organization in promoting visible and practical union among the various sections of the Christian Church.

Rev. Dr. Henry, Queen's College, Belfast, welcomed the foreign representatives. He said the highest union that ought to bind Christians, of whatever language or clime, into one sacred and inseparable bond, was that which originated in the brotherhood of the Redeemer himself, and clasped with the right hand of hearty fellowship all who believed in the Lord Jesus Christ. While conscientiously belonging to different denominations, they were prepared to unite with all who hold the supremacy of Christ, justification through his blood, the sufficiency of Scripture, and conversion through his Spirit, in endeavouring to extend a knowledge of these essential truths to the whole human family, barbarian, Scythian, bond and free. After dwelling briefly on some of the causes of division among Christians, and expressing his approval of all well-conducted evangelistic efforts, he concluded:—"I confess I have no fear for the future of the Church if the Bible—free and unclasped, carrying to every man's door a copyright within its inspired pages, making conveyance to the poor negro at his daily task, as well as to potentates and monarchs, of the inalienable individual prerogative to open, to read, to learn, and believe,—that Bible, the sword of the Spirit, the great instrument which is destined to overthrow the stupendous systems of superstition and idolatry which make the world groan under the pressure of accumulated misery,—that Bible, now translated into hundreds of tongues, is carried over every sea into the doors of entrance opened in the darkest and most distant climes, for the healing of the nations, and for the establishment of righteousness, purity, and universal freedom."

At one of the Wednesday meetings, the report of the Alliance was read by the Secretary, Rev. J. Davis. It stated that new branches had been established in Canada and other places. Advantage had been taken of the visit of the Shah of Persia, the Czar of Russia, and the Sultan of Zanzibar to present them with addresses, and urge the necessity of a free circulation of the Bible. The Council had recently been considering the religious persecutions in Turkey. The restrictions on the printing of the Bible in the Turkish language had now been removed, and most of the points asked by the Alliance had been granted. The Council had been invited to hold a special conference in Rome.

During the evening sitting, a thrilling address was given by Rev. J. P. Chown, of Bloomsbury Chapel, on "The life of the Church, and how to quicken it." A dead church, or a Laodicean or lukewarm church, he said, was a disgrace to God, a discredit to the name she bore, and a grief and disappointment to all who might ever look upon it.

Pastor Fische, from Paris, gave an encouraging report of religious progress in France, and said that one-half of their 7000 Sunday scholars were converted Romanists.

The Rev. T. Gay, from Rome, said that the Alliance had taken root in Italy. It used to be the case, even under the pontificate of Pius IX., that a Bible found in a person's house was enough to get them imprisoned, but now Rome can send to all Italy the Bible in the Italian tongue. They had got as a convert a man far more important than the Marquis of Ripon, or any of those converted here in England. He alluded to Dr. Lana, who had been professor of philosophy in the private seminary of the Pope at the Vatican. He was the first priest that had come over from the Vatican; and let them look for success when from the very head-quarters of the enemy they were receiving help. He proceeded to speak of the various churches at work in Italy, and stated that they had more than 400 soldiers converted from Popery.

At the second meeting, on Thursday, Right Hon. Master

Brooke presided, and referred to the late conference of Old Catholics, &c., at Bonn. Reports were also given of revival work in Scotland, Ireland, and England, the details of which are already known to our readers.

Mr. Faithful spoke hopefully of Spain; and the same may be said of Rev. Mr. Von Andel's remarks on Holland.

A request from the Christians at Rome to hold the next meeting of the Alliance there was considered, and referred to the Council. It supporting it, Pastor Gay quoted a saying of Garibaldi's, that Rome had two epochs—first, ancient Rome; second, the epoch of the Pope. He asked them to go and inaugurate the third epoch—the epoch of the Gospel.

The Rev. W. Wright, Damascus, detailed the persecutions inflicted on Christians and Moslem converts to Christianity in the Turkish dominions; and a resolution was agreed to, recommending the Council to active exertion on this subject until religious freedom was secured in Turkey.

The evening meeting was chiefly devoted to the subject of Christian union, and suitable addresses were delivered by Dr. Donald Fraser, Rev. R. D. Wilson (Craven Chapel), and Canon Battersby. Rev. A. McAulay, of Liverpool, also spoke on the "Signs of the Times," showing that the world was being prepared to receive the Gospel of Christ. This was made manifest by the shaking and uprooting of old notions and prejudices all over heathendom, and increased spiritual life at home.

The meetings of the Alliance were closed by a public breakfast on Friday morning.

MISSION IN JAFFA.

THIS Mission, which was commenced by Miss Walker-Arnott as a school for girls in 1863, has gradually widened its borders, so that now Christian instruction is given to both sexes and all ages. Evangelistic services also form part of its operation. A new building for these purposes has just been erected, and respecting it Miss Walker-Arnott writes, on Sept. 16, describing the opening under encouraging conditions, but adds, "The money sent us has not been more than one-third of the sum needed (£2500). At great personal inconvenience I have risked my own small property in order to accomplish this undertaking, which I fervently hope may be followed with increasingly blessed results. We return grateful thanks to those who have responded to our appeal, but are there not many more who would willingly help us if they knew the great need?" We would remind our readers that at Jaffa (then called Joppa) it was first made clear to Peter that the Gentiles were admitted into the full privileges of the grace of God. Do we not owe a debt to Jaffa? Any help towards this deserving institution will be received by Miss Walker-Arnott at Jaffa, Syria, by Miss Stone, Erith House, Torquay, Secretary to the Mission, or by ourselves.

ABERGAVERNNEY.—Miss Savill, of Clifton, has been conducting services for young women in the lecture-hall connected with the Priory here. The meetings have been well attended, and great interest and attention have prevailed. C.

GLASGOW FLOWER MISSION.—During the past season a "Ladies' Flower Mission" has been carried on in connexion with the Glasgow Western Infirmary; and the patients, through the bouquets and text-holders, have been enabled, in the words of the correspondent who sends us the intelligence, "to possess a flower from the gardens of nature and revelation—the former producing tears of joy at the thought that they are not forgotten, and the latter unveiling to their hearts the sweetness and fragrance of 'Sharon's fair and bleeding rose.'" The work of the Mission has been blessed to the souls of many of the recipients of its bounty.

WHITBY has experienced such a blessed season during the past six or seven weeks as it probably never experienced in any prior part of its history. About six weeks ago Mr. Thomas Johnson, of the Evangelization Society, commenced a course of services in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association; but these were found to be too small for the numbers who flocked to hear the Gospel, and the large hall known as St. Hilda's was taken. This place was full at the first service, and on the second and following nights people were unable to get seats—even standing-places were difficult to obtain. The Sunday services were held at 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. in the Congress Hall (the largest in the town, and which could only be obtained on Sundays). This was also packed with attentive audiences. Many precious souls have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and have found Jesus to be a precious Saviour. Mr. Johnson goes to conduct a mission in Leeds, and we would earnestly urge all true Christians in that great town to rally round him, and assist him in his noble work. W. G. PERCIVAL.

EVANGELISTIC TOUR IN AMERICA.

BY JOSEPH WEATHERLEY.

HAVING just returned from a tour in America with my friend Mr. Holroyde, whither we accompanied our brethren Moody and Sankey, it may be interesting to your readers to hear our experience; and at the same time we shall be glad to express to the brethren, who so warmly welcomed us on the other side of the Atlantic, our grateful thanks for the many kindnesses we received at their hands.

Before leaving us, our brother Moody sketched out a general plan for our travels, and introduced us to Mr. W. E. Dodge, who took us to his country home on the Hudson for the Sunday's rest. Here we were not allowed to remain idle, for our kind host arranged with the Episcopal and Presbyterian clergymen to have a meeting at a mission church in the neighbourhood, at which both were present with a large number of their respective congregations. Here began a series of addresses upon the late blessed work in our land, which we shall always look back to with thankfulness, for while in many cases they were the means of stirring up the churches, frequently we were permitted to see souls brought to know Jesus. With the aid of Mr. McBurney, of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York, the following places were visited:—

the famous American watering-place, with its 20,000 visitors, had among them many of the Lord's people, who met daily at the noon prayer-meeting in the large Congregational Church. Here there was such a desire to hear about the work in England that we were, on beginning to speak, voted the remaining portion of the hour, and requested to stay for the next day's meeting and to take the whole hour. This we cheerfully consented to do, feeling the importance of such an influential audience to the forthcoming work of our brethren Moody and Sankey in their native land. We were not disappointed; the church was full, and a vote of welcome proposed by Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, was so heartily responded to that we could not but rejoice that our steps had been directed thither. The next place of importance visited was where we had on Sunday evening a crowded meeting in the large hall of the Young Men's Christian Association's beautiful building. At the after-meeting there were so many anxious souls that we were induced to stay for another meeting the next day, when, as on the previous evening, there were many anxious, and several professed to find peace. At the hotel one of the upper servants came to us in deep distress of soul, having heard us preach on the Sunday evening. With the simplicity of a little child she drank in the story of the Cross, and went on her way rejoicing. From thence we went to where we had only a few hours to spare, but with the aid of Mr. J. Sabine Knight, who was spending a few days here, waiting for cooler weather to go to his labours among the freedmen of the South, the active secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association had arranged a mid-day meeting. There was a good attendance, and those dear people who had recently seen much blessing through the instrumentality of our dear brother Henry Varley, listened with evident interest. Noticing, as I was leaving the room, a young man with downcast countenance, I spoke to him about his soul, and found him very anxious. He was visiting the city on business for the day only, and seeing the placards announcing the meeting, he determined to come. It was the case of a soul seeking a Saviour; he found, and went away rejoicing. As we embarked after the meeting, our hands were grasped by several business young men who had spent the noon meal-hour in attending the service. We were to have been the next Sunday in Chicago, but such pressing invitations came to us from that we felt we dare not pass them by. At each of these cities, as well as at Windsor on the Canadian frontier, we had services, and have reason to believe that in all, but in London and Amhurstburg especially, many souls were brought to the Lord.

SAINT PAUL,

on the Mississippi, 1500 miles from New York, nearly the most western point we reached, was the first of a series of cities in which we found great anticipations, and a longing desire for revival, and hence our description of the work in our own land was listened to with intense interest. Here preparations were being made for a visit from our brethren Whittle and Bliss. In our sojourn of two days and a half, we had five meetings. The clergy of nearly all denominations were there, and the spirit of prayer and entire consecration of time, influence, and money was so apparent, that we felt the shower of blessing had already commenced by a baptism of the churches. We only regretted that we were compelled to hasten our departure from this neighbourhood, as in a hasty visit to Minneapolis, we found we were expected there also, but an engagement at already twice postponed, was imperative. Here we found even a still greater yearning for a blessing; and it much needs it, for, notwithstanding the efforts made by many of the Lord's most devoted servants, the marvellous growth of this wonderful city has brought with it a tide of infidelity, corrupt literature, Sabbath-breaking, and gambling which is simply appalling. It is well known that our American cousins endeavour to excel in everything, and in no city is this more apparent than in Chicago. Nowhere did we meet with larger prayer-meetings, or so large a band of Christians working manfully for the Master; but as pre-eminent in this way, so the other extreme is more than fully exemplified. Perhaps this is felt by no one more than by our dear brother Moody, and it will rejoice his heart to know that we in England are praying for Chicago. I need hardly say that here we got a very warm reception. We attended a preliminary meeting of the leading Christians, to consider the means to be taken for mass meetings on the return of our brethren to their own city; so deep was the interest in the English work, that we were pressed to stay for a week to attend the adjourned meeting, at which it was expected that all the evangelical churches would be represented. We knew that Chicago had a claim upon British Christians, and even with the risk of shortening our visit to other cities, we felt we ought to consent to this arrangement. At once the leading churches were thrown open to us, and our difficulty was what to refuse. We therefore placed ourselves at the disposal of our dear friend and host Mr. John V. Farwell, who arranged for one or two services every day, including a visit for Gospel preaching at Ottawa States Fair; also at Lake Forest, and a camp-meeting at Lake Bluff. At each we found an increasing desire for a revival of God's work in their midst, which culminated at the adjourned meeting of Christian workers of the city, where no less than seventy-five evangelical churches were represented by their ministers and leading members. It was then resolved to raise the necessary funds for securing large buildings, and to send off a deputation of five with a most touching appeal to our brother Moody to come and work in his old home—an appeal which, we heard from his dear wife, drew tears from his eyes. From Chicago we proceeded to where a deputation of the churches, headed by Dr. Newman, chaplain to the President, met us, and hearing that we could only stay in the city three days, at once arranged for as many meetings as could be crammed into that time. Washington, like the other cities of the United States, is waking up to the necessity for an earnest effort to arrest the abounding iniquity. Only a week before, Dr. Newman had travelled all the way to Northfield to endeavour to get our brother Moody to fix a time for his visit. Though this city does not bear the same relation to other parts of the States as London does to the British Isles, there are so many young men employed in the Government offices, besides the multitudes brought together while Congress is in session, that we ought to remember our brethren's desire for prayer for this city. During our short sojourn here we had no less than seven meetings, at most of which there was a re-dedication of themselves by the Lord's people, and we had the joy of seeing many who had been halting led to decide for Jesus. Nor were our brethren unmindful of our desire to see their fine city; and we cannot sufficiently thank them for placing their time and carriages at our service for this purpose.

BALTIMORE AND PHILADELPHIA.

At the former we could only remain for the noon prayer-meeting, but, as at Toronto, during this short visit it was our privilege to see a soul brought to Jesus. At Philadelphia we found, if it were possible to say so, that our visit was pre-eminently timely. Mr. Geo. H. Stuart, so well known on this side the Atlantic, was to have given a special address on the Lord's work in England on the following day, but was laid aside by an attack of asthma. It was therefore our privilege to fill the gap. We were introduced to the meeting by that esteemed veteran in the Church of Christ, Dr. Newton. It was a service none of us can forget. We had a large after-meeting, and as we saw the results we could but feel, that as in other parts of America, so here—God was preparing hearts for seed, and full ripe corn for the sickle of the labourer. A gathering of all the evangelical churches had been called for the next day, to consider the plans for Moody and Sankey's meetings, so that here, again, our London experience was in request. There was a unity and earnestness on the part of our Philadelphian brethren which was hardly surpassed at Chicago, and it was difficult to tell our brother Moody which was the more prepared. I must not now take up your space by describing

MR. WANAMAKER'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL,

but allow me to say that what I saw there makes me long for the day when we shall adopt the International Lesson System, and our school services have the brightness and vivacity introduced by our American brother. At another time I hope to describe this school. From Philadelphia we returned to where we found a committee for Moody and Sankey's services already formed, and in many ways the arrangements much in advance of those in other cities. We attended the committee, and were glad to have it in our power to set one or two brethren right as to the effect of these special efforts upon the regular church services, and quoted the experience of Mr. Billing as to his congregation during the time of, and subsequent to, the services in the Agricultural Hall.

My principal object in entering into this lengthened account of our tour in the American cities is to stir up the hearts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray for a blessing on the campaign our brethren hope to begin almost at once. Of its need no one who knows America can doubt, for it is now proverbial that in her politics, in her commerce, and in her social life, there is a moral darkness that may be felt, and even the secular press is calling out for our brethren to preach among their own countrymen that Gospel which was attended with such mighty results in England. "Ask your countrymen to pray for us," were the last words we heard from many lips as we took our departure from the cities through which we passed. It will interest your readers to know that we paid a parting visit to our brother Moody in his quiet abode at where we found him full of joy that the blessing which followed his word in England was not withheld there. It had been true of him as of the Master—"A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country," etc.; but the Lord has made his present visit not only a blessing to members of his own family, but to the whole neighbourhood, and both in the village and on the cars we heard testimony of the work of God there. The dear old mother, whose tearful watching for her prodigal boy used to be told so touchingly, now resting on Jesus, and the brothers, who hitherto have been prominent members in the Unitarian Church, now saying of Jesus "My Lord and my God," while a neighbour notorious for his profane language and ungodly conduct told, with touching simplicity, how he had just been led to Jesus, and, like another demoniac, was "sitting clothed and in his right mind," formed a group around the Word of God, the evening we spent in the old homestead at Northfield, which will not easily be forgotten by any of us who were present.

KILMARNOCK.—A fortnight of special services, under the auspices of the Kilmarnock Y.M.C. Association, have just been held, with gratifying results in the quickening of saints and conversion of sinners. The meetings were addressed by the Messrs. Stewart, of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, and were characterized by deep spiritual power, and a tone of great earnestness. Nightly meetings for the young were also held, and latterly the attendance was such that it was thought advisable to have a separate service for the senior boys and girls. This division was followed with most beneficial results in the ingathering of souls, numbers of the elder portion being in an anxious state of mind. As it was found impossible to have personal conversation with all who waited for counsel, they were divided into little groups, and willing workers at once sought to point them to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and very many professed to have found rest in Christ. With a view of feeding the lambs, a staff of workers have each taken charge of little bands of from six to twelve for the purpose of meeting in private once a week for prayer and Christian counsel.

"RESCUE THE PERISHING."

DEPTFORD "GOSPEL MISSION" AND "INDUSTRIAL HOME."

DEAR FRIENDS,—In a few days we shall enter upon our fourth year of labour for God in this place. Naturally, at such a time, our thoughts run back to the time when our heart was first drawn out to care for poor boys, and we are greatly cheered to think what divine grace has done in our midst since then. Will you join us in our evening visit to the dear lads in our Home?

Passing up the street we meet a boy wheeling a great canvas frame bearing in large letters the announcement of to-night's Gospel service in the People's Hall, and just behind is a large band of converts and earnest labourers singing sweet hymns and sweeping along with them a crowd of working-people, who will soon throng into the Mission Hall and eagerly listen to the Word of Life. The boy's happy face as he recognizes us arrests your attention, and you want to know his history.

His father was the sexton of a church, but absconded with some money belonging to a benefit society, and left his wife quite destitute. The poor woman died shortly after in a London hospital. Virtually an orphan, and without any friends to care for him, poor Dick found employment in a horsedealer's yard; but falling into bad company, became connected with a gang of juvenile fruit-stealers.

Having been discharged with a caution for the first offence proved against him, later on in the same week he was in custody for a similar theft, and was sent to Wandsworth Gaol for three weeks' imprisonment. We became acquainted with the history of the poor lad one evening while investigating the story of a young runaway, whom we had the pleasure of safely restoring to his anxious parents, and the next morning made our way to the prison and had an interview with the benevolent governor, who readily offered us every assistance in his power. On the morning of his discharge, poor Dick was greatly surprised to find some one waiting to kindly escort him to the Home, where he is now shielded from temptation and happily learning to be a shoemaker. Will you remember the lad in prayer, that his soul may find life, rest, and joy in believing on the name of the Son of God?

But here we are at our unpretentious but much-loved home, and our ring is speedily answered by a little fellow—the most shrewd, brisk, witty mannikin, we believe, in all London. An elder lad is bringing a tray from the kitchen piled up with huge slices of bread for tea. You notice that the boy has a somewhat superior appearance to the other lads noisily swarming round us. His case again illustrates the character of our work, and proves that it is quite beyond the range of any existing Acts of Parliament, however rigorously enforced. The lad's father is a soldier on foreign service; on the death of his mother, some years ago, he went to work for his uncle, a large baker, in a great midland city. Having begun a system of pilfering, he became so fearful of detection that he ran away, and, after roaming about for some weeks in a starving condition, applied for admission into the Home. Inquiries were at once made into the truth of his story, and by an early train his uncle came up with a warrant for the boy's apprehension, and fully determined to prosecute him for his theft. In vain for a long time we endeavoured to dissuade him from doing so, pointing out that as he would not receive the lad into his house again, as soon as the term of imprisonment was over he would be cast upon the streets without a character, and, probably, be speedily reconvicted, and become a confirmed gaol-bird. Finding all our earnestness in this line of argument useless, we determined to accompany the uncle and his prisoner home to the midland city. When the man became calmer his heart softened towards the boy, and when we reached his house the whole matter was arranged so that by the very next train we returned in triumph to London with the boy in tears of gratitude for his rescue from certain imprisonment. Ask the father of the Home, and he will tell you the lad gives every satisfaction, and bids fair to be a real credit to the Home. Now take a look at our family—their cheery faces sparkling with fun seem to belie the sadness of their histories and the hardships of their past lives.

Through the generosity of a kind lady, we have just been enabled to add ten beds, so that we have accommodation for forty boys now, but we are working very hard and waiting much upon God to have a comfortable home for eighty lads by the end of this year.

We have taken the next house for this purpose, and intend making one large building with a new school-room, dining-hall, and workshops in the rear, so that our devoted labourer^s need not any longer work under the disadvantages from which they have suffered in the past for want of suitable premises and necessary conveniences.

For this we will want £1200, and we hope every reader of THE CHRISTIAN will try and help us in some way in this important work. If any who wish to do so will communicate with us we will gladly correspond with them about the matter. The third report of the Home is now ready, and can be had on application by letter.

Seeking to be continued in prayerful remembrance,

I am, dear Friends, yours faithfully,
The Boys' Home, J. W. C. FEGAN.

"UNDER THE LEAVES."

Oh, ye who went forth in the dew of your morning,

And heavily toiled in the vineyard all day,

The shadows of evening are gathering o'er you :

Why have ye so little to carry away ?

O'er a half-empty basket the labourer grieves,
If he seek not the fruits that lie "under the leaves."

And ye who are strong and determined to gather

All, all ye can find in the garden of God,

There's fruit in the hedgerows as well as the vineyard,

For no limit marks where his mercy hath trod.

Work on and work bravely; for he that receives,

Hath the faith that stoops down to look "under the leaves."

Though pendent and fading some tree of the garden,

Not long since that waved in its foliage fair;

Though its autumn hath come and its winter approacheth,

And the sere, yellow leaf is the brightest thing there :

Go and seek for the fruits; and the sweetest of these

Are the fruits that you'll find hanging "under the leaves."

And say, are ye found in the "market-place" standing,

While planter hath planted and heaven hath rained,

And the bright Sun of Righteousness warmeth his vintage?

Go forth to your work: is there nought to be gained?

Yes, he goes and gathers, who, going, believes

He shall find a day's gathering "under the leaves."

Go, seek out the souls in sin's deep shadow lying,

Don't wait till the canker hath wrought, for your hire!

Perhaps 'tis the last time the Master will call you;

Do all you can do ere the daylight expire.

And though late you are hired, he that worketh receives

His reward for the souls brought from "under the leaves."

The Manse, North Malvern.

THE CHILDREN IN OUR HOSPITALS.—Several ladies, having formed themselves into a committee, have thought that, during the winter months, when flowers are not easily obtainable, a "Scrap-book Mission" might be started, to entertain and instruct the children. The "Flower Mission," in the summer time, proved itself so useful, that the committee hope this effort may meet with equal success. Will any friends help, either by making books themselves and forwarding them, or by sending any pictures, hymns, or Scripture texts for insertion? It is proposed to make the books of coloured glazed calico, to render them at once substantial and attractive. Any communications to be addressed to the Secretary, Miss Curwen, Lanark House, Clapton, E.

OUR SAILORS.—The Record of the 18th inst. has a leading article on the dangers and temptations that surround our seamen on landing, from what is known as "crimping." "Crimping is an employment of men in seaports, who board ships as soon as they arrive home, for the purpose of soliciting the sailors to come to their boarding-houses and taverns. Directly a ship reaches the port, or enters the dock-gates, runners or agents from the various public-houses and lodging-houses gather round the men and entice them away, and they are soon induced to fritter away their hard-earned wages, and, in a few days, are left destitute and friendless. The chief remedy is, however, the multiplication of Homes and of agents to win the sailors into them. If the crimps have their emissaries, the Christian Church also should have hers. We would compare the Homes to the lighthouses which adorn our coasts with their beautiful, life-saving lights, and the agents to the life-boats as saving from spiritual wreck. We should rejoice to see these beneficent agencies multiplied a hundredfold, until we can feel assured that the evil has been counteracted and the good offered, and that our sailors are not left at the mercy of their tempters and destroyers except of their own free will, with their eyes open and their hearts warned."

MAJOR COLE AT LIVERPOOL.

OUR readers are aware that the Victoria Hall, Liverpool, has been opened for special services during this month. Last week they were conducted by Major Cole, whose services in the Circus some months since were so owned of God.

The Liverpool Protestant Standard has the following about the carters' meeting on Sunday week:—"Last Sunday afternoon at three o'clock the Liverpool carters held their usual meeting in Victoria Hall. Major Cole presided on the occasion. There was a large attendance, probably about two thousand. These meetings of the Liverpool carters are being attended by much blessing. The Lord is evidently working by their means to bring precious souls unto Himself. Last Sunday afternoon was the first meeting Major Cole presided at since his return to Liverpool. As soon as he appeared on the platform, everyone present seemed rejoiced to see him.

"Major Cole, on rising, said how rejoiced he felt to be amongst them again; he felt as if he would like to shake hands with each one present; he loved to be working with the carters of Liverpool in the service of Jesus. Mr. and Mrs. Cole then sang very softly and very sweetly a precious little hymn about 'Jesus and his love.'

"At the conclusion of the singing, prayer was requested for a man who was a slave to strong drink, Major Cole remarking that he rejoiced to think that Jesus was no half-and-half Saviour; He could save a man from drunkenness or from any other sin. Silent prayer was then offered up on behalf of the poor drunkard, and that tens of thousands of the working classes might be brought to Jesus. Major Cole having read Heb. xii. 25—"See that ye refuse not him that speaketh,"—dwelt very forcibly on the danger in delaying to accept Christ now. Mr. and Mrs. Cole then sang together a heart-searching hymn commencing as follows:—

"I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given for Me?"

"At the conclusion of the meeting it was announced that the Rev. Charles Garrett would address the carters' meeting last Sabbath afternoon at three o'clock. It was with deep regret that we heard that Miss Cole was unable to unite with her beloved parents in the singing of their precious Gospel songs, on account of illness."

INCIDENTS OF THE MEETINGS.

The first night Major Cole spoke, a young man went into the inquiry-room, and soon found peace in believing. As he was going out, he stated that when Major Cole was holding meetings in Chester he went into the inquiry-room, but was overlooked by the workers; and he resolved, if he had a chance to hear Major Cole again, he would go, and accept Christ. He came at his first meeting here, and returned to Chester by the late train, believing he was saved.

One man said he came thirty miles to the meeting; that for eight years he had been trying to be saved; the sermon "Behold the Lamb of God" enabled him to see that it was finished, and he went home rejoicing.

Another was approached by a lady—"Are you a Christian?" "Yes." "How long have you been one?" "Not quite an hour. It was while 'the Lamb' was being lifted up that I believed. I was saved by the blood."

A gentleman who had been in sympathy with Christian work from the time Moody came here, and at times tried to do a little personal work, but was never assured that he was saved himself, was enabled to throw away all doubts the night that Major Cole spoke on the "News." "Now is God's time—now is my time. Now I will trust in Him for ever." And now he is all joy.

A dear blind woman from Chester was so blest at the meetings there that she came to Liverpool to attend them here, and has not missed one, though it has rained almost constantly since Major Cole came. It was very touching to see her night after night catching every word, and her face lighting up with joy as the name of Jesus was mentioned by the speaker, and still more interesting (though she moved not from her seat), every night she was sure to have some unsaved soul to point to Jesus. I have seen Major Cole in tears as he watched this poor blind woman teaching some little street Arab or some little girl about Jesus and his love.

MR. SPIERS.—We are sorry to learn that this indefatigable worker among the children is at present ill, and not likely to be able to resume work for some time. We need hardly ask our readers to remember him in their supplications, and to pray that the special services for the young may be sustained.

MISS ANNIE MACPHERSON'S HOME.

MONTHLY MEETING OF WORKERS.

THIS gathering, always interesting, was more than usually so on Wednesday evening last week, and despite the depressing influence of a steady, penetrating drizzle, there was a large assembly of workers, from various parts of London, to partake of the hearty hospitality of Miss Macpherson and take a part in the engagements of the evening.

It will be no news to those of our readers who have been present at any of these monthly reunions, to say that Miss Macpherson is the heart and soul of them. No matter what burdens of labour and responsibility she may be sustaining, she has a smiling welcome and a loving friendly word of encouragement for all, which makes even a stranger feel instantly at home. Before giving a few particulars of the proceedings, we must express our deep regret that some words of our correspondent at the Clifton Conference (the result of our necessarily incomplete report) seemed to convey the notion that Miss Macpherson's work among the East-end gutter children was superseded by the action of the School Board. Her own earnest words, in our last week's issue, will, in a large measure, have set the matter right; but in case any of her friends and helpers may have entertained the idea to which we have referred (as Miss Macpherson tells us they have), we should like emphatically to repeat here her statement of last week, that the only department of her work which has been interfered with by the Education Act is the match-box making. Her rescue work was never more needed; and we trust this unfortunate misunderstanding on the subject will have the effect of awakening a deeper solicitude on behalf of our sister's divine work of rescuing the perishing little ones.

The main interest of the meeting on Wednesday week centred on the China Inland Mission, whose earnest promoter, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, gave an address on "Faith and how to strengthen it." The two most newly appointed missionaries for that wide field were also to take leave of their English brethren, having to start on their long journey next day. But China did not absorb the whole of our sympathies. Even during the tea-hour, Miss Macpherson's untiring energy provided for us words of good cheer from far and near. A missionary who has grown grey in the service of his Master among the Basuto tribes of Southern Africa, gave interesting intelligence respecting the work there, incidentally paying a tribute to the services rendered to that mission by a visit from Major Malan. No sooner had the voice of the foreign missionary ceased, than Miss Macpherson led Mr. George Holland to the front, and we were gladdened by hearing, from the lips of this devoted and unassuming servant of the Lord, of many signs and wonders wrought by the power of the Gospel in the midst of our home-heathen. Mr. Holland shrinks, with true modesty, from advertising his work, but it is none the less a great and glorious work, and it must have rejoiced the hearts of all present to hear of so many encouraging circumstances in connexion with it. A number of the girls rescued by Mr. Holland are now under the fostering care of Miss Macpherson. The brief histories of these before and after their rescue were listened to with intense interest, and showed how the power of Christian sympathy can reach and elevate the most hopeless and unlovely.

Under the genial presidency of Mr. H. M. Hodder, the remainder of the meeting was chiefly taken up with Mr. Hudson Taylor's address, some remarks upon it, and the valedictory words of Messrs. Easton and Brounton, the two missionaries-elect for China. Mr. Taylor spoke from the words of Christ to his disciples after the withering of the fruitless fig-tree, "Have faith in God," the marginal rendering of which—"Have the faith of God"—was preferred by the speaker. On this important theme Mr. Taylor dwelt, showing how Jesus, in his human life, was able to prevail through resting on God's unchanging faithfulness, and how we can follow in his footsteps only by cherishing the same implicit, unquestioning trust.

Messrs. Easton and Brounton were severally presented to the meeting, and God's blessing and guidance invoked on them. Both responded in terms which led us to think they are likely to prove instruments in God's hands of greatly extending his Kingdom in their adopted spheres. We are sure they will be followed by much prayer.

Ere the meeting broke up it was gratified by hearing, in a few words from Mrs. Birt, who had just returned from Nova Scotia, of her success in placing under the care of kind friends there, the band of boys and girls she lately took from Liverpool. We could not but thank God for such labourers as Miss Macpherson in London, Mrs. Birt in Liverpool, and others like-minded. Surely they are the salt of the earth.

MR. VARLEY IN BRISTOL.

MR. HENRY VARLEY has been conducting a series of Bible-readings and Gospel services in this city, extending over six days. The opening meeting for prayer was held in the Lesser Colston Hall, when Mr. Varley gave a brief address to workers on Isa. xl. 31.

In the afternoon a very interesting gathering took place in the Large Hall. It had been announced that at three o'clock there would be a special address to men only, and so well was this responded to, that by the time named for commencing, the hall was filled in every part, about 3000 being present. The subject was 2 Cor. v. 20, and very earnestly were those present urged to accept the terms of mercy which came from the imperial throne of God. In the evening there was a public service open to all at eight o'clock, when the hall was again crowded. Mr. Varley took as his text the words in 1 Peter ii. 24, and threw his address into a catechetical form, by getting Mr. Mayers to answer a series of questions on the subject.

On the following days of the week, from Monday to Friday inclusive, the services consisted of afternoon Bible-readings at three o'clock and Gospel services at 7.30, excepting Thursday, when, instead of a Bible-reading, there was a Gospel service in the Bethel ship at one o'clock. These meetings, instead of being confined to one place, have been held in chapels and halls in various parts of the city, twelve different buildings in ten different districts having been occupied during the series.

At the Gospel services, Mr. Varley's subjects were "the new birth," "the prodigal son," "thoughts," &c.; and the old, old story concerning ruin, regeneration, and redemption was told with much simplicity and force. Among the subjects at the Bible-readings were Matt. xvi., also "faith," "unbelief," "the responsibilities of believers," &c.

All these meetings were well attended, and as the ever-recurring topic was "holiness through faith," special interest was felt by those whose views harmonized with Mr. Varley's on this point; but it is only fair to state that there are many who take grave exception to several of the statements made at these meetings, while at the same time they hold in appreciation a large portion of Mr. Varley's work. "READY TO PERISH."

CHOLERA IN SYRIA—WAR IN LIBERIA.

WE have received pressing appeals for help in connexion with these cases of temporal and physical distress. With respect to the former, a correspondent says:—

"According to the latest accounts, the fearful ravages of the cholera are greatly abated, but it has been followed in many places by typhus and low fever, so that, although the great calamity is over, its after-effects will entail yet deeper distress, now that the people will be returning from the mountains, to which they had fled by thousands, to their desolate homes; and urgent are the entreaties that England would stretch out a helping hand in this time of trouble."

Letters from residents fully corroborate this statement, and appeal very strongly for aid. One writes:—"The winter season will be one of great distress. We earnestly trust you will, with as little delay as possible, send us means to help them in this time of sore need."

Mr. E. Fox, of 60, St. John's-wood-road, N.W., Vice-Consul of Liberia, writes with reference to the sufferings among the settlers around Cape Palmas, owing to the native tribes having attacked them and destroyed the produce and their farms—"They are completely destitute, and require immediate relief." It is stated that this war was quite unprovoked, and only entered into in self-defence. Contributions may be sent to Mr. Fox at the above address.

A REQUEST comes to us which we have peculiar pleasure in complying with:—"Pray for my brother-in-law, that he may be helped and guided in labouring among the blacks of Tennessee, America. It is cheering to tell you that he has been awakened by reading back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN in which Mr. Moody's addresses of July appeared, and now desires to labour for Christ in teaching the poor blacks. In doing so he has given up all, and with a wife (my sister) and four children cast himself upon God. Pray that he may be guided aright, and greatly blessed."

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN AMERICA.

THE following extracts from our American contemporaries will inform our readers of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's prospective arrangements, so far as they are fixed. We are sure our readers will comply with the request of Mr. Weatherley, in his interesting paper, to be instant in prayer that a great work of grace may be accomplished in America through the instrumentality that was so largely blessed in our midst. The following is from the New York Illustrated Christian Weekly (Oct. 16):—

"At a private meeting held in Brooklyn, Oct. 7, Messrs. Moody and Sankey finally announced their conclusion to commence their labours in the city of Brooklyn on Sunday, Oct. 31. The place chosen is the Brooklyn Rink, which will hold 7000 or 8000 people. The week-day services will consist of a morning prayer-meeting at Dr. Talmage's church, and evening services at the Rink. On Sunday the hours will be 8 a.m. a service for Christian workers, and 4 p.m. a service for the people. These hours have been selected as those least likely to interfere with the Sabbath services of the churches."

The New York Christian Union advises all Christians to work with the evangelists, pray for their success, but to stay away from the meetings, that the unbelievers may have a chance to get in. It says:—"Evening services will be held daily, except on Saturdays; and it is proposed that there shall be a Sunday evening service at 7.30, admission to be by ticket, and the tickets to be distributed only among persons who are not members or attendants at other churches. The selection of Brooklyn as the starting-point of Mr. Moody's operations will be admitted to be as good as any that could have been made. Within an hour's travel of the Brooklyn Rink live nearly or quite two million people—one-twentieth part of the entire population of the United States. There can be no doubt of Mr. Moody's having full houses to preach to, and from Brooklyn the leavening influence which the evangelists are reported to exert upon the churches can affect more congregations than can anywhere else be found within the same radius."

Dr. Talmage's paper, The Christian at Work, says:—"Mr. Moody is to commence his work in Brooklyn. He finds the ministry united in a wish for him to come—united in purpose to hold up his hands and push forward his work—and his work is to do just as he has done. This is no time for Mr. Moody to trim his theological views to suit some brethren who do not hold to them; but it is his duty to preach the Gospel of Christ as he believes it in his heart, leaving to the Holy Spirit to give it power, leaving to an omnipotent God to bring strength out of his weakness. We hope, we cannot doubt, Mr. Moody's work will be abundantly blessed to the salvation of souls, and for this let all Christians pray while looking for a blessing for themselves."

A leading article in the same issue says:—"The question is asked, 'Will there be no opposition in these quarters against the ministry of these men who come to proclaim Christ to the people?' Some are under the delusion that all will be peace; that the tide will all be one way; that no opposition will be created; and that all our pulpits and all our printing-presses will say 'Amen.' Before two or three months have passed that delusion will be scattered. There never was anything yet accomplished for God and the Church unless all the batteries of the 'world, the flesh, and the devil' were opened against it. If the work of God is to be revived, there will be carping and criticism; there will be venomous and violent opposition. But what is all opposition, when men stand up in the love and strength of Christ to do their duty? What are all the powers of hell arrayed against the truth as in Christ Jesus,—the plain, simple truth of the Gospel of the Son of God? One shall put ten thousand to flight."

"But are there no real objections to an awakening created by such evangelism? Some have said, 'Let the work of evangelizing our cities be done by the regularly ordained ministry.' Why, the work has not been done in that way, and never will be done in that way. There are multitudes of people who come not into the house of God, who never have been there, and never will be there unless a supernatural influence brings them. You talk about men living far away from church; there are people in Brooklyn who live 5000 miles away from church! If the people will not come to church to get the preaching of the Gospel, then let men carry the Gospel to them."

A DAILY PRAYER-MEETING was held at the Illinois State Fair, at Ottawa, this season.

JEWISH MISSION HALL, WHITECHAPEL.

On Tuesday evening last week a service of a deeply interesting character was held in the building which, through the energy and liberality of the English Presbyterian Church, has been changed from a "penny gaff" into what will henceforth be known as the "Jewish Mission Hall." The premises are admirably adapted for the work of the Mission, and the various alterations which have been made rendered it a somewhat difficult task to identify it with the dirty little theatre which for so many years was the source of vicious attraction to the youth of Whitechapel. Tea was provided, and nearly all who sat down were Jews who have become savingly acquainted with "the truth as it is in Jesus."

Dr. Lorimer, who presided, announced, greatly to the regret of all present, that the Rev. A. Saphir, who had been expected to deliver an address on this occasion, would be unable to be present on account of indisposition. He then proceeded to say that the former premises proving too contracted for the work of the Mission, this hall had been purchased, and they would now have a house admirably adapted for carrying on their work. It could hardly fail to remind them of the development which so many centuries ago occurred in the history of the Jewish people when the temple of Solomon took the place of the tent and tabernacle. He trusted that the glory of this second house would far surpass that of the first.

The Rev. Theodore Meyer explained the circumstances which had led to their being in possession of the hall in which they were now assembled. Four years ago he came here quite unknown except to a few of their ministers. It was "the day of small things" at first; but when he looked at the meeting of this evening, and thought of the large number with whom the Mission brought him into contact, as well as the number whom the Lord had graciously given him as the fruit of his labours, he could not fail to say, "The Lord has blessed me out of Zion." He looked upon their new hall with feelings of the liveliest hope, because although at present it might be larger than was actually needed, he hoped in time that they would grow up into it, and have a congregation that would fill it. When he thought of what the place had been in the days of its penny shows, and in hope contemplated the work which they intended carrying on here by evangelistic services, by prayer-meetings, the exposition of the Old Testament Scriptures, and by meetings with inquiries, he could not but heartily rejoice, and was quite sure he might rely upon their earnest sympathy and prayers in the work in which he and Mr. Friedberg were engaged.

Rev. D. Maccoll (Wandsworth) said he took a deep interest in the meeting of this evening, because such a gathering could not fail to touch all their hearts. It had been the first time he had had the pleasure of meeting so many Jews and Jewesses, although he had often desired to take part in the vigorous efforts which were being made to bring them under the influence of the Gospel. For many years he had cherished a profound affection for Mr. Meyer, who was particularly liked by his congregation. He was delighted to see their goodly premises, and although they might be somewhat larger than were needed at present, he hoped that the cry would very soon be heard, "We want more room!" He should like to see a congregation largely composed of Hebrew Christians here, or in some part of the city, and he believed that when the English Presbyterian Church heard that a larger place was wanted, the same liberal hands and hearts which had so generously aided in the present movement would again be found ready to do what might be required.

Rev. D. A. Herschell said he felt it a privilege to be allowed to share in their joy on the present occasion, and right heartily he congratulated them on the encouraging circumstances under which they met. He was quite sure that this movement was in the right direction, for a house of this kind was imperatively needed in a locality where Jews were constantly passing and repassing. The speaker then specially addressed those who were seeking to know the truth as it is in Jesus, and those who have already accepted Him as the true and only Saviour.

Mr. Ascoli, a member of the congregation, expressed the thanks of his Jewish brethren for the kind interest which had been taken in their welfare; and indulged the hope that in the opening of that Hall they were only at the beginning of good things to come, and that they would see greater things than these.

Mr. Vanderberg (speaking in Dutch) said that he had been an inquirer for about ten years, and could not tell anyone the emotion he had experienced upon reading the New Testament. The veil, he was thankful to say, had now been removed from his eyes. In conclusion, he said it was his ardent wish to serve the Lord Jesus as a missionary in foreign lands.

Mr. Newstead said it did his heart good to see so many of his brethren on the present occasion. In speaking of what the Lord Jesus had done for him, he ascribed his conversion to an address he had heard Mr. Moody deliver the last Sunday he was at the Opera House.

After an interesting address by Mr. Friberg, the proceedings were brought to a close by singing "Rock of ages," and by the offering of fervent prayer for a blessing to rest upon the inauguration of the new Hall.

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

THIS unique band of American sacred songsters is at present in Scotland, and we are happy to learn from report and from the northern papers that they are everywhere meeting with a warm welcome, and are seeing the object of their sojourn in our land surely and not too slowly accomplished. In all the towns they visit, crowds flock to hear them, and sit spell-bound by the irresistible and indescribable charm of their sanctified melody.

We notice with pleasure that in the midst of their popularity they do not forget to lend a helping hand in evangelistic work when the opportunity offers.

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have recently published an account of the mission of our Jubilee friends, which we take much pleasure in recommending to the notice of our readers. It is partly written by Mr. T. B. Marsh (late of the Chicago Advance), and partly compiled by him from the former volumes descriptive of their mission. It is a very graphic and deeply interesting sketch of the labours and successes of the singers, brought down to a very recent period. Its value is greatly enhanced by the touching life-stories of the individual members of the band, and the extended collection of their wonderful songs which form part of the volume. It is no doubt a very different thing to attempt to sing these songs, from hearing them rendered by the Jubilee Singers themselves, but to those who have had that privilege they will form a welcome memorial, and they will whet the appetite of those who have not.

PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—Although the winter season for large meetings has scarcely commenced, a very encouraging beginning has been made here. For some weeks past Lord Radstock has held a weekly service in the large hall, also drawing-room meetings in the house, which have been well attended. On the 21st a large "united service" tea-meeting was held, addressed by Miss Weston; and on Sunday evenings Mr. Henry Edwards is speaking at present. God is blessing the work, and a large nightly Bible-class is well sustained; several Christian officers and ladies are helping. The meetings for soldiers' and sailors' wives and children are also increasing, and a branch "mothers' meeting" is just opened at Eastney Barracks, three miles distant. The liabilities amount to some hundreds of pounds, and Miss Robinson must leave the Institute for the purpose of collecting funds unless they are otherwise sent in.

CONVALESCENT COTTAGE, EPPING.—What a pleasant title! What visions it conjures up of returning health, of pure country air, of brief rest from toil in the crowded city! But if the mere title is so cheering and refreshing, how much more a peep at the real thing itself! And truly a visit to this bright and happy little recruiting-place, provided by those who are following the steps of their Lord in "considering the poor," will more than repay the trouble. It has been established in order to afford a few weeks' rest and change for attenders of the Bedford Institute Mission Meetings, who, through illness or overwork, may be needing it. These meetings are under the care of members of the Society of Friends, and are held in several parts of the East-end and Clerkenwell; it is, therefore, easy to conceive how great a boon such a branch in the Mission may be to those who live in these crowded neighbourhoods. The cottage is dependent for support on voluntary contributions, separate from the general fund, the inmates themselves only paying 3s. 6d. per week each. Its managers, while thankful for liberal contributions, will also gratefully receive the very smallest sums that may be sent them by young people or others not in a position to subscribe largely. To every service, great or small, rendered to the Lord's children, out of love to Him, belongs the blessing spoken by the Lord Jesus: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

A VISITOR.

N.B.—Contributions, either in money or goods, may be sent to Mary J. Catlin, Secretary of the Convalescent Cottage Committee, at the Bedford Institute, Wheeler-street, Spitalfields, E.

THE TABERNACLE IN THE WILDERNESS.

THE Tabernacle Models exhibited and explained by Dr. Cranage, of Wellington, Salop, at Stafford House, the town residence of the Duke of Sutherland, last July, are, we understand, to be shown and lectured on by the doctor on the afternoons and evenings of Nov. 3, 4, and 5, at 3.30 p.m. and 7.30 p.m. The special interest of this Ark of the Covenant, Altar of Incense, Table of Shewbread, and Golden Candlestick, is that they are made of the full dimensions of the originals as described in the Book of Exodus; in comparison with which smaller models are mere toys. As far as we are aware, fac-similes of the dresses of the High Priest of Israel have never been attempted before. Dr. Cranage will on these occasions exhibit them, and the models alluded to, for the first time publicly to a London assembly, at the Mildmay Conference Hall. Further particulars may be obtained from Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

REVIVALS AND PRIVATE COUNSEL.

AT the annual autumnal gatherings of the Church of England (Stoke-on-Trent), Baptist Union (Plymouth), and Congregational Union (London), papers were read and discussions took place on revival work. At the Church Congress the main topic of debate was the inquiry-meeting. In the course of an excellent paper Mr. W. T. Paton said:—"The revival movements with which I have been connected, and which have resulted in permanent good, have been, humanly speaking, the outcome of thoroughly organised effort and plan. . . . They should be the result of, not the substitute for, spiritual life and activity—the harvest gatherings of a devoted ministry, a working Church, and of an able, efficient, and faithful preaching of the Gospel. But does not the inquiry-room come 'perilously near' the confessional? Not if I understand the confessional. If by the confessional is meant that inquirers are invited or encouraged in any way to confess particular sins, and if they are encouraged to do so by the assurance that they may or can be absolved by any power or authority on earth, then my answer is clear and emphatic: no such practice has ever obtained in any inquiry-room with which I have had to do. It is not a man's particular sins that are the subject of conversation; the man is spoken with because he feels himself a sinner. It is sin, not sins—not the thing in detail, but the thing in principle, that is dealt with; and the only relationship in which the worker stands to the inquirer is that of friend and counsellor, whose place is to stand as far in the background as possible, so that he may point to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world. And as to any absolution short of that which the Great High Priest himself pronounces in his Word, and testifies to by his Spirit, not only would it, in my judgment, be out of place, but it would avail nothing. For the conscience-stricken sinner there is but one refuge, and that is in a direct and personal application to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The Earl of Harrowby, who closed the discussion, said:—

"There is no difference between the Romish confession and sacramental confession as practised largely, I do not know by how many, but by too many of the priests of our Church. I would say to my brethren and sisters present, I would say to all the laity—Beware, above all things, of auricular confession. If you wish to undermine the purity of your households, if you wish to undermine the manliness of the English character, if you wish to undermine the Protestant reformed religion, if you wish to prevent a man from consulting his Bible and his conscience—then sanction auricular confession."

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—A very interesting lecture upon "The Day of Atonement" was recently delivered by Mr. Joseph, at the Hall of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, 394, Hackney-road, describing the spiritless form of the synagogue worship, and pointing out the difference of the mode of their service from that which was instituted by Moses. He earnestly entreated his hearers to pray for the Lord's ancient people, that their eyes may be opened to see that the Messiah did not reject them, but that they have rejected Him; and He still holds out his open arms to receive them. Christians are earnestly requested to remember at the throne of grace the various branches of this Mission. Besides the visiting and speaking to the Jews in their homes and in the streets, there are lectures on Saturdays, preaching of the Gospel on Sundays, a night-school three times in the week, and a good Sunday-school. Any friend who desires to know about this work can obtain the report by application at the Evangelical Mission to Israel, and Hebrew Christian House of Industry, 394, Hackney-road, E.

THE CONFERENCE AT SALISBURY.

PERHAPS no part of these two days was more useful than the hour after dinner. On Wednesday a number of friends gave accounts of the work of God in many places.

Lord Cavan spoke of a Russian nobleman and his large family, the fruit of Lord Radstock's ministry, who had been used of God in leading others to the Saviour, and with whom his lordship had recently sailed from Sweden, holding most interesting Bible-readings on board during the voyage.

Rev. W. Saunders told of the good use made of a Gospel tent, lent him by Mr. Thwaites, in which meetings had been held for many weeks in his parish, in Bristol, by Mr. Cooper, one of the agents of the Evangelization Society, who gave addresses on sixty consecutive days, the last having as much freshness as the first. Many souls had been won to God by these meetings.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites gave instances of the good work done in a tent near his house. Mr. Sutton, of Reading, spoke highly of the Evangelization Society, and said that he had procured a tent, which he would gladly lend when not in use. Mr. Morgan gave some details of the evangelistic visit of Mr. G. Brealey to Kidderminster.

Mr. Studd, a country gentleman, won to Christ at the meetings in the Opera House, and who has broken up his racing establishment, said that at Tedworth, in Hants, a most successful and encouraging evangelistic work has been set on foot in a barn on his estate. The services have been largely attended every evening for three weeks in succession, and many souls have been brought to a knowledge of their Saviour. The surrounding villages added largely to the attendance, and a most earnest desire has been expressed that the services now closed should be carried on through the winter. In this case, also, the agents of the Evangelization Society have been much used.

Mr. Westlake (Fordingbridge) also said that he had been delighted to hear of the Evangelization Society, and pointed out the advantage of a continuance of meetings for several weeks. He said that many souls had been gathered in in his own neighbourhood, and referred to the evangelistic work so much blessed at Southampton.

The Hon. Cowper-Temple said that some little time ago a tradesman's wife sent in a request for prayer for a dark place in the New Forest. Two ladies went to visit the locality to make inquiries, and found that the cottage at which they called was that of the writer of the request. This led to the establishment of a meeting in the cottage, at which he (the speaker) and others had preached the Gospel. After this a tent was procured, in which an evangelist had held services for a fortnight with great success. Then the neighbouring villages wanted the tent, and so the work spread. Mr. Cowper-Temple added that those who had gardens were accustomed to have garden-parties. He had found that gatherings of this kind for Christian fellowship were far more enjoyable and profitable than parties for mere worldly conversation.

Some of the narratives of conversion on the second day were very touching; in most of them the influence of the godly mother was the chief means of leading to Jesus.

THE REV. THOMAS RYDER.—Many of our readers will be interested in knowing that the Rev. Thomas Ryder, whose sudden death we recorded last week, specially revised the beautiful hymn and tune which he composed at the Brighton Convention, and gave it to the Rev. J. Mountain, for insertion in the new and enlarged edition of "Hymns of Consecration and Faith," along with another tune, the last he ever composed. Both hymns and tunes are inserted, and are, justly, very highly appreciated. Their intrinsic value is considerable, and the sudden death of Mr. Ryder so soon after their composition, and so far away from his native land, surrounds the hymn and tunes with a special interest.

MISSIONS IN EGYPT.—A correspondent of an American contemporary sends an account of mission work in Egypt, and says:—"We greatly need the prayers of our friends, and I might suggest to some of the many to whom the cause of slavery is deeply interesting, to think of and pray for the white slaves—the multitude who, with an appearance and organisation so like our own that they often seem like our own kindred, and yet so utterly without education and without hope for the future! These lonely ones, who hardly can recollect either parents, sisters, or brothers,—have they not a peculiar claim on our pity and our prayers? Do, dear Christian girls, happy in your family circle, pray for the fair Georgian and Circassian, who never had a mother's loving hand, and who knows not if she has brother or sister, or even what her own name was in infancy; and far, far more, who knows not the Blessed Name. Pray that she may be able to say, 'If my father and mother forsake me, the Lord shall take me up.'"

EVANGELIZATION IN FRANCE.

SOMETIMES we hear of evangelistic tours by earnest pastors, like the following:—"For six days we went from village to village (near one of the places of pilgrimage), giving tracts and picture-sheets; and we returned, blessing God for the marvels He performs, and praying Him to give increase to the Word of Life sown broadcast. Amid ignorance and superstition we found a real desire to hear of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. We were almost everywhere well received, and here and there we found witnesses of the grace of God, who welcomed us with tears of joy. In one place we were ourselves edified by the faith, joy, and scriptural assurance of a few good women near a mountain-top, who are firm on the Rock of Ages. The priest has tried a thousand ways to shake their confidence, but the Spirit of God strengthens them through his Word, their only guide. Lower down, an old man with his family are shining with the true light, enlightening those around. A woman found peace by reading the tract, Un Cœur mis au large. An earnest Christian workwoman gave Les Trois Croix to a peasant woman, who took it joyfully to her mountain home. On arriving, she called her neighbours and read the tract to them. An old man broke down, sobbing, and begged her to read it over again; a week afterwards he died. 'Sweetly, sweetly did he pass away,' said his daughter; and it was that tract which did it. . . . These honest people, who receive the tracts and illustrated journals with acclamations, notice the Scripture quotations, and say, 'But you have some other book which goes with these?' and so are ready for the Bible. There are rich Protestant families here and there, but they live generally in religious indifference. Oh, for evangelists! oh, for labourers! Those who once worked are passed away, and none supply their place."

In another place, a Christian shopkeeper calls in the sailors or soldiers who pass, gives them a paper or a tract, and, if time permits, converses with them, till the numbers rapidly increase. The Lord multiply the living power in such and similar souls, and there will be no lack of response.

A journal was dismally contrasting France with England, saying even Moody and Sankey would not draw the masses here. We say from experience, only let men of kindred spirit and equal knowledge of what the heart of man needs, try, and similar results will follow. It is astonishing how sceptical religious men are as to the power of the Gospel. They seem to seek to reduce it to an infinitesimal quantity in speech and print, on the plea that the people must be prepared to bear it. Why, the people are thirsting for it, and know it not, for it is not placed within their reach.

The Bible-carriage is pursuing its modest career through France. It has lately visited the Ile-et-Vilaine, Cotes-du-Nord, Finistère, Morbihan, Mayenne, and La Manche. M. and Mme. Pointet are well fitted for their task; they sold during the year seventy-three Bibles, 6428 Testaments, 4364 Almanachs de Bois Conseils, 10,000 wall-papers, and gave freely 57,190 Scripture portions. The carriage is admirably adapted for use in preaching the Gospel; and the evangelists employ it thus constantly in fairs and market-places, sometimes using a little trumpet to call the people together.

The Bulletin of the Mission Intérieure shows hopeful symptoms of new life appearing in several quarters, through the agency of one of their new itinerating preachers who seems to have received a fresh spiritual impulse—Pastor Fournau.

AN ENLIGHTENED PRIEST.

We sometimes hear incidentally of strange and touching cases where light breaks in upon most unlikely men in very unexpected ways. An anxious penitent confessed to a priest that she had been to a Protestant service. He questioned her closely, for his curiosity was greatly excited. She gave him a full account, and acknowledged that a great impression had been made upon her mind. The impression communicated itself to him; and shortly after he requested his own sister to go to the nearest place where Protestants assembled, to listen as with his ears and under his responsibility, and to bring him a full detail of everything. Reluctantly she did so, but faithfully reported all. The priest was convinced that there were truths of which he was ignorant, entered into communication with the pastor, appointed a secret place for a prolonged interview, and found peace in the finished work of Jesus then and there. The secluded place in which he labours allows him comparative freedom of action; he preaches Jesus; all his parishioners have the New Testament; the children learn more of Christ than of ceremonies; and confessions are stopped short, and belief in the full satisfaction wrought by the Lord Jesus is substituted for penance.—Evangelical Christendom for October.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS ON BIBLE-STUDY. By MRS. GEORGE BRIGHTWEN. Hamilton. Third Edition. 9d.—A useful little manual, with an appendix containing illustrative examples of Bible-study.

VOICES OF THE SEA, AND OTHER POEMS. By EDWARD A. PHILLIPS, B.A. Partridge. 1s.—Some of these poems have appeared in our columns, and have been much prized. They are the thoughts, in classic metre, of a devout and scholarly mind, and not one of them but contains some precious gem of Scripture truth or Christian experience.

IMOGEN: A STORY OF THE MISSION OF AUGUSTINE. By EMILY SARAH HOLT. Shaw.—Many of our readers are familiar with the historical stories of Miss Holt. She has here given us a sketch of still earlier times than in her former books, taking us back to A.D. 600, and depicting the conflict between the ancient British Church and the Romish priest Augustinus, who attempted to bring it into subjection, and in the end succeeded. The story of "Hrolf the Dane" is an admirable illustration of the Gospel truth of sub-stitution. It will be a welcome gift-book in the coming season.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S CARDS. By C. K. T., author of "Hymns for Quiet Hours." Campbell and Tudhope, Glasgow. One shilling per packet of twelve.—If we could transfer to our pages one of these truly beautiful cards, that would be a better recommendation than anything we can say. Decorated in the highest style of floral art, and with coloured letterpress suitable to the season, as well as to various classes of recipients, we hail them as welcome substitutes for the tawdry and fanciful style of missive that has been in common use in past years at such seasons. Another word in their favour—the profits are to be devoted, says the author, to missions in China.

LIGHT AFTER DARK; or, Bible Words for Inquirers. Nisbet.—The best way to secure the possession of that "light" which the entrance of God's Word gives, is, of course, to "search the Scriptures." But for those who find it advantageous to have the searching done by others, and who desire to possess the principal passages relating to the essential truths of human ruin and redemption grouped together, so as to be easy of reference, this volume will be a welcome acquisition. The selections are pointed and appropriate to the various headings, and—what we look upon as most important—will conduce to further study and research.

THINGS TO COME. Being a Short Outline of the Great Events of Prophecy. By J. R. C. City Bible House, 2, South Clerk-street, Edinburgh. 6d.—A dispassionate setting forth of the things that shall be, which we commend to the increasing number of Bible-readers and of inquirers into the revealed purposes of God. His view leads the author into occasional interpretations in which we cannot follow him, but he deals with "outlines," about which there is comparatively little difference of view, and avoids speculative details, which are the seed-plots of controversy. The tone of the book is one of communion with Him who is meek and lowly of heart.

THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION. By the Rev. J. B. JOHNSTON, D.D. Hodder and Stoughton.—The author says, in a preface, that at the close of the thirtieth year of his ministry he has, in response to repeated requests of his congregation, published a volume of sermons, in which his object has been to set forth "a clear and forcible statement of the fundamental truths of Christianity, rather than indistinct utterances, which, when stripped of their philosophic guise and colouring, are seen to be expressive of thoughts that are of little depth or value." These sermons seem to possess both depth and value, and to be both sound in doctrine and rich in experience.

ANGELIC BEINGS, THEIR NATURE AND MINISTRY. By the Rev. CHARLES D. BELL. London: Religious Tract Society.—"The present pages are selected (we are told by the author) from a course of lectures lately delivered to my ordinary congregation in Cheltenham. They are slightly altered and abridged to suit the present form of publication." They consist, we may observe, of six papers or lectures on the various connexions in which angelic ministrations are spoken of in Scripture. Angels "called to worship," "praising," "rejoicing," "inquiring," "taught," "ministering," besides four others on the being and nature of angels, the cherubim, and the angel of the covenant. The subject is an interesting one, and it is well handled by Canon Bell, both so as to exalt Him "who was made so much better than the angels, as He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they," and so as to bring out the tender love and watchful care of Him by whom the angels are "sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation." We are rightly warned against undue thoughts of subservience to those whom God has appointed to be the servants of his people, and we are rightly instructed that the way to secure the services of the angels on our behalf is not by the Romish folly of attempting to deal directly with them, but by living in communion with Him who is their Master and our God, whom alone they obey, and who alone can hear and answer us.

THE NARROW PATHWAY TO THE GOLDEN GATE. By A. T. S. Holness, 21, Paternoster-row.—This is "a book for young pilgrims," and a very good one. It exercises them in searching the Scriptures by leaving the references blank, while there is a special request in the preface that every text may be searched out, and chapter and verse written in the blank spaces. It will also afford suggestions for many addresses to the young.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

CALCUTTA has imitated the Christian example of Glasgow and Edinburgh in establishing free Sunday morning breakfasts for the poor.

UGHT THIS TO BE THE CASE?—In India to-day there are less missionaries in proportion to the number of converts than there were twenty-five years ago.

GOSPEL LEAFLETS.—"R. K.," 7, King-street, Snow-hill, E.C., is publishing a series of leaflets and cards. They are very convenient in size, and well chosen as to matter.

BOMBAY.—It is matter of much thankfulness that the Young Men's Christian Association in Bombay has been so successful. Its numbers are constantly on the increase, its weekly meetings are well attended and most interesting, and the members are laying out work for themselves.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION for India is to be held at Allahabad, Jan. 6 and 7. We hope that this Convention will give a new impulse to the work, by showing how effective the schools may be made, not only to Christian children, but to others, and by showing the methods necessary to this.

BRANDON, NORFOLK.—Mr. J. J. Browne, who for some years laboured in mission-work at Epsom, has now removed to this place, where he finds an open door for the preaching of the Gospel and the ministry to the saints. His address is Weeting, Brandon, Norfolk.

WE CAUTION our readers against a young German (about twenty-one or twenty-two years of age) who professes to be a converted Jew, and to have travelled in various parts of the world. He has visited many towns in England, and used the names of prominent Christians without authority: he says he wishes to become a missionary.

MINNESOTA.—The revival meetings led by Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, at St. Paul, Minnesota, are growing in interest. The great opera-house has been filled with young men at some of the meetings, and not less than 2500 persons have been at the tent meetings in the evening. Inquirers by the hundred have remained for personal conversation at the close of these meetings.

AN OPEN DOOR.—At the Glasgow Convention, Dr. Wallace said he believed that never in the history of Glasgow were there more open doors than now, where Christian visits would be welcomed. There were, he said, in the hands of Mr. Pollock, 45, London-street, Glasgow, 3000 names of persons who had given their addresses from the regions of waidom, and were anxious to be visited.

THE MISSION FIELD.—There are 290,000 inhabited towns and villages in Bengal and the North-West Provinces of India alone. Calculate how long it would take to visit and preach once in each of these; how much it would cost to place one Bible in each; and how many men of earnest piety are needed to give one evangelist to each score of villages. And what are these two provinces to the whole of India? and what is India to China?—Christian Witness.

THE Pacific Christian Advocate reports impressive revival services in East Portland, Oregon, under the lead of workers sent out by the Young Men's Christian Association. A large tent is being made ready for religious meetings during the Oregon State Fair. The Portland Association has outgrown its old quarters and taken new rooms over the "Cosmopolitan Saloon," including the old billiard-room of that establishment.

SUNDAY CLOSING OF PUBLIC-HOUSES.—A series of meetings in support of the Irish Sunday-closing movement were held in Dublin last week, and a deputation on the same subject has waited on the Chief Secretary. We are glad that the friends of this much-needed reform are thus betimes preparing for next session, when, we sincerely hope and trust, it will be finally granted.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN SCOTLAND.—Several months ago the parish minister of the island of Tyree sent written orders to the teachers of all the public schools within the parish, that the Baptist ministers were not to be allowed to preach in the school-houses in future, and since that day the school-houses have remained locked against the Baptists, except one, the teacher in that case choosing to disobey the decree. It is not easy accounting for the Tyree minister arrogating the power which belonged only to the School Board. The Duke of Argyll is the proprietor of the island of Tyree, but we cannot for a moment suppose that his grace has the slightest sympathy with this petty persecution of a body of devoted evangelists, who are highly esteemed in the Western Highlands by all earnest Christian men, and with whose work the Duke, we should suppose, sincerely sympathizes.—Freeman.

ABERDEEN.—The death is announced of the Rev. Principal Lumsden, of Aberdeen Free Church, who was a prominent leader in the denomination to which he belonged.

A STRIKING FACT.—Forty years ago there were eighteen converts to Christianity in Burmah, and now there are 18,000. And not only has there been success in numbers, but also in Christian character and development.

PASTOR THEO. MONOD writes to us on the 22nd inst. from 114, Place Lafayette, Paris:—"I am off again on a visit to the churches—Alais, Oct. 24 to 26, and Lyons, Oct. 30 to Nov. 3. This visit is of particular importance, and I commend it to your prayers. I hope to be back again on Nov. 4."

KILBURN.—On Sunday, Oct. 17, we closed nearly six months' open-air work. Roughly calculating, we have held eighty meetings, at which about 350 Gospel addresses have been given and listened to by thousands of souls. We have had many encouraging cases; but the day of Our Lord alone will declare the results of this effort. THOS. LUFF.

NOTTINGHAM CONVENTION.—It will be interesting to your readers, especially to those who attended these meetings, to know that we have been able to send Rev. Theo. Monod £26 10s. towards his fund for evangelistic work in France, as the balance that remained in hand after paying all the expenses of the Convention. GEO. T. HINE.

THE SYNOD OF ALABAMA has resolved to open the Orphan's Home at Tuskegee to the fatherless and motherless children of the State of every name and denomination. With the hope of aiding in securing its needed annual amount of 5000 dols, a planter invites each of the farmers of the State to give to it a tenth of the product of one of his most fertile and lucrative acres.

WOMAN'S WORK.—At a farewell meeting held in Providence previous to the departure of four ladies as missionaries of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society, Mrs. Hovey, the corresponding secretary, stated that during the past four years the women of their churches had contributed over 100,000 dols. to aid the work of the Missionary Union. They are now supporting nineteen female missionaries.

A NEW YORK PAPER states that a company of Baptists have contracted for seventy acres of land on the east side of Chautauqua Lake, just opposite the grounds of the National Sunday-school Assembly, at $300 per acre, which is designed as a summer resort for Baptist ministers and laymen, where neat cottages shall be erected, and an auditorium for religious services, and be held as a general place of resort for picnics and excursions of Baptist Sunday-schools and churches.

CHURCH CHOIRS.—That worthy old German, John Zundel, who is organist in Mr. Ward Beecher's church, has composed a little book of original hymn-tunes, which he entitles, "Christian Heart-Songs," and in his preface he says some good things: "Put no profane people, good singers as they may be, into your choirs. And then why not pray for your church music while you are praying for your pastors, deacons, Sunday-schools, &c. ? I hold that choirs are worth praying for; I know they need praying for, and I trust none will say they are past praying for."

BELFAST MIDNIGHT MISSION.—A very successful meeting of this Mission—the first of the winter series—was held on Tuesday week, in the rooms adjoining the Rev. J. Macnaughten's church, Rosemary-street. About fifty of the class for whom it was intended were present. Fourteen persons accepted the invitation to go to the "rescue house" of the Mission. Eight of these were subsequently drafted off to penitentiaries. Such an amount of success is encouraging to those engaged in a work so often fraught with discouragement.—Witness.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.—A contemporary states that "in reply to the Society for the Propagation of Religion in Foreign Parts, the Prince expressed his adherence to the words of the Queen to the people of India on a former occasion, testifying 'her firm reliance in the truths of Christianity and the solace of religion'; and added his own 'admiration for those distinguished men who pursue their Christian labours in India, claiming nothing for themselves,' and seeking only the lasting good of their fellow-subjects in the Eastern Empire. The missionaries in India will be among the first to welcome the Prince, and there can be no doubt of the cordial interest of his Royal Highness in their operations."

E. W. DALE, of Birmingham, in an address to young men in the City Temple, said:—"My idea of the duty of a Christian workman is this—that he should be just as honest in all his work as though Christ were the head of the firm. My idea of a Christian master is this—that he should conduct his business on the hypothesis that he has a Master in heaven, and that he is but a manager under Him. It will solve a great many difficulties if men remember that. If some of you retail tradesmen when you drew up your advertisements really believed that you were carrying on business for Christ and were advertising for Him, don't you think that that would a little change the colour? And if some of you wholesale manufacturers and great merchants when you sent in tenders for contracts remembered that, would you not hesitate to tender at a price at which you knew you could not supply goods that were worth having at any price?"

A FACT FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Of eighty-nine persons baptized within the year in the Second Baptist Church of Suffield, Connecticut, about seventy were directly from the Sunday-school.

A PRAYER-MEETING for officers of the army and navy will be held (D.V.) on Saturday, Nov. 6, at 2 p.m., in the committee-room of the Naval and Military Bible Society, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W. Please make this meeting known.

A BRITISH WORKMAN PUBLIC-HOUSE has been opened at Warrington by a limited liability company, chiefly promoted by Mrs. G. S. Reaney, a well-known writer on temperance. The opening festival was attended by upwards of 500 persons.

Dr. & Mrs. BARNARDO'S WORK.—We are sorry to hear that Dr. Barnardo's Homes for destitute boys and girls are just now in great need of funds. Our brother and his helpers have been much tried of late, but their faith in God's goodness is unshaken; and we doubt not but that many sympathizers with their precious work among destitute children will feel it a privilege to minister afresh to the daily wants of the almost 400 little ones now under his care. Our brother's address is—Home for Working and Destitute Lads, 18 and 20, Stepney-causeway, E.

GLASGOW.—We desire to remind our friends in the country of the boarding-house for young women in connexion with the Young Women's Christian Association. Those who were interested in the opening of this house will be glad to know that its prosperity is most encouraging. At this season of the year great numbers of young women come to the city seeking employment in warehouses, &c., and we are sure that many of them would take advantage of this comfortable home in preference to lodgings, were ministers and other Christians interested in their welfare to bring it under their notice. Information on application to the Secretary, 322, St. Vincent-street.—Times of Blessing.

SEVEN DIALS.—The Committee of the West London Auxiliary Sunday-school Union have reuted, from the School Board, premises recently erected in Tower-street, Seven Dials, for the purpose of religious instruction on the Lord's-day. The object will be to gather in only those children who do not at present attend any Sunday-school, and all possible care will be taken that none but such are admitted. The school will be conducted on purely unsectarian principles, all Christians being cordially invited to unite in carrying on the work. Contributions will be gladly received by the sub-treasurer, Mr. R. T. Burr, 10, Bishop's-road, Bayswater, W.

PURE LITERATURE.—Speaking of the Religious Tract and Book Society for Scotland, the Daily Review says:—"This Scottish Society has established, first, the importance of selecting for sale and distribution the religious literature produced by all agencies, private and public, instead of itself producing books and tracts; and, secondly, the certain success of colportage, if used for the circulation of all forms of pure literature, as well as of that which is professedly religious and to which this Society confines itself. The figures for last year give us a vivid idea of the sales that may be made by some two hundred agents. Besides the gratuitous distribution of a million of tracts, there were sold 55,000 copies of the Scriptures, 120,000 copies of religious books, 810,000 weekly and monthly periodicals for adults, and 400,000 for the young."

PEACE ESSAY.—A prize of £5 is offered by John Ridley, Esq., for the best essay on the causes of the cessation of wars (1) between the different parts of England; (2) between England and Ireland; (3) between England and Scotland. Candidates to be girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty years. Books of Reference: (1) Freeman's "History of the Norman Conquest"; (2) Goldwin Smith, Froude, Macaulay; (3) Burton's "History of Scotland"; (4) Mr. Henry Richard's "Gradual Triumph of Law over Brute Force," published by the Peace Society. The essays to be legibly written, on one side of the paper only, and distinguished by some assumed name, initial, or motto, which is also to be written on the outside of a sealed envelope containing the writer's real name and address, and sent with the essay, before May 1, 1876, to Miss Ridley, 19, Belzize-park, London, N.W.

IMPROVEMENT?—The Madras correspondent of the Indian Church Gazette speaks in enthusiastic terms of the "wonderful improvement in church matters" which has occurred of late years in the diocese to which he belongs:—"Five years ago there was but one surpliced choir in Madras, and none in Bangalore, and the invocation before the sermon was quite unknown in the diocese. In 1870 the choir at St. Mathias, Vepery, were put into surplices and cassocks, and the invocation was adopted. A year or two afterwards cassocks were adopted at the cathedral at Madras; and now, at Bangalore, there are four choirs vested in surplices and cassocks, the invocation is used before the sermon, and, at one church, the choir turn to the east at the Glorias." The Lucknow Witness well remarks:—"And this is improvement! Now, cannot this earnest writer tell us of some poor sinners brought to Christ? Cassocks and surpliced choirs, and invocations before sermon, and turning to the east, may be important enough to some people; but all this reminds us so very little of the improvement in Church matters mentioned so freely in the Book of Acts, that we cannot help wishing to know if sinners are turning from the error of their ways, and finding peace and joy in believing, in this highly prosperous diocese."

Dr. EADIE.—During the sixty-two years which have elapsed since his birth in Alva, Dr. John Eadie has gone through, perhaps, more work than most men as student, preacher, professor, littérateur, periodicalist, &c. His published works already amount to a large shelf-ful. He is now also about to add to his theological productions two volumes of "Expositions of the Scriptures."

MONMOUTH.—"M. J. H." sends us a most cheering account of the progress of the Lord's work here in connexion with the labours of Mr. G. Hefford of the Evangelization Society. Prayer is asked that Mr. Hefford's bodily strength may be sustained in the midst of arduous work, and also that guidance may be given as to the carrying on of the work in Monmouth after he has left.

CONCORD, N. H., has a large and prosperous Young Men's Christian Association, with about 300 active and 125 associate members. Five prayer-meetings are held each week outside of the central rooms, in the gail, schoolhouses, and cottages. Concord is also the headquarters of the State Young Men's Christian Association. There are now twenty-six Associations in the State, being an increase of eight from last year.

WORKING MEN'S COLLEGE, No. 91, Blackfriars-road. (Founded 1868).—It is proposed to form a class for the purpose of reading the Bible as a text-book of theology, without reference to any special creed. No language but English will be used, but the best known works of modern theologians will be referred to, as also the history and geography of the countries spoken of, the one object being a knowledge of the Bible. Mr. Rossiter, the honorary secretary of the College, will be glad to hear from any who are willing to join such a class, which will be open alike to men and women, and for which Sunday morning is thought to be a convenient time of meeting.

AN OBSTACLE TO MISSIONARY WORK.—The Japanese are disposed to look upon all foreigners as Christians, and when the character of many men in the foreign settlements displays itself in everything but a Christian spirit, the first thing missionaries have to teach is, that Christianity is a personal possession, and not a national characteristic. A native came running one day to a missionary, complaining against Christians. On inquiry, the native told how he had been beaten, unprovoked, in the street, by a Christian. "Oh no," said the missionary, "no Christian would do such an act. How do you know it was a Christian?" "Oh yes, it was a Christian! I know it was, for he wore a hat." As the Japanese are destitute of the covering of the head worn by Europeans, the force of his remark is readily seen.

A BAPTISMAL SERVICE IN JAPAN.—On Sunday, May 9, the waters of Mississippi Bay witnessed an interesting sight. In the morning there was a meeting of the First Baptist Church of Japan, at which the candidates for baptism related their Christian experience, and were closely catechized by Dr. Brown. They evidently do not belong to the class called "rice Christians," who join the Church for worldly advantage. At five o'clock a little company gathered on the shore in front of a wretched fishing-village. A hymn in Japanese was sung, followed by reading of Scriptures, and an address to the candidates by Dr. Brown. Prayer was then offered in English by Mr. Arthur, followed by Dr. Brown in Japanese. The three young men who were to be baptized, as well as the other native members, expressed by their dignity and reverence a comprehension and appreciation of the service which was scarcely expected from them. Dr. Brown walked out into the water till a suitable depth was obtained, and one at a time the young men went out to him, and were "baptized." When they came up out of the water, they were received with a hymn by the little church upon the shore. The last young man came back, and led down to the baptismal waters a young girl, thirteen years old, the eldest daughter of Mrs. Brown. Quite a large congregation of natives had gathered upon the shore and in the fishing-boats, which were just returning from their day's toil.—Freeman.

PROSPECT TERRACE MISSION.—Few who daily walk through Gray's-inn-road are aware of the densely populated square, called Wellington-square, lying hidden between Sidmouth-street and Prospect-terrace. Some months ago I called the attention of the London City Mission to this spot, and applied for a missionary, who, I am deeply grateful to say, they at once sent. We took a beer-shop, renting the ground-floor, and transformed it into a mission-room. Though scarcely three months have passed since the missionary entered this place, there is now established a Band of Hope numbering some sixty-five members (a temperance meeting for adults starts on Monday next); a Sunday-school, which already numbers some sixty or seventy scholars; a service on Sabbath evenings and Tuesdays for adults; and signs of blessing have already appeared,—and this in the midst of one of the darkest and most depraved spots in this part of London. Our brother who labours here wants to obtain the whole house, that mothers' meetings, sewing-classes, and many other such meetings may be carried on. A band of young men, thoroughly alive, thanks to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit, are prepared, and do work in every way. But tracts, Bibles, clothes for poor ragged children, money to furnish the hall with forms, pegs, &c., is much needed, and will be gratefully acknowledged. The abounding iniquity in the midst of this locality calls loudly for Christian work. Any further information I will gladly give if needed.

DAILY TEXTS.

"NOW IT IS HIGH TIME TO AWAKE OUT OF SLEEP."—
ROM. XIII. 11.

Thurs., Oct. 28.—"Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord." "Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship, and he lay and was fast asleep." "They took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea; and the sea ceased from her raging."—Jonah i. 3, 5, 15.

Fri., 29.—"At the time when kings go forth to battle, David sent Joab...but David tarried still at Jerusalem." "In an eveningtide David arose from off his bed." "Why sleep ye? rise and pray."—2 Sam. xi. 1, 2; Luke xxii. 46.

Sat., 30.—"She made him sleep...and his strength went from him." "And he awoke out of sleep and said, 'I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself'; and he knew not that the Lord was departed from him." "And the Philistines took him, and put out his eyes, and bound him with fetters of iron, and he did grind in the prison-house."—Judges xvi. 19, 20, 21.

Sun., 31.—"He cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, 'Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour?'" "Wherefore it (light) saith, 'Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.'"—Mark xiv. 37; Ephes. v. 14.

Mon., Nov. 1.—"What meanest thou, oh sleeper? Arise, and call upon thy God...that we perish not." "Is it time for ye, O ye, to dwell in your coiled houses, and this house lie waste?" "They that sleep, sleep in the night...but let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation."—Jonah i. 6; Haggai i. 4; 1 Thess. v. 7.

Tues., 2.—"His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber." "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard; when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?" "He that sleepest in harvest is a son that causeth shame."—Isa. lvi. 10; Prov. vi. 9; x. 5.

Wed., 3.—"While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." "I sleep, but my heart waketh." "The best wine for my beloved, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of them that are asleep to speak."—Matt. xxv. 5; Cant. v. 2; vii. 9.

"LEST, COMING SUDDENLY, HE FIND YOU SLEEPING."—
MARK XIII. 36.

The Christian.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE REVIVAL TO THOSE WHO WERE IN IT.

ONE can scarcely take up a religious paper at present without seeing the question, "What has the Revival left us?" discussed and answered with more or less penetration. The answers have been very numerous and very varied. Above all, they have been very satisfactory. To speak commercially, one might say the balance on the side of future evangelicism was decidedly good.

Besides the actual number of converts, the movement has yielded results which must tell upon all departments of home mission work for a long time to come. Critics who discussed the great meetings in London and elsewhere had not calculated upon this, and, when they lectured the committees on the extravagance of putting up great buildings for a month's or six weeks' work, forgot that a revival leaves behind it a legacy of impulse even richer than its first donation of fruit. Doubtless we are not yet aware of the full significance of the Revival which has swept through so many cities of our land. Already we have much to profit by, much to thank God for. But in all great movements, political, ecclesiastical, or spiritual, the great and true results can only be taught by the tardy finger of time; and it remains for history to tell posterity what the Revival of 1874 and 1875 has done for Britain, for Christendom, and for the world. No eye has sweep enough to foretell these results to-day, but it will no doubt be found that this movement has its place in the great chain of events by which the many kingdoms of the earth are to be drawn into the Kingdom of Heaven.

As we can find little satisfaction from the historical aspect of the Revival, let us once more turn to the practical. What has it left us? We answer, Responsibility. Others have given different answers, but this includes them all. Some say it has left new life, and some new hope. To some, strong faith and a stronger love; to some, more power to labour, more grace to suffer and to wait. Great gifts of God are these to the world's weak ones, but not so great as this—Responsibility. Responsibility embraces them all, and adds an element of its own. Responsibility is them all, and something more.

Has the Revival left me life? Then I must grow. Life is the gift it gave me; growth is the responsibility it left me. Mr. Moody's Bible-readings must not be the end of my Bible-readings. I must read for myself now. I must find out new truths in God's great treasury. I must know the old ones better, and strike the roots of my being further into their unfathomable deeps. To hold earthly treasure is to hold earthly responsibility, but to be the custodian of God's rich truth is to hold the highest and the most sacred trust. And the Revival has left this to thousands. Do I know the responsibility of it?

Has the Revival left me faith in the ministry of song? Then have I responsibility. What did not die with the last grand strains of Mr. Sankey's voice. If God has given me a voice, it may not be a very grand one, but could He not use it, such as it is? If I have been silent these last three months I must answer for it. Are there no poor homes near me which would be gladdened by my simple hymn? Are there no dark, burdened lives around me to which the paths of "Go bury thy sorrow" might come as an angel's song of peace? Are there no sick and lonely little ones into whose hearts the "Old, old story" might not waft the seeds of a child's first faith? Or are there no sinful, despairing ones in whose hardened souls "The Great Physician" might not touch the chords of penitence and love? In my inmost soul have I dwelt upon the "responsibility" of this?

Has the Revival left me power? Then I must win souls with it. I am not to lay it by till the next revival comes. That would be having the power without the responsibility. But the power is the responsibility, and therefore I must work. If I think of my responsibility, then I must not talk of the movement as if it were past—of the "late" Revival. No. There must be more Revival. There shall be more if I am true. There must be my Revival next. It may be a very little one; perhaps no one shall hear of it. But I am responsible for having it, and God will give me it. I do not mean that it will be really my Revival. It will be God's Revival, and He will give me the Holy Spirit, and so it will succeed. But I must ask that; and this is part of my responsibility. God has given me this before, and I dare not stop here. I must go on now; and on, and on, and on—as long as He will let me: for this has become my responsibility,—has it not?

Oh, it is a very solemn thing to have once been a Christian worker. One must never, never stop it is for life; it may be for ever. If God would allow it, I think all real workers would like to work for ever. But doing God's will is even higher than winning souls; and He will lay all the plans for eternity for the best. Meantime, let me do my duty to the present. Perhaps some poor worker would not at all like to work in eternity. Perhaps you have got tired already! When the inquiry-meeting stopped, you stopped perhaps. But your Revival responsibilities did not stop. You must think of that. You must not be afraid to look it in the face. There may still be time to do a little; God may have many souls waiting for you. The opportunities of yesterday can never be recalled, but you can honestly face the responsibilities of to-day. You must not shrink from thinking about them. I cannot revive them by telling you about them. They lie between you and God. But be honest and willing now, and He will tell you what is right. But remember this: that He will bear your burden of folly and sin and trouble if you will; but responsibility for all the strength and opportunity He has given you, and all the work He has shown you, you yourself must bear in secret and alone.

Think of the responsibility of having once been used! Perhaps it was only to speak one time to one little boy or girl about his or her soul. Well, that is well worth living for; but why did it not happen many times? At whose door does the responsibility lie? Why did I give up working? Were there no more children to save? What am I to say to my Master when I go for my one-starred crown? Oh, may my soul not be shut to the profound responsibility of having once been a fellow-labourer with Christ!

When a famous divine was once asked "What is the most important thought you ever entertained?" his answer, after a moment's reflection, was this. "The most important thought I ever had was my individual responsibility to God." Yes, "my individual responsibility to God"! The Revival has left me this—more solemn, more sacred than any other thought—the having breathed the atmosphere of a great Revival. But there is one thing more terribly solemn still: to have breathed this atmosphere, to have caught this spirit—and then to have lost it!

"HOW SHALL WE STUDY THE BIBLE?"

BY REV. THOMAS RICHARDSON.

THIS question is being asked by many young converts just now, and by many who have been professing Christians for years. It is the natural outcome of a revival of true spiritual religion. It may be profitable to give a few practical hints from those who have long made the Bible a daily study.

The present remarks are by one who has read and re-read the Book of books from beginning to end every year for twenty-five years, besides going over the substance of the whole of the Scriptures every month for many years; and every summer holiday for a few years past has been in the habit of making one Prophet, one Gospel, or one Epistle the Bible-subject for that year.

In reply to hundreds of requests, "Pray help me to the intelligent study of the Word of God," the answer has been—"Read through the Bible from Genesis to Malachi, and from Matthew to Revelation, as soon as possible, but read the Old Testament in the light of its one subject."

"What is that?" one says. The key-note is "the Messiah," "the Anointed," "the Apostle," "the Sent One," "the Prophet,"—all one meaning: the One coming from God to man. Let the books of Moses speak of the Messiah of whom they spake in the days of the woman of Sychar, and let the Psalms be read in the light of the Messiah, with the Prophets, and then will every heart yearn as the Holy Ghost leads us into all truth.

The Old Testament is a lock with many wards, to many readers. Let "Christ" as the key be applied, and every ward necessary for the opening of the Word will give way; for the Scriptures of the Old Testament will be found to testify of CHRIST.

Around this one thought every other moves, and gives a harmony to the whole. Without "the Anointed" as the one text, all is chaos and mist. With "Christ" as the Sun, there are other lights, indeed, like planets; but the keener the study, the more do these set forth "Christ" in his glory, as the centre of the spiritual system presented to the prayerful and diligent study of the believer whilst he sojourns here on earth.

Here is a gigantic thought—"The Christ" of God is to leave heaven and come down to man. Here it is all of God—from beginning to end; and the Book opens and closes with declarations that are only justified by the grandness of the centre truth—that God has so loved the world that He has determined to send his own "Messenger" from his own throne to the dwellings of men.

The whole of these Hebrew Scriptures carry us to Heaven, and we therein read Heaven's counsels and decisions.

Here, then, we have a practical help in the reading of the Bible through. There may be hard sentences, but none harder than the solving of our own existence; and by setting our opinions aside till once read through with this key, we shall be more in love with these marvellous pages as we progress.

The fulness of the blessing to those who read may not be realized at the first effort, but the untold delight of seeing the secret thought of one portion of the Bible will repay all the labour.

So long as we study the Old Testament, "The Messianic" is yet in heaven, yet to come. Make a note at the beginning of Genesis, "Messianic—He who will come from heaven to man." When read we shall be able to put on the fly-leaf after Malachi, "Messianic—He who will come [774] from heaven to man." Or let the key to the Old Testament be "The Messiah, which is, being interpreted, The Christ."

When we turn to the New Testament Scriptures, we have quite a different thought embodied. It is not, as in the Old Testament, one coming from a heavenly throne to an earthly home, but it is One born in the world in the most humble sphere; growing to manhood, establishing a Name, dying for sin, rising from the dead, ascending to heaven, taking a place on the throne of God—in short, just the history of Jesus. From the first verse in Matthew to the last verse in Revelation we have "the Saviour" brought out in a variety of ways, every separate book lending a special component part of "the light." But not in a confused way, if we apply the key to meet every ward in this lock. "Jesus," "the Saviour," the Man from amongst men, going from earth to heaven for man. This is a thought as entrancing as the Christ of the Old Testament. On the forefront of Matthew we may write "Jesus." At the end of Revelation, when read through, we shall from experience be able to write "Jesus."

Knowing that hundreds have privately followed this advice, and have found great delight in their closet-reading of the Word of God, it may be, in this day of mistiness, many may be glad to know that the Old Testament tells the history of THE ANOINTED of God, and the New Testament tells the history of THE SAVIOUR of sinners.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TEMPERANCE UNION.

IN view of the terrible increase of the habit of drinking amongst the women of our country, of all classes, it is proposed to form a bond of union amongst Christian women who are engaged in mission work, for the purpose of strengthening each other's hands in the Lord, in doing battle against our national foe—strong drink.

A preliminary meeting for prayer and consultation will be held (n.v.) at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spital-fields, on Wednesday evening, November 10: tea at six, meeting at seven. All who are engaged in any kind of Christian work are earnestly invited to attend.—Charlotte Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn; Agnes E. Weston, Sailor's Rest, Devonport; Annie Macpherson, Home of Industry, Spital-fields—conveners.

ROTHERHITHE.—A very important mission work is being carried on, under the direction of Mr. Harris and a few friends associated with him, in Paradise-street, Rotherhithe. It has proved most useful as an evangelical agency among the riverside people who inhabit the locality. The little room called "The Ark," in which operations have been conducted, will hold only about seventy adults, and the need of larger premises has long been felt to be urgent. An opportunity for suitable extension now presents itself. The adjacent property has just been sold, and, through the kindness of a friend, secured in the interest of Mr. Harris and his coadjutors. Upon this site they propose erecting a new mission-room, and appeal to their Christian friends generally for pecuniary help, to enable them to carry out their proposal.

THE VAUDOIS OF PIEDMONT.—The result of a visit to Piedmont four years since was to impress me with the great need of what we should call in an English parish a school-church or mission-chapel, to supply the wants of some 400 Valdeis living at Pra del Torno, a distance of eight hours from their pastor's residence and their parish church. I made known, chiefly by my little work "The Vaudois of Piedmont" (Shew), this thought to the Christian public. A very encouraging response has come, and the work has now commenced; still, we need about £400 more. Had it not been for changes affecting my sphere of labour, and corresponding parochial responsibilities, I imagine the whole sum would have been contributed before now. While I feel anxious to bring the undertaking to a close as early as may be appointed by the great Head of the Church, yet it is chiefly because of the urgent need of a more suitable place for the earnest labours of Pastor Bonnet, and for the fuller development of the work so successfully carried on among the young during the last winter, that I venture to ask the prompt and liberal contributions of all those of your readers who wish to add brightness and warmth to that light which has flamed so long in steady fidelity amidst the darkness of past and present times. Any donations will be thankfully received either by F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, or myself, Haddesley Rectory, near Selby, Yorks. J. N. WORSFOLD.

CHRISTIAN HEROISM.

A CHAPTER IN THE STORY OF MISSIONS.

We lay before our readers, with much satisfaction, the following narrative of facts, communicated to us by our brother Mr. Henry Reed, of Launceston, Tasmania. We feel sure they will all agree with Mr. Reed that in the "converted Fijians," to whom the story refers, will be found a type of Christianity worthy of its best days, and we trust with him also that this statement of the facts "will lead to prayer for the noble fellows who have gone forth to New Guinea in the prospect of death."

The following extract from Mr. Reed's letter to us contains the facts preliminary to the main part of the story:—

"About four or five months since, the Rev. G. Brown, from the Friendly Islands, with a very interesting converted native called upon me. He said that for some time he had felt a strong desire by some means to send or carry the Gospel to New Guinea, and the islands about it. After much prayer and thought and consultation, he had come to the conclusion that the most likely way was to place the state of the people before the converted natives of the Friendly Islands, and ask for volunteers; which he did, and ten were selected. He then started for Sydney to obtain the sanction of the Missionary Committee, and to arrange for funds and conveying the men to their destination. All was satisfactorily settled; the Committee entered warmly into the scheme, and the necessary funds were obtained.

"But whilst in Sydney he was introduced to the commander of a man-of-war just returned from surveying a portion of New Guinea (I think it was Commodore Goodenough, the one just murdered with two of his crew by the natives of one of the South Sea Islands), who told him that without a steam-launch little could be done, the climate was so enervating, and fever and ague arising from the mangrove swamps in some localities rendered much exertion under a tropical sun dangerous, and strongly recommended a steam-launch. Mr. Brown's visit to Tasmania was, if possible, to obtain funds to purchase one. When the whole was laid before me, I thought it of God, and offered to pay the cost of one, if such a thing could be found in the colonies. Upon his return to Sydney, a launch in every way suited was for sale—a strange circumstance. I was communicated with, sent the money, the launch was bought, and without my knowledge was named the Henry Reed.

"Mr. Brown's plans, now apparently completed, were all upset in consequence of measles breaking out in Fiji, and carrying off thousands. The authorities of the Friendly Islands dreading their introduction, made such quarantine laws that Mr. Brown found it would be impossible to get off the men who had promised to go. The plan was altered, and he sailed for Fiji."

What follows is taken from the correspondence of Rev. G. Brown with his friends in Sydney and with Mr. Reed. After describing the terrible state of matters in Fiji consequent on the prevalence of measles, and the noble self-sacrifice on the part of the missionaries and teachers there in helping the natives during the fearful visitation, Mr. Brown writes:—

"On June 1 and 2 we held a meeting at Navukoa with the missionaries and native ministers, and afterwards, with the students. The native minister who was appointed to go with us was not sufficiently recovered from his illness to make it advisable for him to fulfil his appointment, and we found it difficult to get another in his place. We had plenty of volunteers from the students; in fact, they all volunteered, but some of them who were married and well suited for the work had to be passed by, on account of difficulties connected with their families. Six of the married were selected, and three single men, and with them we hope to make a start on Monday next.

"Fiji, June 12, 1875.—We hoped to have sailed to-day, but the action taken by the Government here has prevented us. In the afternoon a gentleman waited upon me with a letter from the Colonial Secretary. I told him that I would gladly meet his Honour the Administrator and the Executive Council with the natives, and named 11 a.m. to-day. In the meantime we heard that two gentlemen connected with the Government had gone to the teachers and asked them whether they were going of their own free will, how much salary they were getting, &c. They also told them that they were being sent to a race of cannibals, to a place where people were always ill of a strange disease (fever and ague), and where the food was not such as they were accustomed to, that they were going to be left to themselves for many months, and finished up by asking them if there were no heathens in Fiji to convert.

"At 11 a.m. to-day I attended at the Government buildings with the teachers. I was very kindly received, and had a chair given me next to Mr. Layard. He told me that the reason why the Government wished to meet the teachers and myself was, that reports were being circulated that the men were not volunteers, that they were being kept in ignorance of the real facts of the case, and that, as they were now British subjects, the Government considered themselves to be responsible for them, and therefore wished to have the whole matter fully explained to them. He also told me that he had a despatch from home, which positively forbade any Fijians being taken away to other groups, though he scarcely thought that that despatch was meant to apply to such a case as this.

"Mr. Layard addressed the teachers through the interpreter, and told them that they must remember that they were now British subjects—that no one had any right to compel them to go to any place where they themselves did not wish to go; that they were free to go and free to stay; that he was responsible for their safety; that if any of them went away now and got killed and eaten, the Government here would be blamed by the Home Government; and so he wished to tell them himself all about the countries to which they were being taken, and then to hear from them their own opinion and wishes. He then told them about the people, that they were great cannibals and very fierce; that the islands were very unhealthy, so that almost everyone that went there suffered much from fever and ague; that food might be very scarce, and that although we might take food with us, yet it was not the food to which Fijians were accustomed. He told them that they would be left alone without protection or support for some months; and asked them to consider the matter, and if, after hearing what had been told them, they still wished to go, he would not prevent them, but would wish them God-speed.

"The teachers then asked if they were to reply individually, or if one could speak for them all. Mr. Layard said that if they had appointed one to speak he could do so, or they could all speak if they wished. At all events, Amenio stood up, and with deep feeling said that they were not surprised at what they had just been told, that it was no new thing to them, as they had heard it all before from the missionaries before they volunteered for the service. He said—'We have fully considered this matter in our hearts; no one has pressed us in any way. We have given ourselves up to do this work, and "if we die we die, and if we live we live."' You may be sure I was well pleased to hear the noble fellow speak out so well, and his reply evidently made a good impression, but Mr. Layard began again telling them of the hardships endured by the London Missionary Society's teachers in New Guinea, and read extracts from the Sydney Morning Herald of May 8, with the accounts of the sufferings and death of teachers and their wives.

"A paper was then produced, which they were asked to sign. I objected to their doing so until certain alterations were made, after which the translation was read over to them, and they all said, 'It's all right,' or 'It's all clear to us.'"

Here follows a translation of the document to which they consented:—

"We, the undersigned Wesleyan teachers, do solemnly and truly declare that we were fully and carefully informed by the promoters of the mission to New Britain, New Ireland, &c., of the dangers which may be incurred to life and limb from the cannibal propensities of the natives of those islands and the insalubrious nature of the climate, which produces fever and ague and diseases of that character. We also were fully acquainted with the discomforts we may undergo from want of the food to which we are accustomed, and from not being able to speak the language of the people among whom we should be left without protection or support for some months; and we declare that, fully knowing all this, we make an election to proceed on this mission of our own free will, not compelled thereto by any orders or authority of anyone, but simply desirous of spreading the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ among the heathen inhabitants of those islands."

"There are very different opinions expressed about this action of the Government. I believe they felt that it was their duty to protect the natives, as they thought they were being imposed upon, or were being made the victims of our fanaticism. None of them are religious men, and they have but little sympathy with missions; but I think they were all both surprised and pleased—in fact, I know that Mr. Layard said afterwards to a gentleman in Fiji that it was really grand to hear those men (the teachers) talk. The whole affair was a triumph for us, and has placed us in a far better position than we were in before.

"Just as we were leaving, one of the women was persuaded away by some of her friends, and a white man who is married to some relation of hers, so we had to leave her husband behind also; thus we have only eight with us. I have been much pleased with them on the voyage. They have been cheerful, and have behaved well. They have family prayer, with singing and reading twice each day, and two services with sermons each Sunday. We expect to get two or three teachers here (Samoa). I daresay we could get more, but we do not wish to take more than ten this time.

"I was much troubled when in Sydney at our long detention there, but I feel certain now that it was a kind act done by our wise and loving Father. Had we got away from Sydney when we wished to do so, we should have reached Fiji at the very worst time, and would not have been able to get a single teacher; in fact, the great probability is that our expedition would have been abandoned, but God caused that to work for our good. We have had many proofs that God is with us, and so we are of good courage, and strengthen our hearts. Pray for us, that we may be neither foolhardy nor cowardly, but that we may do the work which God gives us to do with a single eye to his glory. I am in good health, and full of hope that we shall be successful. Oh, that we may be privileged to take to those poor perishing people the glad tidings of the Gospel of Christ, to tell them of salvation through Jesus only, to assure them that to them also is the word of this salvation sent."

Mr. Reed adds, in his letter to ourselves:—"What adds to the value of the narrative, the Government official documents are before us. It is not a mere missionary tale or a platform speech. Here you have full surrender and full consecration in its highest development. Ask your readers to pray for them. New Guinea and islands around contain an immense population."

KINGSDOWN ORPHAN HOME.—The Home is now carried on at Chester House, 3, Manor-road, Upper Holloway, in the immediate vicinity of Kingsdown-road, where the smallness of the house would not allow of increasing the work.

SOUTHAMPTON.—On the 12th ult. a crowded prayer-meeting was held in the Philharmonic Hall in this town for the purpose of returning thanks to our heavenly Father in Christ for the marked blessing which had attended, for five months nearly, the preaching of God's free, full, present salvation in Jesus, by working men, trained as evangelists, in connexion with the London Evangelization Society. The vicar of St. Matthews gave an interesting account (from the chair) of the united movement. The fruits throughout the neighbourhood were also most highly spoken of by Mr. Bullen, Major-General Tryan, and others. Dr. Wright (Presbyterian) gave out a hymn, and Mr. March, Mr. Carlisle (Congregationalist), Mr. Sandemann (Presbyterian), and Mr. Barnett (Free Church of England) engaged in prayer. Mr. Randle (J.P.) also spoke. The final Gospel-tent meeting of the Friday week previous was crammed, a good many being compelled to return owing to the pressure of numbers crowding for some way round the tent enclosure. On this occasion a considerable number of persons rose to signify that they had got benefit or salvation, in the first instance, through the efforts of the workmen sent by the Evangelization Society. H. M. BARNETT.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Dr. Donald Fraser gave the address at the quarterly meeting of the friends of this Mission on Monday week. There was a large attendance in Queen-square Mission Hall, and the chairman on the occasion was the Right Hon. W. Cowper-Temple, M.P. "Regeneration; how related to Gospel Preaching," was the subject treated by the doctor. After stating the obvious truth that the preacher must be a regenerate man, he showed that to be born again was a law of the Kingdom of God. "Ye must be born again," said our Lord to Nicodemus; and after stating this unalterable law, He preached the Gospel to the astonished ruler. The relation between the two was most important, and often not clearly understood. It was not acquired by baptism, nor by circumcision. God says, a "new heart I give you"; but was it not also written, "Every good gift cometh from Him"? The difficulty would be lessened, the doctor thought, by altering the phraseology. What is meant by the heart? The predominant affection, that would manifest itself according to its state, naturally at enmity with God, and, when changed, by a liking for things which it formerly hated. What the preacher, then, has to do, is to endeavour, speaking from the human point of view, to remove the hatred and to bring the people right up to the Gospel; as ambassador for Christ, beseeching, pleading, and praying the ungodly to be reconciled to God. This is what makes people change their minds. A new influence will come over them as the Holy Spirit imprints the word upon the heart, and makes it yield to his mighty influence. The Rev. H. E. Fox opened, and Mr. R. Baxter concluded the meeting, with prayer. Preaching bands were afterwards formed, and services conducted in the neighbouring streets to large audiences.

CONVENTION AT ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

THE fourth half-yearly Convention of Christians at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, W., was held on Tuesday and Wednesday last week. A large company assembled for prayer and meditation on God's Word. The subject chosen for consideration was "Christ as testified of in the Epistle to the Hebrews." We cannot too highly commend this plan of fixing on some comprehensive portion of the inspired volume, and seeking to expound it for the edification and strengthening of the assembled believers. In the midst of so much doubt and disbelief, we want nothing so urgently as an intelligent and honest opening up, by well-instructed and Spirit-taught teachers, of God's own word.

Mr. Hurditch presided at all the meetings of the two days, and various well-known brethren spoke on the allotted subjects. Lack of space prevents us from giving a detailed report, and instead of attempting to condense the proceedings of the two days, we think it will be, perhaps, more profitable to our readers if we give the following testimony which has reached us from one who was present on the first day. We trust the case of the writer, whom we know well as a greatly tried child of God, is but one of many.

"A REST FOR THE PEOPLE OF GOD."

"Blessed and praised be God for the Convention of Oct. 26, held at St. George's Hall. For some time my soul had been exercised on the subject of rest. I had endeavoured, with all my might, prayerfully to find it, and greedily read every book on the subject that came within my reach. I sought it, expecting to receive or enter into it. The Lord granted my request according to his own word which He used as written in Heb. iv. 15, unrobing me of my own righteousness, as the sacrificial lamb was skinned and left naked, then opening and laying bare my heart to his burning gaze. He granted me the power also of discerning what was within me. I beheld such a mass of impurity and unholiness, that, before I could be considered at rest, would have to be cleansed, removed, put out of remembrance, that had God left me within sight of self only, I should have given up the idea as hopeless—rest impossible—and been wretched the remainder of my life.

"But blessed be his name, He never maketh ashamed. He did not leave me in the miry clay of despair, but with his own arm, the Spirit, drew me out and placed my feet upon a Rock, from whence I should see great things. God put it into the heart of some unknown friend in Ramsgate (for the letter bore that post-mark) to send me a notice of this Convention. Tuesday, being the most convenient day, was fixed upon; had Wednesday been more so, my soul would not have learned the lesson it longed to know—so kindly does the Lord arrange all things for the good of his children. A dear servant of the Lord, Mr. Groves, presented such a glorious view of my Saviour's divinity as he spoke, by the aid of the Spirit, from Heb. i., that my soul was filled and satisfied with the perfection of it. He next clearly revealed the perfection of his manhood, which also established me in a manner I cannot describe. The perfection of the Sacrifice once offered, the blood, the life of the Son of God—God-Man,—satisfied me. Christ was being exalted; I was dwindling down to nothing at all. His finished work being accepted by God for sinful man, filled me with thanksgiving; my joy seemed almost full, till a glance back at self again—so imperfect—brought a sad sense of unrest, but not for long.

"A brother led the meeting on to consider Jesus as our great High Priest. As he thrillingly spoke of the compassion, the love, the perfection of Him who had rent the veil, taken down the partition, and was seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, having by Himself purged our sins, inviting us to come boldly to the Throne of Grace, telling all that was in our hearts, to obtain compassion and find grace to help in every time of need, my heart burned within me, and I found rest in those precious words found in Heb. iv. 15. Surely, I thought, Jesus, the Perfect God, Perfect Man, Perfect Sacrifice, Perfect High Priest, is my Rest. I commend myself into his keeping. 'Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it.'

WESTERLEIGH, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—We are glad to learn from a correspondent that the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society in this place has for its object a more full acquaintance with the truths of the Bible, encouraging one another in the Christian life, and the benefit of those around who do not love the Saviour. We wish it abundant success in the attainment of these all-important objects.

REVIVAL IN THE WEST OF IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—It will interest your readers to know that during the past two months a very gracious work of God has been going on in the West of Ireland. It is particularly interesting as occurring in that province of our land which is enveloped in greatest spiritual darkness, and which, owing to its comparative inaccessibility, is the most isolated part of our country, and is thus shut out very much from evangelistic effort. Latterly "the wilderness and the solitary place has been made glad," for we have had "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

The Rev. O. L. Leonard, from the United States (in connexion with the Irish Evangelization Society), visited Ballina in the end of last August, and laboured there for some weeks. All the Protestant ministers heartily co-operated with him, and found it a season of great refreshment and blessing. A letter sent to me at the time by a minister, who drove many miles to take part in the meetings, runs thus:—"The Lord is doing great things in Ballina. I went in on Thursday evening. The meetings are united—held in Young Men's Lecture Hall. They are crowded; many have come out publicly on the side of Christ. The people have been greatly moved, the young men inquiring in large numbers and waiting to be conversed with. Careless ones and scoffers have been brought down by the Spirit of God."

On the 19th of last month Mr. Leonard visited Killala, where the writer had an opportunity of uniting with him, and of taking part in the glorious ingathering of souls to Christ. The meetings were held in the Presbyterian Church, which was filled every night—people coming six and eight miles to attend the services. Not a few Roman Catholics were amongst these, some of whom found their way to the inquiry-room. This latter seemed quite insufficient to accommodate the multitude of anxious souls, and in several instances almost the whole congregation waited to be conversed with.

On the 3rd of this month Mr. Leonard visited my congregation and remained with me four days. It was a time of much blessing. God's Spirit was very manifestly present. The inquiry-room was crowded every night—strong men were bowed down and wept like children; others were rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. It was a scene never to be forgotten by the writer, who cannot now but look upon his little church (situated, as it is, in one of the remotest parts of Connaught) with double interest as the birthplace of many souls. My predecessor in the ministry (Rev. Michael Brannigan) toiled for upwards of twenty-five years in this lonely corner of the Master's broad harvest-field, and fell at his post after having sown the seed midst many tears and prayers. Yet not to him was such a season of blessing and of ingathering of souls vouchsafed. He laboured, and I have entered into his labours, but God must have all the glory. "This is the Lord's doing: it is marvellous in our eyes."

CONVENTION AT CASTLEBAR.

A Convention of ministers of different denominations, and of others interested in the work of revival, was held in the Parochial School-room, Castlebar, on Tuesday, Oct. 19. The attendance was large, and a spirit of deep earnestness pervaded the meeting; the Rev. O. L. Leonard presided on the occasion.

After the preliminary services, Rev. John Wilson, Killala (Presbyterian), spoke of the necessity of believing prayer in order to the obtaining of a revival in the land. He told of the blessing that had attended the labours of Mr. Leonard in Mullaferry and Killala; the people of the district had been greatly stirred. A large number of the young people had been led to decide for Christ.

The Rev. Robert Duff, Ballina (Presbyterian), gave a deeply interesting and impressive account of the work of grace that had been experienced there. A daily prayer-meeting, he said, was held each morning at eight o'clock, which was attended by fully one hundred persons, no matter what the weather; and the rooms, in which the weekly services connected with the different churches were held, were filled to overflowing.

Brief, earnest, and practical addresses were delivered by Revs. Messrs. Martin and Johnston (Methodist), and Cairns (Presbyterian), all bearing on the work of revival in the locality. A good many inquirers retired to the Methodist church adjoining, to be conversed with by Rev. Mr. Leonard and other Christian workers. The Lord is indeed visiting his people in this dark part of the land, and filling their hearts with joy and gladness.

CONVENTION AT HULL.

THE meetings here commenced by a prayer-meeting held in the Protestant Hall, on Monday evening, Oct. 18, when the room, which holds 500 people, was densely packed, and many could not find entrance. The subsequent meetings during the four following days were held in the Artillery Hall, and commenced each morning with a prayer-meeting at 7.30—the numbers at this increasing each day, till they reached on Friday an attendance of between 300 and 400. Two general meetings were held, one at 11.30 and one at 7.30; at the latter of which, on the last two evenings, there were not less than 1800 people present. Two young men's meetings were also held, one on Wednesday evening and one on Friday, both largely attended. Meetings for inquiry took place twice a day for an hour each time, and while these were going on similar meetings were assembled in another room for ladies, conducted by Mrs. Compton.

Let me say a few words about these inquiry-meetings. They are second in importance only to those which have been held for the awakened sinner. The struggles of the soul, in its anxiety to follow Christ, and in its conflicts with evil, are so many that it is impossible to exaggerate their importance. At Hull they were remarkable for the spirit of real inquiry displayed by all who attended them; no word of cavilling at the truths enforced in the general meetings was uttered, but only questions closely bearing on the difficulties of the Christian life, and how they were to be met, were put. It is believed that many an anxious one went home rejoicing in the all-sufficiency of Christ, and in the comfort derived from the promises of God as given in the Scriptures.

The meetings generally were remarkable, too, for the close attention given to the things that were said, and for the devout spirit displayed throughout. A large number of men of business were there, many clergymen and ministers, many professional men also—all of whom showed the utmost appreciation of the value of the effort that was made in gathering them together.

It may be asked, "What does all this mean, and whither is all this tending?" It surely means that there is a craving in the hearts of the Lord's people for some better thing than the most of us have attained to; that there is a growing conviction amongst us that there are treasures of power, of grace, and of strength in Christ, for all our need, which but few have hitherto believed. It is tending to a greater separation from all known evil and from all doubtful things, to a more complete yielding of ourselves to Christ and to a more entire trust in Him for "all things that pertain to life and godliness" (2 Pet. i. 3).

If people gather together in humility, and nothing is put before them but those things which are taught and sanctioned by the Word of God, much blessing will follow—blessing which will help forward the revival of God's truth in the hearts of believers, and the progress of the Gospel throughout the world.

H. F. B.

KILKEEL, co. Down, Ireland, has been visited by agents of the Evangelization Society, and their labours have been much blessed. The neighbourhood (says a correspondent) appears ripe for a revival, if Christians of all denominations will take united action, and support the labours of these evangelists.

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATION, YORK.—The annual meeting of this Association was recently held, and we see from the report of the energetic secretary, Mr. G. Bennet, that the need of larger and more accessible premises is greatly felt. Mr. Bennet recently reminded us that Messrs. Moody and Saakey commenced their services in this country at York, and suggested that it would be a fitting memorial of their labours if a good building for the purposes of the Association were erected there, especially in view of the very deep solicitude Mr. Moody feels in the welfare of such institutions. We wish Mr. Bennet, and his friends good success in their work.

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."—On my wedding-day—about fourteen years ago,—entering Portsmouth by train, my eye caught the above text, twice referred to of late in THE CHRISTIAN as being on a house close to the railway in that town. It broke with startling power upon my mind. At intervals since then has the sight of that text and the solemnity of those words returned vividly to memory. I feel the sight of that text on the wall of the Portsmouth house has been a call from the Lord which, neglected, would leave me "without excuse" before Him. I venture to send this as some testimony to the usefulness to souls of that one text in particular, in the humble hope that it may serve as encouragement to those who may be stirred up to make similar efforts elsewhere to that of the "aged blacksmith" of the Portsmouth dockyard, so that, with God's blessing, they may "by all means save some."

A THANKFUL BELIEVER.

AMONGST THE WORKING MEN IN PARIS.

MY DEAR BROTHER.—The ship which Mr. MacAll has been navigating is getting into deep waters; and as he is now spreading all sail, let us wish him a favourable breeze, a safe voyage, and an abundant entrance into port. To speak without figure, on Tuesday evening last a new preaching station was opened. Thank God for seeing one of the grandest sights in Paris, one not soon to be forgotten!—this beloved servant of Christ, and his wife, surrounded with entente cordiale by a united band of French and English friends, in the midst of the ouvriers of Belleville. On entering the avenue through a garden leading to the hall, which had been formerly a “café chantante,” a crescent of gas-burners cast their light upon a group around the door. We entered and found the hall, which will, perhaps, hold 500, brilliantly lit up with gas, well filled with working men and women, and well ventilated. We were invited to a seat by a gracious young English lady. A young French brother, formerly at Mr. Guinness’s institution in the East of London, was singing with a good voice “Sur Toi je me repose,” and the people cordially joining in the chorus. The singing was tastefully accompanied on the harmonium by Mrs. MacAll. We watched the proceedings with intense interest and emotion.

M. Le Pasteur Lorriaux, who was saved from the Ville du Havre, said a few kind words, after which M. Le Pasteur G. Fisch addressed the meeting, saying: “After the war and the Commune I received the visit of an English gentleman, a pastor, who, with his wife, was passing through Paris. A few days after, I received a letter, signed Robert William MacAll (a smile from ouvriers), stating that whilst distributing tracts at Belleville, a young ouvrier had urged him to come and take up his residence amongst them for their good. Mr. MacAll added that, not speaking French well, he asked me my opinion about it. I wrote back to say that it was a matter to commit in prayer to the Lord; and I had no doubt that, if He sent them, it would be for a blessing to the people. A few days later I received another letter, stating that he had mentioned the fact to his congregation, and his desire to leave them, in order to devote himself to Belleville. They set their faces against it, using every kind of objection, stating, amongst other things, that he would be sure to be killed amongst such a set.” “But you see,” added Pasteur Fisch, pointing to him, “he came in spite of that; he is still alive; you have not killed him! and I hope he will live many years to be a friend to you.” This speech brought tears to many careworn faces, and looks of love from all as they gazed upon their “ami” whom God had sent them. M. Faucher added that if he had been asked four years ago if Mr. MacAll would ever be likely to adjourn to such a hall as this, from the shop where he first commenced the work, he would certainly have said, “No.” And if it were possible that fourteen meetings of the same kind could be held in Paris, he would have said, “Certainly not”; but now he would say, “The more the better.” He added a few more words about a “finished salvation.”

At the close of the meeting, Mr. MacAll stood at the door, and said a kind word, and shook the people by the hand as they went out. Ah! it is sympathy the French workman wants; and “I believe in the love of God and the shake of the hand!” This is the fifth or sixth adjournment to larger premises.

A working man said exultingly, the other day, to a French lady at one of the meetings—“This is the thing to do to drive the Jesuits out of Paris, and out of France. We have tried fire and sword, but now we will try the ‘Beangile.’”

I bespeak the sympathy of the Lord’s people in England on behalf of our friends and their important work. They do not need anything for their personal expenses, for, through the goodness of God, they can live upon their own resources, but this is a great and growing work, and at the present moment they are at “low-water mark” with respect to funds, or rather I should say they are “under water.” As long as the working man of Paris are so ready to listen to the Gospel, the work cannot stand still—it must go on; and I can, I am sure, confidently ask our English friends to give him a helping hand.

A very promising young brother, whose translations of Sankey’s hymns are sung at the meetings, has just joined the army; this is a great loss to Mr. MacAll. The young men of Belleville, with tears and prayers, commended him to God last Saturday, that he might be kept from temptation, and made a blessing in the army. Let us do the same.

Then the great pressure of the work affects the bodily health of the labourers, and now and again they are laid aside; and they equally need to be remembered, that God may vouchsafe spiritual health and vigour amidst the routine of work and the whirl of Paris life.

With these fourteen stations, your readers can imagine what a great need exists for labourers. Pray, then, for those already engaged; that God may raise up many more; that He may bless Mr. and Mrs. MacAll, giving them health and strength for their delightful yet arduous labours.

I am, dear Brother, yours very sincerely,
16, Rue Tilet, Paris, Oct. 21, 1875. JANE B. PEARSE.

THE PRISONER OF THE LORD.

“This is the work of God that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent.”—John vi. 29.

“The Lord thy God hath given thee rest.”—Deut. xxv. 19.

LORD, I would work for Thee,
In thy wide field afar;
The joyful song wakes echoes sweet
Where thy dear servants are.
Vain seems my life for Thee,
While I sit here apart;
Oh! give to me the hearing ear
And understanding heart!

“My child, yon busy scene
Is not assigned to thee,—
Thou hast a place upon the Rock,
There thou shalt rest with Me.
The pine-tree loves the plain,
The cedar seeks the height,
But myrtles in the valley low
May bear their blossoms white.

“Is it so hard a lot—
This stillness and this rest—
To suffer with Me for awhile,
And be for ever blest;
To know my hand of love
Upholding in the gloom,
That not a cloud too dark should break
To mar my myrtle’s bloom?

“Safe from the scorching day
Thy sheltered life hath been.
The storms that swept above the hill
Have left my valleys green.
Life’s deep mysterious scroll
A sealed book must be,—
The service of thy Father’s house
Is to believe on Me.

“Within my dwelling-place
Thy tender life shall hide;
Enough that I have need of thee—
Only with Me abide.”
Lord, teach me as Thou wilt
The mysteries of thy grace;
Content, if only I may share
The sunshine of thy face.

LEEDS METHODIST MISSION.—In all the Circuits around Leeds, mission services are to be shortly held. Two preachers are to be sent to each place, who, in conjunction with the ministers stationed there, by preaching, holding services in mills, outdoor addresses, &c., will strive to bring lost sinners to a Saviour. As preparatory to this great effort, the whole of Friday last week was set apart for a convention of the church for prayer and conversation on the work of God. A work has already begun, the magnitude of which no one can estimate. Ministers and laymen from all parts got up one after the other and gave themselves anew to the Lord, and spoke of how best to win souls to Christ. If possible, the great evening meeting in Brunswick Chapel surpassed all. We believe there were many conversions. A. W.

LAMBETH.—A portion of the friends who aided Major Cole in his efforts at the Victoria Theatre during the late visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have, together with a band of young converts, opened a mission in Bath-street, London-road, under the title of the Bath-street Mission. A small chapel, capable of containing about 200 persons, has been secured at a moderate rental, and it is earnestly hoped that the Lord may largely bless the efforts so put forth for the furtherance of his kingdom. Meetings are held three nights in each week—viz., Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, commencing at eight o’clock. A committee has been formed, which meets for business at the close of the service on Friday evening.

"SPOILS OF BATTLE" AT KIDDERMINSTER.

It was enacted, and the statute remains in force, that those who tarry by the stuff should share alike in the spoil with those who go down to the battle (1 Sam. xxx. 24-26), and as many have been praying for great blessing from the Lord to follow my visit to Kidderminster, I write a line for the joy of such as have specially prayed, that they may rejoice in the song of the Lord over many precious souls blessed through the word spoken.

As a word of encouragement to the Lord's dear children to sow beside all waters, I might be allowed to say, that, some years since, I was returning from the Dublin meetings by Chester to Birmingham, and, as is my custom, I was speaking to some of my fellow-passengers on matters of eternal interest, when I found one of these was a Christian lady. We exchanged notes of address, &c., and she gave me an invitation to come to Plymouth, which I promised to accept when the Lord should be pleased to make the way for me. This He did some time after, and some souls were blessed at that visit. This same lady has been staying for some time in the neighbourhood of Kidderminster with a lady who had the souls of the people at heart, and who was seeking to help them in spiritual things as well as in matters for this life.

Reference was made, in your letter respecting Kidderminster, to an invitation to address a meeting of mothers some months since. I did not think the time had come for me to visit the place then, and suggested their waiting upon God in prayer, and I would do the same. When, some time after, I heard again from this same lady, who still kept the matter before the Lord, I suggested that the various ministers of the town should be consulted, and if possible united, working together for the common good of the town, and having special prayer in all the churches, so as to enlist the sympathies of the Lord's people. Also, I desired that a committee of Christians should undertake to visit the people, as was done by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe in Liverpool and London. All this was heartily agreed to, all the choirs of the various Non-conformist churches uniting in leading the singing.

No doubt this very greatly added to the good work, so that the present blessing, which I trust will go on to far greater results, has come, under God, from the perfect fellowship which has been manifested by all the Lord's people. I can say for myself that I never spent a happier nine days in my life. There was nothing to mar our fellowship in this good work. And I believe, if the Lord's people in other towns would act in the same way, very large blessing would be the result. It would still be true that the world would believe when they see believers themselves one in heart and one in purpose—to exalt and glorify the Lord Jesus Christ.

As to the work itself, it is too early to say what has been definitely done, but many cases came before me which are deeply interesting. One said, "I have come to ask your forgiveness, for I did you a wrong." I said I had nothing to forgive. "But," she said, "I said you were telling what was not true, for you said no one need leave the hall without salvation if they heartily desired to be saved, and I said 'That is not true, because I wish to be saved. I have prayed for it, but I am not saved.' We went home, and my friend said to me, 'Do you think that man would come and tell us a story which was not true?' So I said, 'I'll try.' I went down on my knees and said, 'Lord Jesus Christ, I come to Thee to be saved from my sins, and by thy help I will not get up without getting it, if it is to be got.' While I was on my knees I remembered the words you said—'Whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have eternal life.' I said, 'Lord, I believe Thou hast died for my sins, because Thou hast died for the world.' Well, sir, when I said that I felt I was saved, and it was true, and I was the liar, not you. So I was so happy that I could not keep it; I had to tell it to some of my neighbours, and they are here and want to speak to you." I found them each under anxiety of soul. I trust that they were able to rest in the Lord before the meetings were closed.

Another case was that of a man who said, "I was the most dreadful sinner in the town—blasphemy and cursing came out of my mouth like smoke from a chimney. The word fitted me which you said about 'the mouth full of cursing and bitterness.' I am an awful sinner. But if the Lord will save me I wish he would." His wife had been at the meeting the night before, and went home with the Word in her heart. I hope both these cases will end in true conversion.

Another man said, "My house is a hell, and has been for years. My wife has often felt the power of my fist, and what you said about the cat running out of doors was just like me; my children hide anywhere out of my reach. But by the help of the Lord this shall not be so any more, for I am determined to give up the accursed cup and take the cup of salvation."

Another said, "My mother is dead, and your words made me remember her words. She would often pray for me, and when she died she said, 'You will meet me in heaven, won't you?' I said, 'I'll try'; but I did not mean it, because I wanted to have my own way. But 'tis like as if she was again talking with me to-night, and I have come to Jesus now, and He has saved me."

Another said, "We never went to any place regularly for twenty years," and they had not entered into any place to hear the Gospel for several years. But they had come in some miles from the country every night, and both man and wife were confessing to salvation. Another said, "That word went home to my heart like a dagger—about going to hell; and leading the children there. Oh, thinks I, that man is speaking to me; that belongs to me. Yes, I be a long way towards the pit, and there's a lot following in the same way." And the poor fellow groaned out—"O Lord save me; forgive me, and stop us from going on to hell."

Many who had been awakened before under the preaching in the various chapels and Sunday-schools, were led into peace, and went away trusting in the Saviour. These are only samples of many others who were blessed at these meetings. May I ask your prayers for special services at Staines and Windsor. Yours very truly, GEO. BREALEY.

A LETTER FROM GLOUCESTER.

A LADY, who took a deep interest in Major Cole's recent services here, thus writes to a friend:—

"No day passes now without our meeting with some burdened one, who has been anxious ever since Major Cole's visit, and it is our great joy to lead them to the Saviour.

"The most precious meeting took place on Friday evening, Oct. 15. All were invited who had become anxious about their soul's salvation, or had lately accepted Christ, also the ministers, committee, and some Christian workers. An encouraging address was given, and then they were asked to confess Christ by telling of the blessing they had received; our hearts were stirred, and the tears of joy gathered, as we heard their simple testimonies to the power of the Holy Spirit (in some cases) in reaching the most degraded and sunk in sin. They thanked God for bringing Major Cole here, and for having saved them, and asked him to keep them steadfast. We contemplate a similar evening next Friday.

"We have kept up the noon prayer-meeting, and it is so sweet to see dear schoolboys come in regularly, day by day, with their school-books in their hand—one yesterday, who lives at a distance, with his sandwiches in his pocket, rather than miss the 'sweet hour of prayer.' The ministers take a warm interest in this meeting, and come and take part. We also keep up the Sunday morning 8 a.m. meeting, which is a sweet, calm hour with God, and bands the workers together. Every hand was raised that it should be continued. Theatre-services, twice a Sunday, have been held for some months with precious results, among just the class intended—those who go nowhere else.

"The Lord has heard prayer in thus blessing souls, and now we don't want to give any of the services up, but are at a standstill for funds; everyone seems to have done their utmost, but we have nothing in hand. We are in the midst of a time of great blessing. If the theatre-services are discontinued many will be turned adrift who come there, but have before been used to idle their Sundays away. We do not want to break up the noon prayer-meetings, and are impressed that there ought to be more 'special services' again soon.

"We have confidence that the Lord will do what is right about his own work. Surely He will send all that is needed to enable us to carry on the services if He sees good."

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.—Prayer was asked for special services to be held here: we now ask you to praise the Lord for having most manifestly blessed his word. For eight weeks the people have been eager to listen to the words of this life, night after night souls have professed to receive Jesus. Mr. Herbert Francis will follow up the labours here: we ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to remember him and the effort which will be put forth at the large Fair to be held in this town on the 9th inst. — N. GOOD WORKS IN LIVERPOOL.

OPENING OF A "BRITISH WORKMAN" PUBLIC-HOUSE.

We are finding out, bit by bit, as it is well expressed in our opening paper, what the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey have left us. We are exceedingly glad to be able to record to-day one direct result of the Liverpool meetings, for which we trust and believe that town will, in generations to come, have cause to rejoice. We well remember the ringing cheers that greeted Rev. Chas. Garrett's fervent speech at the Liverpool Convention, as he dilated on the temptations to which the 20,000 Mersey dockmen were exposed, with scarcely any alternative, and proposed the formation of a British Workman Public-house Company, to provide safe and comfortable places of resort and refreshment.

Mr. Garrett's proposition was taken up by many of the Christian philanthropists of the town with creditable warmth and zeal, and the first "British Workman Public-house" is now an accomplished fact.

A Liverpool contemporary contains a glowing report of the opening meeting, held on the premises, 76, Regent-road, on Wednesday, 20th ult. Mr. Robert Lockhart presided, and various speeches of an encouraging and congratulatory character were delivered, including one from Mr. Garrett, in which he stated that he hoped the chairman would live to preside at the opening of "British Workman" No. 300.

A working man also spoke, appealing to his fellows to support the undertaking, and the proceedings altogether appear to have been most enthusiastic.

Our contemporary closes its account of the meeting thus:—"At the close of the meeting there was a tremendous demand for tea, coffee, and cocoa, hundreds availing themselves of these delicious luxuries, and, notwithstanding that the demand was immense, the attendants at the bar served all comers with the greatest rapidity and without the slightest confusion prevailing. There was no fighting—no cursing or swearing—no poor broken-hearted wives to be seen peeping in at the door; but, on the contrary, there was much joy, and much kindness of feeling and sentiment interchanged between man and man as they met to eat and drink together, and to enjoy a meal on which, without hesitation, they could ask God's blessing."

Mr. A. Balfour, who is one of the directors, writes to us on Friday last:—"I have just returned from a visit paid to the 'British Workman.' I rejoice to inform you that the undertaking promises to be a great success. The premises consist of a ground, a first, and a second floor; all the three were crammed to-day with working men—so crowded was the place that they were sitting in a line on the stairs! I cannot but expect that great results are to ensue."

It is fully anticipated that the Company will be successful on commercial grounds; on moral grounds alone it deserves the hearty support of all who wish well to the bodies and souls of their fellow-men and women.

TEMPERANCE MEETING IN VICTORIA HALL.

On Saturday week a meeting was held in Victoria Hall by Major Cole, specially to consider the question, "Can a drunkard be saved?" According to reports received, the meeting was in every way successful. Major Cole testified to the power of Christ to save from the power of the intoxicating cup, and many others in different parts of the hall corroborated his evidence from personal experience. The appropriate hymn "Yield not to temptation," which we lately published, was sung by Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole; and we trust that the meeting was not without result.

SUNDAY MORNING FREE BREAKFASTS.

This movement has extended to Liverpool. The first gathering of hungry and homeless ones was brought together on the morning of Sunday week in a school-room in Vauxhall-road, when about 130 were present, besides Christian workers. Mr. Court presided, and Major Cole spoke very lovingly and touchingly on "The Gospel of Jesus Christ." About thirty remained to be spoken with at the close. We bid our Liverpool friends God-speed in all these labours of love.

WILTON.—A correspondent writes of great blessing in this town attending the evangelistic addresses of Miss Howden. During the ten days of successive meetings the spiritual interest was intensified, and many who were sitting contentedly in "the valley and shadow of death" are now rejoicing in the Light of Life, and enjoying the brightness of the True Light. In one instance a whole family were thus blessed. Miss Howden's address is No. 7—Springfield Villa, Springfield-road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

The annual meeting of this Mission took place on Monday, Oct. 26, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park.

A Conference of Workers was held in the afternoon, the Rev. Arthur Hall presiding. The Rev. S. Hebditch, of Clapton, opened with prayer.

Mr. J. W. Jordan first spoke of Saturday afternoon services for children held during the summer on Blackheath, of meetings at Woolwich, at Guildford, and at Barking, at each of which places there was a good work.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith gave an interesting account of work amongst the children on the seashore at Llandudno. He had held services daily on the beach during a fortnight, having several gatherings of 1000 or 1500. Between the services he often had a game of cricket with some of the boys on the sand, and this led many elder lads to attend the services, and there were some hopeful cases of conversion amongst them. On Sunday afternoon there was a gathering of 1500 in the "Happy Valley," and the singing of the simple hymns by the children brought a number of fast men and fashionable young ladies, who, perhaps, seldom heard the Gospel.

Mr. Finch, Secretary of the Orphan Working School, said that his own children's service at the Boatmen's Institution, Paddington, had resulted in several young people joining neighbouring churches.

After some interesting details from Mr. H. Hill, jun., and Mr. Kerwin, a gentleman from Chelmsford bore testimony to the blessing resulting from the services held there by Mr. Jordan. A Christian Band had been formed, and twenty or thirty young people had joined it.

The Rev. T. Kübler and Messrs. Bishop and Parkinson also spoke. The Chairman dwelt on the necessity for a week evening service for the thoughtful and earnest children. He had such a meeting weekly, and fifteen or sixteen of the young people were consistent members of his church. Great good had been done by the special meetings held by the Children's Evangelistic Band at his church at Tolmers-square; it was not merely what had been done at the time, but the after-effects. It would do good to any school to have a series of such services occasionally.

The meeting was closed with special prayer for Mr. Spiers, who has been obliged to give up work for the present on account of illness.

After tea the workers assembled again for a prayer-meeting conducted by Mr. T. J. Hughes, Chairman of the Committee of the Mission.

The evening meeting was held in the large hall, Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, President of the Mission, in the chair.

Mr. T. B. Bishop read a brief report, supplementary to the annual report of the Mission issued in July last. It appeared that there were in London 100 Sunday-evening and 125 week-evening children's services, and all but about five or six had been commenced within the last eight years. In Liverpool there were sixty-five services, with an average attendance of 16,000 children, and a staff of 700 teachers and monitors. In Birmingham there were over twenty services, in Chester eight or nine, and there were many other towns where large and successful services had been established, all within a short period. During the last few years different members of the Mission had held services in no less than 240 country towns, and many of them had been visited several times. The report went on to speak of the seaside services, and the extension of the work in Ireland and Scotland, and to Canada, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, &c., and closed with some remarks on the leading principles of the work. It was mentioned that the Mission was about £110 in debt, the subscriptions having been much smaller than usual during the last few months; but it was not insolvent, as there was a large stock of hymn sheets and children's tracts and books on hand. It would be possible to dispose of this stock and clear off the debt, but the stock was necessary to the proper carrying on of the work of the Mission.

The Rev. D. B. Hankin, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay-park, gave the first address. He was one who firmly believed in the conversion of little children. He would say to all engaged in this blessed work—Work earnestly, work prudently, and work prayerfully. It was most needful also to keep a careful eye on the children after they had passed out of our immediate control.

The Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson followed with an earnest and stirring address on the importance of seeking the early conversion of children. No association was more worthy of the support and confidence of the Christian Church than one which sought to bring children early to the Saviour, and then to lead them up in the nurture of the Lord.

The Rev. Gordon J. H. Llewellyn, of Ledbury, gave the last address. After speaking of the services held by Mr. Spiers at Ledbury, and of meetings for children held by himself in several other towns, he referred to the conversational meetings. His excellent remarks on this point we hope to give in an early number.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Rev. J. Wilkinson.

During these meetings some interesting personal testimony was given of blessing resulting from the children's services. One minister spoke of two of his children having been deeply impressed at Mr. Spiers' seaside services. Those deep impressions seemed to wear away for a time, but they have now, at a very early age, been admitted to his church. Another minister said that his servant owed her conversion to the Sunday-evening children's services.

THE GEORGIAN BAY, CANADA.

ALL-DAY MEETING.

On a rainy morning, Oct. 9, a number of earnest-looking men and women might be seen gathering into the village street, and thence into a capacious building known as the Drill-shed. On entering this you found a large stove in the centre throwing out heat. On every side were seats formed of rough planks on blocks of wood, which were rapidly being occupied by the incomers.

How came so many on a busy week-day, and why were the stores in the village shut? To give thanksgiving and praise to God for the recent Revival in their midst; and, reading of the all-day meetings at home, the old and young converts determined to have one in their midst.

Hardly four months since, in a Sunday-school gathered mainly by the efforts of an old sailor, converted five years since during the Galt Revival, the Spirit of God was poured out in a singularly godless neighbourhood. With no outward help the work began and progressed during the first week, and some of the most hardened cases in the neighbourhood, who came to scoff, were arrested, changed, forgiven, and soon were pleading with their former companions. The work spread rapidly, hundreds were converted, prayer-meetings began in different neighbourhoods, and the work still goes on.

To praise for the past, and pray for a continuance of blessing, this all-day meeting during the busy fall season was called, and hearty and earnest were the testimonies given during the day to the reality and completeness of the change. The morning meeting, presided over by one of the most earnest Christians living in their midst, was specially devoted to thanksgiving and praise. The afternoon consisted of evangelistic addresses from Christians and young converts; while the evening was a union of prayer, praise, and exhortation.

It would have rejoiced Mr. Sankey to hear the spirit and feeling with which his well-known hymns were sung, and Mr. Moody to know that it was owing to one of his printed sermons in the New York Witness that the first convert was gained.

The old sailor, finding he could get fifteen papers for twenty-five cents, sent for them, and, like Hezekiah, pleaded before the Lord that they might win fifteen souls. The Lord has "given him much more than this," and he has faith to believe the blessing is yet but beginning.

God grant the wave of blessing may spread till, touching other circles, the whole of this mighty Continent may be moved.

Marchmont, Belleville (Ont.).

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—We have received a despatch just as we are going to press, stating that much blessing attended the services held here by Major Cole on Sunday last. The Town Hall was crowded with 3000 people, and many could not get in.

DUBLIN-BY-LAMPLIGHT INSTITUTION.—We have received some verses written in behalf of this Institution, which seeks to "weep o'er the erring one" and "lift up the fallen"; but regret that we cannot afford space for them. We subjoin the following remarks by the Lady Superintendent:—"This Institution is in great measure dependent on voluntary support. The number of its inmates is unusually large at present, and daily increasing, while the pressure upon its funds is proportionally great. The young women are being trained with a view to self-support. All are received without distinction of creed. The Word of God is daily read and explained to them, and we have had several blessed proofs of late that the instruction given has not been in vain. Will your readers help us in this work and labour of love? The address of the Institution is 35, Ball's-bridge-terrace, Dublin.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A STAGE RIDE FROM CALIFORNIA TO OREGON.

BY E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

DEAR YOUNG READERS IN GREAT BRITAIN,—It is a long time since I have sent you a letter through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN. I think you will be interested with some account of the wonderful stage ride of 275 miles we are having through the mountains of Northern California and Oregon. After having travelled 200 miles from San Francisco by rail, we were told at midnight we must leave the cars for an old-fashioned stage-coach. We were, therefore, soon being drawn rapidly over a rough road by six fiery horses. Having heard of the daring robberies which had been committed on the mountains over which we were passing, I determined to keep my seat on the outside with the driver.

Not long ago one of these drivers had been shot by robbers, who, at another time, succeeded in getting $56,000 from the express box. Though the stage was crowded, the horses flew round the short curves as if they did not care if it was upset. About three o'clock the birds began their morning chorus of praise to God, and from every flower-covered hill-top and mountain-side, and from the banks of every river, ascended the notes of praise to Him who noticeeth the little sparrows that fall to the ground. When the king of day came towering up over the high mountain-tops, it revealed to us such beauty and grandeur of scenery as we had seldom seen surpassed, even in Switzerland. Nearly all day we followed the course of the Sacramento river, till, instead of bearing the mighty steamer upon its broad bosom, it became a tiny rivulet.

We passed a farmer who had seventy sheep killed a few days before by California lions.

Finally we came in sight of Mt. Shasta, which was covered with snow, though in the valley where we were the sun was very hot. It is 14,390 feet high. We wanted to stop and ascend to the top of it, but we found that it would take three days to go and return. We therefore had to content ourselves by spending the Sabbath at its base.

Only a few weeks ago, Mr. Muir, whom I met in the Yosemite Valley, climbed to the top of Mt. Shasta, and was caught in a dreadful storm. The guide saw it coming, and warned him to flee for his life; but he did not heed the warning, and before he knew it, the blinding snow burst upon him. They could not find their way down the steep, slippery side. This Mt. Shasta was once a volcano, and there is still near the top of it a boiling spring, and this alone saved their lives, for they surely would have perished with the cold had not the warm sand of the spring protected them. Sometimes the sand and water were so hot that it blistered them. As they had no extra clothing, they had to keep on their wet clothes all night. In the morning they left their warm bed, and hurried down through the bitter cold and deep snow. But in half an hour their clothes were frozen to them, and Mr. Muir's hands and feet were stiff with the frost. In descending these mountains the traveller has to use a long staff; and the people, who live at the foot, told me that Mr. Muir's hands were frozen to his staff as if they had grown to it.

Let us stop a moment to draw a lesson from the sad experience of Mr. Muir. The guide, you remember, told him that the storm was coming, and warned him to flee from it; but he said, "I'll risk it."

He did risk it, and you see what the consequences were. Often I have heard young people, when warned of the danger of disobeying God, say, "I'll risk it." But as the storm of vengeance has burst upon them, they have found, when it was too late, that they were in a worse condition than Mr. Muir in that dreadful storm on Mt. Shasta.

Have you ever, my young friend, felt that you were a great sinner, and were in danger? You are, whether you have felt it or not. If, when Mr. Muir stood there on that mountain nearly frozen to death, knowing nothing of the hot spring near by, I had gone to him and said, "There is salvation for you in the left of that rock," he would have thanked me for it, and at once have fled for refuge from the storm. Now, you know Jesus is often called the "Rock of Ages"; and when you trust in Him, you enter into the Rock. This will help you to understand those words in Isaiah: "Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and every one that is lifted up shall be brought low, and a man (Jesus) shall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest."

Have you, my dear young friend, made that precious Saviour your "refuge"? If not, I entreat you to do so immediately.

You know not how long will be your stay in this world. A little girl, who had attended my meetings in San Francisco, was one day, soon afterwards, leaning against a window, and in some way broke off the point of a fine needle in her side. The doctor was sent for to get it out; but the needle, as if alive, kept pressing its way into the flesh, and speedily caused her death. Many people are asleep, but do not know of the danger they are in. Yesterday we crossed a river where a man, sound asleep in the stage, was drowned. It happened in this way: Very few of the rivers here have bridges over them, and in the spring, when the snow melts on these high mountains, they are greatly swollen. One day the driver, with six horses, came to one of these deep rivers, and thought he could drive across as usual; but soon the horses were swimming, the stage tossing about in the mad waters. The passenger awoke from his sleep "too late," and found he was drowning, with no one near to help.

We are all hastening to the river of Death; and unless we have made Jesus our friend and Saviour while on earth, we shall awake only when it is too late, to find that we are lost for ever.

MR. MOODY IN NORTHFIELD.

HIS LAST SUNDAY.

The Christian at Work of Oct. 21 says:—"Last Sunday, the 17th inst., was Mr. Moody's last Sunday in Northfield preparatory to commencing work in Brooklyn. Mr. Moody's work in Northfield has been rich in results for the Master. The differences in the Congregational Church have all been healed, and the congregation are united; a large circle of men and women have been converted; the young women converts hold independent prayer-meetings; a Young Men's Christian Association has been organized, and numerous accessions have been made from the Unitarian ranks, largely helped by the opposition of the Unitarian minister. The effects of Mr. Moody's labours in Northfield have been as widely felt in the surrounding towns, multitudes having come under the influence of the power of the truth. We avail ourselves of the report of the Herald for the following:—

"The old church was crowded even to the aisles this afternoon, and the meeting was opened by the singing of the hymn, "I am trusting, Lord, in Thee."

"B. F. Jacobs, the great Sunday-school worker of Chicago, who had preached in the morning, led in prayer, and it was followed by Mr. Moody's favourite hymn, "Tell me the old, old story." After which Mr. Moody read the fifty-first Psalm, commenting upon the lesson as he read. After the reading Mr. Moody gave out the hymn, "God loved the world of sinners lost."

"After the singing of this hymn, Mr. Moody said he would speak upon a part of the ninth verse of the third chapter of Genesis—"Where art thou?"

"The first question asked of man after the fall—not Where is thy neighbour? Where is this man or that man? but Where art thou? I do not know that ever I was in a place where people lived so much on one kind of food as in Northfield. That is someone else's fault. You will never get fat on that food. It is poor food for the soul. What are others' faults to thee? We do not come before God in families, but one by one we must pass up to Him. Now, ask yourselves these questions: Where am I? Who am I? Where am I going to? I have talked with some here who think they have no hereafter. If a man thinks he is no better than oxen, I might as well preach to the oxen. It is little account what the people in the town think of you; but it is of great importance how you stand in the sight of God. Where art thou? No sooner had the news reached God that Adam had fallen, than down came God. God was the seeker. Adam ought to have been. He ought to have cried up and down Eden—"God, where art Thou?" But it was the voice of grace, the voice of God. I doubt if Adam has ever had a son who has not heard it. Down the ages it has come. Like an autumn leaf or a weaver's shuttle my life will soon be gone, but where am I? [Mr. Moody proceeded to address the question of the text to professing Christians, backsliders, and the unconverted, in terms almost similar to those employed in his sermon from the same words in this country—published by Morgan and Scott; one penny.]

"As Mr. Moody, who had spoken throughout in a trembling voice, closed his appeal, very many were weeping all over the church. He extended the invitation to all to rise that wanted to be prayed for, and twenty-five rose at once. Suggesting that the young converts also rise, a great number arose.

"Mr. Moody said: "O, Lord, we thank Thee for the pleasant Sunday evenings in this place, and now, as we have come to the last one, give us a final blessing." He was overcome by emotion, and Mr. Jacobs continued the prayer."

The New York Christian Union presents its readers with "Hold the fort" and "The ninety-and-nine," music and words, and says:—"Preparations are already made for the daily attendance of a select choir of 250 voices to assist in the revival services in Brooklyn. The design is to secure a choir of Christian men and women, who will enter upon the work because they love it, and not as a formal or paid service."

The Illustrated Christian Weekly, correcting its former statement that the meetings would commence on Oct. 31, says they would open on Oct. 24, a week earlier, and adds:—"Messrs. Moody and Sankey probably go to Philadelphia in four weeks thereafter. The Boston clergy have united in extending to them an invitation to come to that city. Several clergymen in Brooklyn preached on revivals last Sabbath as a preparation for their coming. Arrangements are making for a series of union prayer-meetings in New York; a series under the auspices of the Baptists have already been commenced. The Universalists will also begin a series of meetings this week. Indications point to a religious work in other churches. A meeting has been held in Washington, in the Capitol portico, addressed by an evangelist and former co-labourer of Mr. Moody. A series of railroad meetings, growing out of the Christian Association work at Cleveland, has been inaugurated, mostly along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Why not a series of union prayer-meetings in every town and village?"

We hope next week to be able to record the opening services in Brooklyn.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

Our readers cannot fail to have noticed how seldom, if ever, a week passes without our having to record some wonderful work of saving grace in different parts of England, through the instrumentality of the agents of this most invaluable Society. We have been filled with thankfulness and gratitude, as these accounts have steadily reached us, and we confess to a feeling of surprise that the Society has been able to secure such a band of consecrated and successful preachers.

The Society has just issued an Occasional Paper, and we can well believe that they "find it no easy task" to give an adequate account of the work during the past six months; and that during no previous summer have they had so many tokens of the Divine blessing attending the preaching of the Gospel. 3937 meetings have been held within the summer half-year, as against 3011 last year. This occasional report contains many undeniable testimonies to the remarkable work the Society is doing, and of course a hundredth part is not told. We subjoin two extracts from the report, and suggest that those interested in this work should apply to the Secretary at 21, Surry-street, Strand, W.C., for a copy.

"We would earnestly commend to the Lord's people the subject of the preparation of tents for the next summer season. It is not possible for the Evangelization Society itself to undertake the purchase and management of tents, but we feel that they might become a means of great usefulness, especially in rural districts, and we would gladly supply the preachers for the work if friends would do the rest. Indeed, we can see no other way of evangelizing some parts of the country."

"It is not possible but that the increase of work during the past months, in which we rejoice, should have brought an increase of expense, and we now have the prospect of a still greater demand upon our men and our money in the approaching season, for the number of meetings is steadily increasing each month. Therefore, as on past occasions, we must again appeal to the readers of our report, and to all friends of evangelistic work, to help us in our need. We ask for more Evangelists, we ask for more money, and we ask most earnestly for the fervent and continued prayers of God's children."

"THE BIBLICAL MUSEUM," commenced some four years ago by James C. Gray, author of "The Class and the Desk," "Topics for Teachers," "The Sunday-school World," &c., contains a collection of notes, explanatory, homiletic, illustrative, &c., on the Holy Scriptures, arranged in a singularly clear, concise, and effective manner, carefully chosen, and eminently practical. The compiler has successfully completed the New Testament Commentary, and he has recently agreed to prepare, on a similar plan, the Old Testament Commentary. Of this section the first volume will shortly appear.

WEST CENTRAL INSTITUTE.

ABOUT 8 p.m. any day of the week, when a comparative hush has fallen upon Regent-street and Oxford-street, the great world having made its purchases, and rolled off in its carriages to dinner, a procession of another kind follows, for the "young people" who have spoken so politely and smiled so patiently at all the imperious demands and requirements of fashion are wending their way home; and on Tuesday, Oct. 26, some hundred or more pairs of eager feet turned to the home in Great Marlborough-street, where their much-loved and respected mother-friend was holding a tea-party. Time and space do not allow us more than a brief notice of this meeting, which, however, was full of pathetic interest, for Miss Bramwell, who has been long suffering from painful and complicated illness, could not advance, according to her custom, and bid each guest to a welcome seat; but from a low chair by the door, with extended hand and kindest smile, she gave every one the home feeling which we all desiderate entering a large company. And this "keeping up" of smiles and words was at a great cost, both mental and bodily; for it wanted but forty-eight hours to the anniversary of her beloved sister's departure from the work, which, as she laid it down, the one who rejoiced in her position of less prominence, bravely came forward and assumed, and by God's help has carried on for five years with a success all of his giving.

The guests, too, were interesting, many of them so young, so bright-eyed, and brave-hearted in bearing up against the world, too hurried in these days to notice whom it slights or injures.

But, the tea being concluded, and prayer and hymn having risen to God, it became evident that from the brightest eyes the tears are never very distant, as Mr. Wilson delivered a most eloquent and persuasive address to those who were not Christians, that they might at once flee the dangers of indecision, and gave a solemn charge to those who knew the grace of God that they should manifest it in their daily life, which, as he knew, is so full of hard toil, and worse-temptation.

Other gentlemen kindly gave addresses which we would fain tell of did time permit; but as the parting hour arrived, it was evident that great impressions had been made upon many hearts. May the great Day show blessed results!

Dear readers, we have told you in these columns, before, something of the nature of the Misses Bramwell's work. But it cannot be carried on, especially in winter, without the practical sympathy of those who have power to supply what is lacking. This lady gives—and counts it her greatest privilege to do so—her whole life, at a time when ease and rest would be acceptable. Will you strengthen her hands, now, with the money which God has given you? And then maybe—nay, certainly—you shall share her reward when Jesus says to you and to her, "Ye did it unto Me." E. H.

MR. KIRKHAM.—We observe with much pleasure that the friends of the Midway Conference Hall Open-air Mission on Thursday, the 21st ult., presented Mr. Gawin Kirkham with an harmonium in token of their appreciation of his unwearied and valuable labours amongst them.

THE YORKSHIRE HIRING FAIRS, which last about a fortnight, commencing on Nov. 16, present a glorious opportunity for distributing the Word of God and Gospel literature amongst domestic servants, farm labourers, and agriculturists generally. I intend, if the Lord will, opening a Bible-stall in each town where the fairs are held, such as York, Knaresborough, Wetherby, Otley, Ripon, Thirsk, &c., and shall be glad to receive Bibles, Testaments, books, and tracts for this purpose. May I ask your prayers, and that of your readers, that the Lord's blessing may continue to rest upon the seed sown, as I believe it has already done? G. H. JOHNSON.

Simpson's-buildings, Skipton-road, Harrogate.

KURRACHEE.—I saw in your issue of July 22 an appeal for tracts, books, &c., from Calcutta. A few of the kind therein mentioned would be very acceptable here. I have a sister in the Lord that sends me out THE CHRISTIAN every week, and as soon as I have read them I lend them out. I have ten weeks' numbers out now, and they have been hardly half-way round. I should, if I could afford it, be only too happy to keep a circulating library here in my own house. If any readers of THE CHRISTIAN have any books, tracts, &c., of a truly religious character, I shall be very thankful for them, for the purpose named, after they have done with them. I will put them in circulation as soon as received. There are plenty of Europeans in this station that can only be thus reached. W. J. R. BARNES, Constable.

MR. BIRCH'S WORK IN MANCHESTER.

THE Manchester Evening News of the 13th ult. contains an appreciative sketch of the origin and progress of the labours of this devoted layman in connexion with his Orphanage and the Free-Trade Hall services for the people.

It says:—"During the past year Mr. Birch has preached there without intermission, and from the overwhelming attendance it may readily be perceived that his work is warmly appreciated. Indeed, the crush is often so great that hundreds are unable to obtain admission, and if the hall were twice as large it would probably be well filled. Take, as an instance, Sunday night last, when the hall was crowded to excess. The orphan children, numbering about 130, were ranged on the platform, and sang two or three pieces during the evening with great effect. At half-past six, Mr. Birch entered, and offered a short prayer. The congregation then joined in a hymn, composed by Richard Baxter in 1681, and it was singing such as is rarely heard. Then followed the lesson, which the preacher expounded as he went on. Further on in the service there was a 'pause for silent prayer.' Mr. Birch also requested prayer for old people, and especially for one seventy years of age, who was dying. In due time came the sermon, and the great crowd, though hundreds were standing wedged against the walls, was so still that the preacher's voice was heard in every part of the hall. The sermon abounded with affecting tales and illustrations, and once, when the preacher described the death-bed of a profligate youth, both men and women were deeply affected. For about forty minutes Mr. Birch went on speaking words of hope and encouragement. At eight o'clock the service was over, and the people streamed forth into the wet streets. The congregation appeared to consist of working men and women, most of them well dressed, and, what is a striking fact, there appeared to be more men than women. Mr. Birch evidently believes he has a mission to the poor, and he appears to have had remarkable success. He said in his sermon that, during twenty years, he had only one failure, and of that he had some hope.

"The four orphan houses at Corbrook contain 136 children who have lost both parents. The collections are made before the sermon at the Free-Trade Hall, and we understand there is a collection every Sunday, generally for the Orphanage. That on Sunday night was for the Elder's Fund, distributed among the destitute sick who are members of the congregation. In announcing the collection Mr. Birch stated that there were above 300 poor widows, over whom a kindly oversight was kept. The amount gathered on Sunday night was £21 odd—£10 copper, £10 silver, and £1 gold. It cannot be doubted that the benefits which flow from his labours are of the highest value to the community, and it is to be most sincerely hoped that he will receive abundant support in his efforts not only to spread religious principles among the poor, but to provide for fatherless children and widows in their affliction."

BIRMINGHAM.—At a meeting of the clergy and ministers on Tuesday, it was resolved, among other things, to agitate for the entire closing of public-houses on Sunday.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—You will rejoice to know that we hope to send four or five missionaries to China on or about the 18th inst., and that meetings will be held to commend them to God for their journey and future work, as follows:—Monday, Nov. 8, Edinburgh Castle, Dr. Barnardo in the chair; Tuesday, Nov. 9, Barnsbury Congregational Church, Rev. J. Morgan will preside; Wednesday, Nov. 10, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting-hill, Rev. A. Saphin will preside; Thursday, Nov. 11, Heath-street Baptist Chapel, Hampstead, Rev. W. Brock, jun., will preside. Will you kindly ask the prayers of those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who will be unable to be present? J. HUNTER TAYLOR.

MEETINGS OF POLICEMEN AND POSTMEN.—On Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 26, upwards of 250 policemen, chiefly of the N Division, assembled in the Conference Hall, Midway-park, to hear addresses on the subject of total abstinence. Captain Moreton presided; and the speakers were Mr. George Holland, Mr. T. B. Smithies, and the Rev. Dr. H. S. Paterson. Afterwards an adjournment was made for tea, and then the speaking was resumed, chiefly by the men themselves. As a result forty-eight of the men signed the pledge, including several of the sergeants. On the following Thursday about 150 postmen assembled for tea, and were addressed by Captain Moreton, Mr. Neville Sherbrooke, Mr. Dowling, and others. Several of the postmen also gave their experience, one of them tracing his conversion to Mr. Reid's book, "The Blood of Jesus," which was given them at their former tea-meeting, and two to the preaching of Mr. Moody. At both these meetings the singing was led by the North London Evangelistic Choir.

DR. BARNARDO'S WORK AMONG DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

THE report for the ninth year of our dear friend Dr. Barnardo's work is now in the press, and as we believe a special need exists at present for bringing the claims of that work before our readers, we gladly give the following extract from the annual narrative so soon to be placed in the hands of subscribers and friends. It is called SAVED FROM DEATH.

"Although but little girls of tender years, they looked scarcely human. Low receding foreheads, and features of the most debased and degrading type; added to which, the younger child, Annie, had had the bridge of her nose broken some years ago by a kick from her mother when the latter was in drink. That feature now lay flat upon her face, and added to her already repulsive appearance.

"The schoolmistress of our free day school first brought them under our notice in a letter, from which the following lines are extracted:—

"I think it my duty to bring under your notice the cases of two children in my school. They are, I believe, in a state of semi-starvation, having only just enough clothing to cover them, are wretchedly thin, and, I believe, thoroughly destitute. Their names are M. and A. B., and they live at ——. Their father died two years ago. The mother, a sickly woman, gets what work she can as a needle and charwoman. The children attend regularly and never complain, but day after day come here looking half dead, and sit shivering till I put them by the fire. This morning they had their faces turned from me, and were crying quietly. I found, on inquiry, that they had not tasted food since yesterday afternoon, when they had some dry bread; but the only help I can give is a pennyworth of bread now and then, and I generally spare them a little of my own dinner; but that is so little between three!"

"We visited their mother and inquired carefully into her story, discovering that her husband, the father of the two girls, had been a clerk in the West India Docks, and on his sudden decease, leaving his wife and children unprovided for, they sank lower and lower until the depth of their poverty was something awful to contemplate. Mrs. B., their mother, occasionally gave way to drink, and at such times was reckless in her conduct to the children. But when we saw her she was sober, wan, and forlorn-looking. The next morning, whilst standing in our room, she would have fainted but that we gave her a chair, and opened the window to let in a draught of the cold outside air. On being asked if she received any help from the parish, she replied,

"I would rather perish, and let my children rot, than let them go into the 'house.'"

"The little ones presented a truly pitiable sight, whilst the smell from their heads made the atmosphere around them offensive. The hair on the back of the head of Martha, the eldest girl, was matted with dirt, the back part being full of sores. After their admission to the Home the matron took them to the bath-room and proceeded to perform the usual ablutions. The children shrank with terror from the water. They said, 'We've never been used to washing!' The clothes of the youngest, although mere rags, had to be out from her; both of them declared that they had not been undressed for weeks. Concerning the truth of this statement the matron assures us there can be no doubt.

"After the so-much-needed bath, these children were examined by the medical attendant of the Home, and pronounced to be in so shocking a state as to make it unwise to clothe them for some time. They therefore remained in a separate room, covered only with sheets, whilst poultices and ointments were applied from head to foot. With great care they had to be fed, as at first they were ravenous to such a degree as to make it dangerous to place much food within their reach. After they had been with us a little while, their health gave way, and the eldest child was brought near to death's door by a severe chest disorder. A few weeks' residence by the sea-side performed wonders for the poor little one, whose health became quite restored, and visitors to our girls' Home would scarce now recognize in the plump, well-favoured, bright-looking children the abject and degraded creatures which our photographer's art depicted on the day when first they came beneath our sheltering roof.

"In these cases, as in many others, not, perhaps, so well marked, we have been enabled to trace clearly the refining and elevating effect seen even in the expression and features of our rescued little ones; proving what may be accomplished in the most hopeless by loving care, good food, and kind treatment.

"When we remember that already 141 such little girls have been, through God's goodness, so rescued, and are now receiving in our homes that training which, with his blessing, may influence their whole future lives, and perhaps, also, the destinies of numbers yet unborn, our hearts swell with devout thanksgiving to God for being permitted thus to shelter, feed, and influence these little lambs of the Great Shepherd's flock!"

"In due time

we have begun at Ilford will be built, for I am sure that the money needed for the erection of the remaining cottages will not be wanting when the hour arrives for completion, and then will be always there, forming (D.V.), in the progress of years to come, a little army of cheerful domestics, who shall bring a blessing to the land, instead of the blighting curse which they would surely become if not rescued, cared for, and influenced.

SIX HUNDRED RESCUED GIRL-WAIFS

"Our funds for all departments of our work now are very low, our purse almost empty, but we are neither fearful nor afraid, nor do we repent one step we have taken, or for a single moment desire to give up one iota of the blessed responsibility of the whole work which we bear in fellowship with Christ."

Dr. Barnardo's address is—Home for Working and Destitute Lads, 18 and 20, Stepney-causeway, E.

AMONG THE MASSES AT HOMERTON.

Mr. J. J. JONES, whose brief but good work in London amongst policemen, cabmen, &c., has gained for him a warm sympathy amongst the children of God, and who, therefore needs no introduction through these columns, has taken a mission-hall here, and thrown all his energies into the work. Under the strong conviction that God is going to pour down rich and mighty blessings upon Homerton in answer to many prayers, he has removed into the immediate vicinity. Mr. Jones seems eminently fitted for this branch of service for the Lord, having been thrown greatly among the working classes, and acquired by a long experience an intimate knowledge both of the nature of the people and of that peculiar adaptability so essential in all dealings with them. He has gathered, together the children, who swarm like bees on every threshold. In addition to the Sunday-school, which is in itself a great success, arrangements have been made for devoting one evening in the week for their especial benefit, and thus those who in a few years will fill the homes of their fathers and people the neighbourhood are now being brought in early life under the refining influence as well as the saving power of the Gospel.

A young men's meeting has also been formed, a class for learning to read and write begun, a mother's meeting established—all of which we believe to be potent means of reaching the masses around. In addition to this, we have not been blind to the peculiar attractiveness of the service of song, and the wonderful way in which God has stamped it with his approval in the great evangelistic movements of recent date. We have formed a choir of Christian workers, who will sing the Gospel to the people, and also lend us material aid in dealing with the people in after-meetings, &c. Thus has been commenced a work so increasingly successful that last Sunday evening the hall proved too strait for us, and Mr. Jones has already taken the Clapton-park Theatre, not far from the hall, in order that greater numbers may come under the sound of the Gospel. We earnestly lay before our Christian friends our work in this sterile soil, that we who are endeavouring to remove the weeds of darkness and superstition, and sow the good seeds of the Kingdom, may reap the benefit of your practical sympathy, as well as your earnest prayers before the throne of grace, for a rich outpouring of blessing on the unsaved thousands of Homerton.

A BRANCH of the Union Chrétienne de France has recently been formed in Bayswater; and out of the great number of French-speaking young men in the metropolis, some might be glad to join this Association, which holds its meetings every Tuesday evening, from eight to nine o'clock, in the vestry of the French Protestant Church, Monmouth-road, Westbourne-grove. Christian young men of any nationality, with some knowledge of French, will be heartily welcome. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN, employing or knowing French-speaking tutors, servants, or others, kindly call their attention to the existence of the Association, and thus contribute to their spiritual welfare?

BIRMINGHAM CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

WHEN Conferences were increasing by the rule of addition, it was thought that we were beginning to have too much of a good thing; but now that they are being multiplied, and every new one becomes the seed of many, we are finding out that the more we have of them the better. There are some localities which seem more appropriate than others as the gathering-place of these assemblies, but none more so than Birmingham, for this great and important midland town is known throughout the country as one where party spirit runs high, and especially as the focus of the controversy between the Establishment and Nonconformity.

The Rev. H. G. Thwaites, in catering for the second annual Conference, wisely provided as the subject for the three days' consideration "Our union with Christ for life and liberty, for successful work, for patient suffering, for continuous growth, for perfected glory." We have attended many Conferences, but we never remember an occasion when the subject was more carefully adhered to, and the addresses so closely packed with Scriptural truth and original thought. The speakers were the Earl of Cavan, Revs. H. Webb-Peploe, A. M. W. Christopher, T. Richardson, C. Graham, H. G. Guinness, Dr. Donald Fraser, Dr. Mackay, Mr. R. C. Morgan. Addresses were given at the luncheons and devotional meetings by Revs. G. E. Thomas, B. Bowlby, R. G. Brown, J. G. Dixon, James Lane, and J. D. Tetley. Bible-readings were held in the afternoons, and in other rooms addresses were given by Miss Robinson on her work among soldiers; by Miss Ada Leigh on her Mission Home for English Girls in Paris; by Miss Maopherson and Mr. G. Holland on work among neglected children; and by Dr. Meacham and Dr. Saunders on medical missions. The attendance was not large for so large a town, but the influence was great and good, and we doubt not that its efforts will be found in gathering together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE STANDARD OF ISRAEL AND JOURNAL OF THE ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION. Nisbet.—A monthly journal devoted to the advocacy of the idea that the lost tribes of Israel are to be found in the Anglo-Saxon race. It is an interesting subject, and we wish well to any Scriptural investigation of it. It must not be forgotten, however, as an able paper in the Record lately showed, that many think it has first to be proved that the ten tribes really are lost.

"BLIND SAUNDERS." By DR. GRIGOR. J. T. Melven, Nairn, N.B. Price 2d.—A slight sketch of one who, though blind from his childhood, successfully followed the perilous occupation of a fisherman for forty years, and, having served his day and generation better than most men in his position, fell asleep at the age of fourscore. The profits of this booklet go to aid the teaching of the blind in the Northern Counties.

A WORD TO PRAYING MOTHERS.—At one of our recent Sunday evening evangelistic services I took my seat beside a respectable-looking woman, who was a stranger to me. The hymn with the chorus, "Only trust Him," had just been sung, and, by way of introducing a conversation so as to ascertain her spiritual state, and, if needful, enjoy the privilege of helping her, I remarked, "What a blessing it is that we have such a Saviour to trust in; and the more we trust Him, the more He gives us cause to praise Him!" I found I had touched the right chord, for she immediately replied, "Oh, how true that is! I have trusted Him, and He has given me cause to praise Him indeed!—not for myself only, but also for my children. When they were young I did not know the right way myself, and therefore could not lead them in it; but eight years ago the Lord converted my soul, and gave me a concern for the souls of others, especially for my three boys. Oh, I could not bear the thought that they should grow up and leave home without a change of heart. I used to go upstairs to plead with God for the souls of those dear boys, and one or other would come up, and, seeing me in tears, would say, 'What's the matter, mother?' Ah, they knew—they knew what it was! And I would, at such a time especially, try to impress their minds with the importance of seeking the Lord. And what is the result of it all? Why, three months ago the Lord converted the eldest two in one week;" and she added, with a face radiant with joy, "and last week the other gave his heart to God. Haven't I cause to praise the Lord?" I had been reading that afternoon in your report of the Perth Conference (THE CHRISTIAN, Sept. 9), a quotation of one of the speakers, that "If parents were what they ought to be, children would be converted at the home hearth"; and here was a practical illustration of the truth of that remark. BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

HOME.

THE SALE OF "SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS."—It having been stated by a contemporary that "sixteen to twenty million copies are understood to have been sold from Jan. 1 to July 1, 1875," it may interest our readers to know that the actual number was 3,551,000—three million five hundred and fifty-one thousand.

BARNESLEY.—Special services have been held here for young men and others, with gratifying results.

LECTURES TO YOUNG MEN.—The Committee of the Y.M.C. Association announces a course of six lectures, in Exeter Hall, on Nov. 16 and five following Tuesday evenings, at eight o'clock. Tickets, for the course only, at 165, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION pursues its useful course with much success, but, like many another helpful institution amongst us, it is somewhat straitened for lack of funds. Still, although from various causes nine districts had to be relinquished last year, there are at the present time thirty-eight under the direction of the Society. The reports from these districts are full of encouraging facts.

THE Methodist says:—"The services on the day of prayer for Sunday-schools were singularly blessed. We have intelligence from several places of a very gracious work of God, and the report of the conversion of many of the elder scholars. This must greatly encourage our friends at the Sunday-school Union. It is to be hoped that, next year, they will devise plans by which their circular shall infallibly reach every school in the land."

A CHALLENGE.—A gentleman connected with the Hants Congregational Union, whose name is not to be mentioned, has generously promised to pay one-third of all the existing debts on the Congregational churches and Sunday-schools of the county, provided that the remaining two-thirds be raised within three years. As the total existing liabilities amount to upwards of $9000, the challenge represents a promise of $3000, any part of which will be paid as soon as it can be claimed on the above conditions.

KEIGHLEY.—On Sunday, the 3rd ult., Rev. W. O. Simpson preached to large and attentive congregations; some were convinced of sin, and sought and found forgiveness. The noon-day services during the following days of the week surpassed expectation. The services were continued on Sunday, the 10th ult., by the ministers of the circuit, and also during the week, when Mr. Simpson again came to our help. The work is being carried on by means of special services at several of the smaller places in the immediate neighbourhood. Scores have already been deeply impressed by the mission; many have joined the Church, and the Society has been raised to a higher level of Christian experience.—Methodist.

HEBDEN-BRIDGE.—Special services were commenced last Sunday fortnight in connexion with the Halifax and Bradford Methodist Mission. The Rev. G. M. Cobban, of Bradford, preached at midday on the following Monday and Tuesday at two of the mills, the masters so arranging the stoppage of their works that the hands might have an opportunity of attending the services. He also, on the Sunday, headed a large band of earnest workers who sang through the streets. A singing procession also perambulated the streets on Sunday, and, up to the evening of that day, there had been no fewer than from sixty to seventy inquirers as the fruits of the special efforts. Lay agency has been a conspicuous element in the revival. The good work is still going on, and another week of special services is contemplated.

SPITALFIELDS.—A special service for young men was held in Spitalfields Chapel on Sunday evening, Oct. 24. The attendance was very large. The Rev. Richard Roberts preached a sermon of remarkable power on David's charge to his son Solomon. A united meeting for prayer was held in the body of the chapel at the close of the service, to which several hundreds remained. A second meeting for anxious inquirers was held in the band-room, and several young men sought and found the Saviour. There is a very blessed work of revival progressing among the young men of Spitalfields, and home mission bands have been formed by them for evangelistic work in the neighbourhood. Revival services will be held in the chapel each Sunday evening during November.

"EVENING SERVICE."—A correspondent proposes that the Christian young men and women in our churches should devote their Sunday evenings throughout the winter months to visiting from house to house, reading portions of Scripture, and drawing a few practical lessons from that which is read. They would thus reach many who either cannot or will not go where the Gospel-message may be heard. We heartily approve of the suggestion, and recommend, in addition to what he proposes, that a large use should be made of the gift of sacred song. We would also commend to the prayerful consideration of such of our readers as have leisure on the Lord's-day, the golden opportunities for saying a word for the Master, or distributing God's word in some shape, to the groups of men and lads to be found lounging at the corners of streets, or in their homes, in the forenoon of the day of rest. "Go work in my vineyard, there's plenty to do."

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION—The second annual meeting of this organization was held in the Freemasons' Tavern on Friday evening last. Dr. A. P. Stewart presided, and upwards of sixty medical students composed the audience. The report given by Mr. Jones, Secretary, showed that the operations of the Union are being extended, and its beneficial effects felt in many of the medical schools and hospitals. Suitable addresses were given by the Chairman, Dr. Fairlie Clark, Rev. Denham Smith, Rev. Dr. Paterson, and Dr. Saunders. What unparalleled opportunities for spiritual good medical men possess, and how sad is the fact that many of them are not qualified to employ these, from the lack of Christianity as a power in their own hearts? We hope this Union will be instrumental in effecting a change for the better.

FOREIGN.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE—The deep work of grace which has been in progress for the last two years continues unabated. On a recent Sabbath there were over 200 new cases of religious inquiry.

THE NOVA SCOTIA Baptist missionaries who went to Siam with the intention of choosing there a field of labour, have opened their mission among the Telogeos, on the western shore of the Bay of Bengal, a short distance north of the river Godavery.

A TEACHERS' INSTITUTE, under the direction of the Presbytery of Erie, was held at Franklin, Penn., Sept. 28-28. There was a large attendance, and many representatives of various denominations were present, making the occasion one of much interest and satisfaction.

THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT has authorized the printing of the Scriptures in the Arab character, with a statement of the authorization inserted on the title-page, thus forestalling any interference with the circulation. This action of the Government has been long sought, but hitherto not granted.

THE BOMBAY MEDICAL MISSION, which is doing a great work for Christ, much needs the prayers and liberalities of God's people. It is hoped that many may be led to contribute to maintain and carry on this Mission, which is proving at once a benevolent and evangelistic enterprise.

CHICAGO—The directors of the Chicago Exposition have resisted the demands of the daily press and the offer of the "Sunday Lecture Society," and refuse to open their art gallery on Sunday. In their decision, in which policy and principle unite, they will be sustained by right-thinking, order-loving citizens.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE CONVERSION OF JEWS to Christianity having obtained leave from the Russian Government to commence operations in the ancient kingdom of Poland, now called the Vistulian country, has already despatched several missionaries to Warsaw. The local authorities have received orders from St. Petersburg to afford to the Englishmen every protection and assistance.

BOSTON, U.S.A.—The new Deaconesses House in Boston has been completed at a cost of $6000, and was dedicated on Sept. 26, when addresses were made by Rev. Messrs. Waldron and Thwing, Dr. Callis, and Russell Stungis, jun. It is designed for the training of Christian women for service in public and private charity, and has accommodation for twelve deaconesses, several having already entered.

THE LESSON IN THE PULPIT—A few Sundays since, the pastor of one of the large American city churches read as a Bible selection for his morning service the Sunday-school lesson for the day of the International series. No sooner did he read its first verse, than scholars and teachers of the Sunday-school throughout the congregation looked up and listened with fresh interest, because of their familiarity with these words.

JAPAN—The two religions of Japan are Buddhism and Shintooism, but the greater part of the people are virtually without religion of any kind. They believe in a Creative Power, but that is all; and hundreds never enter a temple except on State occasions. The country is one of the most promising of mission fields, but hitherto it has been strangely neglected by Christian people; and though all nations flock thither for commerce, none seem to care for the spiritual welfare of this land, which the natives sometimes call "the Britain of the East." In most countries the greatest amount of good can only be done by native agency, and this especially applies to Japan.

AMONG THE SIGNS of an awakening religious interest, we notice the inauguration, at the Pennsylvania Railroad freight depot in Jersey City, of a series of meetings intended to reach the thousands of railway employes who live and work about the railroad lines converging at that point. The Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association have charge of the movement. About 250 men gathered about the speakers stand, which was raised in the centre of the depot, and their apparent interest in the exercises is described as most encouraging to the conductors of the meeting. Mr. Lang Sheaff, of Cleveland, Ohio, presided, coming from another railroad centre where much religious interest has been awakened among the employes. It is thought that this numerous class may, by judicious management, be led to a general attendance upon such extemporized services.—New York Christian Union.

DAILY TEXTS.

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES."—JOHN V. 39.

Who that has obeyed the injunction, "Search the Scriptures," has not proved that finding always follows searching, and that searching is something very different from mere reading? Whilst searching lately for confirmation of the fact that during our Lord's ministry He was ever influenced or acted upon by what was wisdom of Him, the following instances were found, proving how He stooped to meet every expressed want, and always in the way requested.

Thurs., Nov. 4.—"My servant lieth at home sick of the palsy." "I will come and heal him." "I am not worthy that Thou shouldst come under my roof; speak the word only." "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee."—Matt. viii. 6, 7, 8, 13.

Fri., 5.—"They brought little children that He should put his hands on them." "And He laid his hands on them."—Matt. xix. 13, 15.

Sat., 6.—"I beseech Thee look upon my son." [We do not read here of any touch—only a look.] "As he was yet a-comeing . . . Jesus healed the child."—Luke ix. 38, 42.

Sun., 7.—"Lord, teach us how to pray." "And He said unto them, When ye pray, say," &c.—Luke xi. 1, 2.

Who can read the following request, and fulfillment of it, without a shudder!

Mon., 8.—"They besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts." "He entered into a ship and passed over into his own city."—Matt. viii. 24; ix. 1.

We do well to note that definite requests were evidently most pleasing, and first attended to; when definiteness was wanting, it was called for.

Tues., 9.—"Have mercy on me!" "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" "Lord, that I may receive my sight." "Jesus said, Receive thy sight."—Luke xviii. 30, 41, 42.

How encouraging his reply to the half-doubling leper!

Wed., 10.—"If thou wilt." "I will: be thou clean."—Luke v. 12, 13.

"HE THAT SEEKETH, FINDETH."—MATT. VII. 8.

H. E. G.

STATISTICS—The New York Christian at Work says:—"In this country (United States) there are 146,000 drinking-saloons, 128,000 school-houses, and 54,000 church buildings. The manufacturers and sellers of spirituous liquors number about 560,000, or twelve times the number of preachers, four times the number of teachers, and more than twice the number of lawyers, doctors, and preachers in the land."

CHINA INLAND MISSION—Our readers will rejoice to hear that the Fleets Castle, in which our friends Messrs. Cameron, Nicoll, and Clarke sailed for China, safely reached Shanghai on Sept. 30. Letters from them may be expected in the latter half of the present month. Let us not fail to give thanks to God for his goodness in thus hearing our united prayers on their behalf. If the Lord makes the way plain, we trust that Mr. McCarthy and another party of missionaries will leave us about the 16th of this month.—China's Millions for November.

EAST AFRICA—One of the agents of the Church Missionary Society writes:—"The first, and a very important, step has now been taken towards the creation of a freed slave colony near Mombasa. The land is purchased, the deeds are signed by the governor, and I, as representative of the Church Missionary Society, am in lawful possession of the property. Of course the great work still remains to be done, and for that we shall, above all things, need much wisdom and grace from above; yet let us at this stage set up our 'Ebenezer' and praise the Lord who has so graciously removed obstacles, and made plain our path. This opens up a new era in the East African Mission. God grant it may be only as the first drops of the shower of blessings with which it shall please Him to visit us." [An appeal has just reached us from the Church Missionary Society, stating that a schoolmaster and two assistant missionaries are greatly needed by Mr. Price, the missionary above referred to.]

PRIESTS AND THE BIBLE—A short time ago I gave each of my Spanish workmen a copy of the Gospel of St. Matthew, in their own language, and simply asked them to read it and ask God to bless it to them. It came to the priest's knowledge that such books had been given to these men, and a few Sundays ago he made it the point of a special sermon, denouncing the person (myself) who had introduced them into the parish, and requiring all who had these damnable books to bring them to him or to burn them, under the pains and penalties of being deprived of the partaking of the holy sacrament, and to be denied the Christian rites at their several funerals. This, however, had not the desired effect. He therefore called upon one and asked him for the book that the Englishman had given him. This was denied, the man replying that he had read it and saw nothing in it that called for its burning, but rather a book to be kept and read always, as it contained the life and doings of our blessed Lord; and if he (the priest) was a servant of God, he would do well to read it and study it. He (the priest) was wrong, and the book was right, and he therefore did not care for the threatened excommunication. The priest retired dismayed.—Extract from letter dated Spain, Oct. 13.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For services that were held at West Keynton last Feb. 9 to 14, and at Tormartin 15 and 19; and at West Littleton 16, 17, and 18, to the conversion of many souls, who are now members of Christian churches.—For great blessing at Walton and Trimley.—For marvellous blessing given at Alston in connexion with the labours of Mr. W. D. Dunn.

PRAYER.—For a gentleman in America of whom nothing has been heard for months.—For special guidance at this time.—For a service held in my house for the villagers.—A mother asks prayer for her eldest son, that he may see a loving Hand in his illness.—For guidance and direction in a difficult path.—For one who did run well, and was the means of good; but being alone in a worldly family, and his profession throwing him among ungodly young men, he has become discouraged.—For a Christian lad entering a university for the first time, that, taking a bold stand for Jesus, he may lead many to Him, and be preserved from everything that would draw him from the faith.—For the restoration of two pious students backsliding through Rationalistic reading.

PLACES.—For special services to be held at West Keynton (Gloucester), commencing Nov. 5.—For an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on a girl's school at Hampstead.—For a week's special Gospel services to be held at Beaminster, Dorset, by Henry Murch, of the Evangelization Society, from Oct. 28 to Nov. 4 inclusive.—For services to be held at Cambridge by Mr. Stevenson Blackwood; also for evangelistic services there by the undergraduates in the Ragged School, &c.; and for a blessing on tract distribution among the men who work the coprolite pits around Cambridge.—For God's blessing upon a week's special services to be held at Betley from Oct. 31 to Nov. 6.—For blessing on the Bible-stall at the hiring fairs in Yorkshire.—For special services at the "Edinburgh Castle," to commence on Nov. 13 till the end of December.—For a parish in Surrey.—For work in the Gospel at Tewkesbury, from Oct. 24 to Nov. 5.—For a genuine revival in Fortrose, and in the whole of the Blackisle of Ross-shire.—That the Lord would open the way for three of his labourers to go into some of the Devonshire villages where darkness and superstition reign.—For a week's special services to be held (p.v.) at South Wraxall, commencing Monday, Nov. 8.

—For a blessing on Shottersmill and the neighbourhood.—For special services in Doncaster by Mr. J. M. Scroggie in connexion with Young Men's Christian Association from Oct. 31 to Nov. 14.—For mission services in Norwich, Nov. 7 to 15.—For six days' services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Weston-super-Mare, to commence Nov. 6.—For meetings at Ashley held by Miss Howden.—For meetings by R. C. Morgan, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday this week, in his native town, Abergavenny.

CONVERSIONS.—For two sons and a daughter.—For two married brothers and a sister.—For four young men (the sons of a Christian mother); also for the conversion of their father.—For me and six of my companions.—For a husband and father in serious illness.—For the brother of a Christian worker, and son of believing parents, who may not recover from an attack of consumption.—For a friend.—For a young man.—For myself, that I may become a real, instead of a professing, Christian.—For my parents, and four brothers and three sisters.—For a young woman who is very unhappy in her present situation.—For my husband.

MR. GLADSTONE says, in a recent article, that his conviction has deepened by the lapse of the few months which have intervened since he last wrote on the subject, that we are on the eve of a terrible conflict between Popery and Ritualism, and that the result must be fatal to either of the combatants.

CHESTERFIELD.—On Sunday evening, Oct. 17, a special sermon to the young was preached by the Rev. C. A. Collingwood. At the prayer-meeting which followed, the body of the chapel was filled. Upwards of thirty persons were in deep anxiety about their souls, while nearly that number (chiefly young men and women) professed to find peace through believing. It was indeed "a season of grace and sweet delight." Special services were conducted during the week by the Rev. R. Stewart, of Rotherham, the Rev. C. A. Collingwood, and the Rev. R. Mandale. The results of the services have been a decided quickening of spiritual life, and an encouraging ingathering of souls. At several places in the circuit God is reviving his work and bringing sinners to Himself.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON has opened a new Mission House Ragged and Sunday-schools at Richmond-street, Watworth-road. The Mission was established in 1859, and the new buildings will accommodate 500 children.—On Friday week there was a very pleasant reunion, at the Stockwell Orphanage, of friends of the institution, when the collectors brought in their cards and boxes, and a very handsome sum was realized; so that it is now more than probable that Mr. Spurgeon will be able to leave for the Continent, as he had expressed a hope would be the case, without any anxiety for the institution, in a pecuniary sense, during his absence.—Friends throughout the country will rejoice to learn that Mrs. Spurgeon is reported to be decidedly better and free from pain.

The Christian.

THE TEMPORAL RESOURCES OF FAITH.

It is truly a more pleasant duty to bring forth from the Master's treasury "things new and old" for the instruction and comfort of the children of God, than to point out to them their unbelief and its outgoings; yet there seems to be a great need of the latter in these days when the Church and the world are walking arm-in-arm together—a state of things which must needs be to the dishonour of the Lord Jesus, and the hindrance of his cause. We are taught by the Word that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God" (James iv. 4), and we have no Scriptural ground for expecting the world to love the Lord Jesus any more now than in the day when Jew and Gentile agreed to crucify Him; yet we find religion patronized by the world, and, to our shame be it spoken, that patronage sought by the Church! What is the source of this evil, and what part the Lord's people have in its production, are questions which I desire to answer in accordance with God's Word, in so far as they relate to the temporal resources of Christian service.

When camps join, and combatants are mixed, not in conflict but in dishonourable truce, is it not time to call over the battle-roll and cry, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Are those true combatants who are admitted into the enemy's camp on the understanding, they say, that they are there to collect the means to carry on their Master's conflict? Will they return to fight the good fight of faith? Israel and Amalek were not more antagonistic than are the Church of God and the kingdom of Satan. Did the Philistines supply Israel with swords and spears? Nay, they took precautions otherwise (see 1 Sam. xiii. 19). And note that Israel's destitution was in this case, as in so many others, the way in which God would lead them to look to Him for deliverance. Oh that the hour that finds us destitute of earthly help might also find us strong in faith, and proving in blessed experience that "our help is in the name of the Lord who made heaven and earth" (Ps. cxxiv. 8).

Satan is a master in subtlety; he suits his snares to the times. Since the true light now shineth, he cannot hide from the men of our day that God claims their service, so he deludes them into the belief that they can serve God, and yet be of the world; yea, and he has even blinded the eyes of the Lord's own people, and tempted them, by the specious pretext of bringing the world under the sound of that Gospel which he hates, to seek after gifts for the cause from those at enmity with God! Oh that the Church of God were thoroughly awake to this snare of Satan, and could say with Paul, "We are not ignorant of his devices." No other snare has Satan used so successfully to obliterate the line of demarcation between the Church and the world. Well he knows how to present temptation under the guise of charity and zeal for God; and to make those who give ear to him forget that the character of true Christian life is, to "walk by faith, not by sight."

The walk of faith is on no uncertain path. The Word of God is a lamp to the feet therein, and gives clear principles for our guidance, showing how far we may have intercourse with the world, and showing also that contact with the world may be free from conjunction with it, and must be so if we would follow Jesus. Alas! is it not the blight of very much that is commonly accepted as Christian work, holy unto the Lord, that it is decidedly in conjunction with the world?

I allude to the various schemes (everything that can be called by that name) by which Church members gather funds for Christian service. God said to the Jew of old, "Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together" (Deut. xxii. 10). Is there here no lesson for us not to join ourselves as partners with the wicked in even lawful earthly pursuits? And if God requires this separation to be observed in the earthly labour of his people, shall the service of his Gospel be less purely ministered? Though God has a claim upon the worship of all men, what does He say to the wicked? "What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth, seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee?" (Ps. l. 16, 17). Again, "When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations" (Isa. i. 12, 13). But the true worshippers "worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John iv. 23). Their gifts are "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God" (Phil. iv. 18). Such is the contrast drawn by the pen of inspiration between the worship and offerings of the just and unjust. The Scriptures say, moreover, that "without faith it is impossible to please God," and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

It is evident from all these passages that the gift of the natural man is not acceptable to God. The thank-offering must ever be preceded by the sin-offering. The worshipper must be "purged" ere he can offer acceptable or even intelligent thanksgiving. The application I would make of this truth is this: If God refuses the impure offering, how dare his people solicit it on his behalf? Do they not thereby become partakers of other men's sins? May God the Spirit guide his people into all truth, and stir them up to offer unto the Lord no other than "an offering in righteousness," an offering "pleasant unto the Lord" (Mal. iii. 3, 4).

It appears from the ninth chapter of 2 Corinthians that the system of the early Churches regarding the ministry of bounty consisted simply of offerings from the faithful in Christ Jesus as tokens of gratitude and love; to insure the becoming regularity of which, the apostle gave directions as to how they should be gathered. The benefits supplied by this ministry extended not only to a liberal distribution unto the saints, but also unto all men. And we do not find a single instance recorded in which any but believers were solicited for contributions. Well would it be if the whole Church of Christ now acted thus, and could say with Paul, "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal" (2 Cor. x. 3, 4).

Believer in Jesus, what do you think of the offerings of the unconverted to God's cause? Are they anything but "carnal weapons"? And does not a large proportion of the temporal means of the churches consist of such gifts, which are, as I have shown from Scripture, not acceptable to God? These may be inconvenient questions, for they lay the axe so near to the root of the tree of human resource; but what need for regret, when the limitless resources of the Almighty are opened up to us in such comforting words as these—"God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work" (2 Cor. ix. 8).

Observe that grace is the spring of Christian liberality; (read 2 Cor. viii. 7) a gift from any other motive is but a "carnal weapon" in the hands of those who use it knowingly.* This appears to have been the view taken by the early Christians, who, even for the purposes of temporal relief, did not solicit external assistance; and how much less would they have sought from the unconverted the means to preach the Gospel!

I have spoken of the schemes by which Church members gather funds for Christian service. Let me name one as an example—one which appears on a surface-glance to be the least open to objection,—that of "bazaars" or "fancy sales." There is often so much that is really noble about the selling of articles, the proceeds from which are devoted to the Lord's work, that his people are apt to think that all sales by them for the same purpose must be of a like character. For instance, where one who is known to possess but very limited means, yet contrives, by devoting her time and the skill of her hands, which are all her capital, to the Lord's service, and is thereby enabled to offer substantial gifts, is not hers a noble offering; the outcome of faith and love? Yes, she hath done what she could! But change the instance. What shall we say of that mode of raising money by "bazaars" which is often carried out by mixed congregations of well-to-do persons? Is it too much to affirm that evil is at work throughout? Not simply the evil inherent in all that is human, but the energetic seeking of the world's helping hand in what should be only a "work of faith and labour of love." And when the world is solicited for help; the inducements held out cannot be pure. They really take the form of flattery. The unconverted are flattered with the thought that they are willingly advancing the cause of God, and at the same time complacency is scarcely concealed at drawing the money from their pockets which they would not give freely!

Reader, I have not painted this at all, but have simply endeavoured to throw the light of God's Word upon the subject, that it may be seen in its own colours. If any brethren or sisters in the Lord are led to see evil in any one scheme such as I have here instanced, it will I think convince them that every other scheme (such as concerts, penny readings, and the like), conducted on the same principle, is equally unworthy of the Christian.

In view of all the vast spiritual need of this world, let the churches of Christ but cast themselves completely and only upon God, refusing with Him the unsanctified offering, and they will not only be "enriched in everything unto all bountifulness," but also "prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." H. J.

GLASGOW MEDICAL MISSION.—Seven years ago the work commenced with 8059 consultations yearly, or 155 a week; now our consultations are 25,289 yearly, or 486 a week.

* I would not be misunderstood. Exhortation is no doubt more called for as regards the soliciting than the receiving of gifts for Christian service. It is the bounden duty of Christians to confine their solicitations within that circle where it is a matter of grace and privilege to give. The Word of God gives somewhat more latitude as to receiving, inasmuch as judgment must be used in harmony with the principle laid down in 1 Cor. x. 25-29, for an analogous case.

THE INQUIRY-MEETING.*

• HOW TO CONDUCT IT.

"THERE are many cases of inquiry, however, with which any well-instructed Christian is competent to deal. It is often simply a case of pointing to the finger-post, and spelling out the words on which light from above is falling: 'I AM THE WAY.' A meeting for inquirers ought to be an established institution in every church. In every prosperous Sabbath-school, and in every godly family, there will be an inquiry-room. The right-minded pastor's study will be open to every Nicodemus, to all who come saying, 'Sir, we would see Jesus.' The minister who never sees the face of an inquirer may well become an inquirer himself, and ask, 'Have I lost the way? or have I ever been on the way at all?' Everywhere, and all the year round, we shall find, if we but take a little pains to seek them, men with a trouble on their consciences. The man who does not see this is himself sorely in need of light.

"If I might presume to counsel the counsel-givers, I should say—

"1. Be in full sympathy with the Holy Ghost. Be filled with the Spirit. Trust Him, honour Him. Place yourself meekly and reverently in his hands. Bear in mind your own utter impotence. Pray to the Spirit for his guidance and blessing. Beware of going before Him; follow where He leads, pressing on in the very footprints of his teaching and work. One word in the Spirit is often more effective than a thousand words of mere carnal reason. One hit on the head of the nail is better than a thousand side-kicks. 'In the Spirit' secures the faith, the love, the tenderness, the spiritual insight, the singleness of eye, the patience, and the tact, which the Holy Ghost is wont to use for his own ends in this work.

"2. Be in sympathy with your inquirer. Place yourself outside the gate with him, and knock as for your own life. Go into the darkness and grope with him. Descend into the depths and agonize with him. Place yourself on the brink of destruction, and take him by the hand, saying, 'Let us escape.' Be tender and weep with him. Next to the force of truth and the power of the Holy Ghost is the might of sympathy.

"3. Ever bring the inquirer to the Word of God. First and last let the question be, 'What saith the Lord?' The Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.' 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.' 'The entrance of thy Word giveth light.' 'He sent his Word, and healed them.'

"4. Aim at bringing your inquirer face to face with Jesus in the Word. No sinner on earth, convinced or unconvinced, can at too early a moment be instructed in the knowledge of the Saviour. We need not fear to begin too soon with Him who is Alpha. The Law is to be used; but there is a wise use of the Gospel that includes the most effective use of the Law. At any rate, it is yours to stand beside the Cross and say, 'Behold the Lamb of God!' While the inquirer cries for Christ in the heart, you must still direct him to Christ in the Word.

"5. Be swift to hear and slow to speak. It is a conversation, not a lecture. The inquiry-room is more for searching than sermonizing. In this work a good hearer is better than a glib talker. A sentinel in the dark needs a quick ear. A watchman may talk well, but he should not be deaf. He who sounds the heart should know how to use the stethoscope.

"6. Strive above all things to find out the inquirer's difficulty, otherwise your counsels may only be like spreading the sail before the anchor is weighed. Unless you speak to the difficulty, in effect you do but speak in an unknown tongue. Unless you know where the shoe pinches, you are not likely to be instrumental in bringing relief. In your ignorance of the particular seat of the disease your whole treatment may be empirical, a mere experimenting on your patient, prescribing medicine when food is requisite, or putting on a plaister where the lancet is required. To find out the difficulty is, in short, the main business. Unless you are able to cast up the log and ascertain the latitude and longitude of the inquirer's whereabouts, you will make but a sorry pilot on so wide and troubled a sea. No gift of the Spirit is more valuable than this faculty of discernment, this skill in soul-diagnosis. He who possesses this spiritual intuition is best able to minister the Gospel, is the best steward of the grace of God. Often when the difficulty is discovered, the work is done. Difficulties may be divided into three classes, the doctrinal, the experimental, and the practical. Keeping this in mind may help you.

"7. Use your own experience without laying it down as a rule or holding it up as a pattern. An illustration is a window, not a foundation; beware of founding on skylights. Your experience is but footprints on the King's highway; not the highway. It may be easy for me to walk on that highway; it may be impossible for me to walk in your steps.

"8. Beware of using unsuitable texts or misapplying Scripture. Do not apply to an inquirer the word spoken only to a believer. For instance, 'The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all' is a believer's text, expressing as it does the experience of the saved. To counsel an inquirer to regard this text as proving that his sins were laid on Christ is tantamount to saying, 'Believe that you are saved, and you are saved.' It is another and a very different thing to say, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' The sinner's warrant for taking Christ may be found in a hundred Scriptures as clear as day, without our having recourse to those passages that give rise to the most profound and difficult questions in theology.

"9. Do not press the inquirer too much. Under the pressure a gentle spirit may yield, not to the force of truth or the grace of God, but to the violence of the guide. 'I believe' may be said in haste and repented of in leisure. To heal the wound once badly healed is always difficult, often the hardest of all things. Frequently the worst scepticism in the world is the scepticism of the man who once thought he was a believer and has found out he is all wrong. There is no answering his, 'But what if—?'

"10. Beware of healing the wound slightly. Do not flatter the inquirer. Be not afraid to wound deeply, or to drive the anxious one to self-despair. The inquirer will make an idol of his anxiety, a refuge of his good resolution. Be an iconoclast; break every idol. Ruthlessly expose every false refuge. But when you have done your part, a difficulty remains which you cannot remove, a mystery you cannot clear up. That mystery, the point of junction of the two roads, the broad and the narrow, is known only to the Spirit of God; that difficulty, the actual passing from the one to the other, can be overcome only by Divine grace. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.'

"11. Persevere with your case. In teaching a child the alphabet you would exercise patience. Here is a soul trembling between the two poles of eternal destiny, and should we not take the greatest pains? Here many Christian workers fail. They pilot their ship to the harbour's mouth, and leave it sticking in the bar. It is easier to steer a vessel over a thousand leagues of open sea, than guide it safely over a narrow and dangerous bar. Here, as elsewhere, 'be not weary in well doing.'

"12. Labour to bring the matter to a clear issue. Do not accept of any excuse for delay or present indecision. Put before the inquirer the only alternative, the acceptance or the rejection of the Saviour. Leave the rest with God.

"13. Never pronounce judgment on the case. Leave to the inquirer the entire responsibility of assuming the profession of a believer."

FOR THE YOUNG.

"WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO WITH JESUS?"

AT the recent annual meeting of the Children's Special Service Mission at Mildmay, Rev. G. J. H. Llewellyn, of Ledbury, related the following touching incident, which occurred at one of Mr. Moody's meetings at which he was present in Manchester:—

The group he spoke to in the inquiry-room consisted of two young men, two working women, a hardened-looking burly man, and a little girl of seven or eight years old. He spoke first to the young men, then to the women, and then to the older man.

All this time the child was eyeing him most earnestly, and when he had finished he said to her, "Well, little girl, isn't it time for you to be in bed? Are you waiting for anyone?"

"Yes, sir," she said, "I am waiting for mother,"—pointing to one of the women. "Do you think mother will give her heart to Jesus to-night, sir?"

He was much surprised, and said to the child, whose name he found was Ada, "Why, Ada, are you a Christian?"

"Yes, sir."

"And how long have you been one?"

"Ever since last night, sir."

"And how was it, Ada?"

"Well, sir, last night Mr. Moody was preaching, and he said, 'Young man, what are you going to do with Jesus to-night? Young lady, what are you going to do with Jesus to-night?' And then he said, 'Little girl, what are you going to do with Jesus?' and he looked right at me. After the meeting was over, I wanted to speak to Mr. Moody, but mother was very cross, and dragged me home, and put me to bed, but when she had gone downstairs I got out of bed again, and knelt down, and gave my heart right up to Jesus."

This simple faith staggered him, and he asked her what made her think Jesus had made her his child. Ada answered, "Because I went to Him, and He has promised never to send anyone away who comes to Him."

This confession, which was made before the whole group, quite broke them all down. The old hardened man said, with the tears trickling down his face, that he wanted to accept Christ as the little girl had done; and before they left there was good reason to believe that all the five in that group had been led to give themselves to the Saviour.

CHEERING NEWS FROM ROME.—Mr. Van Meter writes:—"With joy and gratitude, I am again at my post. The warm and earnest expressions of deep and abiding sympathy, and the generous contributions to my work during my visit to England and Scotland, assure me that many will 'hold the rope while I am down in the well.' The fidelity and efficiency of my co-workers during my absence make me feel that no man in Italy has associated with him a nobler band. The work has commenced in all its departments, and the number of pupils is daily increasing. The generous donations of supplies from England and Scotland, brought free by the Anchor Line, have just been received. To those Christian friends whose generous contributions have sustained this work I am grateful."

MANCHESTER.—The work among the masses is still going on with unabated freshness and increased vigour. Dr. Ziemann and his staff have now organized meetings in five different districts of the city. Gospel meetings—especially services for men and children—and cottage meetings are arranged; and that the work has laid hold upon the people is seen by the fact that all the services are still exceedingly well attended. Dr. Ziemann reported at the noon prayer-meeting on Monday, the 1st inst., that the most encouraging sign in the work is the large attendance at the Bible-readings and prayer-meetings, which he has especially arranged for the working people. Hulme Town Hall has been engaged for Gospel addresses on Sunday nights at eight o'clock. Dr. Ziemann purposes to recommence his Thursday afternoon addresses to Christians, which were so largely attended last spring, and which were greatly blessed by the Holy Spirit to the edification and profit of those privileged to hear them. "GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD."

UNDER the title of "Harley House, Bow, E.," Mrs. Grattan Guinness tells the "story of our second year at the East-end Training Institute." The little pamphlet proves (though no proof was needed) that this young institution has already done yeoman service for the Master, both at home and abroad. While there is abundant cause for thankfulness in this respect, the following extract from the report will show that the work of evangelizing the world may hardly be said to be begun:—

"At the present time we have a large number of applications pending, and a day rarely passes without adding to their number. Many of them are from men whom we do not judge to be called of God to foreign mission work, and some from those who may not be suited to mission work at all. But many are from earnest volunteers, who seem to be endowed with the needful powers of body, soul, and spirit for arduous, self-denying service among the heathen. Shall we refuse to help them? What shall we say to them? Shall we tell them that they must have wrongly read their Bibles to suppose that the Lord would have them seek first the spread of his Kingdom and righteousness? Shall we assure them that there are already plenty of better men at work in heathendom? Shall we urge them to try and satisfy their consciences by doing good at home? We cannot! we dare not! We do not believe we should be giving them godly counsel if we did.

"Of all parts of the wide world, Christian workers are least needed in England. Nowhere on earth are additional labourers less required. The ministers at work in this country are, as we know, a small part of the whole army of workers. We have, besides, city and town missionaries, evangelists of all classes, Sunday-school teachers by the thousand, Bible-women, district-visitors, &c. We may probably reckon that the labours of every minister are supplemented by those of at least ten Christian workers of one kind or other. How many ministers have we here in England and Wales? The Church of England alone has 25,000, the Wesleyans have about 2000, the Independents have at least 2400, and the Baptists about 1800. These four denominations alone have, therefore, more than 30,000 ministers at work in England and Wales. Multiply this number by ten, and you have a host of 300,000 Christian workers congregated together, treading on each other's heels, in one little island, whose total population of twenty millions are all professedly Christian to begin with!

"Then look at heathendom. The Church Missionary Society has 242 agents scattered amid its darkness; the Wesleyan Society has about 250; the London Missionary Society 158; and the Baptist Missionary Society under 100; so that these four bodies of Christians, who supply England's twenty millions with 30,000 ministers, dole out to the eight hundred millions of heathen who are lying in utter darkness and spiritual death, about 750 teachers!

"A moment's serious reflection on this terrible anomaly will justify the above statement which some might be inclined to question. On the one hand, less than 800 evangelists for 800 millions of heathen, that is, not one man to a million of utterly ignorant idolators; and on the other, one teacher to every sixty-six nominal Christians. One man is given to a thousand thousand heathen who have never even heard of the Saviour—whereas in a country professedly Christian, deluged with Bibles, and possessed of a Christian literature which is unparalleled for its abundance and excellence, every sixty-sixth person is a religious teacher!

"How can we in conscience urge the nobler portion of fresh volunteers for Christian work to remain at home? In the face of such facts we cannot—we dare not!

"And the case is in reality far stronger than we have stated; for we have taken into account only the four principal evangelical denominations; but the smaller sections of the Protestant Church are not only very numerous, but very active. England is vastly indebted to the various bodies of Methodism; while Presbyterians, Moravians, Friends and Brethren, as well as the great body of unattached evangelists, must not be forgotten. Are we not justified in repeating with emphasis the statement that of all parts of this wide world, Christian workers are least needed in England?

"Compare England with other parts even of our own empire. Think of India's 250 millions, governed by us, but how imperfectly evangelized by us, though so open to our influence! Think of populous China, with its hundreds of huge and swarming cities, in which no voice has ever named the only Name whereby men can be saved—with its thousands of large towns equally destitute, and its tens of thousands of dark and miserable villages, the evangelization of even one of which would be a noble life-work for any disciple of Christ! Think of the 'lost Continent' of Africa, with its enormous extent of almost unrelieved darkness, and the unutterable cruelties it conceals. North—South—East—West—Central Africa, what vast realms of ignorance and anarchy, of degradation and death, of corruption and cruelty, rise before the mind at the very mention of these regions!

"Think of the scenes reported to us from Madagascar—large congregations of Malagasy assembling regularly to sit in silence in the chapels their own hands have reared, longing to worship the Christian's God, and asking in vain for some one to come to teach them how!

"Think of the intelligent inquiring millions of Japan, willing, yea, wishing, to be taught a truer faith than their own, and listen to the cry that reaches us from the over-strained missionaries in their midst,—'Send us helpers, or else we shall sink under the burden of work, which we cannot leave undone!'

"Think of the continent-like island of New Guinea, with its all-but-unknown, yet numerous tribes, barely touched as yet by missionary effort; and of Borneo, with its cruel Dyak population, almost in the same condition. Constantly are these scenes, and other similar ones, before our minds. There seems to ring in our ears the echo of the last accents that fell from our Master's lips, 'Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, to the uttermost parts of the earth.' We cannot, we dare not discourage suitable men, who have a Christ-like practical pity for the lost, and self-denial enough to go to their rescue. We esteem it a privilege, a duty, an honour, to be permitted to help such, and we rejoice that so many of our dear Christian friends have shown by their acts that they share our feelings."

"I CAN TRUST GOD."

It is a dreary, cold October night, and a fierce easterly gale is blowing. Three men enter a dark street; one of them is undoubtedly a working man, who has just left his weary horse in the stable to take its night's rest. The other two appear to be men of business. What can be the object of these men to-night? Every door and window in the street is closed, and no one seems to be moving about. One breaks the monotony by starting a "sacred song," in which all join in happy chorus. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord;" "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law being made a curse for us"; and one or two other forcible passages from the Gospel are distinctly sent forth. One more verse of praise, and the little company decamp. Only a few minutes have been occupied in this important business, yet souls are hungering and thirsting for righteousness.

It seems unreasonable for these men to pursue, but faith leads on to another locality. The thought of perishing souls and the vastness of eternity sweeps everything out of the way: the Gospel has free course, and a very small company is earnestly listening to the message of God's forgiving love. Less than half-an-hour has been employed, but deep and lasting impressions have been made.

Some few minutes after these three labourers have entered the main road homeward, they are overtaken by a man who desires to know if "there is to be any more prayer, for he is unhappy." "Are you anxious about your soul, friend?" says one of the company. "I am, indeed, for I have missed the way to heaven. I was once a Sunday-school teacher." "It is holiness you are seeking—of course you are saved?" "No, no! I am not saved." The Gospel is simply put, but yet he finds no rest. One speaker remarks that it is strange that so many can trust anybody, or trust to anything, but not trust God. Not trust God! This seemed to go as an arrow to his anxious heart, and he grasped the hand of the speaker, and exclaimed, with the earnestness of a dying man, "But I CAN!" A blessed change was visible on his countenance, and there was also a depth of earnestness there which could not be mistaken.

W. R. T.

THE SOUTH LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIR have received the most hearty co-operation from nearly all the sections of Christ's Church at Battersea, where there will be a united mission at the Lammas Hall, Nov. 15 to 19; also at Brixton, at the Angel Town Institution, Jan. 17 to 21. To enable the Choir to extend its work, the hon. sec. appeals for the support as well as the prayers of those who delight to see the various sections of our Lord's Church united on one platform for the common object of winning souls to Him. Experienced workers are cordially invited to assist in the after-meetings. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., R. J. Dobbie, Esq., 11, Bow-lane, E.C.

THE TABERNACLE IN THE WILDERNESS.

LECTURES BY DR. CRANAGE.

It will be impossible for us, with the limited space at our disposal, to do more than give a very brief outline of these lectures. But even although we were to give the fervent words of the lecturer at length, we could not convey to our readers anything like a true representation of the lectures themselves, as they were illustrated by the beautiful models that formed their theme. As Dr. Cranage truly said, the great value of models consists, not only in a better and more correct understanding of the subject, but they impress its lessons on the mind and memory with tenfold power. One may easily forget what they hear or read, but it is almost an impossibility to forget what is conveyed to the understanding through the eye. It is because of this that we could wish these models of the Tabernacle were exhibited and explained, as they were explained last week, in every town in the kingdom.

Dr. Cranage stated, in his opening lecture, that he had in his own town, Wellington, given about fifty lectures on this deeply interesting subject, that he felt a difficulty in compressing all he wanted to say about the "bonnet of the High Priest" into one lecture, and that he seemed as if he had hardly touched the subject at all. It may well be supposed, then, that the three lectures of this course were by no means exhaustive. At the same time they conveyed such a very large amount of historical information and Gospel teaching, poured forth with a surprising wealth of thought and utterance, that the lessons they conveyed were sufficient food for devout reflection through a long lifetime.

The opening lecture was devoted to the teaching of the Tabernacle and its surroundings as a whole. On the ordinary raised platform of the Conference Hall there was placed a small model of the tabernacle and its enclosure. A lower and larger platform in front formed the foundation for a ground-plan of the tabernacle, almost full size, which extended nearly from side to side of the hall. This was covered with sand, and a plank indicated the line where the Holy Place merged into the Holy of Holies, the latter occupying one-third of the entire space.

In the Holy of Holies was placed the Ark of the Covenant, most wondrous to behold, the central figure of the whole, and, as the lecturer pointed out, the one first made by Moses, according to the command of God. In the Holy Place were distributed the Altar of Incense, the Table of Shewbread, and the Candlestick,—somewhat out of the proper arrangement, so as to be better seen by the audience.

Various engravings, representing the High Priest's dresses, the position occupied by the Tribes round the Tabernacle when pitched in the wilderness, the order of march, &c., &c., were displayed on the wall at the back of the platform, and were referred to by Dr. Cranage in the course of the lectures. The explanatory passages both from the Old and New Testaments were read by Mr. G. Kirkham, Rev. J. Wilkinson, and others. The three lectures were given, substantially the same, on the afternoon and evening of the three days.

In his opening remarks, Dr. Cranage used the scarlet thread to be found at one time (if not at present) in all the ropes of the Royal Navy, to illustrate the truth, that all the worship of the Jews, and all the types and symbols connected with it, were meant to exhibit the Lord Jesus Christ. Many Christians neglected the Old Testament, forgetting that the New did not supplant the Old, but was an inspired commentary on it. There was much more taught about the life of our Lord in the Old Testament than in the New.

As a commentary on this, Mr. Kirkham read the words in Heb. x. 1—"The law having a shadow of good things to come." Dr. Cranage sought to expound this with a square box—on every side of which was painted the word "Law," and a burning lamp representing "the true Light," Jesus Christ. Putting the lamp at the back of the box, he said, there would be a shadow cast along the intervening ages until Christ appeared. When He came, in the fulness of time (this was represented by the lamp being placed on the top of the box), and kept the law, there was still a little shadow all round about. But, said the lecturer (putting the lamp down in front of the box), when Jesus had died and risen again the shadow was completely removed, and now in this dispensation we are in the full blaze of Gospel light. And he who seeks to worship God now with types and symbols—with fanciful dresses, with incense, candlesticks, pictures, or images,—says, by the very act, this awful blasphemy, that the Light has not come.

Moses wrote of Jesus (John v. 45), and only of Jesus. When David exclaimed, "Oh, how I love thy law," he spoke of the Pentateuch. The 26th chapter of Exodus was then read, in which God gives the most minute instruction respecting the structure of the Tabernacle, its curtains, its covering, the boards with their sockets, &c. During the reading, Dr. Cranage interposed frequently to remark on various points. The Holy of Holies, he said, in the Tabernacle was set towards the west; why the supposed parallel to this in churches was placed towards the east he could not tell. He described the measurements of the cubit (which he had fixed for the purposes of the models at twenty-one inches, the greatest length of arm—from the elbow to the tip of the finger—of any man he had met with), the span, the handbreadth, and the digit. He could not agree with the translation that gave us "badgers' skins" for the covering of the Tabernacle; more likely it was seals' skins, as seals were to be found in the Red Sea, along which the Jews travelled. A model of one of the boards of the Tabernacle was shown, giving the height of its wooden walls, and the fastening of the boards was explained and expounded. Dr. Cranage analysed the teaching of the colours of the veil dividing the Holy and Most Holy Places—blue, purple, and scarlet. The blue, set before us continually in the heavens, typified the Godhead of Christ; the scarlet spoke of his suffering humanity; whilst the purple, emblem of royalty in nearly all the courts of earthly kingdoms, betokened the kingly glory of the risen and ascended God-man.

What remained of the first lecture was chiefly a description of the experiences of a sinful Jew in approaching the Tabernacle for forgiveness and comfort. Looked at from the outside, with its rough seal-skin covering, the Tabernacle would appear to a stranger very coarse and devoid of beauty, just as the natural heart sees no beauty in Jesus, or in his followers. But how different would be the impression of a devout, sorrowing Jew as he came to have his sins removed in the prescribed form. At this stage, the lecturer showed, from the ceremonial of the sin-offering, the preciousness of "the doctrine of the blood," and, in closing, expounded, with great force and beauty, the typical teaching of the various offerings—burnt-offering, meat-offering, peace-offering, sin-offering, and trespass-offering—treated of in the first five chapters of Leviticus.

SECOND LECTURE.

On the second day of the course, Dr. Cranage set himself the task of describing the contents of the Holy Place and the Holy of Holies, pausing, at the close of each descriptive paragraph, to elucidate and press home the lessons taught by each sacred symbol. At the outset, he made some interesting and pregnant remarks with respect to the present condition of the Jewish nation, and the manifest purpose of God concerning it. A veil, he said, rested on their eyes and hearts in our day, yet they were doing a wonderful work for Christians and Christianity. They are scattered abroad among all the nations of the earth, but yet they are almost universally taught the Hebrew language in early life. Does not God intend by this, that when they are restored to their own land, they may have a language in common; and, being spread abroad in all nations, and therefore knowing the languages of all nations, they will be fitted to carry the Gospel into all the ends of the earth after their national restoration? Dr. Cranage advised every student of the Bible to visit the synagogues; the modes of worship there would throw much light on many parts of God's Word.

Reverting to the more immediate subject, the lecturer said the teaching of the inside portion of the Tabernacle, of which he was to speak, was very different from that of the previous day's lecture. That was full of Gospel invitation to the sinner; this was full of meaning to those who have seen Christ as their Saviour.

The Golden Candlestick first claimed his attention. God gave no directions as to its size; the inference was that God does not reveal the size of his Church, which was typified by this part of the Tabernacle appointments.

Rev. J. Wilkinson having read the portion of Exodus xxv. detailing the form and pattern of the Candlestick (which stands nine feet high and six feet from tip to tip of the outside branches), and the passages relating to it in the 1st and 2nd chapters of Revelation, Dr. Cranage said that in this emblem all Christendom was represented, the main pillar in the centre, supporting all, being the Lord Jesus Christ. It was to be made of pure gold, showing how God values his people in Christ. Some might be a flower in the candlestick, adorning the doctrine of God; others only a knob,—but all were gold. There were various diversities in the Church, various names by which the members are known, but God's name for all was—gold. Then the Candlestick was emblematical of light.

As there was an incessant preparing of the olive oil by the priest, so we must be continually taught of the Spirit, signified by that ingredient. Some solemn exhortation, about being light-bearers, was touchingly illustrated by an incident in the Doctor's own experience.

Passing to the Table of Showbread, it was noticed that this, as well as the Altar of Incense and the Ark of the Covenant, were to be made of shittimwood, almost the most worthless wood there is,—a fit type of our human nature. The Shewbread points us to "the true bread that came down from Heaven." Do we take care to eat our Shewbread, as the priests did, or do we neglect the Bible? A strong appeal for continuous, systematic, and devout study of the Bible was based on this.

The Altar of Incense was then described in detail, the incense on the top being, meanwhile, burnt, and shown to teach the duty of perpetual prayer and lifting up of the hands to God in praise. The horns of the Altar set forth the strength of the Lord Jesus Christ, and also show the necessity of blood-shedding in the fact that the tips had to be touched with blood by the High Priest when he made atonement.

Last of all, and most significant of all, in this second lecture was the Ark of the Covenant, the glory of which could not properly be understood without the dazzling Shekinah Light that burned above the Mercy Seat between the Cherubim. In contrast with it, how feeble the lamps of the Candlestick would burn; how feeble was the light of the Church compared to the grandeur of the light of God Himself, on which the priests were unable to look.

The Ark itself undoubtedly represented Jesus Christ. Its interior dimensions were so large that twelve ordinary men could be closely packed into it. God never wastes anything. Why was it so large, since it only contained the two Tables of Testimony, the Pot of Manna, and the Rod that budded? Is it not a type of the great heart of Jesus, in which the law is kept. "Let us love these ten commandments," said Dr. Cranage; "do not believe any theology which would abrogate them." Mr. Wilkinson here read the Decalogue in Hebrew—"the sacred language of God, which He is perpetuating even now."

In the Golden Pot of Manna the lecturer saw typified a special supply of strength for special purposes, whereas the Shewbread betokened the regular supply. Aaron's rod that budded was suggestive of all tried and tempted ones of the fact that what seems chastisement often turns out to be a great blessing. The Rod was kept in the Ark. No trial ever comes to the Christian without first being taken out of the heart of Jesus. When the wilderness journey was over, and the Ark rested in the Temple, the Rod was put away. There will be no rod in heaven.

A great deal has been written about the two Cherubim. They have been said to represent the Church; Dr. Cranage could not see why. Neither could he agree with the view that supposes them to be the angels; the angels were not beaten out of the same piece of gold as the Lord Jesus Christ. He was obliged to come to the conclusion that, as the Mercy-seat represented Jesus Christ, the two Cherubim stood for the Father and the Holy Ghost. These three, with the Shekinah glory in the midst, spoke to us of the one and undivided Trinity. As the Cherubim looked towards the Mercy-seat, so the Father and the Holy Ghost looked and rested on Jesus, and were satisfied with Him. Dr. Cranage closed his second lecture with an earnest appeal to all who were still in darkness or unbelief, to be satisfied with Him who was the Mercy-seat, and on whom "the Lord hath laid the iniquity of us all."

We must defer till next week our notice of the concluding lecture on the Dresses of the High Priest. Like the others, it was full to overflowing of the deepest and most significant Christian teaching.

BRUSSELS.—A Bible-reading for ladies will (p.v.) be held every Thursday afternoon, at three o'clock, at 10, Rue de Bois Sauvage, near St. Gudule, to which any ladies are cordially invited.

THE HOMES AT PARSON'S-GREEN.—The Lord having proffered the effort to raise a fund to secure these Homes by purchase, a special meeting was held at 200, Euston-road, last Wednesday evening, to return thanks for the success thus far. Mr. Startin presided. Mr. Thomas gave a brief account of the history of the Homes. Since 1857 about 10,000 friendless and fallen females have participated in the benefits of the institution, and all have heard of Him who is the "Way, the Truth, and the Life." Mr. Thomas said that during the whole of that time no good thing had been lacking, and that he had no doubt but that the present deficit of about £400, to make up the £1900, would be forthcoming in the Lord's own time, way, and manner.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.—After three years of happy fellowship at home, I am about to return to the far East, and resume my labour for Christ. The object for which I left China in 1872—the completion of my medical studies—has, through the goodness of God, been accomplished. I expect to leave early in the coming year for Bhamo (in Burmah, near the Chinese frontier), where we hope to prosecute medical-mission work.

During my stay in England, many opportunities have been afforded me of pleading for China; and not a few have requested me to visit them again before leaving. If I can at all further the Lord's work in China by addressing you again, I am at his service. As the time is short, those friends who wish for meetings to be held for China will be kind enough to communicate with me at the address below at once.

I must also ask them to leave the arrangement of dates with me, so that the tour through the country may be as inexpensive as possible. London meetings must be deferred until the latter part of January. Yours in Christ,

HELPERS FOR CANADA WEST.

ABOUT two months ago, prayer was asked through Miss Macpherson for our General and Marine Hospital in St. Catharine's, in consequence of troubles having arisen with the Catholics in the town. Much further sorrow has been produced by the same cause in the breaking up of a work I had established in connexion with the Hospital—that of a training school and home for nurses. I am now striving to re-establish the home, and make it a work for Christ, under the title of a "Ladies' Christian Nursing Association."

For this purpose we are much in want of helpers, who are solely actuated by a desire to show their love to their Saviour, and who will give their time and labour for the sake of his sick and suffering ones. I have with me three assistants from Miss Macpherson's work, who are engaged in nursing, taking the message with them of Christ's love to sinners. Will you kindly bring this matter forward in THE CHRISTIAN, and inquire if there be not some ladies who would be glad to come and help me in my work?

Please also recommend our work to the prayers of Christ's people, and our needs to the benevolence of the charitable. We are much in want of help in this particular, and are daily laying it before the Lord.

KIDDERMINSTER.—Rev. Ira Boseley, in a recent letter, says—"It is only right that promoters of the late services in our town should acknowledge, with thanks, the sympathy and prayers of some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for their success. The last service was as largely attended as ever, and an increased interest and a more fervent spirit seem to be the result in all the chapels of our town. The Ladies' Committee are arranging to continue their visiting. One pleasing incident may be worthy of notice in your paper. While two ladies were visiting a number of houses in the neighbourhood of a mill, giving invitations to the services and distributing tracts, a number of the workers leaning out of the windows sang 'Scatter seeds of kindness,' &c. I may say that my own services are better attended, and that last Monday I commenced an inquirers' class, with between thirty and forty in attendance."

THE LATE REV. T. RYDER.—A correspondent writes:—"The remains of this much-esteemed young minister of Christ, having been embalmed, were brought over from America and interred at Nottingham on Friday, Oct. 29. No such funeral has ever been seen in Nottingham. The procession, four deep, was nearly half a mile in length. The scene in the cemetery was most impressive; many thousands of people were present, almost all attired in mourning. Profound was the stillness as around the grave was sung the last hymn Mr. Ryder had written, to a noble tune of his own composing—'Buried with Christ, and raised with Him too.'* And very sweet and comforting, after the glorious words, 'in sure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection, came the parting hymn—'There's a land that is fairer than day.' In memory of our brother a memorial fund is being raised for the purpose of purchasing an annuity for his widow. Friends at a distance wishing to contribute may send their remittances, by cheque or otherwise, to the hon. secretaries of the fund, Rev. R. Dawson, or Mr. J. Leighton, Nottingham."

* This hymn, given in our issue of June 17, will be found with Mr. Ryder's music in "Hymns of Consecration and Faith," arranged by Rev. J. Mountain, recently published by Morgan and Scott.

MR. RADCLIFFE IN THE NORTH.

The whole of Aberdeen has been divided into about forty-four districts, and has most encouragingly taken up the house-to-house visitation.

This has been done without in any way interfering with the periodical distribution of the Monthly Visitor. It easily becomes understood that the declaration of the glad tidings by the living voice by means of the house-to-house visitation—thus passing once, Jonah-like, through the entire population, rich and poor—in no way interferes with any more permanent work, where that already exists; whilst the fact becoming known that the whole city is being visited, opens the doors of richer persons which might otherwise have been closed. From the very first, in Aberdeen, reports have come in of most interesting cases of conversion, and of the visitors being entreated to return.

Were Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the other large towns of Scotland in which Mr. Moody was most blessed, now at once to take up this scheme of visitation, there would be a bright prospect of its passing this winter through the whole country.

A desire is expressed that the London superintendents and visitors should be invited to come together. If such a meeting were held, it would doubtless contribute to the finishing of any unfinished districts in London, and also to the visitation being taken up in those English towns into which it had not yet penetrated.

At the former meeting in London of the superintendents and visitors, at which Mr. Moody was present, an appeal was made for the foreign field; and ere we can meet again, not a few well-beloved ones of those who assisted in the London visitation will have already departed for India, China, Spain, and other lands. What thanks are due for this! Yet these truly honoured dispersed ones should still live in our hearts. The field is the whole world, but may all the labourers be more than ever indissolubly united.

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Aberdeen, Nov. 6.

CORRECTION.—"In your issue of Oct. 21, under the heading 'England's Daughters for India's Need,' it is stated 'that Miss Brandon and Miss J. Brandon will take charge of a school at Masulipatam.' This must be a mistake, for my daughters are gone to Masulipatam as 'Zenana missionaries.' Please have the kindness to correct the misstatement in your next issue.—WM. BRANDON, Rector of Leekinfere, co. Wexford."

LEBANON.—The Rev. Mr. Rae in a recent letter, amongst interesting particulars of information regarding the schools, mentions that on Sabbath, Aug. 8, he administered the communion for the first time at El Schweir. "There were thirteen of us in all at the table—two from the Church in Jerusalem, one from Sidon, the others from various parts of the field; four besides, natives of this place. It is our day of small things. Pray for us. We rejoice with trembling, yet we rejoice. I hope soon to baptize a Druze young man, who has long been a candidate for baptism."

MR. GEORGE MULLER IN GLASGOW.—This veteran servant of the Lord has been speaking almost daily in this city during the last fortnight to large audiences of Christian people, besides giving evangelistic addresses on the Sunday and other evenings of the week. His speech is truly in power. His very presence is a sermon. It makes you magnify God for all the great things He has wrought through his child. At the same time, we are humbled as we contrast the dwarf-like stature of our own faith with the giant growth which that of this beloved brother and father in Christ has attained. He seems greatly to delight in telling forth his own precious experiences of the Lord's lovingkindness and tender mercies. May he be spared long yet to bear so full a testimony to the grace and might of a prayer-hearing God.

CHATHAM SOLDIERS' HOME.—I write to ask you if you will kindly help us to raise the remainder of the funds needed to build a Soldiers' Home at Chatham? We are most anxious to provide one similar to the mission-hall, which, under God, has been such a blessing here. What is so greatly needed in all our garrison towns is a Home where the soldier can spend his leisure time when off duty,—a place free from all the temptations and snares which are spread for him in the gin-palaces and public-houses, and where he can be surrounded by good and holy influences. Such a Home we are seeking to provide at Chatham. The work is most important, and I trust you may be kindly disposed to aid us.

MAJOR COLE AT NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—"One of the best results of the visit of Mr. Moody to Newcastle was the union which it effected amongst the ministers of all denominations. The immediate practical effect of this union was the establishing of a mid-day prayer-meeting, which has remained in full working power until the present time, and is conducted in rotation by about seventy ministers and laymen of all evangelical denominations. The committee have also the arranging of special united evangelistic services, and it supplies ministers and others to conduct dinner-hour services in six large manufacturing factories in the town.

"This committee invited Major Cole, and the services thus inaugurated are being conducted with marked success and very signal blessing. The services were commenced by an address to 'Workers' at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, Oct. 31. About 400 persons were present, and the testimony borne to the meeting was that it was a most precious season, and a general desire was experienced for a similar gathering. There will be another on Sunday next, Nov. 7, at nine o'clock.

"In the afternoon, at the Central Hall, although the rain came down heavily, yet the people thronged the Hall until the seats were quite full. Major Cole based his remarks upon the Lord Jesus as our Rock, and we have not seen so great a manifestation of the power of God since the visit of our beloved friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey, as took place in this service, the Holy Spirit carrying the blessed Word home to the hearts of the people present; and when the Major, with Mrs. and Miss Cole, sang that beautiful hymn, 'Rock of Ages,' the effect was very powerfully felt.

"The evening service was held at the Town Hall, which was filled by an audience of over 3000. This meeting was felt to be so great a success in regard to the class of people brought together that another meeting for Sunday, Nov. 7, has already been arranged for.

INCIDENTS OF THE MEETINGS.

One of our townsmen, who was an intimate friend of the sainted Judson, and was four years with him in the mission work, passed Major Cole last Sabbath morning while on his way to the morning meeting. "Good morning, Major Cole; welcome to Newcastle-upon-Tyne. May you be a great blessing to our town." Major Cole replied, "God grant that I may be a blessing to the family of that dear brother who has welcomed such a weak instrument so cordially." In the crowded hall the same evening, while unbelievers were urged to stand up and publicly accept Christ, a son of the above-mentioned brother rose for prayers, and before leaving the hall was enabled to trust Christ freely.

Three soldiers enlisted the same night in the army of the Lord.

A lady brought nine women to one meeting, and had the joy of seeing them all stand up for prayers. A goodly number of them found Christ.

A wife exclaimed, as her husband found peace, "Oh! how I have prayed and labored for this day!"

A working man and his wife, though much afflicted, decided to leave the meeting unavailed, and as they were about rising, their eyes met, and they both said, "Let us decide now!" The father of the wife said, with tears, "Amen; children, it's the best thing you ever did."

One of our solicitors was at one of the meetings during the week, and said that he was a slave to drink; that Major Cole's address had given him hope. The song, "He will carry you through," had rung in his ears ever since he heard it, and he was enabled to put his trust in Jesus.

A lady from an adjoining city asked Christians to pray for her seven children. One of her sons was at the same meeting, and, to the surprise and unpeepable delight of the mother, at the second meeting was made one of God's children by faith in his Son.

"The overflow-meetings are being conducted by the different ministers, and are accompanied with much blessing. The majority of ministers close their places of worship next week, in order to give all their strength and that of their people to the work."

A later despatch says:—"Major Cole's service in the Town Hall on Sunday evening last was densely crowded. He spoke very powerfully. The after-meeting was largely attended, and much good done."

THE CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENT of the Herald and Presbyterian states that Mr. Edward Kimball, the Sunday-school teacher in Dr. Kirk's church, Boston, through whose faithfulness Mr. Moody was brought to Christ, has recently moved to San Francisco. Finding a vacant and discouraged church in the suburbs, he began meetings there on the Sabbath and on Wednesday evening. The fact that he was not a clergyman, but a business man, drew together a large audience. Deep solemnity has pervaded his meetings. At the close of the evening service on the first Sabbath of September the feeling was so manifest that he invited all who wished personal religious conversation to remain. Fifty accepted the invitation, and remained over an hour in serious consideration of their personal duties to Christ. We trust that Mr. Kimball may be the means of saving many Moody's on the Pacific coast.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BROOKLYN.

OPENING SERVICES.

We are now able to record, with thanksgiving, the commencement of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's evangelistic campaign in their own land. Before making extracts from the American papers, which report the proceedings very fully, we give the following notes from Rev. J. Sabine Knight:—

"Brooklyn, U.S.A., Oct. 25.—The American Evangelists have now fully thrown themselves into the work of the Gospel in their own land. The general feeling is much in their favour. The fervour of the ministers of Brooklyn, and the spirit of prayer here, speak well as to hope for a large blessing to follow our brethren in this city. Except for certain surroundings, one might imagine it was in some other 'Camberwell Hall' that the well-known voices were ringing out the 'wondrous love' of God to man.

"The same mighty crowds seeking admission; the tone of general talk out of doors; the pressing demand for platform tickets; the 'eager, anxious throng' gathering at the early Sunday morning meeting—all these, and much beside, remind us of the never-to-be-forgotten London meetings at home.

"A larger proportion of men is seen in these meetings than in London; and while there is less manifest impression, yet the audiences appear more serious, and to have come to hear the Word of Life.

"The meetings for young men take the same form and time as at home, and the meeting of inquirers is held in an adjacent church, while the after prayer-meeting goes on in the same building where the preaching is held. Both Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey seem in the best of health and spirits; all the old warmth is apparent in each of them, and the order of the meetings is excellent all through.

"Philadelphia is praying for and expecting a blessing; New York is getting ready; and many places are waiting in hope.

"The early union prayer-meeting at eight o'clock is more promising even than at the Opera House noon-day meetings. Let the praying ones this side be gladdened by knowing that their brothers and sisters across the sea are still pleading with God for gracious showers to fall upon this thirsty land.

"Tuesday, 26th.—Dr. Cuyler said this morning in our hearing, 'This looks more like a break in the clouds than we have seen yet.' Thousands were at the 8 a.m. prayer-meeting.

"Wednesday, Oct. 27.—Over 5000 at the eight o'clock prayer-meeting to-day; an overflow-meeting in the next chapel."

We might fill half our columns with the graphic reports of the opening meetings given by the New York secular daily press, but it will profit our readers more, we think, to give extracts from the summarized accounts that appear in the religious weeklies. The descriptions of the meetings remind us strongly of the initial services in the Agricultural Hall in March last.

The following succinct account is from the Sunday School Times of Philadelphia:—

"Whatever question was in any mind as to the popular interest likely to be awakened in this country through the labours of the evangelists who were so blessed in Great Britain, it is at end since their first meeting in Brooklyn. It is clear that their words are to fall upon as ready ears in America as in England. Thousands of Christians thank God and take courage as they read the thrilling reports of the opening services led by Messrs. Moody and Sankey on Sunday last.

"Ample arrangements had been made for the meetings under the direction of the Brooklyn Committee, with the counsel of Mr. Moody. The Rink was fitted to accommodate some 6000 persons. The floors were covered with matting to prevent noise. Ushers were in their places at every door and in every aisle, all under skilled superintendence, to act together at a signal for opening the doors. A continuous desk for the reporters was fitted against the platform, so that the backs of the reporters would be to the audience. A choir of 250 Christian singers, and nearly as many well-known clergymen and lay workers, were given seats on the platform. The city railroads extended their tracks to the door of the Rink, and put on extra cars for the day. After the ticket-holders were admitted by the platform entrance, at the tap of a bell the main doors were opened, and in fifteen minutes the large building was quietly filled under the lead of the ushers, and again the doors were closed, leaving thousands outside who sought admittance.

"In the conduct of the services, as in the preparations for them, Mr. Moody evidenced the same sound sense which has distinguished him in all his evangelistic labours. Those who expected him to begin with an earnest appeal to sinners were mistaken. There was nothing of the kind in his opening sermon. His first words were to Christians. The services were opened at 8.30 a.m. by Mr. Moody, announcing the hymn 'Rejoice and be glad.' The Rev. Dr. Buddington then offered prayer. After other hymns, and a prayer by Mr. Talmage, Mr. Moody read selected passages of Scripture. He then asked Mr. Sankey to sing alone 'The ninety and nine.' The effect of this singing on the vast audience was marvellous. 'The sympathy among his hearers grew and increased until it seemed as if, had he continued the sweet melody and earnest supplication, every person in the whole audience would have risen and joined with him in a grand musical prayer of mingled appeal and thanksgiving.'

"After this singing Mr. Moody read the account of the returning spies at Kadesh Barnea, from Numbers xiii., beginning at verse 25. His text was the 30th verse, 'Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it.' His theme was the probabilities of success and the hindrances to be met in revival work in America. He had no fear of scoffers and outside enemies. His only anxiety was as to doubt and hesitancy in the churches. He appealed to the Christians present to be strong and very courageous for the work before them. As he warmed in interest in his subject he made his appeal personal to the clergymen present. 'Are you ready, Dr. Buddington?' he asked; 'Shall we go on, Dr. Duryea?' and answers came back affirmatively. As he put the question thus to George H. Stuart, the latter started up and called out, 'Yes, we are ready. Let us go on.' And so, before a word of appeal was made to the unconverted, the Christians present were exhorted and aroused to their share in God's work.

"The impression on the audience was profound. The New York Herald says of the discourse: "Let us go and take the land," repeated a hundred times in rising, vigorous tones by a strong-bodied man of intense earnestness, struck the keynote of the revival. He had no occasion to explain that he called for an army of believers to go forth and drive sin out of the nation. His audience was responsive. He used neither logic nor rhetoric, but he thrilled them with the energy and boldness of his brief and plain appeal. It was as if Cortez, hungry and disheartened, turned to his timid but faith-inspiring followers, and, pointing to the gilded battlements of Montezuma's palaces, cried out in desperation, "Let us go up and take the land;" and history records that they went and took it."

"The Sunday evening meeting was even more largely attended than that of the morning, and the interest in it seemed greater. Mr. Moody's second sermon was from 1 Cor. xv. 1, 'I declare unto you the Gospel.' In this he preached Christ to the lost sinner, showing the fulness and freeness of the offered salvation. The numbers seeking admission to the afternoon meeting were estimated variously at from 15,000 to 30,000. And so passed the first day of the evangelists' work in Brooklyn. In reviewing it the Tribune says: 'All calculations with regard to the coming of the evangelists Moody and Sankey have been at fault. The numbers interested, the assistance at hand, the religious feeling awakened, have all been under-estimated.' And the comment is added, 'It is not unreasonable to anticipate, from such indications, that the field is ripe for the harvesters, a great and general religious awakening in this part of the country—possibly also in its remotest sections.' Surely there is reason for profoundest gratitude to God for his blessing on this work of his servants, and for his preparation of the hearts of his people for new zeal and new faith in his service."

Dr. Talmage, who seems to take an active interest in the movement, says in his Christian at Work:—"Moody and Sankey have come, and with them the blessing of the Lord, without which their arrival would not be of much account. The opening meetings in Brooklyn last Sabbath in the Rink, and last Monday morning in the Tabernacle, were successful beyond the most sanguine anticipation. The fire starts as though it would enwrap the whole land in holy conflagration. Bring on your torches and your faggots! Awake, people of God, and take possession of the land! They who have seen Brooklyn for the past few days believe the year of jubilee has come."

The Christian Union says:—"The inspiration of Mr. Moody's work and the secret of his power is a profound and vivid sense of God's love for sinful men. It is this that goes home to the hearts of his hearers. We hope and believe that he is to be instrumental in a work in this country not less grand and fruitful than that in Great Britain. And we trust that his modesty, his good sense, and his self-forgetfulness, not less than his enthusiasm, will be shared by the multitude who will take up the work under his lead."

Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, is reported to have said, at one of the meetings on the second day:—"Philadelphia and Brooklyn are to-day united by a chord of Christian sympathy which never can be broken, which cannot be fully realized until we have passed through the pearly gates and entered upon the golden pavements above. From more than 200 pulpits in my own beloved city of Philadelphia, prayers are offered up to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to bless Brooklyn and grant that our beloved brethren, who have come from across the land of their fathers to speak for themselves, may be enabled to speak for Christ as they have never done before; 100,000 prayers were raised that the work of our beloved brethren Moody and Sankey might flow through the streets of Brooklyn, and that a wave of salvation would cross over the East River into the city of New York. I have been engaged in commercial pursuits for years, and have passed through several commercial panics, but when the news of this last failure was put aboard the steamer off Sandy Hook, I thought I saw the hand of God reaching forth to stay us in our progress after worldly things. Our prayers went up then that God would so bless this commercial depression, and that having placed his hand upon the country, He would help the people in their misery; that he would stop our Sabbath-breaking, our profanity, our intemperance, our greed and lust. But two years have passed away; we have been going on, and to-day God speaks to us as He has never spoken before, and I believe that now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation."

The Tribune says of the morning meeting of the same day:—"During the remarks and prayers there were many responses from the congregation, and tears were in many eyes. After the meeting, Dr. Talmage said that at the regular meeting in his church on Sunday evening 300 persons arose for religious inquiry, and clergymen noted this as a very remarkable instance of the religious spirit which is now becoming prominent in Brooklyn."

Dr. Cuyler sends us a sketch of a visit paid by him to Mr. Moody at his Northfield home, which we regret not being able to find room for.

[In consequence of pressure on our space this week, we are obliged to omit several interesting reports; amongst others, one describing Mr. Varley's meetings at Liverpool, where he has met with much success.]

LIBRARY FOR HOSPITALS, BARRACKS, AND SHIPS.

—I have to thank many of your readers for so kindly and generously responding to my appeal of last May. The books and periodicals have been eagerly received by men and boys in hospitals, barracks, and ships. I shall still make thankful use of all parcels of books and old periodicals which may be entrusted to me, and I am much in need of small donations for binding, book-shelves, and other expenses. Parcels should in future be addressed to me, carriage paid, at the Army and Navy Institute, Gosport. Cheques or Post-office orders to be made payable, and forwarded to my husband, the Rev. H. Tudor Craig, Chaplain to the Forces, Gosport. J. T. CRAIG.

GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES.—Dear Christian Friends and Workers,—Your loving sympathy to me in this work for my Master has often called forth a song of praise from the young and grateful hearts in these Homes. There are 120 under our care; one is dangerously ill at the present time with inflammation of the lungs. May the Lord restore her, if it be his will. The general health of the children is good, and those among them who are delicate have been greatly benefited by a visit to our cottage orphan home at Ovingdean, near Brighton, which is now closed for the winter months, but will be reopened in the spring should the Lord tarry. The children's ages vary from three to fourteen. Forty-eight have lost both parents, fifty-three lost father only, seventeen lost their mothers, two forsaken by both parents. They are being trained and educated for servants, and, with very few exceptions, have turned out satisfactorily. No debts are incurred. The work is entirely supported by the free-will offerings of the Lord's people, excepting a few small weekly payments from widows, who, through my taking their children, have been enabled to go to service, which has prevented them from going to the workhouse. The cold weather is now approaching, and there is a pressing need for warmer garments, also new stockings and boots for the 240 little feet, besides the hungry mouths to fill. May the Lord lay it on your hearts to help forward this work for his name's sake. Miss COLB.

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

MEETINGS WITH THE CHILDREN.

ONE of the most interesting features of the work in which the Jubilee Singers are engaged, is the meetings which they so often hold with the Sunday-school children where they spend the Sabbath. Their singing at Bow Hall, in London, last June, in connexion with the preaching of Mr. Aitken and Mr. Varley, bore precious fruit. Their hymns, at the last Glasgow Conference, are spoken of as one of the delightful features of that inspiring gathering of Christian workers. But nowhere does their singing seem to take hold of the heart more than in their services with the children.

Two very large and impressive meetings at Aberdeen and Dundee have been followed by one still larger here, at Edinburgh, on Sunday, Oct. 31. It was held at 10 a.m. in the Drill Hall, where the free breakfasts are given to the poor each Sunday morning. Over 5000 children, from all classes of society, were present; but the Hall was as quiet as at a church service, and the eager and sometimes tearful attention with which they drank in the songs and the speeches was something I have never seen in so large a gathering, except at Mr. Moody's meetings. For over an hour beforehand the children were busily gathering under the pilotage of their teachers—each one like a shepherd with his flock about him—at the Hall; those who were in their seats singing from "Sacred Songs and Solos" as the later comers filed into their places.

The services began with that sweet slave hymn, so dear to the hundreds of thousands of Christian hearts who have heard it sung by the Jubilee Singers, "Steal away to Jesus," followed, as usual, by the Lord's Prayer. Then came short addresses by Professor Seward, Mr. Rutling, Mr. Mareh, and Mr. Loudin, alternating with such hymns as "In bright mansions above," "Room enough," "He rose from the dead"—one of the newest and most effective of their songs,—and "I've been redeemed." This last seems to have laid hold of the Scotch heart with peculiar power, and to have taken a place among the Jubilee songs akin to that held by "The ninety-and-nine" among Mr. Sankey's. After hearing it at a concert in Glasgow, the other day, an unknown friend handed one of the Singers £15 for their fund, accompanying the gift with the request that they would sing "I've been redeemed" at every concert they should give hereafter.

Touching and impressive allusion was made, in the addresses, to the fact that, during the past week, news had been received from the United States of the death of Mr. Holmes, one of the Singers who came over to Great Britain on their first visit, and of the sudden death of the mother of Miss Julia Jackson, one of the present members of the company, and that a new-formed, but very dear friend of the Singers in Edinburgh, of sweet Christian character and active Christian life, and who was a week before looking forward with happy anticipations to this very meeting, was at that hour, to human appearance, at the point of death. Such circumstances gave, to the Singers at least, almost a new meaning to the familiar line in their opening hymn—"I have not long to stay here."

The Singers are looking forward to a very busy time for the next few months, in connexion with their work in Edinburgh, Dublin, and the Midland counties. They expect to be in Dublin during at least one day's session of the Conference there next month. M.

COSTERMONGERS' MISSION, VINEGAR-GROUND, OLD-STREET, CITY-ROAD.—Mr. Walter Penrose says—"Scarlet fever has been doing its work all round the Mission. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember us who have to labour amongst it all?"

OUR CHURCH COUNCILS.—In the best religious communities is there not a palpable deficiency of the true spirit and aims of Christianity? If we ask, What was the spirit of Christ?—the answer is, Sacrificing himself for others. Thank God, there are many individuals on every side who follow in the steps of Him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. But looking at our Christian gatherings at large, would one infer from them that this was the prevailing and pervading spirit? Is it the great feature in which Christian gatherings stand out as different from other gatherings, that their spirit is the spirit of self-sacrifice, in opposition to the spirit of self-seeking? What an irresistible moral force they would carry if it were so! What a glorious testimony they would bear to the divine origin of Christianity and the Christian Church! What sermons the very existence of such bodies would be! Undoubtedly the world looks for more of this spirit; and is it not entitled to do so?—Sunday Magazine.

"CHRISTIAN WORKERS' MISSION,"

CONDUCTED BY EDWARD WRIGHT.

ON Oct. 2 the Gospel-tent pitched during the summer at the corner of Southampton-street, Camberwell, was closed for the season, it being judged unwise to risk the exposure to the high winds that frequently prevail at this time of the year.

The meetings which have been held there every evening and three times on Sunday have been, by God's blessing, productive of great good. Many a hardened sinner has beneath that canvass roof been melted down like an iceberg under a tropical sun, and some of those who seemed past hope through sin, have by grace been hopefully reclaimed.

The services are now being carried on, as usual, at the Christian Workers' Mission Hall, George-street, Camberwell, which was purchased early this year from funds collected chiefly from friends in the locality. It has, however, had to undergo considerable enlargement to fit it for the reception of the tent congregation, and this has involved an outlay to the extent of more than fifty pounds. It would have cost much more had not the converts and friends of the Mission placed their services at our disposal gratuitously, while others, who could not give us manual assistance, subscribed and collected in one week the sum of fifteen pounds towards the expense.

Our friends will be glad to know that the attendance at the Hall has been very good, in spite of the unfavourable weather we have had. Above all, we rejoice that God is working among the people, and is drawing them to Jesus.

At a recent converts' meeting many persons testified of the power of the Gospel in their own experience. We give one or two illustrative cases:—

One said that he had been practising as an acrobat, intending to make his appearance at the music-halls on the flying-trapeze. He had a godly mother, who prayed for him, and continually sought to lead him aright, and induced him to belong to a Bible-class, where he actually composed an essay on Faith, though he had no real faith in Christ. The Lord warned him by allowing him to break his hand, and at another time his arm, while practising; but nothing seemed to stay him, until he came one Sunday to the tent, where he heard an address about the judgment-day, which led him to trust in Jesus. He felt so happy, the next day, that he could not help asking a man with whom he worked about his prospects for eternity, and Christ is now so precious to him that he feels he cannot do without him.

A young man, the son of a minister in Wales, said that he had gone astray on leaving home to enter business, through mixing with ungodly young men who came to the chapel he attended. He enlisted for a soldier, and after many narrow escapes with his life, he returned to England and took a public-house, associating with betting-men and other low characters. He became what is called a "book-maker," or a regular racing man, and also a dreadful drunkard, being never thoroughly sober for twelve years. He used to lead his wife a very wretched life, as may be supposed. Last year he had some very heavy losses in betting, which made him very miserable, and about the time when Messrs. Moody and Saukey were coming to London, his father sent him some papers containing accounts of their meetings. He resentfully sent to him some sporting papers in return, and determined not to be caught in that way; but when Mr. Moody came to Camberwell-green Hall, he was induced out of curiosity to go and hear him. He was convinced of his sinfulness, and afterwards went to the tent, where his anxiety was deepened. He returned home, and asked his wife to join him in prayer that God would save their souls. She was surprised, but gladly consented, and after half an hour spent in tears on his knees, light dawned into his soul, and he knew his sins were pardoned for Jesus' sake.

It has already been stated by Mr. Hodder, in a previous letter to THE CHRISTIAN, that it is proposed to raise a permanent building on the site now occupied, as soon as funds will permit. We trust that our friends will be led to help forward the work with their prayers and practical sympathy. Further information can be obtained on application to either of the referees, viz.:—M. H. PORTUGUESE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.—The third report of the Society says:—"While very thankful for the quiet but decided advance that has been made in the spreading of the Gospel truth in Portugal, the committee feel much regret that, at so favourable a juncture, they are unable, adequately, to aid the agencies at work. The valuable donations of the Bible and Tract Societies, and success of the colporteurs, would prove much more efficient if the auxiliary agencies of preaching and teaching, which have been found so successful, could have been increased. To effect this, to open up fresh mission stations, and to cause the truth to be known by native preachers in remote and secluded parts of the land, as it is now in the chief cities and their vicinities, is the object the committee has most at heart, but they are much hampered at this time by want of funds, and they would most earnestly request you to help by your contribution, given with a willing heart." The treasurer of the Society is Robert Barclay, Esq., 64, Lombard-street, E.C.

I KNOW WHOM I HAVE BELIEVED.*

I KNOW where safe and sure
My soul hath anchor cast;
Else how could I endure
Thy memory, sin-stain'd Past?
I seek that sheltering place,
And plead my Saviour's name;
A Father's kind embrace
Proves Jesus still the same.

But for this knowledge blest,
When dark clouds round me roll,
Discouraged, weak, distrest,
How should I reach the goal?
Pursuing still, though faint,
I through the darkness cry,
And soon thine aid is sent,
O Saviour, from on high!

More precious still my faith
When Worldly Fortune's smile,
To lure my soul to death,
Is whispering, "Rest awhile."
"Not till thy work is done;
Then thou shalt rest with Me!"
Jesus, I journey on
In my calm walk with Thee.

A priceless boon thou art,
My faith, when joys are fled,
And aches my lonely heart,
Where troubles lie like lead.
I think, Were Jesu's less—
The manger to the grave?
And shall I shun distress,
Yet hope the palm to wave!

Come, Death, thy face is sweet!
I view thee undismay'd;
'Tis but day's painful heat
Cool'd in the evening shade.
My Saviour, by his death,
Did all thy sting remove;
He lives, and I, He saith,
Shall live with Him above.

And this my faith I prove
By answerable fruit;
While praising Him I love
Nor heart nor life is mute.
To do his will I strive,
Not "Master" only cry;
And thus 'tis Christ to live,
And thus 'tis gain to die.]

MONMOUTH.—Speaking of Mr. Hefford's meetings here, a friend says—"One man, considered to be one of the worst men in Monmouth, has been won by the love of Christ Jesus, and now he is seeking to win his entire family. Some nights he had them all with him at the meetings—his wife and child, his father and mother, his two brothers and their wives, and his own sister. Three of these have decided for Christ; all of these were formerly just the lowest and worst of characters." This is only one of many such cases.

MISSION TO THE BLIND.—It is my privilege to gather, every Friday evening, at the Hall, No. 38, Kennington-road, S.E., a company of blind ones, to read the Word of God in Moon's and Frere's systems. The books are provided for them gratis; and, to encourage them to come, they also receive a small sum wherewith to procure a guide to lead them there. Between forty and fifty avail themselves of this opportunity, and it is a sight not easily forgotten to see them all seated around the tables, some just learning, while others read very well. On Sunday evenings they meet again at the same place at half-past five, when a tea is provided for them, after which they have the Gospel preached to them by several friends who help in this Mission. This work has been struggling on for the last four years, having had for its beginning two blind men whom I invited to my house at No. 14, Walnut-tree-place, and there spoke to them after tea of their precious souls. God smiled on the humble work, and it is now increased to over 100 blind, besides sighted, who are gathered under the sound of the Gospel. May the Lord touch the hearts of his people to remember the poor blind, who call loudly for their help.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

NORTH LONDON DIVISION.

The Islington branch of the Young Men's Christian Association is one of the oldest in London, having now been in existence for more than a quarter of a century. Immense numbers of young men reside in the district, owing to its healthiness and easy access to the City; and a good work has for many years past been carried on among them. Not a few have been brought to the Saviour, or helped in the Christian life; and former members are at this moment to be found in almost every department of Christian usefulness—some have gone abroad as missionaries, others are settled at home as clergymen and ministers.

The rooms hitherto in use have become too small for the work, and, as the numbers drawn to the place continue to increase, it has become a necessity to provide larger accommodation, especially a hall for evangelistic meetings, to which young men may be invited. At the suggestion and by the wish of Mr. Moody, suitable premises on the Priory grounds, hitherto occupied as a school, have been secured; £600 is required immediately to make them comfortable and attractive. It is the Lord's work, and he will doubtless incline the hearts of his people to give what is needful. Christian parents with sons in London, and who know what London is for the young, will see the importance of such an institution, where young men may find Christian friends, Christian society, Christian sympathy and counsel in time of need, and will require no argument to secure their interest in it. The Secretary will gladly forward a report, showing the work that is carried on, to any who may desire.

Donations to the building fund will be thankfully received by Mr. John Sands, treasurer, 17, Highbury-crescent, and 50, Old Broad-street; Mr. Patrick Stewart, chairman of committee, 16, Gresham-street; and Mr. James John Atkinson, resident secretary, The Priory, 198, Upper-street, Islington, who will also be happy to receive annual subscriptions for sustaining the work.

THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION of Utica, New York, was established in 1870, primarily "to improve the physical, intellectual, moral, and religious condition of women, especially of young women dependent on their own exertion for support." As a means for this end, a "Home for Working Women" was secured and opened. It was placed under the charge of a competent matron, whose care it has been to make it, not a refuge or a cloister, but a home indeed for its inmates, well-ordered, attractive, and welcome, where they could obtain good substantial board within their means. It has thus provided a desirable and greatly needed Christian home for 170 respectable, industrious girls.

"RECORDS OF THE BIBLE FLOWER-MISSION."—Our pages from time to time have recorded the progress of this most beneficent Mission, which has not only carried a sense of gladness to many a weary, wasted body, but has infused the light of the Gospel into many a sin-sick soul. The first year of its history has been gathered up in the little report issued with the above heading, and it may be had (price threepence) at the Conference Hall, Midway-park, and at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields. If friends will procure and read it, they will discover ways of doing good of which they never dreamed before. We extract the following paragraph:—"During the winter we hope to continue the work of the Mission. When the flowers are over we desire to distribute bags of lavender, oranges, apples, pots of blackberry and other jams, always with the life-giving Scripture seed attached; and our lady-friends will still go to the hospitals and sing hymns to the inmates. Also we hope to decorate fifty Christmas-trees with useful little gifts, where such trees never were planted before; and shall be grateful for the help of little fingers to aid us with presents for sick children, and from invalids for other sufferers."

THE GOSPEL-TENT MISSION FOR SHROPSHIRE.—The closing meeting, for the present season, of the Mission was held in the New Hall, Wellington, kindly lent by Dr. Cranage, on Nov. 2. Mr. Heath, who has been engaged as tent evangelist, gave an account of the work of the tent during the past summer. He stated that the Mission had been at work eighteen weeks, and had visited seventeen towns and villages. One of the secretaries stated that friends had very liberally supported the Mission, and that above £150 had been given, which had enabled the committee to meet all expenses, and was only about £10 short of enabling them to purchase the tent. The committee intended to issue collecting cards, for their friends to collect during the coming winter, so that the committee may be able to use two or three tents another summer. Gratitude and praise to God were frequently expressed in the meeting for the blessing and success with which He has been pleased to favour the Mission.

LEWIS WEAVER.

HOME OF INDUSTRY, SPITALFIELDS.

MY DEAR FELLOW-WORKERS,—A full complement of work, now that all our mission wheels for the winter are in motion, causes us to reply to your kind communications with great brevity, or by our voluntary helpers. This leads me thus to keep you aware of our progress.

OUR ELDER GIRLS

plead earnestly that our ten years' actual experience may this winter be so sanctified and applied that thousands of young women may be saved from the vortex of eternal ruin. They are craving our sympathy in their homes and factories all around us. Poor lasses! what know they of the pure love of a Christ-born soul? Often, as we speak to them of Jesus and his love, their impure minds, brought up in contact with immodesty in many forms, in the few square yards where they have been reared, and beholding as they do in the singing-halls and theatres references to love as connected with the lusts of earth, can you wonder that they sit and laugh at us, knowing not our language? It is in such seasons that we realize the power of the living God as alone able to save, and our own utter nothingness but to weep and sympathize.

Many of these hundreds of girls surrounding us have grown up as the busy women who earn "mother's bread" from childhood, independent and controlling themselves. The fashion is not "being engaged," as in other ranks, but undertaking to wash the weekly shirt, &c., for some boy who has been turned out to find his own bed, as the four-and-sixpenny room can no longer afford to shelter him. He promises marriage—it may be two or ten years hence; they live together, and in multiplied instances he gets odd and easy work, whilst the girl's trade, being in greatest demand, becomes the means of support. Is it to be wondered at that children's arms are filled all around us, in every court and alley, with pale and emaciated, stunted babies? Even when we have a matchbox-makers' tea, girls will come, bringing these infants in their laps. We are powerless, having little means of help. We wait patiently, believing our Government will yet ere long turn her millions of drink revenue into increased and rapid improvements among the dwellings of the working-classes.

Just realise the tyranny of the race for new railway-stations. The one just opened at the top of our street caused 4000 families to be turned out, to find shelter for themselves and children in one week—you ask, Where? In reply we say, Come and see! But our leaders have such a horror of smells that it is impossible to woo them even for an hour to behold the patience and endurance of our oppressed and suffering fellow-creatures. We know none are so depraved that there is not a corner of entrance into their hearts; we proved this, the other day, by asking, from the adjoining street, a group of women, twenty-two in number, many of them not long out of prison, to spend an hour with us. Sermons and shibboleths they understood not, but without words they knew what a little bag containing 1d. worth of soap and a 1d. comb meant, and they came again in the evening having put them to use; and who will say that our sweet songs had not something to do with those tears that fell freely from every eye? Many would be discouraged as the third invitation to the same group went forth, and only one solitary woman came, and that so drunk that she fell on the floor a senseless mass, whilst from the outside we heard fearful fights going on, and shouts from the men, "Sal, ye shall not go to church again!" Could we be clean-handed and work on the stimulated strength arising from intoxicants? No; for we see many of our sisters shorn of their power to carry through the work given them to do. Thus much to secure prayer for our heaviest need this winter—that is, what is to be done with, and for, our young women?

Our present agency is rescuing and training about forty to fifty, showing them what a joy it is to make a home bright with cleanliness, and fill it all over with the odour of a holy life. As one poor girl said while preparing a bath, "Oh, surely this must be heaven, it is so different to the beer-shop I've been living in these two years." Second: Evening schools for the elements of education, and learning to make their own garments. Third: Those who are Christians, building them up in a knowledge of the Word, and leading them forth in couples to distribute tracts in the multitudinous courts around. Fourth: Lady visitors in the factories, and weekly room meetings, where the three to six can be met and helped as the discerning eye and loving heart filled with Jesus alone can do.

Let us by faith lay hold of the scores of "Fear nots" for health to do all our Father gives us to do for Him, means to do it without debt, and submission in our trials to say "Thy will be done." May every mission band be united in heart, and, though we are all at different parts of the wall, let us each see to it, that we record this winter as the most glorious in results; and to Him who hath washed us in his blood be all the praise.

Nov. 6.

Yours in a risen life,

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

MISS MASON'S HOUSE OF REST.

A PLEA.

I FEEL impelled to lay before your readers a short account of a work which has been known to me, as to many of them, for some years, and which, from its very nature and constitution, should call forth the prayers and help of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ. I allude to the House of Rest for Female Missionaries, at 7 and 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, and Hyde-gardens, Eastbourne, conducted by Miss Charlotte Mason.

In Miss Mason's own words, "It was commenced in dependence on the living God, and though faith has again and again been tried to the uttermost, the Lord has never put me to confusion. I have received sums, in answer to prayer, varying from 6d. to £260." I have personally had experience in the work, as it is my privilege to make it my head-quarters whenever in London, and I can speak from experience of numbers of Christian workers who have come to Miss Mason utterly broken-down in health and spirits from excessive work, and who have gone forth, after a longer or shorter interval of rest, care, good food, and nursing, restored in body and in mind, and, I may add, in spirit also; for the simple Scriptural teaching and the practical life of faith daily exhibited must and does refresh the spirit of Christian workers, as it has oftentimes my own.

Just to show the number needing such help, I may mention that over one hundred have resided in the Kilburn and Eastbourne branches during the past six months. This will enable us to form some estimate of the large number needing such help, who have to be refused from want of means. The seaside branch has proved an inestimable boon to weary workers. This house is open, as well as the London houses, all the year round.

Another point to which I would draw attention is, that at Kilburn several permanent inmates are residing—dear aged Christian workers, whose time of active service is over, and who are only waiting their turn in the heavenly roll-call, to go home. Where would they be but for such a bright Christian home as this? Again, there is a sick ward in the London Home, where invalids are received instead of being sent to hospital, and the best medical care and skilful nursing is theirs.

A very important phase has lately developed itself. Miss Mason is willing to receive ladies who require a little instruction in the principles and practice of Christian work, before entering on any definite sphere. The cry is for labourers in the home and foreign fields; many would go, but they do not know how to grapple with work. I would earnestly recommend to them a few weeks' training and insight into London work in this House of Rest.

The daily needs are considerable; the funds are very low, the balance in the last report having been long entirely exhausted. All these workers have to be provided for; Miss Mason has many mouths to feed; and although her dependence is rightly on God, and her expectation from Him, it is our bounden duty to minister to their necessities. It is Miss Mason's wish to purchase the leases of the houses in Kilburn. She has already received so much towards the purchase fund that £1200 will complete it. I cannot imagine a Christmas offering more pleasing to God than, by making up this sum, to place a permanent roof over the heads of his dear children at Kilburn.

AGNES E. WESTON.

House of Rest, 7, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn.

CALCUTTA.—Rev. W. C. Fyfe, writing to Dr. M. Mitchell on Aug. 24, says:—"There was an interesting service in the Mission Church here on the evening of Sunday last. A Brahman—an pupil of our Institution, and now employed in the office of Mr. Harris, attorney—was baptized, along with his wife and seven children. The ages of the children range from about two to fourteen years. This is the first instance in the history of our mission, on this side of India, of a whole Hindu family being at one time admitted into the Church. He read an interesting statement of his experience. The church was crowded, and there was considerable excitement among the Hindus whilst the ordinance was being administered."

NOTES FROM SPAIN.

DR. WARREN, who recently went to Barcelona as medical missionary in connexion with the work of Mr. George Lawrence, writes to us under date Oct. 26:—

"The Lord's work here goes on very satisfactorily, especially that amongst the young. The numerous schools under Mr. Lawrence's supervision continue to be well attended. At the recent Government examination the elder boys did very well indeed.

"The circulation of our two papers Il Aurora de Gracia (The Dawn of Grace), which is weekly, and La Estrella de Gracia (The Star of Grace), which is an illustrated monthly periodical for children, continues to increase. The priests, of course, continue to be ardent enemies of them both, as well as of all other work for the Master. The week before last the Bishop of Barcelona issued a pastoral, calling on all the faithful (at some terrible penalty) to refrain from reading Il Aurora de Gracia, and to deliver up to their respective priests any copies they might have in their possession; at the same time denouncing it and all other similar publications.

"This vituperative article, however, instead of fulfilling his purpose, has gained a much wider circulation for the little Gospel messenger; in fact, has served quite as an advertisement and aroused the curiosity of many to know what this paper is like, so, to see for themselves, they procure a copy. 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee' (Ps. lxxvi. 10).

"As regards my own work, up to this it has chiefly been in learning the language, making some little alterations in our 'Botica' or drug shop, and in the preparation of drugs, &c. As soon as I am a little more conversant with the language and the ways of the people—which latter I find quite as important as the former,—we hope to open a couple of dispensaries in the densely populated part of the city. And as they will be in connexion with the schools, and on the school premises, we look forward to a good work, with the Lord's blessing, and at a moderate expense. By this means we hope to keep the hospital supplied with desirable cases, making use of it in a measure as a convalescent home."

A correspondent sends the following extracts from a letter received by him from Spain, and for the truth of which he says he can vouch:—

"Does not the hand of God seem to be working very generally throughout Europe? For instance, when two Christian missionaries arrived at C— lately, I made the fact of their arrival known to as many as I could, and it was received with ridicule: 'The very idea of such impertinence as two Protestant preachers going to C—; why, they must be beside themselves!' These and worse were the expressions made use of by those who were then informed. The English Consul (who is also a Roman Catholic), when called upon by the missionaries, no doubt with the idea of cooling the burning love and ardour of their souls, referred them to the civil Governor of the province for permission to open their little chapel.

"The Governor, apparently much more civil than her Britannic Majesty's Consul, after a few days' deliberation sent word that not only might they open their chapel, but if they required any assistance it would be willingly accorded them. So the first evangelical preachers have been heard in C—. I copy from the Avisador, published in C—, that at the opening services there were over 300 present: this is the enemy's account, bear in mind. Will the Christians in England pray that the good seed sown may be abundantly blessed?

"So simply does Mr. W. explain in his preaching the love of God for us, that the little chapel is crowded, and is far too small for the many anxious souls who crowd it. For hours before the time fixed and announced in the papers for their meetings, crowds are seen gathering round the doors, awaiting their opportunity to enter, and so great has been the thronging, that these men, whom God seems especially to have sent here, have not only been compelled to multiply their meetings, but having done this, so great is the rush still, that now—in three weeks only, almost incredible!—those who enter, enter by tickets only. Who could or would ever have believed that the proud, bigoted Spanish Roman Catholics would ever be seen condescending to ask for tickets to enable them to hear of a Saviour, and to learn about Jesus and his love.

"Great is the harvest, and few the labourers. These blessed scenes can be multiplied in every town in Spain. Cannot you arrange to give us a simultaneous hour of prayer on behalf of poor Spain? Religious toleration and freedom of worship God has given us: now is the time for us to cry out—'The sword of the Lord and Gideon.' Pray for the breath to come from the four winds, and breathe upon these slain that they may live. Oh, that the name of the Lord Jesus may be exalted throughout the length and breadth of this lovely, but dark, benighted, priest-ridden country."

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN PORTUGAL.

I HAVE lately returned from a visit to Portugal, and have been greatly encouraged by the progress of the work there. Portugal seems on the eve of a great movement in the direction of enfranchisement from Romish rule. The press unchecked advocates freedom from the vassal yoke, and priests are leaving the national church, and exposing her fallacies to the people. Many of them are seeking an alteration in the law in order boldly to come out and constitute a reformed church, to which, I believe, a large portion of the people would join themselves, so ready did I find them to receive the truth and gladly to accept Testaments and tracts whenever offered. Senhor Carvalho, whose labours have been so unremitting at Oporto, is now working at Lisbon, supplying the place of Senhor Mattos, who was summoned to Madeira to take part in the revival there.

It is pleasing to see with what an earnest, faithful spirit Carvalho, nightly, in different parts of the capital, proclaims the truth, and how eagerly it is listened to. He visited the fair at Belem, where for the last three years we have had a Bible-tent, bearing a banner with the inscription, "God is love," and there being assailed by a priest, he was able to confute him, and in the presence of a great crowd that assembled, for more than an hour to preach Christ to a sympathetic audience.

Prayer is being answered and fresh labourers are offering themselves, but funds are sadly wanting for the schools and many agencies which could now be worked so successfully. I believe it is only ignorance of the opportunity offering which prevents donations being given to help on the work in Portugal with the same liberal spirit as elsewhere. AUGUSTO SOARES,
Hon. Sec. Portuguese Evangelization Society.

4, St. Benet-place, E.C.

DR. BARNARDO'S WORK.—"E. M. S." is very sorry to hear that Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children are in such great need of funds, as was stated on page 18 of CHRISTIAN of Oct. 28; and "E. M. S." offers 15s. for every £5 given in answer to this appeal for aid to Dr. Barnardo's invaluable work up to the end of November. Donors are requested to state, "In answer to 'E. M. S.," that "E. M. S." may know extent of liability incurred.

"HOMES OF HOPE."—The fifteenth report of this soul-and-body-saving institution says:—"We desire never to refuse admittance and drive a poor fallen being back into sin, but there are limits to the capacity of our houses, and, after much consideration and prayer, we have resolved to occupy No. 4, as well as Nos. 5 and 6, Regent-square. We cannot doubt that our friends, who have helped us so long in our arduous but blessed work, will still more strenuously aid us in our increased expenditure. When we see that 70 per cent. of our cases have turned out well, and that no small proportion of these have been turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, can we hesitate? The Committee desire to remind their friends that the last Wednesday of April, July, October, and January is set apart for prayer, and to invite any Christian friends to come and join with them in seeking a blessing. We can never cease to thank God that, while these Homes have reclaimed many from outer sin, they have also been the birthplace of many souls." Mr. W. Hornbrook, 6, Regent-square, W.C., is the Secretary.

"MR. BOOTH'S MISSION."—The return of Mr. and Mrs. Booth to town, although not yet in perfect health and strength, has brought great joy to all. Mr. Allen has returned to Cardiff, after a little rest, in very greatly improved health and strength. It appears that an order to suppress open-air services there had been issued to the police. Mr. Allen was summoned for causing an obstruction, and, against the testimony of five respectable witnesses, was convicted and fined. This aroused the attention of the whole town. A meeting of ministers, and then a large public meeting, protested against the outrage. Meanwhile, Mr. Allen persevered with his work, and was summoned again. Upon this occasion the magistrate discharged the case, in opposition to the evidence of four or five policemen. The newspapers spoke at great length, and very strongly, on the subject. The Watch Committee demanded explanations, and finally ordered the police in future carefully to protect the open-air services. In St. Leonard's, also, an attempt has been made to stop the open-air services; but Mr. Pearson has stood his ground, and we hope next month to be able to report that he has completely overcome the difficulty. So far we can report, however, that the magistrates and police have not only refused to stop the work, but given active protection.—Christian Mission Magazine.

THE "NEW YEAR'S GIFT" FOR 1876.

As many of our readers are aware, it has been our custom to publish, at the close of each year, a four-page illustrated paper, entitled "A New Year's Gift," containing stirring and awakening articles on the Gospel and Salvation. This paper will be found very suitable for giving away. A Specimen Copy of the present issue is enclosed in this week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

CLERGYMAN'S MAGAZINE. Hodder and Stoughton. Is.—This magazine is conducted by members of the Church Homiletical Society, and appears to be a useful monthly shilling's worth among many of which the same cannot be said. The "Homiletic Notes on the Romans" are very good, and embrace copious references to the Greek text.

THE REFINER'S FIRE: Select Thoughts on Affliction. Seeley.—This is a handsome volume, and a most valuable work for those who visit the sick, or as a present to those who are being tried in the furnace of affliction. It consists of some of the sweetest portions of the writings of Archbishop Leighton, Samuel Rutherford, Hooker, Newton, Cecil, M'Cheyne, Mrs. Huntingdon, Cowper, and others.

ON THE APOCALYPSE. By T. W. GREENWELL. Ridgway, 169, Piccadilly.—This pamphlet is an examination of that part of Mr. Elliott's great work dealing with the vexed subject of the slaying of the two witnesses, which the author believes to be still future. We have neither space nor inclination to enter on this quæstio vexata, but must refer those interested in the subject to the pamphlet itself, which is very readably written. The author, who adheres in the main to the historical school of interpretation, appears to hold that this part of the Apocalypse is now in course of development.

BWARE OF FALSE TEACHERS: a Warning against Ritualism. By Rev. THOMAS GRIFFITHS, A.M. Nisbet.—THE LORD'S SUPPER: Not a Mass, not a Sacrifice, but a Memorial of Christ's Death as an Atonement for Sin; with Records of Early Piety. By WILLIAM CAMPBELL. Book Society.—These two little works are greatly needed at the present day. We recommend them especially for the view exhibited of the nature of Christian priesthood, a subject greatly needing fuller consideration on the part of a large class of writers on holiness just now, and who do not, as it seems to us, deal with this aspect of it to the extent which is desirable and demanded by its position in the New Testament.

BRIEF EXPOSITIONS OF THE EPISTLES TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA. By the Rev. R. MURRAY M'CHEYNE. Oliphant and Co.—The name of the author will be a sufficient recommendation to this little pamphlet, even were it not introduced by a preface by the Rev. Dr. Moody Stuart of Edinburgh, who says of the Expositions, "They are full of faithfulness, of love, of unction: they are also most interesting, and those who read one of these seven Expositions will scarcely fail to read them all."

THE GOSPEL OF THE TABERNACLE. By ROBERT EDWARD SEARS. Elliot Stock.—This is one of the best and most complete of the many works that have appeared on this interesting subject, and the publisher's name is a sufficient guarantee of its character as a book. We could willingly and easily extract many portions of great interest, but our limited space forbids. Where all is rich and full it seems invidious to select, but if we particularize at all, we should mention the chapters on the Laver, Altar of Incense, and Aaron and his Sons as especially instructive. The remarks in the latter on Election are very good: we give a brief extract:—"Election has brought blessings to millions; but it never did any one any harm. It has power to bless, but it has no authority to curse. No man will be sent to hell because he was not elected. Salvation is all grace; but damnation is all sin. Rightly understood, no doctrine is more encouraging to an awakened sinner than the doctrine of election. . . . The doctrine of election is in perfect harmony with the commission, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature.' . . . Do you want to know whether you are elected? Come to Jesus and He will tell you. All who come to Him will hear Him say, 'I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore, with lovingkindness have I drawn thee.'"

AMERICAN FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions, held at Chicago, was largely attended, and was marked by many proceedings of great interest. The outlook seems encouraging in all directions. Work among the Mahrattas of India—long an unfruitful task—has been extended with excellent results.

"SAILORS' REST" AND INSTITUTE, DEVONPORT.—Miss Weston has received with gratitude a cheque for £70 from Miss MacIver, the proceeds of a sale in aid of the above work in Liverpool. She has now a very heavy demand for money upon her to complete the first portion of the Institute, and would be very glad if ladies interested in the Royal Navy could help her by arranging small sales of work in aid of its funds.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

LORD MONCRIEFF, who is well known in Scotland, and far beyond it, as an eloquent speaker and accomplished lawyer, has delivered a valuable lecture on the "Gospel and its Opponents," at Airdrie, N.B.

THE REV. D. MORRIS, Protestant Chaplain of the Liverpool Borough Gaol, reports a remarkable decrease in the number of juvenile prisoners, which he attributes to the action of the School Board.

Mr. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM and the members of his family were to sail from New York for Liverpool in the Spain, on Saturday, Oct. 30. His address in England will be Eccleston-hill, St. Helen's, near Liverpool.

MICHIGAN has tried, with good results, a new liquor law. It requires every liquor-dealer to give bonds in $1000, and it is not as easy to get sureties to a bond as signers to a petition. The number of liquor-shops has been considerably lessened.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL CONVENTION.—Friends who may wish to possess themselves of the valuable addresses given at this Convention the week before last, will find them reported at length in the issues of our contemporary Word and Work for Nov. 4 and 11.

MEXICO.—The missionary work of the Methodist Church in Mexico is already developing into permanent institutions. Rev. Mr. Drees, of Puebla, has received two young men anxious to prepare for the Gospel ministry to their countrymen. With his native helper they may form the nucleus of a theological seminary.

SPAIN.—A new church for Protestant worship has been opened in the city of Granada. The cause of Christ is increasing in the interesting ancient capital of the Moors in Europe. At Valladolid a Young Men's Christian Association has been formed. The way lies among thorns, but the youthful converts have good hope that God will bless their work. The anniversary of the Christian Association of the Young Men of Madrid has been recently held.

RAILWAY SERVANTS.—Facts and figures of a very startling kind were brought forward, on the authority of the Board of Trade returns, at a meeting in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, on behalf of the Railway Servants' Orphanage. It was stated that, on an average, 2500 railway servants are annually maimed, and 1000 killed, in the United Kingdom.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED.—A conference of Christian workers will be held on Tuesday, December 7, from eleven till four o'clock; evangelistic meeting in the evening. Revs. James Cuthbertson (Gateshead), J. Kelman (Leith), W. P. McKay, M.D. (Hull), Dr. Cairns, and other ministers of Berwick, will take part. Meetings for the spiritual quickening of believers on the remaining evenings of the week.

FUNERAL REFORM.—Mr. Gladstone is of opinion that the whole subject of funeral arrangements requires to be gravely considered by the country.—Mr. Bright, writing to a Birmingham gentleman, says—"If your friends or any sensible people wish to reform the funeral exhibitions and funeral expenses, let them observe and copy the practice of the sect to which I belong—that of the Society of Friends. Nothing can be more simple, and nothing can be better."

THE HUNGARIAN NAZARENES.—A singular movement continues to make progress in Hungary. "The Nazarenes," says the Bible Society's Reporter, "still increase, and may safely be put down at 40,000. With all their peculiarities, they are burning and shining lights; their influence on the public mind is considerable, although it does not always manifest itself in a way very favourable to our work, the people refusing to buy the New Testament because it is said to be the book of those 'new believers,' and therefore dangerous."

SOUTHGATE, MIDDLESEX.—The ordinary quietude of this little village is much disturbed by a fair, which is held once a year in the autumn time. A new Congregational church has recently been opened exactly opposite the fair-field, and in the month of September last an active member of that church, backed by the warm-hearted minister, invited William Catlin, John McMillan, and others, to take a stand in front of the said chapel, and to preach a simple Gospel to the careless throngs while passing by. The attempt was eminently successful, and a deep impression was left on the minds of many that, perhaps, never heard the Gospel before.

REV. W. TAYLOR.—The Christian Advocate of August 19 has the following:—"Rev. William Taylor, after visiting the Chester and Emory Grove Camp-meeting, visited the Sea Cliff Camp-meeting, preaching at the latter Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons. On Thursday and Friday he was at the Newark Conference Camp-meeting at Denville, and on Saturday left for West Virginia, where he proposed to spend Sunday and Monday at the Wheeling Camp-meeting. Thence he would go on Tuesday to Silver Lake Camp-meeting, by way of Pittsburgh and Buffalo. His plan is to leave Silver Lake on Saturday, spend Sunday and Monday at the Camp-meeting near Lockhaven, Pa., and Wednesday and Thursday at the Wyoming Camp-meeting. Everywhere he goes he is ready and abundant in labours, preaching, praying, and singing, with all the vigour and earnestness and success of his earlier ministry."

A GOOD WORK appears to be going on among the soldiers at Satara (British India). No less than eighty-five (more than half of the detachment) have joined the Total Abstinence Association, and the oaten serjeant's vocation will be at an end if the interest continues, as we trust it will.

SPECIAL SERVICES were held last week in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Egutpoora. There was a very good attendance, and deep interest was shown. Eight persons sought the Lord and found peace in believing. The Rev. Mr. Fox, of Poona, is conducting special services at Jubbulpore.

LIVERPOOL.—The Young Men's Christian Association here have made special arrangements for services on Sunday next, which has been fixed upon as a day of special prayer throughout the world on behalf of young men and Young Men's Christian Associations.

AN INTERESTING FACT.—During General Howard's recent visit to Alaska, he found, at Fort Simpson, Rev. Mr. Crosby, an earnest Methodist minister, who is building a church, and at whose Sabbath service not less than 600 Indians were present, an attentive and interested audience, a young Indian woman translating to them his sermon while he was preaching.

ROME.—This (Thursday) evening there will be a valedictory meeting in honour of Mr. Wall, at Regent's-park Church, and the programme will include the setting apart of Dr. Landels' second son for the work in Italy. This young man is to return to Rome in company with Mr. Wall, under whose care he will prosecute his training for the Italian Mission.

IN ST. PETERSBURG a society has been formed of ladies who renounce "the use of silk dresses, and every other kind of expensive attire, in order to employ the money so saved in the education of orphans." "In this country (says the Sunday-school Times of Philadelphia) a large number of professed Christians have renounced all giving to religious charities so as to use their money for silk dresses and other expensive attire."

ANOTHER PARTY of missionaries of the American Board have sailed for India.—Mr. H. Bruce and wife returning to the Mahratta Mission, Mr. Edward D. Hume and wife accompanying them. The latter are both children of missionaries, born in India, and now returning there for their life-work. Mr. Hume is a graduate of Yale College and Hartford Theological Seminary.

LEIGHTON.—"It is impossible," says a correspondent, "to give in a brief account any adequate idea of the wonderful work of God in Leighton in connexion with the recent Union meetings. The services had been arranged to be held only on four days, but such was the intense interest of people of all denominations in the town, and such were the manifestations of the Divine presence and blessing, that the meetings were continued two days longer, and another week of services arranged to commence on the 22nd of this month."

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND HOSPITALS.—The Rev. E. A. Watkins writes:—"I have read with great interest a little book, entitled 'Rose Hall; or, Oh! so Happy' (published by Butler and Tanner, of Frome and London). I hope it may have an extensive circulation, as I think it calculated to be extremely useful. Such a truthful record of youthful piety, as the result of God's blessing on faithful Sunday-school teaching, is likely to be in the highest degree encouraging to Sunday-school teachers, who are so seldom permitted to see the fruit of their labours."

NEW GUINEA.—The Daily News says that the scheme for the colonization of New Guinea by an expeditionary force from England has so far advanced that 200 volunteers have been engaged, and will leave for their new home at the commencement of January, under the command of Lieut. Armit, R.N. The Association formed has already received within £12,000 of the sum required for the outfit of the expedition and the preliminary expenses, and a fully-equipped vessel of 1200 tons has been presented by one sympathizer, and a steam launch sixty feet long by another. The call for volunteers was responded to by over a thousand men, and the band selected are the pick of them, being principally retired soldiers, sailors, and mechanics. It is thought very probable that the Government will aid the expedition, in which case its success is pretty well assured.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING, EDINBURGH.—Truly distressed I have often felt at cavils advanced against the work of our esteemed brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey, as if they could keep up the ardour of piety months after their removal. I constantly hear, without seeking, in various places, of blessed fruits of their efforts, so as to excite in me wonder and joy. A few days ago a person attributed to their agency, in my hearing, the conversion of a family of eight persons. One precious measure still in use here is the noon prayer-meeting in the Free Church Assembly Hall. During six weeks' services among United Presbyterian churches here and around, I have never seen less than 300 attendants, but I have always felt it a season of sacred peace and joy. One form of the usefulness employed here, that refreshed me, is the Saturday noon prayer-meeting for children. To-day certainly there were 750 children and 500 adults. It was deeply affecting to notice the tearful concern of parents for their children's good; and many of the children seemed to feel a tender seriousness, as if waiting for a blessing. For myself I felt—here is abiding good result beyond dispute and at a distant period.

JOHN BOSS, of Bedford.

DAILY TEXTS.

"JESUS ONLY."—MATT. XVII. 8.

Thurs., Nov. 11.—"Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." "I watch, and am as a sparrow, alone, upon the house-top."—Matt. vi. 6; Ps. cii. 7.

Fri., 12.—"Jacob was left alone, and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day.... He blessed him there." "There stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known to his brethren, and Joseph said unto his brethren 'Come near to me, I pray you.'"—Gen. xxxii. 24-29; Gen. xlv. 4.

Sat., 13.—"He shut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the Lord." "Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage which dwell solitarily in the wood in the midst of Carmel."—2 Kings iv. 33; Micah vii. 14.

Sun., 14.—"I have trodden the windpress alone, and of the people there was none with me." "Jesus was alone praying." "He went up into a mountain apart, to pray, and when the evening was come He was there alone."—Isa. lxiii. 3; Luke ix. 18; Matt. xiv. 23.

Mon., 15.—"Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst, and Jesus said unto her, 'Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin more.'" "When they were alone, He expounded all things to his disciples."—John viii. 10; Mark iv. 34.

Tues., 16.—"God setteth the solitary in families." "Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive?... Behold I was left alone; these, where had they been?"—Ps. lxxviii. 6; Isa. xlix. 21.

Wed., 17.—"Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations." "Israel then shall dwell in safety alone." "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him." "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please Him."—Num. xxiii. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 28, 12; John viii. 29.

"YET I AM NOT ALONE, FOR THE FATHER IS WITH ME."—JNO. XVI. 32.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For the great blessing given to the week of mission services at Crockham-hill, Kent.—For blessing on Kilmarnock in answer to prayer offered in THE CHRISTIAN in the month of August.—For a great blessing on a week's services held at Tangley, near Guildford, by evangelists from the Evangelization Society.—For God's presence and power at a recent conference of Dutch and Flemish pastors at Brussels.—For God's "good hand upon us" in arrangements for the services at Spa in the coming winter.—For many souls saved through the services in Staines held by Mr. George Brealey; prayer is desired for further blessing there, also at Windsor.

PRAYER.—That a large and influential congregation in Scotland may be guided to choose a minister after God's own heart.—For a sister who has fallen into sin, and, though the sin is put away, seems to have lost all hope.—For a young man who once professed to have found Christ, but is now gone back to the world.—For a child of God who has suffered long and distressing illness.

PLACES.—For special services this week at Market Rasen.—For continued blessing on Swansea and its neighbourhood.—For the Divine blessing upon a series of mission services to be conducted during the month of November in St. Paul's Parish, York.—For a great blessing on Wexford, Ireland.—For a week of special services to be held at Uxbridge from Nov. 14 to 21.—For Miss De Broen's work in Paris.—For a series of evangelistic meetings to be held in Denholm, Roxburghshire.—For the village of North Cheriton, Somersetshire.—For great blessing upon a mission to be held in Nottingham and Lenton (D.V.) Nov. 14 to 21.—For great blessing on services to be held by Mr. Bennett, of the Evangelization Society, at Haselbury, from Nov. 14 to 21 inclusive.—For evangelistic services in the theatre at Runcorn.—For a blessing in the children's meeting at Kensal New Town.—For a revival of the Lord's work in Dambagh.—For much of the power of the Holy Ghost in consecration meetings to be held next week in Rochester; also for a meeting of the same character on Friday, 19th inst., at Harrow-on-the-Hill.—For evangelistic services held at Walton and Trimley, beginning Nov. 7, and continuing a month.—For God's special blessing and presence in a Bible-reading for English ladies to be held this winter, weekly, in Brussels; also for a young ladies' Bible-class on Sundays.

CONVERSIONS.—For three young ladies; also for two gentlemen, one of them evidently drawing near to death.—For three brothers in York, and two in London; for an aged lady in London.—For a young man, religiously trained, who seems to be entering on a sinful course.—For my Bible-class.—For my brother, who is the son of a praying mother.—For a dear sister, who is ill.—For a young girl greatly taken with the music of Mr. Sankey's hymns, but who does not value the Gospel contained in the words.—For my son, who is fatherless, and living "alone in London."—That a letter sent to my brother, a soldier in India, may be blessed to his conversion.—For an only brother who has fallen into drink.—For a young man in the army who has been a great slave to drink, but has just taken the pledge.—For two sons and a daughter.—For my brother, who is dangerously ill, but refuses to hear any allusion to the state of his soul.

S. A. W. HASLEMERE.—"Deep sorrow for sin" will never save you. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

THE STORY OF A BIBLE IN CHILE.—"Some eight or ten years ago a young Chilean was serving as a sailor on board a steamer trading on this coast: A passenger gave him one of your Bibles in Spanish, adding at the same time that it was no use to him, as he did not care for it. The young Chilean was deeply interested in it, and without any human agency whatever he became a true Christian. On his return trip he brought the Bible home with him to Talcahuano, where his parents and brothers and sisters resided. His eldest sister commenced a study of the book, and in a short time she gave up the confessional and the mass, and became a true Christian. In the course of two years the whole family, including her parents, three sisters, two brothers, and a brother-in-law, all embraced the truth as it is in Jesus, and gave up all connexion with Rome. This great work of God was performed without any instrumentality except his own Word and Spirit. When the Rev. Dr. Swaney went there as a missionary some years ago, he made acquaintance with this Christian family."—British and Foreign Bible Society's Report.

OBJECTIONS TO THE DOCTRINE OF THE BLOOD.—I.

If the opponents of the doctrine of the blood had any reasonable or well-founded objections to urge against the truth they impugn, reason would that we should bear with them—so far, at least, as to give their objections full and attentive consideration, and, if possible, to answer their difficulties in such a manner that every reasonable stumbling-block in the way of the reception of the truth might be removed. But when we come to examine their objections, they are for the most part so utterly irrational, that the marvel is that the men who urge them should be called Rationalists, and should pride themselves upon the superiority of their culture.

It may be well briefly to review some of these objections, and in doing so it will be found that they may be conveniently classed under the head of either physical, sentimental, or moral objections to the doctrine of the blood.

1. Physical or materialistic objections, such as that given in a former number from the pen of the Rev. H. W. Beecher, which we will quote in his own words:—

"We are educated to talk of our sins being washed away by the blood of Christ. Did you ever see a drop of blood applied to any human being for such a purpose?"

Such an objection is totally unworthy of any candid critic. Can Mr. Beecher seriously believe that those who value the doctrine of the blood cherish any such gross materialistic conceptions of its mode of cleansing as he here attributes to them? Can he imagine that any contact whatever with material blood is taught by those who assert that sins are washed away by the blood of Christ? And if he does not—if he knows that he is misrepresenting the meaning of the men he is opposing,—what is the objection worth?

2. Sentimental objections. Of these we will give a specimen from a sermon of Dean Stanley which lies before us, preached in January this very year:—

"Had those old sacrifices no spiritual meaning hid under their mechanical, their strange—must not we even say their revolting forms? In themselves they have entirely ceased. Of all the forms of ancient worship they are the most repugnant to our feelings of humane and of Divine religion."

As "in themselves they have entirely ceased," it is plain that the objection on the score of refinement, which we venture to call a sentimental one, no longer exists. If ours is really an age of greater refinement than that of the Old Dispensation, we have had at least so much concession made to our feelings that we are neither called on to witness, nor even to hear of others being called on to witness, scenes such as those which the vivid imagination of Dean Stanley and Mr. Beecher have depicted in somewhat exaggerated terms. The only occasion on which, in the whole range of Christian worship, anything like an approach to a material representation of the blood of Christ—and that, of course, only in symbol—is to be found, is in the use of wine in the Lord's Supper. In the lips of a Jew of old the objection might have had some apparent force, but a professing Christian now has no possible pretext for complaining of any offence to the feelings arising from any part of the worship which Christ has instituted.

But this sentimental grievance is carried by those who cherish it to such an extravagant pitch that even the very use of the word "blood" frightens them. Their feelings in this respect are, forsooth, so sensitive that they would omit the word in the New Testament altogether, for fear that its use might recall to mind scenes which are too much for the refinement of the nineteenth century! This may well be called sentimentalism run mad, and, as coming from the pen of such a writer as Mr. Henry Ward Beecher (who is by no means himself always very refined in his choice of language), is simply ridiculous; on this ground alone it well deserves the hearty reprobation of every honest mind that can distinguish between real refinement and the mere affectation of it.

But to the Christian who reverences the Word of God there is another and better reason for rejecting with firmness all such attempts to overthrow the very foundation of our faith. God himself has settled the question for us by the constant and repeated use of the word "blood" in the New Testament. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." We think that it may be by no means unprofitable to conclude this article by laying before our readers some texts in the New Testament where the blood of Christ is spoken of in reference to its atoning value, that they may see for themselves that this is a controversy between those who bow to the teaching of Christ himself, as given to us in his Word, and those who reject that teaching.

- Matt. xxvi. 28.—"This is My blood of the new testament [covenant] (Mark xiv. 24; Luke xxii. 20).
 John vi. 53-56.—"My blood is drink indeed."
 Acts xx. 28.—"The Church of God, which He hath purchased with his own blood."
 Rom. iii. 25.—"Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood."
 v. 9.—"Being now justified by his blood."
 1 Cor. x. 16.—"The cup... is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?"
 " xii. 25.—"This cup is the new testament [covenant] in My blood."
 Ephes. i. 7.—"In Whom we have redemption through his blood."
 ii. 13.—"Made nigh by the blood of Christ."
 Col. i. 20.—"Having made peace through the blood of his cross."
 Heb. ix. 12.—"By his own blood He entered in once into the holy place."
 " ix. 14.—"Much more shall the blood of Christ... purge your conscience."
 " x. 19.—"Boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."
 " x. 29.—"The blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified."
 " xii. 24.—"The blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel."
 " xiii. 12.—"Jesus... that He might sanctify the people with his own blood."
 " xiii. 20.—"The blood of the everlasting covenant."
 1 Pet. i. 2.—"Elect unto... sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."
 " i. 19.—"Redeemed... with the precious blood of Christ."
 1 John i. 7.—"The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."
 Rev. i. 5.—"Washed us from our sins in his own blood."
 " v. 9.—"Redeemed us to God by thy blood."
 " vii. 14.—"Washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."
 " xii. 11.—"They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb."

The above list, though not containing all the texts that might be cited on the subject, is sufficiently full to convey to the eye the true character of Mr. Beecher's suggestion (which was quoted in a former article) that we should omit the use of the word "blood" altogether. To be ashamed of a word which Christ used both in his personal ministry on earth, and afterwards through his apostles, is to incur a solemn responsibility, remembering who has said, "Whoever shall be ashamed of Me and of my words . . . of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when He cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels."

We shall hope in another article to continue the subject by considering the third class of objections, which we have designated "Moral Objections to the Doctrine of the Atonement."

"HOW SHALL WE STUDY THE BIBLE?"—II.

BY REV. THOMAS RICHARDSON.

JUST note the unity pervading God's revealed truth. The Anointed from heaven is the Saviour of sinners—the man CHRIST JESUS—heaven and earth brought into contact. In the Old Testament we read of God coming down from heaven to plead with man. In the New Testament we read of the Man going from earth to heaven to plead with God. In the Old Testament, God coming to me; in the New Testament, Jesus going to God for me.

What an impetus the detection of the law of gravitation gave to the simple understanding of the laws of Nature! And when once the centre of the Word of God is detected, what an impetus it gives to the understanding of the law of God! Then a just God and a Saviour unlocks all mystery to the believing soul.

No doubt some will say, as they have said, Cannot you give us a shorter way? But why desire shorter, if all the way is a delight? Still, it would be misleading to think that we may not study the Bible intelligently in detail. Take the key-note of one Gospel as an illustration—say the Gospel of Mark. He supplies his own centre-thought thus: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Mark i. 1). Take your Bible and make a note of any part that seems to show Jesus as the Son of God. For instance, take a Bible recently marked for this purpose. Chap. i. 2 gives God's own testimony—"Thou art my beloved Son." Then follows—what?

- CHAP. i. 25. The miracle of casting out an unclean spirit.
 i. 31. The miracle of healing the fever.
 i. 42. The miracle of healing the leper.
 ii. 3. The miracle of healing the sick of the palsy.
 iii. 1. The miracle of healing the withered hand.
 iii. 11. The miracle of casting out unclean spirits.
 iv. 39. The miracle of quelling the sea.
 v. 3. The miracle of casting out the legion of devils.
 v. 29. The miracle of healing the woman's issue of blood.
 v. 41. The miracle of raising the dead damsel.
 vi. 7. The miracle of giving his disciples power to work miracles.
 vi. 38. The miracle of feeding five thousand.
 vi. 48. The miracle of his walking on the sea.
 vi. 56. The miracle of healing those who touched Him.
 vii. 29. The miracle of healing the Syrophenician woman's daughter.
 vii. 35. The miracle of curing the deaf man.
 viii. 9. The miracle of feeding four thousand.
 viii. 22. The miracle of giving sight to a blind man.
 ix. 23. The miracle of casting out the devil out of the child.
 x. 46. The miracle of healing blind Bartimæus.

And then certain prophecies are uttered, and the story of Christ's last days given, but all found to culminate in Jesus as "the Son of God."

* We think the true account of the Four Gospels is as follows: Matthew = Jesus as the King of Israel. Mark = Jesus as the Servant of God. Luke = Jesus as the Son of Man. John = Jesus as the Son of God. In each, however, will be found abundant evidences of the characteristics of the other three—as, for example, in Mark, that Jesus is the Son of God; in John, that He is the Son of Man, etc.—Ed.

Now, here we have miracles the peculiar characteristic of Mark's Gospel. Read this Gospel in this light. Re-read it, and we see Jesus, "the Son of God," working as only one could work when God was with Him. Every time the Gospel is read, more and more details will bear out the same truth. For instance, go through the Gospel, and note how many different witnesses bear testimony to Jesus as being "the Son of God."

In this way the Scriptures are made plain, as they are opened up in the light of Jesus; as the one thought underlying every word, this Gospel has been purposely selected, as the writer is fully aware of other ways of characterising it. But what is here insisted upon is a study of the Word itself; and here is a lock and a key. The lock has many wards in it, mostly miracles; the key supplied is Jesus, as "the Son of God." This unlocks the whole, and enables us to keep in mind that our Jesus has shown to us that He can do for us far more abundantly than we can ask or think.

A reader of the Bible only and wholly, or as a whole, will have to unlearn many traditions, and be ready to receive many views of truth which are so simple that they are easily retained when once perceived. A child can comprehend, after reading the Gospel of Mark once through in the light of miracles, that Jesus is "the Son of God."

Should these thoughts prove suggestive they will not have been penned in vain. The Christians of our day have blessed privileges in the way of elaborate helps, but yet the common reader needs them to be simplified for him. The writer has found most help in reading the Bible from end to end, and using what light he got from one part to open up another, and he believes that God has answered his early prayers—that He would lead him into clear views of Divine truth. Any help you can give to the further intelligent study of the Bible in its entirety will tend to foster spiritual life, and develop the rising desire, on the part of the Christian Church, for fewer words of man and more of the Word of God.

Allow me to be known to your readers as one who realizes how little he knows of the Scriptures, but what little help he has had he wants others to possess.

A CRY FROM NEWFOUNDLAND.—A correspondent says:—"This, though the oldest, is the most neglected of our colonies. An English gentleman and his wife are now living in a very wild part of the island, surrounded by a numerous and wretchedly poor community, who look to them unaided for help. They are trying to civilize and educate them, and bring to them for the first time the Bible. Several of these are miners, now out of work, who, with their families, are in a starving and naked condition. As the very severe weather approaches, with the thermometer ranging at times from 15 deg. to 25 deg. below zero, their prospects are very sad. Who will give some aid for their material wants? Any money or clothing should be addressed, Hon. A. Shea, St. John's, Newfoundland—to be forwarded to the La Manche Mine—care of Mrs. Mackenzie, 28, Cumberland-street, Warwick-square, London."

BATH.—The Lord has been giving us great blessing here in connexion with the visit of our brother Mr. Macnutt. The meetings commenced on Thursday week with an afternoon meeting for Christians, when Mr. Macnutt spoke solemnly on "Restoration to the Lord," taking for his subject Hezekiah's reformation in 2 Chron. xxix. The evening meeting for preaching the Gospel was addressed by Messrs. Macnutt and D. Russell. As we were about to separate, a young girl came into the hall, and spoke to Mr. Macnutt. She had gone halfway home, but her distress was so great that she came back, and in a short time went home again rejoicing. The next evening she brought her fellow-servant to the meeting, and she, too, went away professing faith in Jesus. Two or three professed to be converted at the Friday services. On Saturday the afternoon was devoted to a service for children, and the Gospel was preached in the evening by Mr. Macnutt. Those who were anxious seemed to throw aside all reserve, holding up their hands, asking to be prayed for, while the tears were flowing freely down the cheeks of several. On Sunday evening, although the rain fell very heavily most of the time, the hall was filled: the interest was so great that more than half the people remained for the inquiry-meeting, and several went away assured of salvation. Such a deep spirit of inquiry has been manifested, especially among those who have hitherto been opposed to work of this kind, that our brother Mr. Macnutt intends to return (D.V.) in January, with other speakers, for ten days of meetings, when we hope the Lord will send us quite a revival.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AT HOME.

UNION OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

THE Christian women of London are awaking to a sense of the need for united aggressive action concerning the destructive drinking customs of the day. A number of them were gathered together on Wednesday evening, the 10th inst., at the Home of Industry, Spitalfields, to pray and talk the matter over, with a view to definite and immediate action.

As announced in our columns, the meeting was convened by Miss Mason (Kilburn), with the support of Miss Macpherson and Miss Weston, whose labours in the temperance cause have been abundant. Having partaken of the proverbial cup that "cheers but not inebriates," the assembled ladies united with Miss Macpherson in fervent entreaty to God for his blessing and seal upon this effort to stem the growing tide of sin.

Miss Mason, who presided throughout, explained the object of the meeting, dwelt on the enormity of the evil to be fought with, insisted that total abstinence was the only effectual remedy, and stated that it was proposed to form a "Christian Workers' Temperance Union," to include all female Christian workers who were abstainers. She thought the time had come when they ought to look upon temperance effort as an integral part of all their Christian work.

Miss Weston followed with a forcible address, during which she drew largely on her experience in connexion with the Royal Navy. She considered that if she laid down her teetotalism, she would be cutting off her right hand, as far as her usefulness was concerned. She did not say that one could not work for Christ without total abstinence, but if they wanted to do double work for Him, let them become teetotalers. Let them look at the rolls of Church membership, and see how many Christians, even ministers, had been cast down through strong drink. She asserted, as the result of her experience and personal knowledge of work in the Royal Navy, that those chaplains on board H. M.'s ships who were not abstainers were almost powerless for good; the sailors had no sort of confidence in, or respect for, them.

Miss Macpherson could speak from long and sad experience of the terrible ravages of strong drink in her own neighbourhood. But the evil was not confined to the poverty-stricken East-end. In proof of this she read a letter received by her since that meeting was convened, which she said revealed a state of things that was only a type of many hundreds of similar cases in our land. We reproduce this mournful picture in full:—

London, Nov. 4, 1875.

"Dear Madam,—I see by THE CHRISTIAN that yourself and some other ladies are about to convene a meeting of female temperance workers. Will you kindly allow me to bring before you the case of my own dear wife, in the hope that the Lord will lay it upon the heart of some Christian lady who shall be able to suggest some practical remedy.

"My wife is an intelligent, educated woman, forty years of age. We have four children under twelve years, and until four years ago she was a devoted wife and mother. Now she is a slave to strong drink, frequently in delirium tremens, and for the last four weeks she has been in bed, drunk all the time.

"We used to all join in family prayer every day; but now my poor wife curses and blasphemes night and day, declaring she will drink till she dies. This state of things has been going on for four years, alternating in one month drunk and one sober. But it is now worse,—there seems no respite at all; my once happy home seems to me blighted and blasted for ever.

"I have been a total abstainer for twenty years. I have a prosperous business, and would gladly give all I have in the world to rescue my dear wife from drink. I beseech you, my dear lady, to lend me your powerful aid, for I am at the verge of despair, as the doctor, the servants, and even the neighbours, help to procure her drink, in spite of my earnest entreaties not to do so. But I believe you will help me. I believe the good Lord will guide you to help me to rescue my dear wife, and so make a home happy again."

After some reference to the wonderful work in the United States, Miss Macpherson reported the doings of some of the Christian ladies in Glasgow, who, in the beginning of this year, set their hands to this work, sending an autograph letter to all the ministers in the city, and a circular to all the publicans. She urged that all the varied gifts of her sisters should be brought to bear on this work. Recurring to her own East-end experiences, she had herself seen fifteen women, seven men, and six children enter a gin-shop within three minutes. In the eighty or ninety gin shops in Bethnal-green-road, the same proportion of women might be found.

Miss Coles earnestly pleaded for effort among the young women. As a proof that it was needed, she cited the case of a warehouse in London where fifty of the young women had gin with their lunch: the fact she got from two of themselves. She too could testify to the prevalence of the drink-curse among the upper classes.

Various suggestions were made as to the practical steps to be taken as a result of the meeting, and it was stated that another would be held in a month, the time and place to be duly announced in our columns. The meeting closed, as it was opened, with earnest and importunate prayer. Fifty-three ladies testified their intention to join the Union, and it was also stated that branches would be formed in different parts of the country. We wish our Christian sisters all success in their endeavours among their own sex to meet and counteract this giant evil. All the necessary information will be obtained by friends who wish to co-operate on application to Miss Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn, N.W.

THE CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

AN occasional paper says:—"The subject of pernicious literature is becoming one of the most serious questions of the day. The Press cries out against it, magistrates complain that they have no power to put a stop to it, and the Legislature is unable to deal with it. We are convinced that the only remedy is to make a more aggressive use of the Christian Press; numerous examples show how much good might be expected from an army of colporteurs going from house to house, sowing good seed, offering cheap attractive literature for sale, and, with kindly, loving words, urging the people to buy that which may do good to their souls.

"Some of the colporteurs relate strange stories of the power of the Word of God in the beer-shop, as in the following incident:—At a beer-shop in Gravesend I showed some poor fellows, who were half drunk, some Testaments at fourpence, when one said, 'I will be no longer without the Word of God when I can have it brought to me for fourpence.' 'Neither will I,' said the landlady, 'let me have one of those at tenpence; and call again, sir, and I will buy one for my daughter.' Thus God opens the way.' Often the colporteurs find it hard, uphill work, especially at the first, but gradually the opposition is broken down by kind words, and they receive a warm welcome on their monthly visits. Frequently, too, after much discouragement, their hearts are cheered by meeting unexpectedly with one of the King's servants in lowly life. They need, however, to be men willing to 'endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ,' and only love to the Saviour would carry them through the difficulties they meet. The following notes from the journal of one exemplify how much they have sometimes to bear, and, at the same time, what encouragements they receive:—'Not much success to-day; very coolly received. I see a great many reading Bow Bells, and such trash, but when offered anything good, it is plain 'No.' I have great cause to thank God for his protecting care, for although many doors are slammed in my face, and many people curse me for calling, yet some of their hearts have been opened, and I am enabled to rejoice. In Thomas-street I called at a house where a chimney-sweep lives, when the woman asked me in, and said—'Sir, do you remember selling a sixpenny Bible in the street about a month ago?' I said I did. 'Ah, sir,' she said, 'that Bible my husband prizes. Through reading it he saw he was a sinner in God's sight. Now he always goes to chapel, and is quite an altered man. My house used to be a hell upon earth, now it is like heaven. I shall ever have cause to thank God that you sold him that Bible.'" The importance of colportage as an evangelistic agency at the present time cannot be over-estimated. With vicious, impure, and infidel literature enormously on the increase, with a national education increasing the capacity and the desire for something to read, it has become an absolute necessity. Money is greatly needed to enable the Committee to maintain and extend the work. Will you help? Office of the Society, 15, Hamover-street, Long Acre, W.C.

WINTER APPEAL.—The poor and sick are needing sorely the help of the Washing Mission. Funds are urgently required at this season to extend its benefits, and also to give work to discharged female prisoners. Donations may be sent to Nine Elms House, Wandsworth-road, Vauxhall, payable to Mrs. Meredith.

LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool Mercury of the 8th inst. gives a sketch of the third free Sunday morning breakfast in the Vauxhall-road, and adds—"The meetings are likely to effect a great deal of good, as by their means the most degraded are reached. The cost of providing the breakfast is defrayed by gentlemen taking an interest in the movement. It is intended to have another free breakfast next Sunday morning, and to continue them if it is found that good is effected and funds are forthcoming. There is no organization for obtaining funds, but no doubt, when it becomes sufficiently known, money will flow in for the purpose; for persons who subscribe will have the pleasure of feeling that they are providing a warm and substantial breakfast for those who seldom obtain one, and at the same time are giving an opportunity for their religious instruction. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Court, who has taken great interest in the movement, and we believe originated it in Liverpool."

MAJOR COLE AT NEWCASTLE.

The services which have been conducted here during the past fortnight by Major Cole, in the Central Hall, continue to be attended by large numbers of people. A holy influence pervades every meeting; a melting, softening feeling seems to take possession of every breast; sinners are enabled to believe while the Word of God is being expounded. It would be impossible to tell how many have experienced a change of heart; we are hearing of some every day. Many signal answers to prayer have been received—in fact, no service is held but some anxious ones remain for conversation.

The large Town Hall, on Sabbath night, proved too small for the crowd, hundreds being unable to get in. Major Cole's address was listened to with deep attention; and the sweet singing of Mrs. and Miss Cole, in conjunction with the Major, renders all the meetings most interesting. We believe that the singing of these hymns is blessed of God in the salvation of souls. On Saturday the moon-day meeting (which Major Cole has conducted each day since he came) was converted into a children's service, mothers being invited to come themselves and bring their children. On Saturday next a similar service will be held. May God bless the dear children.

On Wednesday, Major Cole visited Stephenson's factory; a most interesting service was held amongst the engineers during the dinner-hour in the afternoon. Major Cole has also addressed 400 mothers in the Central Hall, and but for the inclement day as many more would have been present. Our dear friends continue their labours here; we believe a mighty work is being accomplished. Oh! that God's people would pray earnestly for a mighty outpouring of God's Spirit.

R. L.

INCIDENTS OF THE MEETINGS.

At the close of the meeting the night Major Cole spoke on the Prodigal Son, a worker in the inquiry-meeting approached a working man and his wife and said, "Are you Christians?" "We are both prodigals, and have been for many years." "How is it you have left your Father's house?" "Many years ago a prayer-meeting was appointed to be held at our home, when a member of the same church to which we belonged said, 'Oh! you are not going to hold the meeting in a pauper's house, I hope?' The meeting was not held; we were indignant, and gave up meetings, finally family worship, and at last forsook Christ; but they have been sad years to us. We have abused our best Friend, and we will return to-night; our children are growing up unsaved." They went out of the meeting rejoicing, and promising to erect the family altar, and tell their children of Jesus.

One of the lady workers called at a house to leave there tickets for Sunday night meeting. She found a poor consumptive, and said a few words of cheer; but the next morning her mind was drawn towards the poor invalid, and she called on her again. She found that, though so near death, she was unsaved. A few texts explaining the Gospel were given, and the face of the woman became radiant with joy; and she will undoubtedly soon pass away to the home where sickness is unknown.

A man was seen sitting alone in the gallery of the hall. A worker approached him, "My friend, you are alone, I see." "Yes, but I like to sit here." "Why?" "Because I received Christ in this place on Tuesday night." He was the last one to leave the gallery.

A mother was about leaving the hall with her two little children. She spoke to Mrs. Cole, saying "My little daughter has been crying all through the meeting, and does not want to leave without seeing Major Cole." Mrs. Cole said, "Dear, can't you tell me?" She replied, "I want to come to Jesus; I don't want to go home until I do." The little one soon found peace; but while she was accepting Christ, Major Cole had the joy of seeing an old lady, nearly seventy years of age, for the first time in her life believe that she was saved, though all her life she had been a member of a church.

There was a lady that invited a sailor to the meetings, and asked a friend to speak to him. He was enabled to trust in Christ, and the next evening the sailor brought a friend of his to the meeting, and remarked to him—"If you are washed overboard, you know it will be right into the arms of Jesus. He will take you right to glory." Isa. liii. 6 led him to Christ and peace.

One of the Committee said to a working man—"Are you a Christian?" "Yes, sir." "When did you accept Christ?" "While Major Cole was speaking to the working men in the factory yesterday." This work is so blessed that next week Major Cole expects to meet the working men daily in different factories.

CHELMSFORD.—The services in this town, conducted by an agent of the Evangelization Society, have been greatly blessed of God. A blessed spirit of unity and love prevails among the workers. Pray for us. M.

THE REVIVAL IN BROOKLYN.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY, assisted by many of the Brooklyn and other ministers, continue to hold services morning (in Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle) and evening (in the Skating-rink). The reports state the results of the meetings to be fruitful in conversions, as far as man can judge. We quote as follows from a New York contemporary of the 30th ult. :—

"As the first week is drawing to a close, many are asking how many converts have been made, and questioning whether or no the assembling of a multitude of people twice a day is to be the only result that will follow from this month of revival efforts. Mr. Moody said yesterday morning, after the prayer-meeting had been closed, 'No one can tell the number of converts. They are only known up on high. I have nothing whatever to discourage me. On the contrary, everything is progressing in the most satisfactory manner, and nothing whatever has occurred to dishearten me in the least.' 'Yes,' added Dr. Talmage, who stood near, 'Mr. Moody's work is successful from every point of view; and the tide is deepening.' Many other clergymen sustain this assertion of Dr. Talmage's."

Mr. Moody preached successively on Repentance, Confession, and Forgiveness, with his accustomed point and effect. Mr. Sankey's solos appear to exercise the same subduing influence that so manifestly attended them in this country. Afternoon services have also been commenced in Brooklyn Tabernacle, the first one being devoted by Mr. Moody to a defence of the inquiry-meeting. At the evening meetings the Rink is filled to repletion, and "overflow meetings" are held in a Methodist Episcopal church opposite.

We make the following extracts from the New York papers :— The second Sunday of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Brooklyn was no less remarkable than the first. There were three great meetings instead of two, services being held for women only at 4 p.m., and for men only at 9 p.m. This arrangement was adopted with the view of reaching a larger number of people than could be brought under the influence of the evangelists in any other way, as frequent attendants at the meetings occupy so many seats as to limit the space for new comers. The Rink was thronged at every meeting, and in the afternoon thousands of women could not get in. The impressions produced on these great audiences by Mr. Moody's preaching and Mr. Sankey's singing were marked. The auxiliary meetings outside the Rink were largely attended. The favour with which these revival efforts are regarded by clergymen in New York and Brooklyn, and the cordial support given by churches of various religious denominations, are conspicuous aids to the progress of the work.

Mr. G. C. Needham will assist Mr. Moody throughout the winter. He had taken passage on the steamship Spain for England, where he had made arrangements to do revival work, but Mr. Moody visited him just before the Spain sailed on Saturday, and prevailed upon him to remain here.

Mr. Moody's power as an organizer of men and women in Christian work is now becoming manifest. At the inquiry-meetings he has already induced a large number of persons other than clergymen to unite with him in conversing with those who attend, and has planned another and larger work in the same direction. On three afternoons of this week he will hold meetings at the Tabernacle for the express purpose of organizing a band of workers in the inquiry-meetings and among the citizens of Brooklyn. He will instruct them concerning passages in the Scriptures which will be most serviceable in their work, and exhort them to have strength and courage. He says he resolved years ago that never a day should pass without speaking to some one on the subject of religion. And he was sure that every one who attended these meetings would make the same resolution. It would not be long before every person in Brooklyn had been urged to become converted.

It is every day becoming more evident that no mere idle curiosity, but deeper and finer motives, are influencing the ever-increasing crowds that attend the special services at the Rink and the Tabernacle. Of excitement there is none, and none is desired. Noisy ejaculations which disturb the solemnity of a meeting, and distract attention from the exercises, are evidently not according to the taste of Mr. Moody. Last night, while the congregation was listening with most intense earnestness to his address on the need of repentance, some one shouted in a voice which rang through the building, "Glory to God." He was effectively rebuked, and others like-minded were taught a lesson, by Mr. Moody quietly remarking, "My friend will help me greatly if he will refrain from saying Amen until I tell him to say it." In the minds of many persons, revival meetings are inseparably associated with excitement; but this will, so far as we can judge, never be a characteristic of the meetings conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, for both prefer the solemn quiet which makes its own impression, and subdues the hardest and most impenitent to tears whether they will or no.

Both the meetings yesterday were preceded by half-an-hour of song. The influence of this upon congregations has been very great, the words and music seeming to prepare the people for more hearty participation in the prayers and exhortations to follow. The Christian Church is beginning to realize the power of song.

Last evening the Rink, the Reformed Church, and the Simpson M. E. Church were all crowded at one and the same time. In the former, the preaching service was progressing, and in the churches were held the young men's meeting and a special gathering for prayer on behalf of the unconverted who might be listening to the address of Mr. Moody. The number at the inquiry-meeting was larger than ever before, and the great interest awakened gave promise of wonderful and blessed results in succeeding gatherings.

As an instance of the universal interest awakened in the United States by the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, it is worthy of notice that the New York Herald has, through its representatives, canvassed the opinions of the leading ministers and clergy in such prominent cities as New York, Brooklyn, Washington, Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Richmond, &c., and has devoted many columns on two successive days to the ventilation of their views. There are, of course, varied opinions expressed, but it is a hopeful fact that the great majority of these leaders of religious thought and action heartily sympathize with the efforts of the evangelists, and promise their active support and co-operation.

REV. DR. BROCK.—We regret to have to announce the death of this honoured servant of God. He died on Saturday morning, after a very short illness, at St. Leonard's, whither he had retired for the winter. The Rev. G. W. McCree, the minister of Borough-road Chapel, in announcing the decease of Dr. Brock to his congregation yesterday, said:—"I was associated with him in Christian and ministerial labour for twenty-five years, and I will therefore preach a memorial sermon next Sunday evening, which will contain many of my recollections of him during that time."

AMERICAN RAILROADS.—A New York paper says:—"Yesterday the railway men had a prayer-meeting in the basement of the Grand Central Depot, and over 200 conductors and brakemen attended. It was an orderly and well-dressed assemblage, and there was a clear understanding among them that the occasion was one of purely religious reform. Mr. Lang Sheaf, the railroad secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, opened the proceedings with prayer, and made an address of some length, in the course of which he said that he had long been labouring in the cause of bringing to Christ the railroad men of the country, and he was satisfied his work was successful. The signs on his path so far were very encouraging. He had many incidents to relate of the conversions of wayward conductors. Their lives were the most precarious of any. Day and night they were constantly in danger, and the Lord was their only Help and Guide. The speaker dwelt eloquently on the perils of the conductors' and engineers' calling, and said they needed the protection of Christ Jesus above all. He trusted the railroad men would form associations and help forward this religious awakening."

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.—Mrs. Wm. Carter has issued her report of this Mission for the first half of the year. "All our various agencies," she says, "are in operation. We have been enabled to carry on the Soup Kitchen all through the inclement weather, and the most destitute have been helped through its means. The Free Teas also have been most encouraging, and, we believe, cases of real conversion have been the result. Many poor and needy married women have been helped through the Maternity Charity. The Mothers' Meeting, Children's Services, Girls' Sewing Class, and Evening Schools, are being carried on with most encouraging results. Two Bible-carriages are continually perambulating the streets. Crowds of working people collect round them, and we believe that the 'Word sown by the wayside' has fallen upon good ground in many cases, and that eternity alone will reveal the results. I desire to thank the kind friends who have sent me letters for the various London hospitals; I have found them of great value to the destitute and suffering. Also the several firms who allow us to collect their broken food. Many persons have been kept alive through the winter by the food which has been given them. The parcels of clothing, also, that friends have kindly sent have proved of great use to very many poor families. Our funds are quite exhausted. We have no balance in hand, but God has been graciously pleased to send us sufficient up to the present time. Will you kindly, dear friend, help us now with your prayers and means?"

MR. VARLEY AND THE "CHRISTIAN WORLD."

SIR,—It was not my intention to trouble you with any observations upon the great spiritual awakening that has lately taken place, but the letter of an esteemed friend, Mr. W. C. Davis, in the columns of a contemporary—the Christian World—last week, reflecting on certain things said and done in St. Andrew's Church, Woolwich, compels me to seek a place in your widely circulated paper in reply. Mr. Davis says Mr. Varley stated in my church, "that for two years and a half he had not been conscious of sin." Now, sir, I was by the side of Mr. Varley at every meeting, and address, and Bible-reading he delivered in Woolwich. I was keenly interested in all he said; and I feel quite sure Mr. Davis is entirely mistaken. No such words in my hearing fell from his lips. Further, I have a strong recollection that much of what he so nobly said was distinctly in the opposite direction. He again and again repeated that "the longer he lived the more deeply conscious he was of his sinfulness and imperfection." Mr. Varley is far too thoroughly engrossed with his Master's work to find time to reply to these attacks, but he authorizes me to say that he "never uttered the words Mr. Davis quotes," and "that he should as soon think of denying the work of the Atonement." After such a distinct disclaimer, I sincerely trust no such words will again be laid to his account.

I have much pleasure in testifying, from personal observation and experience, to the vast amount of good he has, under God, accomplished in Woolwich, and the large number of persons who profess to have been led to Christ under his preaching here.

Let me say, in conclusion, that there is no evidence of the "subsidence of the work" and interest here, but, on the contrary, to its weekly increase, and late statistics of my own and other Presbyterian denominations throughout the country testify to the stability and progress of the work in other parts of the empire.

It is due to Mr. Davis to add that he lent his hearty assistance to Mr. Varley and others in their evangelistic work here.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully, R. BALGARNIE, Minister
Nov., 1875. of St. Andrew's Church, Woolwich.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.—An interesting meeting, over which Robert Scott, Esq., presided, was held on Monday, Nov. 8, in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for the purpose of receiving the reports of the open-air preaching conducted by the members of the Christian Community. Mr. J. Atkinson stated that twenty-two stations had been occupied, 477 services held, 1133 addresses delivered to an aggregate of 53,300 hearers. This last number might be increased threefold if those who listened to the singing were included. Mr. Sankey's book was used, and was found to be most popular. It was also stated that the revival movement had been most influential for good, even amongst the very lowest classes.

SCHOOL FOR MISSIONARIES' DAUGHTERS, WALTHAMSTOW.—No class of individuals suffer greater privations than missionaries. But of all their privations, separation from their children—separation generally for years—is the most bitter and trying. To alleviate, as far as practicable, the anxieties of those who are thus devoting their lives to the good of others, about thirty-seven years ago the present institution was opened with five little girls, under the auspices of that excellent lady the late Mrs. Foulger, mother of the present honorary secretary, Mrs. Pyc-Smith. Since then it has been not only an institution where the daughters of missionaries have been boarded and thoroughly educated at about half the actual cost, but their parents have had the satisfaction of knowing that it was a home for their children, where they were treated, as nearly as possible, with the same tenderness and consideration they would have received under their own care. Now, with sixty pupils assembled from every part of the heathen world, the building is so full that there is not space for a single additional bed. As there still in England several little girls from various parts of the mission field anxiously waiting for admission, and the present premises do not admit of enlargement, the Ladies' Committee, by whom the institution has been so long and so successfully managed, have come to the decision that the only way to meet the urgent claims upon them is to erect a new building sufficiently large to accommodate from 100 to 120 pupils, on a larger space of ground, with detached infirmary and other conveniences so much needed in the present premises. A most eligible site can be obtained at a moderate cost. The sum required will probably be not less than £12,000 to £14,000. One friend offers £500 towards the required amount, provided nine others will each contribute the like sum. Communications should be addressed to the Honorary Secretary, Mrs. Pyc-Smith, St. Katherine's, Sevenoaks, Kent; and cheques made payable at Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co.'s London, crossed "To the account of the Walthamstow New Mission School Building Fund."

NOTE-BOOK.

IX.—OUT OF THE DEPTHS.

Down the main street, then turn to the left, walk through the narrow passage for about forty paces, turn again to the left, and then enter a small court. There are not many houses in it: the one we seek is at the further end. There is no hall-door, and the crazy stairs are exposed to view from outside. Up we go, disturbing in our passage several groups of children, who, in the dim light which enters through the narrow casements of each landing, are playing noisy games. They stop to gaze in wonder as the "gentlemen" ascend. It is a high house for so narrow a court, and was once inhabited by people of better quality; now it is but a tumble-down affair. The balustrades are nearly all gone. One here and there suffices to afford the railing an insecure support. The rats have appropriated not a little of the staircase; huge holes leading to their burrows suggest to the unaccustomed traveller the necessity for carefulness; but due caution being exercised, we get to the garret "top back," as we were told when below. There is no need to knock, for the door of the back room on the upper floor is partly open.

"Step in, sar," cries a voice, as our foot-tread is heard by the inmate of the room. Inside a woman is sitting near the small window, trying by the fading light (for it is nearly four in the afternoon) to complete her task. No furniture of any kind can be seen—not even a chair nor an apology for a bed. The weary worker speaks, but without raising her head or leaving off her work for a moment. She sits on an old broken box made of deal, without a lid, and turned bottom upwards to serve as a seat. The room is very dirty, dark, and close-smelling. We attempted to open the window, but it was fixed, and would not open. The occupant of the tenement goes on with her work—"Stitch, stitch, stitch," at it, and always at it. She is not even curious enough, or has not time to spare, to ask our business, although she must wonder why we have come. She is a negress, and is dressed in the poorest rags. Her face is that of a sufferer, and her voice, when she speaks, has unutterable weariness in its tone.

Is she alone? We thought she was at first, but the landlady came up, and is now standing behind, and she points to the corner under the slanting roof, and says in a hushed voice, "That's where they are."

Some sacks are indeed there, in the centre of which a bigger mass protrudes; but all only appears to be a heap of other sacks fresh from the hand of the woman who sits before us, still at work and always at it—stitch, stitch, stitch! But our inquiry attracts her; she has raised her head; she is interested, and looks keenly at us. A quick glance it is, and we can see the moisture which has gathered in either eye.

"Eh, sar," she says, "me'bbe you'll help the childer! My heart's most bruck! de good Lord forgive me!"

Big tears coursed down each swarthy cheek.

Greatly moved, we turned to the corner, and pulled aside a sack, revealing three woolly black heads. Yes, sure enough, there three little black children lay. In a few minutes they were awake, and, to our surprise, instead of springing out, with the usual vivacity of children, from the heap of sacks, they remained quite still, looking quiet and abashed.

"She ha'nt no clothes for 'em this while back," explained the landlady in a low voice, "so they keeps together under the sacks to get warm, till the mother takes her work off to the factory. When she comes back they've a new lot of sacks; but 'taint much they'd have to eat if it warn't for the neighbours who pities 'em, and gives 'em a bit o' broken vittles now and then. But the neighbours 'bout here are only poor themselves, God help 'em!"

"Do you mean that these children have really no clothing at all, and always lie in these sacks?"

"Never a rag among the lot of 'em," responded the landlady.

Gently and kindly we conversed with the mother of the poor children, who had resumed her sewing, and drew out from her, in broken snatches, fragments of her history, which is as follows:—Her husband was a coloured man, but both of them had been freed. He was a sailor, tall and powerfully built. When near one of the West India Islands a companion had fallen overboard, and was in danger of being devoured by a shark. The woman's husband, always remarkable for his courage and bravery, jumped without hesitation over the ship's side, rescued the drowning man, but lost his own life. The widow heard the sad tidings on the ship's return. Her heart would have been broken if she had not had the consolation of the Christian's faith and hope. Enshrined beneath the dark and swarthy skin which proclaimed her race was the bright jewel of a soul that had been cleansed in the Redeemer's blood. Sickness came, poverty, then sickness again, followed by the birth of her posthumous child, a little boy, now five years old, the youngest of the three children who lay between the sacks.

She might have gone to service; but who would engage a coloured woman? And then, what of her children! She lived at the time near Rotherhithe, then moved to Stepney, next to Shadwell, and then to St. George's-in-the-East. The eldest child, a girl, was twelve years, and the youngest, the boy aforesaid, about five years old. Her great struggle was to keep them from the streets. "Anyway and anyhow," she said to us with streaming eyes, "away from sin and wickedness!" True they had no clothes, and were almost starved, for she only received one penny a sack for her work.

"But they'd know'd summat 'bout de Lord Jesus; and I wants 'em sore to lub Him."

"I have a Home for such; I will take them. Will you give them up to my care?" was the substance of a prolonged parley.

Her eyes glistened, "She would like to let 'em go, but—" a voice from the corner cried, "Mudder, let's go! Plenty food, nice warm tings. Let's go, mudder!"

That was conclusive, and they came; or rather we took them, wrapped up by the kindly hands of the landlady and their own mother in some of the sacks with which they had been invested. Off the next morning we carried them in a cab, and in the studio of our photographer laid them and their sacks down in a heap, much as they had been the day before in their mother's dingy room; and thus, in a few brief seconds, preserved for future years a picture of the state in which we found them.* Then, away again to the Girls' Home in the cab, which waited at the door. How glad they were for the delightful luxury of a warm bath and clean clothing! Some warm soup too worked wonders; after which, with their braided hair fastened demurely by a little scarlet band, given by the matron to each, there stood before the writer two twinkling-eyed congenitors of the world renowned "Miss Feely's" Topsy!

Work for the mother, of a better character, less arduous and more remunerative, was soon obtained, and thus the wife and children of one who had lost his life in saving a fellow-creature's were themselves rescued from a worse fate than that which had befallen their devoted husband and father. "Save thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive: and let thy widows trust in me.

FOUR HUNDRED LITTLE ONES

now within the sheltering walls of our various homes illustrate the tenderness of the Divine care and the faithfulness of our Father's promise. The friends who, under God, supply the needs of these children are many, some of them being themselves but little ones, who endeavour in this way to show practical sympathy with our precious work for the Master. Even the gifts of the very poor, cast into the Lord's treasury, evidence the interest which is felt throughout the country on behalf of our rescued waifs and strays.

UPWARDS OF £40 PER DAY

is needed every day throughout the year to maintain in full efficiency all the branches of our work. We have no regular subscriptions to depend upon, nor do we employ paid collectors; but the story of our need, published from time to time in the hearing of Christian people, has been found effective, through God's good hand upon us, to bring in daily a sufficient provision for all wants. Our present need, however, is very great; greater, indeed, than it has been for a considerable time, and all the more so because of the near approach of inclement weather, during which work among the poor and homeless grows more earnest and necessary. We are also endeavouring to fill up as quickly as possible the vacancies in the cottages which are so soon to be opened in the village home for girls.

TWO HUNDRED OTHER CARES OF BOYS AND GIRLS

now awaiting admission will be received as soon as sufficient funds are in hands. We are asking our heavenly Father to send us kind-hearted, motherly, Christian women, each of whom shall be fitted to be at the head of a family of little ones, and to take the general supervision of the cottage in which they dwell. Are there not numbers of earnest and competent Christians, who are capable of filling such spheres of usefulness for Christ, and who for the consideration of a comfortable home, food, and raiment, will be willing to undertake without further remuneration the responsibilities of such a position? We shall be glad to know that some Christian hearts are stirred by this communication to give their whole energies for such blessed life-service.

BY-AND-BY.

(JOHN XIII. 7.)

Is thy head drooping low with heavy sorrow?
Does thy life seem a dreary blank of wee?
Is thy heart full of fears about to-morrow?
Does thy bitter cup seem to overflow?
Dost thou question the justice of God's dealing?
Dost thou murmur beneath the blow, and sigh?
Know'st thou not for each wound with Him there's healing?
Thou shalt know all his reasons by-and-by.

Did it seem to thy soul, so full of anguish,
That, of all in the wide and dreary earth,
Thine alone was the heart He made to languish,
Thine alone was the quickly-vanished mirth?
When, amidst all thy merriment and laughter,
Came the call, didst thou ask, rebellious, "Why?"
He has said, we can only know hereafter.
Thou shalt know all his reasons by-and-by.

Didst thou think others' pathway was all roses,
And that thine was the only thorny road?
Many a heart which in Jesus now reposes,
Only reached, through such trials, up to God.
"Whom the Lord loveth best" He fits by sorrow
For a place very near his throne on high.
Jesus knows; He'll sustain to-day, to-morrow:
Thou shalt know all his reasons by-and-by.

When death's angel has entered at the casement,
And has called all thy dearest ones away,
Didst thou meekly bow down in self-abasement,
Or in murmuring accents say him nay?
Didst thou think it a cruel dispensation,
When thy flowers were transplanted to the sky?
Didst thou think He would give no compensation?
Thou shalt know all about it by-and-by.

Then, with humbled and God-devoted spirit,
Oh! return, broken-hearted, to his breast!
Trust in Him; think no more of selfish merit;
Lean thy head where the weary all find rest.
Take his hand, nor attempt a willful guiding;
Stay thy heart on thy Saviour, ever nigh;
He knows best; in Him trusting and abiding,
Thou shalt know all about it by-and-by.

DONCASTER Y.M.C.A.—Will your readers unite with us in praising God for the great blessing which has attended the preaching of the Gospel by Mr. J. M. Scroggie? About 120 anxious ones have been dealt with during the last eight days, and many have professed to believe in Jesus to the saving of their souls. On Sunday week the Guildhall proved to be far too small at two meetings, and in the evening the County Court Room was filled with the overflow. These services will be continued about ten days, and on the 22nd we expect that Mrs. Michael Baxter will commence a series of meetings; Dr. Mackay, of Hull, is also expected. Will God's people, wherever this is read, unite with us, asking a mighty work of the Holy Spirit in this place?

A. C. WILSON, M.D.

OUR POLICEMEN.—There are nearly 11,000 policemen in London; and what a mighty power for good these men might be were they on the Lord's side. Their peculiar situation affords them unequalled opportunities of reclaiming those who have fallen from the path of virtue. Not long since I was, with several others, out very late at night, distributing little books and talking with policemen and others. We met in our round a sergeant and a private, both with their pockets full of tracts. They told me it was their only chance of working for their Master. It much cheered my heart to find these two men obeying the command, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Should any feel led to help in the distribution of religious literature among this class, I shall be very pleased to send them a parcel. Religious book-papers, and tracts will be thankfully received, also any pecuniary help for this needy work.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

We lately spoke of the good work that is being accomplished in many parts of our land through the agents of this Society. We recur to its operations in the hope of eliciting the sympathies and co-operation of Christian friends residing in those districts where the labours of the Society's agents are needed and would be welcomed. We feel sure there are many places where such earnest and effective Gospel preaching would be owned by God, and we invite any of our brethren and sisters who feel that such need exists in their respective localities to communicate with the honorary secretary, Captain W. E. Smith, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, London, W.C. They may be certain that their applications will be readily and suitably responded to. The secretary will also be glad to supply copies of the recently published "Occasional Paper" to any who may apply.

In our brief notice of this paper the other week we omitted to mention a remarkable letter contained in it, which was sent by the writer to one of the agents of the Society. It contains an account of the conversion, through the preaching of one of the working-men evangelists, of "a young lady of high intellectual powers, who, at a very early age, imbibed infidel views through reading the works of some of the German neologists." We have just learned that the reading of this letter has produced a deep impression on a man of sceptical views. Good service would be done by the distribution of the report containing this letter among those who are known to be tinged with infidelity.

From several reports of the Society's work that have reached us we extract the following, with respect to a series of services lately held at Winchester:—

"After the meetings in the Gymnasium, Mr. Edwards returned home for a week's rest; the time was employed in carrying out arrangements made for erecting a Gospel-tent in which to recommence the services on the following Sunday. Before leaving, Mr. Edwards had asked all persons interested to do something towards getting the tent up. He appealed to the working men to give a little time daily to levelling the ground, erecting or covering the tent, &c. Many of the men were most willing, and would have done so had they been able to get away from their employment in time; they were, however, determined the work should be done by their instrumentality, so they collected some money amongst themselves, with which they paid a stranger to do what they so gladly would have done personally had time sufficient been at their disposal.

"The opening services in the Tent were most interesting and successful. Long before the time for commencing, all seats were occupied, and standing-room filled. Hundreds stood outside around the tent during the whole service. On the Friday evening previous the choir had been into the 'Brooks' (the worst streets in the city) singing verses of Sankey's hymns, and having thus attracted a crowd, announced the forthcoming services. It was a good plan, and proved successful in gathering numbers into the tent.

"On the Tuesday following, two young men, much impressed by what Mr. Edwards had said respecting individual responsibility the night before, resolved to try and persuade people to come and hear the Gospel. They accordingly sacrificed their day's work, and employed the time in inviting all they could to come to the tent in the evening. They sang hymns at the corners of the streets and passages, and then, in earnest, fervent tones, begged the people thus collected to come and hear the evangelist's message, which had been such a blessing to themselves. To see working young men thus stirred up to realize their responsibility with respect to their neighbours, is a sufficient proof that the Holy Spirit is working in the hearts of the people, and that in a special manner He is applying the great Gospel truths so earnestly and faithfully delivered.

"Several of the most abandoned characters have been reclaimed. Not only have they come to the evening services, but, in some instances, have come up to the mid-day prayer-meeting. The change in their characters and homes is indeed wonderful, and many have come forward with thank-offerings for blessings received. One old woman, an inmate of one of the charities in the city, came to Mr. Edwards with ten shillings, which she said she had managed to save during the past few weeks, and wished to send to the Evangelization Society as an expression of gratitude. She intends to save regularly each week a little for the Society."

"ETERNITY!"—Like a flash of lightning did this word, short, yet powerfully solemn, present itself to me just on entering the new Liverpool-street Station; it was posted up in large blue letters on the side of a house, and could be easily seen by the occupants of the trains. I took it as a message from God, and spoke to one of my fellow-passengers on it. His reply was, "That one word is doing more good than many of the sermons of the present day; it makes a man think!" Oh! that on all the lines of railway in the United Kingdom there were these soul-saving danger-signals. Time is short; souls are perishing.

LABOURERS GOING HOME.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

THE various works of usefulness which have a pause during the summer months from the absence of many in the country, are one by one being set on foot again in Glasgow and Edinburgh. The noon meeting never ceases, neither does the mother's meeting. On entering the latter for the first time since our return to town, we heard, what so often was its key-note last season, thanksgiving for one whose place so lately filled was now empty—thanksgiving with tears. It was one of the steadfast matrons who are, indeed, as the shields of our land, who had gone to be with the Lord. Last time she was there it was to lay down her request for a son in delicate health. He still survives, but the mother, who prayed for him, and a brother also, have been out off, and Dr. Gould, the venerable husband and father, was strengthened on the past Sabbath to conduct the services in his own church.

The mother who conducted the meeting, and to whom these events were all new, said, "Is not Miss Darling ill? should we not pray for her?" Another whispered, "She was taken last night." The removal of this bright and beloved young labourer was announced in the noon meeting of the next hour. She died at nineteen, after two years' persevering labour for souls. She had known what work was even before then, and was ready, when the fresh blessing in these later years descended, to walk with assured step in the new paths of consecration, carrying others with her. She wisely followed up the cases which she came across at the Drill Hall breakfast, and assisted in the mission service at Dalketh almost every Sabbath day, getting back to town for her evening work. Her well-known voice was counted on in the choir, and last time she sung in the Drill Hall it was the hymn, "Who'll be next?" The Jubilee Singers had rested under her father's roof till they went to the Glasgow Convention last month, and, being tired with work, she went there before paying a visit. She then enjoyed the brightest manifestations of the love of Jesus, and those to whom she spoke of the love that was flowing into her soul, now remember how she seemed to be changing into the very image of Him she served.

The Edinburgh noon-meeting was well filled with children and young people on Saturday. On Monday all were startled with the news that Mr. Brownlow North was dangerously ill. Nor was it long till the details of his call from the vineyard below was announced. Scotland owes him much, and the mournful tidings could not have arrived at a time more fitted to take solemn effect than at the commencement of the week of meetings for young men. Mr. Wilson, of the Barclay church, in begging prayer for a rich blessing on them, said that many proofs were coming before the ministers who had to admit young men at the recent communion that their impressions dated from the former week of meetings for young men. Truly, God's work continues in Scotland! The concerts of the Jubilee Singers have refreshed the hearts of thousands during the past week; but it is one line of their singing which is ever repeating in our hearts as we mourn for the loss of the girl, the matron, and the veteran evangelist—"We wept while we sang Hallelujah."

GIRVAN, AYR.—Since the tent services were discontinued, meetings have been held every Tuesday evening in the South Church, and on Sabbath evening in the Young Men's Christian Association's Room, Doune-park. These meetings have been well attended by the poor in the neighbourhood of Doune-park and Coal Shore, where no church or place of worship exists. The after-meetings have been frequented by inquirers, the interest deepens, and the impressions made are numerous throughout the town. Six kitchen-meetings are held every Monday evening, addressed by young men, and by this means the Gospel is preached to many who, on account of their circumstances, cannot frequent places of worship.—Maybole Evangelist.

ABERGAVENTNY.—Our fellow-townsmen Mr. R. C. Morgan has been giving "Bible Lectures upon Foundation Truths," at the residence of Mrs. Fielder, of The Priory. Her fine hall (the refectory of ancient monks) was filled for three nights to hear God's Word most ably and spiritually handled. Truly the feast provided was such as monks of yore never enjoyed, and the impression left on the minds and hearts of all present was deep and abiding. Very solemn and searching were the truths brought out, and the injunction given at the close of the meetings found an echo in each soul. "That the blessed Word of the Almighty God should stand foremost in every house and family as the Book to be honoured, studied and lived." The gratitude of the Christians to their beloved fellow-townsmen was warmly expressed, and they look hopefully for his return at some future date to give them another lift heavenward.

FOR THE YOUNG.

THE HEAVENLY RAILWAY.

THE Rev. J. M. Dosh gives the following very touching incident, which he personally witnessed while travelling on one of the American railroads. The train, he says, was going west, and the time was evening. At a station a little girl came aboard, carrying a little bundle under her arm. She came into the car and deliberately took a seat. She then commenced an eager scrutiny of faces, but all were strange to her. She appeared weary, and, placing her bundle for a pillow, she prepared to try to secure a little sleep. Soon the conductor came along, collecting tickets and fares. Observing him, she asked if she might lie there. The gentlemanly conductor replied that she might, and then kindly asked for her ticket. She informed him that she had none, when the following conversation ensued. Said the conductor—

"Where are you going?"

She answered, "I am going to heaven."

He asked again, "Who pays your fare?"

She then said, "Mister, does this railroad lead to heaven, and does Jesus travel on it?"

He answered, "I think not. Why did you think so?"

"Why, sir, before my ma died she used to sing to me of the heavenly railroad, and you looked so nice and kind, I thought this was the road. My ma used to sing of Jesus on the heavenly railroad, and that He paid the fare for everybody, and that the train stopped at every station to take people on board; but my ma don't sing to me any more. Nobody sings to me now, and I thought I'd take the cars, and go to ma. Mister, do you sing to your little girl about the railroad that goes to heaven? You have a little girl, haven't you?"

He replied, weeping, "No, my little dear, I have no little girl now. I had one once, but she died some time ago, and went to heaven."

Again she asked, "Did she go over this railroad, and are you going to see her now?"

By this time all in the carriage were upon their feet, and most of them were weeping. An attempt to describe what I witnessed is almost futile. Some said, "God bless the little girl!" Hearing some person use the word "angel," the little girl earnestly replied, "Yes, my ma used to say I would be an angel some time."

Addressing herself once more to the conductor, she asked him, "Do you love Jesus? I do; and if you love Him, He will let you ride to heaven on his railroad. I am going there, and I wish you would go with me. I know Jesus will let me into heaven when I get there, and He will let you in too, and everybody that will ride on his railroad—yes, all these people. Wouldn't you like to see heaven, and Jesus, and your little girl!"

These words, so innocently and pathetically uttered, brought a great gush of tears from all eyes, but most profusely from the eyes of the conductor. Some who were travelling on the heavenly railroad shouted aloud for joy.

She now asked the conductor, "Mister, may I lie here until we get to heaven?"

He answered, "Yes, dear, yes."

She then asked, "Will you wake me up then, so that I may see my ma, your little girl, and Jesus? for I do so much want to see them all."

The answer came in broken accents, but in words very tenderly spoken, "Yes, dear angel, yes. God bless you!" "Amen!" was sobbed by more than a score of voices.

Turning her eyes again upon the conductor, she interrogated him again—

"What shall I tell your little girl when I see her? Shall I say to her that I saw her pa on Jesus' railroad? Shall I?"

This brought a fresh flood of tears from all present, and the conductor knelt by her side, and, embracing her, wept the reply he could not utter. At this juncture the brakeman called out "H—s." The conductor arose and requested him to attend to his (the conductor's) duty at the station, for he was engaged. That was a precious place. I thank God that I was a witness to this scene, but I was sorry that at this point I was obliged to leave the train.

We learn from this incident that out of the mouth of even babes God hath ordained strength, and that we ought to be willing to represent the cause of our blessed Jesus even in a railroad coach.

STAFFORD.—Mr. Culliss's work here is drawing large numbers every night. It is evidently increasing in public estimation and general usefulness.

DEATH OF MR. BROWNLOW NORTH.

In the eighth number of this periodical, published Sept. 17th, 1859, we gave an account of the conversion of Mr. Brownlow North, and since then have frequently reported his labours in the Gospel. We have now the sorrow of announcing his death. One by one, the servants of Jesus Christ are being gathered home: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."

From the Glasgow Daily Mail of the 10th inst. we reprint the following particulars of this unexpected bereavement:—"Mr. North died at Tillichewan Castle yesterday, after an illness extending over little more than a week. He came to this district on Oct. 22, to take part in a course of evangelistic services arranged for by the Vale of Leven Young Men's Christian Association. His first address was delivered on the evening of the 24th ult., in the Public Hall, Alexandria. The remembrance of his former visit there some sixteen years ago, when his ministry was much blessed, and his fame as an evangelist during the intervening period, drew together a large audience, the place of meeting being packed, and hundreds having to leave without gaining admission. During the same week he addressed meetings on Wednesday and Friday evenings in the Alexandria Free Church, and seemed then in his own usual health, and looked forward eagerly to the meetings he was announced to address on the following Sabbath and Wednesday evenings. On the Saturday he felt somewhat unwell, and on the following day was unable to fulfil his engagement. Since then the progress of the disease—an affection of the heart—occasioned alternate hopes and fears in the bosoms of his friends; and now the latter have been realized by his death.

"Bitter tears will, unbidden, fall from many eyes on hearing of his unexpected removal; and not a few to whom he has been a sweet saviour of Christ, will thank God for his earnest and fruitful ministry. Though not robust of late years, he may be said to have died in harness, having arranged for hard work in Glasgow and Paisley successively, during the winter and spring months; but the Master's voice has said, 'Come up hither,' and he has entered into the joy of his Lord. During his stay here he was the guest of Mr. Campbell, of Tillichewan, whose kind attentions, and those of his family, have been unremitting. During the past week Mrs. North and other relatives have watched and tended the sick; and their ministry of love must have greatly soothed the last days of the honoured dead."

Mr. James Balfour, of Edinburgh, sends to us the following account of Mr. North's peaceful dying moments:—

"On Monday it was my solemn privilege to stand beside the dying bed of Mr. Brownlow North, and I feel sure that many will like to know what the testimony then was of one who had so often proclaimed the Gospel very boldly, and in tones of thunder. It was touching to see him lying there like a weaned child, able to speak only in whispers, and even that slowly and with an effort.

"He took my hand, named me, and said, 'Jesus came to me and said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee,' and up to this time he never has.' He then added an expression of deep self-abasement, when I said, 'I have often thought that the verse on which I should like to die is, 'The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.' 'That,' he replied, 'is the verse on which I am now dying. One wants no more.' I said, 'This dying is what you and I have often spoken of.' 'Often,' he answered. 'Have you peace?' 'Perfect peace,' he said, with such meaning. I proposed to pray, to which he gladly assented. After a short prayer he wiped his moistened eyes, and I had to leave him.

"That was the last expression of his faith and hope; but a day before that he had said, 'I used to have a great shrinking from death, but that is all gone.'

"As I looked at him, he seemed like a great ship of war slowly entering the harbour, the sails all unfurled, the guns unshotted, the excitement and the perils of the voyage over, and the desired haven reached. The next day the gates were swung open, and he spent that first five minutes in Heaven of which he often used to speak; and then he was wont to imagine that Christ would come to him when he saw his amazement, and say, 'Said I not unto thee, if thou wouldest believe thou shouldst see.'"

INDIA.—Rev. A. Norton, of Ellichpoor, writes:—"The Lord is prospering and blessing his work in this wild district of Central India. To Him we are looking for a mighty baptism on the natives."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.

The Skating Rink (an iron structure which will accommodate 2000 persons, and situated in close proximity to the Alexandra-park and the Aquarium, both of which are open on Sundays, and attract large numbers of visitors), having been offered free of expense, has been opened for Sunday afternoon evangelistic services. The first service in that building was held on Sunday afternoon, the 10th ult., and was attended by nearly seven hundred persons, many of whom were induced to attend by the invitation of Christian workers, male and female, who stationed themselves in the various thoroughfares leading to the park. Dr. Ziemann, after reading a portion of John iii., pleaded very powerfully with those who had not come to Christ to accept of the salvation offered to them. The Rev. F. Standfast followed, and in a few earnest words, illustrated by anecdote and simile, urged present decision. It was evident that much interest was felt by the audience, who, with few exceptions, remained till the close of the meeting. The services have been continued each Sunday, and have been well attended.

The Hulme Town Hall has been engaged for Sunday evening Gospel addresses by Dr. Ziemann. The services have been attended by large audiences. On account of electioneering preparations, the service could not be held last night (Oct. 31). Successful evangelistic work was accomplished in other portions of the city and in Salford.

Revival mission services have been held during the month in several of the principal Wesleyan chapels in the city and neighbourhood. There has been a general interchange of pulpits, and much good has resulted. There have been many conversions, and a fresh stimulus has been given to the zeal of church members. A numerously attended meeting for Christian workers was held in connexion with the services, on Friday evening, Oct. 16, the Rev. J. Bedford presiding. Stirring addresses were given by ministers from various parts of the district, and fervent prayers were offered up that God would bless the work about to be undertaken.

The services at the Tent in Pendleton have at length been discontinued. The final services were held on Sunday, Oct. 10. During the three weeks' services, upwards of three hundred have declared themselves to be on the Lord's side—the transformation in not a few homes being something marvellous to those living in the same neighbourhood. The services are being continued in John-street Hall and other large rooms.

The Circus meetings, also, are discontinued in consequence of the partial completion of the alterations in the late Museum of Natural History, wherein the services were originally held and are now resumed. This building, when the alterations are finished, will be occupied by the Y.M.C. Association, whose central offices in Piccadilly will be abandoned for this more convenient situation. The meetings in the Circus were well sustained to the last, and were made the means of much spiritual blessing in the neighbourhood; but not only there has their influence been felt, but even to the most distant parts of the city and suburbs. The central position of the building, in the midst of theatres, music-halls, and casinos, was favourable to the success of its services, as young men from all parts of the city, strangers and visitors, mostly find their way to Peter-street; and while many were attracted by the novelty of the services, which were surrounded by the gaudy, though much-faded decorations and tinsel of the Circus, others were won by the kind words and impressed by the earnestness of the young men who had charge of the meetings. Seldom a night passed without some burden of sin and sorrow rolling away and some soul being made glad in the Lord. And, therefore, headed by Dr. Ziemann, went forth a band of workers, and, in Ardwick and Pendleton, told others of the deliverance which the Lord had wrought for them, and of the loving Saviour who was waiting to be gracious to the penitent, seeking sinner; and the result has been that scores—we might almost say hundreds—of hands have been stretched forth to lay hold of the sinner's only hope.—Manchester Christian News.

The work at Pendleton still grows; the workers multiply. Some of the largest halls have been taken, and men's meetings held. Instruction classes for those who cannot read and write have been formed. The Bible-classes are attended by 150 to 200. Cottage prayer-meetings are being established in the most destitute parts.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing, in these days of fashionable and easy-going religion, is that 300 or 400, mostly working men, are found every Sunday morning at the early prayer-meeting. These are gracious seasons truly.

The centre of religious life and power is the mid-day prayer-meeting. Many thought that through the press of business, the hour chosen, the respectable portion of the inhabitants living at a distance, this meeting must inevitably perish. Happily such is not the case; there is so much of God's Word and Spirit there that it cannot die. The numbers attending are more numerous than six months since; on Mondays, when reports are given, the room is often crowded. Not a few prize these meetings above all others; the oneness of the Church of Christ is powerfully realized. In the intimate presence of the Great Head of the Church, all sectarian prejudices flee. The Lord hides his own in the secret of his presence from the pride of man; He keeps them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. Many business men make an effort to attend.

One day an earnest and devoted Christian stood up, and, with tears in his eyes, said—"Last week I preferred two petitions, which you kindly urged on my behalf. The one was for the restoration of my little boy who was dangerously ill; the other that my mouth might be opened, in order that I might speak to my servants and workpeople about Jesus and his mighty love. One petition God has answered, not as I desired: He has taken my child, for which I can now praise Him. The little one whispered 'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' and the Good Shepherd folded him. The other petition he has answered. My mouth has been opened. Last Sunday morning I called together my servants. I told them that I could not have given up my son for all the world's goods, yes, not for my nearest relatives or my dearest earthly friend; but that God gave his own dear son to die for sinners. I thank Him that He has enabled me to speak for Him." These and similar words were uttered with deep emotion. It was a time never to be forgotten, a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

It is to be regretted that comparatively few clergymen and ministers attend. It is easy to excuse their absence. Manchester church-work is like its secular, crowded with detail, burdened with its many calls and claims; yet it is certain that if all could but once taste of the rivers of this pleasure which flow so deeply here, they would long to come again and again. The few who come feel an hour thus spent more fully equips them for duty than many hours elsewhere. Here God's Word comes with such force and freshness, that He appears to be talking face to face with his worshippers. The winter season now having commenced, it is hoped more ministers will be able to attend.

The number of successful efforts now being put forth, show the necessity of this united evangelistic work for every large town. After all that every church has done, is doing, or can do, there is still a deep and dark margin of crime, poverty, and sin which can be best overtaken by all Christian churches sinking their denominationalism and acting in concert. If this were not the Lord's will, would He so abundantly bless? On the other hand, this work strengthens existing churches, not only by drawing the cords of fellowship closer together, but by actual accessions, as was strikingly proved in the Tent work in the Ancoats district. The same good Providence which opens doors of usefulness, and finds the labourers, also prompts to benevolence. Without much, if any, seeking, or prompting, or direct solicitation, means are provided. At the close of one of the mid-day prayer-meetings, a lady spontaneously offered 200*l.* to provide a wooden tent to supplant the canvas and temporary structure. This is but an example of how the Lord himself takes care of his children and his work. F. S.

EAST FOLKESTONE.—The current report of the "Christian Mission and Schools" here says:—"Amongst other things, the cause of temperance in this district weighs heavily on the minds of those actively engaged in this missionary labour of love. To counteract the allurements of the public-house, elevate the character, and improve the comforts of the population, it is desired to provide a place of resort which, being attractive, neat, and comfortable, and devoted to the cause of temperance, shall be a great instrument for moulding and elevating the character of its frequenters. An opportunity seemed to be opened a short time since for the commencement of such an undertaking, but it was willed otherwise. The efforts of the friends of this missionary cause will however not be abated, and they prayerfully hope that the work will be accomplished and fostered by Him who has given them such abundant proof of his watchful care and blessing. Sterling testimony from independent sources has been yielded of the palpable benefits which have already accrued to the district from the Mission. An influence has been felt and manifested in the improvement of its outward life."

THE MOSAIC TABERNACLE.

CONCLUDING LECTURE BY DR. CRANAGE.

AFTER a recapitulation of the general structure and meaning of the Tabernacle, Dr. Cranage proceeded, in his third lecture, to consider the special subject of the evening—"The Dresses of the High Priest." In order to bring these tangibly before the minds of the audience, two lay figures had been placed in the space supposed to represent the Holy Place: one was arranged in the ordinary dress of the High Priest, of divers garments and colours; the other, robed in spotless white, was clothed after the manner of the High Priest on the Day of Atonement, when he entered into the Holy of Holies. The lecturer had so much to say on the teaching of the former, that the awfully passing moments left no time for reference to the latter.

The description of the dresses as ordered by God was read from Exodus xxviii., and analogous passages from Ps. cxxxii. 9, Rom. iii. 22, Isa. lxi. 10, and Rev. iii. 27, were quoted to show that they typified the "righteousness" and "salvation" of believers. Having strongly deprecated, in passing, the theology which would stop short at conversion, and not proceed to inculcate righteousness, Dr. Cranage took up, in detail, the various portions of the High Priest's Dress.

The pure white linen Mitre, enclosing the place of the intellect, taught us that the brain, the seat of mental power, must be kept pure for the Lord. The place to fight sin is in the thought. The lacing of the Mitre with blue was an admonition to have our thoughts occupied with heavenly things; while the Golden Crown, whereon was inscribed "Holiness to the Lord," told us not to be "ashamed of Jesus," but to proclaim our allegiance to Him in all circumstances. We are not ashamed of our earthly nationality; why should we be ashamed of belonging to the heavenly kingdom? This afforded the lecturer an opportunity of advising his hearers to adorn their houses, in every available place, with texts from God's Word.

Having touched lightly on the Shoulder-pieces—the place of strength—where were written the names of the tribes in their order of birth, Dr. Cranage devoted the most of what remained of his time to an exposition of the Breastplate of the High Priest, whereon were engraven the names of the tribes, not in their natural order, but according to God's selection. We cannot attempt even a résumé of the lecturer's remarks on this point. He saw in the order of these names on the Breastplate a graduated scale of Christian character and attainment, from Judah, who occupied the highest place—that of "praise"—down to the penultimate tribe Asher, whom he placed last in the order of merit, as one who could only say he was "happy" in having gained a place in the family of God. The individual happiness of the believer he counted among the lowest of the Christian's privileges; we fear there are many Ashers in the camp.

In closing, Dr. Cranage expressed a hope that the lectures would be instrumental in inciting to a more deep, prayerful, and methodical study of God's Word. We warmly reciprocate the wish. It is not to be wondered at that some of the objections arrived at by Dr. Cranage are objected to by other students of typical Scripture. In particular, one of our correspondents strongly controverts the idea that the Cherubim are symbols of the First and Third Persons in the Trinity, on the ground that this would be making a similitude of God (see Deut. iv. 15-18; Isa. xl. 18). Our own belief is that the Cherubim represent the redeemed in their glorified condition. Nevertheless, although not endorsing every view expressed by Dr. Cranage, we believe the lectures, as a whole, are highly calculated to invest with a deeper interest, and to throw a fresh light on, a much neglected part of Holy Writ, and to prove the truth of the apostolic dictum, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. ii. 16).

BOYS, LISTEN!—A milk-boy on his rounds was heard by a lady (herself converted through one of Mr. Moody's addresses) singing one of Mr. Sankey's hymns. The lady said to the boy, "Those are very solemn words you have been singing; do you think of them as you sing, and do you understand them?" Then such a great change came over the boy's face, and he said, "That I do ma'am, and I sing them as I go my rounds, hoping that just a word or two may fall into some one's ears." Surely the missionary spirit in this lad will be blessed. This is, indeed, "sowing seed in the morning and in the evening not withholding the hand." Shall not it prosper? shall not even this little child of God win jewels for his Redeemer's crown? W. T. G.

WORK AMONG THE JEWS.

MR. J. P. COHEN says in a circular recently issued to the friends of his Mission:—

"Since I last wrote, which is now more than six months ago, the Lord has enabled me to go on quietly with my work among my brethren, looking to Him for help and blessing; and praise be unto his name, I have not looked in vain! He has mercifully supplied all my wants, and has graciously blessed the work which He gave me to do.

"During this month (October), the Jews have celebrated the Yom Kippur, or the great Day of Expiation, and before and after that most solemn day I had most interesting and I may say profitable conversations with not a few of my brethren according to the flesh, to whom I told 'the old, old story of Jesus and his love' to sinners. The Jews of this country are like their brethren all over the world, equally strict in observance of this particular day more than of any other in the year; they too perform the superstitious ceremony of sacrificing a cock for the expiation of their sins on the preceding Day of Atonement; also of scourging themselves with lashes, doing penance, making confessions, asking pardon, giving alms, offering up prayers, blowing the ram's horn to confuse Satan, and abstain from eating and drinking for twenty-four hours. For all this they think that they have a right to receive a full pardon and plenary absolution from God for all their sins and wickedness of the bygone year; but, alas! they ignore the solemn fact that there can be no remission of sin without the shedding of blood. Judaism has been reduced to mere formalities and outward ceremonies. It is destitute of all vitality and vivifying power; and we know that these heavenly influences cannot exist apart from faith in the precious blood of our once crucified but now exalted Lord.

"I never was so dissatisfied with Judaism in all my life," said an aged man to me two days ago, 'as I was on this Day of Atonement, which, as you know, we have just solemnized; I have fasted for seven-and-twenty hours, praying with all possible earnestness and trembling too, and after all I feel that my sins have not been atoned for.' I told him he would never be happy until he looked to the crucified Messiah for peace. He appeared to drink in every word I said, and when he left me he assured me that the little conversation he had had with me that morning had done him more good than the whole day of prayers on the great Day of Atonement. On the very afternoon of the great Day of Atonement an old man of nearly fourscore years old, and who had heard the Gospel more than once, said to me, 'I am not happy, although I have done all in my power to appease an offended God, by long prayers, fasting, and many other things which are prescribed by the rabbis to be done on such days; yet I do not feel, as you told me you did, your sins are forgiven you through faith in what your Christ did for you; and I really feel I shall soon be compelled to believe that Jesus is the promised Messiah, the Saviour of my soul.'

"These facts are sufficient to encourage us in our labour of love and work of faith. It is indeed a privilege to speak to these seeking ones of their Messiah, and of making known his most precious love to hundreds of them who have never heard of it before. Their present state is a significant sign of the times, and I feel, with many others of God's dear children, that Israel's redemption is drawing nearer and nearer. Who knows how soon the wanderers will be called to the hills and valleys of their beloved home, which God gave to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession?"

DORKING.—Miss Cotton writes:—"I am staying at home at present, and full of work. Everything is so interesting here. I cannot do one quarter of what I want, nor enter a fiftieth part of the openings made for me all round. Our meetings are crowded. We have the large Town-hall room now on Sundays. Certainly blessing is descending upon us, but we want tenfold more."

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—The Committee of the British Sailors' Institute here appeal for the support needed to carry on this good and useful work, in the full assurance that for British seamen they will not ask in vain. The gratitude evinced by hundreds who are now familiar with the Institute, and look upon it as their home in Boulogne, and the good which has been accomplished in the moral and religious influence brought to bear on a class of men whose privileges are few, and whose hardships are many, will be additional reasons to the generous who have enough and to spare for supplying all that is needed to secure the successful prosecution of a work which combines beneficence with the highest moral and spiritual aims. Books and periodicals are greatly wanted for the reading-room, and may be sent to the Institute, 13, Boulevard Daumont.

RELIGION ON THE CONTINENT.

A CORRESPONDENT residing on the Continent sends us a letter on this subject, from which we make some extracts. He describes the way in which the Sabbath is generally observed, or rather mis-observed, and says:—

"In the evening the theatres are open, and most of them reserve for the 'Sunday' their chief attractions. It certainly sounds strange to read on the railway time-bill that the last Sunday evening train will not leave till ten minutes after the close of the theatre; and the town with which this has to do is one of the great centres of religious influence on the Continent! . . . But a work is going on in Geneva which is likely to be a blessing to the Continent in connexion with this question. Mr. Alexandre Lombard is the soul of the movement which finds its expression in the 'Society for the Sanctification of the Lord's-day.' It has secured for those engaged in the post and telegraph offices and railways an alleviation of Sunday work. Hotel-keepers have been appealed to in favour of those employed by them. More than 350 tradespeople in Geneva have promised to close their shops on Sunday, and 150 heads of building works have engaged not to carry on their work on that day. Prize essays, publication of pamphlets and placards, with other kinds of aggressive work, have led to the above results.

"A similar movement is likely to be commenced in Germany. At the Inner Mission Congress held lately in Dresden, this subject was put on the order of the day. The speaker to whom it was entrusted was Kögel, who is one of the ablest of the day. The Central Committee was empowered to take steps towards inducing the Federal Council or the Imperial railway authorities to have all goods railway-stations closed on the Sabbath. Up till the present no one has risen in France to do this work. But no doubt God will raise up workers. People on the Continent say they do not want a foreign Sunday, whether Jewish or English, and forget that the one they have is not much better than the Egyptian rest granted by Pharaoh.

"Another movement still more interesting is that having for its object the elevation of Christian doctrine and life. France, which I have just said is so wanting in Sabbath observance organization, is, as all know, best provided for in home mission or church revival movement by Rev. Theodore Monod, who has made this the work of his life. Switzerland has Rev. Rappard of Chrischona, and some others. Up to the present, no one has taken such a prominent part in Germany, and yet the fact of there being no recognized head is owing to there being no need of one, as so many are now throwing themselves into the work.

"I may just mention one or two of the places where these meetings have lately been held. One was Gernsbach, in the upper Black Forest, which has about 2200 inhabitants, and lies in Baden, on the River Murg, which carries to the Rhine more than £80,000 worth of timber every year from the woods about the town. The Baron of Gemmingen, a resident in the little town, was the promoter of the meetings, which were held for three days. About 300 persons attended. In the addresses, prayer-meetings, conferences, and noon social gatherings there was a constant manifestation of the Divine presence. Similar meetings were held at Pforzheim, a town of 1600 inhabitants, of considerable manufacturing importance, just outside the Black Forest on the north, and at the confluence of the Enz, Nagold, and Wurm. Another course of meetings was held about three weeks later in Switzerland at Neuchâtel—or, as the Germans call it, Neuenberg. These continued also three days, and were attended by about 300 clergymen, with a much larger number of laymen. The services were principally in French, but a separate meeting was held for Germans, which was regularly attended by 600 or 700 persons. The large number of requests for prayer had to be disposed of in groups. The subject for prayer, exposition, conference, and experience was divided into the disease, the remedy, and the recovery.

"I must not omit to say that in all clerical meetings, Inner Mission gatherings, &c., the new religious movement is discussed. New books are constantly appearing on it. Indeed, it seems likely to create a distinct literature of its own.

"The state of Germany and the surrounding countries is such that all Christian effort ought to be welcomed. In a large town, a clergyman, when going off for his summer holidays, has now, for the second time, just simply closed the church and given up the services for the weeks of his absence, because he could not persuade any brother clergyman to come and preach to the usual congregation of eight or ten persons. In another large town of about the same size, some time ago, there was not a single hearer at one of the Sunday services. A Bible Society distributed Bibles lately among some Dutch soldiers, making no distinction between Protestants and Catholics, on which an Ultramontane paper complained that to give a Catholic a Bible was just the same thing as making a Jew eat swine's flesh. In the best and most religious German state, there is scarcely a week in which the papers do not tell of murder and suicide, although the population of the entire land is not half that of London. A German Socialist "People's Calendar" has for vignette a number of labourers who tread under foot the Papal crown, the Bible, the Prussian Eagle, and the Constitution. But I will not continue this any further. You will see that every effort to do good ought to be encouraged."

AWAKENING IN QUEBEC.

MONTREAL, Oct. 15.—About ten days ago the Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations of Ontario and Quebec adjourned after holding a three day's session in this city. Topics of vital interest were discussed, and throughout the whole Convention there was a marked spirit of earnest dependence on God manifested. The result was that all the delegates scattered to their homes, feeling more and more in earnest. Amongst them was one named Combie, the travelling secretary to the Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association—a man terribly in earnest. He is no speaker, but he is fired with the Spirit, and full of the Bible. A week ago he went down to Quebec (180 miles off), accompanied by the Secretary of our Montreal Association, and another friend. Their idea was to try to stir up the Quebec Association.

They met on Thursday night of last week in the Association Room; only five were present. They prayed to the Lord for help, and during the night they painted by hand (Combie is quite an artist) several attractive placards, which drew the attention of great crowds the next morning. They prayed for a blessing on the posters, and, with the help of a few earnest God-fearing merchants, spent all Friday morning in going from store to store distributing slips. Their Bible-reading in the afternoon was well attended, and the meeting in the evening was crowded, several of the ministers of the city being on the platform. Thus the work started. God's blessing accompanied these efforts. Ministers and Christians are being stirred up and rallying to the front. On Sunday night there were 2500 people in the largest hall in Quebec; three meetings are being held each day, and a telegram just received says, "250 anxious souls remained behind after last night's meeting, while thirty found peace the night before." Thank God for this. We are praying that this wonderful awakening, the like of which has never been known in Quebec before, may be the commencement of a blessing that shall sweep the country. Pray for Canada.—Extract from Letter.

PLYMOUTH.—Surely we have again seen the hand of the Lord made bare. When last here, so deep was the interest excited by the preaching of Jesus, that many became deeply interested in the "things of God." I resolved, therefore, to come a second time, and truly our cup has run over. Every meeting, despite the torrents of rain, has been crowded, and the Guildhall has been filled with thousands listening to the Gospel of the grace of God. I verily believe many have passed from death unto life, and everywhere the joyous tidings come of souls brought to the Lord. I think Friday night's meeting was one of the most successful I have ever known; and I am deeply anxious that your readers should pray for this southern town, in order that the work of grace may go on. Several of the ministers have been greatly refreshed, and many hundreds of God's people are walking with deeper conviction than ever of "the strengthening might of his Spirit in the inner man." Yours in our Lord, H. VARLEY.

WOOLWICH.—Another week of special services has just closed at St. Andrew's Church. Monday was given up to the children. On Tuesday, Dr. Edmond, of Highbury, preached to a deeply attentive audience on "The Lamb of God." Mr. Russell Hurditch held two Bible-readings, and preached on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday; and on Friday, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, who took for his subject "The Brand and the Branch," Zech. iii.,—closed a week in which God has given us many tokens of his presence. There is clearly no subsidence of interest in the work here, but, on the contrary, decided increase. Every week we meet with persons who profess to have received benefit from these services—and, so far as we can judge, they appear genuine cases of conversion to Christ, are walking consistently, and are all heartily willing to lend a helping hand in the Lord's work. Mr. Henry Varley comes to preach on Sabbath, 21st inst. Will Christians remember us in prayer? R. B.

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN MEXICO.

We have received a communication of considerable interest from Mr. James Pascoe, Toluca, Mexico, dated Sept. 14 describing the present condition of Christian missions in that far-off land. After detailing, at some length, certain disturbances which had arisen in connexion with a Roman Catholic festival, and the prevalence of Mariolatry, Mr. Pascoe speaks of the opening and dedication of a new Protestant Church in Mexico in connexion with the American Methodist Episcopal Mission of the South, and one at Puebla by the Methodists in the North.

With respect to the spread of the Gospel in Mexico generally he says:—"In spite of all difficulties, the Gospel has progressed marvellously in this country. When I look back only a few years, and compare the small beginning then made, with the great progress now to be seen, I am indeed filled with wonder and with praise." After sketching the early history of Mexican Missions, Mr. Pascoe proceeds:—"The Gospel work now going on in the city of Mexico is sustained by the following churches:—1. The American Episcopalian, known as 'The Church of Jesus,' under the superintendence of Dr. Riley. 2. The Presbyterian, under Mr. Hutchinson. 3. The Methodist Episcopal (North), under Dr. Butler. 4. The Methodist Episcopal (South), under Mr. Daves; and 5. A Mexican Independent church under the ex-priest Palacios. The four missions first on the list are all sustained by American funds, the real preaching work being done by Mexican paid preachers.

"Outside of Mexico there are a few stations sustained by our American brethren; but the great majority are small native Mexican congregations, poor but independent, who prefer to continue in the Gospel simplicity with which they began. In other parts of the land we have our Toluca Mission; other missions in Puebla, Vera Cruz, Zacatecas, Matamoros, and other places, all under foreign protection; also a Congregational Mission in Guadalajara, and quite a number of native congregations under Mexican pastors scattered in all parts of the Republic."

Mr. Pascoe refers to the partial failure of the proposed alliance among the Protestant churches in Mexico, with respect to which we gave some detail in our issue of the 7th ult., and concludes:—"At all times it is desirable for God's people to be united, but especially is it desirable in this land, which is rapidly falling once more under the plague of Revolution. When this present year began, there were but few signs of an armed Revolution; but we have now armed bands in six distinct States. Some are Catholics who fight to exterminate liberty and Gospel; others are said to be Liberals disaffected with Lerdo's government, but I rather think many are Catholics under a Liberal mask. A paragraph in to-day's paper confirms this idea; it states that the revolutionists of Michoacan are in communication with those in other parts of the country, in order to organize the Revolution on a large scale. The Michoacan rebels are Catholics—veritable soldiers of the cross. Only this week I was presented with a red cross with the cord of St. Francis attached, which was taken from a Michoacan rebel: they wear the crosses—some black, some red—suspended round their necks. If others join with them, it is tolerably clear that all are fighting under the same banner.

"If these, at present new-born, revolutions grow stronger, the Gospel will meet with a fierce opposition, and God's people will indeed need to be united. It may be God's design to try his young Mexican church, and by a fierce persecution winnow away the chaff, which his people are not willing to do whilst they can live in peace and with love. At all events, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will see how much we need the help and sympathy of God's people in England. Our Toluca Mission is, I believe, the only mission in Mexico supported by English Christians. I am indeed grateful for the valuable help we have hitherto received, and this encourages me to cry out for more. Let our countrymen be assured that, of what help they give us, not a penny will be spent on grand buildings; but in scattering the Gospel far and near in Bibles, Gospels, and tracts, and by living preachers, leaving the converts to provide their own 'upper chambers' in which to worship God in spirit and in truth."

JAPAN.—An officer at the head of the Educational Bureau, who decided that no Christian minister should be engaged in Government schools, has been dismissed, and his place filled by one of the returned students who were educated and converted in America. Hence the missionaries who are employed in the College at Yeddo, and were about to retire on account of the order of the dismissed official, have been pressed to remain.

AWAKENING IN FORFARSHIRE.

FREYDEN, a small fishing town at the mouth of the Southesk, one of our Forfarshire rivers, on the opposite bank from the town of Montrose, has exhibited for the past few weeks all the features of a general, deep, and overpoweringly earnest awakening. And not by ones or twos is the blessing enjoyed, but the village is pervaded from east to west, and it may well be questioned if there is a family without a member awakened or saved. "God counteth up the people," I don't; only I can testify from personal knowledge that multitudes, both of men and women, are being added to the family of God.

The special agency by which God has wrought has been two agents of the Edinburgh Evangelistic Society, Messrs. Daniels and Smith. One night, for the fortnight passing into November, resembled another—literally a pressing into the Kingdom. Let me note one night, but similar to others. There is a large gathering of young women, one a young married woman, she and the others in distress. It is long ere the ground of comfort and peace is seen, but at length peace through the blood of the Cross dawns on this young woman's soul, she enters into the assurance of forgiveness, and, filled with corresponding joy, she darts off to tell her mother and her husband of her newly found treasure. He receives her testimony with a wondering scepticism; but, a reality in her experience, she cannot bear the thought of separation, it may be eternally. She ceases not every hour to urge the importance of decision—a lost or a gained eternity hanging on the issue. He too becomes troubled, cannot find rest, and shortly yields his will and heart to the same blessed influence as his wife, and since has come out a bright and attractive believer. In this manner the truth spreads, the one helping the other. J. M.

FORETASTES OF ETERNAL GLORY.

THE wife of a well-known Dublin clergyman has communicated to the Irish Church Advocate some deeply interesting particulars of the closing days of a Christian lady lately departed. She was one who in her lifetime sought to walk with God, and to adorn the doctrine of Christ her Saviour. She was confined to her bed for many weeks; her peace and joy increasing as her end drew near.

The informant took notes of some of her dying sayings, from which we select the following:—"Why do you say that this is a bed of suffering? I never had such joy in all my life as I have had while lying on this bed. No words can be found to express my joy in the Lord. I have rivers of joy. My joy is so immense that I cannot feel pain. I have such joy that I can truly say my heaven is begun."

To another friend she said:—"I wanted to tell you how happy I am. Oh! all so real, so solid! My nights are my happiest times. I try not to sleep, lest I should lose the opportunity, while all is quiet, of enjoying my Saviour's presence. I feel almost as if I were out of the body. I want nothing to increase my joy, but just to see his face and his pierced hands. You often heard me express my longing to see Jesus. I need not die now for that." So vivid were her apprehensions of her Saviour's presence, that she said, "I see Jesus. You have no idea of all that is to be found in the Lord Jesus. You don't look for it. Christians know very little of Him. They do not draw upon the riches that are laid up for them in Christ Jesus."

On another occasion she thus expressed herself: "They all thought I was gone last night. No; but I had a vision of glory. Glory! glory! glory! I heard the music of heaven. There is no word big enough, nor voice loud enough, to express that glory!"

How gracious of our God to grant such seasons of blissful experience for the consolation of surviving friends, and for the strengthening of our faith! Should we not make more use of such facts as we have related, in encouraging weak believers, and in dealing with the dreary scepticism of the present day, which would rob us of our brightest hopes?

THE BIBLE-FLOWER MISSION.—The Mildmay-park depot of the Bible-Flower Mission will be closed during the winter months, from Dec. 1 until March, though any gifts kindly sent by friends may still be taken to the sick by the deaconesses. Flowers will be thankfully received at the Home of Industry, as Miss Macpherson hopes to be able to continue the evangelistic work connected with the Mission. "The Records of the Bible-Flower Mission" can be obtained from Miss Macpherson by sending three penny stamps.

MR. FEGAN'S RESCUE-WORK.

Our brother Mr. Fegan, of Deptford, sends us a sketch of one of his midnight searches for destitute boys, which we are sorry being obliged somewhat to curtail. We give the principal part of his paper:—

An hour and a half is spent without results, and we return to find that the two boys we had left have met with a little fellow about ten years old, who acts as guide, to show us where some of his chums "'doss' it of a night." A wall, ten feet high, surrounds a yard where many vans are drawn in for the night. Without assistance we cannot climb such a high fence, but a policeman kindly comes from a neighbouring corner, and, mounted on his stalwart shoulders, we clamber over the wall, and, lantern in hand, search these vans. Soon we catch the sound of heavy breathing, and listening for a few seconds, hear a stifled, startled groan, followed by a deep sigh. All is still again. We step from one van to another; a tarpaulin is raised, and beneath, close together, hands clasped, pale with the cold, are four poor little lads, sleeping out without even the shelter of a roof, in the heart of the richest city in the world, within a stone's throw of the warehouses of some of our wealthiest manufacturers, and almost under the shadow of a church and chapel.

It is a sight that would move the hardest heart, and it speedily brings tears to our own eyes. We gaze on the poor boys for a few seconds; at such a moment the difficulties, the burdens, and the disappointments of our work are all swallowed up in thankfulness to God for privileging us day and night to labour for Him in caring for those who are so precious in his sight. We gently rouse them from their sleep, and, having spoken a few loving, assuring words, put before them the advantages of the course of life open to them through entering our Home, over their present unhappy and perilous mode of existence. Gratefully they accept our invitation; we hand them one by one down over the wall to our ally, the policeman, who is as surprised as any school-board officer would be, to know that these gutter-snipes have a nest in such a place.

Now we rejoin our party; friendship is pledged over more hot coffee; a cab is called from a neighbouring night-stand. The boys are delighted—one barefoot little urchin takes off his cap and gives a cheer, "Hooray, it's as good as an excursion!" We pack them inside and up on the top, take our seat by the driver, and rattle off amidst the applause of a few policemen, the coffee-stall keeper, and a knot of midnight stragglers, to reach home about 5 a.m.

Our Home is now overcrowded, and until we have the means to fit up another room with beds, &c., to our great distress these midnight rescues must cease; but as we are enabled to do so by the liberality of the Lord's stewards, we will gather in these perishing ones to the utmost capacity of our premises. As we write we have not a single penny in hand to meet even the expenses of the day, yet we have proved, and can so confide in, the faithfulness of our God, that we can conscientiously record, to the glory of his name, that we have not an anxious thought on this score.

Requesting your fellowship in praise for much fruit in the Gospel work here, and for the signs of spiritual blessing amongst the boys in the Home, and in prayer for a deepening of the same, I am, dear friends, yours,

J. W. C. FEGAN.

The Boys' Home, 112 and 114, High-street, Deptford, S.E.

RUNCORN.—A few weeks ago a Young Men's Christian Association was started in this town. Every Sunday afternoon a Bible-class is held, and on Sunday night, Nov. 7, an evangelistic service was held in the theatre (which has been kindly lent), at which there were about 500 present, when addresses were delivered by the Rev. Canon Barclay, Mr. J. Burnett, and Mr. J. H. Humphreys. These meetings are to be continued every Sunday during the winter months; and the committee ask the earnest prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for the success of this service and the Bible-class.

AN OPEN DOOR.—An earnest evangelist and mission-hill are greatly needed at Helder, now called Nieuwe-Diep, Holland, —a place of 25,000 people, where there are several English residents, and a large number of English and American sailors continually coming and going. There is no English service held, or mission-house where the Gospel is proclaimed in English, and I want to enlist the sympathy and support of Britain and America in order that a mission may be established at Helder. Fearful shipwrecks in the neighbourhood of Texel render the presence and help of a loving mission friend most urgent. I am sure this want has only to be made public, and help will be given. Contributions will be thankfully received by W. E. Guttridge, Collector of Inland Revenue, The Hermitage, Stamford, Lincolnshire.

"I WILL NEVER LEAVE THEE."

How sweet the promise, "I will never leave thee,
And nevermore forsake;
Although false friends of dearest hopes bereave thee,
Thou shalt my love partake."
No love like thine, O God, can cheer our sadness,
Nor soothe our hearts with balm;
No love like thine can fill our lives with gladness,
Contentment, peace, and calm:
For Thou dost mark the way that we are tending,
And when we sink, afraid,
Thy tender hand outstretched, our hearts defending,
Doth give us timely aid.
We do not fear the way, however dreary,
When in Thy presence blest,
For Thou wilt never leave us lone and weary,
But lead us up to rest.

ROSE CALDWELL.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

UNDER THE SURFACE. By FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. Nisbet. 1s. 6d.—A cheap edition of a volume of beautiful poems, which we have before reviewed. It forms an elegant and inexpensive gift-book.

THE GREAT SALTERNS. By SARAH DOUDNEY. Religious Tract Society.—The lessons taught by this gracefully-told and well-sustained narrative do not obtrude themselves, but are none the less apparent. It will afford our young folks both pleasure and profit.

THE COMPANION CONCORDANCE. Elliot Stock. Price 1s.—One-sixteenth of an inch in thickness, and intended, as its title indicates, to be kept inside the covers of a pocket Bible. The type is clear, but its exceeding smallness will be an obstacle to its general acceptance. It will, however, prove most useful to travellers.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORLD. Vol. II. Elliot Stock. 4s., post free.—We can honestly endorse the statement of the publisher of this neatly bound volume, that "for reference in Sunday-school libraries, and for the bookshelves of working teachers, few more useful books could perhaps be obtained." The varied articles are all of an interesting and permanently valuable character.

CHRISTINE; OR, THE BIBLE-GIRL. With Illustrations. By S. PUNOT. Shaw. 2s. 6d.—The early history of a young French governess, who learned in childhood to love and prize the Bible, and found its consolations helpful in the midst of many trials and sorrows. The story is prettily told, and the scene towards the close being laid during the Franco-German war, it is invested with a fresher interest.

THOUGHTS FOR HEART AND LIFE. By T. L. CUYLER, D.D., of Brooklyn, U.S.A. Hodder and Stoughton.—This is a reprint in one volume of "Heart Life," "Heart Thoughts," and "Heart Culture," all of which have had a wide and well-deserved circulation. It is impossible for anyone to read these short papers on the manifold phases of the Christian life, replete as they are with "sanctified common sense," and couched in the pithy form of diction peculiar to American authors, without having high and holy impulses awakened. We cordially recommend the combined volume to those who do not possess the separate parts.

HOMES AND HAUNTS OF LUTHER. By JOHN STOUGHTON, D.D. Religious Tract Society.—Dr. Stoughton has had the privilege, denied to most of his fellow-Protestants, of paying several visits to the land of Luther; in this elegant volume he has done his best to share with others the pleasure afforded by such a privilege. With a reverent and loving—and, withal, a graphic—pen he records his pilgrimages to the battle-fields of the Reformation, weaving into his narrative quotations from the most reliable biographers of the famous monk. Prophets assure us that the battle Luther fought and won is likely soon to be fought again; if so, the issue of this volume is timely, and will prove useful. In any event, its perusal will be a source of gratification and culture. The illustrations are profuse and exquisite; and, altogether, it will form a valuable gift-book for the season.

THE BOND OF PEACE. Nisbet.—This is an earnest and well-illustrated endeavour "to gather together in one the children of God who are scattered abroad," by pointing out the foundation-truths upon which all evangelical Christians are agreed, and distinguishing between "trivialities" and "essentials." We do not, however, agree with the writer in thinking that "the principle on which 'God can be just,' and yet 'the Justifier of those that believe in Jesus,' will never be understood by men in the present dispensation." Nor do we think it true that "we are not called upon to understand or vindicate the Atonement, but to accept it as the only way of salvation offered to us." The apostle prayed that we "might be filled with the knowledge of His will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding"; and surely this includes understanding, as well as accepting, the Atonement.

OUR LAMBS IN THE FOLDS ABOVE.—Edited by LADY DUNBAR. Hatchards.—This judiciously selected compilation of poems and prose extracts is an amplification of Longfellow's beautiful lines—

"Oh! not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The Reaper came that day;
'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
And took the flowers away."

The sorrows and hopes of many a bereaved heart find voice in this little book; they will awaken responsive echoes in many more.

THE GOSPEL IN SANTHALISTAN. By AN OLD INDIAN. Nisbet. 2s. 6d.—The remarkable success of Gospel preaching among this primitive people sufficiently justifies the issue of this intensely interesting volume, to which Dr. Horatius Bonar has written a preface. An American paper has styled it "The Romance of Missions." The following extract from the book, contained in a letter dated March, 1874, almost justifies the term:—"Thousands have already become Christians. In hundreds of the most villages not one man clings to the faith of his forefathers. The missionaries are revelling in their minds what they will do when all the Santals in the district throw away their belief in the Bengeas. They expect it every day."

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

DUBLIN.—The first of the Cabmen's Shelters here has just been opened. The structure is larger in size than the London shelters.

CHICAGO.—Gospel meetings, designed for those who do not attend church, are held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Sabbath evenings, and are well attended.

THE IRISH CHURCH.—On Tuesday, at the Synod of the diocese of Dublin, it was resolved to take steps for the formation of a Church of Ireland Temperance Association.

SIT MOON, the Chinese colporteur of the Honolulu Young Men's Christian Association, in the Sandwich Islands, is reported as doing excellent Christiana service among his countrymen.

"COME TO JESUS."—Mr. E. H. Dimond, son of an American missionary in the Sandwich Islands, has translated into the Hawaiian tongue Rev. Newman Hall's famous tract "Come to Jesus."

WHOLESALE CONVERSION.—A remarkable case of wholesale conversion is reported from Nova Scotia. At the last meeting of the Pictou Presbytery a paper was received from 125 French people of Stellarton and Vale Colliery, declaring their renunciation of Popery, and their adhesion to the truth of the Gospel as held by the Protestant body.

THE REV. NARAYAN SHESHADRI, writing from Poona, says they have laid the foundations of six model houses, which with the church will be ready for occupation in June. The Free Church missionaries and their successors are to be trustees. They celebrated the quarterly communion in the open air, on the foundation of the church, when 100 attended.

LIVERPOOL.—The first anniversary tea-meeting of the members of the Fellowship Meetings was lately held at the Mission Hall, Gordon-street, Liverpool. It was a most interesting gathering. This important movement was originated at the Mission Hall on Oct. 25, 1874, by the Rev. John R. D. Colston, who was the mission curate in charge of the district. Mr. Colston has recently removed to Bradford.

A COLONY of over 300 Icelanders are about settling on a tract of land on the west shore of Lake Winnipeg, extending about fifty miles north of Manitoba. The land is rich, furnishing wood and pasture, and the lake abounds in fish. The new colonists are aided by a loan from the Dominion Government. They are Lutherans, and their first act on reaching their new settlement was to hold a prayer-meeting, where they earnestly prayed to God to bless their enterprise.

EDINBURGH.—In the month of August last evangelistic services were begun on the High-street, and have been held every Sabbath evening since. Previous to the service in the open air, a number of young men meet in the British Workman Hall for prayer; about twenty to thirty young men attend to help in the singing. After the open-air service a meeting is held in the British Workman Hall, to which those who gather on the street are invited. The inside meeting is addressed each night by two young men. There is good reason to believe that several souls have been blessed through the instrumentality of these services.

THE JEWS.—The correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"As one who takes an interest in the Jew, I am sorry to find myself a solicitor at your hand for permission to inform my fellow-Christians we are, as a body, undoubtedly lacking in our duty to this remarkable people. The mighty stream of Jewish life pours uninterruptedly into the grave of the unconverted, and small are the efforts made to snatch brands of Jewish origin from the fire. Yet, sir, those set free from Judaism become the brightest examples of steadfast adherence to the Christian faith; and, therefore, energy on our part commensurate with the magnitude of the work would surely be productive of a rich harvest."

A DAUGHTER of Mr. S. Morley, M.P., is now widely known as a preacher among the villages of that part of Kent in which the hon. gentleman resides.

GENEVA.—It is stated as probable that a grand gathering of English, Swiss, and German Protestants will be held at Geneva in the spring—or at least the early summer—of next year.

LIVERPOOL.—Rev. Wm. Stott, of London, has lately been preaching in Victoria Hall. The Lord has set His seal to his labours; there was much blessed work in the inquiry-room after each meeting.

THE WORKING MEN'S TEMPERANCE PRAYER-MEETING OF BUFFALO, inaugurated and sustained by the Christian women of the city, numbers as its trophies 166 drunkards reformed during the past year.

CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—Nov. 2, 3, and 4 were devoted by the ministers and office-bearers of the Wesleyan churches in London to a conference, the direct object of which was the promotion of Scriptural holiness and the revival of the work of God. Interesting addresses were given by many of the leading men of the denomination.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION IN PARIS.—The annual meeting of the Paris Young Men's Christian Association was held on Thursday week, in the English Chapel, Rue Royale. The Rev. Dr. Forbes presided, and was supported by a large body of ministers and laymen, including nearly every clergyman, English and American, resident in Paris.

AN EVANGELISTIC MEETING for young women has lately been started, on Monday evenings, in the Mission Hall, 101, Binglefield-street, Caledonian-road, N., from 8.30 to 9.30 p.m. We have had very good attendances, and can truly say that God's blessing has rested on our efforts. Your earnest prayers are asked that our numbers may increase, and many souls be won to Christ.

CHINA.—Two or three months ago a proclamation was issued by the Foreign Office at Foochow, which will probably exercise a powerful influence for good on the spread of Christianity throughout the province of Fokien. It may justly be called the Chinese Christians' Charter. Consuls and missionaries agree in declaring that no document so favourable to the Christian religion, or so hopeful as suggesting that a few rays of light have pierced the thick darkness of the mandarin intellect, has ever before been written by the native authorities.

BASEL MISSION TO ASHANTEE.—Those who have read the interesting account of the captive missionaries contained in the book "Four Years in Ashantee," or who are at all acquainted with West African missions, will rejoice to learn that at the beginning of this month the Rev. Mr. Ramseyer and his wife embarked at Liverpool for the Gold Coast, and that these devoted missionaries are resolved on returning to the land of their captivity in order to proclaim the glorious liberty of the children of God to those that carried them away captive.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE GIRLS, BROADWAY HOUSE, PLAISTOW, ESSEX.—Miss Lee, the mistress of this Home, has given up her business of a milliner and dressmaker, and devoted her life to the care of poor destitute little girls. She has forty-eight children (all girls under thirteen) under her care. Owing to greater responsibility and scantier fare than she has been accustomed to, her health is failing. There is great fear that, unless some substantial help be forthcoming very shortly, these forty-eight young girls must once more be homeless, and in a worse condition than if they had never been rescued from their wretched life. Contributions will be thankfully received by Miss Lee at the Home, or by the Rev. A. H. Byles, 7, Richmond-road, Headingley, Leeds.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—A week of special services, conducted by the Rev. J. E. Cracknell, of the Tabernacle, assisted by a few Christian friends, has just closed, and proved very successful. It is now two years since Messrs. Moody and Sunkey visited this church, and the present services were held in grateful remembrance of the blessing received, the fruits of which still appear. The success of the present meetings may be partly attributed to the systematic visitation which the pastor has recently made—street by street—of every member of the congregation; nothing has so tended to the revival of spiritual life in the church, and increased interest in all the services, as this personal visitation of the members. During the past two years, 107 persons have been baptized on a profession of faith in Christ.

WALES.—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN no doubt will be glad to hear that a religious revival is going on among the Englishmen at Llanarthlarn, Carnarvonshire, North Wales. The salt quarries in this part of the country have attracted several scores of Englishmen from Leicestershire and other places. But as there was no English service in the place, the Englishmen were very much neglected, and consequently very much degraded. But lately things have given a favourable turn. The history of the revival in England and the reading of Mr. Moody's discourses were blessed to some of them, to stir them up to their duty; and at once a prayer-meeting was started, as well as a Bible-class, and these meetings were held with gratifying results in the conversion of sinners. T. H.

"SELF-DENIAL AND CROSS-BEARING."—We had marked some passages in this most practical booklet, by Rev. E. Boys, Derby, for extract, but space failed us. We recommend it to the thoughtful perusal of our readers. It forms No. 2 of the Christian Life Series of papers published by Bemrose and Sons, price 6d. per doz., post free.

PAPER BLANKETS.—Acting on a suggestion that has frequently been made in the public prints, a gentleman named Löder has patented the use of brown paper of superior quality for blankets, perforated in such a manner as to permit a free passage to the perspiration without diminishing the warmth. The price is, according to size, 4d., 5d., or 6d., so that it will be open to the very poorest to test the practical value of the invention.

GRATEFUL CHILDREN.—Mrs. Meredith returns the thanks of the little ones in her "village," to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, for numerous toys, perambulators, &c., sent in answer to their appeal. From far-off Lodianna, a little rescued Hindoo "waif" responded with a gift of picture-books, that have awakened a lively desire to join in the blessed work of calling the heathen to Jesus.

A "PEOPLE'S HALL" was opened at Cadnam, Hants, on Wednesday, Nov. 3. It is intended to hold a series of services every Tuesday evening in the above hall during the winter, and as it is entirely dependent on voluntary labourers, we shall be glad if any Christian friend will come and give an address any Tuesday evening. G. F. MONTEITH.

Cadnam, Totton, Hants, Nov. 11, 1875.

"THE BLACKHEATH COT."—This is a dainty little pamphlet, written by Mr. H. Neirne Dowson (Rex and Co., 91, Goucester-street, E.C.). It tells, in a way likely to awaken the sympathetic interest of the young, the story of some of the occupants of the cot in the "East London Hospital for Children," supported by friends at Blackheath. We doubt the wisdom of giving in the subscription-list the names of the youthful collectors. It is calculated to foster feelings incompatible with the injunction not to let the left hand know what the right hand doeth.

MESSERS. WHITTLE AND BLISS.—A St. Paul despatch of Oct. 11 says:—Major Whittle was joined by Professor Bliss yesterday, the first time in St. Paul. The crowds attending the services yesterday greatly increased. The Opera-House was packed full last night, and 2000 were turned away, not able to get in at the doors, though the lower floor was also opened for another meeting. Mr. Bliss dividing his time between the two. Over fifty persons, mostly young men, professed conviction, asking prayers. The St. Paul Pioneer Times contains a long and interesting account of their closing services. Their labours in St. Paul have been crowned with much blessing to many.

THE LIVERPOOL CARTERS.—A Liverpool contemporary says:—"On Sabbath-week the Liverpool carters held their usual meeting in Victoria Hall at three o'clock. There was an excellent attendance, and the meeting was conducted with true spiritual fervour. Our readers will doubtless be rejoiced to hear that since Mr. T. Storey first inaugurated the Carters' Meetings in Liverpool, over 100 carters have been brought to rest in Jesus as their accepted Saviour; but it must not be supposed that this is the sum total of believing carters, for we understand as many more were brought to Christ previous to the meetings being held. There is also a glorious work going on amongst the men's wives and families, and fresh sheaves are gathered into the Lord's garner."

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS

Will hold (D.V.) a Series of Services at LEIGHTON BUZZARD, commencing NOVEMBER 22nd, and continuing seven days or more. Rev. JOHN ALLEN, of London, and Rev. J. E. IRVINE, of America, Conveners. Office of Association, 22, Bidborough-street, London, W.C.

Institutions, Societies, &c.

THE PRIORY, 198, UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

The Committee of the ISLINGTON and Highbury Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association are in immediate want of £1000 for additions (suggested by Mr. Moody) now being made at the Priory, the present rooms being insufficient to accommodate the increasing number of Young Men attending the various meetings.

Donations to the Building Fund are earnestly solicited by Mr. JOHN SANDOE, Treasurer, 17, Highbury-crescent, and 50, Old Broad-street; Mr. PATRICK STEWART, 16, Grosvenor-street, E.C., Chairman of Committee; Mr. JAMES JOHN ATKINSON, Resident Secretary; by whom also Annual Subscriptions will be thankfully received, from five shillings to five guineas. Also by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

President—The EARL OF CAVAN.

Vice-Presidents. Major-General DOBBS.

Lord JAMES BUTLER. Vice-Admiral GARDINER FERRIBOURNE. Sir EDWARD SYNGE HUTCHINSON, Bart.

Fry, William, Esq. Gurn, Surgeon-Major. Hutchings, Sir E. Synges, Bart. Law, J. Pakenham, Esq.

Surgeon-General MILRENE. Lieutenant-Colonel Hon. H. ROWLEY.

Lord FARNEHAM. Swanton, J. H., Esq., J.P. Thompson, R.W., Captain Warren, H., Major. West, Augustus, Esq.

Blakeney, Major. Browne, Vere, Esq. Caulfield, Montgomeria, Lt.-Colonel. Doran, Major.

A number of Officers and Civilians, interested in the welfare of the large body of Military stationed in Dublin, are desirous of founding a Soldiers' Institute similar to those which have been so much blessed to the soldiers at Aldershot, Plymouth, Dover, &c.

The Institute should provide READING ROOMS, REFRESHMENT ROOMS, LECTURE HALL, BIBLE-CLASS ROOM, &c., for which a large sum will be required.

The Committee are indisposed to incur Debt, and earnestly appeal to the Christian Public for Aid. Dublin is one of the largest garrison towns in the Queen's dominions, and abounds with temptations to draw the soldier into sin, but as yet it has provided no adequate counter-attractions to well-doing and godliness. To supply this want is the design of the Soldiers' Institute.

Subscriptions may be lodged at the Bank of Ireland to the credit of the "Dublin Soldiers' Institute," or they will be received by any member of Committee or the Hon. Treasurers.

Hon. Treasurers (Sir EDWARD SYNGE HUTCHINSON, Bart., Palermo, Bray. Lieutenant-Colonel G. BUTLER STONEY, 72, Waterloo-road, Dublin. Hon. Secretary—Captain R. W. THOMPSON, 44, Dawson-street, Dublin.

Also by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.

PARSON'S GREEN HOMES, S.W.

Contributions received, £1500. Now required, £400. (See previous Advertisements.) It is most important that the required amount should be made up soon; but promises of £1 and upwards need not be paid before January 15th, 1876. Reader, at least send 2s. 6d. Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, will receive contributions. 200, Euston-road, N.W. EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, MAITLAND PARK, HAVERSTOCK HILL.

INSTITUTED MAY 10TH, 1798.

Patrons—HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN, AND THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

For ORPHANS and other necessitous children of both sexes from any part of the United Kingdom, eligible between the ages of 7 & 11.

95 ORPHANS were admitted in 1874. 407 ORPHANS now in the Institution. 3000 ORPHANS have received its benefits. £10,000 a year needed to maintain its present efficiency. CONTRIBUTIONS will be thankfully received by OFFICE, 73, CHEAPSIDE, E.C. JONADAB FINCH, Secretary. [822]

Forthcoming Meetings.

MISS DE BROEN proposes (D.V.) to have a Sale of Work from her Sewing Classes, 1st and 2nd December, in No. 4, Rue Boquepine, Paris. Contributions of fancy articles for the above to be sent to Miss MUCONNA, care of Mrs. Adams, 24, Gray's-inn-road, King's-cross.

A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS will be held (D.V.) at Midway-park Conference Hall, on Thursday afternoon, November 20th, at half past three o'clock, to consider the subject of Tract Distribution in the Metropolis during the winter. Captain the Hon. R. MORSTON will take the Chair.

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—The members propose to hold another social and religious meeting in London for barristers and solicitors and their clerks only on Thursday evening, Dec. 10th. To distribute the invitation widely among the legal professions many help-meets are required. Apply, by letter, to one of the Secretaries, Mr. H. C. NISSET, 35, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

Institutions, Societies, &c.

ST. MARYLEBONE FEMALE PROTECTION SOCIETY, 137-3, Marylebone-road, N.W.—This Society seeks to rescue young women who up to the time of their fall have been a good character. Those with infants are assisted from a special fund. Contributions earnestly solicited. Bankers—Sir SAMUEL SCOTT and Co., 1, Oldbath-square, W. General Secretaries, Secretary.

MRS. HULTON'S CRECHE, 12, 14, and 16, Stepney-greenway, Commercial-road, London, E.—This Institution, with its branches "The Infant Home" and "Infant Infirmary" is in urgent need of funds. Over 100 children from three weeks to four years old are in the crèche daily. 150 have already been nursed in the Infirmary, and 20 are in the Home, aged from six months to five years. About £100 is due on this branch, and should be paid by the end of the year. Subscriptions or donations may be sent to Mrs. HULTON, Founder and Hon. Superintendent, Langwell House, Bardett-road, E. "Fourth Year of the Creche," cloth, 1s.; cheap edition 6d. may be had at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or at the Creche.

A CHRISTIAN HOME FOR YOUNG MEN has been opened on the premises of the Young Men's Christian Association, Chelsea, Brighton, and the "Belgrave Branch, 12, Belgrave-street, London, E. DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNERS SOCIETY.—Application for Grants from the Superintendants of the Dining-rooms to be sent to the Secretary, Major COOPER GARDINER, 30, Gloucester-st., Warwick-square, S.W.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNERS SOCIETY.—Funds are much needed to carry on the work of feeding the poor and destitute children attending ragged and other schools in all parts of London. Subscriptions may be paid to the Bankers, Messrs. BARNES and BOWEN, 1, Pall Mall East; to the Treasurers, the Hon. A. KIRKLAND, M.P., Pall Mall East, and W. FULLER, Esq., 211, Piccadilly; and to the Secretary, Major COOPER GARDINER, 30, Gloucester-street, Warwick-square, S.W.

HOUSE OF FAITH will (D.V.) be ready for occupation in December. Bedding, furniture, &c., wanted to complete business. This is a special work entirely among the educated and superior though fallen sisters. Donations, &c. to Mrs. DALRY, 19, Alinger-terrace, Primrose-hill; or Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

EAST APPLICATION. To the Governors of the ROYAL ASYLUM OF ST. ANN'S SOCIETY. The favour of your VOTES and INTEREST is earnestly requested on behalf of VERNON ANNESLEY EDLIN. Aged 11 years.

One of your motherless children, and son of the Rev. VERNON EDLIN, Trin. Coll. Camb., late Curate of Batty, Leicester, who is disabled by paralysis and a fracture of the knee from some early disease, or other work. He has no private means of subsistence. The case is strongly recommended by Rev. Chas. Mackenzie, M.A., Rector of Alibonville, Lombard-street, and President of St. Paul's, and Rural Dean, &c., &c.

THE PARALYZED AND EPILEPTIC NATIONAL HOSPITAL, 25, 26, and 28, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury.—75 beds at Hospital; 30 at Convalescent Home. The Society's object is to assist the more distressed in- and out-patients and their families. Funds are needed for the incurable; and (about to be established, in memory of the late Johanna Chandler) a new branch for the reception of gentlewomen in reduced circumstances requiring medical treatment. As the winter is approaching, contributions of warm clothing, fannel, or flannel garments are earnestly solicited. The sufferings of the paralyzed are greatly increased by cold. EDWARD K. CHAMBERLAIN, House Treasurer, 45, Albany-street, Regent's-park, N.W.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS.

A LETTER TO D. L. MOODY FROM R. C. MORGAN.

MY DEAR MOODY. . . . With regard to your and Mr. Sankey's work in this country, disappointment has been expressed that many of the churches do not seem to have had an increase to their membership traceable to your meetings; and it is added that some have been thinned rather than otherwise. I think this last item of the complaint supplies the key to the whole. The churches whose ministers and people entered with warmth and sympathy into the work, have, I believe, reaped the benefit; but those which held aloof, and pulled away the shoulder (Zech. vii. 11), may not only not have been added to, but even diminished in numbers, because many who had been accustomed to the life and energy, and to the intelligible Scriptural exposition, at the Opera House, and at the Agricultural, Bow-road, and Camberwell Halls, sought out a ministry as much after the same pattern as they could find.

It may be safely said that no minister who evidently sets forth Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and feeds the people with the milk of the Word, and with its solid food as they are able to bear it, fails to find an appreciative and increasing congregation; but the time is passing away when the people will endure to have texts cut up into wooden pegs, upon which to hang thoughts or opinions which have little or no organic connexion with them.

Urgently needed now are nursing fathers and nursing mothers, wise winners of souls, to lead into life and liberty those into whose hearts the Word has fallen and taken root. No less urgently wanted is clear, terse, forcible explanation of the great foundation truths of our most holy faith. One of the most important of these is that relating to

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF CHRIST.

While we have to hold our own against the spurious refinement which revolts from using the word "blood," we must be sure that our own teachings concerning it are according to the truth of God in his inspired Word. There is an expression in common use, Scriptural as to the letter, but I fear conveying a very unscriptural and mischievous idea. For the sake of definiteness I will refer to the hymn in which these lines occur:—

"Lord Jesus, let nothing unholy remain,
Apply thine own blood, and extract every stain."

As I understand the Gospel of God, it is not true that the blood of Christ extracts every stain, nor that the Lord Jesus applies it in any such way as is here supposed. The blood is the life of the flesh; that life was forfeited by sin. Jesus shed his blood to make expiation for sin, and we are cleansed from the guilt which lay upon us by his sacrificial, vicarious, atoning*

* It is important to remember that when we speak of "the doctrine of the atonement," we do not mean "reconciliation," but "expiation." In Rom. v. 11, the word "atonement" should be "reconciliation" (see marginal reading); and in Heb. ii. 17, the word "reconciliation" should be "atonement" or "expiation" (see Alford). Reconciliation between God and us is one of the many blessings resulting from the atonement made by the death of our Lord Jesus Christ.

death. Then the blood purges the conscience; because when a sinner knows that his sin has been atoned for to the full, and the utmost requirement of justice met and suffered, he has, he can have, "no more conscience of sins." So, if a believer has sinned, when he confesses his sin, and remembers the shed blood of Calvary, and seeks pardon on that ground alone, he has forgiveness instantly. Thus the blood washes whiter than snow.

But again, and further. When Jesus died for us, and rose again for us, we died and rose again in Him. So that by his death (that is, by his blood) and resurrection, we pass out of our former condition into a new condition of resurrection-life. We are "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." It is not my having every stain extracted from me as a child of the first Adam, but my dying out of my first Adam state of sin, and my being raised into an altogether new state by union with the risen Jesus. We "are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."

If there is a speck of rottenness in an apple, no power in nature can restore it, or extract the stain, without taking away from the substance of the apple. The only way in which it can really be restored is by its rotting away in the ground—dying, and rising again through the apple-tree, and hanging on the bough a new apple.

Judaism supposed the purifying of human nature to be possible; it was one unceasing wash, wash, wash—"divers washings, carnal ordinances"—that is, ordinances pertaining to the flesh—"which could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience"; could not "extract every stain." We must die and rise again—a new creation in Christ Jesus; and a new creature is a very different thing from the old creature with every stain extracted. Legality is the attempt to extract every stain from old Adam, leprous from heart to skin; from head to foot full of wounds and bruises and putrefying sores. Christianity is the giving over the corrupt thing to death and the grave, and raising up a new creation from the One Seed, Jesus Christ, the only living Corn of wheat out of the whole harvest of mankind.

In order to explain how the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from sin, some brethren whom I hold in highest esteem and love for their work's sake, use the following illustration:—In refining sugar the molasses are boiled, in order that the impurity which is in them may rise to the surface as scum. Blood of bullocks is then thrown in, and the impurity having an affinity for the blood, and the blood for it, the scum unites with the blood, or with the albumen in the blood, and the sugar is freed from its uncleanness.†

Now, this supposes that the sin is capable of being separated from the flesh (i.e., from fallen human nature); and that there is a process by which it may be extracted from it; that the precious blood of Christ, by some chemical or chemico-spiritual quality

† I pass over the shocking untruth suggested in this illustration, that the life-blood of Him, who, though in the likeness of sinful flesh, knew no sin, could have had an affinity with sin, because no Christian could believe that which would unsave the Saviour, un-Christ the Christ, deny the divinity of the Son of God; but let us beware, lest, in adopting illustrations not used by the Holy Spirit of truth, we destroy the foundations beneath our feet. I know this dreadful thought to be utterly repugnant to the hearts of those who may have supposed the above to be a vivid and valid illustration of the truth. I also overlook the fallacy that there is an analogy between the dead blood of slain animals and the newly shed blood of His Cross, for "the blood of Christ" has invariable and exclusive reference to his death, when He bore our sins in his own body on the tree.

inherent in it, unites itself with the sin in the flesh, and the sin with it, and that thus the flesh is freed from sin. I see no other way in which the parallel lines of the illustration and the truth supposed to be illustrated could be drawn out. But my deep conviction is that it would be difficult more successfully to misrepresent the way in which the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. For sin is inseparable from the flesh; fallen human nature is sinful flesh. It is diseased throughout. No fire of tribulation can throw the scum of sin to the surface, and so expel it. It is a cancerous disease which has vitiated the blood incurably. It has leavened the whole lump; and no process can unleaven that which is leavened. The virus cannot be sucked from poisoned blood. The Ethiopian cannot change his skin, nor the leopard his spots. A serpent cannot be washed into a dove. "Though thou take thee nitre and much soap [i.e., mineral alkali and vegetable alkali, representing all the cleansing power in both those kingdoms], yet thine iniquity is marked before Me," saith the Lord. The filth of the daughters of Zion can indeed be washed away, and the blood of Jerusalem purged, but only by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. The leprous garment, washed and washed again, must be burnt at last—there is no cure. Human nature can only be purged by fire; there is no washing but in the laver of regeneration. As many as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. (Jer. ii. 22; Isa. iv. 4; Lev. xiii.; Titus iii.; Rom. vi.)

Therefore, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned (damnatorily judged) sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Jehovah laid upon Him the iniquity of us all—made his soul an offering for sin; and the incarnate Son poured out his soul unto death: that we, having been crucified with Him, and raised with Him, saved by baptism into his death—NOT the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ—might be able to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear. The only answer and the only reason of our hope is, not every stain extracted from our nature, but the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and we, members of his body, even of his flesh and of his bones—a new creation,—old things passed away, all things become new. (Rom. viii.; 1 Pet. iv.; Eph. v.; 2 Cor. v.)

To the only wise God our Saviour be glory and Majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

BIRMINGHAM.—Mr. Joseph Armishaw has been carrying on a work among young men here since the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The meetings, which have been productive of good and well-ascertained results, are now held in the Lecture-room of the Little Cannon-street Chapel. The sympathetic co-operation and aid of Christian friends in the locality are much desired.

HANSLOPE.—Special evangelistic services have been held here in the Long-street Baptist Chapel, conducted by Ned Weeks, of London, and T. Leadbeater, of Northampton. Every night the work has gone on, and anxious ones were brought to trust in the Crucified One. During each day houses were visited, and many were pointed to Christ in their own homes. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that this may be the beginning of better days in Hanslope? J. S.

ISAIAH LIII. 6 IN THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

OUR view of this passage differs from that of our good friend Rev. J. Macpherson and many other able men who think with him. We do not, however, consider it desirable now to discuss the subject. Mr. Macpherson, retaining his own opinion, but not wishing to raise a disputed question, has kindly consented to omit the reference to the above verse, and in his forthcoming volume the paragraph in which it occurred will read as follows:—

"8. Beware of using unsuitable texts or misapplying Scripture. Do not apply to an inquirer the word spoken only to a believer. To misapply a text may be to mislead a soul. To misinterpret a Scripture may lead the wanderer further astray. Have a care, lest, in your eagerness to explain a difficult passage and comfort the anxious soul, your teaching should in effect be, 'Believe that you are saved, and you are saved.' It is another and a very different thing to say, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' The sinner's warrant to take Christ may be found in a hundred Scriptures as clear as day, without our having recourse to those passages that give rise to the most profound and difficult questions in theology."

SERMON-LANE MISSION, ISLINGTON.

FREE SUNDAY MORNING BREAKFASTS.

DURING the winter months of 1869 over 500 of the very poor of London attended our breakfast meetings and the preaching of the Gospel. In 1870 there were over 600; in 1871 over 800; in 1872 over 1200; in 1873 over 2000; and in 1874 over 1400. By these means over 9000 souls of the poorest of the poor, shoeless and ragged, have been gathered, and have listened to the preaching of the Gospel. By these means fourteen idle lads who were a pest and disgrace to society have gone as sailors to Portland on two of H.M.'s ships, and are distributed over different parts of the world. Over twenty thieves from our prisons have been made honest, and some decided for God. Many young prodigals have been reconciled to their parents, and sent home. Many that lived upon begging are now working to gain an honest living, and helping others. Twenty-nine of these poor creatures I have been with in their last dying moments, and closed their eyes in death—many blessing and praising God that they ever entered the Mission Hall through these breakfasts. At the commencement of this year we were out of debt, but at the present time we have a debt of about £60, which is a burden to us. The doors of our Mission, I fear, must be closed against these poor creatures this winter unless funds are forthcoming. The cost of the breakfasts last winter was over £25.

EMIGRATION HOME FOR ORPHAN AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

THIS quiet but useful institution is connected with Miss Macpherson's scheme, but managed in Edinburgh independently. The fourth report is now issued, and we are delighted to mark its healthy and cheerful tone. Sixty-seven children have been received into the Home at 6, Lauriston-lane; they have been disposed of in various ways, while twenty-five have been sent to Canada. The report assures its readers that four years' experience of the scheme has only deepened the conviction of its promoters of its value. The letters from Canada, giving an account of the children there, are deeply interesting, especially those that describe cases of adoption. There have been many tokens of the Divine blessing, both in the temporal and the spiritual aspects of the undertaking. The requisite income has been sent in unsolicited, and most encouraging confidence shown by Christian friends in the conductors of the work. Co-operation is maintained with Mr. Muir, of Leith, whose home for boys corresponds to this one chiefly for girls. Copies of the report will be forwarded free on application to Mrs. Blaikie, 9, Palmerston-road, Edinburgh, to whom contributions in aid may be sent. Christian friends will kindly remember this work in prayer.

HOXTON.—A few business men in this locality took "The Varieties Theatre," Pitfield-street, for services on the Sunday evenings in October last. A correspondent says:—"Truly God has been with us, making us to realize his presence and power in the meetings, and giving us souls for our hire. . . . We have decided on taking this place for the season up to the end of March. We have commenced a 'Gospel Bible-class' from 3 till 4.30 in the same place, and we were much encouraged to find that nearly fifty came together round the Word on the first occasion. . . . Any of the Lord's people who may be led to help in this labour of love may communicate with Mr. Hy. Martin, 163, New North-road, N."

THE DESTITUTE POOR OF LONDON.

On Friday evening a free tea was given by the Homerton Mission, at Moorgate-street Hall, London-wall, to about 700 of the destitute poor of Spitalfields, Whitechapel, and the neighbourhood, this gathering being part of an extensive movement, which consists in the frequent assembling for similar treats of persons in that condition of life in the poorer districts of the metropolis, breakfasts and dinners, as well as teas, being included in the scheme of the promoters. All those who were collected together on Friday night were admitted by card, invitations having been previously given to them through the medium of benevolent persons well acquainted with the thickly-peopled localities from which they came.

For nearly an hour before the doors were opened there was considerable pressure outside; but, with the aid of half-a-dozen stalwart policemen, who acted as a species of human turnstiles, the crowd were all ultimately admitted in good order. On entering the hall each person received a mug, and with this in hand was shown to a seat. The whole of the lower part, seating about 500 in pews without doors (the hall was up to a few years ago a Presbyterian chapel), was quickly filled, and the gallery received the overflow. Males and females sat for the most part on separate sides of the hall, and the behaviour of both was entirely satisfactory. There was a great variety of age, clothing, and general appearance. Some of the men were barefoot—scarcely any seemed ragged; and a few of the younger ones presented bodily frames on which a recruiting sergeant might well have cast a longing eye. Somehow or other, the girls and women all seemed decently clad, while many of the males were barefoot, and the majority were wretchedly attired.

As the guests of the occasion entered, and were getting seated, a small choir of ladies sang two or three well-known hymns to tunes which are associated in the public mind with the names of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and many of the new-comers joined in singing "In the sweet by-and-by," and other familiar refrains. Tea was served in a most orderly and satisfactory manner. First, every person, including even young children, received a paper bag containing bread and butter and cake, and this solid food was quietly followed by the tea itself, the cups being filled, and in most cases refilled, from large cans, which passed rapidly from one end of the hall to the other. Addresses of a religious and practical character were afterwards delivered by Mr. Robert Paton, Dr. Barnardo, and Mr. J. J. Jones, by the last-mentioned of whom the whole affair was managed on behalf of the Homerton Mission, and more hymns were sung. It is intended to give similar treats to poor persons weekly throughout the winter if sufficient funds are supplied. Subscriptions may be forwarded to Mr. John James Jones, 25, College-avenue, Uxbridge-road, Lower Clapton.—Daily News.

"OUR GREAT SCHOOL-BOOK."—Mrs. Meredith favours us with a paper bearing this title, for which we are sorry not to be able to afford space. She pleads for greater encouragement being given, and facilities afforded, for those who love the Bible becoming teachers in our schools, so that they may promote the knowledge of the Scriptures among the young. She has a training-college for teachers in connexion with her village school, Addlestone, Surrey, and she will gladly help any who may desire to be useful in the way indicated.

Mr. GEORGE BREALEY, who lately held services at Staines and Windsor, writes:—"You will rejoice to hear of much blessing at Staines. Many souls, we trust, were led to the Saviour during the eight days' meetings held there; some of these were deeply interesting cases. I trust there were some souls also blessed at Windsor during the three days I was there. I have returned home for winter work on the Blackdown Hills. I rejoice that some fresh blessing has been seen here of late among the young during my absence. We are looking for many souls to be converted during the coming winter in all parts of this Mission."

"HOW TO REACH THE MASSES."—"J. H." suggests—as a means of reaching many thousands who would not voluntarily come within hearing of the Gospel invitation—the insertion of short telling passages of Scripture as advertisements in those newspapers that have a wide circulation among the working classes in our population. Our pages have recently contained instances of blessing to individual souls through the reading of such texts prominently displayed, and we might justly hope that like results would follow the reading, in unexpected places, of these brief but pointed messages of God's love to sinners. We commend the suggestion to any who are looking out for some fresh channel of usefulness in the Lord's vineyard. The entrapment of Rev. Mr. Carter in this direction—often mentioned in our columns as a "New Channel of Doing Good,"—has borne good fruit.

CONFERENCE AT NEWTON ABBOT.

A SERIES of meetings for the study of Scripture relating to holiness of life were held here on the 8th inst. and the four following days. The principal speakers were Rev. C. Graham, J. Turner, and E. Brewer. The Rev. J. Mountain conducted the praise of the gathered Christians with the aid of a local choir. Visitors were present from Torquay, Dartmouth, Teignmouth, Exeter, and other places. The meetings increased in interest day by day, and at the evening conferences the hall was densely crowded. The various speakers set forth with clearness and force the teaching of the Word respecting the nature and necessity of holiness, and the fulness that is in Christ, who is made unto his people "Wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The power of God was felt to be present as these great truths were brought out, and shown to be everywhere the teaching of the Old and New Testaments. The closing meeting was thrown open for testimony, and many spoke of the great blessing which they had realised during the week. Prejudices had been broken down, difficulties removed, and many Christians had been led to surrender themselves fully to the Lord.

MR. AND MRS. BARBIER'S MISSION.

MR. J. WEATHERLEY writes:—"For many years our brother held his meetings in Grafton Hall, but when I was obliged to give up that building, he removed to a school-room in St. Martin's-street, Leicester-square, for which he has to pay £14 a year rent. It is far from convenient, but there, however, he carries on a Sunday-school, and a service with a Gospel address every Sunday and Wednesday evening. Besides these he holds services at Collier-street, Pentonville-road, every Sunday morning and Friday evening, and he is continually hearing of blessing resulting from these services."

"Madame Barbier also conducts a Home for French and Swiss Governesses, Nursery and Ladies' Maids, where not only do these poor unprotected ones find a shelter and motherly counsel, but are directed to 'the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.'"

"In addition to this regular work carried on by our friends, they lay themselves out to visit French-speaking families in various parts of London, and in their name I would say that if any district visitor or city missionary requires aid in this way he will always find a hearty response on applying to Mons. Barbier, at 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place. Our brother has no committee, and is entirely dependent for his own maintenance, as well as for the support of the Home and the Mission-room, upon what the Lord's people send him. I am sure there are many who would like to know that at the present time his faith is sorely tried in this matter."

"Will any French-speaking Christians give their services to M. Barbier for Sunday-school work? The hour is from six to seven in the evening."

TEMPERANCE AND THE ROYAL NAVY.—Miss Weston requests us to correct an impression which, she says, may be conveyed by the closing words of our report of her remarks with respect to chaplains on board H.M.'s ships, at the women's temperance meeting, in our last issue, and which was not intended by her. She says:—"My argument was not to show that no work for Christ could be done without temperance, but that double the amount could be done with it,—not that a non-abstaining chaplain was 'almost powerless for good,' &c., but that an abstaining one had a power and usefulness and hold over the men which could not be over-estimated. The importance of temperance work is being felt and dealt with in various ways by the clergy ashore and afloat. I therefore specially wish to avoid any misconception on this point."

ZENANA WORK.—Miss Sarah A. Higge, of the Lodiana Zenana Mission, writes to us making reference to a paragraph we lately extracted from an Indian paper, which recommended the adoption of the School-system in Zenana teaching. She says:—"Except in a very few places, the time for this has not yet come. It is still a great concession for a European lady to be permitted to visit the families of those in the higher ranks for the purpose of giving instruction, and it will in all probability be some time before education will be so much appreciated as to lead native ladies to come out of their seclusion, and seek it for themselves. But, however this may be, the first and great object of real Zenana work is the spiritual enlightenment of the women of this country. A high secular education may be left for a future consideration. House-visitation must still remain the best way of imparting religious instruction. Let schools be organized by all means wherever practicable, but let not the visitation of the family be discontinued. Let it rather be increased a thousandfold. What a vast amount of misery might be relieved were there only more loving hearts here to do it!" Mrs. Weitbrecht sends us an earnest request that this Mission should be specially remembered by Christians who unite in prayer on the 30th inst., the day of prayer for missions.

MISS DANIELL'S WORK AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

THE readers of THE CHRISTIAN have always manifested such a real interest in the Aldershot Mission Hall and Soldiers' Home, that I feel sure I may bring before them some special needs that are just now pressing upon me.

Most of those acquainted with the work know that nearly three years ago I reopened the Cottage Home, established some years ago by my mother for the rescue of young women. I have just now four girls for whom I am seeking situations, and one of my objects in writing is to induce friends to assist me in procuring suitable places for them.

The second need concerns the soldiers' wives—those married "without leave," and consequently, not "on the strength" of their respective regiments. At this season of the year their difficulties and poverty are very great, and my longing desire is to help them as much as possible during the winter. One of the most effectual ways of doing this is by giving them needlework. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN kindly help me to do so by sending plenty of orders for ready-made clothing? I should be particularly thankful to have orders for clothes for the poor, of unbleached calico, coloured and other flannel potticoats, &c., as many of the women who need this help the most are unable to do fine work. If those who are now preparing Christmas gifts for their poorer brothers and sisters would kindly remember the Aldershot "Soldiers' Wife Aid Society," and send me orders for any women's and children's underclothing, men's and boys' shirts, children's frocks, &c., they would be doing a double charity, and rendering me very essential service in this branch of my work. As some of the poor women can do really good, fine work, we can also supply better things, suitable for ladies and children, if required.

My third need is for the Mission Hall itself—the "dear old Hall," as many so fondly call it. Well, dear friends, it needs repainting, papering, varnishing, and cleaning throughout. The estimate has come in for the work, and amounts to nearly £200. I cannot go into debt, so I bring the matter before those who can help, and leave it with them, assured that the Lord will send the means that the necessary work may be done.

I would also mention the work carried on for so many years in the village missions established by my mother long before the one at Aldershot. They are still carried on, and the inroad of Romanism in one makes the work increasingly needed. During the past year we have been much encouraged by seeing souls brought to God.

In conclusion, I am thankful to say that the mother house at Aldershot and my branch homes at Colchester, Manchester, and Plymouth, are being continually used by God as the birth-place of souls, and I ask the prayers of the Lord's people that this may be the case in ever-increasing measure.

Mission Hall, Aldershot, Nov. 19.

G. F. S. DANIELL.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—Commander Dawson, the Secretary of this Mission, has issued an appeal that earnest prayer on its behalf may be offered to God, especially on Nov. 30, the day appointed by the Church of England for prayer for missions.

PLAISTOW HOME FOR DESTITUTE GIRLS.—The Rev. John T. Layard, of Swaffield Rectory, North Walsham, writes to us enforcing the appeal on behalf of this excellent Home we inserted last week. He says:—"During a visit of several weeks at Plaistow last July and August I had constant opportunities of watching and inspecting the whole economy of that Christian Home. I saw the little ones during their lesson and play-hours, when at their meals, and also at their little daily noon-hour meeting for prayer, and could never leave the house without praising the Lord for his goodness to these eight-and-forty helpless lambs. Miss Lee was then far from strong, and I could see that anxiety about the home pressed heavily upon her." We trust the liberality of sympathizing friends will prevent the breaking up of an institution such as this. We cannot spare one of them.

HIGH TIDES.—A correspondent in Hastings writes:—"Disastrous as has been the concurrence of a strong westerly wind with the spring tides of this month, it should be known that we are threatened with a still higher tide on or about Dec. 15. If the wind should blow from the same quarter with similar violence, it needs no prophetic skill to foretell the result. In addition to all possible precautions, should not the prayers of God's people be offered in concert to Him who 'holds the winds in his fists,' that this terrible combination of forces may be graciously guided and restrained, so as to spare the many sufferers a repetition of the calamity? In the Times of Thursday, at the foot of the weather article, seventh page, is a statement of the astronomical facts on which this warning is based. The terrible state of things brought about in one short hour last Sunday at Hastings is indescribable."

TO OUR READERS.

OUR present issue consists of only sixteen pages, instead of the usual twenty-four. As a consequence of this temporary alteration, a large number of interesting communications are omitted; for this we must ask the forbearance of our contributors. Our next week's number, however, will contain thirty-two pages (price one penny), and will include an extended report of the Convention held this week in Dublin, besides other evangelistic intelligence and articles of special interest. Our readers will therefore sustain no disadvantage through the unavoidable alteration in size this week.

REV. W. H. M. AITKEN'S MISSION WORK.

THIS devoted minister, who is now wholly occupied in evangelistic work, has been holding a series of services at Radcliffe, near Nottingham. A correspondent of the Nottingham Daily Guardian thus writes respecting the meetings:—

"It was indeed a time of blessing to us. Night after night the church was crowded with attentive hearers, and great power was given to the mission preacher. In the afternoon anxious souls sought for, and in most cases found, joy and peace in believing. The reality of the work was made the more manifest by the kind and Christian feeling exhibited throughout. Men and women of different views, aims, and opinions, all united in promoting the good work. Those who before time regarded one another with suspicion or dislike were seen to ask for mutual forgiveness and reconciliation. Unity and Christian love now exist where before were dissension and coldness. God's people have been deeply moved to live a higher and holier life. Many undecided ones have been brought to decision, and more wanderers have been brought into the fold. It has been a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and we trust its effects will be felt for years to come.

"It was a glorious sight on Sunday morning last to see more than double the usual number of communicants coming reverently to partake of the tokens of a Saviour's dying love. These are not exaggerated statements—nay, I have purposely kept even below what I feel, and what I know to be felt by others. Mr. Aitken was deeply gratified with the results of the mission here, and has gone with great hopes to Nottingham. Let me entreat all to hold up his hands while he proclaims the welcome message of a Saviour's love. It is high time that our Church throw off her miserable conventional sense of propriety, which in many cases amounted to prudishness and formality. I thank God a new era has dawned, and in its light one shall walk and live."

We are gratified to find that, previous to the Nottingham Mission (Nov. 14 to 21), a fraternal letter, signed jointly by thirty of the leading Nonconformist ministers of the town, was sent to the Nottingham clergy, expressing a prayerful interest in the proposed services, and a strong desire for their success. The clergy in the same brotherly spirit returned a message of thanks.

GLOUCESTER.—A correspondent writes:—"From Nov. 7 to 14 the Society of Friends in this town have been holding what is termed a 'general meeting,' the object of which was the spread of the Redeemer's Kingdom. Three services were held on each of the Sundays. Every week-evening, at 7.30, there was an evangelistic service in the Grey Friars' Meeting-house, besides other meetings in mission-rooms. A mothers' meeting, a children's meeting, a meeting to consider the relation of the Christian Church to temperance, and one for women's work in the great harvest-field, were held in the afternoons. In the mornings there were Bible-reading and fellowship meetings. The result of the general meeting is that the Lord's work has been deepened by his grace in very many hearts far beyond the borders of the Society that instituted it, many striking evidences of this having been vouchsafed." We are glad to know that the work commenced here by our brother Major Cole is being sustained and blessed to the ingathering of precious souls.

MUMBLES.—The village of Mumbles, four miles from Swansea, and overlooking Swansea Bay, has lately been visited with very much blessing. Three weeks ago the Gospel-tent, which has been for some time at Swansea, and of which an account was given in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN, was brought here, and services have been held for more than a fortnight, which have resulted in very great success. Never have such gatherings been seen in Mumbles before. Considering that the population of the place is only about 3000, it is no small cause for encouragement and gratitude to God that 1300 people have been gathered to hear the Gospel. Most encouraging of all, many souls have been won for Jesus. For months some have been praying for revival, and now the answer has come—an abundant answer, far exceeding our highest expectations, and rebuking our unbelief. To God be all the praise! Most of the converts are young persons. Many of the cases are very clear and encouraging.

HENRY KIDNER, Baptist Minister.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BROOKLYN.

INTERESTING reports of the Brooklyn meetings continue to appear daily in the New York press. As a specimen, we give extracts from the account of the services on Thursday, 4th inst.:

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are satisfied that a deep religious spirit has been awakened and cannot be measured. "It is a question," said Mr. Sankey, "between the individual and his God, and the records are kept nowhere but in Heaven. We know," he added, "that our work in Brooklyn is bearing fruit bountifully, and believe the gathering of it will not cease with our departure for Philadelphia."

The evangelists regard the success of the morning services as one of the most encouraging evidences of the earnestness of the Brooklyn people in this movement. In London the same services were held at noon, and yet they did not meet with better success. The object of holding them at the early hour of eight in the morning in this country is to accommodate men who do business in New York. Although an extremely inconvenient hour in all other respects, it was deemed the best time in the day for this one reason. Yesterday brought out the thoroughly earnest workers, and the fervour shown in the meetings bespoke their presence. There was a deep spirit of inquiry and prayerfulness everywhere prevalent. The darkness of the morning added to the solemnity of the occasion, and, when the Rev. Dr. Thomas opened in prayer, a pervasive disposition to thoughtful meditation was noticeable. A hundred requests for prayer were read, Mr. Moody offering a short, earnest supplication in their behalf. Mr. Sankey then followed with the hymn "I have a Saviour," and asked the congregation to join him in the chorus very softly, "For you I am praying." Following this, Mr. Moody read Ps. lxxxiv., beginning at verse 6: "Who passing through the valley of Baca make it a well; the rain also filleth the pools." He commented on the verses as he proceeded, and told of a lost boy, who, after twenty years' wandering, found his home in answer to his prayers. Alderman Richardson was present and made an extended prayer, preceding it with a few words concerning the present troubles in the Hanson-place Baptist Church. Mr. George Needham spoke on the three conditions of prayer—"Ask in My name," "Abide in Me," and "Whatsoever things ye shall ask, believing, ye shall receive." Several persons arose and expressed a desire for entire personal consecration to Christ, and Mr. Moody offered prayer.

Perhaps Mr. Moody's sermon last evening may be called the best that he has preached; certainly none has been more effective. His zeal was quickened into a fervid glow, melting sometimes into tearful emotion; and his listeners gave a close attention which knew no cessation, save in moments of weeping. The Rink was completely filled with an audience largely drawn from the middle and lower classes. There were nearly as many men as women present, but persons of middle and advanced age were in excess. Mr. Moody had previously requested the church-goers to attend less frequently, and thus afford an opportunity for the class he most desires to reach. It would seem, from the nature of the congregation last evening, that his request had been granted, and the desired effect produced. It was a very rare occurrence, indeed, to find people present from the church-going community. Mr. Moody evidently saw this decided change, for he has never preached with so much effect or so well.

The sermon last evening was, as usual, drawn from the chapter read in the early part of the meeting. This was Isa. lv., the text being from the 6th verse: "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near." Mr. Moody said he could tell the day and the hour when any man would be saved. And yet he was no prophet, neither was he the son of a prophet. The Bible told when it was. It was in Jeremiah: "Ye will find Him when ye seek Him with all your heart." "There is not a man in this Rink," said Mr. Moody, "who will go away unsaved if he wishes salvation above everything else. But ah! you cannot give up the world. How many would be here to-night if they could have made $10,000 by going down to the City Hall? I venture to say there wouldn't be three. Men are in earnest about business, but when you talk to them about the salvation of souls, they say—'Oh, this man is crazy!' and 'Oh, I hope you are not going to hear that fanatic!' Oh, my friends, if men ever become in earnest for their soul's salvation above everything else, it will not take long to find the Kingdom of God." Mr. Moody related several pathetic stories of conversion. One was of a lady in England who for a long time refused to be converted, but continually attended the meetings, and at last found her Saviour. He read a letter he had lately received, in which was this passage: "My dear wife passed away to rest on the 19th, after a three days' illness. But the knowledge that she is with Jesus will always be my consolation." Mr. Moody said that when he read that letter, he thanked God that he went to England.

Mr. Sankey sang two solos, both of which have always been favourites. One of them, "Sowing the seed," he sang with touching effect; and everyone was moved when he sang the third stanza—

"Sowing the seed of a lingering pain," &c.

There was also a marked feeling awakened when he sang the hymn—

"Almost persuaded now to believe:
Almost persuaded Christ to receive;"

and closing—

"Sad, sad, that bitter wail—
Almost—but lost!"

After the meeting closed, there was an earnest prayer-meeting in the Rink, and the inquiry and young men's meetings were also very well attended.

The following excellent summary is from a Philadelphia contemporary:—

The interest in the meetings led by Mr. Moody in Brooklyn suffers no diminution. A marked test of this was given on election day—Tuesday, Nov. 2. Notwithstanding the excitements of a political contest, the attendance at the meetings, both morning and afternoon, of that day was large as usual.

All classes are included in these gatherings. The prominent Brooklyn pastors attend with more or less regularity, while eminent clergymen from New York and a distance are commonly present. Yet the Brooklyn pastors assume no special responsibility for the meetings, but leave them more and more in the hands of Mr. Moody—with whom they heartily cooperate as occasion calls.

ALL DENOMINATIONS ARE REPRESENTED

at these meetings as interested hearers; and, more than this, many who are known by no Christian name, who are not in habits of attendance at any sanctuary, gather to hear the Gospel preached by this evangelist. The attendance of non-church-goers is now relatively larger than at first. This is by the particular request of Mr. Moody, who urges Christians not to crowd his meetings, but to give place to those who have greater need of them.

There are special meetings for women and again for men, as well as meetings common to all. Besides the meetings at the Rink and the Tabernacle, there are overflow meetings in neighbouring churches. Yet, with all this multiplying of services, the crowds still gather, and day after day the numbers hold good as before.

INQUIRY-MEETINGS

follow the preaching and prayer-meeting services. At these Mr. Moody sees personally as many seekers of the truth as he can, and his co-workers minister counsel to the others. Besides the Brooklyn pastors who aid him in all this, he has special help from Mr. George C. Needham, the evangelist, whom he induced to postpone his trip to England that he might assist him in his Brooklyn work, and from Rev. Charles M. Morton, whom Mr. Moody was instrumental in bringing into the Lord's service in Chicago, and who has been much with him in former evangelistic labours.

THE SINGING BY MR. SANKEY is quite as prominent a feature here, where the modern Sunday-school music is so familiar, as it was in Great Britain, where it had the advantage of greater novelty. The sweetness, and purity, and distinctness, and simplicity of his singing, and his evident sincerity and unction, give a power to his now well-known hymns such as has not been witnessed before in any solo religious singing.

Among the hymns which Mr. Sankey sings with marvellous power are "The ninety and nine," "Prodigal child, come home," "Almost persuaded," "Hold the fort," "Knocking, knocking, Who is there?" "I left it all with Jesus," "I have a Saviour," "Sowing the seed," "Nothing but leaves," "Go bury thy sorrow," and "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Mr. Sankey's voice has suffered somewhat from the keen Brooklyn air, and he has been necessitated to exercise unusual care to avoid serious trouble from it. But he has thus far been able to use it daily, and with unvarying power over his hearers.

The congregational singing has been delightful, both when led by Mr. Sankey and when the choir of earnest Christian singers have led it. Singing by the congregation commonly occupies the time while the assembly is gathering, and before Messrs. Moody and Sankey make their appearance, and the soul of worship is in this singing.

APPARENT RESULTS.

While it is yet quite too soon to say what is to come of all these meetings, it is not too soon to say that much good has already come of them. Very many are rejoicing in newly found salvation through this agency. Mr. Moody thinks that at no former scene of his labours was more apparent good accomplished in the first two weeks than in Brooklyn. He is confident that the work thus begun will continue when he is elsewhere. The number of inquirers is large. The requests for prayer are numerous and varied day by day, and the reported answers to prayer are many and assuring.

Moreover, the Brooklyn churches are aroused to new effort and encouraged to new faith. The pastors and people there have not given over all Christian work into the hands of the evangelists; on the contrary, they are more active and earnest, and more hopeful than before in their own fields of labour.

There is a gain also throughout the country. The religious and secular press of the metropolis unite in spreading the news of God's work in Brooklyn, and thus in preaching the Gospel widely and effectively. The sermons of Mr. Moody are all of them outlined in the leading New York dailies, while some of them are reported in full. Mr. Sankey's hymns are also given in these papers, and in the various religious weeklies. Far and near God's people are stimulated and cheered, and sinners are aroused. The influence of these meetings is even now felt for good more or less throughout the country.

It is clear now to some faint-hearted ones that God can work as easily and as powerfully as in olden time, that the "oppositions of science, falsely so called," have neither destroyed the foundations of the Christian's faith nor made it impossible for multitudes to hear gladly the simple story of salvation for the lost through faith in a crucified Redeemer. The freshly established fact that such preaching as Mr. Moody's can in America so attract such audiences as gather to hear him day by day, is a result for which every lover of God's truth has reason to be profoundly grateful to God. The Gospel of Christ has its old fulness, its old fitness, its old power in the world.

KINGSLAND GOSPEL MISSION.—The anniversary of our new hall happens on Sunday, Nov. 28, when it is purposed (D.V.) to have a special effort made all day. Gospel tracts and pecuniary help are earnestly needed for this unobtrusive labour, whose records are unknown, yet well known. W. CHORLEY.

PROVIDENCE CHAPEL.—The members of this congregation, among whom Rev. W. Cuff has laboured so successfully, are making a strong endeavour to build a new place of worship sufficiently large to accommodate the increasing numbers who gather to profit by our brother's earnest ministry.

A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS will be held (D.V.) at Mildmay-park Conference Hall (near the Canonbury Station), on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 25, at half-past three, to consider the subject of tract distribution in the metropolis during the winter. Captain Moreton will take the chair. All are invited.

ESSEX.—Some time ago, a gentleman, living about two miles from Romford, Essex, opened a room for religious services, and very soon a good number assembled every Sunday to hear the Gospel preached. Some who had not been in a place of worship for years now attend regularly. The numbers have so increased that it is necessary to have a larger place, and the gentleman is erecting an iron building, to hold over 200 people, which he hopes will be finished and opened by Christmas. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray earnestly that God will own the preaching of his Word, and pour out his blessing in this dark corner to the salvation of very many precious souls this winter? In Brentwood, about six miles from here, a few devoted Christians are making an effort to do good. They have taken the Town Hall in that place for six months, and are holding regular services. Will your readers unite with us in earnest prayer that God will bless his work, and crown the labours of his servants with abundant success there also? E. T.

COBURG HOME.—I would ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that, if they have any old clothes to dispose of, they would remember the Coburg Home. It is an institution where fifty orphan or destitute girls are trained for service. Any kind of clothes would be most thankfully received, as, if not suitable for the children, they can be sold. We much need help, as many distressing applications have to be refused on account of want of funds; and friends would help us much in this manner. Parcels to be sent to Miss Ellis, Coburg Home, Elsham-road, Kensington.

EDITH A. CAMPBELL, Hon. Sec.

"YOUR FATHER KNOWETH."

THIS wondrous life of mine
Thou gavest me:
In every step of it
What love I see!
Constant, compassionating care,
Thy love, my Heavenly Father, there!
Each step has not been smooth;
Trials have lent
Their gloom and shadows deep;
But all were sent
To bring me nearer, Lord, to Thee—
Thy tenderness in all the way I see.
And now at thy dear feet
Once more I fall,
To give Thee, Lord, my life—
Yes,—take it all!
It has been thine for many a year—
Yet not, my Father, wholly thine, I fear.
The world, its cares and joys,
Within my heart
Have had too dear a home,
Too large a part;
But now let nothing have a share—
Create Thyself a perfect temple there!
Help me, O Lord, to find,
In all my life,
In duties great or small,
Or in the strife
With my heart's sin, or e'en in pain,
A sacrifice which Thou wilt not disdain.
Oh! Jesus, let thy life
In my life live;—
A consecrated heart,
My Master, give!
In life, in death, let this my glory be:
I am my Lord's for all eternity!

FLOOD AT NINE ELMS.—Mrs. Meredith writes:—"Friends are so kindly inquiring about our state during the raging visitation of flood, that I feel anxious to let it be known that we were, by the tender hand of our God, entirely preserved. While all around was covered with water, we were dry in our whole premises."

PROSPECT-TERRACE MISSION.—Rev. H. E. Stone, 88, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N., who lately appealed in our columns on behalf of this Mission, writes expressing thankfulness for the support received from Christian friends, and says: "Some of the worst drunkards have been reached, and the work promises to be one of special blessing." Help is still wanted to provide clothes, coals, &c., for the poor.

WEEK OF PRAYER, 1876.—We are glad to know that the following gentlemen have agreed to give addresses at the London Tavern during the coming Week of Prayer:—Revs. J. P. Chown, W. Haslam, J. C. Harrison, C. D. Marston, Drs. W. P. Mackay and W. Morley Punshon.—We understand that the Evangelisation Society not having undertaken the evening meetings at St. James's Hall, they will take place, as usual, under the direction of a body of gentlemen at the West-end.

FLOWER MISSION.—A correspondent says:—"I heard from a lady at Edinburgh a day or two ago that the workers of the Flower Mission there make flower-holders for the blind, the texts being written in raised letters by pricking the back of the cards with a pin. The letters are copied from their own alphabet, the 'Moon' system being the best. I have not seen this mentioned in connexion with the Flower Mission at the Home of Industry and Mildmay-park. Perhaps some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would be glad to have this idea suggested to them. It must be such a boon and pleasure to the poor blind to be able, besides enjoying the sweet fragrance of the flowers, to trace the letters of a text surrounding them."

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—There was a large gathering of the preachers at the last monthly meeting of this Mission, held on Tuesday last, at 48, Great Marlborough-street, W. The subject considered was the scepticism, infidelity, and indifference which so largely pervade some sections of the people. Archdeacon Prest gave an able address, and the Rev. C. A. Row followed with some pertinent remarks. The meeting was enjoyed, for many felt the need of occasionally considering such important matters, with which all are more or less brought into contact. The open-air preacher does well to ignore the intruding jeer or query, but he should always be able to give an intelligent answer to the honest doubter who inquires "if these things are so."

WOMEN'S WORK FOR CHRIST.

I HAD been doing a little for Jesus, such as inviting the mothers of the Terrace where I lived to meet for prayer for an hour once a week, and having a class for boys and girls on Friday afternoons.

But, one day, a poor old man came past, singing Mr. Sankey's hymns. He had not learned the hymns properly, and his voice was tremulous, but slowly he went on singing his best. Immediately the thought occurred to me, "Shall that poor old man put me to shame?" I went out along with my two little daughters and my sister when he came opposite to my gate, and we sang along with him. Several of the neighbours looked out of their windows; others stood in their doors, and listened with wonder.

Seeing that we could get any listeners at all, it gave me great encouragement. We had a good neighbour who is mighty in prayer. My children, my sister, my neighbour, and myself knelt down in the evening, and prayed for courage and blessing on the singing. Out we went just at our own gate in the twilight, and commenced singing. At first we got a number of boys and girls who were quite delighted and listened quietly; by-and-by one and another going past stopped; nearly all the neighbours stood in their doors;—so altogether we had a large congregation.

This we did for several nights. My sister suggested that we should pray for those who gathered round. Several became anxious about their souls, and asked me if I would not have a meeting indoors. We did so, and the kitchen was filled. We read some of the Gospels, explained the lines of some of the hymns, and told the history of Daniel to the boys before singing "Dare to be a Daniel."

Although we did not say there would be a meeting next evening, the door was besieged for entrance, and this has continued for four or five nights in the week for more than two months. We have had Catholics, Protestants, and those who go nowhere. Several Catholic young women under serious impressions knelt down, and, at our request, repeated the following prayer:—"O Lord, I thank thee for giving Jesus to die for sinners. I am a sinner, and I believe He died for me. Save me and bless me, for Jesus Christ's sake, Amen." Several boys and youths about eighteen came, and were seriously impressed. We simply spoke to them of the love of God the Son in dying for sinners, drew their attention to that verse in Revelation where it is said that "Nothing shall enter that defileth," and showed the necessity of being washed in the blood.

We only spoke a little at the time for the first few nights, as part of our audience were of the very worst of society, several of them having taken part in smashing the windows of their neighbours in a late riot. Several of them came for evil intent, but as we always committed ourselves and the meeting into the hands of the Master, He kept us from the fear of man. Although naturally timid and retiring in ourselves, yet, feeling the work was the Lord's, and that He was pleased to use us in a time when He was passing by with His blessing, and that impressions are like summer fruit, which has to be used immediately, we were willing to spend and be spent for the Master. We asked several professing Christians to help us, but as there were more than a score of Catholics who came, they were afraid to come. But, thanks be to God for His keeping power, not one of them who came gave us any trouble; they listened very attentively, and we have no doubt but we shall have several of them for our crown of rejoicing.

Some of them get so delighted, that we have dispersed them three or four times; some have lingered anxiously till past ten o'clock. We have spoken and sung and prayed for three and four hours, and have scarcely felt tired. "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." M. B.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. and Mrs. Alderdice, from America, are preaching the Gospel in the Gaiety Theatre, Camden-street, Liverpool, to large congregations, with very encouraging success.

MONMOUTH.—The evangelistic work has been carried on, the meetings being well attended each evening, and crowded on Sundays at three and eight o'clock. The addresses of the agent of the Evangelization Society, Mr. Thos. Wales, have been greatly blessed. Night after night for three weeks he has been exhorting sinners to come to Christ, and through grace some have, there is reason to believe, received the truth in the love of it, and are bringing forth fruit. He is about to proceed to Abergavenny for a week's services, and Mr. George Hefford will pay Monmouth a second visit. Will our readers praise God, and continue in prayer for a still greater outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Monmouth and the neighbourhood?

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

THE anniversary of "The Ladies' Prayer-meeting" was held in this hall on Nov. 16. Mrs. Ashworth spoke a few words of loving encouragement, exhorting the ladies assembled to more united action and sympathy in work, irrespective of sect or position in life, and to take the Lord's own words as their motto—"Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Praise and thanksgiving were offered for answered prayer. Many touching cases were mentioned; that of a poor woman afflicted with blindness was particularly interesting. She came to the prayer-meeting a short time ago, that special prayer might be offered for her, that if it were God's will her sight might be restored. All sorts of remedies had been tried without effect. God most graciously answered prayer in her case: after a slight operation, she returned two days afterwards to praise God for restored sight. A lady also related that a very ungodly man had just been brought to the Saviour, through a verse of a hymn learnt at the Sunday-school forty years ago being brought to his mind with living power, bringing peace to his troubled soul. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it shall be found after many days."

It is proposed (n.v.) to hold another meeting for praise on Dec. 31, at the same hour—one till two.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN COUNCIL.

It was good to be at the last monthly meeting of workers who gathered at the Home of Industry on the 17th inst., at the invitation of Miss Macpherson. It was like to an oasis in the great surrounding desert of worldliness and vice. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and the earlier part of the evening was spent in reading the Word, in prayer, praise, and hearing of the Lord's doings among his people. Specially interesting were the reports of healing by prayer at Karl Andreas's House of Faith in Tower-street, Hackney.

But, perhaps, the pièce de résistance of the evening was the address by Mr. Grattan Guinness, on the words, "They... even as I," so oft repeated in 17th chapter of John. The union—or, perhaps, we ought to say the unity—of the believer with Christ was unfolded in words of singular force and tenderness. Our hearts glowed within us as the speaker built up on the sure foundation of Christ's own words the wondrous superstructure of the Christian life and privileges—how we, as believers, are called to association with and likeness to God in Christ; how we are partakers of the Saviour's joy; how we are called to fulfil the same commission; how we share the love wherewith the Father loves the Son; how the same glory awaits us when He takes us to be with Him where He is; and how—this was the goal of the Saviour's prayer—all things are ours, since Christ is in us, and the Father is in Christ. "I in them, and thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one."

A few timely remarks from the Chairman about the need in these days of a clearer apprehension of "foundation truths"—as, for instance, the Scriptural teaching concerning "The Kingdom," the way in which the blood of Christ "cleanseth from all sin," and the unspeakably precious and important doctrine of Christ's present office as High Priest,—brought a very profitable hour to a close.

EDGWARE.—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are asked to praise God for his goodness in answering prayer and giving an abundant blessing in Edgware. We have been enjoying two weeks of special services, conducted by the student's from Mr. Guinness's Institute, every evening except Saturday. The Congregational Church was well filled, and sometimes crowded. Many professed to have found Christ as their Saviour. A weekly Bible-meeting for men has been established. A Bible-reading for women, conducted by a lady in the village, has nearly doubled its attendance.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—Mr. Stanley, who is exploring in Africa as the Commissioner of the Daily Telegraph and New York Herald, in a recent letter states that Mt. Mtesa, the King of Uganda, with 2,000,000 subjects, is favourably disposed towards Christianity, and that advantage should be taken of this by the establishment of a well-equipped mission in his territory. The Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, E.C., we understand, have responded to this appeal. It is announced that £5000 has already been placed at their disposal.

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.—Again we request the prayers of our readers for new missionaries on their way to China. Mr. McCarthy has returned, after a very brief absence, taking with him Messrs. Turner and Budd. They travel by the French mail, which has the advantage of cheapness and speed. We anticipate their arrival in China during the first week of January. Our sisters Miss Knight and Miss Goodman, in the steamer Crocus, will probably arrive there a week or two later. In their case the absence of frequent changes and stoppages will more than compensate for the slightly longer passage.—China's Millions, Dec.

SHOWERS OF BLESSING IN CANADA.

MISS MACPHERSON, of the Home of Industry, sends us the following extracts from letters just received from different parts of Canada, which show that prayer has been heard and answered, and encourage us to ask more largely for blessing on the Dominion:—

"Call.—I trust prayer is being answered for this continent; already the Lord has begun to work in several places. There is a good work going on at a place called Moorfield, on the Grey and Bruce Line; quite a number have professed to find peace in believing. A good work is reported to be going on in Quebec, in connexion with the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Smith says there is quite an awakening in Halifax, his late field of labour.

"A meeting for Christian workers is to be held here for the first time on Thursday evening, in Knox's Church, to be continued monthly, if the Lord will. Opportunity will be given to those in any way engaged in the Lord's work to give an account of what the Lord is doing in their different spheres of labour, and by mutual prayer and exhortation to stimulate each other to renewed zeal and consecration. Mr. Rudland (one of the China Inland missionaries) has been very successful in his meetings here, where he has been endeavouring to show the great need of China's millions; some interest in the work has resulted, and I believe Mr. Claxton's Sunday-school children intend supporting a native evangelist."

"Montreal.—Have you heard of the wonderful blessing going on in Quebec? Great revival; Music Hall crowded; three meetings daily, and whole families being converted. Do pray that the blessing may extend." Last week we gave some interesting particulars of this work.

Another letter from Montreal says:—"The work has begun in the extreme east. May it overflow the whole land! Oh, how Montreal requires it! To-night we begin Gospel meetings at the Association Rooms. Much prayer has been offered, and Mr. Moody's cry at the opening of his campaign last Sunday should be that of every child of God—'We are well able to go up and possess the land.' Cease not to make mention of Montreal in your prayers."

Miss Macpherson adds:—"We are very grateful to know that our little ones are being used in the service of song, leading in prayer-meetings; and to-day we hear from one who desires to become a missionary."

[We have received from Miss Macpherson a stirring letter addressed to her sisters in Canada, which is this week crowded out, but will appear in our next.]

THE GOSPEL IN EXETER.

AFTER very much application from various Christian friends, Mr. Henry Varley consented to visit Exeter for four days' services, which commenced on Sunday morning, Nov. 14, and terminated on the following Wednesday evening.

Three Bible-readings were held in the Northernhay Rooms for believers, who were greatly refreshed and strengthened in the Word. There was a connecting-link of evidences and promises, of exhortations and warnings, of earnest solicitations and precious assurances of the boundlessness of the Father's love, that combined very valuable teaching. The room was filled each day with a deeply attentive and prayerful company, who will never forget the precious things that Mr. Varley brought out of the Book of God.

Several of the Nonconformist churches were offered for Mr. Varley's use, and some of the services were held in them, that the greater number of people might be reached; and the Lord graciously blessed the ministry, for after each service several remained for instruction, and many were brought to Jesus.

The last two evening meetings were held in the Great Victoria Hall, which was crowded with very attentive audiences. The simple preciousness of the Gospel was associated with expositions of the believer's boundless inheritance of all that the Father hath in Christ Jesus.

Among the crowd that pressed round to wish Mr. Varley God's blessing on his future work, great sorrow was expressed at his leaving; for a strong opinion prevailed that after a few days more of seed-sowing there would be a great harvest of souls gathered into God's garner. This conviction was so pressed on him that he has promised to try and visit Exeter again during the winter.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ILLUSTRATED MESSENGER. Religious Tract Society.—Contains Nos. 1 to 32 of the "Illustrated Messenger" series of papers—short and pithy Gospel stories, nicely illustrated.

WORDS OF LOVE FOR THE LITTLE ONES. Selected and arranged by L. A. MORRIS. Hatchards.—An elegant daily text-book for young children, with hymns, and a photographed frontispiece of "Christ blessing little children."

OUR OWN FIRESIDE; HOME WORDS; THE DAY OF DAYS. Edited by Rev. CHARLES BULLOCK. Nisbet.—We heartily welcome these excellent monthlies as they appear handsomely bound in their annual Christmas garb. They will all afford capital family reading for the long winter evenings.

POEMS AND TRANSLATIONS. By WILLIAM STARKET. Simpkin.—A collection of short pieces, some of them very tuneful and touching. The writer sings out of a heart attuned with the Saviour's love, and we trust the effect of their perusal on many kindred minds will carry out the idea of one of the sonnets—"Holy, happy, useful."

THE STORY OF STORIES FOR LITTLE ONES. By MARY E. S. LEATHLEY. Ward, Lock, and Tyler.—The leading Bible narratives, given chiefly in Scripture language and in a connected form, and freely interspersed with illustrations and short poems appropriate to the text. A handsome and suitable gift-book for the young.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD. By Rev. LEWIS D. DUNN. Longley.—We have seen great revivals in several places of late years, and the mere fact of such a copious literature on holiness having sprung up recently is proof that the Church is being revived in very deed. Mr. Dunn's book is written in a quiet, moderate tone, free from all controversial features. The subject is treated fully, and we think on the whole fairly, and is a useful addition to the existing literature on the subject.

ECHOES FROM A CONTINENTAL CITY AND A LONDON SUBURB. Rev. J. F. SERJEANT. Nisbet.—Yet another volume of Sermons of the usual textual pattern. They are pleasant reading, but they seem to us to lack grip and point. Sermons, we think, to be worth publishing, ought either to open up Scripture in a way that shall be for the spiritual edification of believers, or shall be instrumental in "turning a sinner from the error of his ways." There is much religious talk of a general character in these discourses, but they do not appear to us eminently calculated to accomplish either of the objects we have named.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY has just issued several new books for the young, suitable for gift-books and rewards. My Brother Paul, or a Real Hero, is a tale of the sea, which teaches that no real hero ever thinks himself brave. It is a story that will be popular with boys, and will do them good. The Old Brown Book and its Secret.—The brown book was a Bible, and the secret which it told is the subject of a very touching and somewhat romantic story. The Scripture Pocket-book and The Young People's Pocket-book are full of useful information, and are valuable for reference on many subjects, in addition to the ordinary information of an almanack.

THE REV. W. HASLAM, minister of Curzon-street Chapel, Mayfair, will conduct a mission at St. Paul's New Church, Gower-road, near the Charter House, and facing Central and Pear-tree-streets, on Sunday, Nov. 21, at 6.30, and each night in the week (Monday, 22nd, to 27th) at 8 p.m., and probably on ~~Sunday~~, 28th, at 6.30.

JEWISH HOME MISSIONS.—Rev. J. Wilkinson sends us an encouraging statement of his work among the Jews in its various departments. Speaking of the help afforded to the poor among the children of Abraham, he says—"A lady has just sent us a parcel of new underclothing for the inmates of the Home. For this we are truly thankful; but we can well dispose of much more—new or second-hand—to all sorts of needy ones; but the garments should be woollen ones for the coming winter. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN unite with us in earnest and continued prayer, specially on Saturdays, for a great awakening amongst the Jews in our own country?"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—The Committee of the Noon-day Prayer-meeting have arranged to hold an "all-day meeting," with a united tea-meeting, between the afternoon and evening services, on Thursday, Dec. 2, in the Central Hall, Hood-street; chairman, Major Cole, of Chicago. The following outline of programme will show the order of procedure:—12 to 1 p.m., "The Work of the Holy Spirit"; 1 to 2 p.m., "Conversion of the Young and how to take care of Young Converts"; 2 to 3 p.m., "How to Conduct Prayer and Inquiry-meetings"; 3 to 4 p.m., "The Difficulties of Anxious Inquirers, and how to meet them"; 4 to 6 p.m., United Tea-meeting in the Lower Hall; 6 to 7 p.m., "Lessons from the late Revival"; 7 to 8 p.m., "Obstacles to the spread of the Gospel"; 8 to 9 p.m., "Consecration." Mrs. and Miss Cole will assist Major Cole in singing at intervals. We regret that we are unable this week, through unusual lack of space, to give our customary report of Major Cole's services.

DAILY TEXTS.

"AFTERWARD."—JUDGES VII. 11.

Thurs., Nov. 25.—"After that I was turned, I repented; after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh." "Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now have I kept thy word."—Jer. xxxi. 19; Ps. cxix. 67.

Fri., 26.—"After that shall they come forth and serve Me." "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."—Acts vii. 7; Mark iv. 28.

Sat., 27.—"He doth bless the sacrifice, and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now, therefore, get you up, for about this time ye shall find him." "Then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty."—1 Sam. ix. 13; Job xxii. 26.

Sun., 28.—"Thou canest not follow Me now, but thou shalt follow Me afterwards." "Then shall every man have praise of God."—John xiii. 36; 1 Cor. iv. 5.

Mon., 29.—"No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." "Then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect unto all thy commandments."—Heb. xii. 11; Ps. cxix. 6.

Tues., 30.—"Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory." "The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you."—Ps. lxxiii. 24; 1 Pet. v. 10.

Wed., Dec. 1.—"That is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual." "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then, face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as also I am known."—1 Cor. xv. 46; xiii. 12.

"THEIR WORKS DO FOLLOW THEM."—REV. XIV. 13.

TO OUR READERS.—The Publishers will be happy to send back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN for distribution on application giving the name and address of applicant. Carriage will be paid if requested.

"EARNEST INQUIRER."—All the information you desire may be obtained on application to "The Friends' Meeting-House," Bishopsgate-street, London, E.C.

WILL THE GENTLEMAN whose letter appeared in our report of the Women's Temperance meeting at The Home of Industry last week kindly send his address to Miss Macpherson, as his card has unfortunately been lost. It is desired in order that he may be communicated with. The strictest confidence will be observed.

STAFFORD.—Mr. Cullis finished his mission here last night with a meeting for young Christians and inquirers. The largest chapel in the town was filled to overflowing, and the sorrow at his departure was universal. During the past week the large Market Hall has been filled, and on some evenings many hundreds could not enter for want of room. The blessing has been great to all classes, and many have professed to have obtained peace in believing.

The Christian.

A LETTER FROM MR. MOODY.

TO THE RECENT CONVERTS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—Sincere returning to America, in response to my invitation, I have received precious communications from many of you. Were it possible I would gladly reply to each; but as I have not opportunity for this, I shall avail myself of the columns of THE CHRISTIAN to send to you all a few words of greeting.

I praise God continually for what He has done for you in saving your souls through the blood of Jesus Christ his Son. You are much on my heart, and in my prayers. But most glad am I to know, that when I cease to remember, Jesus Himself bears each one of you in continual remembrance before his Father. You are graven upon the palms of his hands (Isa. xlix. 16), and written upon the heart of his affections (Ex. xxviii. 29); and of you He has said, "My sheep shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand" (John x. 28).

You have taken the Lord Jesus for your Redeemer, and it has become eternal salvation unto you. Now, Jesus is something more to you. He has become your High Priest. His great business in heaven to-day is to represent you—your needs, your infirmities, and your trials. I want you to know this very fully; for no other truth can give you more daily comfort, or more firmly establish you in a constant holy walk. Having died to save you, Jesus lives to keep you. At the cross He washed you from the condemnation of sin; at the mercy-seat He will cleanse you from daily defilement.

Some of you have written me how old besetting sins are annoying you. Take them straight to Jesus. Don't rely too much on yourselves in overcoming them; don't follow human advice too much, or copy the example of other people too much in gaining the victory. Spare yourselves this weariness. Cast it all before your blessed Advocate, and let Him bear you and your burdens too.

And do not, above all, forsake your Bibles. You can never separate Jesus the Word made flesh from the written Word. He who proclaimed Himself the Way, declared also that He was the Truth. Pack your memory full of passages of Scripture, with which to meet Satan when he comes to tempt or accuse you; and be not content to simply know, but strive to obey the Word of God. Never think that Jesus has commanded a trifle, nor dare to trifle with anything He has commanded.

I exhort the young men to be sober. Exercise yourselves unto godliness; run the race according to Paul's motto—"Looking off unto Jesus"; draw your inspiration and power directly from Himself.

I exhort the young women to great moderation. Your sphere of testimony may not be public; your place of usefulness may not be large; in your own homes "adorn the doctrine of God your Saviour." Keep one little thought in mind—"I have none but Jesus to please." And so make your dress as simple as you know will please your Lord; make your deportment as modest as you know will commend itself to Him.

And for you all, "among whom we have gone labouring," our prayer is, "That your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere, and without offence, till the day of Christ, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God" (Phil. i. 9, 10, 11). OBJECTIONS TO THE DOCTRINE OF THE BLOOD.—II.

THE moral objections to the sacrificial aspect of the Atonement are generally to be met with in one or other of the following shapes:—

1. It is impossible to believe that God, who is described in the Scriptures as a Father, and whose character therein is summed up in the word "love," can feel judicial wrath against sin, or can be expected to "show his wrath and make his power known."

To which we reply—How is it known that He is a Father? On what authority is it asserted that "God is love"? Did unassisted reason ever make such a discovery? Did the world of old, in its vague reaching forth after God, ever attain, by means of any of its philosophic systems, to such a knowledge of his character? Is it not to revelation, and to revelation alone, that we are indebted for imparting to us such ennobling views of the nature and attributes of God?

If, then, we believe that God is "love" because the Scriptures teach it, how manifestly irrational is it to reject what the same Scriptures teach as to other aspects of his character. Two texts—most precious ones indeed—tell us that "God is love" (1 John iv. 8, 16), but were we by the help of a Concordance to set forth all the texts that state in the most direct terms that God is a Judge, and shall judge the world in righteousness, the number would be nearer to a hundred. Is it "decrying the exercise of reason" when we ask that this latter aspect of God's character should not be thrust aside or overridden by the former, but that both should be accepted together?

Nay, as if to show how unreasonable is such a method of dealing with Scripture, it has been given to the Apostle John—pre-eminently the apostle of love—to set forth with more solemn emphasis than, perhaps, the rest of Scripture affords, the fearful reality of coming wrath upon the impenitent and unbelieving. It is from the pen that wrote "God is love" that we also read "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth upon him." "I beheld . . . the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman and every freeman hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, 'Fall on us and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand.'" "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

The second moral objection to the doctrine of the Atonement usually takes this form:—

2. Granting that God is a Judge as well as a Father, and that penal infliction—the desert of sin—is to be expected at his hands, it would be unfair and unjust to punish the innocent for the guilty, and to make Christ "who knew no sin" suffer in place of those who had sinned.

This objection might be answered in the same way. It might be shown that the same Scriptures which teach us that He is a righteous Judge, teach us also that Christ died the "just for the unjust," and that "it pleased the Lord to bruise Him." But it may be well to point out that the very nature of the objection involves a misconception of the facts of the case. In fact, a dangerously latent element of disbelief lies hid beneath an apparently honest difficulty.

Some of our readers may remember having heard, at one of the Mildmay Conferences held within the last two or three years, an exceedingly able address delivered by the Rev. William Hay Aitken, in which he exposed the hidden infidelity of this objection in a very masterly manner. His words were (as well as memory can recall them) to this effect:—"Whenever you find a man unsound upon the doctrine of the Atonement, you may be pretty sure that he is also unsound upon the doctrine of the Divinity of Christ, for these two doctrines stand or fall together. The common objection to the Atonement is, it would be unfair in God to punish the innocent for the guilty; and if the innocent one were a creature as well as the guilty, there would be some force in the objection. Were Christ a mere man, or were He even the highest of created beings, it would be impossible to divest the mind of some thought of unfairness in his being made to suffer for other creatures; but the objection falls to the ground before the glorious truth that Jesus is God. If there be unfairness then, it is that God has been unfair to Himself!"

We would but add, that although unfair to others we cannot with justice be, yet unfair to ourselves we may be—nay, men are accustomed to account it the highest proof of unselfishness and self-sacrificing love when a man is unfair to himself for the benefit of others. This is what the Son of God has been to us, who, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich."

"O, boundless depth! O, love beyond degree!
The Offended dies to set the offender free."

How much meaning does this striking thought impart to those passages of Scripture in which the Deity of the Lord Jesus is insisted on as being necessary to the efficacy of his work. "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ: for in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete in Him" (Col. ii. 8, 9). "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins: who is the image of the invisible God," &c. (Col. i. 15). "Who, being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when He had by Himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (Heb. i. 3). "Feed the Church of God, which He hath purchased with his own blood" (Acts xx. 28).

There is another answer to this objection, arising from the fact of the mystical union betwixt Christ and his Church. The objection is against the fairness of one person being made to suffer for another; but even in human transactions this apparent injustice gives way before the relationship which unites two persons in one. The husband is made responsible for, and has to suffer for, the wife's debts. "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it," and in doing so (as Psalm xl. teaches us) He owned her guilt as his.

Thus the two profound truths of the union betwixt the Father and the Son, as well as that between Christ and his Church, constitute a twofold reason for rejecting the charge of unfairness as brought against the doctrine of substitution. The objection overlooks the fact that Christ is God, and it also overlooks the fact that Christ and his people are one. "I in them and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me."

MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA.

LAST week we announced the fact of a Mission to Central Africa being undertaken by the Church Missionary Society. The subject is one of such surpassing interest and importance that we give below, as reported in the Daily Telegraph, the letter in which the generous offer referred to in our last was made to the Society, and the resolutions of the Society in connexion therewith. We commend the last of these resolutions to the consideration of those of our readers who have the will and the ability to aid in this great and glorious undertaking. Surely it is the dawning of brighter days for the Continent of Africa.

At a special general committee of the Church Missionary Society, summoned to consider the subject of the invitation conveyed from the capital of Uganda in Mr. Stanley's despatches, the following letter was submitted and read by the Honorary Clerical Secretary, after alluding to the interest at present aroused in consequence of the invitation thus forwarded from King Mtesa:—

"Nov. 17, 1875.

"Dear Mr. Hutchinson,—My eyes have often been strained wistfully towards the interior of Africa West of Mombasa, and I have longed and prayed for the time when the Lord would by his providence open there a door of entrance to the heralds of the Gospel.

"The appeal of the energetic explorer Stanley to the Christian Church from Mtesa's capital, Uganda, taken in connexion with Colonel Gordon's occupation of the upper territories of the Nile, seems to me to indicate that the time has come for the soldiers of the Cross to make an advance into that region.

"If the committee of the Church Missionary Society are prepared at once and with energy to organize a mission to the Victoria Nyanza, I shall account it a high privilege to place £5000 at their disposal as a nucleus for the expenses of the undertaking.

"I am not so sanguine as to look for the rapidity of success contemplated by Mr. Stanley; but if the mission be undertaken in simple and trustful dependence upon the Lord of the harvest, surely no insurmountable difficulty need be anticipated, but his presence and blessing be confidently expected, as we go forward in obedience to the indications of his Providence and the commands of his Word.

"I only desire to be known in this matter as "AN UNPROFITABLE SERVANT (LUKE XVII. 10).

"Edward Hutchinson, Esq."

Full discussion having ensued, the following resolutions were passed:—

1. "That this committee, bearing in mind that the Church Missionary Society is primarily commissioned to Africa and the East, and recognizing a combination of providential circumstances in the present opening in Equatorial Africa, thankfully accepts the offer of the anonymous donor of £5000, and undertakes, in dependence upon God, to take steps for the establishment of a mission to the vicinity of the Victoria Nyanza, in the prayerful hope that it may prove a centre of light and blessing to the tribes in the heart of Africa."

2. "That a sub-committee be appointed to consider and report to the committee on the best mode of carrying this resolution into effect."

3. "That a special fund be opened for meeting the expenditure connected with the proposed mission." [The office of the Church Missionary Society is in Salisbury-square, E.C.]

HAWICK.—Mr. Steel, from Biggar, has been here, and, after four weeks' meetings, has left us. I am happy to be able to state that, although the meetings have not been so large as could have been wished, numbers professed to find peace in believing. The meetings were also much owned of God in giving the Christians a better understanding of divine things. T. M.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS IN MADAGASCAR

WE are indebted to our brother, Mr. M. H. Hodder, for the following interesting extracts from a letter recently received by him from Rev. Chas. Jukes, labouring at Antananarivo:—

"Great changes have taken place here during the last few years. The Malagasy move very fast. Their material progress is very remarkable, especially in the capital. The small, filthy wooden huts in which the natives formerly lived are giving place in every direction to good brick houses. The people have become more cleanly in their person and habits, and dress too. Many of the better classes, of both men and women, are beginning to adopt European costume—I am sorry to add, with many of its ludicrous fashions.

"The demand for education in and near the capital is very encouraging to us. We cannot train teachers fast enough, and most of the schools we have established are well attended. The Government have established several schools, and are doing a good work in helping to educate the people. We have no difficulty in getting scholars, and the children, as a rule, are very quick, diligent, and make rapid progress.

"We have several Sunday-schools. The one under my superintendence is connected with the large church in the capital of which I have the oversight. Our afternoon service commences at two o'clock; I then preach a short sermon, and close the service at three, after which, the whole congregation—children and adults—forms itself into a school. There are several classes for the children, and amongst the adults those who are able to read teach those who cannot read; and those who can read a little are divided into classes, and native preachers appointed to each class to expound verse by verse a portion of God's Word. There is a very good old woman in my congregation, who, a few years ago, was compelled to wear heavy chains round her neck, was frequently beaten with large sticks, and in many other ways severely persecuted for being a Christian. This woman is now engaged every Sunday afternoon, and often during the week, in teaching the Gospel to some of those who formerly persecuted her. Her husband is a good man, and has been a preacher for many years; but, poor man, he is now a leper, and cannot come to chapel on Sundays, as he is prohibited by law from mixing with the multitude.

"For some time we have been without Bibles; and when people came to us to buy a copy of God's Word, we had to say to them, 'I haven't a copy to sell to you, even if you were to offer a thousand dollars for it.' A few months ago the Bible Society kindly sent out several cases of Bibles, which we sold at a shilling each copy. There was such a rush for these precious volumes! For three or four days we were constantly engaged in selling them, during which time we sold a few thousands. One poor man came a long distance to buy a Bible, but when he reached the capital he found he had not sufficient money. What do you think he did? He ran to the market-place, took the shirt from his back, sold it for a few pence, and then went straight away and purchased a Bible with the money, and away he went home rejoicing over his treasure.

"We are very thankful the Malagasy are so anxious to possess Bibles—and they do prize that Book more than any other,—but we want, above all things, to see them receiving the truth into their hearts, in the love of it. Many have already done this, and are now rejoicing in the knowledge that they are redeemed by the precious blood of Jesus. In one of our villages there is a blind girl, who has never been able to see a single letter of God's Word; yet she knows more of its contents than many who can read it. From listening to others reading, she has learnt whole chapters of the New Testament, and can repeat them quite correctly from memory; she can tell you the chapter and verse where to find her favourite texts; and she uses her knowledge well, in inducing her friends and those round about her to seek the Saviour she loves so much.

"It is chiefly in and near the capital where so many people have become Christians and God has so greatly blessed his work. Even here, however, the 'enemy' is trying to hinder the Gospel. Christ has his missionaries urging the people to give their hearts to the Lord; but the devil has a great many more missionaries leading them in the way to destruction. You will be very sorry to hear that some European traders have come to live in the capital and brought a large quantity of rum to sell to the natives. They are teaching the Malagasy to become drunkards; and some of the young men—many of them sons of the officers and nobles—think it is a fine thing to imitate the godless Europeans. The Queen has recently been obliged to enforce the law forbidding the sale of rum, and several rum-sellers have been severely punished. Unfortunately she cannot touch European rum-dealers; but she forbids the Malagasy purchasing; and any house suspected of containing rum is searched by soldiers, and if any is found the owner is imprisoned.

"In the villages a few hours distant from the capital, there is still great darkness. It is true there are chapels in almost every village, but the people know scarcely anything of the Gospel. They go to chapel, they say, and pray, because it is the custom to do so. We could hardly expect these people to be better than they are, seeing they have had so little teaching. We are now training young men in Antananarivo to go out as evangelists, but there are so many villages that it takes a long time to find and then train suitable teachers for them all; and after that we have to consider how to support these teachers, for the people, especially in the country, are very poor, and many of them so extremely ignorant that they do not care to give even a grain of rice to those who come to teach them the way of life.

"Most of the tribes surrounding the central province where we labour—north, south, east, and west—are yet in utter heathen darkness. Many of them have never been visited by a missionary, and probably do not know even the name of Jesus. They are living as they have done for generations—filthy, cruel, constantly at war amongst themselves, in the knowledge of all that is good and holy, but little above the cattle they tend, and acquainted with no worship but the worship of a wooden idol, and no sacrifice but that which they offer at the graves of their deceased friends. Oh, that we may soon carry to them the glad tidings of great joy! Antananarivo is just about in the centre of the island, and from here we hope the light of Christianity will speedily cover the whole land, just as, when we cast a stone into the middle of a lake or pond, the little waves roll along until they reach every part of the shore.

"Last year I paid a visit to one of these distant tribes, and if I had time I would give you some account of what I saw and heard. A few people from another tribe came to us some months ago to say they had been sent by their king, who lives a long way to the south of the island, to make inquiries about the 'praying,' and to ascertain if it were true what he had heard, that wonderful improvements had taken place here since the people began 'to pray.' The messengers were also instructed by their king to 'take a white man' back with them to teach the king and his subjects. Unhappily there was no missionary to go. We are so fully employed in teaching the natives in the centre of the island that we cannot go to reside amongst any of the distant tribes. When I think of all that is yet to be done in Madagascar, I sometimes wish I had the strength of a giant and the wings of an angel, that I might fly from place to place preaching to the Malagasy the Gospel of peace and love; or that I had a voice like thunder to make the whole country hear at once the 'faithful saying . . . that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'"

NEW GUINEA.—A deputation from the Anti-Slavery Society waited lately on Lord Carnarvon, Colonial Secretary, in order to bring before his notice the proposed expedition from Australia to New Guinea. He expressed himself on the whole unfavourable to the proposal, and said:—"With regard to the proposed Colonization Company, he was startled to see their proposals in regard to discipline on land and at sea, and he allowed that it was plain to any ordinary intelligence what the intentions were in regard to force as an ultimate resort. The thing, though characterized by the spirit of adventure, had in it much of the 'Braganza' style—more, indeed, than the characteristics of British colonization. He should not have been discharging his duty if he had not expressed his distinct protest against this action. He could say that to all trading adventures no one more than he would wish success, provided trade was made in the ordinary legitimate way; but countenance could not be given to quasi-military expeditions, no matter how good might be the intentions, and he had sent to warn this Company that they were adopting a most dangerous course, and that the possession of land taken from the natives would not be acknowledged."

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—It will be interesting to some of your readers, whose generous help, and Christian sympathy and interest, manifested under our circumstances of trouble some time ago, greatly stimulated our faith, and gave new vigour to our prayers, to be informed that, by God's gracious provision through the efforts of his children of all Protestant churches, our debt has been paid off, and a new ship has been provided for the Moekito Coast. The Herald arrived safely at Blewfields on Sept. 16 after a voyage of nine weeks from England. She is all the missionaries could desire, and is calculated to prove most serviceable in prosecuting the missionary work on the coast of Central Africa.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BROOKLYN.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE services of the second Sabbath were three in number beginning with a morning meeting at 8.30 in the Rink. Long before the hour appointed the house was packed to its utmost capacity. The platform was filled with pastors of the city churches and prominent laymen. After Mr. Sankey had rung "Hold the fort," Mr. Moody took his text from Joshua i. 7, "Only be thou strong and very courageous." He preached with great power. The whole audience was visibly effected.

The wonderful meetings of the day were reserved for the afternoon and evening. That of the afternoon was for women only; it was appointed for four o'clock, but by two o'clock the building was densely packed. So great was the crush, that many ladies were carried from the building in a fainting condition. Thousands were refused admittance, and many who had come long distances pleaded with the police and ushers, but generally without success. Two churches were filled with the overflow of women, and still there were hundreds in the streets anxious to hear the message of salvation.

The meeting for young men at nine o'clock in the evening was another immense gathering. Notwithstanding the weather was very unfavourable, "The Rink" was filled to overflowing with men hungering for the Bread of Life.

INQUIRERS' MEETINGS.—REPORTS.

This brings us to the inquirers' meetings, which now began to yield the fruits of the week's services. In that for women, held after the women's meeting, there were 120 seeking for instruction. In that for men, although it was ten o'clock at night when the Rink meeting closed, there was a large church packed full. From this Mr. Moody asked those who were inquirers, and who were really in earnest, to pass into another room. About 150 accepted this invitation. Here, then, at eleven o'clock at night, we see 150 men, (nearly all young) in one room, being taught more perfectly the way of salvation; while in the church adjoining, 1000 Christian men are imploring God's blessing upon those in the chapel. There is no excitement, but a deep earnestness pervades both meetings, and they continue until nearly midnight.

The meeting in the Tabernacle next morning was largely devoted to hearing reports from the workers. One man spoke of the work among the seamen in New York, where on Saturday evening twenty young sailors wanted to be prayed for. One young captain was converted. He said he was going to be the parson of his ship. He would hold meetings in his cabin for his men. A lady had come into the sailors' meeting and said, "God bless the sailors." These words were the means of converting the young captain.

Mr. Bell, who is in charge of Bethel Mission, said: "The other evening I was called to see a young man in great agony and tears. He wanted to find Jesus. We told him how, the best we could. The next night he came forward with a face beaming with joy. He went for his brother, and the following day he too was rejoicing in Christ."

All through last week I was praying for my son Walter. He attended meetings several times at the Rink. Last night he came out of the inquiry-room relying on Jesus.

Rev. C. M. Morton asked prayer for forty souls in his church who arose for prayers last evening, and for twenty who arose in another church. A gentleman stated that in the church of which he was a member sixteen arose for prayers last night, and twelve of them went home rejoicing in their Saviour.

I talked with a young lady here one morning last week. I found that she had come 250 miles to this meeting. We knelt down, and I prayed with her. Before we parted she found Christ. A minister said he was instrumental in leading five souls to Christ last night.

At the meeting on Tuesday morning, Mr. Moody closed his remarks by saying, "If anyone has been healed, let him rise and confess." A young man arose, and said:—God loved me first, I loved him last. Three years ago I was playing cards. I learned that a couple of ladies were praying in the house. Instead of playing cards I went into the room where they were. They were singing, 'Just as I am.' It seemed an invitation for me. Before I left the room I had found Christ."

A young man arose, and said:—"I have a father and mother in heaven who prayed for me. I have been to Europe three times for pleasure. Last Saturday, while in my hotel in New York, I thought I heard the voice of my father speaking to me. Last evening I went to the Rink, but could not get in. I wandered around into the church where the inquiry-meeting was being held, and there I found Christ."

A man said:—"I asked prayer of this meeting for a brother of mine who is addicted to strong drink. He came to my house last night and told me I had broken his heart. I said, 'No, it is the Lord that is breaking your heart.' I hope you will continue to pray for him."

Said a gentleman—"In the Rink last night a fine-looking man sat before me singing with a strong voice. I said to him, 'Are you a Christian?' 'No,' said he, 'I can't say that I am.' I asked him to go to the inquiry-room. He said, 'No, it's too conspicuous.' I said, 'I'll go with you; people will not know which of us is the seeker.' He went with me, sat down, and talked with me, and in half an hour had given himself definitely to Christ."

Mr. Loveridge said: "While walking down Fulton-street, jostled by the crowd, I was asking God to direct me to speak to some young man about his soul. I soon came up to one, and walked about ten blocks with him to the ferry-boat. Having met all his objections, he, while crossing the ferry, gave himself to Christ."

A clergyman said: "For weeks I had been beating the air. I spent a few days waiting on God. He brought me to say, 'Bring the rod to bear if necessary.' I would rather die than live if God could not use me. I heard a rap on my door; it was my child, saying, 'I wish you would pray for my soul.' I wept over my people the next Sunday, and forty inquirers asked for prayers."

The reports given by the ministers last Monday morning of the work in their various churches gave unmistakable evidence that Brooklyn is undergoing

A GREAT RELIGIOUS AWAKENING.

Deacon Hawley said: "In our Sunday-school yesterday, in the place of the usual closing exercise, we invited the school to remain for a prayer-meeting. Five hundred remained. Twenty rose and asked for prayers. Several, we believe, found peace."

Last evening at the Rink very many souls were brought to Christ. On my way home last night I talked with three young men; one of them was anxious, but hesitated. I said to him, "You can be converted before you reach yonder lamp-post if you will." When within twelve feet of it he stopped, and, after a struggle, said, "I will." Turning to his companion, I said, "How is it with you?" After some moments of hesitation, he said, "Yes, I too." The third young man still remained. We knelt down with him around that lamp-post, and after prayer he accepted Christ.

Rev. George Bell told of a sceptic who had been converted. Also of three sisters who were converted yesterday: of an aged mother, and a watchman in the Navy Yard, who had found peace in believing. Rev. Fred Ball spoke as follows: "There are so many here who want to speak, that I will give all my speech in a lump. I had the great joy of bringing thirty-three souls to Christ yesterday." Rev. W. Murray said: "In our church yesterday backsliders and sinners came in large numbers to confess Christ, and were converted. They are coming in crowds, and kneeling at the feet of Jesus." Dr. Talmage reported a grand day in the Tabernacle. Many came in children of the world, and went out children of heaven. Three hundred and sixty arose for prayers at the close of the meeting last evening. Dr. Steele said: "In other churches the work has gone on with great power. In my own church large numbers have passed from death unto life."

Mr. Sankey spoke of a woman who came into the inquiry-room broken-hearted. "After she had laid hold on Christ herself, she wanted us to pray for her husband and children. Last evening she came in leading that husband by the hand. The man stood up and said he would accept Christ. This mother six months ago received a letter from her mother in England, asking that when Messrs. Moody and Sankey came to America they would come to their meetings. A mother in Scotland wrote to her infidel son, beseeching him to attend the meetings. Last night," said Mr. Sankey, "he was in the inquiry-room. I talked with him. He had a fearful struggle, but at last said, 'I'll lay down the weapons of my rebellion. I will write to my mother in Scotland about it to-morrow.'" for your sons. I thank God for a praying mother, who brought me in from fighting against God."

KEEP ON PRAYING, MOTHERS.

The special religious services now include five great meetings daily, four of which are held in the Tabernacle, and one at the Rink. One of the meetings at the Tabernacle is exclusively a women's prayer-meeting led by a woman. This numbers from 1000 to 2000, and is held from nine to ten o'clock each morning.

To-day having been set apart as a

DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER

by the churches in all the principal cities of this country, and especially by the churches of Brooklyn, the ministers—to the number of sixty—met in the morning at seven o'clock, and spent an hour in prayer and thanksgiving. At eight o'clock the prayer-meeting in the Tabernacle (which seats 4500 persons) was crowded to overflowing, and many were turned away for want of room. The reading of requests was dispensed with, and the entire hour devoted to prayer, both silent and vocal. The great solemnity pervading the meeting was a marked feature; hundreds were in tears. At ten o'clock the meeting passed into the hands of the ladies, about 3000 of whom remained. The solemn awe which had pervaded the previous hour still continued. The Holy Ghost was present in great power, and through his influence we are expecting great things for the immediate future. E. J.

Brooklyn, Nov. 12, 1875.

We extract the following from our Transatlantic contemporaries:—

"The fourth and last week of the evangelists' labours in Brooklyn opened with meetings quite as crowded as those of their first day in that city. It would seem that the results of the present week's services were to be larger and more gratifying than those already noted, and there is substantial reason for believing that the good work thus commenced is not to end with the removal of the evangelists to another city. On Sunday morning the theme of Mr. Moody's discourse was the prophet Daniel. At the afternoon meeting—which was exclusively for women, admitted by ticket, who had not before attended the meetings, or who were not yet trusting disciples of the Lord Jesus—and again, at the general meeting in the evening, his theme was 'Trust.' He cautioned all against trusting anything or any being short of the Divine Saviour. They must not trust to themselves, for they were frail; to other men, for they would grow old and weary and drop into the grave; to money, for it might be stolen; to reputation, for some one might blacken it; only God could be trusted without fear or doubt.

"Calling on those who were willing to trust to rise, he asked them to sing the hymn, 'Only trust Him.' Mr. Sankey, as he led in this, asked all to sing in sincerity the chorus of the third and fourth stanzas, 'I will trust Him,' 'I do trust Him.' 'Yes, sing it if you can, but don't sing a lie,' added Mr. Moody. As many new voices joined in, Mr. Moody called out, 'Sing on; we haven't got through.' 'Why we're making heaven glad this afternoon. But don't sing a lie.' And doubtless there were those who trusted the Saviour the first time during the singing of that hymn.

"Mr. Moody shows no relaxation of power or earnestness. His presence at as many as five meetings a day is a very severe tax both upon his mind and body, but it is not apparent. He is very prompt, and enters upon his work always with freshness and vigour. Up to the close of last week sixty-five meetings had been held, much of the detail even of organizing which devolved upon him. Fears are expressed that he may over-exert himself, but in reply to these he says that he must work to his utmost now, for upon the results of his labours in Brooklyn will largely depend his success elsewhere. We believe that he is laying strong foundations here, and that this is the commencement of a religious awakening which will spread throughout the land. The field is ripe for the harvest, and the ingathering will be rich and prolific."

Next week we hope to present our readers with an account of the opening meetings in Philadelphia, where the evangelists were to commence work on Sunday, the 21st ult. We believe they expect to open the services in New York about the beginning of February.

MANCHESTER.—We have commenced giving free teas to the destitute and poor in the neighbourhood of Bank Top, London-road, Manchester, in the Wesleyan Mission Room; they have been very greatly blessed of God to the conversion of souls. We are going (D.V.) to give more teas on Dec. 2, 16, and New Year's-day, if we can obtain funds.

GREAT CHRISTIAN CONVENTION IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

DURING the past week the second Annual Christian Convention has been holding its sittings in Dublin, and one of its grand results has been to prove beyond doubt that there is an increasing anxiety in all the Churches for a more thorough union in furtherance of Christian work. Clergy and laity, representing every evangelical denomination, attended in large numbers from all parts of Ireland, and the dense masses composing the several meetings seemed animated by a spirit of deep, devotional earnestness, recalling the heart-stirring scenes so frequently witnessed during the great Revival of 1859, or the more recent services conducted here by the American evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Throughout there was no attempt at exciting anything like wild enthusiasm, but, in praise, prayer, and addresses, all who took part in the interesting proceedings evinced unwearied religious fervency and a solemnity befitting the occasion. The arrangements of the Executive Committee were of the most complete character. The Metropolitan Hall, in Lower Abbey-street—a most central position—had been secured, and the United Presbyterian Church immediately opposite, together with the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel a few paces distant, were thrown open, and frequently crowded to excess by "overflow meetings" from the Hall. In each of these places the various addresses were repeated. It would be somewhat invidious to mention names where all laboured with so much zeal, but no one will dispute the statement that great credit is due to the Rev. David Mullen, who acted as Secretary, and to Mr. J. S. Smithson, who appears to have thrown his whole soul into the success of the cause; both of these gentlemen, actively assisted by the Committee of Direction, did all that in them lay to promote what is now regarded as one of the most successful evangelistic gatherings that has ever been held in the Irish metropolis.

THE OPENING MEETING.

The Convention proceedings were most appropriately inaugurated by a prayer-meeting held in the Metropolitan Hall on Monday evening. The platform was occupied to its utmost seating accommodation by clergymen and laymen, many of them distinguished in the churches for their piety and zeal. The body of the Hall was reserved for clergymen, of whom there were about 350 present, and the spacious upper and lower galleries, as well as the sloping avenues leading from the doors, were crowded by a dense mass of both sexes and all ages. Neat little hymn-books were plentifully distributed among the audience, the selection being principally drawn from Mr. Sankey's well-known publications. The singing was led by an efficient choir, and invariably conducted in excellent time.

Punctually at the hour named on the programme—eight o'clock—the chair was taken by Sir E. Synge Hutchinson, Bart. The meeting was opened with the hymn "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and prayer by the Rev. William Gorman. Colonel Stoney then read the 46th Psalm, after which

The Rev. Dr. HUGHES (Dublin) delivered a brief address. This, he observed, was a time of rich privilege, and if they looked up with believing hearts it would be a time of rich blessing—a time of refreshing to them all from the presence of the Lord. They who were residents in the city welcomed with loving and warm hearts those who attended that Convention from a distance—many of them at great inconvenience—to testify their zeal in the great cause. They had all been attracted by the love of God and by Christian brotherly affection, and ere they parted he hoped that one and all would reap a rich harvest of personal gain through Christ. Of a truth, these were remarkable times in which they lived. He knew that that was a trite saying, and that there was a tendency in every age to exaggerate the importance of the period in which their lot was cast. But, making every allowance for that tendency, and looking to the past calmly and soberly, there never was a period so remarkable as the present—so remarkable for prayer, and for the answering of prayer. There never was a time when so much prayer was offered up from every part of the world; and, looking to the past, was there ever a time when answers to prayer were so marked for localities, for families, and, as many knew, for individuals also? They lived in dark days also. Iniquity abounded, and the love of many waxed cold. Atheists and infidels were active. All things changed around them, but the Word of God changed not.

"Seeing we look for such things" as He had foretold, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" Should not those who had one Father, one Elder Brother, and who were journeying to the one home, come closer, and realize the fulfilment of our Lord's prayer, "that they all may be one"? He sincerely trusted that these meetings would bring such to pass.

The hymn, "Lord, I hear of showers of blessing," was then sung, and the Rev. James Cargin offered up prayer; after which

The assembly was addressed by the Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, of Belfast. He took for granted that the great bulk of those present were professed Christians, and desired to speak to them as such, taking as the basis of his theme Acts vi. 4—"We will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word." Prayerless sermons were powerless sermons, and there were too many such nowadays. They should pray with God and wrestle with God, till sound Scripture truth got hold of them, and then their word would be uttered with power. The first disciples "continued in prayer and supplication." How long? They waited two, three, six days, and nothing was done. Still they continued, and on the tenth day the Holy Ghost came down upon them. As was written in Luke xi. 8, "Because of his importunity he will rise and give him." Here the resolve was, "Without the bread I will not leave." They must pray more; they must importune God and wrestle with God, and resolve never to cease till the blessing came. Prayer was the grand secret of power. They must prevail with men when they prevailed with God.

The Rev. J. S. Fletcher then led in prayer, after which the hymn "When He cometh" was sung. The Chairman then asked that two brethren in the body of the hall should lead the devotions, and the Revs. W. H. Quarry and John Walker responded. The Rev. Dr. McCarthy, of the Irish Missions, pronounced the Benediction.

MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

The clergy in Dublin attending the Convention assembled in conference at the Hall on the following (Tuesday) morning at ten o'clock. Over 300 were present, the chair being occupied by the Rev. Allan S. Windle. The Chairman read the 51st Psalm; and a portion of the hymn "Lord, I hear of showers of blessing" having been sung,

Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER, of Bristol, introduced the first subject for consideration—

"HOLINESS: WHAT, AND HOW OBTAINED."

The first thing for investigation was, "What is holiness?" They had to look to holiness in its highest, fullest, and most perfect degree—holiness in its normal state, if the expression might be applied to it,—that was, in other words, conformity to the mind of God, and their precious adorable Lord and Saviour, to the full. This would imply that at all times, and under all circumstances, it was the inclination of their hearts to do the will of God, and this in health and prosperity—in things just as they would naturally like them to be—in the midst of friends, and in circumstances of the greatest ease and comfort; and, on the other hand, if they did not delight themselves in the will of God, without fretting, without complaining, without impatience,—that in their inmost souls they did not delight to do the will of God, so that though in sickness, though in adversity, though in the most trying circumstance of any kind, though forsaken by everyone,—if the will of God was not done under those circumstances, or that they were not in a state of heart while in adversity to do it,—then it was a failure as to holiness; that could not be called holiness to the full. It might be called holiness in degree, but not holiness in its normal state, as it should be in them, and as they ought to aim at it, as the children of God.

Holiness did not consist in certain sentiments or feelings, however excellent they might be in themselves, but in doing the will of God. But if this be the true definition of holiness, then they at once saw that none of the children of God that were gone before them ever attained to the full of such holiness, but that their attainment was only in degree. Full, complete conformity to the mind of God was that held out as the blessed state for which they had been apprehended by God in Christ Jesus, and which would be their blessed portion when completely delivered from the old, evil, corrupt nature within them. So long as the old, evil, corrupt nature remained in them—though this normal state of holiness, this perfect state of holiness, was ever to be aimed at, ever prayerfully to be sought and looked for, in order that they might be more and more conformed to the mind of Christ,—still, in a greater or less degree, they would have to sorrow and grieve to the end of their earthly pilgrimage, by reason of their failures and shortcomings. Just as all the other graces—faith, love, hope, patience, meekness, humility of soul, and the others—were only attained to in a measure, while they were in the body, so also the perfection of all those graces—holiness—would only be attained to in a measure while they were in the body. But this was no reason at all why they should not, to the very utmost of their power, aim after further and further advancement in the Divine life.

Now as to the next point—how may we attain to holiness? He need scarcely say to his esteemed brethren that of course, in the first place, it was absolutely needful, without which there could be no such thing as even the smallest degree of attainment in holiness, that they be born again; that they be regenerated; that they who were by nature dead in trespasses and sins should have heavenly life. If this were not the case, there could be no such thing as the smallest particle of what God calls holiness found in them. The next question was—What might help them on in holiness?

Of all the passages he might be able to bring forward from God's precious Word, regarding this subject, he did not know of one which comprised more in itself than the passage in the 1st chapter of 2nd Peter, the 5th and following verses—"Beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue." That was to be taken in the sense of courage or fortitude, implying, in the first place, a confession of Christ; and then, having made a distinct open confession of Christ, an endeavour to maintain their ground. "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge." Knowledge of what? They all knew it meant spiritual knowledge; knowledge of God the Father; knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ; knowledge of all that which God had been pleased in the Holy Scriptures to reveal to them. On this depended a great deal as to advancement in the Divine life: or as to further and further attaining to holiness—that they should be acquainted increasingly with God and the Lord Jesus Christ; for the more this was the case the more they saw what a lovely being God was—what a generous, kind, bountiful being He was; how He was such an one as they could not help loving; and they were constrained to please Him when they apprehended the wondrous graces He bestowed on them in Christ Jesus. They were constrained to seek to please Him for all He had done for them in Christ, and then they should increasingly be conformed to his mind.

He would then ask them all to lay their hearts to aim after increased knowledge in the things of God—prayerfully, earnestly, with their faith, reading the Word of God. That was a most important point for them—that with carefulness, earnestness, prayerfulness, and especially with application of their own hearts, they continually give themselves day by day to the study of this blessed Book; for in the measure in which we attain to an increased knowledge of God—that is, the knowledge as they found it in the blessed Book—not as it has come in amongst men as Christians, but as they found it as a perfect revelation which God had made of Himself,—so in measure should they be increased in conformity to the mind of God.

Then to knowledge they were to add temperance—not temperance in the common acceptation of the term, but self-control; and to self-control they were to add patience—being satisfied with the will of God at all times, and under all circumstances, to say—"It is my Father who is doing this; though He lay me, yet will I trust Him, whether in trials and difficulties and disappointments, losses or crosses; yea, though I be on the point of death, it is my Father's will, who cannot err,—my Father, who says, 'All things work together for good to them that love God.'"

To patience they were to add godliness—that state of heart or mind in which they thought that everything was done under the eye of God. To godliness they were to add brotherly kindness. He (Mr. Müller) might be allowed on that occasion to hint at this—How it became them to love all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and not only those who saw eye to eye with them. Let them seek to be stirred up in their inmost souls by that meeting,—to see that it be their glorious and earnest purpose that, however much they had failed up to the present, they would henceforth, with greater fervour and spirit, love all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, no matter by what name they might be called, or to what denomination they belonged. With brotherly kindness there should be love universal, loving even their enemies; and the more they had of these graces, the more they would be like God Himself. "If these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Might he be permitted to ask if they had all made their calling and election sure? That was a deeply important point to be settled. He trusted they could all speak in the affirmative. It became important that those engaged in the ministry might be able to appeal to the people, and say—"By God's grace I have made my calling and election sure. I know that I am a child of God; I know that my sins are forgiven." If any brother did not feel that he had made his calling and election sure, let him aim after it, and then they would become worthy ministers of the Lord Jesus, and worthy instruments for his work.

Rev. EDWARD NORMAN, Honorary Clerical Secretary to the General Synod of the Church of Ireland, said, in thinking over the subject there were two verses in Hebrews which, in his opinion, threw a mutual light upon one another. In chap. xi., where the Apostle was speaking of Enoch, he said, "he pleased God," and added, "for without faith it is impossible to please Him." In chap. xii. 14 he spoke of "holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord"—or without holiness it is impossible to see God. Something of what was to be understood by holiness they learned from Matt. v. 8., where our Lord said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Comparing these verses, it might be said that holiness and purity of heart were synonymous terms. He looked upon holiness as the manifestation of the grace of sanctification wrought in the heart of the believer by the power of the Holy Spirit; and he considered that it included the idea of life and activity. In the second—if not in the first—century of the Christian era, sad errors on this subject had crept into the Church. The idea of holiness was mixed up with the idea of idleness and inactivity. Asceticism was not holiness, and men need not become hermits to be holy. Work, not contemplation, was their mission, as was abundantly testified by the commands of our Lord to his apostles—Live, work, go, walk, run, strive or agonize, do, fight, be instant, in season and out of season, and such like words, denoted activity. He hoped that all the brethren present would so seek to fight the fight, making their light to shine before all men, at all seasons, and in all places.

The Rev. Hamilton Magee having offered up prayer, the Rev. W. H. Quarry made a few remarks, urging that holiness, in the earthly degree, was to be attained, not by observance of rules, nor by abiding by doctrine, but by a clear, and full, and loving apprehension of Christ as the ever-present Saviour.

The Rev. Dr. KIRKPATRICK then took the chair, and read 1 Tim. iv. 11 to the end, and 2 Cor. iv., as bearing on the second topic which was to engage their attention—

"HOLINESS: ITS RELATION TO MINISTERIAL USEFULNESS."

If holiness was becoming in all saints, how essential was it in ministers who were to be examples to their flock in all the graces of the Christian character! It was only holy pastors who could speak to men with authority and power; and it was only when they had holiness that they could prevail with God. "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God." The speaker made instructive reference to the Rev. Denis Browne, whose wont it was to read God's Word every morning, with personal application and prayer, for his own profit during nearly thirty years; and as a picture of what he (Dr. Kirkpatrick) deemed earthly holiness to exemplify, he mentioned an anecdote of the Rev. John Wesley, who, when asked what he would do, supposing he was told that he would of a certainty die on the morrow, replied, "I would do just what I am going to do, and what I do every day—I have to preach this evening at five o'clock. I would preach, and have some conversation after the sermon, and go to such a place for tea, and after tea we would have family worship. Then I would go to bed as usual, and I would rise in glory."

The meeting was then led in prayer by the Revs. J. W. Ballard and Edward Nagle, after which, the hymn "Oh! bliss of the purified" having been sung,

The Rev. G. ROBINSON, of Liverpool, spoke to the question. He believed holiness to be attainable—not absolute, or admitting of no increase. It consisted of separation from the world to God, in conscious and abiding union with Christ; and it was the true secret of ministerial usefulness. Did God make use largely of the vessel that was not wholly separated unto Himself? No, he thought the experience of the brethren would agree with his, that men were not used in proportion to their natural gifts, but rather according to the gifts of holiness that God had bestowed upon them. There were men highly gifted who had done a large amount of work—men largely used, but whose labours had been barren as compared with others far less talented, but endowed with a larger amount of the Spirit of God dwelling in them. It had been well said that God had need of their weakness, not of their strength. Brainerd cared not where he lived, or what hardships he endured, if he could gain souls to Christ. That was the proper ministerial and Christian feeling.

Then if they had the Spirit of God dwelling in them—if they were separated to Him—they would be, like Robert McCheyne, known and read of all men. It had been said of that great and good man that the impression he left upon his hearers was that there had been a person of peculiar holiness among them. Some felt not so much his words as his peculiar solemnity—as if one spoke to them who was standing in the presence of God. To others his prayers appeared like the breathings of one already within the veil. Another, who was impressed under a sermon he preached, said "It was not so much what he said, as his manner of speaking, and the beauty of holiness in him." So also of Hewitson it had been said, "The holiness and heavenliness of his whole conversation were such as to make one feel that he was more like a being come for a time from another world to declare his message, and to return to it again, than an ordinary Christian."

Their duty was to pray, not so much that God would quicken a dead world, as that He would quicken their ministers—that He would make them holy, then they must needs become powerful. How was it that, unlike what was the case a hundred years ago, the clergy were passed by, and the godly laity selected, as God's instruments of usefulness in revival times? In his deep conviction the reason was this—that they (the clergy) did not fully realize the truth that they preached; that they were not living in conscious communion with the Lord and Saviour continually. How could they persuade men fully to believe what they themselves only half-believed? They should pray that God would quicken them—give them life afresh,—vigorous life in their own souls,—and then they would be useful ministers of his Word.

Rev. JOSEPH RAINEFORD, Rector of Dundalk, said that before ministers could be useful they must be without reproach in the eyes of their flock. As Cecil observed, "The people looked at the minister out of the pulpit to see if he meant what he said when in it." When a minister fell, it was like a ship sinking, which did not wreck itself alone, but all on board.

Prayers were offered up by the Revs. Allan S. Windle and Wm. Soraby, and the Conference terminated.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.—PRAYER.

From twelve o'clock until three, and again from seven until nine, there were hourly public meetings under different chairmen. At the first, which was crowded to excess, the "overflow" being accommodated in the churches already named, the chair was taken by Colonel Stoney. The Rev. David Mullen (secretary) read numerous requests for prayer which had been forwarded, and in fervent words presented each supplication to the throne of God. The Rev. R. Chester, Rector of Middleton, county Cork, then spoke on the subject of agreement in prayer—"if two of you agree." The promise attached was not to agreement in sentiment, but in prayer, in action. Christians viewed things from different standpoints. This was not the time for agreement in all things, but it was a time for agreement in prayer, which was not for time, but for eternity. After the hymn—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

Major-General Dobbs led in prayer, followed by the Rev. C. Robinson, and a venerable brother in the body of the Hall. Rev. Mr. Morrell, ex-Moderator of the General Assembly in Ireland, quoted a series of texts from Holy Writ, enjoining the meeting of the brethren for prayer, and others conveying the promises which were to follow prayer.

"Faith which worketh by love" was the text for consideration at the next meeting, over which Mr. David Drummond presided. The Rev. Edward Best having led in prayer,

Mr. GEORGE MULLER opened the subject. The Object of faith, he remarked, was God in Christ. That Object comprehended the inquiry, "What can I do for God in return for his love to me?" When men knew God in Christ they could not help loving Him. The Christian should say, "Here are my hands, my eyes, my feet, my purse, my life, my all, to be devoted to and employed by Thee." That would be a living illustration of the text—faith working by love.

- Mr. James Barten, C.E. (Dundalk), having led in prayer, and the hymn "Oh, Christ, what burdens bowed thy head" having been sung,

The Rev. Mr. Deacon (of Belfast) said they had heard something on the previous night of the peculiarities of these latter times. But, to his mind, there was one very pleasing aspect of their day which they should thank God for—that the barriers which separated Christians one from another in times past were being broken down, and that Christians were being drawn together more closely than they were of old, and led to realize that there was a vital and an eternal union which bound together the hearts of all that loved the Lord in sincerity.

Mr. Croker (Cork) suggested that it should be endeavoured to bring the Bible more into domestic use. Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick and Major-General Dobbs testified to the great comfort, and instruction, and strength, and growth in faith, which they had derived from constant perusal of the Scriptures. The latter gentleman said that forty-seven years' reading of the Word, through and through, had enabled him, more than aught else, to live—not in theory, but in living practical union, with his brethren of every name under heaven.

Rev. Wm. Sorsby, in the course of a few observations, said, all might say, in the words of Peter, "'Tis good to believe"; but he hoped they would follow the same Peter's example, and, when they left that place, go forth to act, and not to rest.

The Rev. Mr. Latham having offered up prayer, the meeting was closed by the singing of the hymns, "The Great Physician now is near," and "All hail! the power of Jesus' name."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

At the next meeting, for the consideration of the utility of meetings for Christian fellowship, the chair was occupied by the Rev. Jas. Wilson. The Rev. Mr. Mullen read further requests for prayer, and led the devotions, and after the singing of a hymn,

Rev. Dr. BLACK (of Inverness) said: In the New Testament, and even in Old Testament, times there were fellowship meetings. Indeed, such gatherings were common in the early church-gatherings which brought Christians together, to speak together concerning Christ and his work. Such meetings were, he considered, specially important after times of revival, when God had been pouring out his Spirit abundantly on the people; for when the heart was full, as it was in these times, the tongue was loosened, and the young believer must speak. He remembered a Christian once addressing him from under his pulpit in his old church in Dublin (Ormond-quay) on this very subject. "I want to meet some person that will speak to me kindly about Christ," he said; "I want to meet some person that I can speak to." That was the very thing fellowship meetings were for—the bringing together Christians to speak and to hear about Christ. Then, supposing that the wave of blessing passed by, what a dreary time would come. In such a change was it not well that they should have devotional meetings to keep alive and promote spiritual life. Such meetings, he thought, should be within the Church's organization, for thus would they be sure to keep out of evil and mischief in connexion with false doctrine. It would be well always to have the Church as the centre, and to work out from it in connexion with all their Christian labour.

Rev. J. S. FLETCHER followed with a few practical remarks on the same subject. He referred to a parish in which devotional meetings were held weekly, and attended by the Christians of seven different denominations. Mr. Fletcher also recommended the system of drawing-room meetings for fellowship, which had been successfully tried in the city and country.

The Rev. Mr. Hull having made a few observations, the hymn "May the grace of Christ our Saviour" was sung, prayer was offered up, and the proceedings terminated by the pronouncing of the Benediction.

EVENING MEETING.

At half-past seven o'clock the Convention resumed. The Hall was crowded before seven, and overflow-meetings were held in the Presbyterian church and the Wesleyan chapel in the same street; but still hundreds had to leave for want of accommodation. At the Hall Mr. J. S. Smithson presided.

The hymn "Come, Holy Spirit" having been sung, the Rev. Mr. Drought led in prayer, and Sir Ed. Synge Hutchinson read a portion of Scripture.

The Chairman announced, as the subject for the evening's consideration, "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost."

Addresses on this important subject were given by Rev.

[840]

Dr. Asa Mahan and Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville, of Glasgow. Our readers will be glad to have the opportunity of considering at length the doctrinal statements of the former, and the stirring practical address of the latter on this topic. We hope to give them in full in our next.

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

When the Convention resumed its sittings on Wednesday forenoon there was the same crowded attendance as characterized the earlier meetings, and the same impressive earnestness manifested by the multitude assembled. For the first two hours the chair was occupied by the Rev. J. Stevenson and Major-General Dobbs respectively, subjects being "Paul's prayer for the Ephesians" (chap. iii. 14 to end), and "Always abounding in the work of the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58). The first was opened by the Rev. F. Dowling, of Dalkey, and spoken to by the Rev. Thos. Good and the Rev. E. Fox; and the latter by Dr. Mackay, of Hull, who remarked that while the burthen of legalism would be "Work and live," the burthen of grace was "Live and work." Prayers were offered up by the Revs. David McMullen, J. Wilson, and J. McMillan, hymns appropriate to the respective themes being sung between.

HOW FURTHER TO 'EVANGELIZE IRELAND.

This subject, to the elucidation of which very many had looked forward with interest, was the next on the programme to engage attention, but only one hour was set apart for its discussion. The chair was taken by the Rev. E. Best, D.D. After the singing of two simple but earnest hymns, wedded to the sweetest of melodies by the negro Jubilee Singers, now on a visit to this country,

Mr. J. S. SMITHSON opened the subject. At the outset he might assume, he said, that the evangelization of the Roman Catholics and of the masses of the country could only be carried forward on a great scale by united forces of Christians. It had been well put—"The masses of the people must and will only be reached by the masses of the Church." Thus at the very start the necessity for union stared them right in the face, and to keep that right there must be the closest relationship not only amongst the ministers, but amongst the members of the various Christian churches. They must cease "I am for this, and I for that," and be all in all for Jesus; they must sink their particular Church views into insignificance, that Christ might be put to the front. They had been too long directing their artillery against each other, instead of keeping it for the warfare with sin and Satan. He noticed that sometimes in the country they had ploughing-matches. Was there not fallow ground in God's world that wanted stirring up, and could they not unite with their spiritual ploughs to break up that fallow ground? That furnished one idea—united evangelistic services, not only in Dublin, but in every town in Ireland. To ~~achieve that~~, there must be a greater exchange of pulpits by the clergy, and, above all, there must be mutual recognition of each other. There were, he knew, brethren who were under ecclesiastical restraint, and could not ask brother ministers of other denominations to occupy their pulpits; but he did not know of any ecclesiastical barrier which forbade their going to the churches and preaching from the pulpits of others; and if they desired to be courteous, there was no rule forbidding their throwing open their school-houses wherein to meet brethren of every denomination. Thus, if there could not be a complete exchange of pulpits—which, beyond doubt, would be acceptable both to pastors and to people—they could at least have union prayer-meetings where the highest dignitaries of the Church could work with the lowest member of Christ's body on earth, and join together in seeking God's blessing. To be practical, he suggested that the 350 clergymen who came up to these meetings should, when they returned to their homes, each have his union prayer-meetings weekly, or, if possible, even more frequently. By having these circles of prayer throughout the land, did they imagine that the Lord would not give the blessing desired?"

Then there could be meetings for Sabbath-school teachers, and meetings for young men, where they might unite for aggressive work in their individual classes. In all such union work there must, however, be forbearance. Lord Nelson, at Copenhagen, when told that one of the enemy's ships exhibited the flag of surrender, put the glass to his blind eye and said that positively he could not see it. In all union work they must have a blind eye; and the reason, in his opinion, why there was not more unity amongst them was that they had not a blind eye—that they had always been too ready to pick out the weaknesses and crotchets of others.

Another thought that he wished to throw out was, that there was too much multiplicity of machinery in their Christian work—too many societies aiming at kindred objects, and only kept apart, to their common weakness, by reason of denominational jealousy. To their reproach, the Roman Catholics had too much ground for the sneer, that our Bible was a book of division, a book causing strife amongst them.

In conclusion, he had a word to say about evangelists. These ought to be stamped men. Every coin that bore the Queen's image was not a legal tender. A cracked sixpence was not legal; and so not every man who called himself an evangelist was in truth an evangelist. Some—he would not say cracked sixpences, but some inexperienced men, had been going about as evangelists, who, under that guise, only sought to ventilate their own peculiar crotchets and views. Who was to blame for this? The churches. Because evangelists had not been properly recognized by the churches. He hoped that this would be remedied in the future, and as a guarantee against anything spurious he suggested that branch societies should be established in every county of Ireland in connexion with the Central Committee in Dublin, whence they could derive counsel and guidance.

Rev. HAMILTON MAGER expressed his belief that the system of colportage, if worked by the churches unitedly, would be a most powerful agent in the evangelization of Ireland. Being one of the honorary secretaries of the Dublin Colportage Society, he could speak with experience. He knew the usefulness of that Society; and he also knew its shortcomings, most of which sprung from the fact that it was a denominational and not a united Christian organization. This country was at the present moment remarkably prepared for this work of colportage. The people were better able to read than ever, and there was a great thirst throughout the land for readable matter. Those engaged should be men of pronounced Christian character—men of prudence, and men who would not readily give or take offence. They should be trained for their arduous and difficult mission by the different churches with which they were connected, and they should be instructed not to make converts to their particular denomination or church, but converts to Christ. As an example of what might be accomplished, he mentioned that one agent of this society sold, during last year, no fewer than 930 copies of the New Testament (without notes), and that in districts of the country which they had reasonably supposed to be most inaccessible to their efforts. He thought that there was also room for a monthly publication with a good Irish title, and illustrated every month with a first-class picture of a subject appealing to that love of country that, with all its waywardness, was one of the very noblest features of the Irish character. And he believed that no Church could do that alone,—that it must be the emanation of Christians, and not the organ of any one denomination, to be of any weight.

The Rev. M. T. MORIARTY, as a minister of the Church of Ireland, rector of an important parish in the south, wished to say that he had anticipated one of the suggestions of Mr. Smithson, in so far as that he had preached in Presbyterian churches and in Wesleyan chapels, without being afraid of either bishops or archbishops. He was descended from a true family of Levi—he had two brothers, one son, and seven nephews in the ministry, and he loved his native Church. Still he felt that it was a duty and a privilege to labour with and recognize all his evangelical brethren.

Rev. Joseph Rainsford, rector of Dundalk, said he had done the same as Mr. Moriarty.

After a few remarks from Mr. James Barton, of Dundalk, on the advantage of properly accredited evangelists, visiting country parishes,

This meeting terminated by the singing of the hymn "Ho, my comrades!"

CONFESSION OF CHRIST.

This was the subject of the last of the day meetings, which was presided over by the Rev. Dr. McCarthy. The subject was introduced by Mr. James Barton, and spoken to by Dr. Gunn and the Rev. W. Park, of Belfast, each of whom enjoined the necessity of believers living for, and manifesting their attachment to, Christ before all men.

The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of a hymn—"I'm redeemed"—by the Jubilee Singers.

EVENING MEETINGS.

The crowd at the evening meeting was very large. Long before the hour fixed for commencing the proceedings, the Hall was filled in every part, while the Wesleyan and Presbyterian churches, in which the overflow meetings were held, were literally packed, and round the door of each stood an anxious crowd who could not be accommodated. The Rev. W. F. Stevenson presided in the Hall.

The evening was devoted to the subject of "Praise." Very interesting addresses were delivered by the Rev. S. A. Walker, of Bristol; Rev. J. Donnelly, of Kingstown; and Dr. Mackay, of Hull. The others who took part in the proceedings were—Rev. Dr. Black, of Inverness; Rev. Mr. Rainsford, of Dundalk; Rev. Dr. Hughes, and Rev. Mr. Mullen. The Jubilee Singers were present, and sang a number of hymns with exquisite sweetness.

Mr. Smithson announced that he had received the following telegram that evening:—"From Moody, Philadelphia, to Smithson, Dublin—Loving greetings from the Christians of Philadelphia to the Christians of Dublin.—Pray for us." The proceedings were brought to a close with the Benediction.

The ministers and Christian friends who attended the Convention breakfasted together on Thursday morning in the Rotundo. The chair was occupied by Sir E. Syngé Hutchinson, Bart.; and the meeting was addressed by the Rev. Mr. Stevenson, Lord James Butler, the Rev. Mr. Walker, the Chairman, and others. We hope to give a detailed account of the proceedings in our next issue.

We understand that a full official report of the meetings of the Convention will be issued in a few days, and may be had of the various booksellers in Dublin, as well as of Messrs. Partridge, 9, Paternoster-row, London, price 6d.

(Our report will be continued next week.)

"ROCK OF AGES."—On Monday, the 15th, at the Prayer-meeting, 15, Lower Seymour-street, Portman-square, the Rev. W. Haslam gave a deeply interesting address on the first two lines of this hymn. There is, he said, a believers' Gospel as well as a sinners' Gospel, and this is the believers' Gospel. The sinner when he is saved comes on the rock; the believer desires to get into the cleft of the rock. Christians have trials as well as other people; indeed, they have generally more than others. But as the rain from above fell on the ark, not on Noah, and the storms from beneath only raised him higher, so trials are designed to make believers rise higher. We are not merely saved, but we are safe. He died to save us, and lives to keep us. We are not saved by faith to live by works—the just shall live by faith.

OUR SHOPWOMEN.—It is proposed to establish a Convalescent Home, at Mitcham, for Invalid Female Assistants in Houses of Business, with religious privileges, under a motherly Christian matron. The house stands on gravel, in an open position, only twenty minutes by rail from town, in a garden of about two acres. It is intended to make the institution self-supporting in some degree, but a large sum must be provided through annual subscriptions to meet the expenses of maintaining it and the necessary staff. The necessary outlay being much greater than at first proposed, this much-needed work is earnestly commended to Christian help and sympathy. Miss Dudin Brown, Buckingham Palace Hotel, Buckingham-gate, S.W., will receive contributions. A correspondent understands that the Rev. Marcus Rainsford is so pleased with the project and the house, which he has seen, that he has promised to raise £25 a year in aid of it.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST MISSIONS IN LONDON.—Earnest Christians in connexion with the Primitive Methodists have long desired to open missions in the East and South of London. They resolved to commence operations in some of the most needy parts, and in February, 1874, the work was commenced, and has been already richly blessed by God to the salvation of souls. During the one year and eight months since the commencement of this work, four missionaries have been employed, three mission chapels have been taken on rent, one public-house has been purchased and converted into a mission and schoolroom. In this place, once noted for drunkenness and juvenile crime, the Gospel is preached, a Sabbath-school and Band of Hope are conducted, and a gracious work of the Spirit has been wrought amongst the children, several of whom have been gathered into Church fellowship. Our object is to win souls to Christ, and then to build them up by Gospel truth, and urge them to work to bring others to the Saviour. Four Christian churches have been planted, with a membership of 152; four Sabbath-schools have been established, numbering at the present about thirty teachers and 300 children. Of late a more commodious chapel has been purchased in Southwark, at a cost of £1200, to supersede the first mission chapel taken in connexion with this work. Other doors are opening to us, but we lack funds to sustain and extend our operations. Great economy is used, but we have at present a balance of £109 owing to the Treasurer. We earnestly solicit donations and annual subscriptions from all who sympathize with zealous and well-directed efforts to promote the social, moral, spiritual, and eternal happiness of the sons and daughters of toil and suffering, which will be duly and gratefully acknowledged. Having laboured previously for eight years as a minister and in mission work in London, and occasionally as a helper in this work, I know the necessity, importance, and utility of these missions.

TO THE MINISTERING WOMEN OF CANADA.

LETTER FROM MISS MACPHERSON.

It is with regret that, my time being so fully occupied, I am unable to reply to the deeply interesting letters from your various praying circles, but I the more remember you before our Father's throne, asking still greater things.

May I, in much love, entreat you to show to the world that you are wanted in burning desire for the glory of God. Without this deep, silent current flowing through us women, the waves of blessing in our beloved Canada will be hindered.

We are not surprised that our God hath wrought wonders at Quebec, for did Jesus not go to the place of which it was asked, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Remember, the Lord is very jealous of our looking to the creature, and not direct to Himself, for the blessings we are asking. Excitement of every kind brings corresponding disappointment; watch calmly for souls. Phœbe and Priscilla work will cause us to be succourers of many—watchful for souls, so that our stewardship shall be rendered with joy.

We commend our 2500 children scattered throughout your Dominion to your loving care. In our old land, as the Lord hath enabled us, we have sown the seed in their young hearts. Their youthful voices are thrilling the same hymns, and now we follow them by thousands of petitions, expecting many back from your Canadian institutions—men and women filled with the Holy Ghost, who shall go forth to the millions who have never heard of a Saviour's love.

My present burden is heavier than even the little children in training, of which our homes are already filled. Pray that much wisdom be given. I can no longer be responsible in bringing the elder girls apart from their parents. Hence the great question with us in England is, What is to be done for

OUR ELDER GIRLS?

Anything but domestic life is the order of the day; everything seems to tend to make woman's work valuable in the manufactory. Among our masses this is sapping the foundations of "home, sweet home." This winter we hope to help hundreds of young women between fourteen and twenty to see and know the charm of "guiding the house," in obedience to those ladies who, for Christ's sake, will give them further training in domestic work, after we have got them into order. This is our way of trying in some small measure to stem the torrent of love of drink amongst women.

Our trials are very great; we find it very difficult to get the poor young women from the factories until they are entirely exhausted, after twelve hours of labour. But we are never left without cheer from the good hand of our God; a few souls every week are finding Jesus as their own precious Saviour.

Beloved sisters at Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Prescott, Kingston, Belleville, Colborne, Port Hope, Toronto, Hamilton, St. Catharine's, Niagara, Galt, Brantford, Stratford, Embro, Knowlton, and many unnamed, let us be very lowly, just where Mary sat, "at Jesus' feet." It hath pleased Him to choose us, to fill us with his joy, to call us his friends, pouring his love into us. Let our life henceforth be "No more I, but Christ living in me,"—ever ready to put self aside, that He may work in us to will and do all his pleasure.

Yours in a risen Lord,

Spitalfields, London, Nov. 20, 1875. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

ANGLO-ISRAEL.—(Jer. xvi. 13.) Surely, this verse should be sufficient to prevent the Anglo-Saxons from believing that they are the ten lost tribes of Israel. It declares, in the words of Jehovah: "I will cast you out of this land (Palestine) into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night: where I will not show you favour." Has the Lord shown no favour to the Anglo-Saxons in Britain? Did they come there from Palestine? Deut. iv. 26-30 is also another perfect refutation by itself alone, unless we are all serving "gods the works of men's hands, . . . which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell" (verse 28).—Communicated.

LIVERPOOL.—It is proposed to begin the new ministry at Christ Church, Everton, recently vacated by Rev. W. H. M. Aitken, on Sunday, Dec. 5, and to keep the first week as a week of prayer in the parish, and the second week—from Dec. 12 to 19—as a week of mission services, to be held in the new Mission Hall, in Gordon-street, built during Mr. Aitken's incumbency. Will your readers pray that the firstfruits gathered in may be so large as to give promise and earnest of a rich harvest? There is urgent and immediate need of curates of thorough missionary spirit. Ask the Lord of the harvest to send the labourers into his harvest.

SHINING FOR JESUS.

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings?
You have given your hearts to Him;
But is the light strong within them,
Or is it but pale and dim?

Can everybody see it—

That Jesus is all to you?
That your love to Him is burning
With radiance warm and true?

Is the seal upon your forehead,

So that it must be known

That you are "all for Jesus"—

That your hearts are all his own?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings?

You remember the first sweet ray,

When the sun arose upon you

And brought the gladsome day;

When you heard the Gospel message,

And Jesus Himself drew near,

And helped you to trust Him simply,

And took away your fear;

When the darkness and the shadows

Fled like a weary night,

And you felt that you could praise Him,

And everything seemed bright.

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings,

So that the holy light

May enter the hearts of others,

And make them glad and bright?

Have you spoken a word for Jesus,

And told to some around—

Who do not care about Him—

What a Saviour you have found?

Have you lifted the lamp for others,

That has guided your own glad feet?

Have you echoed the loving message,

That seemed to you so sweet?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings,—

Shining for Him all day,

Letting the light burn always,

In lessons and in play?

Always,—when those beside you

Are walking in the dark?

Always,—when no one is helping,

Or heeding your tiny spark?

Not idly letting it flicker

In every passing breeze

Of pleasure or temptation,

Of trouble or of ease?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings,—

Shining just everywhere,

Not only in easy places,

Not only just here or there?

Shining in happy gatherings,

Where all are loved and known?

Shining where all are strangers,—

Shining when quite alone?

Shining at home, and making

True sunshine all around?

Shining at school, and faithful—

Perhaps among faithless—found?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings,

Not for yourselves at all?

Not because dear ones, watching,

Would grieve if your lamp should fall?

Shining because you are walking

In the Sun's unclouded rays,

And you cannot help reflecting

The light on which you gaze?

Shining because it shineth

So warm and bright above,

That you must let out the gladness,And you must show forth the love?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings?

Or is there a little sigh

That the lamp his love had lighted

Does not burn clear and high?

Is the heavenly crown that waits you

Still, still without a star,

Because your light was hidden,

And sent no rays afar?

Do you feel you have not loved Him
With a love right brave and loyal,
But have faintly fought and followed
His banner bright and royal?

Oh, come again to Jesus,
Come as you came at first,
And tell Him all that hinders,
And tell Him all the worst;
And take his sweet forgiveness
As you took it once before,
And hear his kind voice saying—
"Peace! 'Go and sin no more!'"

Then ask for grace and courage
His name to glorify,
That never more his precious light
Your dimness may deny.

Then rise, and "watching daily,"
Ask Him your lamps to trim
With the fresh oil He giveth,
That they may not burn dim.
Yes, rise and shine for Jesus!

Be brave and bright, and true
To the true and loving Saviour,
Who gave Himself for you.
Oh, shine for Jesus, darlings!
And henceforth be your way
Bright with the light that shineth
Unto the perfect day!

FRANCIS RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

ABODE OF FAITH.—Our readers will have seen that Mrs. Dalby, of 19, Ainger-terrace, King Henry's-road, Primrose-hill, has devoted her energies to the noble work of providing means for the rescue and restoration of our erring sisters of the better class. Her premises have hitherto been entitled "House of Faith," but at our request she has altered it to "Abode of Faith," in order that it may not in any way seem to clash with Mr. Karl Andreas's "House of Faith" at Tower-street, Hackney. We trust our sister may have abundant success in her high and holy undertaking.

THE LATE FLOODS.—Will you allow me to plead through the medium of your paper on behalf of many sufferers in this and adjoining parish? In consequence of the recent heavy rains, much loss has been sustained. Not a few are living in one room upstairs, while others are compelled to seek shelter in chapels, one of which belongs to the church over which I preside. Seven houses have been literally swept away; thus several are consequently homeless. The locality of these unfortunate persons is covered for miles with a sheet of water so great as seriously to affect the railway traffic between Bridgwater and Durston Stations. And this state of things is likely to continue for some time, as the water is subsiding but gradually. To meet this urgent case a committee has been formed, and a chairman and treasurer appointed. At a meeting held on Nov. 22, the sum of £68 was raised. A much larger sum, however, is required to really meet the wants of the sufferers. Will Christians assist us in this worthy cause? As it needs no recommendation at my hands, I have simply related the bare facts of the case. Seventy families are now homeless. Contributions will be received either by Rev. J. W. Robinson (chairman), Mr. Auber (treasurer), myself, or the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN. E. HANDEL JONES.

THE HEBRIDES.—A large but little-known field for evangelistic work exists in the islands on the north-west coast of Scotland; and now that tourists are finding their way to districts hitherto unexplored, it is to be hoped that interest will be quickened in the spiritual needs of the inhabitants. The West Coast Mission Society has for years laboured, sending agents to remote districts in some instances left without any ministry whatever, and, through God's blessing, these efforts have not been unattended with success; but in this work peculiar difficulties have to be encountered, arising from the small number of Gaelic-speaking missionaries to be met with, and the apathy as regards spiritual things only too common in the districts themselves. In some places the work is at a standstill for want of house accommodation; and anyone acquainted with the details of mission work will acknowledge how much influence an attractive exterior exercises in the first instance in drawing people to hear. We appeal to those who know the blessing of sowing beside all waters to give an impetus to a work which at the present time affords many openings for the distribution of the good seed. The people are in general willing, even anxious, to hear and to be instructed, and we feel assured that prayer for the Holy Spirit to bring home the Word with power to their hearts will not be left unanswered. The Secretary of the West Coast Mission Society, A. K. Rintoul, 172, Buchanan-street, Glasgow, will be glad to give further information, and to receive any assistance which the Lord may put it into the hearts of his people to give. A. L. C.

MAJOR COLE AT NEWCASTLE.

Our esteemed brother and correspondent Rev. D. Lowe, of Newcastle, says:—

"It is no disparagement to the labours of local brethren or of the various esteemed evangelists who from time to time have come at our request to publish anew to this teeming population the glad tidings of salvation (to every one of whom the Lord has given more or fewer precious souls to be their glory and joy in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming), to say that, in my judgment, God is working among us more powerfully in connexion with the labours of Major Cole, his wife and daughter, than He has done since we parted with their far-famed friends and fellow-labourers Messrs. Moody and Sankey more than two years ago."

Another correspondent writes on Nov. 19:—

"Especial care was taken at the service in the Town Hall, on Sunday evening last, to keep out all church-going people and, as a consequence of this, the Town Hall was filled with the class of persons whom it is most desired to reach. The results in this, as, indeed, in every meeting now held, were most encouraging, and further services in the same Hall are arranged."

"The services in the Central Hall have been continued every evening with very marked results. In connexion with one large establishment in the town there have been numerous cases of conversion; some of an extremely hopeful kind. One gentleman in the town has had the unspeakable joy of having six of his children converted."

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.

Those gentlemen in connexion with the London City Mission who labour among the foreigners of various nationalities to be found in our metropolis, were hospitably entertained, together with other friends, by Mr. T. B. Smithies at his residence at Wood-green on Wednesday evening last week. These periodical gatherings (the social meetings take place quarterly), said Mr. Smithies, serve the twofold purpose of encouraging these devoted men in the midst of their difficult, sometimes thankless, and often apparently fruitless labours, and of rekindling an interest in the work of the Mission.

The cosmopolitan nature of the company that met under Mr. Smithies' roof may be gathered from the circumstance that during the hour for refreshments, thanks were returned in somewhere about fourteen or fifteen different languages, whilst two or three more were represented in the course of the evening.

The accounts given by the various missionaries were all of the deepest interest, showing that, though attended with many difficulties and discouragements, their labours were not in vain in the Lord.

Several unusual circumstances added to the peculiar interest of the meeting. Two of our Nestorian brethren were present, and they favoured the company with a specimen of their sacred song. The Psalm (103rd), of which they sang a verse or so, is not a mournful one, but the quaint and plaintive music of our two friends irresistibly reminded us of the days when the children of Israel (whose descendants the Nestorians claim to be) sat by the waters of Babylon, and sang, with aching hearts, the songs of their beloved Zion. One of the Nestorians spoke eloquently on behalf of the Lord's work among his countrymen.

Then we had the details of the conversion of two Roman Catholic priests to the purer faith of the Reformed Churches, from the lips of the converts themselves. One spoke in Italian, and his words had to be translated; the other spoke English fluently and elegantly, and a remarkable story he had to tell of the falling of Popish scales from his eyes. We trust and believe he will be a power for great good among his countrymen in London.

The only other item of peculiar significance we can mention was a large variety of illustrated wall-papers—printed, we do not like to say in how many languages—and exhibited by Mr. Smithies. Prayer was offered that they might all be potent agents in the hands of the Spirit of truth in spreading to the ends of the world the savour of the Redeemer's name; and the same prayer we make, in conclusion, with reference to this unique and delightful reunion of the London City Missionaries to foreigners in London.

WALWORTH.—A new Gospel Hall has been opened in Walworth-road. At the first Gospel service, on Sunday, 21st ult., stirring addresses were delivered, and several stood up at the close to request prayer on their behalf.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.—We are glad to know that this hall, which has been so frequently used for the purposes of opposing God's truth, is now to be dedicated on the mornings of the Lord's-day to the preaching of the Gospel. We trust great good may result. A prayer-meeting will be held at 19A, Great Portland-street, W., on Wednesday evening (Dec. 1), to ask God's blessing on this fresh effort.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TEMPERANCE UNION.

The second meeting of the members of this Union was specially for prayer, and waiting upon God for the outpouring of the spirit of love and power and wisdom for the special part of the Lord's work which they were called to consider. It was held at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields, and was in truth a solemn and a blessed time. The workers dropped in by twos and threes, until at last the place was crowded with earnest praying women, while from the street below the song of the drunkard was heard, and within a stone's throw were hundreds of homes made desolate by strong drink.

The meeting was presided over by Miss Weston, of the Sailors' Rest and Institute, Devonport, and was opened by singing and a short, earnest prayer that the power of God might rest upon all present. Miss Weston read two passages, one from 2 Sam. xxiii. 14-18; the other from 2 Kings i. 4; as illustrative of two points in the question which drew them together—David's refusal to drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, because it seemed to him like drinking men's lives; and Hezekiah breaking the brazen serpent the moment it was made an instrument of sin. Prayer was then asked, no prayer to exceed five minutes, and from one and another short, fervent, earnest prayers went up to God. Again the meeting was broken by Miss Weston reading a very interesting letter from a seaman on board H.M.S. Raleigh, at Bombay, and Miss Mason proceeded to explain that the "Christian Workers' Union" was for prayer and work; she stated that nearly 100, some very prominent in the Lord's work, had joined the Union, and were prepared to carry on the cause with the power and energy that are the promised gift of God the Holy Spirit. Various fields of labour were indicated, and these will be entered upon at once, and the results duly sent forth to the Christian world.

Requests for prayer being asked for, a very large number, some for most touching cases, were given in, and, in earnest, short prayers, laid before God—Miss Macpherson and others pleading for the awful drunkenness in the East of London, and others for other parts of the great city and the country, and for individual cases. A short interval for silent prayer brought the meeting to a close. The power of prayer was so deeply felt, that it was arranged that another prayer-meeting should shortly be called, and that any persons having requests for prayer on this great subject should be invited to send such requests to the Hon. Sec. for London, Miss Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn, who will classify and forward them to the various daily prayer-meetings as requests from the "Christian Workers' Temperance Union." Meetings will be announced, as arranged, in THE CHRISTIAN, and work among all classes by the Union is about to commence.

WESTBURY, WILTS.—We have to add our record of blessing given here in answer to prayer through the visit of Mr. Vicary. The daily Bible-readings were much valued, and the united special services were crowded every night. The work has been principally among young people; six young men in a Bible-class have professed to find peace by the blood of Jesus. We ask much prayer for this town, that the people of God may be quickened, and many unsaved ones brought to Jesus. R. R. T.

WRITING FOR JESUS.—We insert the following extract from a letter, a copy of which has reached us, in the hope that it may incite many of our young converts to imitate the writer's example. The letter was sent by a young convert to one of his acquaintances:—"Dear B.,—When Mr. Moody was at the Agricultural Hall he preached from the text, 'Adam, where art thou?' and his sermon led me to ask myself the question, 'Where should I be if God came this night and required my soul?' My conscience told me that I should have been lost, but by the grace of God I was enabled to see that He was satisfied with his Son's death as the penalty for my sins. I was enabled to trust in Christ, and resolve that for the future, by God's help, I would live no more as a servant of the devil, but as a servant of God. He has kept me, and I know that he will in the time to come. I used to have the opinion, and no doubt you have now, that to be a Christian is to pull a long face, and be very miserable; that is a very mistaken idea. I know I was never happier than I have been these last nine months; in fact, one cannot be really and truly happy till they are at peace with God. Then they can never be miserable, for he gives them that peace which the world cannot give. I have written this to you, hoping that you will ask yourself the question, 'How is it with me?' and also to invite you to the Young Men's Christian Association. I trust you will think this over, for if we would be happy here on earth, and go to heaven at last, the wisest plan is to accept the Saviour early."

AMONG THE MASSES AT SOUTHAMPTON.

A CORRESPONDENT describes a very successful series of special meetings held here in connexion with the Evangelization Society, and adds:—

"Some hundreds have been conversed with as anxious inquirers, and in most cases the names and addresses of these were taken, so that a systematic visitation of them could be carried on, and they could be easily reached for any necessary purpose. Of these hundreds, very many found peace in Christ, and are now living as bright testimonies to the power of the Gospel. Some have been lost sight of, and after giving indications of a change of heart, have ceased to value religious sympathy and help. Amongst the cases where decided change of heart and life are manifest, there are some of a deeply interesting character."

TRACT DISTRIBUTION IN LONDON.

A HIGHLY representative, if not a very numerous, company of active Christian workers assembled at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Thursday last, to consider what additional steps ought to be taken for utilizing tract distribution as an evangelistic agency in the metropolis during the present winter. Captain Moreton presided, and in a few opening remarks stated the purpose of the meeting, calling on Mr. John Stabb, of the Monthly Tract Society (at whose instigation, chiefly, the meeting had been convened), to give the first address.

Mr. Stabb dwelt at the outset on the palpable need of this kind of effort in view of the widespread ignorance, among rich as well as poor, of God's way of salvation. The command of the Saviour was to "preach the Gospel to every creature." "Preaching," or, as the original might be more aptly rendered, "proclaiming" the Gospel could be done as legitimately by the printed word as by the human voice. The press was in many instances, at present, a mighty engine for evil; let it be made as mighty an instrument for blessing. Eternity alone would reveal the incalculable amount of blessing that had resulted from tract-distribution; by means of one tract alone, "Have you?" published by the Monthly Tract Society, five or six evangelical clergymen had been led into the liberty of the Gospel. Other very striking instances he gave, which we cannot here enumerate. He had no particular preference for any existing collection of tracts; only let those be chosen that led up to the Word of God itself, and a rich blessing would be sure to follow.

We must summarize the numerous suggestions that were then made by various speakers as to the best way of attaining the object at heart. We may premise that the general opinion was, that, to make tract-distribution effective for good, it ought to be accompanied by personal visitation from house to house, and personal conversation, whenever that was possible. General Burrows thought a kind word for Christ along with the giving of a tract would prove fruitful. He also thought an appeal ought to be made to ministers to furnish suitable and steady workers from among their congregations. Mr. Larkins advocated more extensive organization for the distribution of suitable tracts to distinct classes, such as publicans, cabmen, &c. Mr. Frost, of the Christian Instruction Society, considered that every Christian congregation should be the centre of Gospel light, to be diffused all around; and thought there was much latent talent in all the churches lying undeveloped. He proposed a central committee, but the Chairman reminded the meeting of the organization still existing in connexion with Mr. Radcliffe's system of house-to-house visitation, by which the whole of London had been mapped out into districts.

Rev. Thos. Richardson, of Stepney, showed, from the agencies at work in connexion with his own congregation, what could be done with the present machinery if it were only sufficiently put in motion. After further suggestions of a similar kind, it was ultimately resolved that a deputation from the meeting should communicate with Mr. Radcliffe's committee, and ascertain what assistance towards the desired end could be rendered by their organization of house-to-house visitors.

In considering the description of tracts to be used, Mr. Houghton spoke of one written by himself—"A Saviour for You"—which had been circulated to the number of 3,000,000, and had been largely blessed of God. He thought well got-up tracts or small books were more useful than very cheap tracts, because they were more likely to be preserved and read.

Various further suggestions were made on the resumption of the Conference after tea. Tract-distribution in railway-carriages and at station platforms just before the starting of trains was commended. Mr. G. Kirkham believed the shortest way to go to work was to supply the 400 City Missionaries, 200 Scripture readers, and the other existing agencies with good, suitable tracts; and since rich neighbourhoods were not visited by these, the post might be used.

We trust our readers, without waiting for the result of the proposed conference with Mr. Radcliffe's committee, will at once adopt some of the suggestions we have briefly hinted at, or any others that may better recommend themselves. "In the morning, sow thy seed, and in the evening, withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

NOTTINGHAM MISSION.

THIS Mission, announced in our last, has, according to all accounts been accompanied with much success. One of the most pleasing features of the Mission was the co-operation of so many of the manufacturers and large employers of labour in the town. We read in the Nottinghamshire Guardian (15th ult.) that:—

On Tuesday afternoon the servants of the Great Northern Railway Company listened to an exposition of the Word. In the warehouses of the town may be witnessed the deeply interesting sight of a religious awakening amongst the operatives. Fifteen, at least, of the large factories and warehouses have contributed their share to the present Mission movement. This, we consider, is one of the happiest signs of this useful endeavour. The firm of Messrs. Adams and Co. have long earned for themselves the respect of all by the provision of a daily service within the walls of their own establishment at their own cost. Messrs. Copestake and Moore have followed their excellent example. It was natural, therefore, to expect that on the present occasion these firms would make every possible provision for the spiritual welfare of their people. The reward of all such efforts for good is that in the end others who at first see difficulties in adopting a similar course, at last see their way to it.

The Borough Gaol, with its male and female prisoners, was not without its mission. The Rev. W. Tyrell undertook a mission both to them and also to the inhabitants of the Union. The police, too, owing to the kind consent of Major Poyntz, had a special service at the late hour of nine o'clock in the evening, and here, again, the Rev. W. Tyrell officiated. The poor invalids of the General Hospital were not omitted from the list, for the Rev. E. H. Bickersteth kindly consented to provide such as were able to attend it with a service suited to their pressing wants. It was intended to give the postmen a service of their own, but four in the morning being the only period available for it, for the sake of the overworn missionaries as well as the postmen themselves, this service was dispensed with. The case of the cabmen, too, was so far met that most of the proprietors consented to set them free by instalments as far as was consistent with the convenience of the public. In fact, the needs of no one class of the whole community were intentionally overlooked. The aim seems to have been to bring each and all, as far as lay within the limits of ordinary power, within the sound of those sacred truths which have been too little propagated outside the sphere of ordinary congregations, and which it is now intended should be heard by every individual who will lend a listening ear; and we must add that this high and noble aim has been met with a fulness and an earnestness which the town of Nottingham has rarely, if ever, witnessed before.

A PRAYER-MEETING has been commenced by some of the gentlemen in the eminent banking-house of Messrs. Glyn, Mills, and Co. A very good gathering took place on Thursday evening at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldergate-street. The Spirit of the Lord was present, and many felt it good to be there.

"MISSIONARY LEAVES."—This is a most excellent little monthly, edited by Rev. R. C. Billing, Islington, and devoted to the interests of the work of the Church Missionary Society. A correspondent thus writes of its merits:—"It first came under my notice when out of health, and its pages not only gave me much interesting information, but put definite objects before me for the little work with my hands that I could do; and somehow the very simple act of knitting a comforter for a red Indian made that Indian a real person,—a brother, perhaps, in Christ to me. I could pray more heartily for him and his race by coming into contact with him by my handiwork. There is often a difficulty in setting young Christian women to work for Christ, and I think this little magazine might help in that direction." The magazine is published by W. Hunt and Co., Ave Maria-lane, E.C., price one penny.

OXFORD.—Last Friday, Mr. Rickards, of the Children's Special Service Mission, came to this city, and held meetings for children and young people on Friday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoon and evening. The Sunday services were densely crowded, and at all meetings we trust souls were saved. On the Sunday evening the power of the Lord was manifestly present, and to-day there is joy in many households over sinners saved at that meeting. Yesterday, Mr. H. Varley came to us to commence a fortnight's services. Last night he preached in the Town Hall to a large assembly. The word was with power, and some sought and found life in Jesus. Will the Lord's people pray that the afternoon Bible-readings may be very profitable to believers, and that many sinners may be saved at the evening meetings.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A YOUTHFUL MARTYR.

IN the first ages of the Church of Christ, in the city of Antioch, a believer was carried forth to die as a martyr. "Ask any little child," said he, "whether it were better to worship one God, the Maker of heaven and earth, and one Saviour, who is able to save us, or to worship the many false gods whom the heathen serve?"

Now, it was so that a Christian mother had come to the spot, holding in her hand a little son, of about nine or ten years old, named Cyril. The heathen judge no sooner heard the martyr's words than his eyes rested on the child, and he desired the question to be put to him.

The question was asked; and, to the surprise of those who heard it, the boy replied, "God is one, and Jesus Christ is one with the Father."

The judge was filled with rage. "Oh, base Christian!" he cried, "thou hast taught that child to answer thus." Then turning to the boy, he said more mildly, "Tell me, child, how did you learn this faith?"

The boy looked lovingly in his mother's face, and replied, "It was God's grace that taught it to my dear mother, and she taught it to me."

"Let us now see what the love of Christ can do for you," cried the cruel judge; and at a sign from him, the officers who stood ready with their wooden rods, of the fashion of the Romans, instantly seized the boy. Gladly would the mother have saved her timid dove, even at the cost of her own life, but she could not do so; yet she did whisper to him to trust in the love of Christ, and to speak the truth.

"What can the love of Christ do for him now?" asked the judge.

"It enables him to endure what his Master endured for him and for us all," was the reply. And again they smote the child.

"What can the love of Christ do for him?" And tears fell even from the eyes of the heathen, as that mother, so much tortured as her son, answered, "It teaches him to forgive his persecutors."

The boy watched his mother's eyes as they rose up to heaven for him; and when his tormentors asked whether he would not now acknowledge the gods they served, and deny Christ, he still said, "No; there is no other God but one; and Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world. He loved me, and I love Him for his love."

The poor boy now fainted beneath the repeated strokes, and they cast the bruised body into his mother's arms, crying, "See what the love of your Christ can do for him now!"

As the mother pressed her child gently to her own crushed heart, she answered, "That love will take him from the wrath of man to the rest of heaven."

"Mother," cried the dying boy, "give me a cup of water from our cool well upon my tongue."

The mother said, "Already, dearest, hast thou tasted of the well that springeth up to everlasting life—the grace which Christ gives to his little ones. Thou hast spoken the truth in love; arise now, for thy Saviour calleth for thee. May He grant thy poor mother grace to follow in the bright path!"

The little martyr faintly raised his eyes, and said again, "There is but one God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent;" and so saying he gave up his life.—Golden Sayings for the Young.

THE EAST-END BRANCH of the Young Men's Christian Association is now established at 33, Mile End-road, and young men in that locality are invited to join it. The reading-room is open every evening from 7 to 10. There is a Bible-class on Sunday afternoons at 3.15, and on Tuesday evenings. The Committee appeal for funds to pay off the debt they have incurred for furniture, rent of house, &c. Mr. T. Wickham (the Treasurer), 69, Mile End-road, will be pleased to receive contributions.

BRECHIN, N.B.—Messrs. Smith and Daniels, of the Scottish Evangelistic Society, have paid us a visit which will be long remembered with thankfulness by many. During the week of prayer for young men, Mr. Daniels held special meetings for them in one church, while Mr. Smith addressed women in another. Large numbers remained to the inquiry-meeting, and many, we have good reason to believe, there for the first time trusted in Christ. The children's meetings were also largely attended, and much appreciated, both Messrs. Smith and Daniels having a particular gift for speaking to the young in comprehensible language and gaining and keeping their attention. More than thirty young men have made a good profession, and one lady returned thanks for twenty-five of her Bible-class being brought to Christ. We hope our friends will pray that this good work may continue.

MORE MISSIONARIES.

If the love of the Church to her Lord is to be gauged by obedience to his last command, may we not hope it is on the increase? Are we not far more frequently than formerly called to missionary dismissal meetings? And are not the numbers going forth at one time larger than they used to be? God multiply them still a hundredfold! There will never be enough.

The Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society have been enabled to send out a large number of ladies as new Zenana missionaries this year. The China Inland Mission bids fair to send forth, before the year is over, the eighteen men for whom its earnest director has been praying. Other societies have been also unusually active, and some have gone forth unconnected with any home organization.

One interesting case of this latter kind is that of Miss Reid, of Blackgang, Isle of Wight, who sailed recently for India, having given up not only a lovely home and a loving family circle, but a work in which she had been greatly blessed to the conversion of many souls, in order that she may devote her life to the heathen. Miss Reid had spent some time in the acquisition of medical knowledge, that she might be the more fitted to help both body and soul. At the last moment, this young lady, who had laid her plans to go out alone, was joined by one whose name will be familiar to many of our readers—Miss Clara M. S. Lowe. This lady had long wished to become a missionary, but thought herself too advanced in years to learn the native language. Hearing of Miss Reid's intended departure, she said, "If I cannot teach the heathen myself, I can at least take care of her, and keep house for her while she does. I will go with her." And Miss Reid's parents and friends were only too glad that she should have such a companion. Much prayer had often been offered in the family of Mr. Reid for that particular part of India to which Miss Reid is gone. A young sister of hers was weeping bitterly at the prospect of losing her sister when it was first mentioned to her that Miss Reid had resolved to go herself. "My dear," said her mother, "you should not weep. You know how often and how earnestly we have prayed for this place. You have often asked the Lord to send a lady missionary there." "Yes, mother, but I never meant Him to send sister," was the sobbing reply. Alas! are not too many of our missionary prayers like that? Let us rejoice, and not grieve, if, in answer to our entreaties that He would send forth more labourers, God selects some member of our own family circle.

On Tuesday, the 17th ult., a fresh farewell meeting was convened at the EAST-END TRAINING INSTITUTE, HARLEY HOUSE, BOW.

Mr. Guinness has already had the joy of seeing more than twenty go forth from his Training Home, six or eight as home, and sixteen as foreign missionaries. This meeting was arranged to commend to God's care and blessing two more of the students, Mr. Tayloe (who has since sailed for the West Indies) and Mr. Manders, who is to leave for Australia very shortly; also Miss Scott, of Woolwich, who is going out to Jamaica to be united in marriage to Mr. Johnson (a letter from whom recently appeared in our columns); Miss Bealby, who leaves this month for Lucknow as a medical missionary; and Mr. Baker, about to proceed to the Basuto country, South Africa.

The party at Harley House at the present time is both large and various. Amongst the fifty students are two young Portuguese from Brazil, a Frenchman, a German, an Italian (formerly a Roman Catholic priest), a Syrian, several Caffres and negroes, and the two Nestorians from Persia and Koordistan. These all hope ere long to be preaching to their own people, every man in his own tongue, the wonderful works of God. A large number of friends having assembled from various parts, the meeting was after an hour or two of pleasant social intercourse, adjourned to an iron room opposite, which Mr. Guinness had recently secured for a Mission Hall, and which holds about 300 persons. Here, after one or two brief addresses, a season of quiet prayer was enjoyed, and the missionaries and their future spheres of labour were borne up in intercession before the Lord. Mr. Tayloe, it was stated, was going out as an evangelist more than as a missionary. His purpose is to visit first the various towns and cities in the West Indies, and then other English-speaking regions, the Southern States, part of South America, &c. He goes out in faith, looking to God alone to guide him and open his way. A hundred and fifty converts were added to the various churches and chapels of one city in which he lately laboured for three weeks. One man, who was a drunkard, was arrested a few days after his conversion, for some crime committed previously. He was sentenced to a month's imprisonment, and the first day after his release he was found at the early prayer-meeting, rejoicing in God, and full of holy purpose to live to Him in future. Mr. Tayloe had declined offers of settlement at home, and has his heart much drawn out to the darker regions of the earth. Let us remember him, and the many missionaries who have this year left our shores, in daily prayer, beseeching God to multiply each year more rapidly the number of labourers in his vineyard.

GOOD NEWS FROM THE OTHER SIDE.

For the past two months I have been in Canada and the States; have seen much that would interest your readers. Several districts in America are partaking largely of spiritual blessing. I had the pleasure of attending several of Mr. Moody's meetings in Brooklyn last week, and rejoice to testify to the blessed movement there so auspiciously commenced. The meetings are very large, and numbers are turning to the Lord. I have been as far West in the States as St. Louis, and all over the country there are certain signs of a blessed and wide-spread revival.

Your readers may have heard of a gracious movement commenced in Quebec. On my way home to Glasgow I have been constrained to stay a week here, and aid in the good work. Many in this old city have never seen such a work of God. The meetings are large, and numbers are turning to the Lord. In many homes, the people tell me, everything seems to wear a new aspect—"Old things have passed away, and all things have become new." Many parents can say of their children, "Behold, they pray!" "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Will your readers remember Quebec in prayer? The brethren here desire to have the prayers of Christians on behalf of this movement.

Quebec, Nov. 8.

ALEX. CRAIG, of Glasgow.

CAUTION.—We are requested to warn our readers against a young woman who has been selling lace in the northern counties, representing it to be made by the children at the "Bird's Nest," Dublin. We are informed that no lace is made there.

UXBRIDGE.—The week of special services conducted by Charles Smith, of the Evangelisation Society, have been attended with blessed results. The last services on the Lord's-day were deeply interesting; the afternoon and evening services were crowded, many expressing regret that they were not to be continued through another week. Two services were held for children; one, for which much prayer had been offered, was a wonderful season. Such an impression has been made in the town that those who have been interesting themselves in the movement contemplate holding another week of such services. J. ATKINS.

ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION.—Several Christian friends engaged in the Lord's work at this Mission had a meeting of an interesting character on the evening of Wednesday, the 10th ult. Over eighty men from the lodging-houses in the district were entertained to tea, after which short addresses and singing followed, a deep impression being made on many present. Several meetings are held during the week; on Sundays the lodging-houses are visited, and in six of them short services are held. A most cheering work is also being carried on amongst the Jewish children (boys and girls), some of whom have yielded their hearts to Jesus. Hitherto the workers have obtained the funds needed, but as they desire to give free teas more frequently, and as the expenses of the Mission are very considerable, they appeal to the Lord's stewards for help. Alex. Townsend, Esq., 14, Montpelier-row, Blackheath, S.E., is Treasurer. Gospel tracts and books are much wanted, and can be forwarded to the Mission Hall, 24, Artillery-lane, Bishopsgate, E.C.

WOOLWICH.—On Sabbath last, Nov. 21, we had three services from Mr. Varley. He preached in St. Andrew's Church, which was filled, and in the afternoon and evening crowded in every part. Mr. Varley's subject in the morning was "Justification"; and anyone who was in doubt as to his views on personal sinfulness, present perfectionism, or the completeness of our standing in Christ, must have been satisfied that Mr. Varley's teaching is the "old, old story," only told to us with wonderful freshness and power. In the afternoon the service was to children. The evening subject was the character of King Uzziah. The audience, that listened with breathless interest for nearly an hour to the preacher, will probably never forget the lesson drawn from the temporal success and spiritual failure of the Hebrew king. There was a large after-meeting, and again several were able to profess at the close of the day that they had found in Christ their Saviour and Lord. Christians are asked to pray for Woolwich. The motto of our town is "Invicta," but let us seek to conquer it for the Lord.

ONWARD AND UPWARD.

(WRITTEN ON MY 83RD BIRTHDAY, NOV. 7, 1875.)

"ONWARD and upward," my motto shall be,
 Until in his glory my Saviour I see;
 "Onward," though mountains before me may rise,
 "Upward," though storm-clouds may darken my skies.
 "Onward," though feebly my footsteps may move,
 "Upward," and looking for help from above;
 "Onward," though foes may my pathway surround,
 "Upward," in Jesus my strength will be found.
 "Onward," though fiery darts Satan may hurl,
 "Upward," his banner will Jesus unfurl!
 "Onward," nor coward-like tremble, nor yield,
 "Upward," for mighty is Jesus my shield.
 "Onward," though round me rough billows may roll,
 "Upward," for Jesus their rage will control;
 "Onward," for soon will earth's perils be o'er,
 "Upward," with Jesus to dwell evermore.

M. EDDIS.

CABMEN AND THEIR FRIENDS.

ON Tuesday, November 23, a remarkable meeting was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. It added one more to the many branches of Christian work emanating from that centre of activity. For some time past, Mrs. Pennefather has had the condition of London cabman very much on her heart, and, after earnest prayer, the Hackney and Islington vestries were communicated with, the latter of which gave permission for a cabmen's shelter to be placed near Highbury Corner. This was opened on the 25th. A considerable number were invited to tea, and more than 400 came.

Tea commenced at nine, and speaking at ten; and it was nearly midnight before the last of the guests departed. Capt. Moreton presided, and opened the meeting with prayer and a few hearty words of welcome. Then a cabman named Griffin spoke, beginning with "Brother drivers"! He maintained that the cabmen were not so black as they had been painted. Of the 10,000 in London, more than 1000 were total abstainers, and a considerable number decided Christians; but they needed sympathy. If Christians would abstain from using cabs on Sunday it would produce a marvellous change in the drivers. They were utterly powerless, over two-thirds being compelled to work on Sunday against their will.

Mr. T. B. Smithies followed. He deeply regretted that Mr. Lowe had done away with the distinction between six- and seven-day cabs. Previous to this alteration there were 3500 six-day men. But the men might do much towards their own elevation. If the 10,000 cabmen gave up 2d. a day from their beer-money, it would produce £25,000 a year, and form a splendid benevolent fund. Mr. Robert Paton and Dr. Barnardo having spoken, three more cabmen addressed the meeting; and Captain Moreton closed, as he began, by prayer. Each man on leaving was presented with a New Testament.

This record would be incomplete without a reference to the singing of the North London Evangelistic Choir, which was led by Mr. Joseph Froudman. It was most impressive and effective.

GRAFTON-ROAD CHAPEL, HOLLOWAY, N.—This iron chapel, which is vested in seven trustees, is burdened with a debt of about £150. The ground-rent is £20 yearly. All those who attend are poor people. All the seats are free. The services are conducted gratuitously by Mr. W. Forbes. F. A. Bevan, Esq., Banker, Lombard-street, one of the trustees, is treasurer, and will receive contributions.

SALISBURY.—Rev. E. Thwaites, of Fisherton Rectory, writes:—"Some weeks since the county prison at Salisbury was sold by the magistrates, and the new proprietors came to me, knowing my desire for a mission hall, offering the chapel standing in the centre of the property for £300. After much prayer and consideration I determined to buy it, if the Lord were pleased to dispose his people to supply the funds. I wrote thirteen letters, and with these in my hand I fell on my knees and asked the Lord to bless the effort. Within a week I received £202. The building was secured, and the necessary alterations are completed, at a cost of about £100, so that we have now a beautiful mission hall, capable of holding 300 persons, with a room above that will seat 100 persons more, for the moderate sum of £700. Towards this we have £300. Will any of your numerous readers aid with the remaining £400? Our mission hall has been crowded during the late prayer-meetings and evangelistic addresses by Lord Cavan and other brethren from the Evangelization Society."

"BUSINESS IS BUSINESS."

ON Tuesday evening, last week, in Exeter Hall, the Rev. Dr. Landels delivered a lecture with the above title, being the second of the series of lectures under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association.

His purpose, he said, was to bring the maxim "Business is business" to the standard of truth. He believed he could show that they did not harmonize, and that the maxim represented a principle of action that was false and immoral. It was quoted alike by Christians and men of the world. The former seemed to forget that Christianity was not only for the Church, but also for the bank, the mart, the desk, the counter, and the workshop. There were men in their midst who laid aside their Christianity with their Sunday clothes, and whose course from Monday to Saturday was so thoroughly selfish and actually dishonest, that they, to be consistent, ought to renounce the name of Christian.

The results were seen in the conduct of the day-labourer, who spent nearly half the working-day between his pipe and the beer-shop, up to the men who were known by the name of merchant-princes. It was known by seller and buyer alike that in the merchandise of the country there were many articles sold that were something different from what they were represented to be. Young men were expected to tell a lie, as if they believed it, in selling; and he knew of instances where goods were entered in accounts which were never delivered, in order to make up for tardy payment. In the public press, shares were written up for a purpose; in commerce, bills were drawn and accepted for which value was never tendered or received. In making these statements he did not assert that all those who did any of these things were intentionally dishonest, but there were many who practise them, who, if they had their deserts, would be passing their days in a penal settlement.

But "business is business," and religious men follow the example of their neighbours without looking at the logical result of their actions. But men whose religion is a reality, regulate their lives by religious principles. Tempted by a high rate of interest, Christian men invested their money in Turkish loans to prop up a tottering system and Government by which cruelty and rapine are practised in the face of the civilised world, and the loud cry at present heard was not that of repentance, but a lamentation over pecuniary loss.

Having described the evil, he asked what was the remedy. There was none except the rigid application of religious principle to business life and all life. Mr. Herbert Spencer says there is no remedy but a change in public opinion. Yes, but how are you to create that? It is motive that is wanted rather than opinion. Mr. Spencer is like the physician who would say to his patient, "When your health is improved you will be better." Dr. Landels, in the closing passages of his lecture, eloquently enforced the duty incumbent upon Christians of placing every part of their life under the control of their Divine Master. He admitted the difficulties that stood in the way; but, if they were really soldiers of the Cross, instead of pleading weakly that "business is business," they would obey the Lord's command whatever came of it, like the sentinel standing true at his appointed post till he was frozen to death.

THE HEALTH OF MR. SPURGEON.—Mr. Chas. Blackshaw, secretary to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington, writes to the Daily News:—"The paragraph in many of the newspapers stating that Mr. Spurgeon was detained in a French town by an attack of illness has naturally alarmed his friends. Kindly allow me, through your columns, to inform them that the latest news from him of his health is quite satisfactory. Mr. Spurgeon had symptoms of gout while at Marseilles, and could not move for some days, but is much better, and is able to proceed on his journey."

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.—The Rev. T. B. Stephenson, 5, Church-terrace, Bonner-road, E., writes respecting this institution:—"The Children's Home is in the greatest possible need of funds. Every part of our work except the funds is in a state of prosperity, for which we cannot be too thankful. Three hundred and twenty children are in residence. The buildings are in better order than at any previous period; the discipline and general morale of the work were never so good as now; and, best of all, the good Spirit of God has been working most graciously on the hearts of the children. In each of the four branches of the Home we have had to rejoice over many most beautiful and satisfactory cases of conversion. And we are constantly receiving letters from our children who are in situations in England and Canada, which give to us cause for devout thankfulness, and prove at once the necessity and the permanent value of our work."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.

THE attendance at the daily union prayer-meeting at the central offices of the Young Men's Christian Association in Peter-street has grown to an extent that is highly cheering to the Lord's people. The room in which the meeting is ordinarily held is crowded daily, and on Monday, the 15th ult., the meeting was held in the large upper room, which extends the entire length of the building on the eastern side. The scene was such as to remind us of the days when Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in Manchester. Crowds flocked in until the room was completely filled. Many were compelled to stand during the service. After an earnest address on "Power," which word Dr. Ziemann said had become hackneyed by its frequent use of late, and was sometimes misapplied, he made the following statement, which, from its importance, we give at length:—

"About two months after Mr. Moody left, the central work here had come to such a state that one night (just seven of us were left) we argued the question whether we should go on or not. I confess myself guilty that, vexed by continued disappointments on every side, I myself proposed that question. After earnest prayer we felt we could not give up the work. And now mark how the Lord has dealt with us. The seven workers have grown to a band of 179 living Christians—men and women whose hearts' desire is 'Let Jesus be King.' Eighty-nine of them are converts of our own meetings. Our operations have already spread to exactly seven districts of Manchester, and our method of work is just sevenfold—namely, meetings for men only, Gospel services, Bible-readings, children's meetings, visiting, open-air services, and cottage meetings. We have no fixed prayer-meetings, but united prayer is a great element in our work, and I believe it is on this account that the work has grown so vigorously.

"Think how those men's meetings have been carried on now during nine months, night after night, without a single break. Our young men don't come to large, enthusiastic meetings! After their day's work—and many are hard-working men—they have to go out into the streets on such nights as we have now, rainy and stormy continually. They have to collect their congregations from the street, enduring the continued scoffing and ridicule of those who are indignant at being asked at the door of the theatres to come to a religious meeting! Often our meetings commenced with a very few present; but how God has cheered our hearts! How often, against all expectation, the room was crowded! What visibly marked cases of blessing we had! How often we lingered to a late hour—just to praise God! I am not able to give a report of this work, because facts and dates and numbers state, after all, very little. The real character of the work lies in the marvellous way in which the Lord leads and teaches us from-day to day; inspiring our faith by disappointments, drawing out our hearts to cling to Him, in making us conscious of our helplessness and utter unfitness to work without Him. —Oh, it is just wonderful! but it is the Lord's doing."

After brief reports and prayers, before concluding the service, Dr. Ziemann said that the wooden structure for Ardwick was almost ready, but he was determined not to open it in debt. About £95 was still wanted to fit it up.

J. R.

[A later communication informs us that considerably more than the sum required was subscribed immediately after the Benediction.]

BIRMINGHAM.—Mr. Henry Hill, jun., of the Children's Evangelistic Band, conducted two services in the Moseley-road Wesleyan Chapel last Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The services were well attended, and the results are most encouraging. From 400 to 500 attended both evenings, and a very gracious influence, especially on Wednesday night, pervaded the meeting.

ACTON.—For some time past, special evangelistic efforts have been carried on at the Assembly Room in connexion with the Young Men's Christian Association. Gospel addresses for adults, children's services, young men's meetings, and a united prayer-meeting are held weekly, and much blessing has been given in answer to prayer. The address last Tuesday evening was given by Mr. S. Golding, of the Gospel Hall, Rotherhithe; when the room was densely crowded, a great number of navvies being present, and such evident tokens of Divine favour were given as to induce Mr. Golding to promise (n.v.) a week of Gospel meetings in January next, for which we ask the earnest prayers of all who read this, that God may abundantly bless this effort in the conversion of sinners, and the stirring up of his children to "work and live for Jesus."

"THE CHRISTIAN" ON THE CONTINENT.

MR. JAMES CARTER, of Berwick-on-Tweed, kindly writes:—"I think that some good might be done by sending THE CHRISTIAN to as many as possible of the hotels in the South of France and North of Italy. At this season of the year there are a great many English and Americans, &c., in Cannes, Nice, and other health-resorts, the most of whom live in these hotels, and those only who have been there know what a privilege it is to get intelligence of religious work going on in this and other countries.

"There are English papers provided for the salons, but seldom any such publication as THE CHRISTIAN, or anything of a similar kind. I would propose that those who feel inclined should send their copy, so soon as done with, by post (postage id.), and I will be glad to give the names of a large number of hotels to any who may be willing to apply to me for the addresses. If it is done at all, it should be done systematically, and one person should always send to the same hotel.

"There might be more than 100 copies usefully employed in this way. Should any feel inclined to subscribe for new copies for this purpose, it is a good mode of circulating religious truth."

NORTH-WEST AFRICAN EXPEDITION.

MR. MACKENZIE has received a despatch from the Foreign Office, from which it appears that Her Majesty's Consul at Mogador has, in accordance with orders received from the Foreign Office, been engaged for some time past in collecting information regarding the trade between Morocco and Timbuctoo, the character of the tribes, and the country through which it is proposed to pass. It is represented that the trade that the proposed station near Cape Juby would command at once would amount to £300,000 a year; and that the natives are harmless and not averse to Christianity, but would be glad to receive the expedition and render it every assistance. The despatch also proves that the depression of El Juff is much below the level of the sea, and that it will be a very easy matter to fill this basin with water by means of a channel from the sea. It is pointed out that the proposed station at Cape Juby will be the means of abolishing the slave trade which is carried on from the interior of Africa to Morocco. These poor blacks are sold like cattle in the public markets throughout Morocco, and are treated worse than the beasts of the field. Nothing can be more deplorable than the state of these poor, unhappy creatures, torn from their families and doomed to live a miserable life. To abolish this horrible trade, and plant Christianity in a country where it has never reached, is enough to appeal to the hearts of every Christian.

A missionary station, as is now proposed to be established on the coast of Africa, will be the means of planting the flag of the Gospel among numerous races who are strangers to the blessed truths of our Lord Jesus. The prayers of the godly are asked on behalf of this important expedition, the labours of which promise a rich harvest.

The following, among a number of others, are subscribers to this object:—His Excellency the United States Ambassador, £3 3s.; Hon. Evelyn Ashley, M.P., £5; Andrew Cassels, Esq., of the Indian Council, £10; James Spicer, Esq., £21; Joseph Cooper, Esq., £10. We hope that many of our readers will give this enterprise their support. Funds are still urgently needed. We shall be glad to forward any subscriptions entrusted to us.

A FREE TEA IN A LODGING-HOUSE.—On Wednesday last, Nov. 24, a free tea was given by the Homerton Mission to about two hundred of the very poor, who have been compelled through destitution to resort to the common lodging-house. Miss Macpherson spoke to them of the love of Jesus with much power, followed by Mr. J. J. Jones, of the Homerton Mission. The hearty grasp of the hand, and grateful "God bless you," more than repaid all the trouble in gathering such a company together.

LIVERPOOL.—We learn from a contemporary that the Rev. Campbell Gullan, of Swansea, has been preaching in Victoria Hall. The weather being unfavourable, the attendance was smaller than usual, but some most interesting cases were met with in the inquiry-rooms. Mr. Gullan is a most earnest and powerful preacher of the Gospel. He rivets the attention of his hearers with living words, and must be the means of plucking men as brands from the burning wherever he goes. The Rev. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast, has since been conducting the meetings; and he also is a workman of whom the Master will not be ashamed. It has been decided by the committee to carry on nightly meetings in Victoria Hall during December, if suitable preachers can be had.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, SOHO-SQUARE.

HAVING been suffering for a considerable time from a complaint, for the cure of which the above-named hospital is eminent, I gladly availed myself of the privilege offered me of becoming an indoor patient. Not till I entered its walls, however, did I realize that, by coming, I virtually consented to yield myself entirely into the hands of others. I was overcome with an insane terror, the effect of weakness and fatigue; my mind was filled with rebellious and angry thoughts of God; at the same time I was horrified at my own wickedness. If I thus dwell upon the state of mind in which I entered, it is so that I may make known the patient kindness and care which soothed and brought me back to common sense.

One of my first comforters was a fellow-patient, who assured me that I should soon be happy there, and who drew my attention to the nurse at the further end of the ward, saying she was "one of the kindest creatures that ever breathed." The usual time for the evening devotions having arrived, the nurse read a portion of Scripture, and prayed. What a wonderful gift she had in prayer! I learned soon after that she had engaged in the work, not from necessity, but from a purely missionary spirit. I felt irresistibly drawn to her. Her words of comfort had double weight, and having conquered my reserve, half my troubles vanished in the telling. This same spirit of love and devotedness to the work seemed to animate all with whom I came in contact. Much of this influence is due to the matron, who is devoted to the work, and who is the great encourager and example of self-sacrificing labour.

I could tell of much good done by the kind visits of ladies and gentlemen, whose object was to sow the seed of Divine truth in the hearts thus softened and humbled by suffering. I must give two instances. One was the gentleman who conducted Divine service in our ward every Sunday morning—a bright, cheery Christian; one who honours Christ by showing a cheerful, loving spirit, and who makes one long to drink of the same fountain of joy from which he drinks.

Another instance is that of the head physician, the founder of the hospital. One afternoon, having a little time to spare, much to the delight of all who could be present, he read and explained a portion of Scripture, and then prayed with us. This, I heard, was no uncommon occurrence, but to me it was much. To minister to mind and body both seems to me the most Christlike life on earth. I reverence the union of these two great gifts. Would that all in the profession were animated with the same Christian boldness and zeal.

While my spirit was being thus strengthened and refreshed, I was receiving the best medical treatment, till, after a stay of nearly six weeks, I was pronounced well enough to return home. How my heart bounded with thankfulness to God, who forgiveth all our iniquities, who healeth all our diseases! I looked back at the hospital, which held so many whom I shall ever remember with gratitude, and wished I had a thousand pounds to bestow on it. I know it greatly needs funds. Indeed, one part of it is now closed for want of money to carry it on.

One of the wards is called the "Christian." Why it received this name I do not know, but the thought occurred to me that it would be a very pleasing coincidence, if, through the generosity of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, this particular ward were reopened. To restore health to the wives and mothers of our homes is a great means of reducing the evils of the present day. The missionary spirit in which it is conducted appeals to the highest motives for its support.

That these poor words may reach the hearts of many who have earth's riches at their disposal, and that all the workers engaged in these labours of love may be blessed in their work, is the earnest prayer of
A. GRANTON PATTER.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—The Conferences held here last week have been greatly owned and blessed of God. Such was the number of inquirers that the room appropriated to them became too small, and the Assembly-room was hired for the purpose. Owing to the greatness of the work of God, and the interest of the people in the meetings, arrangements have been made to continue the Conferences another week, including Sunday, Dec. 5.

THE REV. E. P. HAMMOND has led a series of meetings in West Philadelphia, which were largely attended, and not without apparent results. Three meetings a day were conducted in neighbouring Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches. Meetings for the children were held daily at the Berean Baptist Church, and on Monday of this week about 175 children and youth had signed the Christian covenant to which Mr. Hammond invites them to subscribe.

"GRACE FOR GRACE."*

PRESSURE on our time and space has prevented our noticing this book sooner, at such length as it seemed to deserve. It is favourably commended by Mr. Moody in an introduction, in which he says that nothing, in his estimation, can be found "in this age of inquiry and dispute about what is termed 'the higher life' that will more faithfully represent in the life the reality of every good man's conflict with evil within and without, and the power of grace in the gift of faith to overcome it."

The author of the letters was an American minister, who died about eight years ago, leaving behind him, amongst those who knew him, a memory very fragrant with true Gospel holiness. He seems to have been one of those Christians possessed of a burning desire for real holiness, and, at the same time, having a clear and intelligent apprehension of how valueless all claims to holiness are that are not in strict accordance with God's Word. Hence, while he was kept from all extravagant pretensions to sinlessness, his letters contain all that is really valuable in the teaching, commonly associated with the expression "higher life."

It is in this aspect, as Mr. Moody has well pointed out, that the book is likely to be specially of use. It reveals an experience of very rare attainment in true holiness, but withal so humble and so unassuming as to commend itself "to every man's conscience in the sight of God," as being both truthful and Scriptural. His views on the lifelong nature of the conflict are worth quoting:—

"Certainly there is no avoiding a lifelong struggle with corruption. But as God has promised us the victory in the struggle, it seems difficult to reconcile the promise with the ordinarily depressed condition of those who, in the judgment of charity, we nevertheless recognize as Christians. The whole difficulty arises from not giving sufficient latitude to the promise—a latitude required by the nature and design of the conflict. As the struggle is to be lifelong, if support enough be given to endure it to the end, and the victory be won at last, the promise is fulfilled—though in the result of each particular struggle there may be more matter for shame than for exaltation. The power of the Spirit in us is not to be measured by our present success—few can testify to that as the rule in their spiritual history—but by our persevering hope when success seemed scarcely possible."

The book has been somewhat severely reviewed, and more than is at all fair in the way of adverse judgment has been formed against it, on the ground of allusions to "Ecce Homo" and the writings of Maurice, Faber, and others. That Mr. James was deceived by "Ecce Homo," as many others have been, there can be no doubt, but he fully believed that another volume was forthcoming as clear on the Deity as that was on the humanity of Christ. Maurice he admired as a writer, but deplored his views as a theologian. The same may be said of others whose writings he quotes in his correspondence. There is hardly one case where he does not dwell on the faults as well as the points to be admired. It must be remembered, however, that in a correspondence with friends of similar views and sympathetic feelings, allusions to writers whose errors both would alike condemn are not to be viewed as if they were contained in public addresses. Nevertheless, as the publishers have already taken the responsibility of cutting down the letters, we think they might judiciously in the next edition go further, and cut out all reference to writers whose names it is not desirable even to appear to quote with approval. The real value of the book will remain unaffected by admitting what, to put it at its worst, was perhaps an error of judgment as to the really dangerous character of such books as "Ecce Homo" and the writings of Maurice.

THE FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE of the English Presbyterian Church is anxious to secure the services of an ordained European Missionary, with as little delay as possible, to take sole charge of a station in India. Immediate attention will be given to any letter addressed to the Convener of the Subcommittee on India, Donald Matheson, Esq., 52, Queen's-gate, London, S. W.

FOREIGN MEDICAL MISSIONS.—The Deccan Herald says:—"There are two lady medical missionaries now labouring in Bombay who find access to the hearts of those to whom no other missionary has ever found an entrance. We have the pleasure of being acquainted with these lady missionaries, and to know them is to admire their ready skill, their simplicity of character and object, and their devotion to the work they have undertaken. But there is a single-hearted labourer of the other sex, the report of whose labours has been in our hands for several months. Dr. Macdonald came to Bombay a few years ago to fill the place of Dr. Young, the first medical missionary to Bombay, whose health had failed him in consequence of his arduous labours in the mission. Since then he has acquired an adequate knowledge of Marathi and so much knowledge of colloquial Hindoostani as enables him to speak to all classes who come to him for medical aid. The report before us is full of interest, and we recommend its perusal to our readers. It will give them great pleasure to find that such a noble charity is going on in Bombay under the superintendence of so skilled and devoted a medical officer as Dr. Macdonald."

*"GRACE FOR GRACE": Letters of Rev. W. James. Introductory Preface by D. L. Moody. Hodder and Stoughton.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S "KINDER-GARTEN."

6 AND 7, KILBURN-SQUARE.

At the annual meeting, held at 19A, Great Portland-street, last week, the report read by Mr. Weatherley was most encouraging. Six years ago Miss Mittendorff began with two orphans; there are now seventy-seven under her motherly care. The story of her home is one of trial borne in loving faith, and rewarded by the realized favour of the Father of the fatherless. The one impression upon the minds of all present was that we had, in considering his dealings with his child, been brought into the presence of God. Testimony was given to the value of the institution by Mr. Denham Smith, Mr. Hurditch, Dr. Partridge; and Dr. Barnardo and other friends led the meeting in prayer.

An interesting addendum to the annual report says:—

"Miss Mittendorff's great aim, over and above her kind care for the material wants of these little ones, is to bring as many young souls as she can under Gospel teaching, and the new Orphanage at Kentish Town, which she has happily secured, will be as entirely under her own supervision as the two at present existing. The most gratifying testimony is continually being brought to her of the sanctifying influence of her work, even upon those wholly unconnected with it. From far-off Persia and India she has received letters assuring her that the accidental reading of an account of her 'Kinder-garten' has strengthened the faith and confirmed the hope of some of the Lord's dear and tried servants; and nearer home, she is told how poor people in the last stage of despondency have been cheered and encouraged, only by hearing from their poverty-stricken dwellings the tramp, tramp on the pavement outside of Miss Mittendorff's or the other orphans' Home in Kilburn."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

PHOTOGRAPHIC CARDS, with Illustrative Verses and Texts. Religious Tract Society.—These pretty little packets are very suitable for enclosing in letters.

THE MOTHER'S FRIEND. 1s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.—The yearly volume appears in a gay dress than heretofore. It is a very agreeable and useful friend.

PREPARING FOR THE BETTER LAND. 1d. Partridge.—A poem of various and somewhat rugged metre, the moral of which is, "Reader, see you start for heaven in time."

OLD JONATHAN; OR, THE DISTRICT PARISH HELPER. 1s. 6d. Collingridge.—This long-established serial holds its ground well among more modern competitors. The annual volume is very attractive, both outwardly and inwardly, and is sure to be a favourite with old and young.

HEART HEALING. By Rev. W. BOYD CARPENTER, M.A. Hatchards.—An able and thoughtful little treatise on the deceitfulness of sin, the desperate wickedness of the human heart, and the infinite adaptation of God's remedy as revealed in his Word. A prayerful study of it will tend to humility, and bring out into grateful relief the wondrous ways of God to men.

THE COMING GREAT REVIVAL. By CHARLES GRAHAM. 6d. Shaw.—A little book, but full of matter, the main purpose of which is to show that just as the godly in Israel were preparing for and expecting the first coming of our Lord, so there will be a remnant who love his appearing, and who will be waiting for and expecting Him when He comes the second time without sin unto salvation. We may not agree with the exposition of every passage, but we heartily commend this thoughtful and Scriptural treatise to our readers' prayerful study.

URBAN AND HIS FRIENDS. By the Author of "Stepping Heavenward." 3s. 6d. Nisbet.—A series of plain, honest, homely talks between a zealous pastor and some of the members of his flock on such high topics as "The Bible," "Sin," "Temptation," "Holiness," "Prayer," "Faith," "Obedience," &c. It is seldom that one finds so much sound Scriptural teaching on these all important subjects, within the same compass, and told in such an attractive manner. It would be a happy day for the Church if these imaginary conversations were translated into weekly facts in the life of all our congregations. We should like to see a copy of this fascinating and most profitable book in the hands of every young convert in the three kingdoms.

SEEKING THE LOST. By Rev. C. J. WHITMORE. 3s. 6d. t.—We suppose few men, in or out of the ministry, have had a larger experience of mission work among the "lapsed masses" of London than Mr. Whitmore; we know of none who possesses greater facility in describing their labours. In this volume Mr. Whitmore has gathered together a number of sketches, similar to some from his pen that have, at intervals, appeared in our columns. The volume painfully and powerfully reveals the worse than heathen ignorance and corruption,—the sins and sorrows" of our great city; on the other hand, it bears testimony to the power of the Gospel among the lowest of the low. We trust its perusal may stir the hearts of Christian people to more liberal and intelligent support of the earnest and self-denying labours of those who seek to carry the light of the Gospel to the doors and into the hearts of our home heathen.

HALF-HOURS WITH THE KINGS AND QUEENS OF ENGLAND. Partridge.—This beautifully got-up volume contains the leading facts of English history, from the Norman invasion down to the present time; the accompanying engravings of the long line of monarchs add greatly to the interest of the book. It would form an excellent addition to a Sunday-school library.

ALMANACKS.

THE PEOPLE'S ALMANACK (Religious Tract Society) is a wonderful pennyworth, with eight large and excellent engravings.

THE POCKET-BOOK ALMANACK. 2d. Religious Tract Society.—The special feature of this useful little book is the interleaving with ruled paper for memoranda.

THE "CHRISTIAN LIFE" ALMANACK. 1d. Bemrose.—This is a new venture, edited by Rev. E. Boys, Derby. It is pocket size, and contains, besides appropriate texts for each day, short papers on practical subjects, and a collection of choice extracts.

OUR ILLUSTRATED ALMANACK. Arranged by Rev. W. J. MAYERS, of Bristol. 2d. Partridge.—Contains a great deal of profitable reading matter, suitably illustrated, as well as the usual information and selection of daily texts; it is modelled after the style of Mr. Spurgeon's well-known almanack.

DAILY TEXTS.

"HE MADE HIMSELF OF NO REPUTATION."—PHIL. II. 7.

Thurs., Dec. 2.—"His Son, whom He hath appointed Heir of all things." "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through his poverty, might be rich."—Heb. i. 2; 2 Cor. viii. 9.

Fri., 3.—"Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." "She laid Him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn.... And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them." "Though He was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth by the power of God."—1 Cor. i. 24; Luke ii. 7, 9; 2 Cor. xiii. 4.

Sat., 4.—"The brightness of God's glory, and the express image of his person." "His visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men." "There is no beauty that we should desire Him."—Heb. i. 3; Isa. lii. 14; liii. 2.

Sun., 5.—"Our Lord Jesus Christ.... the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." "Pilate therefore said unto Him, 'Art Thou a king, then?' Jesus answered, 'Thou sayest that I am a king.'" "And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns and put it on his head, and they put on Him a purple robe, and said, 'Hail! King of the Jews,' and they smote Him with their hands."—1 Tim. vi. 14, 15; John xvii. 37; xix. 2, 3.

Mon., 6.—"I was the song of the drunkards." "Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."—Ez. lix. 12; John i. 51.

Tues., 7.—"There came a voice from heaven, saying, 'Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.'" "Is not this the carpenter, the Son of Mary, the brother of James and Joseph,.... and are not his sisters here with us?" and they were offended at Him." "Declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead."—Mark i. 11; vi. 3; Rom. i. 4.

Wed., 8.—"Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness." "Behold my Servant whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my soul delighteth." "Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto his brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest."—Ps. lxxix. 20; Isa. xlii. 1; Heb. ii. 17.

"LET THIS MIND BE IN YOU, WHICH WAS ALSO IN CHRIST JESUS."—PHIL. II. 5.

SLAVERY.—From January, 1870, to March last, ninety-eight vessels engaged in the slave trade were captured by English vessels.

ASSYRIAN EXPLORATION.—The Daily News states that Mr. George Smith, of the British Museum, who left London on the 4th inst. on his third expedition to Asia Minor, writes to a friend from Constantinople on Nov. 16, that fresh difficulties have arisen in consequence of the disturbed condition in which that country is at present, and that his application for a firman or permit from the Turkish Government has been unsuccessful. Mr. Smith says that he will therefore be unable, for the present at least, to prosecute his Assyrian explorations, and will return to England about the commencement of the new year.

GREENOCK.—Under the auspices of a joint committee of the Young Men's Meeting and the Young Men's Christian Association, a special week of prayer and evangelistic meetings has just been concluded. The meetings, with the exception of the last one, were exclusively confined to young men, and were of a very interesting character. The Rev. E. Maclean opened the week by an address to young men on Sabbath evening, and was succeeded by Mr. Henry Drummond, Edinburgh; Messrs. William Sloan, Milne, Marshall Lang, and Oatts, Glasgow; and Mr. James Balfour, W.S., Edinburgh. There were anxious inquirers almost every evening, some of whom went on their way rejoicing.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

LONDONDERRY.—Mr. Henry Moorhouse is holding a series of successful meetings here.

MIDDLESBOROUGH.—The first anniversary of the Sunday-school Union here was held on Thursday last, and was felt to be a very profitable season.

HEATHEN IDOLS.—"This year the number of idols (the images of goddess Doorga) made by the sculptors of Calcutta and suburbs is roughly estimated at 2373."

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION.—It has been decided to hold evangelistic services throughout the London Presbyterian churches in the course of the month of February next.

THE REV. MR. NOBLES, a Free Methodist, of Portage, Wis., has bought a steamer, and runs her up and down the Wisconsin River, holding revival meetings at every landing.

THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY has forwarded, through Mr. D. S. Miller, a donation of £20 to the £20,000 building and extension fund of the London Temperance Hospital, now situated at 112, Gower-street.

THE ATTENDANCE at one of the cottage prayer-meetings at Indianapolis, Ind., has averaged 100 for some time past, and occasionally runs up to 120. The house itself is crowded, and the door-yard filled with listeners.

ZENANA MISSIONARY FOR MADRAS.—An interesting meeting was held in Edinburgh last month, at which Mrs. Drury, who has been appointed to succeed Miss Johns, was present, and was commended to the care of the Lord of missions.

FIFTEEN NATIVE CHRISTIANS in the missions of the Church Missionary Society have been admitted to holy orders during the past year—four on the Niger, one in Palestine, two in North India, six in South India, and two in New Zealand.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—It is stated that the directors of the London Missionary Society have under consideration the present opening for mission work in Central Africa, and the propriety of directing one or more of their missionaries to proceed to the interior.

WEEKLY DINNERS FOR POOR CHILDREN.—For six years past a good work has been carried on at Greenwich by Mr. G. S. Wybroo, who has delivered illustrated lectures in aid of a fund established by him six years ago, for the purpose of supplying a weekly dinner to poor children in that locality.

A MEMORIAL VOLUME of the sermons of the late Rev. William Arnot, D.D., of the Free High Church, Edinburgh, is to be published soon. It will bear the appropriate title of "The Anchor of the Soul," as the discourses in it will explain and illustrate "the faith once delivered to the saints."

THE CORPORATION of the City of London has voted 500 guineas in aid of the enlargement of the Borough-road Training College, rendered necessary by the great demand for teachers; and the Clothworkers' Company has promised an annual subscription of ten guineas to the British and Foreign School Society.

METHODIST MISSION.—It is understood that a "Methodist Mission" will be held in London early in the new year. There is to be careful organization, and in some circuits there will be preliminary services. There is strong expectation of great spiritual blessing. These "Methodist Missions" are becoming general. Bradford, Sheffield, Leeds, and other great centres are deeply moved on the subject.

BROTHERLY LOVE.—During the mission week at Stevington parish, near Bedford, conducted by the Rev. W. Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare, the Primitive Methodists, who had unwittingly fixed the same week for their own mission, concluded to shut up their chapel, set free their ministers, and join the Church services. The Baptist minister and people also joined in and prayed very earnestly for the success of the mission.

BOMBAY.—Oct. 17 and 18 having been set apart by the S. S. Union of England and America, throughout the world, were thus observed in Bombay. Besides special meetings for the children held in some of the churches on Sunday, a conference of superintendents, teachers, and pastors was held on Monday evening, at the residence of the Rev. Mr. Weatherhead, Girgaum. A large number were present.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—Walter Penrose desires to return thanks for partial recovery from a serious illness, both of self and family, from an attack of scarlet fever, which has been raging for some time round the Mission. —For an abundant answer to prayer asked in THE CHRISTIAN for increased spiritual blessing. —For great blessing upon the Nottingham and Seaton Mission. —For much blessing at Alderley Edge, Huddersfield, and Norwich.

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS."

A NEW TRANSLATION FROM THE FRENCH OF THEODORE MONOD.

TO THE ENGLISH READER.—This is a new translation of a little book which is not new. Its first French edition appeared in 1862, and its first English version in the following year. It has been republished by the American Tract Society, also by the "Dublin Tract Repository," and translated into several foreign languages, not without tokens of God's blessing upon it. The latest revision was made three years ago. In sending it forth, unaltered, on a new mission, I pray that it may yet help to point many a wandering sinner or wavering saint to the One Star which, across the pathless billow, ever leadeth to the haven: even "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."
December, 1875. TH. MONOD.

"...LOOKING UNTO JESUS..."—HEB. XII. 2.

THREE words only, but in those three words lies the whole secret of life.

"Looking unto Jesus" in the Scriptures, there to learn what He is, what He has done, what He gives, what He requires; to find in his character our pattern, in his teaching our instruction, in his precepts our law, in his promises our stay, in his person and in his work a full satisfaction for every need of our souls.

"Looking unto Jesus" crucified, to find in his blood, shed for us, our ransom, our pardon, our peace.

"Looking unto Jesus" risen again, to find in Him the righteousness by which alone we are justified, and are enabled, all unworthy though we be, to draw near with boldness in his name to Him who is his Father and our Father, his God and our God.

"Looking unto Jesus" glorified, to find in Him our heavenly Advocate,* perfecting by his intercession the work of his mercy and our salvation; appearing even now in the presence † of God for us, our High Priest, our spotless Offering, purifying continually the iniquity of our holy things ‡

"Looking unto Jesus" revealed by the Holy Spirit, to find in constant communion with Him the purification of our defiled hearts, the illumination of our darkened understandings, the transformation of our rebellious wills; to be enabled to triumph over all the assaults of the world and of the devil, resisting their violence by Jesus our strength, baffling their wiles by Jesus our wisdom; sustained by the sympathy of Jesus, who was spared no temptation, and by the help of Jesus, who yielded to none.

"Looking unto Jesus" who gives repentance as well as remission of sins,§ that his grace may cause us to know, to deplore, to confess, and to forsake our transgressions.

"Looking unto Jesus" to receive from Him the task and the cross of each day, with the grace which is sufficient to bear the cross, and to fulfil the task; patient with his patience, active with his activity, loving with his love; asking, not "What can I do?" but "What cannot He do?" and relying upon his strength, which is made perfect in weakness.

"Looking unto Jesus" in order to rise out of ourselves and forget ourselves; in order that our darkness may be dispersed by the light of his countenance; that our joys may be holy, and our sorrows may be calm; that He may humble and exalt us, that He may afflict and comfort us; that He may strip us of our riches, and make us rich; that He may teach us to pray, and may answer our prayers; that, while leaving us in the world, He may separate us from it, our life being hid with Him in God, and our conduct witnessing for Him before men.

"Looking unto Jesus," who, having returned into his Father's house,* is occupied in preparing a place for us, so that the blessed prospect may cause us to live in hope and prepare us to die in peace, when the day shall come for meeting that last enemy whom He has conquered for us, whom we shall conquer through Him,—that enemy of whom He has made a friend—once the king of terrors, now the herald of bliss everlasting.

"Looking unto Jesus," whose certain return at an uncertain moment is from age to age the expectation and hope of his faithful Church, which is encouraged to patience, to watchfulness, and to joy by the thought that "the Lord is at hand."†

"Looking unto Jesus," that He may teach us how to look to Him, the Author as well as the Object of our faith, and that He may maintain us in that faith even unto the end, He, the Finisher of the same.

"Looking unto Jesus," and to nothing else, as the original expresses it in a single word, which might be translated "looking off," and which bids us at one and the same time to fix our eyes upon Him, and to turn them away from all beside.

To Jesus, and not to ourselves—to our thoughts, our reasonings, our fancies, our tastes, our desires, our purposes. To Jesus, and not to the world—to its lusts, its examples, its maxims, its judgments. To Jesus, and not to Satan, whether he seek to frighten us by his fury or to seduce us by his flattery. Oh, how many useless questions we shall spare ourselves, how many disquieting scruples, how much time lost, what dangerous parleyings with evil, what dissipation of mind, how many empty dreams, bitter disappointments, painful struggles, lamentable falls, by looking straight to Jesus, and following Him whithersoever He may guide, too anxious not to lose sight of the path which He marks out for us, to cast so much as a glance upon those in which He does not see fit to lead us!

To Jesus, and not to our systems, however evangelical they may be. The faith which saves, which sanctifies, and which comforts us, is not our assent to the doctrine of salvation; it is our attachment to the person of the Saviour. "It is not sufficient," Adolphe Monod used to say, "to know Jesus Christ, we must have Jesus Christ"; ‡ to which we may add that no one knows Him truly if he does not first possess Him. According to the deep saying of the well-beloved disciple, the light is in the life, and the life is in Jesus.§

To Jesus, and not to our meditations and our prayers, to our pious conversations and our edifying reading, to the assemblies of the saints which we frequent, nor even to our participation in the Supper of our Lord. Let us use faithfully all these means of grace, but without confounding them with grace itself, and without turning away our eyes from Him who alone renders them efficacious when through them He communicates Himself to us.

To Jesus, and not to our position in the Christian Church, to the family to which we belong, to our baptism, to the education we have received, to the doctrine we profess, to the opinion which others form of our piety, or that which we ourselves entertain. Many of those who have prophesied in the name of Christ will hear him saying unto them, "I never knew you";* but He will confess before his Father and before his angels, the humblest of those who have looked unto Him.

To Jesus, and not to our brethren, not even to the best among them and the most beloved. In following a man we run the risk of going wrong; in following Jesus we are certain never to be led astray. Besides, by putting a man between Jesus and ourselves, it happens insensibly, that the man increases and Christ decreases; eventually we no longer know how to find Jesus when we cannot find the man, and if he should happen to fail us, everything fails. Whereas, if Jesus stands between us and our most intimate friend, our attachment to man will be at once less direct and more deep, less impassioned and more tender, less necessary and more useful,—a channel of rich blessing in the hands of God when it pleases Him to make use of it, and whose absence will be a blessing still, when it pleases God to dispense with it, in order to draw us all the closer to the only Friend from whom "neither life nor death" † can separate us.

To Jesus, and not to his enemies and ours. Instead of hating and dreading them, we shall then know how to love and conquer them.

To Jesus, and not to the obstacles which occur on our path. The moment we stop to consider these, they astonish us, they unnerve us, they cast us down, incapable as we are of comprehending either the reason for which they are permitted, or the means by which we can overcome them. The apostle sank as soon as he began to look at the waves tossed by the tempest; it was while he looked unto Jesus that he walked on the waves as on a rock. ‡ The more difficult our task, the more fearful our temptations, the more important it is that we should look only to Jesus.

To Jesus, and not to our afflictions, in order to calculate their number, to estimate their weight, to find, it may be, I know not what strange satisfaction in tasting their bitterness to the full. Apart from Jesus, affliction does not sanctify, it hardens or it crushes. It produces not patience, but rebellion; not sympathy, but selfishness; not hope, § but despair. It is only under the shadow of His cross that we can take the just measure of our own, can accept it daily from his hand, can bear it with love, with thankfulness, with joy, and find in it a source of blessing for ourselves and others.

To Jesus, and not to the dearest, to the most legitimate of our earthly joys, lest we should be so captivated that they shall hide from our sight the very hand that gives them to us. Looking to Him first of all, we shall receive from Him those benefits, a thousand-fold more precious, because we shall owe them to his goodness, trust them to his keeping, enjoy them in his fellowship, and use them to his glory.

To Jesus, and not to the instruments, whatever they may be, of his dispensations towards us. Beyond men, beyond circumstances, beyond the thousand causes so justly called "second," let us reach back to the first cause—his will; to the source of that will itself—his love. Then our gratitude, without being less lively towards those who do us good, will not stop at them;

then in the day of trial, under the most unexpected, the most mysterious, the most overwhelming affliction, we shall be able to say with the Psalmist, "I was dumb, and I opened not my mouth, because Thou didst it,"* and in the silence of our uncomplaining grief the heavenly voice will softly answer, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." †

To Jesus, and not to the interests of our cause, of our party, of our church, much less to our personal interests. The sole object of our life is the glory of God; if we do not make it the supreme end of our efforts, we shall necessarily deprive ourselves of his assistance, for his grace is only at the service of his glory. Whereas, if it is his glory that we seek above all things, we may always depend upon his grace.

(To be concluded.)

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

IN dealing with inquirers, a thousand shades of difficulty, in regard to the plan of salvation and its simple acceptance, will come to view. Of the millions of human beings saved, there never was one saved in precisely the way anticipated by himself. The trouble ever is to lay aside one's own plan, and fall in with the plan of God. "Go to," says the earnest seeker; "let the righteousness of God be the warp, and let my righteousness be the woof." The result, of course, is only a mass of tangled and broken threads. "Well, then, suffer me to bind a little fringe on the fair robe of this Divine righteousness, or at least to mark my name on it." "No, not a single stitch. Thou shalt never mark thy name on it. He who made it alone shall mark thy name on it." "At any rate, let me have the little glory of putting it on myself." "Nay, thou never canst put it on thyself; the hands that wove and finished the garment alone can put it on thee." "Not of works, lest any man should boast."

For illustration, take the case of a young man who passed through a protracted struggle. He knew the truth in the letter of it; but on his being awakened, his intellectual light seemed to go clean out, or was useless in so deep a darkness. Pierced by a sense of sin, he sought justification by prayer, spending hours at that exercise. Finding no relief, he added to his praying fasting of the most severe kind. Nothing bettered, he separated himself from all society, and gave himself to the study of the Word of God. Now he began to watch his thoughts, and to regulate his every breath and pulsation of life by a rule of awful sternness. Still peace fled from him, and this "pitiful old self-holiness" shook beneath his feet like a rotten plank.

Next he betook himself to doing good, visiting the sick and the afflicted, bestowing alms and giving away even his last shilling. It was all in vain. At length the light began to dawn upon his mind, and he saw that salvation is the free gift of God. He then set himself to the acceptance of the gift in the same spirit as he would the keeping of a hard commandment. He would accept salvation with a solemn resolution to lead a holy life. This was the systematic introduction of the dead fly into the good ointment of the apothecary; it was still in measure salvation by works. Having utterly failed, he arrived at the conclusion that if he but accepted salvation without any vow of amendment, and with a thankful heart, his soul at length should be at peace. At last he ended where he should have begun, by simply, unreservedly, and without any condition, casting himself on the mercy of God in Christ, and so found rest.

There is a large class of inquirers whose difficulties are experimental.

On one occasion I spent nearly two hours with a lady of great intelligence, whose difficulty I utterly failed to discover. Apparently there was no difficulty at all, and yet she was suffering acute mental distress. At last, when foiled, I prayed in my heart that light from above might be shed on the hindrance. Suddenly I thought I saw the stumbling-block. "I think I have found out the cause of your trouble," I said. "What is it?" she eagerly inquired. "You seem to me," I said, "like one in a dark place; you have lost your way, and cannot get out. You hear a voice; you recognize the voice as the voice of a friend. He says, 'Take my hand, and I will lead you into the light.' You reply, 'Show me the light, and then I will take your hand.' To this he says firmly, 'No; you must first take my hand, after that I will lead you into the light. If you do not take my hand, if you do not trust me in the dark, you shall never see the light.'" "Now," I added, "you see where you are. You are willing to trust Jesus provided He gives you first a sensible light. You want to feel the sweetness, grace, and truth of his Word before you believe it. In short, you think you cannot believe, you do not believe, unless you feel faith. Will you now trust Christ in the dark—that is to say, will you simply grasp his hand as stretched out to you in his gracious invitation, 'Come unto Me, and I will give you rest,' and suffer Him to lead you into the light, into the happy consciousness of rest and peace?" The inquirer felt convinced that the difficulty in her path had at length been discovered. Her mind was relieved. She thought she grasped the hand in the dark then and there; and we knelt down and gave joyful thanks unto the Lord.

A REQUEST.—Rev. A. B. D'Arcy will conduct some mission services at Nympsfield, an isolated village on the top of the Cotswold Hills, about five miles from Stroud. The village is owned by a Romanist, and nearly all the villagers are his tenants. A Roman Catholic mission has just been held there. Will God's people pray that a great blessing may result from this effort; that the simple Gospel of Christ may come in the power of the Holy Ghost to many hearts; and that God may magnify his Word above all things at Nympsfield?

THE COW-CROSS MISSION.—The prayerful sympathy and pecuniary help of the people of God are greatly needed at this moment, and are earnestly appealed to, on behalf of this work, that it may continue, as in past years, to be a means of spiritual blessing to perishing sinners, and that help in temporal things may not be lacking for the sick poor during the inclement season of winter. It is sincerely to be hoped that through such help we may be enabled to continue our weekly dinners to the poor little children from the first week in November till the last week in March.

WILLIAM CATLIN.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.—It is difficult to say anything new in commendation of this most praiseworthy institution. We cannot express our opinion of the work it has done and is doing better than by quoting a sentence from the last published report:—"It is a centre of information and encouragement for reformatories, refugees, industrial schools, and other similar institutions. It ever seeks to encourage those who are labouring to turn aside wanderers from the paths of sin and crime, and it endeavours to save those who are in imminent danger of drifting into a downward course; it brings together for social intercourse such as are engaged in the training of those juvenile minds and characters, which evil associations have too early warped and inclined to a vicious tendency. To sympathize with this class of labourers, to try to make their task as interesting and pleasant as possible, to afford them opportunities of interchange of ideas, of comparison of experience, of united prayer, and even of recreation, seems not only kind and humane, but also patriotic and Christ-like." The office of the Union is 34, Parliament-street, S.W.

SWANSEA.—Mr. Snelling has issued his annual circular, detailing the Lord's work in connexion with the Gospel Hall and the Music-hall services at Swansea during the past year:—"After having used the theatre for six years and five months, it was shut up suddenly through a dispute among the shareholders, and was thus no longer available for our Sunday evening services. In this emergency earnest prayer was presented before the throne of grace, and a gentleman who held another theatre placed it at our disposal, and thus the very next Sunday saw us in a building double the size of the old theatre, and 2000 persons hearing the Gospel; for now many who had been unable to get into the former place, came when they knew there was room for them. The largest public building in the town (the Music-hall) was opened for us, and on Aug. 16 we held our first services there. The result of the change has been that we get three times as many in the morning as the Gospel Hall would seat, and an immense congregation in the evening. We continually find cases of real conversion (so far as we can judge), and since we have been at the Music-hall the increase has been most cheering."

CONFESSION.

ADDRESS BY D. L. MOODY AT THE BROOKLYN RINK, OCT. 28.

"Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me, about the time of the evening oblation." —Dan. ix. 21.

LAST night I spoke on Repentance. I want to follow that sermon, with one on Confession. How are we to come to God? The Prophet was afraid while he was speaking, and was confessing, and Gabriel came flying from heaven and informed him he was greatly beloved of God.

We must come to God with confession on our lips. It is easy to confess the sins of our neighbours. It is easy to confess the sins of our relatives; or the sins of the Church, for it has a great many shortcomings. But that don't help you any; you must strike home. The Prophet put his sins down first.

WE MUST CONFESS OUR OWN SINS.

A great many are ready to confess, but not ready to give up their sins. Another class say all are sinners—the whole world—but it is hard to get their sins home, as David did in the 51st Psalm, where he takes the sin home to himself thirty-three times. He asked not that God might forgive Meant Zion, Jerusalem, the mighty men, and the councillors, but he struck home. May the Spirit of God strike to our own hearts. May it be a personal work—my sins, confess my sins.

We must confess. We are not going to heaven without confessing our sins. David was a man who committed great sins; but he confessed them, and was forgiven. There is nothing so sweet as to confess sins. The man who confesses sins will

NOT BE LIVING ON THE FAILINGS OF OTHERS.

He will cry out, "I am the man!" To whom shall we confess? If I have sinned and caused a brother to stumble or fall, I must get that stumbling-block out of the way. I must go and confess to the brother, and then go straight to the Lord Himself. Every man has got as many sins as he can confess of his own, without listening to the confessions of others.

Judas confessed to the High Priest, and then went out and hanged himself. He should have confessed to God. If you have sinned against a man, get it out of the way. I once saw a daughter in one of our meetings with tears trickling down her cheeks: I asked her what was the matter. "Is there anyone you cannot forgive?" "Yes," she said; "my mother, who sits in the seat yonder. I have not spoken to her for years. We quarrelled a great many years ago." After a great struggle she went to her mother, threw her arms about her; and cried out, "Will you forgive me?" Down they went on their knees together, and confessed their sins, and were happy in Jesus. We must confess to our friends.

Many may think this sermon is not for Christians. Has not the Church of God in America many sins to confess? Would there be such a strife among the herdsmen if there were no sins to confess? If the Church of the living God comes out from her sins and the world, we shall see the work we want. Then shall we lift the standard of Christ, and the world will be moved. There are a great many men of loose morals in the Church. There are strange customs in the Church. The world does not want that kind of religion. Get into the 51st Psalm, and confess as David did. The eyes of the world are on us. The world don't read the Bible. Where one reads the Bible, one hundred read you and me.

HAVE WE GOT NOTHING TO CONFESS?

No sins? Are none of you lukewarm? Are none of you living like the world? Have not some of you neglected your family altars? Are not some of us setting our affections down here—not up there? Is not the Church living in the pleasures of this world? We need not talk about a revival till we have a deeper work in our own hearts. God heard Daniel's cry, and brought them to the promised land. He will bring us to a large land if we confess. We don't come here to preach up the Church or ourselves; we ask you to look to the Lord Jesus Christ and confess your sins. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, whether saint or sinner. The great God has said it, and the word of God stands sure. Better to confess them than to wait till God finds them out. Be sure your sins will find you out—every sin you have committed from your childhood. God knows it all. If God puts away your sin it is hid for time and eternity; we are as clean and pure as the angels in heaven. If we will try to cover up our sins, we will get into difficulty. By-and-by each one will be judged.

Two brothers started to go West to seek their fortune. One had money, the other had not. When they got to the frontier, the one without money murdered the other, and, taking his money, fled to California. Doctors took the head of the murdered man and preserved it in alcohol. No proof of the murder could be found. No one was present when the deed was done. The brother was accused, but declared his innocence. No one was there but he and God. He was brought before jury and judge, and declared his innocence. The dead face of his brother was brought into court. He gazed on it, he fainted and fell to the floor, and confessed his sin. There is a time when will come in before us, tramp, tramp, tramp, till they all come back. When a man comes and throws himself on his knees in the inquiry-room, there is hope of him. When Adam sinned, he would not confess. So, there is not a son of Adam but goes and hides his sin. Next time God came it was to Cain, who said after he had slain Abel, "Am I my brother's keeper?" God cannot forgive till we acknowledge our sins. The Bible is full of such examples. Absalom was a handsome young man and the pride of his father, but he did not confess his sins. Still David forgave him and kissed him, and was driven from his throne by his wicked son. Don't make an apology for your sins, but confess them. I don't care how corrupt you are, confess your sins, and God will forgive them. King Manasseh for fifty-five years filled Jerusalem with blood, but he repented in prison and captivity, and God forgave him. The prodigal son came back confessing his sins, and was forgiven. Sin unrepented of is like a bullet in your body—it works death. I heard a person wondering why God didn't forgive him. I said, "My friend, you have not got a sight of yourself. If you could see yourself in God's looking-glass you would repent." A foreign prince visited one of his dominions, and had power to liberate some man from prison. He asked many prisoners how they came to prison. Nearly all said they were not to blame, but the judge and the jury were to blame. At last he came to a man who confessed he was a guilty man, and the prince set him free. So will it be with us if we confess. (Here a man was carried out of the audience fainting away, creating a confusion.) Mr. Moody said—Suppose this man had died without confession of his sins, instead of fainting away, would it not have been terrible? The first thing I remember is the death of my own father. I was four years of age. My mother was soon taken sick, and my eldest brother ran away from home—all about the same time. Troubles never come singly. Day after day mother would send us a mile and a half to the post-office to see if there were any letters from my runaway brother. She would often say, "Oh, could I hear that he was dead, it would be such a relief to me!" It seemed as if she loved him more than the rest of us. I remember hearing her pray, past midnight, "Oh, God, bring back my boy. Bring him back, wherever he is." She used to leave a vacant chair at the table for him. I can remember how her hair turned grey. Before I was a Christian I used to pray, "Send back that boy." One day a stranger was seen coming up the hill. He came up with arms folded, looking at the mother. She said, "Oh, my son, is it possible you have come home? Come in." "No, mother," he said, "not until you forgive me."

She rushed to his arms and forgave him! But, my friends, this forgiveness is nothing to the sin that your Heavenly Father wants you to confess to Him. Oh, may you be wise to come to Him now, while God is willing.

When Mr. Moody closed his sermon the whole assembly were in tears.

A HALT ON A DAY'S JOURNEY.

(LUKE I. 49.)

It was my last day at a lovely town in Provence, and I had had no opportunity of testimony in the inn—no work for my beloved Master. I asked for a car to take me through the town, but none was to be had. I felt disappointed, as I could not walk. The next thought was, "The carriages are the Lord's; if He had wished me to have one, He could have given me one."

The sun was shining brilliantly, and the blue sky and balmy air were all outside the dark court of the inn. With the help of my stick I made for the street. I told the Lord why I wanted to go out, and prayed Him to give me a soul to comfort or relieve. I met a man from the hospital returning to his wife and sick child: he stopped and listened gladly to me when I spoke of a very present God.

The sunshine led me on, and I sought a place to rest, in vain. All at once my strength failed me, and I looked around for a shop where I might ask for a seat, for I was unable to walk further. A stationer's was the nearest, and, asking for some trifling object, I sat down exhausted. The young woman was so long in finding what I required, that I waited some time before she approached me.

She was an interesting Swiss, the wife of the stationer. I began to speak to her at once of my Beloved without any restraint. I found that she dared not say He was her Beloved. She could not receive Him as taking our little sorrows and faithless fears into his consideration. At last she opened her whole heart: she was very delicate, and feared to die, and leave her two infants to the world's care. This robbed her life of peace and her heart of joy. Her husband was evidently in consumption, and she herself a fragile young creature. The infant in arms, and the blooming boy at her knee, seemed to her terrified, anxious heart to be already orphans with no sheltering love over them, and this embittered her existence.

I spoke to her of the "hairs of our head," all counted; of the sparrows, busy at the door over the scattered grain God was feeding them; of all the promises of God to those who trust in Him—and then I told her the story of "Faith's first conflict," and that the child confided to the living God had never lacked "any good thing." This touched the string, and vibrated through her whole being. She sat in rapt attention, her tearful eyes fixed eagerly on my face, and her cheeks flushed with hope. Long I remained with her. I felt the Holy Spirit was working; a grateful smile broke over her face, when she clasped my hand and said, "God sent you!" The delight with which she accepted a God near at hand, and not a God afar off—a Man of sorrows in the Saviour of sinners, a Friend and Comforter in the Son of God—was worth a long journey to see.

I told her of my prayer at the door of the inn, of my fatigue as I drew near her house, of the Lord's love and care over me, and his readiness to be all this to her. She did believe in Him, she did love Him; but until that moment she never had confided in Him for a present salvation from every sorrow and care.

If I had had a carriage I might have scattered a few tracts, and yet never have known anything about them, but to each of these sorrowful souls I could say—"The Lord is my Helper; the Lord is faithful, and I know it, for I have tried Him. He has never failed me, and He will never fail you." ANNA SHIPTON.

BIBLE-WOMEN needing change and rest can be received in a private house in Weston-super-Mare. For particulars, address Miss B. C., 5, Atlantic-terrace West.

"INASMUCH!"

STRANGELY silent, strangely beautiful; houses, streets, trees covered with snow, biting, terribly cold—central lanes, courts, and streets covered with mud and slush.

"About those blankets?" Well! the account is good. Ask the widow, who is disabled with rheumatics, whose daughters maintain her, who had no blankets in the place; ask, nay, look at her tears of joy, as she sees a pair for herself, and another pair for her deserving girls. "Inasmuch!"

"About something to wear?" Hum! Last winter's warm things cast aside and mouldering in cupboards instead of comforting the Lord's people. I wish heartily that some would send on some warm clothing for the Lord Jesus, in the persons of his own needing men, women, and children. "Inasmuch!"

"And shoes?" Look at that pretty little girl going in the slush to school; see the poor mother's lips quiver as she compares slush and shoes. "Inasmuch!"

"Food for the poor?" Well! It is true that he has worked hard and long in the Lord's cause, and that he came last night through the slush to see if the Lord had a loaf for him. Bless His holy name, there was one; but we should be glad of more; and, as yet, there's no soup for the poor, wet, shivering men and women who come, daily, cold and famished. Plenty of coppers, plenty of soup-makers; but no soup and bread yet. "Inasmuch!"

"And coals?" Stop a moment, I must warm my fingers before I can write any more! How must it be where there's no fire? It seems likely to be a very hard winter. I should dearly like to soften it with ever so many tons of coals, quietly sent to some who shiver in silence. "Inasmuch!"

"Christmas is coming; how about that?" Nothing, as yet; but we live in hope—beef, bread, potatoes, materials for pudding, tea, sugar, warm garments—the Lord will accept and bless all given to his poor ones. "Inasmuch!"

And especially the Children's Christmas-day Dinner. I live in hope to get some for self and family; and for some years have sweetened my own dinner on that day by feeding between two and three hundred poor little ones beforehand. Quite ready and willing to do the same this year. "Inasmuch!"

What do you mean by "Inasmuch"? See Matt. xxv. 40, 45.

C. J. WHITMORE,

Whitefield Mission, Drury-lane.

[We gladly insert our brother's touching appeal; we should also like our well-to-do readers to remember that it applies to all the other London Missions.—ED.]

FRANCE.—The authorities in France, in some cases, actually refuse permission to colport the Bible and preach the Gospel. Pray that full liberty for circulation of the Scriptures and preaching of the Gospel may be accorded. G. PEARSE.

RINGWOOD, HANTS.—At the suggestion of Mr. Moody, towards the close of last year, midday prayer-meetings were held in this town, as often as possible, for nearly three months. The meetings were attended comparatively well, and, at the close of that period, the question arose—What shall be done next to gain the blessing for which we are longing? About this time a Mr. Webber came under our notice, who had been preaching with much success at Swanage. Through the influence of a lady, whose Christian liberality is highly appreciated in the town, he was invited to preach for a few weeks at the Manor-room Theatre. The first night the attendance was good, but, after this, the place was fairly filled every evening, and often crowded. After-meetings were held, at which the numbers gradually increased to over 100, all desiring to know the way of salvation more fully, and enter upon "the new life." Of this number I have had the pleasure of receiving fifty into my own church. At Ripley, five miles from here, Mr. Webber has held many meetings, and the result has been still more cheering. Never, I suppose, were such meetings known in the history of the church here. Though a scattered village, the chapel has often been crowded, while nearly 100 have been received in church fellowship. It is now nearly a year since the good work began to develop, and since then not one, as far as I can tell, has departed from the faith. We have nearly 100 in attendance at our week-night services, and often over 200 at the prayer-meeting after service on Sunday night. We thank God and take courage. "He is faithful that promised."—W. DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

WE report below the closing meetings. We are obliged to hold over for another week the important addresses of Dr. Asa Mahan and Dr. A. N. Somerville, in order to have them carefully revised by the respective speakers.

PUBLIC BREAKFAST.

Over 400 clergymen and laymen attending the Convention were entertained at breakfast in the Round Room of the Rotundo—one of the largest halls in the city—on Thursday morning. The chair was occupied by Sir Edward Synge Hutchinson, Bart.; and the galleries, which were adorned with appropriate texts of Scripture, were occupied by ladies, over 500 of whom were present.

The CHAIRMAN expressed a hope that the breakfast, for which they were indebted to a friend who was to be nameless, would become an annual adjunct of their Convention meetings. Having been an old soldier, he would offer one word of advice based on his military experience. When they used to advance to the attack, a thin line of red coats went shoulder to shoulder, and when the shot and the shell came down, and made gaps in the ranks, the cry was, "Close to your centre—feel your centre—forward!" and so they marched onwards to victory! It was a well-known historical fact—and any general officer would corroborate the assertion—that what was called desultory skirmishing, partisan warfare, was never productive of any real result, and he hoped that in future such unproductive work would be given up by Christians.

Rev. JAMES STEVENSON said he had been asking himself this—had they not great cause to be thankful to God that morning for all his goodness to them in connexion with the Convention? Their success had been beyond all anticipation; but, looking forward, he would say, "Add to your faith courage." Next year let them go up and take possession of the Exhibition Palace, having on this occasion discovered that the next largest available hall in the Irish metropolis was by far too small for their accommodation.

What was the object of that Convention? What had they been seeking—what hoping to gain? First, union; next, brotherly love; and finally, the exaltation of their beloved Lord and Master. Although they missed the central figure of last year—he whose voice they so delighted to hear, but which was now to be heard in ringing tones in America—the moral tone was higher and more powerful than last year; that, he thought, was the universal experience; and all, he trusted, would be willing to testify to that fact when they returned to their homes. In their union two things were to be avoided in any of their plans of action. They must not interfere with essential and proper Church work; and, secondly, they should not attempt more than they could clearly and easily undertake. The matters suggested by Mr. Smithson on the previous day were within their scope—union prayer-meetings, evangelistic meetings, to which in particular Sabbath-school teachers might be invited to meet each other; and, above all, mutual, loving recognition of each other's position, and of each other's work—rejoicing in each other's prosperity, sorrowing over the failure of any branch of the Church; such must needs tend to foster and promote Christian unity, and Christian unity must tend to the promotion of Christ's Kingdom.

Rev. S. A. Walker (Bristol) said he had attended union meetings in various parts of the sister land, but he had never witnessed such an exhibition of brotherly love and true union as had been manifested in the Irish metropolis during these Convention meetings.

After a hymn had been sung with exquisite sweetness by the Jubilee Singers,

The Rev. E. M. CRAVATH, M.A., President of Fisk University, was called upon to address the meeting. He gave a sketch of the work which they were trying to do in Fisk University. He referred to who had been, under God, the providence which had been raised up to enlarge the work, and to build up the University. They had secured, by their agency, the purchase of a site which was ample for all the future wants of such a great institution. But the University was without any means of support than itself. The Government of Great Britain probably had a greater responsibility in regard to Africa and its civilization and evangelization than any other nation on the face of the earth. They had 5,000,000 of people who were far in advance in the way of preparation for Christian civilization and the Christian training of the natives of Africa. They wanted the help of the Christian people of this land to build up that University, and to enable it to accomplish its work, that there might be developed in the United States, out of the 5,000,000 of Africans there, a power that should flow back into Africa, and help Great Britain and its Government in the great work of Christianizing and civilizing that great continent.

THE WORK OF THE JUBILEE SINGERS

The Rev. Dr. KIRKPATRICK expressed the delight he felt that the

had been so favourite a topic at that Convention. They had been alluding to the great hindrances that had hitherto obstructed that work—their unbelief, and their inability to cast off the spirit of superstition and of sectarianism. It was faith working by love that secured the early triumphs of Christianity—that struck down the various oracles, made them dumb, and raised Christianity to the throne of the Roman Empire: and what faith, working by love, did before, it was able to do again; and if they evinced the same spirit they would accomplish, under God, the same triumphs.

He wished to allude to another subject which had not been brought under observation at those meetings; to another great obstruction that lay in the way of every minister of the Gospel—namely, intemperance. He would not undertake to tell the brethren how they should attack this vast evil, but he would say, let every one of them, on returning home, seek in the way he thought most advisable—by lessons in the pulpit, by prayer, by effort, by enlisting in his aid the well-disposed of the congregation—let each endeavour, within the limited area of his own congregation, and as far as he could beyond it, to put down this gigantic vice.

After a few remarks from Lord Jas. Butler, Mr. Samuel McComas, J.P., and Dr. Mackay (of Hull), the hymn "Hold the fort" was sung, and the assembly separated.

THE CLOSING MEETING.

At eleven o'clock (the hour named for the closing meeting of the Convention) the Metropolitan Hall was crowded to excess. The chair was occupied, as on the occasion of the opening gathering, by Sir E. Syngé Hutchinson, Bart., who said he just received the following communication from a clergyman:—"This day is the anniversary of the thanksgiving service held in the Exhibition, at which about 2000 professed to be commencing what ends to-day,—the first year of their life in, and with, and for Christ. Individually, collectively, in private and in public, more especially to-day, ought Christians who have Christ's honour at heart to remember those professed converts very earnestly in prayer."

Mr. GEORGE MULLER addressed the meeting, exhorting all Christians—young and old—teachers and taught—to be continual and constant in their study of the Scriptures, to strive after personal holiness before applying themselves to build up the faith of others. It was his resolve, God giving him strength, to visit every large town in the United Kingdom in which there had been a great revival within the past two years, and by his experience to assist in guiding and counselling young converts. He had to thank his friends in Dublin for the great love and kindness that had been extended to him, and he wished God's workers in this land every success and every blessing.

The Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, of Glasgow, said that at the close of the Convention he desired to give practical advice. They ought to realize the duty of exercising faith. They should hold up the Cross of Christ, which was as a sun in the centre of a planetary system round which the sixty-six books of the Holy Scriptures, and the hundreds of millions of saved souls, circulated. Next, there should be unity of action in their efforts without distinction of sect, for without unity they could not succeed. The Iron Duke and Vanguard, sisters in renown, were going on beautifully till a little mist arose, and one of them going off at an angle, the Iron Duke touched the Vanguard, and sent her to the bottom of the sea. They should not, therefore, suffer the wounded feelings of sectarianism to disturb them on the track of unity. Like the two Newfoundland dogs that took each a tail off the coat of a Frenchman, who, doubting their instinct to save life, was shoved into a river to prove it—each trying to bring him to shore to the opposite bank, he was left floundering in the water, as the coat-tails gave way in the struggle,—so the principle was the same as regarded sinners: Christians, in contending to bring them to their own sect, should not allow them to perish.

In conclusion he made a stirring appeal on behalf of the Jubilee Singers, who, as Amphion by his music had built Thebes, were raising up the Fisk University for the evangelization of their four millions of brethren in the United States, and he hoped also, to a great extent, the evangelization of the coloured race in Africa.

Several clergymen and others returned thanks for answers to prayer. After praise and prayer by the Rev. R. Chester, the Convention was brought to a close.

MR. VARLEY AT OXFORD.

THE Lord has caused us to see his salvation very gloriously here during the past week. Mr. Varley has been greatly used of God in the salvation of sinners and the quickening of believers. He has given a series of Bible-readings each week in the afternoon; those on the "Personality and Power of the Holy Ghost," "Assurance," and "Atonement" were specially refreshing and helpful. His evening addresses have been accompanied by much spiritual power. Not one evening has passed without some testifying that they had received God's unspeakable gift.

I might, did time and space permit, give many instances of sinners brought to Jesus; but one must suffice. At the after-meeting last night a poor broken-hearted woman told me she was a terrible backslider, and that she considered her case as hopeless. I referred her to the case of David as a backslider, and his experience of grace and mercy; and as those blessed words of hope from Ps. xxiii., "He restoreth my soul. . . . for his name sake," fell upon her ears, the light dawned upon her again, and, with a beaming face, as she left the room she said, "I am perfectly released."

The Lord has indeed heard the cry of his people for this city. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN continue to pray for Oxford? We are expecting Mr. Herbert Taylor and Mr. Douglas Russell next week. Pray that they may come to us in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

STUDENTS IN PARIS.

AN English lady, residing in Paris, has been led in the providence of God to take a great interest in young men coming here to study; and in consideration of the isolation and great difficulties which they meet with in coming to this gay city at first, has opened a rendezvous, where students of all nations will always meet with sympathy and a hearty welcome, and as much home influence as can be put forth abroad.

A conference is held every Saturday evening at eight o'clock, at which a large number of the leading Protestants of Paris are present in turn. A Bible-reading is also held every Tuesday at eight o'clock p.m.; and besides this, all young men who choose to drop in and spend a social evening will always be welcome. A list of all the best French families who are willing to receive boarders is kept, as well as of the best pensions and hotels. Could you recommend it to Christian parents, and ask them to send their sons, and to pray that God may own it?

Pastor Theo. Monod, of Paris, writes:—"The above has been sent me for THE CHRISTIAN by a warm friend of this most excellent enterprise—indeed a 'work of faith and labour of love,' in which we in Paris are much interested, and for which we are truly grateful.

"I forward it just as it stands, merely adding that the name of the Christian lady mentioned is Miss Howard, and that the address of her hospitable rooms is Rue Monsieur le Prince, No. 14."

EALING.—We ask the prayers of the Lord's people for blessing upon this place. The Lord has most graciously begun to work: several have been brought to Himself lately, and we would ask especial blessing now, as we purpose opening the new Gospel Hall on Thursday, Dec. 16.

BATTERSEA.—The members of the South London Evangelistic Choir have been holding a series of meetings in Lammas Hall, Battersea. The clergy and Nonconformist ministers united in the mission very heartily. Special prayer-meetings were established in the various churches and chapels, imploring the Divine blessing on this special effort. A correspondent says:—"There is every reason to believe that not only were many pricked to the heart, but that some found the pearl of great price. United meetings are to be held in connexion with this Choir at Brixton, Jan. 17 to 21; at New Cross, Feb. 14 to 18; and at Clapham in March. It is hoped the Lord's people living in these vicinities will rally round these earnest singers and speakers, and that sinners may be saved and God's name be glorified.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.—Miss E. J. Whately writes to the Female Missionary Intelligencer:—"Everywhere our missionary efforts are crippled by the two great hindrances of want of means and want of labourers. Never has there been a time, since the revival of mission work among the heathen, towards the close of the last century, when there have been so many open doors, and such a general readiness to receive the Gospel message, especially among the women of these various lands. The difficulty and pain is to draw back, when all around seems to say, 'Go forward'; to turn from the open door, because there are none willing to help us to provide the means of entering in. How far this can be remedied must depend on the willingness of those to whom the Lord has given means to contribute, and of others who may be able to offer themselves for the work."

ONLY TRUST ME.

(MARK V. 36.)

ONLY trust Me! Do the shadows
Darkly o'er thy pathway lie?
Was there ever earthly shadow
That could hide thee from mine eye?
Dost thou shrink, and fear, and waver?
Look upon mine outstretched hand,
Waiting thro' those shades to lead thee
Onward to a better land.

Thou art weeping o'er thy sorrows,
Dost thou ever think on mine?
How I toiled, and how I suffered,
Bore each sin and grief of thine:
Toiled, to win a rest for thee;
Died, to give thee endless life.
Yet thou faintest, yet thou fearest,
When I call thee to the strife!

Only trust Me! Dost thou ask Me
Why the way should be so rough?
Thou wilt know the need hereafter;
Here my word must be enough.
When I tell thee all is working
But to make thee meet for heaven;
Wilt thou not accept thy portion,
Take thy lot, by wisdom given?

There's a place within my temple
For long ages kept for thee;
I must fashion thee to fill it
Thro' a bright eternity.
From the quarry I have hewn thee
Rugged, hard, and sin-defiled;
I must change and I must cleanse thee—
Would'st thou stay the work, my child?

Ask it not; 'twill soon be over;
Then thou'lt thank Me for the pain,
See how every pang was needed,—
Not one stroke bestowed in vain.
Tools of earth, sharp axe, and chisel,
Will have ceased their work at last:
Perfect to thy place I'll bring thee,
Every tear and trial past.

Only trust Me till that hour
When the need for trust is o'er—
Never weary days to fret thee,
Never sin to harm thee more;
Never change or pain to grieve thee,
Friends neglect to wring thy heart;
But the Friend who loved thee always
From thy side no more to part.

I will give thee all the power,
If the will to trust be thine
Fain I now would hear thee tell Me
"Saviour, do thy will, not mine;
"Not my will, tho' storms be raging;
Not my will, tho' billows swell;
On to heaven those billows bear me,
I can trust Thee—all is well."

So on earth my peace will keep thee;
So thou'lt, restful, watch and wait
Till I summon thee to enter
At the Golden City's gate:
There the crown, and there the glory,
There thou'lt bless Me for the road,
Thro' whose roughest paths I led thee
To the mansions of thy God.

LONDONDERRY.—As we stated last week, Mr. Henry Moorhouse has been holding meetings in this city. A correspondent states that he has been listened to by large audiences with breathless attention; his Bible-readings have been specially attractive to Christians. The spiritual and practical lessons taught from the Book of Ruth were felt by all who had the privilege of hearing them as being very precious. The requests for prayer were very numerous, increasing daily—showing that his labours were bringing forth fruit to God's glory, and that a longer stay would, with God's blessing, have resulted in a great ingathering. After-meetings have been held, at which many hands were held up, asking for the prayers of God's people, showing that God's Spirit was causing anxiety of soul by bringing home his word with power.

FOR THE YOUNG.

THE WILD BOY CONVERTED.

BY E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

DEAR YOUNG READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN,"—You may be interested in reading a letter which cheered all our hearts in this morning's prayer-meeting in this city of West Philadelphia. The boy who wrote the letter lived here, but though he had Christian parents he was anything but a Christian himself. He made his mother so much trouble that she hardly knew what to do with him; at last she decided to send him to a military academy in Oakland, California, where many boys are sent who are unruly at home. When he left, his mother was very ill, and she never expected, as she told me, to see her boy again in this world. But now she is well, and attending my meetings, and her boy is converted, as you will see by his letter:—

"Oakland, April 23, 1875.

"My Dear Mother,—In my last letter to father I spoke to him about the revival meetings. Oh, what a wonderful sight of good they have been doing here and at San Francisco! I think that people don't know what they are talking about when they say these meetings will do no good. Look at our boys here. Last evening after supper we held in the sitting-room a conversational meeting for as many boys as had been converted to give their experience, and tell what God had done for them. Several boys who had been the worst cases in school confessed that they had not believed in a God, and had never prayed in their lives, and all of Mr. McClure's and Mr. Hamilton's eloquent preaching and talking had been to them like pouring water on a goose's back. As I said before, they had never given religion a thought, except to laugh at it, but after attending three of Mr. Hammond's meetings they have been wholly converted to the Christian faith, and have determined, with God's help, to live a Christian life. More than one-half of the boys have given their hearts to Jesus.

"As for myself, I can truly say that the night before last I became a Christian. I cannot tell you, my dear mother, how happy I felt that night. I thank God that I am allowed to attend these meetings. I signed the following covenant, which I have on a card, on Wednesday night, and, God helping me, shall always keep it as long as my life lasts:—'Covenant.—I, the under-signed, hope I have found Jesus to be my precious Saviour, and I promise, with his help, to live as his loving child and faithful servant all my life.' Then I signed my name after it.

"It is on a card which Mr. Hammond gave to me; he also registered my name in a book. I don't know if I could tell you how many hundreds upon hundreds have signed the above covenant [about 1200 in all]. I also received a 'worker's ticket.'

"Mr. Hammond said yesterday that if he had asked on Sunday afternoon at the meeting how many who were present were Christians, or wanted to be, comparatively few would have stood up, but yesterday afternoon, on his asking that question, almost the whole church stood up. He says this shows the wonderful workings of the Holy Spirit amongst the people. A great number of infidels have been converted.

"Mr. McClure just cried for joy, yesterday, to hear the testimony of some of his boys whom he had almost given up.
"Your affectionate son,

"DAVID STEWART."

You may be interested, also, in hearing something about the work among the young people here in Philadelphia. About ninety, since last Sunday, think they have found the Saviour. A young Jewess stood up last night, and said that she had lately been converted, and, with tears, asked us to pray for her father. In the house where I am stopping are a young man and a young lady, who, ten years ago, in some children's meetings which the Lord permitted me to hold in Newark, N. J., gave their hearts to the Saviour. Some people say that little children are too young to understand about these things, and that they never hold out if they are converted, therefore it gives me great pleasure to meet with those who gave their hearts to Jesus in early childhood, and have since continued to cling to Jesus, and to work for Him.

This boy, whose letter you have read, was on the steamer Pacific on the voyage previous to that in which it was lost; and my wife and I were on the same steamer a few weeks ago, sailing from Victoria, in British Columbia, to San Francisco. In my next I may tell you something about the ship and her crew, which are now at the bottom of the ocean. If you, my dear young friends, had been on board that sinking steamer when all but one out of the 240 perished, could your friends have thought of you now as being in heaven? If not, let me entreat you, this very day, this very hour, to come to the Saviour. Then you will be able to write to your mother just such a letter as this of David Stewart.

West Philadelphia, Nov. 13.

WHY NOT IN LONDON?

I must tell you of a work which has gone on in Birmingham for years, and which must have had a wonderful effect for good. I allude to the Sunday-schools for adults, supported principally by the Society of Friends.

I was lately there, and was asked to give a short address to some grown-up men at 8.30 a.m. one Sunday morning. I went, expecting, perhaps, about twenty to be present: to my surprise, I was first taken into a very large room, where were some 250 or 300 men, reading their Bibles or reciting texts, &c. Everything was most perfectly in order—small classes each with a teacher, and a superintendent to take general charge of the room. The address was given in the middle of the school hours—all were most attentive. I thought all was over, when I was taken into another room, where there were about 200 more men, some of them converted prize-fighters, many of them quite middle-aged. From that room I was led into another, like the last for numbers; another Gospel address was eagerly asked for and listened to.

I was next conducted into another street, where I found another class just as large and just as attentive. But even this did not conclude the morning's work in these wonderful schools. I was taken to another street, where I was invited to address some women, and my surprise culminated when I was shown into an enormous room, where there could not have been less than 500 women! All this is quite independent of the Sunday-schools for children.

The schools were begun some twenty-seven years ago, and eight men were gathered in who were lounging about street-corners; and now some 2000 men and women are got together every Sunday! When we think that the direct object of these schools is to bring men to Christ, and that God has blessed many to the salvation of their souls, and when we consider that a large number of these men and women have families, we can form some idea of the blessing they must have been to Birmingham.

Why should not a similar work be started at once in London? In London-wall I hear that the Friends have large school-rooms—perhaps they would lend them; and there are plenty of earnest Christians who would lend a helping hand in this undenominational work. May the Holy Ghost prompt many to do so. Were it not that I am starting at once for India, I would certainly see what could be done; as it is, I can only tell you what has been accomplished, and I pray that when it is made public no time may be lost in making a beginning.

W. P. PARTRIDGE, Surgeon-Major, Bombay.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.—For some time past we have been holding special services night by night, with the avowed object of reaching the lower class of our neighbours around the Mission Chapel in St. Giles's. The success (apparent) attending the effort has been most striking, and a vast amount of good has been accomplished; at no period of the Mission's history do I remember more abundant cause for rejoicing. Our expenses are heavy, and we have no funds in the treasury. Hence I am compelled to appeal to the friends of the Mission, that the good work may proceed without let or hindrance. As I am actively engaged in my business, I have but little time to write begging letters, so must leave matters in the hands of the Lord's stewards, praying that they may be influenced according to his will to render us help in this needy hour.

12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C. GEORGE HATTON.

DONCASTER.—The second week of Mr. Scroggie's evangelistic meetings was a time of great blessing. His farewell meetings in the Corn Exchange, on Sunday, the 14th ult., were very remarkable. The Hall was well filled in the afternoon, and in the evening there were upwards of 2000 listeners to a very powerful address on "To-day" (Heb. iii. 7), and many anxious remained to be spoken to. Then followed a very beautiful address to the young converts, of whom many were present. Altogether it was a day of wonderful blessing, and we have reason to thank God for his goodness. Mrs. Michael Baxter was here all last week, and generally gave two addresses every day. The evening meetings were very largely attended, and the Spirit's power was manifested in convincing many of sin and revealing Jesus as the sinner's Saviour. Mrs. Baxter addressed 300 or 400 children on Sunday evening, and we have reason to believe that many young hearts received Jesus.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

We have reports from all parts of this country by which it appears that hundreds of towns and cities spent Friday, Nov. 12, as a day of fasting and prayer, and the result has been a revived religious interest in a large number of places. The prayer of Henry Ward Beecher on this memorable day produced a deep impression; this being the first time he had taken part in any of the meetings. Many other prominent ministers offered earnest, agonizing prayer, tears flowing down their faces, and their voices being choked with emotion. The result has been a quickening in all the churches, and the conversion of a vast number of souls.

One of the services of Sunday, Nov. 14, in the Rink, was who desired to become Christians." These were admitted only by ticket, for which they were compelled to apply personally, giving their name and place of residence. Over 3000 tickets were thus given out. Requests for prayer are now coming in at the rate of about 400 per day.

In one of the meetings, the pastor of the Seamen's Society spoke of the wonderful progress of the WORK OF GOD AMONG THE SEAMEN.

Said he: "Christ is literally walking on the sea." Yesterday a larger number than ever stood up for prayers.

Rev. W. Steele said: "Seventeen pleading penitents came to the altar in our church last night; one of them a man for whom his wife had been praying for twenty years. A feeling of spiritual amity and concord is springing up in all the churches, and the lifting-up the Bible as a power is also seen."

Rev. J. H. Boggs, of the Scotch Covenant Church, said: "In our church we did not believe in revivals. When we heard that Messrs. Moody and Sankey were coming here we opposed it; we were jealous of the Revival movement; but now we rejoice in it, and for several days have been obliged to hold special meetings in our own church."

On Monday, Nov. 15, Messrs. Moody and Sankey attended what is known in New York as "the Up-town Prayer-meeting." Six thousand people were present, of whom several hundred were ministers. This meeting was attended by Mr. Moody, for the purpose of urging upon the Christians of New York the importance of inquiry meetings. He addressed himself entirely to this subject. He closed his remarks by saying, "We want that will gird up their loins and go out into this city and save men."

At the morning meeting last Tuesday, in the Tabernacle, for the first time since these meetings began, Mr. Moody gave up the control of the service. Mr. G. C. Needham led the meeting. Near its close Mr. Moody said: "The

WORK AMONG THE YOUNG MEN

of Brooklyn is most encouraging. The meeting last night in this building was the most remarkable gathering of young men that I have ever seen in America. When the invitation was given that those who wanted to be prayed for should kneel, hundreds went down on their knees all over the house. Whole rows of young men here in front of the platform were kneeling. We made up our minds when we came from England that we would put forth every effort to reach the young men of this country. During the visit to my native town in Massachusetts, one of the first things accomplished was the organization of a Young Men's Christian Association, reports from which during the past few weeks have greatly cheered my heart. We want to see the same thing in Brooklyn, only to a larger extent. We want the young men organized for Christian work, more especially for holding meetings in different parts of the city. You have got a Young Men's Association already, so there is no need to form another organization. We have associations enough, and too many of them. The machinery is all ready; but the Association here is burdened with a debt of $6000. This ought never to have been. If the Christian people would not support it, the better way would have been to close up the doors until they did. I have no sympathy with the plan of

RUNNING INTO DEBT FOR CHRISTIANITY,

and then having some great bazaar or dance to pay it off. I want next Thursday to lift this debt from the Young Men's Christian Association. We will take up a collection at every meeting on Thursday; and if that does not pay it, we will have collections again on Friday. Then let there be a young man appointed, whose business it shall be to look after the spiritual interests of the young men of this city, and organize them for work. This was done in several cities in Great Britain, and the result was perfectly wonderful. If we have had any blessings to be thankful for, let us show our gratitude by making some sacrifice to pay off this debt.

Mr. Moody has preached two sermons this week upon the subject of "Excuses," which for power and pathetic appeal have far excelled all his other efforts in this city. For more than a week now the number of inquirers has averaged about 400 per day. The meetings have grown in power and results from the beginning.

As the closing hours of the evangelists' efforts in Brooklyn approached nearer and nearer, the people who had not been able to gain admittance hitherto nightly and daily crowded the different meetings. The last day of their labours in this city was the crowning day of all. Thousands went away from every meeting unable to get inside the buildings. Hundreds of men and women were found in the inquiry-rooms asking what they must do to be saved. Thus all doubts as to their success on this side the Atlantic have been dispelled, and the hopes concerning their usefulness surpassed. The remarkable feature in these meetings was the hearty co-operation extended to them by the pastors of Brooklyn and New York. The number of meetings addressed by Mr. Moody during the twenty-seven days was seventy; and the other meetings held in connexion with these numbered perhaps half as many; making altogether over a hundred meetings. Those were attended by an average of about 15,000 daily. When we say that all who heard or read these addresses had the pure Gospel presented to them in the most attractive and convincing form, who can estimate the results?

It is now expected that Messrs. Moody and Sankey will spend the month of December in Philadelphia, January in Chicago, and February in New York.

is thus described:—

Mr. Moody closed with thanking the people, the ministers, the choir, the ushers, the reporters, and the policemen for all their kindness in coming to hear him, and assisting them, and hoped that some of them were saved. With his voice choking with emotion, he continued:—"I wonder that you all come to hear us. We have tried to be faithful, and I hope there is no one that has heard us who will rise up in judgment and say we did not warn them; but God ought to have a better representative. It makes us feel very humble to see the multitudes, and that we can't represent Him better. Oh! if you could only know his loveliness, you could not stay away from Him—our Saviour!"

Mr. Sankey sang, assisted by a double quartet, "Shall we meet beyond the river?" to new music. It was very softly and sweetly rendered, drawing the tears to hundreds of eyes which were not already weeping at the very sad, yet thankful and inspiring, farewell words of Mr. Moody. Another prayer followed by Mr. Moody, in which he prayed at length for all the classes he had mentioned previously, and then gave out the invitation for those who were anxious to go to the Methodist church, while the Christians remained in the Rink and prayed for them. The Rev. Mr. Steele led this prayer-meeting. The Methodist church was full last night with inquirers. At last the inquirers were too anxious to be ashamed of the light, and the church was not darkened as formerly. The Reformed church meeting was also crowded with young people.

And thus the labours of these beloved brethren in Brooklyn close midst the joy of sinners awakened and redeemed and the gratitude of all true-hearted Christians, who have been inspired to nobler and more self-sacrificing efforts in Christian work.

OPENING MEETINGS AT PHILADELPHIA.

We extract the following from a Philadelphia paper:—

Messrs. Moody and Sankey inaugurated their meetings yesterday in the extensive building prepared for their accommodation at Thirteenth and Market streets. The morning service was opened with a religious enthusiasm unlike anything ever witnessed before even in this city of many churches.

The interest in the movement was not only centred at the place of meeting, but all over Philadelphia the general theme was the work now begun. The hour of opening yesterday morning was eight o'clock, but an hour before that the building was filled to its extent, the myriad of chairs having disappeared as if by magic under the coming of an audience at once mammoth and peaceful, while it awaited the appearance of the speaker and singer.

At eight o'clock the doors were closed and no more admitted—a custom which is always observed by the evangelists, the purpose being to avoid, if possible, any interruption by attempts of the throngs to secure entrance after the auditorium is filled.

Ten thousand people, of all ages and classes, found accommodation in the building, while thousands more heard the doors close against them and, were obliged to move away without being able to participate in the service.

The services were opened by Mr. George H. Stuart and Rev. J. Wheaton Smith, the former giving out a hymn, which was sung by the choir of 550 voices to an accompaniment played by Mr. Sankey, and the latter at the conclusion of the song leading in prayer. "Come, thou fount of every blessing" and "Here I raise my Ebenezer" were sung, after which Mr. Moody preached from the 1st chapter of Joshua. This order of service was observed without any intermission until the Benediction was pronounced.

The New York Christian Union says:—

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have made an excellent beginning in Philadelphia. At the opening service, Sunday morning, Nov. 21, the great building prepared for the meetings—formerly used as a freight depot, and now seating 10,000 persons—was filled, in spite of a chilly rain. The great audience sang "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and Mr. Moody read the 4th chapter of John, finding that his voice could fill the great hall without difficulty. His sermon was upon "the fields white already to harvest." At the afternoon meeting it was estimated that 15,000 people sought admission in vain. In Brooklyn, special services are continued since the departure of the two evangelists, including the "young men's meetings," which have been markedly successful, and which will now be under the charge of Mr. George S. Hall, of the Young Men's Christian Association in Washington.

The Sunday afternoon meeting at the Rink showed very little diminution in numbers. The general comment upon the work in Brooklyn seems to be that its effect has been most conspicuous among church members, in heightening their fervour, and uniting members of the various denominations and churches in a wonderful harmony and enthusiasm. Mr. Moody, it is said, altogether declined to attempt any numerical estimate of the conversions—another instance of his admirable sense. Notwithstanding the great publicity given to his work nothing is more noticeable than his avoidance of sensationalism of every kind. There is, on his part, no boasting of results, no artificial excitement of any sort, but a most genuine and earnest concentration upon real work.

Mr. Sankey, writing to us from Philadelphia on the 22nd ult., says:—"You will be glad to know that the interest in the work in Brooklyn and Philadelphia is quite equal to that shown in Liverpool and London. I do not think I ever saw so many people in the streets trying to get into our meetings as I saw yesterday." Letters for Mr. Sankey should be addressed—Care of Young Men's Christian Association, Philadelphia, till Feb. 1; and after that to Young Men's Christian Association, New York.

KENSAL NEW TOWN.—For four years we have been carrying on a mission among the very poorest classes of children here, and we can truly say we have seen many of the children brought to the Saviour. Our meetings having of late much increased, we were led to take a larger place, 16, Landseer-terrace. The Lord having sent us the means, we have employed a Bible-woman to visit the fathers and mothers of the children, and to help in the Mission. God has owned and blessed her labours. We want the Christians who read this to pray much for us, that as the blessing has begun it may go on, and that hundreds of the dear children and parents may be brought to Jesus. A. F.

JOSHUA POOLE AT SOWERBY BRIDGE.—We have had an arousing time through the help of our dear brother Joshua Poole, in connexion with our labours at Sowerby Bridge. Our brother Joshua has a remarkable way of arresting the masses, and his experience evidently is such that they cannot gainsay. This was manifested by some of them exclaiming during his address, "He knows all about us." He spoke out plainly against wife-beating, pigeon-flying, card-playing, and every other vice which leads men down to the pit. One poor rough man said, "He is too straight for me; he hits hard." The town missionary, who was present the last evening, said he had never witnessed so many, and such a class, gathered together before. Had we been able to continue these meetings a few weeks, there is no doubt the whole place would have been powerfully moved. As it is, we are thankful for his visit, and look for a lasting effect from what has been done, trusting we shall see an increased interest stirred up in this dark spot.

ALL-DAY MEETING AT NEWCASTLE.

I HAVE been glad to see in your valuable paper notices of the services of Major Cole during the past month in Newcastle-upon-Tyne. These notices, from different friends, have, I believe, rather understated than overstated the good that has been done. The Holy Spirit has manifestly been present in great power in all the meetings that have been held, and many have been "born again"; not a few languid Christians have been greatly revived and strengthened. Last Sunday night the Town Hall was packed full, and many hundreds had to go away without obtaining admission. The majority of the audience consisted of the non-churchgoing class. Many professed to find peace in Christ in the after-meeting, and amongst the number was a man whose case had been made a subject of special prayer at the noon meeting, as a fortnight before he had boldly declared to Major Cole that he would not have anything to do with Jesus Christ. He came trembling into a room where our friend and a few others were met together, and cast himself down on his knees and cried to God to have mercy upon his soul. His prayer was soon heard, and he was enabled to "behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Other cases of conversion could easily be given, but my main object in writing just now is to give a brief account of our "All-day Meeting," which was held on Thursday, 2nd inst.; Major Cole presided. The meeting was in the Central Hall. Several ministers gave addresses on different topics, such as the "Work of the Holy Spirit," "How to care for the young, and young converts," "How to conduct prayer- and inquiry-meetings," and "How to meet the difficulties of anxious inquirers." These subjects occupied the attention of the audience during the day. Many valuable hints were given upon them.

One thing that was insisted upon in connexion with prayer-meetings was, that those who attended them should come in the spirit of prayer, and should seek beforehand a special blessing on the meeting. A large number should be got to take part in such meetings. Even if one could read only a single text, let him do it. Have as much variety as possible, without appearing to be seeking after variety.

In regard to inquiry-meetings, it was suggested that care should be taken to find out the true state of the person's mind that is being spoken to. What might do very well for a person who is seeking Christ for the first time, would not suit so well a Christian who has fallen into a state of temporary spiritual gloom. Stress was laid upon the importance of personal dealing with souls. There should be hand-to-hand work. The duty of persevering with anxious inquirers was also dwelt upon. "I have two persons," said a clergyman, "whom I have often spoken to. There is as yet no evidence of their conversion, but I don't intend to give them up; I mean to pray for them, and speak to them, until they do give their hearts to Christ."

The evening meeting, from six to nine, was occupied with considering the "Lessons that may be learned from the recent revival," "Obstacles in the way of the Gospel," and "Consecration." The large hall was crowded, and a spirit of deep solemnity pervaded the audience. The last subject was felt to be one of such vast magnitude and importance that it was suggested that another "all-day meeting" should be held very soon, to consider it more fully. Altogether the meetings, both during the day and at night, were most blessed seasons. Christians realized their oneness in Christ Jesus.

The singing of several sweet hymns, such as "Rock of ages," by Major and Mrs. and Miss Cole, lent an additional interest and impressiveness to the services. Our dear friends begin their work in Sunderland next week. Friends here commend them to the prayers of all God's people.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Dec. 3, 1875.

RICHARD LEITCH.

CADNAM.—The work here deepens in numbers and interest. On Tuesday, the 30th ult., the hall was filled—principally with young men of the labouring class—to hear an address by the Hon. W. C. Temple on John vi. 5-12. It is earnestly requested that Christian friends will help this effort by prayer, and by giving addresses on Tuesday or Friday evenings.

COVENTRY.—Mr. C. Edwards and another representative of the Evangelization Society are now in this city, and labouring nightly to bring men to Christ. There have been a few signs of blessing, but not anything like what we most ardently desire. May I ask the earnest prayer of God's people on behalf of this city and of these special efforts, that He will greatly bless both the speakers and the hearers?

THE LORD'S WORK IN CHINA.

WE make one or two extracts from China's Millions for Dec. This excellent magazine contains from month to month deeply interesting and cheering accounts of the progress of missionary effort in that vast and populous land. We wish for it a greatly-increased circulation with the commencement of the new year.

INTERVIEW WITH THE KING OF BURMAH.

Mr. J. W. Stevenson, writing from Mandalay, on Sept. 29, says:—

"The Lord has most manifestly answered the prayers of Christians at home in prospering us so far. The King of Burmah puts no obstacle in the way of our residence in Bhamo. We had an interview with him on Monday last, and he was both kind and cordial. He said he would rather that we stayed in Mandalay, where he could better protect us, and where he thought we should be more successful in our work; but, as we had decided to go to Bhamo, we might go. He has given us permission to reside there, and will give us a piece of land upon which to build a dwelling-house, &c.

"The same permission has been granted to Mr. Rose for the American Mission. The King made each of us promise that we would write to our superiors in our respective countries—viz., America, Scotland, and England,—and ask for teachers to come and reside in Mandalay. The King said he should like to have them, would protect them, and see that all their wants were supplied."

Mr. Henry Taylor's diary of "Pioneer Work in Ho-nan," from which we made an extract lately, is continued, and has in it all the elements of a romance. It might almost be called a modern "Acts of the Apostles."

"The first of the two following paragraphs, from Mr. H. Soltau's diary of work in Rangoon, is a loud reminder of our national guilt with reference to China:—

DRUNKENNESS AND OPIUM-SMOKING.

"Were the English to take possession of the whole country, I am not at all certain that it would be a moral gain to the natives, though it might be a commercial gain to them. Before the English came to Burmah, drunkenness and opium-smoking were almost, if not totally, unknown: now these evils are rapidly spreading, and a great part of the revenue of our Government is derived from these vices. In many places the opium traffic and public-houses are let by Government to the highest bidder. He, of course, has to do everything in his power to extend his trade, in order to make his fortune. When a man gets a licence to sell opium in a neighbourhood in which it has hitherto been unknown, he gives away small quantities to the natives until they have got a craving for it, which can only be met by its constant use; and thus a trade becomes established."

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION NEEDED.

"A Young Men's Christian Association is immensely needed here; will you pray about it at home? It concerns all mothers and friends whose sons or relatives come out to the East. Not one in ten maintains his Christian profession out here. I quite hope this effort will result in success; we are looking for blessing, and feel that the Lord is keeping us here for some wise purpose. One person professes to have found Christ through the meetings, and we know of two or three who are anxious. Continue in prayer for us, for Mr. Adams, and for the devoted American missionaries here, whom you would all love if you could see them work, and know them."

SOUTH HAMPSHIRE.—Mr. John Townsend, of 1, Powers-court-road, Buckland, Portsmouth, who is labouring in mission work there, at Portsea, and other adjacent places, writes:—"We have just taken the Town Hall at Fareham, a small town about nine or ten miles from Portsmouth, for Gospel services on Sunday evenings. Our first meeting there was last Sunday evening, and, notwithstanding the very heavy rain, the hall, which will seat about 350, was quite full. All appeared to pay earnest attention, and many were moved to tears. The expenses connected with this place will be over £1 a week. Pray for us, that we may be helped according to our need, and that much blessing from the Lord may rest upon our labours for Him at Fareham. There are many spiritually dark villages near this, to which we greatly long to carry the Word of Life, if the Lord is pleased to entrust us with means for rent of rooms; travelling, &c. We have seven young men with us who can preach the Gospel very simply and sweetly, and who would rejoice to go to these villages with the Gospel of Christ to lost sinners. For several weeks past we have had special Gospel services at the hall at Portsea four times a week; all have been well attended, and sometimes we have not been able to find standing room for those who have come. I am sure you will rejoice to learn that scarcely one evening has passed without one or more being led to trust in Jesus as their Saviour. These are carefully watched over, and are known by their fruits. We ascribe all praise to His holy name."

AMONG THE SAILORS AT GOSPORT:

Mr. H. Cook, whose labours here on behalf of our sailors have been so abundant and successful, sends us some interesting details of his work, which we commend to the practical sympathy of our readers:—

"Our little mission-vessel and boats are floating still, and the Gospel is being preached on board; Bibles and tracts are scattered by our mission-boat to thousands of our brave seamen in the navy and merchant services, English and foreign. During this severe weather hundreds of seamen have already met with a watery grave; others, saved from their perilous condition, have lost all their money and clothes. Only recently thirteen ships sank in the Downs, and forty lives were lost, while many men were seriously hurt and injured for life.

"It is to these seamen we go and preach the Gospel; but they are difficult to reach. They think no one cares for them. We are about to invite them, once a week, on board to tea, so as to get them from the public-house; when on board we tell them of the love of God in the gift of Jesus. Shall not many of them be won to Jesus? I believe they will.

"There are, in addition, the 'Sailors' Resort' and two deeply interesting mission-stations five miles apart. Our vessel and boats are constantly needing repairs; we also need a large supply of Bibles, books, and tracts. We have two day-schools, a home for poor boys, and a variety of other agencies connected with the work."

Mr. McALL'S WORK IN PARIS.—Having witnessed the untiring and cheerful zeal of these devoted servants of the Lord (Mr. and Mrs. McAll) and their helpers, I feel grieved to learn from Mr. McAll's last report (November) that there are barely funds to meet the expenses of this Mission during the next few weeks, whilst the Gospel-hungry people are calling for more and more meeting-rooms. That "Ces bons Anglais," as the people of the suburbs of Paris call the English missionaries there, should ever lack means to carry on their respective works, God forbid.

Mr. E. P. HAMMOND IN OREGON.—The meetings in Portland were continued four weeks with unabated interest. Night after night the Tabernacle was filled with praying Christians and all classes of sinners, who remained unweariedly until a late hour. Many souls have been born into the Kingdom, who, through all eternity, will bless our brother for his indefatigable labours. Backsliders have been reclaimed, lukewarm Christians aroused to a sense of their duty, and a spirit of self-sacrificing labour has been given to our noble Christian men and women. Last week Mr. Hammond, with a band of devoted Christian workers, eighty in number, went to Forest Grove, where is located the Pacific College, the president of which, feeling burdened for souls, urged strongly for a visitation. As many have expressed it, "It was a glorious day!"—Christians awakened and sinners anxious to be taught.—the only regret being that no more time could be spent in that beautiful spot. Oregon city was visited twice—each time over a hundred of the faithful accompanying Mr. Hammond. Each of the ministers and many converts made effective addresses. The churches were crowded, and in both places the resident ministers are doing all in their power to carry on the meetings so auspiciously begun.—Correspondent of San Francisco Advertiser.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.—The London Association for giving dinners to the aged sick and afflicted poor have issued their fifth annual report. During the past year 19,105 persons have received a substantial meal. The Report says:—This Association carries on its work only in the poor districts, and where an organized system of visiting in the neighbourhood exists. No young or able-bodied are admitted, unless in the case of widows in distress with large families. But in order to render help to the starving adults and poor children, the Association provides on the Sabbath morning free plain breakfasts of bread and coffee or tea, as many as five every Sabbath in various parts of the metropolis. This fare is not sufficiently attractive to the professional mendicant, but is received with gratitude by a needy but deserving class, who labour many hours for small pay, and others out of work from the effect of the weather, or other vicissitudes of life. In many cases widows with large encumbrances have constantly brought their families to have the only meal they could obtain during the day. In several cases it has been found that families have been saved from starvation by these breakfasts. In all instances, both breakfasts and dinners are followed by a simple Gospel service of an unsectarian character. It is hoped that this year (1875-76) the great desire of our hearts and our prayers may be answered, so that every old, deserving, and afflicted person, whether bedridden or otherwise, throughout the whole of the poor districts of London, may have at least one substantial meal, and hear, either at the services or their own homes (through the visitors), the blessed good tidings of "Peace on earth and good will toward man." The treasurer is Thos. J. Coombe, London and Provincial Bank, Kingsland, N.

THE WAIFS AND STRAYS OF DUBLIN.

DEAR FRIENDS,—The Lord has been with us in our work, and has given us much encouragement and blessing. We sent nineteen children with Miss Macpherson's band to Canada. Irish boys are warm, and we find it often difficult to persuade the poor parents to part with their children, even for their good. One of our good missionaries accompanied the children, and saw them safely housed in one of Miss Macpherson's Homes; he got a list of all the children who had gone from Dublin in former years—visited every one, and found all comfortable and happy. Since his return we have gathered the poor people; and greatly cheered they have been by the account given, so that many more will be ready to go next spring; this is very important, as already our Homes are over-full. We have one in 19, Tukey-street, for girls, fifty-six in number; one for boys in Grand Canal-street, eighty-four; and one in the Coombe for fifty-two boys; the new Emigration Home for Waifs and Strays, boys and little girls, to the number of 100.

These children are daily taught the Scriptures; the Gospel plan of salvation is constantly and lovingly pressed upon them. The blessed fruit of this teaching we are often permitted to see. One case just occurs to me. A poor little widow, starving and ignorant, with three children, was found by one of our missionaries, in his round of visits, in an empty garret. Having parted with all she had, she was going to the poor-house with the poor little ones; the good man told her of the salvation to be had in the Lord Jesus, of the heavenly home prepared for those who love Him, and of the earthly home into which he would get her boy and girl, and so enable her to get employment, and support herself and baby. She was so pleased to hear about a home in Canada, and joyfully gave leave for them to go. Six months they were in our Home, under instruction; the day at last came when the ship was to sail, and friends got notice to come and say good-bye. This mother came, and I noticed her standing, the little girl clinging to her with earnest look. By-and-by the little one was taken below to be dressed. I went over and asked the mother, "What was Mary saying? Is she sorry to go?" "Oh, no," said the mother, with tears in her eyes; "she was begging of me not to pray any more to the blessed Virgin to bring them safe to Canada; 'Pray to the Lord Jesus, mother, He is here with us, and will go with us and take care of us.'" Said the mother, "Oh, ma'am, think of that little child teaching me how to be saved! I must read the Testament, and go to Sunday-school, if only to please little Mary!"

We want help in every department—help for sending children to Canada, help to feed the elder boys and girls for home situations; we want clothes for boys and girls of all ages; and we must not forget the old people, the poor straggling widows, the seamstresses—the creatures who are often deprived of work because of sending their children where they learn God's Word. Will some of our rich English and Scotch neighbours lend a helping hand to the poor Irish for whom nothing is prepared? —ELLEN GARLY.

HOME FOR DESERTED MOTHERS AND INFANTS.—Miss Broughton, of 3, Cumberland-street, Pimlico, S.W., wishes our readers to remember the little children's Christmas-tree; they are much in need of help for it. Any little toys or ornaments, and, above all, warm knitted socks and quilts for the poor little children, who are so sensitive to cold, will be gratefully welcomed.

TORONTO.—Mr. S. R. Briggs, of Shaftesbury Hall, Toronto, Canada, has organized a Tract Society and Repository in that city. A correspondent of the Toronto Christian Guardian says:—"It is the very thing that has long been needed, and I hope the 'Christian brother' who has so nobly taken the lead in this matter, and who has also so generously volunteered to fit up a room in Shaftesbury Hall, and stock it with a large and choice collection of the very best tracts, will be encouraged and aided by every Christian worker in the Dominion." The authorized agent in England of this laudable enterprise is Mr. Arthur Rowson, 31A, Piccadilly, W. We commend it to the notice of all interested in the highest welfare of the Dominion.

PASTOR THEO. MONOD.—It will be remembered by many readers of THE CHRISTIAN that, in June, Pastor Theodore Monod wrote respecting the need of an improved dwelling adjoining the chapel in Paris, where until last winter he had ministered for eleven years. He thankfully acknowledges the help kindly sent since June—in addition to £200 received previously before—amounting to £400 in all. To carry out the work, £200 is still needed; and for the sake of Mr. Monod, as well as for this little French church, I trust this undertaking will not be left upon him, but that all will be speedily cheered in its happy completion.

SOWING THE SEED IN SPAIN.

MR. GEO. LAWRENCE gives the following particulars of his work in a letter dated Barcelona, Nov. 19:—

Last week two brethren, the coachman and colporteur, spent four days visiting the villages and vineyards near this place, and very pleasing is the testimony they give of the people's spirit in these rural districts, particularly in those visited by the Carlists, whose doings have more and more turned the people against the priests. In one village they sold more than 200 of the New Aberras (British Workman), and thirty large-type Gospels by John, bound up with a simple, but valuable, system for teaching persons to read. We sell this book by thousands.

The brethren went down to the village of Argentona, and took their stand in the square, just before the church. Some of the women spoke strong words, but the men allowed no interference. While they were selling, an aged man said to the coachman, pointing to the church, "Do you see the cause of all our troubles? it is in there (the confessional)."

They moved on to another small village, and on their way they spoke the word of life to an old man. In the midst of their conversation he burst into tears, and said—"It is true, it is true; if it had not been for these false prophets, my only son, who was the staff of my old age, would not have been killed." It was surprising to find how many people already possessed the Scriptures in these out-of-the-way places.

JUVENILE MISSIONS AT BROMLEY.

ONE of the most hopeful features of the work of our American brethren in this country was the deep interest excited by it among the young men in many towns. Mr. Hodder and his Bromley friends have gone a step further in the right direction; they have enlisted the sympathies and engaged the enthusiasm of the young folks of both sexes, in that quiet suburban town, on behalf of missionary work both at home and abroad.

On Thursday evening last a number of the friends of the Bromley Juvenile Missionary Association gathered in the Town Hall to hold their eighth annual meeting. The elements fought against them; the snow lay deep upon the ground, while it ceased not to fall, thick and fast. The numbers who attended were a sure token of the deep and steady interest they take in their good work. Mr. W. Stocken, one of the vice-presidents, most happily presided, and the intelligence with respect to missions imparted by the two chief speakers was sufficient to have interested for a couple of hours the most exacting of Exeter Hall audiences.

The report, which Mr. Hodder, the Secretary, had to give, contained no striking element, but rather testified to the plodding perseverance that is sure, ultimately, to accomplish more than brilliant, but fitful efforts. We give a few items of the past year's work, just to show how catholic and world-wide are the labours and sympathies of this young Society, the complement of which we should like to see organized in every city, town, and village through the length and breadth of the kingdom. These young men and maidens support a boy at the Farningham Home; they prepare and send many garments to such East-end missions as that of Mr. George Holland and Miss Macpherson; they support a girl in China, and several native teachers in Fiji, as well as rendering help to various other missions of mercy both in London and in heathen lands. We were glad to be told by Mr. Hodder that the missionary spirit was increasing among the members; there is wide scope for its exercise on every hand.

Our space will permit us only to refer to the excellent and deeply interesting addresses of Mr. Bowman Stephenson, who kept the unflinching attention of the meeting while he told the story of his glorious rescue work among the East-end children; and of Mr. Trafford, who described with clearness, and fulness of detail, the great field for Christian teaching among the women of the Zenanas, which is now just being opened up to our British and American sisters, many of whom, we are glad to know, are entering on this vast and important work. A friend from Ireland closed the meeting with some earnest words of personal exhortation, and as he said, we had altogether a very "good time," despite the unkindly state of the weather.

As we have already said, it would be a source of unfeigned pleasure to us to know that associations of this kind, founded as the Bromley one is, on the broadest and most unsectarian basis, were at work among the young people in our Christian families all up and down the land. Let friends start them at once where they do not exist. Thousands of our young friends want something definite to do for the Master: let their elders guide their energies into this most fruitful channel.

THE GOSPELS.—A correspondent reminds us that either of the four Gospels may be had of the British and Foreign Bible Society, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., at the low rate of one penny. Doubtless many, if they knew this, would be led to spread "the Word of Life" among polioemen, cabmen, and others, who have many opportunities of reading during the day.

EVANGELIZATION AT WHITBY.

Of a series of meetings held here by Mr. Thos. Johnston, of the Evangelization Society, the Rev. R. Bulmer writes:—

"His services here continued about two months, and from the beginning to the close of them their influence deepened and extended with marked and growing results. The Friend's Meeting-house soon was of necessity relinquished for St. Hilda's Hall, the largest public room in the town available for week-day meetings, and capable of seating about 800 people: while on Sundays the Congress Hall, which will accommodate between 2000 and 3000, was found not too large for the numbers that flocked to hear the Gospel preached in its simplicity and power.

"It is difficult, and would scarcely be wise, to estimate the results of this work as yet. Certain general facts may be stated. The people attracted to Mr. Johnston's services have been mainly from the poorest and most spiritually destitute districts of the town. A large proportion of them have been previously alienated from the public worship of our churches and chapels. Many have professed to receive the truth, and to have become new creatures in Christ Jesus. There have been instances of conversion of remarkable interest—as of an avowed infidel, and of a man who had been notoriously intemperate and violent, and of numbers of jet-workers, who, as a class, have been very godless and depraved; while it is said that a manifest change has come over some of the worst neighbourhoods in the town—a decency and order which were unknown before,—by reason of the changed character of many in them.

"The churches of Whitby are greatly indebted to the Evangelization Society—a society of which we were generally ignorant before the visit of Thos. Johnston, but which, in our view, meets a great and grievous want throughout the country: the want of earnest and devout evangelists, who, avoiding eccentricities and seeking no sectarian end, preach in their own tongue 'the old, old story' to multitudes who refuse the ordinary services of the ministry."

HOME FOR LITTLE BOYS.—Mr. George Pledger, who carries on the excellent work of this Home at Palmerston-road, Kilburn, N.W., says, in a recent circular:—"I am privileged to record my joy and gratitude for the steady and increased prosperity of the Home. Many fresh friends have been raised up, and my evangelistic work in various parts of England and Ireland have been greatly blessed; to this end, we have thus been enabled to receive two more boys—out of the many sad and distressing cases we have on the books—into the Home, so that we are now greatly straitened for room. There are friends desiring to be informed how they can materially help in the work. To enable them to accomplish this, I have some neat collecting-cards, which can be had free, on application either personally or by post, and I would suggest to friends that Christmas-day will present a favourable opportunity for use among their friends. Many have greatly helped in providing for the increasing needs by sending articles to be sold for the benefit of the Home. We have no trouble in disposing of them; and others by forwarding left off clothing, which is easily and cheaply made up for the boys."

MR. QUARRIER'S EMIGRATION HOMES.—The greatness of the work that is being accomplished by our excellent Glasgow brother, Mr. William Quarrier, was shown at the annual meeting held lately in connexion with Destitute Children's Emigration Homes. Dr. Cameron, M.P., stated that the total amount of money passed through Mr. Quarrier's hands has been upwards of £10,000, and expressed the opinion that that sum of money could hardly be entrusted to any one who could manage it with greater care and economy. Regarding the New City Home, it was mentioned that two ladies, who had previously given £3000 for its erection, had since contributed £3000. Communications had been opened with the City Improvement Trust, from whom practical help and sympathy was expected, for the purpose of a site for the Home. The house was nearly finished, and it was hoped to be ready for occupation in the beginning of January. It would give accommodation for 100 working boys who had no one to take an interest in them, and give temporary shelter for forty destitute virtuous young women from fourteen to twenty-five years of age, who from stress of circumstances were in danger of falling into crime. To these work would be given most suitable situations were found for them. The house would also afford shelter for sixty homeless children, whose cases would be dealt with as circumstances directed, and evangelistic work would be carried on in the hall and schoolroom amongst the very poorest. The fourth year commenced in November, 1874, with seventy children in the Homes. Since then sixty-eight new cases have been taken in, making in all 138. Fifty-one were sent to Canada on June 16, 1875, and reported as, on the whole, doing well. In all 220 children have been sent to Canada by Mr. Quarrier since he began his work; and it is a singular and gratifying fact that of these only one has died.

THE GOSPEL IN INDIA.

A FRIEND writing from Entally, Calcutta, says:—"We are having times of blessing here. All the churches retain the blessings of the revival resulting from the Union meetings in July, and are anticipating more or less eagerly more blessed times still during the ensuing cold season. In this spirit the American Methodist Mission of Northern India have proposed the expansion of their annual special meetings at Lucknow during the Durgo Poojah holidays into a camp-meeting, to which Christians from all parts of India are invited. Tents are provided free of charge, and visitors may find boarding at the Mission Home for twelve annas (eighteenpence) a day. Already we hear of intending visitors from even so far as Umballa, a distance of between five and six hundred miles, and Bombay, over a thousand miles away.

"The Young Men's Christian Association instituted by Mr. Somerville is accomplishing much. It has effected an amalgamation with an older, though almost extinct and helpless, association which had a hall, and this has proved the means of much blessing to both. In addition to regular meetings in this hall three times a week, and several others in private houses, they give every Sunday morning a free breakfast to a considerable number of poor people, in imitation of the Glasgow Association. The expenses are met by voluntary contributions from sympathizing friends, and the hall being situated in Bow Bazaar, the very quarter where such efforts are most needed, they are meeting with success and encouragement.

"I was pleasantly surprised to see an account of the work of a band of ladies of different denominations (another indication of the union character of the work here) amongst the sailors' boarding-houses and grog-shops. These devoted sisters continue their efforts with success. Through their influence a prayer-meeting, including a plain Gospel address, has been established in the 'Boston Hotel,' one of these places, and the four meetings held have each one been specially blessed in the awakening and conversion of precious souls. The Lord has signally owned and blessed this effort from the beginning, and many a dear fellow thanks God that evil associates did not have it quite all their own way in seducing him to these dens, but that such an agency was appointed to follow them even there, and snatch them, indeed, as 'brands from the burning.'"

HOME FOR INEBRIATE WOMEN.

REV. J. H. WILSON, of Edinburgh, writes to a Scotch contemporary of the establishment of a Home for the reclamation of women who have fallen victims to the love of strong drink. We thankfully hail the project, and wish it all success. Mr. Wilson says:—

"Several Christian ladies in Edinburgh, deeply convinced of the need for some provision of this kind being made, have taken steps for opening such a Home. A farmhouse has been leased in a healthy part of Peebleshire, remote from any place where drink can be procured. Women of a humbler class will be received into the house at a small weekly charge. Occupation will be provided in the way of laundrywork, needlework, &c. As far as possible, the inmates will enjoy all the influences and advantages of family and home life; and every means will be used to help them morally and spiritually.

"The experiment is one of the most important and interesting kind, and if it should please God to bless it with success, it may be the pioneer of similar movements on a larger scale. The Scottish Ladies' Temperance Society greatly desire the prayers of their Christian sisters throughout the country, that the Divine blessing may rest upon the undertaking. It is not doubted that hearts will be opened to supply the necessary funds. Communications as to persons to be received into the Home, and contributions to the funds, may be addressed to the Secretary, 1, East Castle-road, or Miss Fraser, 3, Atholl-place, Edinburgh."

MAYBOLE, N.B.—Some very interesting meetings have been held here recently in connexion with the visit of Messrs. Smith and Wallace. At the close of every meeting there are souls seeking deliverance from the bondage and condemnation of sin. The attendance has been fully up to that of last week. Numbers have been impressed. There have been some precious meetings with the children in Society-row School.

THE REV. F. W. ABE, an English missionary in Borneo, tells, in the Mission Field, of his method of winning in outsiders to hear the Gospel. On Wednesday evenings he leads his mission school, singing some such hymn as "Onward, Christian soldiers," through the crowded bazaar, toward the meeting-room, where he gathers all who will hear him. His brief address there is in the Malay tongue, but it is interpreted by his helpers into five Chinese dialects. These meetings already show good fruit.

AN APPEAL FROM SWEDEN.

The following appeal is translated from a Swedish paper:—

The spiritual wants of Södernamn, a suburb of Stockholm, with a population of nearly 50,000 souls, have for a long time been a subject of deep concern to the children of God there. As far as means have permitted, this has been met, through the preaching of the Word of God in several small rooms; but these have become more and more insufficient. As the Word is spread, more souls are hungering for grace and truth. The want of a mission-house in this suburb is, therefore, most urgent. The Lutheran Mission have, for a long time, been wanting to build one, which would also serve as an assembly-room, where the children of God could in larger numbers come together and have some brotherly intercourse. Such a house, with accommodation for about 2000 or 3000 people, would cost a considerable sum, however unpretending the style of it may be.

After having for several years tried in vain to find a suitable site, the Society has now bought one, very well situated in a central part of Södernamn. The Society now, in the name of the Lord Jesus, calls upon all the friends of the Kingdom of God for contributions, so that the building of this Mission-house may be begun, if possible, this winter. The Mission-house will be of use, not only to the inhabitants of Stockholm, but also to the country people who come to Stockholm in search of work. Often strangers in great numbers are staying in this suburb, as it is always easier to find lodging for the night in this, the largest part of the town.

Friends who wish to aid in the building of this house of God may address to the Tosterlands Society, at the bureau of Stadmissionären, Stockholm.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MAY'S CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS; OR, THE THINGS OF OTHERS.—Religious Tract Society.—A sweet little children's story about a Christian girl.

LIFE IN THE INVISIBLE: Thoughts on the State of the Blessed Dead. Stock.—A series of brief chapters on a subject of which we know little because little is revealed, but on which we might know more than we do if we were spiritual enough to perceive and to receive all that is revealed. This little book may help some who are considering what is termed "the intermediate state."

WE WOULD SEE JESUS. Large-print Readings for the Sick and Aged. By the Author of "Light at Eventide." Hatchards.—Two similar volumes have preceded this one, which contains twelve chapters descriptive of scenes in the life of our blessed Lord. They are simply, truthfully, beautifully written, except that now and again we perceive a tinge of sacramental efficacy which is not to our mind.

HYMNS OF CONSECRATION AND FAITH, AND SACRED SONGS for Missions and Praise Meetings. Arranged by Rev. J. MOUNTAIN. Morgan and Scott.—A valuable collection of hymns and tunes, well selected and arranged, containing several of Mr. Sankey's favourite tunes, combined with a selection from various eminent composers. One of the most useful tune-books we have seen, and would prove an acceptable New Year's gift to those who value good music and touching words.

DAILY HELPS TO THE HIGHER LIFE. By Rev. W. G. PASCOE. Elliot Stock.—Most Christians of intelligence are now pretty well agreed that the term "the Higher Life" is a mistake. It seems to imply that there is a life distinct from that possessed by Christians of ordinary experience; whereas, although there may be higher attainments in the one life common to all God's people, which few reach, there can be but the one life. It is a pity that this mistake is perpetuated in the title of this book, which might just as well have been called "Daily Helps to Holiness of Life," and thereby have had less the appearance of being a contribution to the views of a party. It consists of a short meditation for every day in the year, taken mostly from the pages of well-known writers. The majority of these are of the school of Wesley, Fletcher, and Madame Guyon, but a few of opposite views on the subject of holiness, such as Hewitson, Candlish, Eyles Pearce, and Spurgeon, are included. The editor seems to feel that the known discordance of their views may be thought to weaken the value of their united testimony, and therefore honestly says, "It is but fair to state that writings have been quoted from men who would probably have demurred to the formulated doctrine of salvation from all inward as well as outward sin through present faith in Christ Jesus; but by the extracts herein inserted, it is most evident that the substance of this precious truth was really held by them." It might, however, be added that it was on the distinct authority of such Scriptures as "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves," that these writers demurred to the doctrine of sinless perfection. The real doctrine of holiness can therefore be held, as Mr. Pascoe himself testifies in reference to them, without adopting formulas which contradict the clear and express teaching of Holy Scripture on this point.

THE UPWARD PATH; OR, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD. By A. M. JAMES. Religious Tract Society.—To those who "follow holiness" we cordially commend this sober-minded and Scriptural volume. It is very free from crude interpretation of the words of God, and does not daub his temple with untempered mortar. We would specially mention the chapter on the "Guidance of the Holy Spirit," which teaches, as we think, truly, respecting the extent to which the Lord Jesus emptied Himself, and "received all," whether it concerned his physical or spiritual support from the Father; "by the Holy Ghost." We rejoiced to find the book closed with so clear a testimony to the coming of the Lord, and the relation of "that blessed hope" to present holy walk and service. The Appendix of "Scripture Promise and Prophecy" on this subject is of much value.

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH. By the Author of "The Peep of Day." Hatchards.—This is the tenth of a series of the most popular children's books relating to Scripture history which our language possesses. The volume before us will probably be the last, for the venerable writer, Mrs. Favell Lee Mortimer, tells her young readers—"I can write no more books, for I am weak, and worn out, and ready to die." This "loving grandamma in Christ" (as she subscribes herself) has, however, rendered good service to her generation by the valuable addition she has made to our literature, which will be read by generations of children yet to come. The story of Esther and Mordecai forms a considerable portion of the present volume, and we are sorry to find that our esteemed author, in common with many other commentators, quite misses the typical teaching of that book.

WIVES AND MOTHERS; OR, READINGS FOR MOTHERS' MEETINGS. By R. MARRIAT. Hatchards.—A series of addresses full of useful, homely, practical advice, calculated to make good wives and mothers, and happy homes. The one thing lacking in the book is a clear, distinct difference drawn between converted and unconverted; and an evident lifting up of Jesus Christ and Him crucified as the Way, the only Way, into the life of God. Mothers' meetings are generally composed of some who are and some who are not Christians; each class needs to be addressed, but the distinction should be recognized—for to expect those to believe everything to the Gospel who have not believed the Gospel, is to tempt and mislead them. An intelligent Christian lady, nevertheless, will find here abundant suggestion for valuable addresses; all the better if she can weave in some interesting illustrations from her own experience.

AMERICAN ITEMS.

Rev. J. E. Searles has just returned from Toronto, Canada, where he has been conducting a successful series of revival services.

Another great temperance revival has grown from the continued religious interest which has prevailed in Auburn, Me., since last winter.

A general religious revival is in progress at Lake Village, N.H. Business is being generally suspended in order to give all persons an opportunity to take part.

A series of "Union-Gospel-meetings" will be held throughout Wisconsin during the next four months. The first one was begun at New-Richmond, Oct. 19.

The Rev. William Taylor, the "California street preacher," who has recently been labouring in India and England, is holding a series of revival meetings in Chicago.

The evangelists Messrs. Whittle and Bliss are now in Minneapolis, Minn. Reports state that their services there are as largely attended as in the other places they have visited.

The Chicago Flower Mission closed its work for the present year, Wednesday, Oct. 27, having distributed during the season 10,352 bouquets, besides pot-plants, magazines, and papers.

A delegation of young Modoc Indians from a border Sunday-school added much to the interest of the Kansas Sunday-school Convention, at Fort Scott, by their singing and Bible recitations.

The Chicago Young Men's Christian Association furnish the hospitals and kindred institutions of the city with floral offerings in the summer, and with jellies and other delicacies through the fall and winter.

Mr. Joseph Arch, President of the English Agricultural Labourers' Union, is planning another visit to Canada for the purpose of colonizing there more of the poor and struggling labourers longing to better their condition.

Boston is setting a good example to other cities. It is waiting, not on Moody and Sankey, but on the Lord. The ministers have agreed to commence work at once with a union daily prayer-meeting at 3 p.m., and public service every evening, with a short sermon, followed by personal work.

A letter from Rev. William Winans, a reformed sailor preacher, says that there is quite a revival of religion and temperance in West Woodstock and Pin Hook, Oxford county, Maine. He visits from house to house with his Bible; reads and prays, and invites the families to meetings in school-houses, where he preaches and lectures on temperance.

In a sketch of the Throop-avenue Mission-school, in The Brooklyn Sunday-school, it is said that two flourishing churches and two Sunday-schools have been started as a result of its work at this Mission. Moreover, although most of its scholars are German children from the poorer class of the community, this school contributes annually some $350 to the missionary cause.

Signs of general revival are reported in Oregon. The Pacific Christian Advocate says "there seems to be a spirit of religious inquiry abroad through the State, such as has seldom been known before." A series of meetings led by the Young Men's Christian Association at the State Fair in Portland reached many outside of all ordinary means of grace. The meetings were largely attended and richly blessed.

Last winter and spring there was unusual religious interest in the churches of Dover, N.H., and union daily prayer-meetings were kept up for months. One practical result was the foundation of the Christian Reform Club, which now numbers 300, about half of whom were confirmed drunkards. Many of them were brought to the meeting by the efforts of one man, who was rescued by the power of Christianity. The movement is marked by its deeply religious nature, the meetings of the club being filled with the spirit of prayer, and its members are impressed with the conviction that Christ only can save them. Even Roman Catholics engage in the movement, and many attend the Sabbath morning prayer-meeting, with the approval of their priest.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

UNIQUE ?—There is a missionary policeman at Bombay. He preaches the Gospel now and then in the streets.

MR. CHARLES E. FAITHFUL writes to say that he expects to be in Madrid about the 15th or 18th inst. He requests prayer on behalf of his mission work, and that a suitable medical missionary may be given to aid in the work. His address for the present will be—Care of Mr. Fenn Lagas-on, 22, Barrio de Salamanca, Madrid.

SUNDAY REST.—A letter has been sent to the Home Secretary, signed by 129 clergy and sixteen magistrates of the county of Derby, from which the following is an extract:—"It is generally understood that a Bill is likely to be brought forward in the next session of Parliament, under the auspices of the Government, for the purpose of modifying the laws which regulate the observance of the Sabbath in this country. We beg with all earnestness to plead with you, and through your kind offices with Her Majesty's Government, that in any Bill to be introduced no permission may be given for the opening of aquaria or other places of amusement or of secular instruction on the Lord's-day for money payment; but that every appropriate means may be taken to protect the Sabbath rest of the few or the poor, from the requisitions which may be attempted to be laid upon it on behalf of the many or the wealthy.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Tuesday, the 30th ult., was observed by the Church of England as a day of intercession on behalf of foreign missions. Dr. Moffat, the father-in-law of the late Dr. Livingstone, delivered a lecture in the nave of Westminster Abbey, at the invitation of Dean Stanley. In a leading article the Times says:—"Dr. Moffat appears to have illustrated, with all modesty, from his own experience, the method which has always been, and must always be, the secret of successful evangelization. That principle is kindness and the utter repudiation of anything in the nature of force. The world was evangelized originally by men whose sole power consisted in an infinite capacity for suffering on behalf of their convictions. Sufficient recognition has rarely, perhaps, even if ever, been done to this wonderful exhibition of the principles proclaimed in the Sermon on the Mount. The Christians at certain periods were a numerous and a united society in the Roman Empire, and even in the Roman Army; but until the Church became victorious we do not hear of a single attempt at forcible resistance to persecution. Our modern missionaries have yet to learn this lesson in its fullness, and it is the highest honour we can pay to Dr. Moffat and to Dr. Livingstone to say that it has been effectually illustrated in their memorable careers."

KENSAL NEW TOWN.—The second anniversary of the opening of the Iron Room here was held on Wednesday last, and our hearts were much cheered and encouraged when we were led to think of what the Lord had done during the past two years. About 150 came together to tea; after which a good number of workmen went out into the streets to bear testimony for the Master, and seek to bring in the unsaved to the public meeting, which was commenced about half-past seven. During the evening several encouraging testimonies were given.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For comfort and strength received through reading the poetry in THE CHRISTIAN of Aug. 26 and Nov. 12.—For blessings vouchsafed during mission services in St. Paul's Parish, York, and St. Thomas's Parish, Lancaster.—For blessing at Battersea United Mission last week.—For answer to prayer asked for in THE CHRISTIAN in August on behalf of a school-girl.—For a blessing on my week-day Bible-class in answer to prayer.—For great blessing at the Children's Special Services at Kingston; prayer is asked for a like blessing at Isleworth.

PRAYER.—For a young officer now watching over a beloved father in illness, whose conversion has long been sought.—For two ladies in danger of being hindered in their work for Christ in a hospital; and for those who hinder them, that their hearts may be changed.—For one who is a slave to doubts and fears.—For a young husband, the son of pious parents, who has been led astray.—For a beloved and only son about to leave home for school.—That my sons may be saved from ungodly marriages.—For myself, an aged believer, that my last days may be best.—For direction in an important crisis.—For a man who, after having been an inveterate drunkard, had been for eleven years a total abstainer, and apparently a Christian, but who has now again sadly fallen.

PLACES.—For God's blessing on meetings during cattle-show week, in Moorgate-street Hall, by the South London Choir; also, on meetings, Dec. 13 to 16, in the Drill Hall, Norwood Junction.—For the work among young men at the Priory, Islington.—For mission services to be conducted by the Rev. H. M. H. Aitken in York from Dec. 12 to 22.—For a series of meetings being held by D. N. Cameron in Barrow-in-Furness.—For special services in the parish of Bethesda, Ashford, Kent.—For Payhembury, near Ottery St. Mary.—For Sunday-school and week-evening prayer-meetings in the Mission Hall, Fife-Keith, Banffshire, N.B.—For Christian Conference at Staindrop, Darlington.—For special services at Matlock Bank from Dec. 12 to 17, conducted by John Johnstone.—For special services at Guildford, Dec. 9 to 17, by Mr. C. R. Hurditch.—For a small mining parish in Derbyshire.—That the Lord would provide a faithful pastor for a large congregation in Scotland.—For services by Mr. W. Forbes at Lewes.

CONVERSIONS.—For two gentlemen, one of them in poor health.—For a father, mother, four brothers, and two sisters.—For a prodigal brother long prayed for.—For a son long unheard from.—For a brother and his wife.—For a gentleman engrossed in the affairs of this life, and surrounded by harassing difficulties.—For a gentleman who appears to be carried away by musical society.—For one of my schoolfellows.—For a gentleman who takes to drink as a relief from great business anxieties.—For one who has for some time been kept from intemperance, but is now brought into the way of temptation.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL E.C.

The following are the subjects and speakers for the current week:—

DECEMBER.	SUBJECT.	SPEAKER.
Thurs., 9.	"A Peculiar People" (Titus ii. 14)	Rev. J. Matheson.
Fri., 10.	"The Things Revealed" (Deut. xxix. 29)	J. Taylor, Esq.
Sat., 11.	"Confidence in God" (1 John v. 14, 15)	Captain Liebenrood.
Mon., 13.	"Deborah's Message" (Judg. iii. 1)	Rev. W. Tyler.
Tues., 14.	"The Lord is my Shepherd" (Psalm xxiii.)	" Robert Balfarnie.
Wed., 15.	"The house desolate" (Matt. xxiii. 37; xxiv. 2)	" R. C. Billing.

SOUTH LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—United Mission, Moorgate-street Hall, Dec. 6 to 10, 7 p.m.; Norwood Junction Drill Hall, Dec. 13 to 16, 8 p.m. Christian workers earnestly invited.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILD MAY-PARK, N.—The monthly Sunday morning meetings for Christian workers, and the fortnightly Saturday evening service of song, are discontinued for the present.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S CARDS.—Mr. J. E. Hawkins, of 12, Paternoster-square, E.C., has issued three pretty packets of cards for the approaching season. Two of them are beautifully printed in blue and gold; the letterpress consists of new year's greetings, mottoes, wishes, &c., chiefly in the words of Scripture. The other packet is more attractive still, the borders being ornamented with exquisite chromo-lithographs of flowers. We have also received from Mr. Inskipp, photographer, Tunbridge Wells, some specimens of similar cards ornamented with photographic representations of ferns and ivy. They are, of course, devoid of colour, but their neatness and the artistic arrangement of the ferns will render them very popular.

DAILY TEXTS.

"I AM THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."—JOHN IX. 5.

Thurs., Dec. 9.—"And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water." "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."—Gen. xxi. 19; Ps. exix. 18.

Fri., 10.—"That the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, ye may know what is the hope of his calling and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints; and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe according to the working of his mighty power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead."—Eph. i. 18-20.

Sat., 11.—"And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him." "Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures."—Luke xxiv. 31; 45.

Sun., 12.—"Behold the Lamb of God!" "No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."—John i. 29; 18.

Mon., 13.—"Philip saith unto Him, 'Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us.' Jesus saith unto him, '... He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father.'" "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another comforter... even the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not."—John xiv. 8; 16.

Tues., 14.—"And Jesus said, 'Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee.'" "There was a man named Zacchaeus, ... and he sought to see Jesus." "And Jesus said unto him, 'This day is salvation come to this house.'"—Luke xviii. 42; xix. 2, 3; 9.

Wed., 15.—"One thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see." "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art... blind, ... I counsel thee to buy of me." "Anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see."—John ix. 25; Rev. iii. 17; 18.

"WE SHALL SEE HIM AS HE IS."—1 JOHN III. 2.

The Christian.

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS."

FROM THE FRENCH OF THEODORE MONOD.

(Concluded from our last).

LOOKING TO JESUS, and not to the sincerity of our intentions, to the steadfastness of our resolutions. Alas! how often the most excellent purposes have only prepared the way for the most humiliating failures! Let us lean, not upon our intentions, but upon his love; not upon our resolutions, but upon his promise.

To Jesus, and not to our strength. Our strength is good only for glorifying ourselves; in order to glorify God, we must have the strength of God.

To Jesus, and not to our weakness. Has lamenting our weakness ever made us stronger? While looking unto Jesus, his strength will be communicated to our hearts, and his praises will sound from our lips.

To Jesus, and not to our sins, to the source whence they proceed,* to the punishment which they deserve. Let us look to ourselves only to recognise how much need we have of looking unto Him, and that certainly not as if we were not sinners, but, on the contrary, because we are,—measuring the very greatness of our sin by the greatness of the sacrifice which has atoned for it, and of the grace by which it is forgiven. "For one look at ourselves," said an eminent servant † of God, "let us take ten looks at Jesus." "If it is well proved," says Vinet, "that we shall not lose sight of our own misery by looking to Jesus Christ crucified, because that misery is, as it were, engraven upon his cross, it is also well proved that by looking to our own misery we may lose sight of Jesus Christ, because the cross is not naturally engraven in the image of our misery"; and he adds, "Look at yourselves, but let it be in presence of the cross, and, as it were, through the person of Jesus Christ." ‡ The contemplation of sin only brings death, the contemplation of Jesus gives life; that which healed the Israelite in the wilderness was not beholding his wounds, but lifting his eyes towards the brazen serpent. §

To Jesus, and not—need we say?—to our supposed righteousness. Diseased above all the diseased is he who believes himself to be whole; blindest of the blind is he who thinks he can see. || If it is dangerous to look long at our own misery, alas! too real, it is far more dangerous to rest complacently upon imaginary merits.

To Jesus, and not to the law. The law gives commands, but does not give strength to execute them; the law always condemns and never pardons. To place ourselves again under law is to withdraw ourselves from grace. According to the measure in which we make our obedience the means of our salvation, we lose our peace, our strength, our joy,—from having forgotten that Jesus is "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." ¶ As soon as the law has constrained us to seek in Him our only Saviour, it is for Him alone to enjoin obedience upon us; an obedience which extends to nothing less than our entire heart, and our most secret thoughts, but which has ceased to be a yoke of iron and a burden that cannot be borne, to become a yoke which is easy and a burden which is light; an obedience which He makes dear to us at the same time as He makes it binding upon us; an obedience which He inspires at the same time as He prescribes it, and which, in fact, is less a consequence of our salvation than a part of that salvation itself, and, like all the rest, a gift of grace.

To Jesus, and not to what we are doing for Him. Too much taken up with our work, we may forget our Master—it is possible to have the hands full and the heart empty; taken up with our Master, we cannot forget our work—if the heart is filled with his love, how can the hands be otherwise than active in his service?

To Jesus, and not to the apparent success of our efforts. Apparent success is not the measure of real success; and besides, God has not given us the command to succeed, but to work; it is of our work that He will require an account, not of our success. Why, then, trouble ourselves about it? It is for us to sow the seed, it is for God to gather the fruit; if not to-day it will be to-morrow; if not by us it will be by others. Even when success is granted to us, it is always dangerous to fix our attention upon it: on the one hand we are tempted to attribute something of it to ourselves; on the other, we thus accustom ourselves to relax our zeal when we cease to perceive the effect of it—that is, at the very time when we ought to go on with redoubled energy. To look to success is to walk by sight; to look to Jesus and persevere in following and serving Him, in spite of all discouragements, is to walk by faith.

To Jesus, and not to the spiritual gifts which we have already received, or are now receiving, from Him. As to yesterday's grace, that passed away with yesterday's work; we can no longer make use of it, we must no longer dwell upon it. As to the grace of to-day, given for the work of to-day, that is given us not to be gazed at, but to be employed; not that we should make it ring in our hands, and think ourselves rich, but that we should spend it at once and remain poor, "looking unto Jesus."

To Jesus, and not to the amount of grief which we feel on account of our sins, or to the degree of humiliation which they produce in us. If only we are sufficiently humbled by them to cease to take pleasure in ourselves, if we are sufficiently afflicted to look to Jesus that He may deliver us, that is all He requires of us; and it is also that look which more than anything else will cause our tears to flow, and our pride to fall. And when it is given unto us, as unto Peter, to weep bitterly, oh, let our brimming eyes remain more than ever fixed upon Jesus, for our very repentance would become a snare to us if we thought we could in any measure wash away with our tears those sins from which nothing can cleanse, except the blood of the Lamb of God.

To Jesus, and not to the liveliness of our joy, the steadfastness of our assurance, or the fervour of our love. Otherwise, if this love should in any way seem to lose its warmth, this assurance to be less firm, this joy less buoyant (whether it be the result of unfaithfulness, or a trial of our trust), immediately, having lost our emotions, we shall think we have lost our strength, and allow ourselves to sink into paralysing depression, if not into cowardly inaction, and perhaps into sinful murmurings. Oh, let us rather remember that though at times emotion and its sweetness should fail us, faith and its power remain; and in order that we may "always abound in the work of the Lord,"* let us look without ceasing, not to our hearts which are continually changing, but to Jesus who is ever the same.

To Jesus, and not to the degree of sanctification we have attained. If no one could believe himself to be a child of God so long as he continues to find stains in his heart and failures in his life, who then could taste the joy of salvation? But this joy is not at such a price. Holiness is the fruit of our redemption, not the root of it: it is the work of Jesus Christ for us which reconciles us to God; it is the work of the Holy Spirit in us which renews us into his likeness. The imperfection of a faith which is sincere, although as yet little established and little fruitful, does not alter in the least the fulness of the perfect work of the Saviour, nor the certainty of his immovable promise assuring eternal life to every one that trusts in Him. Moreover, to rest upon the Redeemer is the true way to obey Him; and it is only in the peace of pardon that the soul is strong for conflict. What if there are some who pervert this blessed truth, and give themselves up without scruple to spiritual slothfulness, finding, in the faith which they profess to have, an excuse for making light of the holiness which they have not? We must recall to their memory this solemn declaration of St. Paul: "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts"; † and this of St. John: "He that saith, 'I know Him,' and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him"; ‡ and this also of Jesus himself: "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." §

To Jesus, and not to our faith. The last device of the adversary, when he cannot make us look elsewhere, is to turn off our eyes from our Saviour to our faith, and thus to discourage us if it be weak, to puff us up if it be strong,—in either case to enfeeble us. For the source of strength is not faith; it is the Saviour, through faith; it is not to look at our looking, but to look unto Jesus.

To Jesus; and it is from Him and in Him that we shall learn to know, not only without danger, but for the good of our souls, what it is meet we should know of the world and of ourselves, of our misery, of our perils, of our resources, of our victories; seeing all things in their true light, because it is He who will make us see them, and that only at the time and in the measure in which this knowledge will work in us fruits of humility and wisdom, of gratitude and courage, of watchfulness and prayer. All that it is desirable for us to know, Jesus will teach us; all that we do not learn from Him, it is best for us not to know.

"Looking unto Jesus" during the time that remains for us to live on the earth; unto Jesus from moment to moment, without allowing ourselves to be distracted either by the memories of a past which we must leave behind us, or by the anxious anticipations of a future about which we know nothing. Unto Jesus now, if we have never looked to Him before; unto Jesus anew, if we have ceased to do so; unto Jesus alone, unto Jesus again, unto Jesus always, with a more and more unwavering, a more and more earnest look, "changed into the same image from glory to glory";* and thus waiting for the hour when He will call us to pass from earth to heaven, and from time to eternity—the promised hour, the blessed hour, when at last "we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him" as He is.†

THE LADS OF LONDON.

I HAVE for some time past had laid upon my heart the condition of the youths of the working class in our great city.

For young men of the warehousemen and clerk grade there are Literary Institutions and Young Men's Christian Associations, and for those of the mechanic class there are evening instruction classes provided. It is not for either of these I now plead, but for those who are younger—those who quite recently were merry schoolboys, but are now found in the midst of the hard battle of life, having to earn their own living, and to win their way in the world as best they may.

There are thousands of lads thirteen years of age and upwards—some engaged as apprentices, errand-boys, or porters; others working in shops, warehouses, and factories—and whose wages amount to only a few shillings per week. Many an one who has come from a healthy and happy village home, now occupies a miserable little lodging in a low neighbourhood which is the constant seat of disease. In some cases the lad has but half a bed. He is without friends, deprived of the comforts and kindly restraints of home; and stands exposed to the snares and fierce temptations of London life. The day's work ends at seven or eight o'clock, and these lads are not expected nor wanted at their abode before ten o'clock. In the interval where are they and what are they doing?

Stroll through our streets at night, pause at the public-house corners, and you will know where many of them are—while many more may be found at the theatres and music-halls. Listen to their conversation, and you will be shocked at the revelation it affords of their moral state. It may be said that they ought to be at their apartments, and should spend their spare hours in reading and study. Very good; but generally, I fear, they have not the taste; and even if they had, the circumstances are not favourable. It may be that the youthful lodger has to share the only room where there is a light with a family of several children, and should he desire to be alone in his bedroom he must provide his own candle, and sit without a fire. True some Ferguson or Franklin may surmount all these difficulties, and become a student and rise to greatness; but he is one of a thousand, and the remaining nine hundred and ninety-nine will succumb to their circumstances.

Consider what harm these youths get while spending their evenings in the streets. How many every night are ruined in the streets of London! And why are they there? Often not because they are vicious, but because they have nowhere else to be—they have no home. We cannot wonder that many, to escape their wretchedness, marry early, even before they are in a position to support a wife; and thus commences many a chapter of domestic misery.

Can something be done to help our poor working lads? The importance of such an effort all will admit who know their circumstances and habits. Only leave them for a few years, and they will become the disaffected class of which we hear so much, and which it is so hard to reach. Only leave them as they are, and they will infallibly yield, as they have hitherto yielded, a large quota towards filling our workhouses, our prisons, and our drunkards' graves. But if they could be influenced and rescued now, what a blessed change might we see in society before very long!

It appears to me that their great want is a place where to go and spend the evening—a kind of Home; and I have thought that Institutions, in different parts of London,

* 1 Cor. xv. 58.

† Gal. v. 24.

‡ 1 John ii. 4.

but especially in the East-end, where so many of them reside, might be established to meet this want.

I would say: Take a house in a main thoroughfare—Commercial-road or Whitechapel, for instance—and fit it something like a British Workman public-house. Let there be a thoroughly comfortable reading-room, well lighted, having a good fire, and supplied with newspapers, magazines, religious periodicals, &c. A library, if it could be added, would be an advantage. In another room let tea, coffee, and other refreshments be nicely served, but at low prices. Then there must be a lavatory, so that the lad who has but just left his dirty work may have a wash and make himself comfortable. Let the subscription of membership be trifling, perhaps one shilling per quarter.

These appear to be the essentials, though of course other means of usefulness might readily be added, should funds and circumstances allow—e.g., lectures, classes for reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, French, Bible-reading, &c.; temperance meetings, religious services, &c.; savings bank, clothing club, sick fund, &c. A poor lad would thus be able, on leaving his employment, instead of wandering in the streets or going to the public-house or music-hall, to spend his evening at the Institution, feeling as free as at home.

I think it will be apparent that the first result would be the prevention of a great amount of evil by removing temptation; but it will at once be perceived by the earnest Christian reader what a splendid opening for spiritual work would here be afforded to any secretary or manager of the right sort in his daily intercourse with the lads. There would also be abundant opportunities for Christian helpers.

As to the raising of the necessary funds, I think that the cause would commend itself to many of the Lord's servants who are men of business, and know the dangers and temptations of the city; and also that many employers of labour would gladly assist this effort for the welfare of a class whose services they engage.

Whether an institution of the kind proposed would quite meet the need, I am not prepared to say. It suggested itself to me as likely to, in some important respects, but I submit it with diffidence, and should be very glad to receive suggestions or communicate with any friends who are interested in the matter and willing to help.

I feel deeply, deeply, that something ought to be done, and done at once.

CORRECTION.—In our paragraph last week referring to the Tract Repository in Toronto, conducted by Mr. S. R. Briggs, the name and address of the agent in England was incorrectly given. The correct address is Mr. Arthur Bursen, 31A, Piccadilly, Manchester.

ROMSEY, HANTS.—We are glad to learn from a correspondent that a Bible-class for men was started here on the Sunday afternoons, some six weeks since, and has made encouraging progress. The Hon. Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., has given the free use of a suitable room, and the attendance, commencing with twenty-five, has now risen to 100. Our correspondent also informs us that on two recent Sundays the class was addressed respectively by Mr. Mundella, M.P., and Lord Shaftesbury, who were visiting the Hon. Mr. Cowper-Temple at Broadlands.

SOUTH LONDON REFUGE.—The Boys' Home, Lancaster-street, Blackfriars-road, formerly at 112, Southwark-bridge-road (the object of which is to take in the most destitute lads and find them employment as shoeblocks or otherwise), is in urgent want of help. The Committee appeal to the public for immediate assistance towards the support of the Home. Owing to the recent inclemency of the weather, the boys of the Shoeblack Brigade, usually self-supporting, were thrown out of employ. The smallest donations thankfully received by F. T. Laurence, Honorary Secretary.

CHESTERFIELD.—Mr. Jordan, of the Children's Special Service Mission, London, commenced, on Nov. 29, five days of services for children and young people in the Marsden-street Chapel here. The meetings were all very encouraging. From 100 to 200 remained to the inquiry-meetings to be spoken with. Mr. Jordan visited one of the week-day schools, and on Friday forty-three of the boys held a prayer-meeting in the school-room, after the morning lesson, which was conducted by themselves. All the Sunday-schools in the town that were represented at the meetings have received great, and we hope lasting, benefit.

"A HAPPY CHRISTMAS."

CHRISTMAS-TIDE is once more at hand, and appeals for material aid in distributing to the necessities of the poor flow in upon us. As long usage has fixed this season in commemoration of the greatest act of "giving" the world ever saw, it seems fitting that the meditations of the Christian on this marvellous token of a Saviour's love should prompt him to give in return. It is always needful to remember the saying of the Apostle—"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." It ought to be much more difficult to forget it at Christmas-time, when our thoughts are more specially directed to Him who continually went about doing good.

If any additional motive is required to move our hearts in pity, and open our hands in deeds of merciful justice, it will be found in the recent calamities by land and sea, as well as the unusually severe winter that has already fallen upon our land, bringing in its train much bodily suffering from hunger and cold. On every hand those who labour among our poorer brethren and sisters tell of want and physical wretchedness—much of it, no doubt, self-imposed, and much of it, too, the fruit of circumstances beyond human control. Whichever it be, these appeal to our common sympathy, and give opportunity for illustrating the words of the Lord Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

As in years past, we shall count it a pleasure to be the almoners of such gifts to the really needy and deserving, as our friends who have of this world's goods, and the heart to share them, may entrust to our stewardship. We cannot give a detailed list of the varied applications that have reached us, but the utmost care and solicitude will be exercised in dividing any sums that may be sent to us in response to this appeal for "Christmas gifts to the poor."

Only one word more we ask permission to add—"Who gives quickly, gives twice."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

CONVERSATIONAL MEETINGS.

At the recent annual meeting of this Mission, Rev. G. J. H. Llewellyn, of Ledbury, made the following appropriate remarks respecting inquiry-meetings for the young:—

"I scarcely know how to describe these holy, solemn gatherings; how to picture the little groups, solemn and earnest, tearful and anxious, under deep serious impressions, hanging on your lips for the words of life—waiting to be instructed, and counselled, and pointed to Jesus as their own precious and loving Saviour. The exceeding difficulty of dealing wisely with them—the needful mingling of tenderness and firmness, gentleness and penetration, of brightness and solemnity, can only be understood by those who have had this work to do. This personal heart-work is, after all, the very essence and substance of an efficiently conducted children's mission, and the work without it would be very much like a net cast into the sea and never drawn to land.

"To any who view it with somewhat of reserve and suspicion, I would say—The best and only way to get rid of doubt and difficulty is to make an effort yourself and enter upon the work. All you want to disarm you of old prejudice is to feel that you love your Lord, and because you love Him, and He loves the dear children, that you love them for his sake. Come and plead with them to know and believe his love, to yield their hearts to that love, and be at rest. The insight into the spiritual condition of the children is quite one of the most blessed and useful results gained by the Christian worker at these conversational meetings, and an obvious advantage is the pointed and personal way in which the offers of the Gospel are brought home to the individual child's heart and conscience, and which secures, as far as possible, that none who are seeking God shall miss the aid they need."

THE Lancet authoritatively states that the habit of secret drunkenness is becoming common among boys at public schools to an extent which the friends of the sufferers would willingly conceal.

CONFERENCE AT BERWICK.

On Tuesday week a Conference of Christian workers of a most interesting character took place in Wallace-green Church, Berwick, and it has been followed by evangelistic meetings in the same church on all the remaining evenings of the week. The work of the day was begun with a prayer-meeting from half-past seven till half-past eight in the morning. At eleven o'clock the meetings in the church began, and at that hour the body of the church was well filled, among those present being a considerable number of the prominent business people of the town. The time from eleven till one o'clock was occupied with devotional exercises.

At half-past one o'clock the meetings in the church were resumed, the Rev. Richard Leitch occupying the chair for the first half-hour, which was devoted to "short reports of Christian work in the Border district." One of the districts from which a brief report was furnished was Yetholm, and another was Holy Island, from which Mr. Mauchlin, a student connected with the United Presbyterian Church, made a verbal report. Mr. Clark, coast missionary for Northumberland, gave some account of his labours, as did also Mr. Short, coast missionary for Berwickshire; and the Rev. George Henderson, North Sunderland, bore testimony to the efficiency and success of the coast missionaries who had just spoken.

At two o'clock the chair was taken by the Rev. John Kelman, who gave an address on "Work among the Young in Sabbath-schools and otherwise." He spoke regarding the hopefulness of work among the young, and the importance of having them converted before they have had experience of evil, which can never be wiped out. Various gentlemen took part in the proceedings, which were all of a very interesting character.

From three to four o'clock Dr. Mackay was chairman, and the subject was, "Work outside the congregation, cottage meetings, and evangelistic work generally." A stirring address was given by Dr. Mackay, who was followed by Mr. Bell; the Rev. Peter Mearns, Coldstream; the Rev. John Kelman; and Dr. Mc'Lagan, Berwick; who bore testimony to the good work done by young men and women in cottage meetings, which were addressed by young men, the young ladies being present to assist in the singing. Much good had resulted from singing the hymns, as well as from conversation and addresses.

Before the meeting closed, Dr. Cairns said he rejoiced to see such a meeting begun early in the day and continued till late in the afternoon, and not a jarring note in the whole proceedings. He had known of other revivals of religion, but none that had produced such results as this. The meeting was then closed with praise and the Benediction.

On the subsequent evenings of the week, meetings were held for the quickening of believers, and were largely attended.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TEMPERANCE UNION.—The third meeting of this Society was held on Friday evening last at the Home of Industry. A practical and stirring address was given by Mrs. M. Baxter, and various other friends gave encouraging reports. Upwards of a hundred names have been enrolled as members of the Union. Christian sisters in the provinces are invited to co-operate. Address to Miss Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn, N.W.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE LITTLE GIRLS, BROADWAY, PLAISTOW.—Miss Lee writes, in reply to several inquiries, that she has never had any idea of relinquishing a work which she firmly believes was entrusted to her by the Lord. We know that Miss Lee has been somewhat overtaxed (what labourer in the vineyard has not?), and has learned how to suffer need as well as how to abound. We warmly commend her and her orphans to the loving and helpful sympathy of all who love little children.

GREENWICH CHURCH TEACHERS' UNION.—The Lecture Hall, Greenwich, presented a most interesting appearance on Thursday evening last, on the occasion of the seventh annual meeting of the Greenwich Church Teachers' Union. The report submitted showed that vigorous efforts had been made during the past year to improve their teaching power, both by lectures on special subjects connected with the art of teaching, and by competitive essays on "Sunday-school work, and results." The chairman's address was entitled, "The Sunday-school, and the present educational crisis," and served to show that the responsibility and value of Sunday-schools had greatly increased, as but little dependence could be placed on the religious teaching given in Board and voluntary schools. The Rev. J. McConnel Hussey addressed the meeting on "The Sunday-school teacher's work a great work." The Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter followed. With a wealth of illustration and anecdote, he showed that the teacher's power, in a secondary sense, lay in having his head, his heart, and his conscience thoroughly in harmony with his work.

MISSION SERVICES AT LANCASTER.

A SEASON of special effort for the conversion of the ungodly was recently observed in Lancaster, in connexion with St. Thomas' Church in that town. The following particulars we cull from a local source:—

The missioner is the Rev. T. J. Clarke, Rector of St. Paul's, York, assisted by the Rev. John Bone, Vicar of St. Thomas'. The inaugural sermon was preached on the Sunday morning by Mr. Clarke, and was delivered with much earnestness and power. The preacher selected for his text John xxiv. 5—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." The rev. gentleman concluded a very eloquent discourse by exhorting his hearers to lay hold of God's grace in Christ, and open their hearts to receive Christ as their Saviour.

On Sunday afternoon the Rev. T. J. Clarke delivered a suitable address to children, and in the evening he again preached to a crowded congregation. His discourse was based upon Acts xxvi. 28—"Then Agrippa said unto Paul, almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." The rev. gentleman explained in forcible language what it really was to be a Christian, and how dangerous it was to be only almost one. There was an after-meeting for prayer and counsel, and a large proportion of the congregation remained to the end of the service.

At noon, on Wednesday, the Rev. T. J. Clarke delivered a special address in St. Thomas' Church to men of business; about 150 were present. Mr. Clarke based his address upon the words "One thing is needful" (Luke x. 42).

Every evening during the week there was a mission service in the church, and a sermon preached by the Rev. T. J. Clarke. The interest displayed in the services was of a most striking character, and the most devout feeling pervaded them. There was a large congregation each night, and it is worthy of note that nearly every denomination in the town was represented. The services have been of a plain and simple character, and well adapted to promote the object the Rev. J. Bone had in view in organizing them. Mr. Clarke possesses very persuasive powers, and his addresses are calculated to produce a lasting impression. The sermon has been followed each night by an after-meeting. Large numbers have availed themselves of these meetings, at which Mr. Clarke has further enlarged upon the subjects on which he has spoken from the pulpit. At the after-meetings he has been stationed in the central aisle, close to the font. A second meeting has usually followed, for the purpose of speaking privately to anxious inquirers. In addition to these services, there have been prayer-meetings in the morning at St. Thomas' Boys' School and Aldcliffe-lane School; addresses to children, mothers, and men of business; also to the workmen at Mr. Hatch's and Mr. Baynes' workshops, and to the workpeople at Mr. Jackson's mill, Queen-street.

Mr. S. LEADBRATER, having left Lurgan, is at present residing at 32, William-street, Southport.

HENRY WAINWRIGHT.—We have received many requests that special prayer may be offered on behalf of this unhappy man, who is to suffer the extreme penalty of the law on the 21st inst.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—On Dec. 6 a meeting was held to celebrate the opening of an Iron Mission Hall, recently erected to accommodate the Friends' Mission, in Bunhill Fields. This mission was commenced two summers ago, in a Tent for Gospel Meetings, erected on the Friends' Burying Ground, in Coleman-street, Bunhill-row, and has been so much prospered under the Lord's blessing as to lead to the erection of an iron building on the same ground. The Mission has been helped forward by the adhesion of several earnest workers connected with the Mission, conducted by the late George Vigeon, who had a tent on the same ground in the summer of 1873. Thus, over the graves of George Fox, and many who laboured and suffered for the truth, the Gospel is being proclaimed to the salvation of souls.

Mrs. BARBOUR writes:—Can you prominently request prayer in THE CHRISTIAN for blessing on the evening services in the Gaiety Theatre, Edinburgh, to be held on Sunday evenings at seven o'clock for young men. One theatre burnt down last season is rebuilt. Another, which had the same fate last winter, is to be ready in April. At a third they are working very long hours, to have it ready on the 20th. I only mention these facts to give interest to the taking of the Gaiety for evangelistic services on the Sunday evenings. Our ministers deplore this new accommodation to be, and resume a conference to-day (Dec. 9) on the subject. Mr. Henry Drummond will take much part on the Sunday evenings.

FOR THE YOUNG.

"GOD KNOWS ME ANYHOW."

FRANK had beautiful long hair hanging over his shoulders, and his parents were very proud of his appearance. One day he got his mother's scissors, went to a looking-glass, and cut off all his fair locks.

His father and mother were much displeased with him for so doing, and resolved to punish him in this way: When they were all seated at the dinner-table, his father, pointing to him, said to his mother, "What little boy is that?" "I'm your little Franky, papa," he at once said, not giving his mother time to reply. "Nonsense," was the father's answer, "my little Franky has beautiful long hair; I would not give my Franky for a dozen boys such as you."

Franky now turned to his mother and said, "Ain't I your little Franky?" but mamma only shook her head. Matters were now looking serious, and Franky, becoming alarmed, could not make any progress with his dinner. He now appealed to his brother, and asked if he was not little Franky; but his brother only shook his head.

He was becoming very unhappy at the thought that father, mother, and brother no longer recognized him, and at last he burst into tears, saying as he did so, "Well, it don't matter much, for God knows me anyhow."

Tears were now in other eyes as well as in Franky's. Those who are near and dear to us may no longer know us, but if we are his children, "God knows us anyhow."

A Christian mother, when praying beside her little boy, had mentioned his name in her prayer. Upon rising from her knees he said, "I am glad that you told Jesus my name, for when He sees me coming He will say, 'Here comes little Willie Johnson.'"

A Christian lady who had recently lost her husband was weeping in the presence of her little boy. Upon asking her why she was weeping, she told him that it was because his father was dead. He at once replied, "Is Jesus dead too?" Some time afterwards, when on one occasion she was complaining and fretting about her difficulties, he said to her, "Are you tired trusting in Jesus?"

NOTTINGHAM.—A nine days' mission has been held in connexion with St. Ann's Well-road Chapel, by Mr. J. A. Vicary, of Bristol. In answer to prayer, great blessing has been the result. Every evening, after a preliminary prayer-meeting, a band of singers, with the minister at their head, went round the streets announcing the services. Every service was followed by an after-meeting, and at all of these, without exception, some were seeking Christ. There were many cases of great interest.

SHEFFIELD.—The Mission we began among the police and cabmen in January last has been the means of much good amongst them. We visit the police-station once a week, and give the men tracts and small books, which are eagerly received. Many drunkards' homes have been made happy. We intend to present each man with a pocket-Bible on New Year's Day, if funds will allow. To supply our wants we shall require about £10. The cabmen are visited on the stands, and our tracts are read with great interest.

BATH.—The Lord is visiting this city and neighbourhood. For some time past there has been a union of all the Nonconformist ministers for prayer, to seek an outpouring of the Spirit on themselves and on the churches. Then came a weekly united prayer-meeting, presided over by one or the other of the ministers; this is now being well attended. Special services have also been held in the various chapels from time to time; and Miss Parker has been conducting very successful meetings—first in Hope Chapel, and afterwards in St. James's Hall. Some, there is reason to hope, have been brought to the Lord. During the past week, Miss Parker, together with the pastor, has been conducting special meetings in the Congregational Chapel, Bath-easton; the people have crowded to the place, and some profess to have found peace: the hearts of the Lord's people have been greatly cheered. The good work is still going on, our sister being busy in visiting the people as well as conducting the meetings. Will the Lord's people pray for us?

THE BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.

AN ADDRESS BY DR. ASA MAHAN AT THE DUBLIN CONVENTION.

DR. MAHAN said it would be expected that he should speak without reserve upon the subject before them. In order to show the interest taken in it in all parts of the world, he would allude to the following facts:—

In the early part of the present year one of the great theologians of Germany—an individual who held the same relation to the Lutheran Church as the Archbishop of Canterbury does to the Established Church of this kingdom—remarked, in Berlin, that for centuries the attention of Christendom had been to a great extent occupied with the mission of the Father and of the Son, though not to the neglect of the mission of the Holy Spirit; but that from that time onward one great thought would occupy the attention of Christendom, and that was the special mission of the Holy Ghost. Four years ago, when the general Convention of the Congregational churches of the United States met at Oberlin, his old associate President Finney was, by a unanimous vote, requested to preach a discourse on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost." Three years subsequently, when that Conference met again, the discourse appointed to be delivered was on the "Pentecostal Baptism as the Hope of the Church." Again, at the general Conference of the Unitarian denomination of the United States, the opening discourse was on the very same subject; and the speaker remarked that, whatever might be thought of the doctrine of the Trinity, there was a promise of the baptism of the Spirit, and that was what the Church needed.

In the 2nd Chapter of the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians there were these words:—"Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned. But He that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet He himself is judged of no man." Read also these three verses from the next chapter: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal." And then the Apostle spoke of the evidences of their carnal state.

On the surface of what he had read, the fact was apparent that three distinct classes of individuals were referred to—namely, the natural man, who depended on his own reason, and consequently rejected the idea of inspiration or anything of the Spirit of God; the spiritual man; and the believer who was yet not spiritual but carnal. Of these classes two were Christians—namely, the spiritual man, and the believer who was carnal, and not yet spiritual in the sense in which the spiritual man was. As he read the New Testament, the apostles everywhere made that distinction, and wherever they met with believers, their first and anxious inquiry was—"Have ye received the Holy Ghost?" The case of the twelve at Ephesus would be remembered; the inquiry there was—"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" or, "Having believed, have ye received the Holy Ghost?" When Peter and John came down to Samaria and found believers there, they prayed that they should receive the Holy Ghost, for it was added that he had not fallen upon any of them as yet. They had believed, but they were not yet spiritual. They had not as yet received the Holy Ghost as promised in the New Testament. They afterwards did receive it in answer to prayer.*

An opinion was prevalent that every believer at his regeneration received the promised Pentecostal baptism. He did not wish to argue that point, but he would put this question to the audience—Did any Apostle, or any evangelical minister of Christ, or any Christian, ever put this question to an acknowledged believer?—"When you believed, did you receive the pardon of sin?" They knew that such a question had never been asked by those persons. Why did the Apostle put the question, "Having believed, did ye receive the Holy Ghost?" He inferred from the putting of the question that the fact that a person had believed was no certain evidence that he had yet received the promise of the Spirit. Now, if that promise was always given, like forgiveness, in connexion with faith in Christ, in regeneration, the Apostle would have as soon asked the question, "Did ye receive forgiveness when ye believed?" as "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost?"

* We differ from the view of the speaker in this paragraph. We will state our reasons in our next.

What, then, was the difference between those three classes of individuals? Could it be apprehended? The Apostle told them that they received the Spirit of God in order that they might know the things that were freely given them of God. He would take an illustration from the Old Testament. It was recorded that, when the prophet and his servant awoke, they saw the city encircled with the hosts of the army of Syria, which had come to capture the prophet. The servant cried out, "Alas! master, what shall we do?" The prophet said, "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be against us." But the servant could not see it. Now, suppose that on that occasion three individuals were present—one answering to the natural man, and the other two respectively to the spiritual man and the man that had not yet received the Spirit. The prophet gives them a statement of the facts as he saw them, saying, "There is the host of the Syrians, but between me and them is the celestial host through which they cannot break—chariots of fire and horses of fire." They are asked successively what they think of it. The natural man would reply promptly, "I don't believe a word of it; it is all superstition. I see the host of the Syrians, and it is mere superstition to believe that there is a celestial host between us and them." The believer who is yet carnal would say—"I believe it all to be true, but I can't make it seem real to me. I see the host of the Syrians. I do not see the celestial host, but I believe they are there, because the prophet says so." The servant whose eyes had been opened by the influence of the Holy Spirit would say—"I know that the celestial hosts are there, because I see them as plainly as I see the hosts of the Syrians."

Now, let three men approach the Bible and read it. He would observe that natural men could explain the Bible as well as others. Many of the ablest commentaries on the Bible that had ever been written had been produced by unbelievers. But they did not see the glory of the Bible; they understood what it meant, but they did not see or believe in anything supernatural. The believer who had not yet received the Holy Spirit says—"I believe the Bible: I believe that Christ loves me, as is there written, and it gives me some consolation, but I cannot make it seem real to me; I believe that Christ is present with all, because the Bible says so, but I cannot make it seem real." But the individual who had been spiritually enlightened, if asked how he viewed the subject, would exclaim:—"I know that Christ is a manifested presence to me, and I believe in the glory of the Lord, and that I am changed into the same image; I not only believe that Christ loves me, but that He is personally present to me as loving me with an infinite love, and my mind is on the stretch to comprehend the breadth, and the depth, and the height of the love of Christ which passes all knowledge."

Take the case of Moses. He conversed with God at the bush, performed wondrous miracles, led the people through the Red Sea, and spoke with God face to face. But in what state was he? When he conversed with God he said, "I beseech Thee to show me thy glory." The eyes of Moses had not yet been opened as they afterwards were. For, before the glory of God can be apprehended, the Spirit of God must show us the things of Christ and of God. God said, "I will make all my goodness to pass before thee; I will lift the veil." After Moses received that revelation he was a new man; he was in a new relation to God, and had a consciousness of the love and the power and the presence of God that he had never had before.

Suppose, hearers, that you read these words of the 3rd chapter of Ephesians—"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." They could all read that; but how could the reality of it become manifested to them? Never until they received the Holy Ghost. When they did receive the Holy Ghost it would be all clear to them. The Apostle declared that where the Spirit of the Lord was, there was liberty; and what was it? That they should behold the glory of the Lord, and that they should be changed into the same image from glory to glory. They might study their Bibles and endeavour to see that glory, but until the Spirit unveiled to their minds the vision of the glory of the Lord they would never apprehend it, so that it would have a transforming power upon their life and character. How different were the conditions of the two individuals—the one who read and believed his Bible, and the one who had not only done so, but to whom the Spirit of God had also shown those things! The Saviour said, "If any man love Me, he will keep my words"; and then he promised to manifest Himself. He promised to send another Comforter who would abide with them for ever.

Dr. Mahan then alluded to a matter of personal experience. During the entire period of his ministerial life he had been a most diligent student of the Bible. Having been educated under the celebrated Biblical scholar Professor Moses Stewart, he had never allowed a day to pass without a critical and prayerful study of at least one chapter of the Scriptures in the original. But when he came to realize the promise of the Holy Spirit, and when his eyes were opened, the Bible became a new book to him. It was like the New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven; and in passages which he had critically understood there was a depth and a length and a breadth that he had never apprehended before. One part of the promise of the Spirit which every person should keep in mind was this—"I will send you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever." When the sun of righteousness rose in his own heart with healing in his wings, he asked himself, "Can this abide?" "That it may abide," he said, "is my mission to demonstrate."

As a matter of fact, for upwards of forty years he had walked in that glorious light, and understood what the prophet meant when he said—"The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

He affirmed that during those forty years his sun had not gone down nor his moon withdrawn itself. God had been his everlasting light, and He might be theirs. The days of his life were drawing to a close; and every year that he approached nearer and nearer to the world of light all was brighter and brighter. And yet how they grovelled and trifled in this world below! No; it was the privilege of the believer to mount up on wings as the eagle; to run and not be weary; to walk and not be faint. The ninth day of the present month closed the seventy-sixth year of his life, and if he were asked which of his years had been the happiest he would select that year. It was the privilege of believers to walk in the light of God. But they must honour the promise of the Spirit. Their cry must be—"Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold the glory of the Lord, and may be changed to the same image from glory to glory."

In every condition of existence he had seen this great truth proved. He prayed that the Lord might breathe on every one of them, and that they might receive the Holy Ghost. Would they then receive him? Everyone that asketh, receiveth; he that seeketh, findeth; and unto him that knocketh it shall be opened.

[We regret that continued pressure on our space compels us to hold over Mr. Somerville's address for another week.—ED.]

"LEND A HAND TO SAVE THE LOST."

We extract the following from a circular recently issued. A well-known Irish brother says this is really a good work, and the funds are exhausted:—

No. 31, Marlborough-street, Dublin, has for many years been a refuge and home for poor friendless young women who, desirous to escape from a life of sin and wretchedness, have sought shelter there. Many have thus been rescued, some of whom have been restored to their friends; others provided with suitable situations; and, we trust, not a few saved unto life eternal. It affords an immediate refuge by day or night to penitent females, without introduction or recommendation.

You can help in one or more of the following ways, viz.:—
1. Pray for this work. 2. Contribute towards it according to the measure of your ability. 3. Endeavour to enlist the sympathy of others in this work, by making it known to them. Contributions will be thankfully received by William Fry, Esq., 13, Lower Mount-street, Dublin.

THE JEWS.—The Secretary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, writes:—Recent startling events in the East are recalling attention to the Jews, and, in addition to the usual openings for Christian work amongst them, Africa, containing some hundreds of thousands, is being penetrated on every side, and Russia, with nearly three millions, after being closed for twenty years, is now thrown open to missionary effort and enterprise.

THE REV. W. H. AITKEN'S MISSION WORK.

Our readers, of course, know that Mr. Aitken was recently led, in the providence of God, to resign his charge at Liverpool,—where he had endeared himself both to his own flock and to the Christian community at large by his earnest and devoted labours,—and to give himself wholly to the office of an evangelist.

He has now been for some months labouring in various places in this capacity, with many blessed signs following. We have not hitherto been supplied with such full details of Mr. Aitken's work as we could have wished; we are the more glad, therefore, to be able, this week, to present our readers with a résumé of this evangelistic mission up to the present time.

Mr. Aitken's work as a mission preacher, pure and simple, began in Liverpool, at the church of a former curate of his own, Mr. Honeyburne, St. Philemon's. God was pleased to give him great encouragement there. There were large congregations, and many anxious souls. Mr. Honeyburne states that the work has been blessed beyond his expectations.

Victoria Hall, Liverpool, was next the scene of Mr. Aitken's labours. The interest in the meetings there increased every night, the last Sunday evening being a time of remarkable blessing. After a brief rest, Mr. Aitken proceeded on Oct. 17 to Huddersfield, where he continued for a fortnight, and where the Lord greatly owned his efforts.

The last day or two of the mission Mr. Aitken was in the vestry almost all day, seeing the anxious who flocked to him for help. On the last day he was at it, helped by another clergyman, from about nine in the morning till half-past six at night, with only about an hour's interval for dinner, and then he did not get through all. The men at Huddersfield, though they came in large numbers to the men's services, were very slow to yield, and it was only towards the end of the mission that they began to break down in large numbers. This led to the reflection how wise Mr. Moody is in staying for a longer time at each place he visits.

After another short respite from active work, Mr. Aitken held meetings at Holme-Pierrepoint and Radcliffe—two little country parishes near Nottingham, with a combined population of some 2200; a brief notice of this mission appeared in our issue of Nov. 25. The same effects appeared in this place as in the towns visited by Mr. Aitken, notwithstanding the timidity that specially characterizes country people. Large numbers came forward night after night, both men and women, to seek for help. Several of the principal farmers, &c., in the place were brought to the Lord; in several instances whole families came under the power of the truth, and some stout opponents were broken down under the Word.

Thence Mr. Aitken transferred his services to St. Mary's, Nottingham, where there was a crowded church night after night, and very large apparent results. There had been a good deal of opposition against the mission before it commenced, but this all broke down as time went on, and the blessing began to fall. The work closed at the church on Tuesday, 23rd ult., after which three services of a more general character were held in the Mechanics' Hall. Each night many hundreds—the last night, it is stated, thousands—went away unable to gain admittance, while in the meetings the work was deep and extensive. On the Thursday the address was to young men, and the body of the Hall was filled with men, the women being only admitted to the galleries. There were some 160 anxious inquirers among the men at the close of the meeting.

Mr. Aitken next paid a visit to his old home at Pendeen, in Cornwall, where we understand some memorial to his revered father is in progress, and where, as may be supposed, he received a warm welcome, and preached to crowded congregations,—not without fruit, it is believed.

This week a series of special services, with Mr. Aitken as mission preacher, are commenced in York, some of them being held in the nave of the historic York Minster. In another column will be found details of the opening services, from a special correspondent.

We understand Mr. Aitken will preach in Westminster Abbey on Sunday, the 26th inst. Will our readers offer earnest prayer that this servant of God, whose labours for the Master are so abundant, may be enabled to speak with the demonstration of the Spirit and with power, and that many souls may be brought from darkness to light.

TEN DAYS' MISSION IN YORK.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

A SPECIAL evangelistic mission, to extend over ten days, was inaugurated here on Sunday last; Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken is the mission preacher. The services, which are varied so as to reach as many classes of the community as possible, are held in various churches and halls throughout the town, and in the evenings of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday this week in the nave of York Minster. This latter event will be a notable one in the history of our English cathedrals: it is the first instance, so far as I know, in which any of them has been dedicated to services of an essentially evangelistic character.

A preparatory prayer-meeting was held on Saturday evening in the Merchants' Hall, to seek God's blessing on the Mission. It was well attended, and a very earnest spirit of prayer was manifested throughout. Mr. Aitken, the mission preacher, gave a short address, dwelling specially on the duty of the Christian people in the town with reference to the approaching services. He impressed upon them, in solemn terms, their personal responsibility in the matter, and the necessity of their being willing to put themselves into God's hands, that He might use them according to his will, whether in a way pleasing to their natural inclination or not. He quoted the case of a clergyman in London, who, on the occasion of special services in his church, would not permit the Christian people of the congregation to attend the meetings unless they brought one or more of their unconverted neighbours with them. From all that one sees and hears of evangelistic movements in the present day, this action on the part of the London vicar was not unnecessary. Mr. Aitken, in his address, also spoke of those self-righteous people in our churches who think they are beyond the need of such special efforts, and said he desired above all things that they should be reached. Another statement he made, which I trust all your readers will seriously ponder in their minds—"How many believers there are," he exclaimed, "who have never been the instrument of leading one soul into peace through faith in Christ." He entreated all such among his hearers to let this mission season be the time when they should begin to labour in real earnest for their Master.

This hour of prayer was felt to be the foretaste of much blessing on the labours of Mr. Aitken and his co-workers in this ancient city of York. As a token of the fervent and thorough-going disposition of those who have organized this mission, I may say that, having occasion to remain behind at the close of the meeting, I was approached by one of the clergymen, who asked whether I would give my services as steward at some of the meetings. I intimated that other duties would prevent me; whereupon I was asked whether I had given my heart to God. Without detailing more of the conversation, I cannot help expressing the feeling that God is certain to smile upon the unflinching zeal of those who, like my interrogator, are "instant in season and out of season" in their happy service of Him.

Mr. Aitken preached to a full congregation on Sunday morning in St. Michael's Church, which stands under the shadow of the Minster. His sermon, founded on the words, "Who may abide the day of his coming; who shall stand when He appeareth?" (Mal. iii. 2) was a heart-searching appeal to professors of religion. In a mission like this, he said, judgment should begin at the house of God. Experience proved that in movements of this kind the regular church-going people were, as a rule, first blessed, and only through them what we call "the outside classes." He demanded, in stern yet affectionate language, to know what was the foundation of their hope in view of the second coming of the Lord. He exposed the hollow sophistry and falsity of the pleas advanced by society or by individuals as to their state before God—"He is a very good sort of a man;" "I have never done any harm to anybody;" "I am doing my best," &c. He brought his audience, who listened with marked attention, to God's Word, showing them that such refuges of lies would be swept away, and that God's judgment was, "He that believeth not is condemned already" (John iii. 18). The last words he left with us, asking each one to make a personal application of them, were those of the disciples at the supper-table, "Is it I?"

The Corn Exchange was crowded on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Aitken's sermon on Acts iii. 26, "God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities," was one of marvellous power. He lifted the curtain of the past, and in a succession of pictures showed the fell power of sin in its action on the human race.

Treating sin as a disease, he showed how hopeless was the struggle on the part of any human soul to be freed from its contagion and power in his own strength. Yet this was God's idea of the Gospel—"to turn away every one of us from his iniquities."

Having shown how great was the ruin, he led on to Calvary, that we might there see how great and sufficient was the redemption. It is only as our faces are turned to the Cross that our hearts and lives can be freed from the devastating power of sin. By his burning words and irresistibly fervent appeals the great audience was visibly swayed, and melted in many cases to undisguised tears. What a wonderful power there is in sacred and Spirit-prompted eloquence to move the hearts of self-condemned sinners! I could not resist the thought that every unbelieving man, woman, and child in the company must have been swept into the Gospel net during Mr. Aitken's address. Oh, that there might have been many loving hearts and skilful hands to draw the net to land. The meeting separated in the thickly growing dusk, and though there was no after-meeting, we rely on God's unchangeable promise that his word—so powerfully and lovingly spoken as it was—shall not return unto Him void.

THE EVENING SERVICE

in St. Paul's Church, Holgate-road, was one of the most solemn and impressive I have ever attended. While the congregation were assembling, a number of hymns from the Mission Hymn-book were sung; a quiet but earnest air of expectation seemed to pervade the church.

Mr. Aitken chose for his text the words of the Lord as used in the parable of the feast—"Come, for all things are now ready." The sermon was in striking contrast to that of the afternoon—it was less rousing and fervent, more logical and searching. How the preacher seemed to read the inmost hearts of his hearers, and to lay their spiritual condition open to their own gaze.

Seizing the words of the religious Pharisee, in the passage "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the Kingdom of God," Mr. Aitken applied it to those who look upon religion as a thing in the future. People are fond of saying they are going to heaven; the clear teaching of the Word of God is that the life of heaven must be begun on earth. The idea of the religious life being "a feast," as represented by the words of the Lord, was taken up and expatiated on. The preacher showed how utterly false was the notion that true religion is a gloomy or unhappy thing, and dwelt on the joy that was diffused in the heart of all those who have taken Christ as their portion. If the Gospel was anything at all, it was "glad tidings of great joy."

The next point dwelt on as belonging to a feast was satisfaction,—and here the words of the speaker must have awakened a response in every honest heart. He appealed to the sense of want that exists in our nature, and that refuses to be satisfied with anything short of God himself, however much we may try to meet this craving with earthly pleasures and occupations. In words that could not fail to carry conviction to every soul, he compared the folly of those who feel this need, and yet do not accept the remedy, to a starving man in the midst of plenty, who will not partake of it, but seeks to support his wasting body with a handful of dust!

Another thought connected with a feast, which was pressed home with great power and effect, was that of social satisfaction. Many people think the religion of the Bible too vulgar and common a thing for their refined natures, and so they allow the demon of pride to cheat them out of salvation. But, said Mr. Aitken, if there is one way to heaven for the poor and another for the rich, God has not revealed it.

Last of all, the invitation of the text to come, and to come now, was given with surprising tenderness and loving entreaty. The solemnity of Mr. Aitken's closing sentences was, if possible, enhanced by the singing of the hymn "Almost persuaded," that used to be given by Mr. Sankey with such telling pathos at the close of Mr. Moody's fervid appeals.

A large proportion of the congregation stayed behind to the after-meeting. It seemed such a pity that all did not remain to hear Mr. Aitken's words of affectionate expostulation about "running away from Christ," as many do when solemn impressions are made by the preaching of the Word. In a homely, winning way Mr. Aitken proceeded to explain what it is to come to the feast that Christ hath prepared; the power of the Spirit was surely at work to apply all these messages of a Saviour's willingness and power to save. Yet a further space was occupied in unwearied exposition of the certainty of everlasting life to all who simply take Christ at his word; and in personal talk with the anxious ones.

In the annals of this precious season of grace we expect to find recorded that at St. Paul's Church, York, on Sunday evening, December 12, 1875, "This man and that woman were born there."

I ask the believing prayers of your readers that this Mission, auspiciously begun, may prove a great and lasting blessing to hundreds of souls in this place.

MR. VARLEY AT NORWICH.

AGAIN have we realized the good hand of our God in this city. The meetings commenced—or, rather, were resumed—on Monday last, with a large gathering for prayer.

The evening meetings have been very largely attended, despite the almost impassable condition of the streets caused by the deep melting snow. Each day there were increasing numbers, and the great St. Andrew's Hall sounded out the "Old, old story." We have large numbers of ladies helping in the service of song, and the brightness of this part of the service was very observable indeed. Each night, our brother Mr. Henry Varley preached Jesus; with much power to exalt the Lord and win souls from darkness to light did he testify the Word. Very clear enunciation of the great truth of atonement; of Christ as the unspeakable gift; and of the importance of knowing Christ as the Life, and the responsibility attaching to the children of God, were among the themes so earnestly pressed. Each night many were deeply impressed, and many are now rejoicing in the salvation of the Lord. The afternoon meetings for the study of the Bible were again full of interest, and many have been greatly helped and strengthened in the life of God.

These meetings are amongst the most important held, and the increasing attendance tells how attractive is the Word of the Lord.

The closing meeting was held on Friday night, and the large assembly was very deeply interested in the theme—"Christ our Life." Our brother left Norwich on Saturday morning, and many prayers follow him to Wolverton and district during the coming week.

CASTING THE NET.

HAVING business at the Royal Artillery Barracks, Woolwich, I took some tracts with me to distribute on the way and to the soldiers. As I approached one man, I found him speaking to another about his soul in the street, and, as far as I could tell from a short conversation, I think he was an earnest Christian.

The soldiers in the barracks, both officers and men, took my tracts readily, and when I returned to the station, having half-an-hour to wait for my train, I spoke to two soldiers on the platform. The first owned himself to be a backslider, and he told me what persecutions he had had to endure when he used to show his colours, and that if he read the tracts I gave him in the sight of his comrades they would write all over his bed, throw things at him, and persecute him in every way. I urged him, notwithstanding, to stand up for Jesus, knowing that if God were for him, who could be against him? and he promised to read my tracts before his fellow-soldiers.

The other man was a Christian, and a little brighter, and I offered to introduce him to my former friend, as brothers in the Lord, for Christian fellowship; but he would not allow me to do this.

I think if some earnest Christians whose work lies in that part would endeavour to get into the barracks, and hold some attractive Gospel services there for the soldiers, many would be prepared to receive salvation, and many backsliders would come out brightly. Thus they would all help one another by their Christian fellowship; for really to stand among so many recklessly godless men must require no ordinary faith. Though we know that strength will be given sufficient for the day to those who trust Him, I think we outside ought to do what we can to strengthen and confirm those who are exposed to so great temptation. Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Look at the promise. T. G. L.

[Woolwich is by no means devoid of such effort as our correspondent suggests; but here and everywhere much more might be done.—Ed.]

AFRICA.—Another liberal benefactor, like the first, anonymous has sent a donation of £5000 to the Church Missionary Society for the projected mission to King Mtesa's dominions; and we are glad to learn from the British Medical Journal that the medical mission in East Africa is being crowned with success. The dispensary opened in July last at Mombasa, under the superintendence of Mr. E. W. Forster, had rendered service during the first quarter to upwards of 600 patients, exclusive of those who had been treated at their own homes by the medical officers.

SOUTH AFRICAN CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

PRaise is the Lord's due in all the assemblies of his people. Praise is especially his due on behalf of this Conference, for He abundantly answered the prayers of his people in South Africa and Great Britain that He would bless it. Praise to Him alone whose work it was. Praise that in this land He gathered his people together and blessed them. Praise to Him for the way it was brought about. Praise that He opened the hearts of ministers of his Church to approve it. Praise that He moved his people in South Africa to pray for it.

Praise that He brought some of his aged servants jolting over the unmade roads of this country to take part in it. Praise that He brought two French brethren a long journey from Basutoland to attend it. Praise that He brought a Christian merchant to the town for those days, which helped it. Praise for all the arrangements from first to last. Praise for the marvellous guidance of the Holy Ghost in all the proceedings, which were entirely open. Praise for the blessings which his servants who came, received. Praise for the blessings which have flowed as the result of the Conference to the town.

Praise is, indeed, the devout and heartfelt expression of the Christians of South Africa for this Conference. It took place at King William's Town on Oct. 13, 14, and 15. It was the first general, open Conference of European Christians ever held in this land, and it was marvellously blessed. The Lord gave lovely weather. The French brethren slept six nights following in the open air on their journey hither. The roughnesses of travel were cheerfully encountered. Words cannot express the joy and brotherly love which prevailed. The Town Hall was well filled every evening during the Conference, and the stillness of the large assembly marked.

There were representatives of British, French, Dutch, German, and Kafir churches. But the native churches took no part. After the Conference the sympathy felt for the mission of the French church was such that a meeting was held to allow the two brethren to give an account of the proposed Native Basuto Church Mission towards the Zambesi. This is the first mission of the Native South African Church to distant heathen tribes of their own country. It well deserves the support of British Christians. A sum of over one hundred pounds was raised for this Mission.

These are among the blessings which have followed the Conference:—The restitution of the Bible Society; the establishment of an experienced Christian soldier as town missionary and garrison Scripture-reader; the formation of an Association of Young Men for the study of God's Word. But that for which most praise must be given is that the scattered Churches and Missions of South Africa were, in the person of a few of their representatives here, gathered together in one body round their Lord and King. Prayer was made for this Conference at Capetown, Queenstown, Pieter Maritzberg, Durban, and other towns, throughout its sessions—and thus North and South met in prayer, in one spirit, with the Church assembled at King William's Town. The subject was:—"In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." "And ye are complete in Him who is the Head of all principality and power." The third day—Rom. xii. 1. Praise, praise, praise the Lord, for He has indeed visited his people in South Africa. M.

THE JUBILEE SINGERS are at present fulfilling engagements in the North of England. On Monday week morning they sang at Chester, having in the afternoon been hospitably entertained at Hawarden Castle by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. In connexion with their visit to Lancaster they gave a private concert on Wednesday morning to the afflicted inmates of the Royal Albert Idiot Asylum for the northern counties, which is situated near that town. The poor children listened with rapt attention to the sweet and plaintive melodies of the Singers.

MISSIONARIES' HOME.—A believer, wishing to use in the Lord's service that which He has given her, has purchased the house, 1, Marina-place, Mutley, Plymouth, for the purpose of making it a home for the servants of Christ labouring at home and abroad, who, often weary in their work but not weary of it, need a season of quietness and rest. I am very desirous of getting it furnished without delay, that ere the New Year commences it may be ready to receive those for whom it is intended. I believe one lady purposes furnishing a bedroom. I have also, up to the present time, received £8 4s. towards £100 required, some of which has been sent anonymously. I wish to take this opportunity of thanking the unknown donors for their words of love and encouragement, as well as for their gifts.

EMMYLINE M. A. CHAPMAN.

A WORD IN SEASON.

MAY I say a word to my fellow-Christians through your paper? No one at all interested in service for God, and noticing the accounts given from time to time of the different agencies at work for the benefit of the poor, can have failed to observe how for a long period the universal experience has been lack of funds, straitened hands for want of means.

And perhaps, could observers look within the range of those whose work is seldom before the public, whose habit it is not to make personal appeals for help, the need and difficulties would often be found as general and pressing, especially at such seasons as the present.

It is indeed a blessed thing to trust in God, and to learn by experience his wondrous ways of sustaining and delivering. As his resources are more frequently drawn upon, our confidence only gains strength; and the deeper our acquaintance with the Heavenly Father, the more do we learn of his unchangeable faithfulness.

The rough passages and hard times which fall to the lot of the Lord's servants, are, I am sure, often fraught with rich blessing in such teachings to their own souls, and the principle exerts its influence on those under their care. This I can say from personal experience in work; and among my little circle of orphans (nearly half of whom are Christians) I have seen the faces as smiling and bright when the last loaf has been cut up for the meal—and no money in hand for the next—as when they have been sitting down to a dinner of meat, &c., and the cupboard full.

There is still another side to the picture, which induced me to take up my pen—that of Christians with much money and proportionate responsibility, yet missing blessings which would be richly reaped by scattering more widely. Doubtless there are many such, some perhaps even asking what they can do for God, active personal effort seeming out of their sphere; not seeing that unused lies the talent which the Master wills they should put out to interest in his name. This would cheer the hearts and uphold the hands of many a burdened worker, and we should less frequently hear of labour hindered from want of means.

Dear fellow-labourers, are not our most powerful weapons prayer and faith? Do we not believe that our God can speak to hearts more touchingly, and incline them to act more irresistibly than we? Let us, then, unite definitely and more earnestly in asking our gracious Master that He himself will arouse his stewards everywhere to a livelier sense of their responsibilities before Him. That He will teach them to give "of his own," because it is his work to "rescue the perishing"; and we who seek to do it are but the hands He employs to fulfil his will. Yours, in Christ's service,

Orphan Home, 1, Chatham-place,
Hackney, E. Dec. 3, 1875.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE Committee of the above Society have resolved to distribute a specially prepared tract on the occasion of the termination of the terrible Whitechapel tragedy—namely, on the 21st inst., the day fixed for the execution of the culprit. Exertions are being made to secure the co-operation of Christian young men in the provinces to distribute them at the doors of places of amusement in London, and in all our large towns and provincial cities.

Two requests are urged—first, the reader's prayers that God may bless this special effort; and second, personal service. Communications respecting the latter should be made as soon as possible to H. G. Weakley, Secretary, 8A, Red Lion-square, W.C.

THE REV. J. FORDYCE, of Simla, commenced, in November last, his evangelistic tours in the plains of India and Burmah. He asks the prayers of our readers that much blessing may result to many.

WOOLWICH.—This week an effort has been made to reach the lowest and poorest class in the most destitute district of Woolwich. Mr. J. J. Jones, of the Homerton Mission, invited 600 tramps and others to a free tea at The Baths, Nelson-street, on Tuesday evening. The night was favourable, being cold and stormy, and the hall was filled. After tea the Earl of Cavan, Mr. Robert Puton, Mr. Jones, Colonels Forster and Travers, gave brief addresses, which were listened to with rapt attention. About forty young Christian singers from St. Andrew's Church sang the Gospel in some of Sankey's hymns, evidently to the great delight of those invited, all of whom remained to the close of the meeting. It is proposed to hold a Sunday evening service at eight o'clock in the same place for these poor people during the winter. Lord Cavan will preach on Sunday next, and Mr. Jones on the Sunday following. Will your readers remember us in prayer?

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN AMERICA.

INCIDENTS OF THE BROOKLYN MEETINGS.

ALMOST from the beginning the inquiry-meetings have been filled with persons of both sexes and of all ages and conditions.

Two sisters, aged sixteen and eighteen, have lived careless and irreligious lives, caring everything for pleasure. Their father is a dissipated man, and their mother is without interest in spiritual things. Just before the Rink meetings began, God took from them their brother, a young man of twenty years. Deeply impressed, they came to the meetings and found a Saviour. They left the meeting to erect a family altar in their home, and both bid fair to become useful in Christian work.

A young man, of fine talent and good position in society, came regularly to the Rink meetings, becoming more deeply interested every evening. Finally he went to the pastor of his church and told frankly his condition and his desire to be saved. They gave themselves to prayer, and the Lord was at hand to pardon and bless. On Thursday night, November 11, he rose in the gallery, not able to restrain himself, and testified to the goodness and mercy of God in his case, and then made a most tender and eloquent appeal to the hundreds of unsaved young men in the crowded building. The effect was wonderful, and we can hardly doubt that God has a special field of usefulness for this young man.

A young couple of much intelligence, and soon to be married, remained after one of Mr. Moody's sermons, hardly knowing why they stayed. Neither of them understood the feelings of the other. When the man was spoken to, he acknowledged his anxiety for his own soul, and said, pointing to his companion, who stood near by, "I don't think she is caring much about these things." When she was approached she burst into tears and confessed, sobbing, that she had been secretly longing to be a Christian for many months. They knelt together in the church, gave themselves to God, and went away in great joy.

A man came down to Brooklyn from Newburgh to see "what was going on." He had always been indifferent, and had never had an anxious, serious thought. He had never appreciated his praying wife. The first sermon he heard touched his heart, and he was a weeping inquirer in the Simpson church on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 7. At one o'clock the next morning his soul was filled with peace, and he hastened home to tell his wife and children of the blessing he had received. Then he came back to tell us of his happy home. Said he, "I am going to be pastor of my own family now." He gives great promise of being a useful man.

A salesman in New York—a young man with a fine face—gave evidence of deep distress in one of the first meetings. He was soon at rest, however, and then his thoughts turned towards his wife, a careless young woman of the world. Night after night he rose in the young men's meeting and said, "Please pray for my wife; I cannot bear to go to heaven alone." Following up the prayers with affectionate and earnest effort, he soon obtained the desire of his heart. They are going on towards the other life with joined hands.

A watchman in the Navy Yard gave his experience to an immense congregation with great effect. He had never had the slightest concern about death and the judgment until the evening on which he came to the Rink. When he sat down to supper on the night in question, his little boy Robbie said, "Father are you going to the Rink to hear Mr. Moody preach?" "No," said the father very roughly. Said Robbie, "Father, you don't ever read the Bible to me." God's Spirit carried the message home to the proud man's heart. "Leave the table, boy," said he. Robbie went out crying bitterly, and, looking round, the father saw that the rest of the family were in tears. "I will go to the meeting," were his next words, and he came and took a manly stand, asking earnestly for prayer in his behalf. When last I saw him at the meetings Robbie was sitting by his side, and when the benediction had been pronounced, the strong man caught the boy in his arms, raised him up, and kissed him on the cheek.—New York Christian Weekly.

PROGRESS IN PHILADELPHIA.

Whatever may have been the anticipations of our Philadelphia neighbours as to the success of the Moody and Sankey meetings, more than the highest hopes have been realized. There was in some minds a little fear lest the old Freight Depot on Market-street might not be so well adapted for the uses of a large congregation as the Brooklyn Rink had proved itself. Some feared the roof was too low; others thought there was an echo; while others saw no possibility of heating such a vast audience-room. But all these fears were groundless. The building proved to be exactly the thing, though it was not built with a view to acoustic effect.

THE MORNING PRAYER-MEETINGS

have been attended with great and growing success. At first they were held in the Chambers Presbyterian Church, but this proved too small, and the great building was used for them. From three to four thousand persons attend, and the space they occupy is divided from the rest of the audience-chamber by a huge canvas.

The young men are gathering to the prayer-meetings in great numbers. The Wednesday meeting in Dr. Hatfield's church was led by Mr. Wanamaker, and was of special interest. Over twenty young men followed in successive prayer and exhortation. Many rose for prayer, and many others besought prayers for their unconverted friends.

Mr. Moody's Wednesday evening address was on five "One Things." He enumerated the following as applicable to every one in the house:—First, as an essential to working for Christ, is to be saved ourselves. Second, it is our privilege to know that we are saved. Third, the one thing needful for every Christian is to sit at the feet of Jesus. Fourth, to have one Master, and consecrate our whole life to his service. Fifth, adopt the words of Paul, and say, in the face of all opposition, "This one thing I do."

THANKSGIVING DAY

was a great day both at the morning prayer-meetings and at the Depot buildings. Mr. Moody said—"We have come to give thanks to God for his mercies to us. Of all the gifts of God let us put Christ first of all, for it is that priceless gift that makes all others so sweet." He then read some verses from Psalm cvii. "Four times in this psalm the writer uses these words: 'Oh that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodness.' Let us respond to the call here this morning. One thing that we have great reason to be thankful for is the spirit of unity which now prevails among Christian men. Years ago, if a union meeting was held, one man would get up and say, 'I am a Methodist, you know, but I have condescended to come on this union platform;' and the Baptist and Presbyterian would follow, setting forth their particular creeds. But now I don't think we have any Presbyterians, &c. During all the time we were in Brooklyn we never heard anything about sectarianism. We ought to praise the Lord for this, for He is leading his people to a greater spirit of unity, and bringing out of them this miserable spirit of sectarian animosity."

A DAY OF REST.

These overworked brethren took Saturday for refreshment and recreation, wisely making the most of the hours of that sunshiny and bracing day, and thus finding themselves in better condition for the great work of Sunday.

The work progresses in the most delightful manner. Both Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey are in excellent health and spirits, and hopeful of large results from their labours and from the labours of the faithful band of Christians labouring with them.—Christian at Work.

PORTSMOUTH GARRISON.—A correspondent of a contemporary writes:—The daily life of a British soldier is peculiarly beset with snares and temptations. A Soldiers' Home is the most effectual means to secure ultimate success in Christian effort, and garrison work without one is wasted energy. Lord Herbert saw the idea so vividly, and carried it out with such zeal in providing libraries, news-rooms, and places of amusement where men so disposed could find an asylum, that the result was simply glorious. In four years the report stated that profligacy had diminished one-fourth. Until a Home can be instituted, it is proposed to hold a series of weekly meetings in a portion of the chapel, to inaugurate which a public tea was held in that place last Thursday. About seventy of them sat down to the tea, together with about 200 civilians, the large attendance of the latter affording a striking proof of the general interest in the movement. The chair was taken by the Rev. R. W. Allen, of Aldershot, who made a few effective remarks touching Christian work in the army, and expressed his cordial sympathy with the object of the meeting. The event of the evening was a lecture delivered by the Rev. T. W. Johnstone on "Character," a sterling discourse delivered with much eloquence. It is more than probable that the Home will be shortly instituted, when it will be fitted up with everything attractive to the men, who display unusual interest in the project. Subscriptions and parcels of books, periodicals, &c., are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Rev. T. B. Harrowell, St. Petrock, Victoria-road, Southsea, Hants.

MAJOR COLE IN SUNDERLAND.

THROUGH your columns permit me to ask all readers of THE CHRISTIAN earnestly to pray God to increase and continue the work of his grace revived here this week. Major Cole came to us on Sunday from Newcastle, where he left a scene of abundant blessing for one offering little inducement comparatively but the appeal of united voices crying in the old Macedonian's words, "Come over and help us."

The work in Newcastle had been great, so far as crowding the Town Hall within and without could testify to the magnitude of the movement. But, without any promise of the same thronging of the people to hear the Word, the Lord has been better to us than our most believing hopes.

On Sunday night last our Victoria Hall—the largest in the town—was well filled with an audience, for the most part Christian, of upwards of 2500. Major Cole told the old, old story of the Prodigal in a way that rendered it strikingly new, and as the sweet songs were being sung by himself, his wife, and daughter, the hearts of all were bowed under the mighty hand of God; and the week has since brought to light many a strange case of longing hearts, if not of "anxious" souls, who have been forsaking the good Father, God, and telling over again the story of the Prodigal in their own sad experience. Thank God, some of them have finished the story, and have said, "I will arise and go to my Father."

The week-night services have been confined to two chapels. In these have been large gatherings, the after-meetings improving in numbers as the services went on. The streets have been swept of their idlers in each case, and when the service was over, not only have the vestries become the scene of inquiry, but those who could not or would not stay have been accompanied to their homes by earnest co-workers, and some unusually interesting results have followed such intercourse. Young men have been especially blessed by the Major's telling personal incidents after the parable of the Prodigal Son. Memories of former days and happier childhood's hours have been awakened; hard hearts have been broken; strong men have wept like babes; ministers and evangelists, pastors and teachers, have been refreshed; souls are being saved, the churches blessed, and God glorified.

Brethren, praise with us, and pray for us. The work is great, and these servants of Christ, endearing themselves to all as they do, are too frail for its demands. The Lord bless them body and soul, and own their labours more and more, is the earnest prayer of all who hear them. J. STUART.

WINTER WORK IN GOLDEN-LANE.—A contemporary says:—On Wednesday week the seasonable work of feeding 200 children of the Ragged-school, and supplying soup to the poor, was commenced at the Costermongers' Christian Mission. Mr. W. J. Orsman, the hon. superintendent, states that he intends shortly, if funds permit, to supply coals in small quantities to the sick and aged at half-price. He will also, on Christmas-day, take away the rags from 100 destitute children, and substitute warm clothing. Afterwards a party of 300 deserving and needy persons will be supplied with a dinner and tea in the Mission House. To carry on these special efforts, Mr. Orsman needs timely help.

NEWARK.—A series of special services, conducted by the Rev. T. B. Stephenson, of London, commenced in the Barnby-gate Wesleyan Chapel on Friday evening, the 26th ult. On Saturday afternoon Mr. Stephenson held a children's meeting, which was well attended, and was conducted in a very quiet and interesting manner, the children taking part in reading several portions of Scripture. At the service on Sunday morning there was a large congregation, and at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon a special service for working-men and working-women was held in the North End Chapel. Although the notice had been very short, the place was well filled, a large proportion consisting of the class for whom the service was specially intended. Mr. Stephenson delivered a touching address, couched in the plainest language, and was listened to with remarkable attention. Between five and six o'clock a number of the friends assembled near the Corn Exchange for the purpose of attracting outsiders, and proceeded to the chapel singing. The congregation was one of the largest ever seen in the chapel, and the service was characterized by great earnestness and devotion. The service was gradually merged into a prayer-meeting, nearly every individual remaining for about half-an-hour, when an opportunity was offered for those who wished to retire to do so. The prayer-meeting was continued for some time longer, and an encouraging number of persons of both sexes went voluntarily into the inquiry-rooms. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the mission was continued, many persons coming each evening from the courts and yards of the town, specially invited by a singing band, who visited them daily. The noon prayer-meeting and daily Bible-reading very much aided the success of the mission.—Methodist Recorder.

"YE ARE MY FRIENDS."

FRIENDS of Jesus! who are they?
Who can such a title bear?
Look around his Throne, and say—
Are the friends of Jesus there?

Angels and Archangels high,
As with veiling wings they bend,
"Holy, holy, holy," cry;
Can they boast the name of friend?

No, not friends, but servants they,
Servants of the Lord Most High;
And to serve Him, night and day,
At his word they wait, they fly.

Noble service! glorious, free,
Thus round Him to stand and wait:
Oh! shall ever such as we Know the bliss of that estate?

Yes, e'en we, his servants here,
Whom He ransomed for his own,
Shall, at length, be brought as near,
And shall serve before his Throne.

Who, then, are our Master's friends?
Ah! well may we stand amazed,
When we see how low He bends,
That to Him we might be raised.

Not in angel-form He came,
But our nature He did wear;
Bore the Cross, despised the shame,
That we might his glory share.

Yes, 'tis us He calls his friends,
If we do his holy will;
And his friendship never ends,—
Having loved, He loveth still.

May that wondrous name of love
On our hearts be written now;
Then shall his own hand above
Write the "new name" on our brow.

CANADA: MORE GOOD TIDINGS.

MRS. MERRY writes from a small back place where blessing is flowing, which we trust in answer to prayer is but a type of much good work in other places in Canada, whither our little singing rescued children have gone. Brethren, plead for the whole Dominion.

"Moorfields, Nov. 10.

"A cry from this place has come for help, and the Word has been with power. The chapel has been crowded with old and young, rich and poor, saved and unsaved. My husband and a young man, McLeish, gave the Gospel message, full, clear, and with no uncertain sound.

"I felt led at the close to ask who were going now to be on the Lord's side, when aged heads arose with tear-streaked eyes, young men with crimsoned cheeks, young women with the worldly plumes of feathers on, boys and girls with flash-shining faces, and, praise our God, some of our own dear rescued children. Thus, to his praise, some sixty to seventy rose to join in singing a song of praise to Jesus, who had washed them in his own blood.

"Afterwards we arranged a meeting for women. The Lord gave a special message, and He shall have all the praise. May Jesus get much glory to Himself in saving many amid us.

"The whole neighbourhood is awakened; buggies, sleighs—all full—coming ten and twelve miles in the midst of the first snowstorm.

"We have thus begun a glorious winter, and expect still greater things in answer to prayer, according to the Word of our God, who 'is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.'

"We are very short of books and tracts; the demand is great on every side. All going on well at the little home at Galt. It is very blessed to see not a seed of kindness on our children is lost. "A. M."

DR. WILSON, the great Free Church missionary, passed away peacefully to his rest on Friday week, dying at Bombay, the scene of his devoted and successful life-work.

PRAYER-MEETINGS FOR LONDON BANKS

On Thursday last a meeting of gentlemen engaged in the principal London banks was held at the Lecture Hall, 165, Aldersgate-street, to inaugurate a series of prayer-meetings which it is proposed to hold monthly. About 100 were present, R. C. L. Bevan, Esq. (of the firm of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co.) presiding, and being supported by several gentlemen occupying leading positions in private and joint-stock banks.

After the meeting had been opened by prayer and praise, the couvener of the meeting (Mr. Henry Adams) stated that 250 gentlemen, including several principals, directors, and managers, representing fifty-seven London banks, were favourable to the movement, although at present it could only be said to be in its infancy. As a token of the work that was even now being done, it was mentioned that at the Union Bank of London a monthly one-hour prayer-meeting was commenced in May last, with an attendance of seven, which has increased to thirty, and that at Messrs. Glyn and Co.'s a similar meeting had been started in November, with an attendance of twenty-one.

At the close of the meeting the following gentlemen were chosen as an executive committee, with power to add to their number, viz.:—Messrs. G. R. Davy (Messrs. Barclay and Co.), C. Ford (City Bank), M. Kenchington (Messrs. Glyn and Co.), Kirton (London and County Bank), C. J. Whelen (Manager, National Bank, Notting-hill), and Henry Adams (Union Bank of London, 2, Princes-street, E.C.), the latter also accepting the office of hon. secretary.

It was decided that future meetings be held at the Lecture Hall, 165, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on the third Friday in every month at 6.15 p.m., the duration of the meetings not to exceed one hour, which will be devoted to prayer, praise, and a short address. Christians are earnestly invited to co-operate in extending this movement, and the Committee will be glad to hear, through their secretary, from any gentlemen interested in the work who have not yet identified themselves with it.

CHRISTIAN EFFORT IN FLORENCE.

I TAKE the liberty of bringing to your notice, and that of the numerous readers of your publication, a very promising institution which has been established here, and which seems to me deserving of every support and encouragement. It is "The Protestant Industrial Home for Boys," and the object of this institution is to receive the boys of poor parents, and bring them up in the faith of the Saviour, affording them, at the same time, instruction in the necessary elements of education, by teaching them a useful trade, whereby they may subsequently be able to earn an honest livelihood. The institution is entirely supported by voluntary contributions; donations in money, food, or clothing, are thankfully received at the establishment—44, Via del Ponte alle Mosse, Porta Prato, or by the Honorary Secretary and Treasurer, Dr. Joseph Commandi, 26, Viale Principe Amedeo, Florence.

Having personally visited this interesting establishment—one of the first, if not the first of its kind in Italy—I can bear testimony to its value, and the excellent manner in which it is conducted. The boys, about twenty in number, were busily employed, principally in carpentering, wood-carving, shoe-making, &c., and their work, superintended by trained workmen, was very creditable, while their religious and general instruction was not neglected. The boys seemed well clothed, healthy, and happy.

The committee—of which Mr. Alfred Hall is president, and Rev. J. MacDougall, of the Free Church of Scotland, one of the members—from the success attending this good work, have determined to extend their operations, and have fixed on a larger and more commodious building, outside the "Porta alla Croce." They are, however, sadly in want of funds, and therefore, appeal to the liberality of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for help in this work. I sincerely trust they will give this valuable institution their support and encouragement.

EDWIN MAUDE, Lieut.-Colonel.

Florence.

Mr. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM writes from Brooklyn:—"I shall (n.v.) sail from New York for England on Dec. 4; the Spain sails on that date. In some respects the work is very wonderful, but we anticipate greater things yet. I trust many will pray for us, that during our visit to England we may be blessed and be a blessing."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ELSIE'S SANTA CLAUS. By JOANNA H. MATTHEWS. 3s. 6d. Shaw.—A story of Christmas in America, showing how this festive season draws families together in closer friendship, and affords an opportunity of helping each other through difficulties. A nice Christmas present.

FROM OUT THE DEEPS. A Story of Cornish Life. By an OLD CORNISH BOY. 5s. Haughton.—Cornwall is the weirdest and most legendary county in all England; the most hoary, and, in many respects, the most interesting. This is an admirable story, which we heartily commend for Christmas and New Year's presents, school prizes, &c.

THE BIBLICAL MUSEUM. By JAMES COMPER GRAY. Old Testament. Part I. 3d. Stock.—We are glad to see that Mr. Gray, having completed in four volumes his useful commentary on the New Testament, is beginning one upon the Old. We know no other publication which gives so much and such varied information for the same small cost.

LITTLE ORANGES; OR, THE FRIEND OF THE FRIENDLESS. By JENNIE HARRISON. Shaw.—We should like to know the opinion of some of our youthful acquaintances concerning this pretty and interesting story. Our own verdict is that it would be a most seasonable gift-book for boys and girls, rich and poor. It will teach the one to show kindness when they have opportunity, and the other to persevere in the paths of rectitude in spite of trials and discouragements.

SOCIAL LIFE OF THE CHINESE. A Daguerreotype of Daily Life in China. By Rev. JUSTUS DOOLITTLE. Edited and revised by Rev. PAXTON HOOD.—This volume of over 600 pages, with 150 illustrations, was published at 8s. 6d. in 1868; the unsold portion of the edition has been purchased by Rev. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, 6, Pyrland-road, Newington-green, N., from whom only it can be obtained, price 5s., or by post 5s. 6d. We have not had time to read it, but the facts that the author was for fourteen years a missionary in China, and that the book is so emphatically recommended by Mr. Hudson Taylor, are sufficient evidence of its value.

ST. BOTOLPH'S; OR, SUNDAYS LONG AGO. By AN OLD SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER. Elliot Stock.—This "little sketch," as the author modestly terms it, appears to us to be a noteworthy illustration of the decided gain there is, to the ordinary reader, in stating important truths in a concrete, rather than an abstract form. It purports to be but the outlined autobiography of the author, with glimpses of a few incidental characters, and yet, in its hundred pages or so, we think a deeper insight into the real everyday history of an average human soul may be gained than from much of the philosophy, and, we are inclined to add, of the theology, of the schools. We warmly commend it to the notice of all thoughtful City young men, and young women too, especially those who are engaged in Sunday-school work. We venture to predict that if they sit down to its perusal it will not be laid aside until the last page is reached. Moreover, they cannot fail to be highly profited by the exercise. We should like to add that this life-story is unlike much of our modern literature: it is better than it looks. Such a skilful and truthful picture deserves a more attractive setting.

A PROPHETICAL CATECHISM OF THE CHURCH OF ROME: Showing its Rise, Progress, and Final Destruction, as Foretold in Holy Scripture. By the Rev. ISAAC ASHE. S. W. Partridge.—A valuable little sixpenny tract, containing much that ought to be known about the anti-Christian character of the Church of Rome as portrayed in the Scriptures. The real evils of this apostate Church are too little exposed, and so its seductions too often prevail over minds that are unprepared, because ignorant of what the Bible teaches as to its true character. This Catechism is for the most part well written. We demur, however, strongly to the first question and answer, or, rather, to the Scripture quoted in support of the answer. "The whole body of baptized Christians" may be a fair answer to the question—"What is the visible Catholic Church?" but this is a very different body from that spoken of in the text there quoted—"By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. xii. 13). This latter is not the visible Catholic Church at all, but the true living and spiritual Church. We cannot believe that Mr. Ashe holds baptismal regeneration, and yet he has by this unfortunate mistake (for such we deem it) made it appear that he himself holds one of the worst errors of the Church, the evils of which he so ably exposes.

SEED AND FRUIT.—The Mayor of Philadelphia, it is said, asserts that he could rid the gaol of two-thirds of the juvenile criminals in the next year, if he could banish certain plays from the boards of the variety theatres, and put certain books out of print.

WELLINGBOROUGH.—We have had a blessed revival in this town, and the good work is still going on. We had, from July 18 to Nov. 6, 1875, 115 anxious souls. Since then the Mission-hall has been crowded; sometimes on Sunday evenings a hundred rough lads are unable to gain admittance. Among the professed converts have been a number of remarkable cases.

WM. CORBRIDGE.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

SPECIAL SERVICES have been held at Bury and Littleborough during the past week, at which many have been induced to give their hearts to God.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—Under the auspices of the Society of Friends, a missionary party, headed by Mr. Eli Jones, has been despatched to Beyrout to labour among the Druses of Syria. Mr. Stanley Pomfret, who enjoys a considerable reputation as a Quaker preacher, has also left for the United States on an evangelizing tour.

DRUNKENNESS AND CRIME.—Mr. Justice Denman, in charging the grand jury at the Durham Assizes yesterday, severely commented upon the crimes of violence which characterized this district, which he found in almost every case were traceable to drink. Every judge who had practised at the bar or sat upon the bench would corroborate him when he said that if drunkenness could be effaced from the earth five-sixths of these crimes would disappear.

LITTLEBOROUGH.—In connexion with recent special services here, a band of workers was organized and the town and neighbourhood were most thoroughly visited. The noonday prayer-meetings were largely attended, and proved to be a source of great spiritual power. A singing band was formed, and night after night we marched through the streets singing hymns and inviting the people to the house of God. The first week several persons came forward to the inquiry-room, but during the second, third, and fourth weeks the Divine power was increasingly manifest, and young and aged were led to a saving knowledge of the truth. At the close of one month's services a tea-meeting was held to welcome the new converts.

THE AMERICAN WOMEN'S CRUSADE.—The second annual convention of the Women's Temperance Union met at St. Paul's Methodist Church in Cincinnati, on Wednesday morning, Nov. 17. The President, Mrs. Wittenmeyer, of Philadelphia, in her annual address, stated that, during the past year, forty-five State conventions were held, and a large number of documents read. She suggested that a medical commission should be appointed to investigate and report on the use of liquors. Miss Francis E. Willard, corresponding secretary, reported twenty-three State auxiliaries organized, and a great advancement in every department of the work. Some 200 delegates, representing nineteen States, were present at the Convention.

TIPTON.—We have been favoured, says a correspondent of the Watchman, with a week of services here which deserve a record. Our people were prepared, and entered upon the work with good spirit. By arrangement the whole town was visited, and tracts, handbills, and an invitation to the services were left at every house; a band of singers, headed by the ministers, also paraded several streets previous to the services. The appointment of the mission preachers was a happy one—the chairman of the district, with Messrs. Pyle and Harper, whose labours were graciously owned of God. The congregations were large, and many persons of various ages found their way into the vestries as anxious inquirers, a good number of whom entered into the liberty of God's children. At Roseville there had previously been a series of gatherings, following a Sabbath's services by Mr. Isaac Marsden, resulting in several conversions and additions to the church. Arrangements are now made for a week at Bloomfield.

TEMPERANCE AND MISSION WORK.—The Brighton Times gives an account of the labours of Mr. J. J. Jones, one of the agents of the Brighton Town Mission, who holds a meeting nearly every night at the Carlton Hill Mission Hall:—"The week of labour finishes with a prayer and temperance meeting every Saturday night. Drunkards, which are daily and hourly manufactured all over the neighbourhood, may here always secure the sympathy and prayers of many who were once, like themselves, the slaves of the quart pot. A pledge-book is always kept on hand, so that at all times that accommodation is afforded to all who like to avail themselves of it. . . . About thirty-five reclaimed drunkards are kept banded together for aggressive work among their fellow-workmen, and also to sustain and cheer one another in the paths of sobriety and virtue. The missionary finds his most valued helpers amongst these abstaining friends."

SABBATH OBSERVANCE IN HONG-KONG.—The Chinese correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"The Sabbatarian question has lately been agitated in Hong-Kong. Many residents object to the Government employment of Chinese upon public works on Sunday. Miscellaneous noises make the day unendurable in Hong-Kong. Unpleasant sounds become all the more annoying because of the partial quiet, and all who do not live some distance above the town are compelled to hear the sounds of stone-cutting or house-building, mingled with a variety of street cries. Hong-Kong enjoys the unenviable notoriety of being the only port in China in which ships are regularly unloaded and houses built on a Sunday. In Shanghai the landing and shipping of goods ceases on Sunday; but in this Christian colony, with a Christian Government, business goes on at the wharves apparently as usual. It is to be hoped that something will be done soon, if not to honour the observance of the Sabbath, at least to allow the European residents in the town the quiet they may desire and expect in a Christian settlement."

Mr. PHILIP PHILLIPS, the Singing Pilgrim, has been holding his services of sacred song at Galle, Colombo, and other places in Ceylon.

SICK AND WOUNDED.—Sanctioned by its patroness, the Empress of Russia, the Society for the Relief of Sick and Wounded Soldiers is about to send representatives to Cetinje with relief for Bosnian and Herzegovinian families suffering by the insurrection. The Society is making great preparations for the care of the sick and wounded.

THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY has issued an urgent appeal to all those who are interested in its welfare, indeed to all Christian people, for such a supply of funds as will enable them to carry out the purposes for which the Society has been instituted, their present income being totally inadequate. The secretary is Rev. P. Barker, 2, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

TEMPERANCE TEACHING IN SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—Dr. Cuyler has recently directed the attention of Sunday-school teachers to the subject of temperance as a vital part of Christian work. To assist teachers in this direction, the Temperance Worker, a monthly magazine, edited by the Rev. F. Wagstaff, will next year contain temperance notes on the Scripture lessons issued by the Sunday School Union.

THE ORDINANCE SURVEY OF PALESTINE.—Lieutenant Conder, R.E., the head of the Ordinance Survey of Palestine, delivered a lecture at Guildford on Friday evening, under the auspices of the Guildford Institute. He said that the party under his command had in four years surveyed four-fifths of the 6000 square miles which constitute Palestine proper between Dan and Beersheba. One main feature of the work had been the identification of the local Arabic names still lingering on the ground with the Hebrew names to be found in the Bible. So thoroughly had this been effected, that it is probable that by the completion of the survey there will hardly be a place mentioned in the Bible which is not determined on the map. Thus the Scripture narrative will be so illustrated by a correct knowledge of the localities as to have all the life of contemporary record.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY LECTURES.—A course of lectures, says the Record, is now being delivered in the parish of Bermondsey, in connexion with the Protestant Reformation Society. The Rev. Mr. Clements lectured on the last two occasions on "Transubstantiation and Papal Assumption." The chair was taken by the Rev. W. Allan, Vicar of St. James's, Bermondsey. The next lecture will be given by the Rev. W. L. Bell, Vicar of Christ Church, Bermondsey, on "The Reformation in Germany." A correspondent says:—"The lecture-room is close to the Ritualistic centre of St. Augustine's Mission, where the Bishop is still supporting the Rev. Malcolm MacColl, in opposition to the legal notice of dismissal which the vicar of the parish gave to him as soon as he had been instituted."

A SUNDAY IN HAYTI.—A Baptist missionary, transferred from Jamaica to Jacmel, in Hayti, gives a vivid picture of his first Sunday in this ever-agitated Republic. During the morning the service was disturbed by the drill of the National Guard in front of the church. In the afternoon, just before the hour of preaching, news came from Port-au-Prince of an attempted insurrection, and a list of suspected persons was delivered to the authorities at Jacmel. The community was greatly terrified, and the news was whispered around in an undertone. Every now and then the scream of a wife would be heard as her husband was arrested and fettered at her side. Suspected persons fled to the consuls, to the ships, or to the mountains. Soldiers came into the church on their errand of search. The troops, including many members of the Baptist congregation, were mustered and bivouacked in the streets for the night. Cannon were planted to sweep the city; old residents, accustomed to sieges, bought up barrels of provisions. Next day news came from the capital that the Government had triumphed, and the chief insurgents had been killed or were in prison. At once the manifestations of alarm were exchanged for the most extravagant tokens of joy.—Freeman.

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE TO HOSPITAL PATIENTS.—Some years ago a plan was suggested in Woman's Work for brightening up the Christmas of patients in hospital and infirmary wards by a greeting of love and of good-tidings, bringing "peace on earth" even to the most sorrowful. In an envelope bearing the inscription "A Christmas letter for you," a tract, suitable for the purpose, is enclosed, together with some bright Christmas-card or leaflet, and the kindly missive is secretly deposited by the night-nurse on each pillow before the dawn of Christmas-day. This has been found to give great delight, and, in some instances, has been of lasting usefulness. In one ward the patients said, "The fairies have been here!" in another, "The angels have been here!" Will those of your readers who have the opportunity, carry out this plan, not only on a large scale, but also among the sick and poor in districts and parishes, adding the supplication that on His own message of love so real a blessing may descend that it may be said "The Christ of Bethlehem has been here!" Suitable envelopes are sold at 1s. a hundred by T. Farncombe, Kemp Town, Brighton. The following tracts are very suitable:—"A Christmas Letter to the Sick and Suffering," Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row; "A Letter for you," ditto; "The Comforter," ditto; "A Christmas Message," 1s. per 100, T. Farncombe (sold for the purpose); Christmas leaflets (sold by ditto).

DAILY TEXTS.

"THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT, WHICH IS THE WORD OF GOD."
—EPHES. VI. 17.

Thurs., Dec. 16.—"The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword." "Jesus said unto them, 'He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.' And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even to the last." "Where the word of a king is, there is power."—Heb. iv. 12; John viii. 7, 9; Eccles. viii. 4.

Fri., 17.—"His hand clave unto the sword, and the Lord wrought a great victory that day, and the people returned after him only to spoil." "All my words that I shall speak unto thee, receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears." "By the word of thy lips have I kept me from the paths of the destroyer."—2 Sam. xxiii. 10; Ezek. iii. 10; Ps. xvii. 4.

Sat., 18.—"Then saith Jesus unto him, 'Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve.' Then the devil leaveth Him; and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him." "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."—Matt. iv. 10, 11; Ps. cxix. 11.

Sun., 19.—"Let the saints be joyful in glory; let them sing aloud upon their beds; let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand." "Thy bow was made quite naked, even thy Word."—Ps. cxlix. 5, 6; Hab. iii. 9.

Mon., 20.—"For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded." "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, . . . and thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes." "A man hath joy by the answer of his mouth, and a word spoken in due season, how good is it!"—Neh. iv. 18; Deut. vi. 8, 9; Prov. xv. 23.

Tues., 21.—"Eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword." "Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly." "I will make my words in thy mouth fire."—2 Sam. xxi. 9; Micah ii. 7; Jer. v. 14.

Wed., 22.—"Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" "His word was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay."—Jer. xxiii. 29; xx. 9.

"THOU HAST MAGNIFIED THY WORD ABOVE ALL THY NAME."
—Ps. cxxxviii. 2.

TO OUR READERS.—The Publishers will be happy to send back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN for distribution on application giving the name and address of applicant. Carriage will be paid if requested.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—We must remind our friends that we cannot take any notice of anonymous requests or communications. Also that contributions ought to be written on one side of the paper only.

NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. Gordon Forlong writes:—"Would you kindly, through the columns of your valuable paper, allow me to ask any colonists in New Zealand for information in the following circumstances:—It is laid on my mind that the time has come to arrange for my large family, the boys especially, in one of the colonies; and I think it will be incumbent upon me to go to New Zealand, probably next year (1876). Where should I settle for the time being with a view to preaching and exposition, and with a view also to farming? I should prefer a locality not too thinly populated. Address—1, West Hill-road, Brighton."

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For prayer answered regarding a dear son.—For the conversion of a sister, prayed for in THE CHRISTIAN of Sept. 23; also continued prayer for the conversion of the others—namely, father, mother, brother, and his wife.

PRAYER.—For one who hopes to be ordained, on Sunday Dec. 19, to a curacy at St. Pancras, W. C.—That my visit home at Christmas may be blessed to the unconverted of my family.—For a widow and her six children.—For a son just entering on married life.—That opposition which has arisen in the way of instructing an ignorant lad may be removed.—For my afternoon Sunday class.—For a young widow with three children wholly unprovided for.—For a young mother who has ceased to pray and to believe in God's Word.—For my two brothers.—For blessing on a prayer-meeting in an Irish village.—For a medical student who was converted last spring, but has fallen away.—For two cottage meetings.

PLACES.—For the Home Mission Station, Moorlinch, on King's Sedgmoor, Somerset.—For an effort to carry on the Lord's work in a town in Kerry, where there are many adversaries.—For special united evangelistic services at Tunbridge Wells from Dec. 13 to 18.—For a revival of the Lord's work in Forfar.—For a revival of God's work at Clayton, Manchester.—For special services at Burton-in-Lonsdale.—For a week of services at Taunton, by Mr. Wheeler, of the Evangelization Society.—For a special work going on now in Houslow among the poorer classes and among the soldiers.—For Sedgley, Staffordshire.

CONVERSIONS.—For my wife.—For my mother, with whom the Holy Spirit seems striving.—For a young sailor now on a voyage to India.—For three brothers for whom much prayer has been offered.—For a husband and wife and two sons.—For a father and mother.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.—A meeting was held on Friday evening, the 10th inst., at the Weigh House School-room, Fish-street-hill, for the purpose of forming a Christian Association in connexion with the London Stock Exchange. The meeting, which was presided over by Thomas A. Lawford, Esq., was well attended, and all the resolutions proposed were heartily and unanimously carried. The next meeting, for the election of officers and committee, will be held at the same place on Friday next, the 17th inst., at 6.30.

MONMOUTH.—The Lord has indeed been doing great things for us, whereof we are glad. The evangelistic meetings have been held nightly for now ten weeks, and still the blessing is going on. Mr. Thomas Wales, and Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelization Society, have been the preachers, and left us three weeks since. The whole town is permeated, as it were, with Gospel truth received at the Town Hall during those services. In house after house, among some of the very worst of the people, we find either souls saved or under impression.

M. J. HOWARD.

THE BOYS' HOME, DEPTFORD.

SPECIAL APPEAL to all who have loving hearts for poor STREET-ARAB BOYS.

DEAR FRIENDS,—

I have lately been enabled to more than double the number of Boys in our Home. Most of these Lads have been rescued by myself from the streets and alleys of our great city at night and early morning.

Our Home is so crowded that in many cases two Boys are sleeping in one small bed, and I cannot gather any more in till I have the means of fitting up some more beds.

Will you help me in my efforts to have 80 Boys sheltered in our happy Home by Christmas, either by contributing "as God hath prospered," or by applying for a collecting card to obtain donations from your friends?

Earnestly commending this precious work of faith and labour of love to your Christian sympathy,

I am, dear friends,

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. FEGAN, Hon. Director,
The Boys' Home,

112 and 114, High-street, Deptford.

Remittances may be made by P.O.O. made payable at G.P.O., or by cheque crossed London and County Bank; and communications relating to all branches of the work should be addressed to J. W. C. FEGAN, the Boys' Home, 112 & 114, High-street, Deptford, S.E.

THE BOYS' HOME, DEPTFORD.

INDUSTRY.

Shoemaking.—Boots and Shoes of every description, combining first-class workmanship and the best materials, are manufactured, and Repairs are neatly executed at a fair trade profit. The Master Shoemaker will call at any address in London to receive instructions at any time that may be appointed.

Firewood.—Those who sympathize with our efforts to rescue friendless and neglected lads are especially urged to do all they can to promote our trade in this direction. Full-sized bundles are delivered at the houses of friends within two miles at the rate of 4s. for 104 bundles; but friends would materially help the Institution by inducing others to join them in ordering a supply at the same time, so as, if possible, to make up a truck-load of 800 bundles, which can be delivered free within four miles.

Orders relating either to Shoemaking or Firewood may be sent on a post-card, addressed as below.

PUBLICATIONS.

Photographs.—Now ready, price 2s. 6d., post free 2s. 8d., Series I.—containing 12 neatly mounted Photographs, truthfully depicting the actual past and present condition of some of our boys, and illustrating in a most striking manner the nature and result of our labours amongst poor street lads.

Friends intending to collect in aid of the Home are especially urged to obtain these Photographs, as they will be found most effective in conveying to others an idea of the work, and in enlisting their sympathy in its behalf.

Leaflets.—In the press, price 6d., post free 7d., Series I.—containing in a neat form, very suitable for distribution, Short Narratives of many interesting Incidents connected with the work in the Home.

Orders for Photographs and Leaflets should be accompanied by a remittance by P.O.O. payable at G.P.O., or by cheque, crossed London and County Bank, and should be addressed as below.

VISITORS.

The Home is situated just opposite Deptford Station of the South-Eastern Railway, and Visitors are welcomed at any time, but arrangements have been made to devote Friday in each week to meet friends anxious for a personal explanation of the work.

COLLECTIONS.

Friends wishing to assist us by collecting can obtain handsome boxes (price 1s.), or (gratis) neat collecting cards with miniature photograph and brief statement, also copies of the leaflet on "Ten Ways of Helping the Home," by applying to J. W. C. FEGAN, the Boys' Home, 112 and 114, High-street, Deptford.

The Christian.

THE OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT.

AN ADDRESS BY R. C. MORGAN.

WE are all agreed that the special blessing of this dispensation is the Holy Spirit, given in a measure more abundant than was possible under the Law. And we all agree that we know very little about the power of that Spirit, compared to what we might expect, and what we might be expected, to know.

There is a view to which much prominence is now being given, which I think to be very erroneous, and therefore very hurtful. It was expressed in the words of its best known advocate, Dr. Mahan, at the Dublin Convention, as reported in last week's CHRISTIAN. In discussing it, I desire to do so with the love due to a brother in Christ, and with the respect due to the hoary head:—

"On the surface of what he had read [1 Cor. ii. 12, to iii. 3], the fact was apparent that three distinct classes of individuals were referred to—namely, the natural man, who depended on his own reason, and consequently rejected the idea of inspiration or anything of the Spirit of God; the spiritual man; and the believer who was yet not spiritual but carnal. Of these classes two were Christians—namely, the spiritual man, and the believer who was carnal, and not yet spiritual in the sense in which the spiritual man was. As he read the New Testament, the apostles everywhere made that distinction, and wherever they met with believers, their first and anxious inquiry was—'Have ye received the Holy Ghost?' The case of the twelve at Ephesus would be remembered; the inquiry there was—'Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?' or, 'Having believed, have ye received the Holy Ghost?' When Peter and John came down to Samaria and found believers there, they prayed that they should receive the Holy Ghost, for it was added that he had not fallen upon any of them as yet. They had believed, but they were not yet spiritual. They had not as yet received the Holy Ghost as promised in the New Testament. They afterwards did receive it in answer to prayer.

"An opinion was prevalent that every believer at his regeneration received the promised Pentecostal baptism. He did not wish to argue that point, but he would put this question to the audience—Did any Apostle, or any evangelical minister of Christ, or any Christian, ever put this question to an acknowledged believer?—'When you believed, did you receive the pardon of sin?' They knew that such a question had never been asked by those persons. Why did the Apostle put the question, 'Having believed, did ye receive the Holy Ghost?' He inferred from the putting of the question that the fact that a person had believed was no certain evidence that he had yet received the promise of the Spirit."

My position, on the contrary, is this, that the outpouring of the Holy Ghost is matter of history, just as much as the crucifying of Christ is matter of history—that is to say, that the one is an accomplished fact equally with the other. Let me refer to Leviticus xxiii., where God marks out four red-letter days, so to speak, in the history of his people, and which He calls the Feasts of the Lord.

The first is the Passover, which pointed to the death of Christ. The second is the waving of the sheaf of first-fruits—the Resurrection of Christ. The third is the feast of weeks—Pentecost—the outpouring of the Spirit. And the fourth the Feast of Tabernacles, which points to something yet in the future, when the multitude which no man can number shall wave their palms, and keep the Feast of Tabernacles, and the Lord God shall be the Shepherd over them.

Now observe that the time of the giving of the Holy Ghost is fixed by this 23rd chapter of Leviticus. "Seven Sabbaths shall be complete from the waving of the sheaf of first-fruits." Thus the outpouring of the Holy Ghost is historically and chronologically fixed with reference to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. I refer to this passage for the purpose of establishing that the outpouring of the Holy Ghost is historically an accomplished fact.

The Holy Spirit could not have been given until certain things had happened. He could not have been poured out in fulfilment of the prophecies of Isaiah and Joel, until Jesus, the second Adam, our Substitute and Surety, had been glorified (John vii. 39). Therefore I think there is great significance in Psalm lxxviii. 18, where it says that He who has gone up on high, and led captivity captive, has "received gifts for men," or, as it is in the margin, "in the man." Man's sin had grieved the Spirit—had separated between us and God; but man in Christ has made atonement for sin, and consequent reconciliation between us and God. And Christ has received gifts even for the rebellious.

The prophecies of Isaiah (xxxii. 15; xlv. 3) and Joel (ii. 28, 29) were fulfilled, as we all understand, at the day of Pentecost—the Holy Spirit was poured out (Acts ii. 17). "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel," &c. But the teaching before us is, that, subsequent to and distinct from believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit is given; and it is my aim to show that in the Acts of the Apostles and in the Epistles the Scripture unites the receiving of the Holy Ghost with believing in the Lord Jesus Christ. Scripture says nothing about successive and repeated baptisms of the Holy Ghost, but the outpouring of the Spirit is as distinct a fact as the crucifying of the Lord Jesus Christ; and there is no more reason in the Scriptures, so far as I know (if I am wrong I am thankful to be corrected), for telling a Christian to wait for the Holy Ghost from heaven, than for telling a troubled and anxious soul to wait until Jesus is crucified afresh.

In Acts ii. 37, 38, we read, "When they heard this they were pricked in their heart, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." That is very distinct. "For the promise [of the Spirit] is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

But, you will say, are there not, in the following chapters of the Acts, various scriptures which tell about subsequent outpourings of the Spirit? Let us look at them. The first, perhaps, would be in ch. iv. 31; but we should not, I suppose, differ about that.

The next is in the 8th chapter. There had been a persecution in Jerusalem, and the believers were all scattered through Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. "When the apostles (verse 8) that were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost."

Now pass on to chapter x., because the same explanation applies to both events. Peter had a remarkable vision, and while he was considering what it could mean, three men from Cornelius' house came for him. He went with them, and preached Christ to Cornelius and his friends; and "while Peter yet spake these words (verse 44), the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Let us here refer to chapter i. 8—"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea; and in Samaria; and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Think a moment. The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, and we know from the subsequent history that they found fault with Peter for going in to the Gentiles. That the Samaritans and the Gentiles should receive the Holy Ghost would be incredible to the Jews, unless authenticated by overwhelming evidence. Therefore the Lord Jesus Christ in giving his commission particularizes not only Jerusalem and all Judea, but Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the earth, i.e. the Gentiles. I suggest, for your consideration, that it was necessary there should be in Samaria an evident manifestation and declaration of the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, in order that the Jews should believe that the Samaritans had received the Holy Ghost at all. This was no less needful in the case of the Gentiles. And I suggest whether Peter's threefold vision did not refer to Judea, Samaria, and the Gentiles. If you say the repetition was merely for emphasis, I remark that in the cases of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar it was enough that the dream was doubled; and it seems to me to be more than mere emphasis here. Was it not intended to indicate to Peter's mind, the threefold mission of the Apostles—"Ye shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth"?

There remains another passage—Acts xix. It has been supposed, from this, that it was the anxious inquiry of the apostles to new converts, "Have you received the Holy Ghost?" as though this did not result from believing on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. I venture to say that that was not what the Apostle Paul meant here. Look at the circumstances. We read in the 18th chapter that a certain Jew, named Apollos, came to Ephesus. He "was instructed in the way of the Lord, and, being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John." Two helpful people, Aquila and Priscilla, take this good man home, and expound to him the way of God more perfectly, after which he goes away to Corinth. By-and-by, Paul comes to Ephesus, and finds certain disciples, to whom he says—not "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" but—"Having believed, did ye receive the Holy Ghost?" (Alford renders, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?")—not implying that the receiving of the Holy Ghost was something separate from, and subsequent to, believing, but virtually raising the question as to what it was they did believe.

They replied that they had not heard whether there was any Holy Spirit—the Holy Ghost had not been mentioned. Why not? Because Apollos could not teach any more than he knew; he had known and preached the baptism of John, unto which they had been baptized. Paul replies, "John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on Him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus." As soon as they heard this they believed on Him—which they had not done before—and were baptized into his name. If they had already believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, and had been baptized into his name, Paul would not have baptized them a second time. This narrative, so far from proving that there is a subsequence in time, after believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, before receiving the Holy Ghost, shows that as soon as ever they did believe in the Lord Jesus Christ they received the Holy Ghost.

May I say a word or two about the question of tongues, and visible, audible, oracular manifestations? I would suggest that just as Christ and his apostles were authenticated by the miracles which they wrought, so the outpouring of the Holy Ghost was authenticated and proved by His evidently falling on the Samaritans and on the Gentiles, as well as on the 120 believing Jews at Jerusalem. I do not think—if I err I desire to be set right—that it betokens a higher state of grace, that audible or visible manifestations be given to us, than that we believe without them. You will remember that Paul says tongues were a sign, not to them which believed, but to them which believed not. Those who believed did not want them. In John xii. it is recorded that a voice came from heaven, and some said that it thundered; others said an angel spake. Jesus said, "This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes." He did not want a voice. He looks up to his Father in heaven, and says, "I know that Thou hearest Me always." Is it because we have the greater light or the clearer mind of the Spirit that we want more signs, or sounds, or emotions, or physical manifestations? Surely not. What, in this respect, is the difference between this dispensation and the past? Is it not that we have more of the Word of God, and less of open vision? What has God been educating us in from the beginning, but in believing Him and trusting Him? He has been leading us, little by little, from sight to faith; and blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

If we are right in waiting for and expecting something which is to come with visible, or sensible, or emotional manifestation, then let us wait patiently. But if this be not so, it will be a terrible waste of time. It is of the deepest consequence, you and I being agreed that we want to be filled with the Spirit, that we should have right conceptions as to how we are to be filled. The Lord says in his Word, "Be ye filled with the Spirit." In order to be filled with the Spirit, we must make room for Him. We must be empty. The Holy Spirit is likened to the wind; if we make a vacuum, the wind rushes in to fill it. Grace, as well as nature, abhors a vacuum, and the Holy Ghost will come in wherever there is a vacant place made for Him.

One result of being wrong on this subject is this: we are taught to think that we have not got the Holy Ghost. Well, to whom do you give the credit of whatever there is in you that is right? Is it your own spirit? You remember that hymn—

"Return, oh holy Dove, return,
Sweet Messenger of rest,
I hate the sins that made Thee mourn,
And drove Thee from my breast."

I have been angry in past times because people found fault with it, and yet, since I have been brought to those inspired words, "By the words of Thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer," I have felt it of the deepest importance that our every expression should accord with the very words of God. What makes me hate the sins that made the Spirit mourn? The Holy Ghost gone, and I hate the sins that made Him mourn! Is that possible? Would we hate the sins if the Holy Ghost had been driven from our breast? If we teach one another that we have not got the Holy Ghost, we are giving the credit of all that is right and true in the Church of God to somebody—to whom? It appears to me a very serious thing that we should give to any other than that blessed Spirit the credit of whatsoever things in the Church of Christ are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, or of good report. He never altogether left even backsliding Israel under the law; "According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not". (Haggai ii. 5). He cannot be less long-suffering under the new covenant.

We have little of life on earth left; very soon we shall all be yonder; and we want to fill up the brief remnant of our time wisely and well—to know what is true, and to be saved from that which is not according to the Word of God.

Since the above has been in print we have received the following from a correspondent in Dublin:—

As Dr. Mahan appears to be accepted—by some, at least—as a teacher in the things of God, I feel constrained to ask your permission to put forward a few thoughts which have occurred to me on reading the report of his address, in the form of questions:—

1. Whether those Corinthians who are reproached by Paul as "carnal," because of the factious spirit which prevailed among them (1 Cor. iii. 3, 4), are not also represented in the same Epistle (i. 7) as "coming behind in no gift"? And do we not find in the same Epistle full directions given to them for the exercise to edification of those gifts of the Spirit which they appear to have enjoyed in great abundance (chapters xii. and xiv.)?

2. Are we to believe that such expressions as these: "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given to us" (Rom. v. 5); "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God" (Rom. viii. 16): "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying 'Abba, Father'" (Gal. iv. 6)—are applicable to Christians only of a certain degree (shall I call it?) of experience?

3. When Paul tells the Ephesians that when they believed in Christ (Eph. i. 13, 14) they were "sealed with that Holy Spirit of Promise which is the earnest of our inheritance," are we to understand that their case was exceptional? And are we to believe that the exhortation (Eph. iv. 30), "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption," is not addressed to all Christians, without exception?

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

I AM just closing another year's labour on behalf of virtuous young women in distress, especially strangers in London, and those who have erred from the right path. As indicated by the advertisements, there are seven homes, designed to accommodate about 160 inmates. One asylum is open all night, where during this year more than 500 poor women have been welcomed. As a rule, I visit this refuge each morning at nine o'clock, and find every variety of character, and am called to advise with poor outcasts in all conditions—viz., young women on the very verge of the precipice of moral destruction, as well as those who have fallen.

The Lord has been pleased to keep me in this department of his vineyard since 1851, during which time I have had much to exercise faith, also much to encourage me, knowing that some brands snatched from the burning are now with the Lord, while there are many on earth amongst the saved. But others have returned like "the dog turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire."

Still, when I realize that nearly all who come under my care are orphans, and have been cruelly neglected in childhood, and that each possesses an immortal spirit, and that the grace of God is sufficient to save the very vilest, I feel constrained to abide by the motto "Onward!" and pray God to raise up many more sympathizing friends for the friendless and fallen. CHRISTIANS, AWAKE!

We very earnestly commend the following paper to all Churches, and to all individual Christians, trusting that it may be accompanied with much and continued prayer, that soon there may not be a Church in our land unrepresented in the wide field of "all the world."

"WHY ABODEST THOU AMONG THE SHEEPFOLDS?"

"IF YE LOVE ME, KEEP MY COMMANDMENTS."

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED years have passed away since our blessed Lord Jesus was upon earth. Nearly his last words were—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." He had given his life for the world; He had made a "propitiation for the sins of the whole world"; He had "appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself"; He had "preached peace," having "made peace by the blood of his cross." Poor guilty ones had believed the message, and had been pardoned, "justified," "accepted in the Beloved," made "kings and priests to God."

These saved ones had the glorious mission of announcing the love of God to man. They were called to the high office of "ambassadors for Christ," and "fellow-workers with God." For a time they realized their mission, and "multitudes were added to the Church." But soon they seemed to forget their Master's order, and a persecution was needed, by which they were all scattered abroad, except the apostles, to bring them to a sense of their responsibility.

Then they that were "scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Lord Jesus; and the hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed and turned to the Lord."

But soon the Church fell asleep again, and the Lord's command and the desire of his heart were forgotten. The Gospel was not preached; centuries of darkness passed, and the Church slumbered almost in death.

But now God, in his grace, has begun to awaken us, and says, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from among the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

Some think that they can almost hear the distant sound of the Master's chariot-wheels approaching, and they remember that "we must all give an account of the things done in the body"; and as they think of his question to each one, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" they are obliged to bow their heads in shame. The blessed Lord, who asks them, bears the marks still of his wounds; they remember He had not where to lay his head, and they see his eye notices their worldly prosperity, and their comfort, if not their luxury. They begin to remember how large a portion of their life has been spent, either in accumulating treasures on earth, contrary to his express command, or in providing for the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, and for the world which they now see to be just about to pass away for ever. "The time is short," He repeats again, "and the fashion of this world passeth away."

Beloved saints of God, ought we not to "arise from among the dead"? Shall we not realize our high calling and our responsibility? He has entrusted to us this service, and to no one else; and we must obey in his strength. In England we have enormous responsibility; much has been given, and much will be required. In his providence the whole world is now open. India has long been open. Africa, Japan, are open. All China, with its 400 perishing millions, is open, and those who have penetrated hundreds of miles into the interior find hearts prepared by God for the Gospel, and already some have believed on Jesus. A missionary, 700 or 800 miles from the coast, says: "The harvest is plenteous; we are reaping, not merely sowing. God is with us."

A Chinese, living in a province containing 25,000,000, and where the Gospel has been proclaimed for the first time this year, said, "Come to us, I know there are many in this city who, like us, are seeking the true way." Have we been faithful to our trust? What response has been given to the cry for help of those who are being "drawn to death"? It is true that some hundreds of devoted labourers have gone forth, sustained by the prayers and pecuniary help of many at home; but the marked blessing that has rested on missionary efforts is only a louder call from God to "go forward." "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

There are probably 40,000 congregations in England; it would have been a very small proof of love for the Lord if only one from each of these had gone forth to fulfil the Lord's command. But it is thought that not nearly 2000 are in the field from this country, so that from about 38,000 congregations, not one is proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation! It is of these that the question must be asked: How are you obeying the Lord's command, "Go ye"?

Will you "people of God," who "have been called out of darkness into his marvellous light," to "show forth his praises," gather together, and consider this matter before the Lord, and in the light of his return? Are there none who are willing to go for his sake? God does not necessarily want men of intellect: "Not by might, nor by power; but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Listen to the cry, "Come over and help us," not only addressed to men, but to women. Help is needed to conduct schools, visit from house to house, and instruct inquirers in the Word of Life. Will each inquire what are the reasons why he or she should not go out? Is it business? Matthew, Peter, James, John, Andrew, were all in business when the Lord called them to follow Him, and they "left all and followed Him." Have you bought a farm, and "must you needs go and see it"? or "five yoke of oxen"? and is this the only reason why you say, "I pray thee have me excused"? Perhaps some are simply engrossed with the things of this world. If so, remember "the world passeth away, and the lust thereof." Your brethren and sisters in the battle-field are hard pressed, and often nearly worn out. Will you look on and see them die at their posts, and not go "to the help of the Lord against the mighty"?

But possibly you are, by God's grace, engaged in definite work for Him at home. Still you have to consider whether the very fact of your having been trained by God, and used of God, is not a call to you to go abroad. God can supply your place at home, and make your absence a blessing, as calling out some, who are slumbering, to "work while it is day."

If you say the work is too hard, He says, "Follow Me." Dear child of God, as the angels look on at your daily employments, do they praise God that you have indeed presented your body as "a living sacrifice"? or have they to say, "even weeping," that you are almost like those "whose god is their belly, who mind earthly things"?

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." At least 600,000,000 have never even heard the Name of Jesus; and probably at least 400,000,000 of the remainder have never heard the Gospel in such a way as to know that it is glad tidings of great joy—that there is a Saviour for them. Multitudes of these perishing ones are groping in the dark after that peace with God which you have found, and know to be for them also.

If you saw them on their death-beds, passing into an eternity of darkness without Christ, how could you answer the reproaches they would heap on you, if they found that you knew the way of salvation, but that your love of ease or worldly advancement had deterred you from making a single effort to tell them the light and joy you had found in Christ Jesus? Remember, you may in all reality be a fellow-worker with God. Arise; "let no man take thy crown!"

"As a good soldier of Christ, endure hardness." "If we suffer with Him, we shall reign with Him." "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves; but unto Him that died for them and rose again." "If He laid down his life for us, we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with Me, to give to every man according as his work shall be."

Will you, who have read this, seek to gather together the church or company of Christians with whom you worship the Lord God Almighty, your Father, to consider how you may obey his command to you; and pray that, AT LEAST, ONE FROM AMONG YOU may be so constrained by the love of Christ as to go forth with the message of salvation? Let those who remain count it their privilege to sustain the labourers by prayer, and by ministering of their substance; so that "tarrying at home," they may "divide the spoil."

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY."

We commend the subject to your prayerful consideration.

THRAWL-STREET, SPITALFIELDS.

A WEEK of special services has just been held in the Mission Hall here. The audiences have been gathered from the low lodging-houses around the Hall, and composed of those who rarely enter a place of worship. Many, it is believed, were convinced of sin, and led to a sense of God's forgiveness. During the week one whole night was devoted to prayer,—and a most memorable night it was. In addition to a large band of workers, many notorious sinners of both sexes were present. Several of them sought and found mercy.

An excellent work is being carried on at a heavy expense, while the greatest distress is now prevalent, and we are utterly unable to do anything to relieve it.

THE REV. J. HALLOWES, M.A., of Gloucester, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the Congregational Church, Barnsley, Yorkshire, to become their pastor. His first Sunday in Barnsley will be Jan. 16, 1876. He very earnestly entreat the prayers of God's people, that his ministry in a new sphere may have the Divine blessing resting upon it in all its fullness.

BETHERSDEN, KENT.—Mission services have been lately held in this parish. The Rev. C. Bosanquet, Vicar of Christ Church, Folkestone, opened the mission by preaching three times on Sunday, Dec. 5. The preacher during the week was the Rev. T. Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney. Considering the unusual severity of the weather, the attendance at the several services was most encouraging, on Friday evening the parish church being nearly full. Other meetings for Bible-reading and prayer were held at the vicarage; and Mrs. Richardson addressed an assembly of women in the school-room on Friday afternoon. The mission was closed by the vicar, who preached three sermons on Sunday, Dec. 12, and administered the Lord's Supper after the evening service.

FOR THE YOUNG.

"DOES YOU LOVE GOD?"

In a compartment in a railway-carriage there were seated a Christian lady, her little daughter, and one gentleman. The little girl, unobserved by her mother, who was reading a book, whispered to the gentleman, "Does you love God?" Nothing more was said. The arrow of conviction went home, and before many days had elapsed that gentleman was a happy believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.

About a year afterwards he was walking along the street of a country town, when he noticed, looking out of a window, the mother of the little girl. He at once knocked at the door, saw the lady, and told her how that in God's hands her daughter had been the means of his conversion. He then expressed a wish to see the little girl, but the mother, with tears in her eyes, told him that the next time he would see her daughter would be in heaven, for she had some months before gone to be with Jesus. Dear young reader, "Does you love God?"

"IF FATHER HOLDS THE ROPE."

Some English tourists in Scotland, on the look-out for wild flowers, were looking over a precipice when they saw a few beautiful flowers some distance down, but the difficulty was how to reach them. Some boys from the neighbouring village being present, the tourists offered to give one of the boys a shilling if he would go over the rock and pull the flowers for them, while they would retain a firm hold of him by a rope tied round his body. The boy liked the shilling, but he did not like the idea of falling over the rocks, so he was very reluctant to take the job in hand, until a happy thought occurred to him, and then he said to the strangers, "I will do it if my father holds the rope!" This was soon arranged. God wants us to trust Him as our heavenly Father.

"HALLELUJAH!"

Two little brothers were lying ill of fever. The elder was trying to get his little brother to say "Hallelujah." Before the little fellow was able to say it correctly, God took him away to heaven. When he was gone, John said to his mother, "Can James say Hallelujah now?" "Oh, yes," was mamma's reply, "I have no doubt James can say Hallelujah now." W. F.

"CHINA'S MILLIONS."—The first half-yearly part of this new monthly, edited by Rev. Hudson Taylor, is just issued (Morgan and Scott, 6d.). The same amount of information, statistical, descriptive, and evangelistic, with respect to China, has never before been offered to the public at the price. We advise all the friends of foreign missions to become subscribers.

THE "BIRD'S NEST" (says a correspondent), a home situated at Kingston, near Dublin, receives poor perishing little ones, but now they are much in need of help. The bank empty—and more than empty,—and 211 little ones daily to be fed. "We are praying that the year may be closed out of debt. Will not you help us? Could you not give up some one thing that you think you want, and send it to the "Nest" to brighten the Christmas of some poor little ones who perhaps but for that might have to spend it "out in the cold." Any contributions will be thankfully received by Miss S. Davies, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, who will also send collecting-cards and "Bird's Nest" stories to any who may wish to collect for the "Nest."

FEMALE MISSIONS TO THE FALLEN.—It is often said—and we are disposed to believe it to a large extent—that no one pities and sympathizes less with those females who have strayed from the path of virtue and happiness than their sisters who are more fortunately circumstanced or are stronger to resist temptation. At the same time, the above Mission, whose seventeenth annual report has been sent to us, proves substantially that the charge to which we have referred is not of universal application. Its twelve female agents, who "are now spending the best of their life in the streets of London, endeavouring to save the bodies and souls of their fallen sisters," can speak in this report of much successful effort, which is very cheering so far as it goes; yet we feel that it is but as a drop in the ocean. Nine hundred and six cases have been dealt with during the past year. We should like to see the staff of a mission such as this—one more likely, perhaps, to accomplish the desired end than any other existing one—indefinitely enlarged. Any of our readers who recognize the great need for such work, and are prompted to help, may address the Secretary, Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, 34, Parliament-street, S.W.

MAJOR COLE IN SUNDERLAND.

THE work of grace begun here last week by our brother from Chicago has been steadily growing in interest and power. The season of the year, and the many pre-existing arrangements of the various churches in the town, have been causes which have not contributed to the success of the movement: but the services, notwithstanding, have been abundantly blessed.

Major Cole was for some one or two meetings this week prevented by indisposition from exerting his full strength, and Miss Cole has been laid aside by sickness. But, as before, souls have been saved, and on every occasion the chapels have been filled, and at times crowded. The tale of conversions is only truly and fully recorded on high, but some that have come under our notice have been unusually interesting.

A farmer who asked prayer for three of his farm-servants at one of the noonday prayer-meetings, rejoiced to see one of them go into the inquiry-room the same evening, and he has expressed hopes of change in all the three.

Wayward prodigals have been treated with, and in not a few cases have given signs of determination to live a new life by faith in the Son of God. Amongst these was one with whom a friend pleaded earnestly for some time, and whose name, he was afterwards surprised to learn, was Cole. The same friend found a sailor inquiring the way of life at Victoria Hall on Sunday night; the man was to sail next day, and at the noon-tide hour, when he could be found at liberty, our friend went down to his vessel and preached Christ to him. We trust that not only the man himself was brought to the knowledge of the truth, but that some of his shipmates were led to the Saviour also.

Another seafaring man came to one of the evening meetings, who had to sail early next morning. At the close of the meeting he could not rest, and would not leave the place, but after long conversation he was enabled to give himself to God. I had myself pleaded for some nights with a young man who stubbornly refused to yield to my entreaties. To my surprise he found me out last night in a meeting having no connexion with Major Cole's services. He was in a very troubled state of mind. At last the secret was confessed—"I cannot pray before my father and mother." "The Lord will provide," was the substance of the answer given him; and to the question, "Would he not decide for Christ, and lean on His grace for help in his every need?" he replied with a tight grasp of my hand, and a decided "I will!"

The Lord be praised for all that He is doing amongst us. But as yet the surface only of our teeming population has been touched. On Sunday evening we look forward to be assisted by the Jubilee Singers. Tickets of admission have been issued, and the chief shipping-yards and factories have been systematically canvassed with these, so that we trust an audience made up of unconverted people will be assembled.

On Monday evening, again Major Cole will take part in the service of song for which his coloured countrymen have paid us a visit. On Tuesday he goes to Hexham, and thence to other places, leaving us to sorrow that his stay here has been so brief. Feeling this, a large deputation from the Young Men's Christian Association waited upon him last night, with the object of securing his services in the immediate future on behalf of the young men of the town.

Will your readers pray that work may be started among young men as successfully as it has been carried on in other places, and that, if God will, the Major may be sent again to us? Let them all pray for him and for his family, that they may have strength above their own, according as their need is great. JAMES STUART.

THE LADIES' HIBERNIAN FEMALE SCHOOL SOCIETY.

—Ever since 1828 this valuable Society has carried on its educational work amongst the poor female children of Ireland, and we are sorry to see, from an advertisement in our last issue, that, notwithstanding the fact that the work has, since the disestablishment and disendowment of the Irish Church, become more important than ever, the efforts of the Committee are crippled for want of funds. All information respecting the Society will be gladly furnished by Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall-bridge-road.

DUMBARTON.—The annual social meeting of the Dumbarton Young Men's Christian Association took place in the Free Church Mission premises on Wednesday, Dec. 1. The Honorary President, J. W. White, Esq., Crosslyte, occupied the chair, and ministers of several denominations addressed the meeting. The Association was reported to be in a very prosperous state, having had forty added to the membership in the course of the year. Evangelistic work has been carried on, and a junior Bible-class has been held, and upon all the work there has been a rich blessing.—Times of Dumbarton.

TEN DAYS' MISSION IN YORK.

(FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.)

We are sure that many of your readers who are following the Mission in York with their prayers will be anxious for further tidings of the Lord's work in this city. The various meetings throughout the week have been well attended, and the interest has deepened as the days have gone on. As of old, the hand of the Lord has been with his servants, and many have believed and turned unto the Lord.

On Monday and Tuesday, Mr. Aitken conducted Bible-readings, at 3 p.m., in the Corn Exchange. At each of these there was a large attendance. In the evenings he held evangelistic services in the same place, when multitudes flocked to hear the "glad tidings," and we believe "the slain of the Lord were many."

On Monday evening, Mr. Aitken took his text from Revelation iii. 20, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." "Behold! The everlasting God stands outside the door of the heart He has made. How wonderful! But is the case rare? Look at the state of Laodicea. They had got what they considered excellent substitutes for the living God. They had 'need of nothing.' This is the position in which many stand towards these mission services. 'What! some fresh disturbance? We don't want all this.' My friends, it is possible to take even good things, and put them in the place of God."

And then, with his marvellous power of grappling with the conscience and discovering to the unsaved some of those many "refuges of lies" in which they are hiding, the preacher spoke with plain, and yet fervent, burning words of some of these "substitutes for God":—1. Religion. Does your religion bring you into conscious communion with God? or is it not rather of that kind which, instead of making you feel how necessary Christ is to you, just satisfies your conscience and makes you do without Him? The church of Laodicea was supremely self-satisfied. Christ stands knocking disregarded because the soul is too full to feel its need of Him. 2. Worldly pleasure. 3. Daily business and daily cares. Mr. Aitken concluded with an earnest appeal to all the unsaved ones present to "open to Him who is knocking to-night." Many remained to the after-meeting.

In addressing the anxious, Mr. Aitken reminded them that in the text Christ makes a definite promise to any who will open the door. He says, "I will come in." At the close a good number followed him and other Christian workers into the inquiry-room, and were dealt with individually, and, we believe, proved the truth of the Saviour's promise in their own glad experience.

The service on Tuesday night was similar in character. The attendance was larger, and the results in awakening and leading souls into peace more manifest than on the previous evening. Mr. Aitken preached from Hosea xiii. 9,— "Oh, Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thy help found." After picturing, in strong and solemn, heart-searching language, the fearful vision of that man who has committed the suicide of the soul, he pointed the self-despairing ones to Him who is "mighty to save," and in whom there is help and salvation.

On Wednesday morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 11 a.m. in St. Michael-le-Belfrey, when Mr. Aitken gave an address to church workers on 1 Thessalonians i. 3. After his earnest, stirring appeals to a life of greater devotion to the service of the Lord who bought us, many—may I trust, all—must have felt it a blessed privilege to renew their consecration of themselves to Him and to his work at his table.

That evening the first of the services was held in the grand old Minster, the opening of which to evangelistic services of this character has been looked forward to with such intense and prayerful interest, not only by Christians here, but also in other places. We subjoin an extract from the York Herald of December 16, relating to this service. We are indeed glad that York should have the honour of being the first city to open its Cathedral for such a glorious purpose. Already of these two services it has been said—"This and that man was born in her."

In the evening of Wednesday, Mr. Aitken held the first of the three services arranged to be held in the nave of York Minster. There was a very large congregation, in which were members of most of the religious denominations of the city. The service was a very plain and earnest one.

The sermon was founded on Acts x. 43—"To Him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins." The discourse was on the life of Cornelius the centurion, who, in spite of his devotion, family worship, almsgiving, and prayerfulness, needed the salvation which was preached to him by the apostle Peter. On this subject the preacher waxed eloquent, and uttered many important lessons, which he pointedly urged on the most serious attention of his hearers. He insisted that nominal Christianity was of no avail in God's sight, nor the forms of religion without the power; and unless the righteousness of his hearers exceeded that of the Jewish Scribes and Pharisees, and the Gentile Cornelius, they could in no wise enter the Kingdom of Heaven.

With great pathos, and almost tearfulness, Mr. Aitken appealed to the congregation to accept the offer of full, free, and everlasting pardon through Jesus Christ, whose death had procured this boon for all embraced in the word "whosoever" in the text. The service concluded with the hymn, "Weary of earth, and laden with my sin," during the singing of which the congregation dispersed, though a large number remained at the "after-meeting," at which Mr. Aitken also spoke, and gave counsel to the inquiring. Amongst the audience at each of Mr. Aitken's addresses have been several Nonconformist ministers, by whom the Mission is most favourably regarded.

On Thursday afternoon, at three, the large church of St. Michael-le-Belfrey was filled with a congregation of ladies, whom Mr. Aitken addressed from the words "She hath done what she could," pointing out at the commencement that it was devotion to a person—an act of downright heart-love to a person—which is here commended by Christ, and that this was a characteristic which specially belongs to woman. In the evening, the congregation in the Minster was very large, and the preacher was clothed with mighty power, for the Spirit of the Lord was upon him, anointing him for this special service. We again quote from the York Herald of Dec. 17:—

Yesterday, at noon, Mr. Aitken addressed a large number of the North-Eastern Railway workmen in the new waggon-shops beyond Holgate-bridge. In the evening a service, similar to that of Wednesday, was held in the nave of the Minster. For some time before the appointed hour of opening the doors a large crowd had assembled outside the Cathedral, and when the service commenced at 7.30 every available seat was occupied by a congregation composed of almost every religious denomination in the city.

Mr. Aitken preached from the text—"And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side-posts with the blood that is in the basin; and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning. For the Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when He seeth the blood upon the lintel and on the two side-posts, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you" (Ex. xii. 23, 24). During a plain and earnest discourse, which secured the rapt attention of the audience, Mr. Aitken said that the above words were connected with an episode of unique interest in sacred history. The passage suggested to them three great truths. The first was suggested to their mind by the character of the deliverance which was at this time worked out for Israel, and was the lesson of universal condemnation; the second great truth was communicated to them by the one word—Substitution; and the third point the narrative intended to illustrate was Appropriation. Upon each of these points Mr. Aitken dwelt at considerable length, giving an illustration of the character of the death the sinner died; referring to the fearful nature of the Divine displeasure as illustrated in the text; dwelling on the glorious gift of everlasting life which Christ offered to them; and concluding by an urgent appeal to his audience to accept the blood which had been shed for them.

The after-meeting was a season of great solemnity. The power of the Holy Ghost was felt in many hearts, and many wistful faces seemed to say, "Almost thou persuadedst me to be a Christian." Some of those most deeply impressed followed the mission preacher (as others had done the previous evening) into the vestry, which had been set apart for an inquiry-room; and while there the same blessed Spirit who had awakened them to their sense of need came as the Messenger of Peace, revealing Christ to their weary, troubled hearts, and thus enabling them to go on their way rejoicing.

We again entreat the prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that a very rich and abundant blessing may follow this Mission, which is to close on Wednesday, the 22nd inst.; and we beseech them to magnify the Lord with us for his abounding grace and goodness, for "his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten Him the victory."

There was a fair muster of influential business men at noon to-day (17th) in one of the central churches of the city.

The power of the Lord was even more manifest on Friday evening than on the two previous evenings. A large number remained to the after-meeting, and the spacious vestry was filled with seeking souls and the workers who were pointing them to Christ. It was nearly 11 p.m. when Mr. Aitken and his helpers left the Minster, after joining together in that glorious hymn of praise from the Communion Service, "We praise Thee, we bless Thee, we glorify Thee, we give thanks to Thee for thy great glory, O Lord God, Heavenly King, God the Father Almighty," for our hearts were indeed filled with his praise who had done great things for us.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET.

THE Moorgate-street Hall noon prayer-meeting has had many points of interest during the last few days. One day some Nestorian brethren were present, and one of them told the assembly of the trials the Church had passed through, and concluded by asking the meeting to remember the Nestorian Church in their prayers. For two or three days much prayer was offered for the Jews, especially by one who visits the streets where they assemble on the Lord's-day, to speak to them individually as he may see opportunity. Also, the bereaved and suffering from the late calamities have been very earnestly commended to God.

The addresses have been varied and instructive; several friends from the body of the Hall have added to the profit of the meetings by brief and appropriate remarks on the subjects.

As an illustration, one day the subject was "Confidence in God," and one rose and said—"When he had strong confidence in God he also had confidence in his brethren, and all went well with him." Another day the text of the subject was—"The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple," &c. One said that the Lord often came suddenly to the souls of men individually, and he gave the case of a Jew whose conversion had long been sought, and who was lately and suddenly brought to know Jesus as the true Messiah.

On Friday, 17th inst., a letter was read from a minister of the Gospel (who had heartily assisted in the late evangelistic services) telling of the large increase that he had received to his church the last few months through the special services conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Although the weather has been unfavourable on some days, the attendance has been good. It would be still more pleasant to see the Hall full every day, and also to see more ministers present. Surely there is great need for continued united believing prayer, for increase of grace for believers, and the conversion of unbelievers. When shall we hear the great mass of the people cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Are we longing, and praying, and looking for this as we should?

On Friday evening last, Mr. J. J. Jones, of the Homerton Mission, assisted by various friends, gave a tea to about 700 of the poorest of the poor. After having partaken of the bread that perisheth, they were invited to partake of the bread that perisheth not—given by God for the life of the world.

MISSION WORK IN MEXICO.

OUR correspondent Mr. James Pascoe writes to us from Toluca with an interesting sketch of the early history of Mexican missions; we are sorry not to be able to find space for it. Mr. Pascoe adds:—"The readers of THE CHRISTIAN already know much of our work; my object now is to earnestly pray them not to forget us. We want help to continue preaching and propagating the Gospel in all its purity. The work advances and deepens, but our great pressing want is a larger place in which to worship, and also for our printing operations. The work spreads, but our congregation cannot enlarge for lack of room, which, I think, is a great pity."

GENOA HARBOUR MISSION.—From the third report of this Mission we learn that its labours have been carried on with steady perseverance, and a measure of success all the more to be appreciated, because of the many difficulties to be encountered. It is gratifying to be able to report that, in spite of incessant clerical and sceptical opposition, there is not an emigrant ship sails from the port without carrying several copies of the Scriptures and a considerable amount of evangelical literature, not given away, but sold at full value. Mr. Jones, the English agent, has distributed between 8000 and 9000 tracts, magazines, Spurgeon's sermons, &c.; he has sold a large number of English Bibles and Testaments, and very materially helped the Colporteur to dispose of copies of the Scriptures in other languages. The prayers of God's people are asked on behalf of the Mission, that it may be greatly blessed to the 8000 English-speaking seamen who annually visit this port, to the 30,000 emigrants who sail from its waters every year, and to the still larger numbers of sailors who trade with it under the Italian and other foreign flags. Donations will be received by Messrs. P. Henderson and Co., 16, St. Vincent-place, Glasgow.

THE WORK IN PHILADELPHIA.

WE make further extracts from our American exchanges as to the progress of the work of revival in America:—

The great building on Market-street has been daily filled, often packed, and perhaps with larger throngs than were ever before, in the history of the Church in America, gathered into any one edifice to hear the Gospel. Benjamin Franklin estimated that Whitfield preached, from a balcony in Philadelphia, 136 years ago, to "not less than 10,000 people." At least from 10,000 to 12,000 have heard Mr. Moody nearly every night he has preached here; and, besides the crowds within, almost as many more are said to have been turned away on several evenings because there was no room for them. This, too, in a week unusually dull and rainy. But the unfavourable weather has seemed scarcely at all to damp the ardour of these multitudes.

The building here is more than twice the size of that used in Brooklyn. If things go on doubling in this way through a few more cities, will it look as though the old Gospel had lost its hold on the world, and is dying out?

The meetings of the first week have been chiefly for Christians. It has been hoped that thus believers would be better fitted to do the work which is to be upon them in the weeks to come. The truth is urgently pressed by Mr. Moody that the power from on high will be seen through those who are themselves filled with it.

The morning hour from eight to nine is given to supplication and mutual counsel, and receiving requests for special prayer. After the morning meeting—which was begun in the large Chambers Presbyterian Church on Broad-street, but was removed after the middle of the week to the Dépôt, to accommodate the increasing numbers—a meeting for women only is held in one of the neighbouring churches for prayer.

After the evening service in the Dépôt—at which there is preaching—a young men's meeting is held in the Arch-street Methodist Church. This meeting has been thus far full, on both floor and galleries, and apparently fruitful of good. The young men relate incidents in their own experience, offer prayer for each other, and numerous requests for prayer are made.

It is yet too early in the progress of these meetings to expect any statement other than that of beginnings and prospects. Already many Christians are quickened to new endeavours, both after a personal spiritual life, and in seeking to turn others to righteousness.

This week (the second) is devoted more specifically to efforts to reach the unconverted, as the past week was to efforts for Christians, and all praying people everywhere are earnestly desired to remember this work at the mercy-seat. The one unmistakable cause of the great interest attending these two brethren is the conviction that God is with them.

It should be added that the remarkable unity of denominations, of ministers and laymen, of men and women, particularly of the pastors of the city, in aiding the evangelists in every way, is an inestimable assistance and a great power.

The meeting for women on Sunday last was by itself a wonder. Nearly or quite 12,000 women were in the building at least an hour before the time announced for the opening of the services, so that the doors were then closed, and it was thought that fully as many sought vainly to gain admission as secured an entrance. At the close of Mr. Moody's earnest discourse on Regeneration, from John iii. 3, when he appealed to all who desired an interest in Christ as their Saviour to stand up in testimony of that fact, hundreds of the interested and deeply-moved hearers arose to their feet, and afterwards gathered in the inquiry-rooms for personal converse with Mr. Moody and his band of earnest Christian co-workers.

In the evening the attendance of men, old and young, was as large as of women in the afternoon, and the same discourse was preached to them. Many of them rose for prayer, and at the close of the service found their way to the inquiry-rooms. It cannot be said with truth that Mr. Moody is reaching only church members in Philadelphia; nor yet that there are no immediate results of good from his labours here. Yet these statements are very likely to be made and believed, even if there is no foundation for them in truth. It is very easy to doubt the value of a work with which we lack sympathy.

THIRD WEEK OF THE MEETINGS.

It would seem that the hold obtained by the evangelists on the unconverted masses is greater in Philadelphia than in Brooklyn. The attendance from this class is larger, and the impression produced in those who attend seems deep and influential. Mr. Moody pronounced the gatherings of the second Sunday more successful, in view of the attendance of the unconverted so early in the series of meetings, than at any other place in this country or in England. The week following showed an increase rather than a diminution of interest, and the third week opens more auspiciously than either which it follows.

The meetings of Sunday last were remarkably effective. The day was cold and wet; just such a day as would ordinarily give smallest attendance at religious meetings—such a day as would suggest to many a faint-hearted country superintendent the thought that it was about time to close the Sunday-school for the winter. But at eight o'clock on that dreary morning the Dépôt church showed a gathering of some 6000 Christian workers; enough, it would seem, to cheer the heart of any doubting Elijah as to the faith and zeal of very many amid all the coldness and unbelief in this great city. When at the close of his appeal to these workers to be "a peculiar people zealous of good works," in their service in God's vineyard, Mr. Moody asked those to rise to their feet who during the coming week would endeavour to lead at least one soul to the Saviour, nearly one-half of all present rose in indication of this purpose.

At the Sunday afternoon meeting for women, at least 10,000 were present. As nearly 5000 tickets of admission had been given to women who expressed a desire to find salvation, while many other tickets were distributed without question, Mr. Moody thought there were more than 7000 unconverted persons in the audience—certainly a hopeful gathering at such a time and place. The appeal of the preacher was most earnest. As he told of the love of the Saviour for the lost, and of the full salvation offered freely to all, all hearts seemed to throb as one in gratitude to such a Saviour for such a salvation. When he asked those who desired an interest in this salvation to rise and stand during his prayer, hundreds rose to their feet, and afterwards repaired to the inquiry-rooms for personal converse and counsel. It can hardly be doubted that that evening hour was the birth-hour of many precious souls, then brought by God's Spirit into the life of Christian love and trust. At the evening meeting, which was for men, while the attendance was not quite so large as in the afternoon, there was great seriousness, and many rose for prayers and remained at the inquiry-meeting.

God is working in this city by these evangelists. Good results from their labours are already manifest. If the meetings should close now, they would not be without fruit to God's glory and to the good of precious souls. But the meetings are not yet to close; they continue with growing interest. Pastors are working warmly with the evangelists, and are stirring up their churches to greater zeal and increased activity. Christians are coming up to the work before them with new earnestness and efficiency, and with delightful unity. From all branches of the Church of Christ "fellow-helpers to the truth" now "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the Gospel."

ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM-PLACE, W.—Meetings are held here every Wednesday from twelve to one o'clock, for prayer and short addresses. A goodly number of Christians attend, and the spirit of prayer has happily obtained at the recent meetings. Many have proved them to be times of real refreshing.

SOUTH LONDON CHOIR.—The calls upon this choir are now so numerous that those who are able to assist are earnestly requested to send their names and addresses to the Hon. Sec., Dr. Dobbie, Moorgate-street Hall, E.C. No fee or examination is required, and attendance only expected when able to give it.

SUNDAY REST ASSOCIATION.—The Society for Promoting the Voluntary Closing of Shops on Sundays (7, Whitehall, S.W.) employs ten agents in the Sunday-trading fairs of London, who go two and two, using no other principle than persuasion. They seek to persuade men to rest on God's holy Day, and their labours have been crowned with wonderful success. The Society asks for the earnest prayers of all Christians, that the sin of buying and selling on God's holy Day may soon be altogether done away with.

COFFEE PALACES.—In the neighbourhood of Holloway (just among the working men) there is a fine house, built and fitted up within the last four or five years as a gin-palace, but which has not been licensed. This place can be secured on very moderate terms, and is just suitable for a first-rate coffee palace and working men's club. It is believed that after the first outlay of fitting-up, &c., it will be self-supporting. The following gentlemen have kindly consented to receive contributions, and to see that the money is properly applied:—Rev. T. G. Atkinson, Campbourne-road, Hornsey, N.; Rev. William Cuff, 5, Palestine-place, Cambridge-heath, E.

LONDON HEATHEN.

BY A WORKER CONNECTED WITH MR. BOOTH'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

AH! this is the place, to be sure. You see the great gin-palace there? That may be called the established church of the neighbourhood; and here is the dissenting place of the worship in the shape of a little public-house with red blinds. This pawnbroker's shop is beautifully handy, is it not? and there is a rag-shop opposite, where customers can be suited on easier terms. Let us just go under the archway and down the street.

Dirty stucco-fronted houses. Plenty of brown-paper squares of glass in the windows. Most of the doors stand perpetually open, for each passage is a public thoroughfare for three or four large families, and a playground for a lot of little children, who take care of themselves to the best of their ability.

That fine lad, carrying the load of sticks, with a sackcloth jacket ripped at the shoulder and out at the elbows, and these little children, with bare feet and head, and the woman there, in a brown velveteen jacket with the top buttons off, leaving a bare chest, and that man opposite, in his shirt-sleeves, with his face covered with stubby hair that will have to go on growing till he goes to the barber's again next Sunday morning—you need not trouble to ask any of them whether there are any teetotalers in their house. It is all too plain. A flood of drink has been here. See, there is the dark, horrid tide-mark everywhere; but oh! how many are covered over—gone already—God only knows.

ARE THERE NO GOOD PEOPLE?

Let us try and find some of the better ones.

"Good afternoon!" from a cheery-looking woman, with a basket on her arm, who comes bustling along the pavement. "Wet, isn't it? I am sure it's a wonder we poor people don't all have the rheumatics, for there's no keeping your feet dry anyhow. We have to stand in the wet and walk in the wet all day long."

"If you only get to a comfortable home when it's all over, ma'am."

"If we do; but we aren't like to, I'm sure, for we don't any of us shape that way."

"How is it that people live on so, when they know all the time they are going wrong?"

"Well, we like the devil's ways better than the other. That's just the truth, and there's no use denying it."

"Ah, that's it! It's as well to speak out. But how awful to cling to the things that are cursing and ruining us all the time, when God is so ready to save us!"

"Yes, that's true. I hope the merciful God will forgive me some time, I'm sure." And taking a little book, with a "Thank you, good afternoon," she is off again. Off again, headlong to hell, with her eyes open all the time, and the truth of Christ on her careless lips like an idle tale!

The woman in the brown jacket is very anxious I should go into her house. She considers the street a wicked place, certainly; but she has a considerable respect for good things (especially in the way of coals and blankets, I daresay), and she says her prayers regularly. Her face, though undoubtedly that of a drunkard, is wonderfully frank. She boasts a whole house, too, though how many lodgers she accommodates in the four rooms, besides her five children, I only guess at from stray hints at several. Her husband is a cooftermonger, and they have a "donkey" of their own, so that altogether the woman has a right to hold her head up, I suppose.

"As to knowing whether we are right, of course that is a thing for everyone to answer for themselves," she says; "but as for me, I'm sure God has been very good to me. He has brought me out of all my troubles, and I'm sure He always will. When my poor old mother lay a-dying—and she was in great pain—I got down on my knees and asked God to take her out of her misery, and as sure as I stand here—and the people as was there could tell you too—the words was no sooner out of my mouth than my mother's breath left her body. There, that's a miracle, and I've seen many such. I always go to God in my troubles, and He always answers me."

"But have you ever asked Him to forgive your sins, and has He done it?"

"Well, I can tell you I feel a great comfort in my heart whenever I pray, and when they was out a-preaching the other Sunday I went out and stood near to help them to sing. But when I went to Mr. Smith's to get my dinner-beer the next day they set upon me awful about it, and called me all the names they could think of. And the language! But I say, let everyone be left to do as they please about such things."

Poor creature, nothing I could say seemed to create a doubt in her mind that she was

ONE OF THE EXCELLENT OF THE EARTH.

The furniture of her house might possibly raise ten shillings. She showed me "all her children's clothes" hanging on a six-foot line in the back-yard, and all their bedding lay in a basket in the back-room. So she, and thousands more, live, and talk, and die, and are lost, in the capital of England, leaving families trained to follow in the same path.

A grey-headed woman begs me to step into her room. "I thought you were one of the gentlemen that go about. Mr. — was here yesterday, and stopped ten minutes. He baptized the poor child, and made such a nice prayer."

We walked into a back-room almost filled up with a bed, a dressing-table with a loaf and three cups on it, a box, and two cane chairs. On the bed, in his clothes, lay a poor little sickly boy two or three years of age, with a dirty face, and wrists the size of a thumb. "Sinking fast, poor dear," she said. "The doctor says nothing more can be done for him." And several times during the course of a quarter of an hour she turned and looked at him afresh, assuring me that "he couldn't live long." She had no need to add, "He is not my own, you know."

"Have you got your sins forgiven?"

"Well, as to praying, you see, if one kneels down to pray in this house something always seems to come to interrupt. I can assure you I was not always in such circumstances, for I used to have two rooms till lately, but my man has been sick twice for three months each time, and so I was forced to give up the front room. But he's a good man as ever was, and has been a teetotaler thirty years."

Poor fellow! I thought, as she kept repeating this fact with her breath reeking of gin.

"The people in the front room abuse me dreadfully because I won't drink with them, and I'm sure it was so with the poor man that lays dead upstairs. He was a well-intentioned man as ever was, I'm sure."

"Was he a Christian, then?"

"Well, he never went to church or chapel, or any of that; but when they used to come out into the open air in front he would always sit at the window and listen, and he never got drunk, and such-like."

"But you know God is willing to forgive our sins, and unless we do get them forgiven we can never go to heaven. I've been as bad a sinner as anyone here, but I have asked God to forgive me, for the sake of his Son who died for us, and He has done it, and I am so happy now."

"Well, I'm sure I never feel such comfort now as I used to when I used to pray, but, as I tell you, one cannot pray here in this street. I used to spend hours—ay, days and nights I've spent in visiting and nursing the sick, and I always used to do all I could for anyone that was in trouble."

"But you know we have all sinned?"

"Oh, yes; though I never went so far as some, you know, yet, in my young days, no doubt I did things like all young people do, you know."

"And unless we get our sins forgiven, if we live the most moral life, and do all sorts of good things to people, we shall be certain to go to hell after all."

She assents, and turns to the child. I propose prayer, and when she has done examining the poor little sufferer again, to see if he is not going yet, she kneels while in conscious helplessness I entreat God to open her blind eyes and save her from impending destruction. I leave her with a sad heart, for I must have a word with some more.

More! alas, I will take you along miles of streets and squares where the people will talk to you in almost the same terms about religion! They are living and dying, "perishing for lack of knowledge" which is within their reach, but which none of them will ever hear of, unless it is forced upon their attention.

[We do not suppose it is possible that our readers can fully enter into the feelings of those who, like the writer of the above sketch, have devoted their lives to work for Christ in the East-end of London, where there is little to encourage, and much to dishearten and depress. But they can, at any rate, show their sympathy with such self-denying labours by removing all anxiety on the part of the labourers with respect to the support of the missions under their care. There are none who could more properly or discreetly relieve the physical as well as the spiritual destitution of the East-end, than the agents of such missions as those of Mr. Booth, Mr. Holland, Mr. Lewis, and kindred workers.

As a rule, however, they are not only unable to do so, but are often in great straits as to the maintenance of their own immediate work.—Ed.]

EDINBURGH THEATRES.

We mentioned last week the Edinburgh ministers were holding conference with respect to the increasing number of theatres in that city. A correspondent has since sent to us a copy of a pastoral address issued by the Free Presbytery of Edinburgh on the subject. We are only able to make the following extracts, at the same time expressing our concurrence in the fear of our correspondent that there is a growing spirit of worldliness in many quarters:—

"Considering the manifold temptations to which the members of the Christian Church are in these days exposed, it is with great solicitude that we have observed the rapid increase, within the city, of places for theatrical representations. It is to your duty in relation to this ominous fact that we at this time more especially direct your attention.

"What, then, is your duty in relation to the theatre? and what your duty to your children in relation to Christmas pantomimic exhibitions? We earnestly urge you to consider and determine, as before the Lord, what it becomes you to do, or not to do—always remembering that as Christ was in the world, so are you to be in the world. For your life as Christians is nothing else than a walking not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, in the continuous imitation of Christ.

It is not with an ideal theatre or drama that, as practical Christians, you have to do. . . . We ask you to bear in mind, first, that the theatre in this country has not in the past been a school of virtue or morality. It has been the ally and the occasion of much immorality and sin. Evidence of this is furnished by the undeniable fact that public-houses and dens of immorality have multiplied in the neighbourhood of theatres, and that many have traced their first marked declension from the paths of virtue to their visits to the theatre. Can it be that any countenance to such an institution is compatible with your prayer, 'Lead us not into temptation,' or with your solemn vows at the table of the Lord?

"We do not oppose or condemn recreations, amusements, and exercises which are in themselves innocent, healthful, and improving. We would willingly and heartily encourage and promote these. We cannot, however, shut our eyes to the injurious influence which the spirit of the world exercises at present over not a few of the members of Christian families, and to the varied ways in which this worldly spirit manifests itself; and, instead of promoting this spirit, we ought earnestly to pray for those who have been brought under its influence. We affectionately exhort the people under our charge to avoid all that is fitted, in any degree, to excite the Divine jealousy, and to arrest the working of the Spirit of God among us. 'For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.' (2 Cor. vi. 14-18.)"

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The friends of the Children's Special Service Mission will rejoice to hear that Mr. Spiers is now, through God's mercy, restored to health, and feels strong enough to recommence his labours amongst the children. Another of our friends—Mr. J. W. Jordan—whose work amongst the young at Nottingham, Chesterfield, Chelmsford, and other places, has been very greatly blessed, is also able, for the present at least, to undertake children's services in country towns. May I ask you, therefore, kindly to make known through THE CHRISTIAN that we shall now be glad to arrange for such services.

71, Thistle-grove, West Brompton, S.W. T. B. BISHOP.

BURTON LONSDALE.—The week before last, Rev. W. H. Aitken conducted a week's services at Burton Lonsdale, a village in a remote part of the extreme north of Yorkshire. No similar effort has ever been made in the place before, at least in connexion with the Church of England, and strong prejudices had to be combated in organizing the mission. From the first, however, considerable interest was manifested in the services, the congregation having increased in numbers until the church was crowded. Every night a considerable number remained behind to be spoken with, and there is every reason to believe that a good work has been begun, which will be vigorously followed up by the vicar of the parish. It is stated by some of the oldest inhabitants of the place—Nonconformists—that such a stir and anxiety about spiritual things as has been awakened has never been known before.

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

"LET us go to Bethlehem,"
Where the Royal Infant lies;
We have seen his glorious star
Shining in the eastern skies.
And the wise men from afar,
With their costly offerings came,
Bowed before his royal feet,
Softly breathed his kingly name.
"Let us go to Bethlehem,"—
Thus the wondering shepherds spoke,
When, above, the heavenly choir
Into adoration broke.
Joy and rapture filled their hearts,
Bowed with anxious thought before;
Now the "Hope of Israel" lives,
They will tremble never more.
"Let us go to Bethlehem"
While the careless world doth feast;
We by faith may see his star
Gleaming in the radiant east;
And from that beloved spot
Turn with trust our longing eyes,
Where the promised Morning-star
Soon shall light the darkening skies.
To the hearts that lowly wait
For their coming Saviour-King,
Shall the rising of that Star
Everlasting glory bring.

M. W.

TO THE MOTHERS OF ENGLAND.

MY DEAR SISTERS,—I come to ask your prayers for the Young Men's Christian Association, and to beg of you to use your all-powerful influence on its behalf. Train your sons to love it, to join it, to sustain it; realize its great catholicity. It knows no name but the one name Christ Jesus, and all who join it are brothers above theological distinction.

It does a work of its own, and it wants the sympathy of Christian mothers—it wants their prayers. A lady said to my husband the other day, "I never pass your gates but I offer up a prayer to God to bless you in your work,"—and this is what we do want. Look around you, my dear sister—see the prison-van; see the race-course; see the betting alleys; see the gambling, music, and dancing saloons; the dens of iniquity of every kind,—and then see if our sons do not need our prayers.

London alone teems with young men; our prisons are full of them. Lately, the Model Prison had nearly a thousand convicts in it, many of whom were well-educated young men. The late death-knell in Newgate appeals to your mother's heart; who can be callous to it? Young men are tempted! Young men are falling! Young men are dying! Come to the rescue and save them, before the destroyer secures them.

Yours, living for them, SARAH P. ATKINSON.
The Priory, 198, Upper-street, Islington, London, N.

EDINBURGH CASTLE—Dr. Barnardo has arranged with Mr. Lambert Gore to read, on Monday evening, Jan. 3, at eight, "Mother's Last Words," and "Jessica's First Prayer."

GREENWICH.—As the Railway Hall is to be pulled down immediately, the Tuesday evening services, and the Thursday prayer-meeting at noon, can no longer be held there. For the present the latter will be carried on in the schoolroom under St. Mark's Church, South-street. During the "Week of Prayer," from Jan. 3 to 8 inclusive, special united prayer-meetings will be held from twelve to one daily in the Mission Room, Green-lane, South-street, Greenwich.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TEMPERANCE UNION.—In the notice of the meeting of the Union, in THE CHRISTIAN of last week, it should have been stated that all correspondence with reference to the formation of Branch Unions in the country should be addressed to Miss Weston, Sailors' Rest, Devonport, who is the hon. sec. for the provinces. Requests for prayer, and all inquiries respecting the organization of meetings in London and surroundings, to be addressed to Miss Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn-park, N.W. A list of Gospel temperance literature is being prepared by the Union; also of books on the medical and physiological aspects of the question. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN kindly send specimens to Miss Mason—such as are suitable to the educated classes especially?

EVANGELIZATION IN SWANSEA.

SOME time since we published an interesting account of a series of special services at Swansea, conducted mainly by the agents of the Evangelization Society. From a most valuable and temperate report of this movement, which is now before us, we extract the following testimony as to the results of these efforts:—

Some few months ago it was positively a painful ordeal to pass through one of the large iron works in this district. The men employed there were noted for their terrible depravity. Earning high wages, many of them spent their money in debauchery, leaving their homes neglected and miserable. Now a most marked change has taken place. A few of the leading hands were induced to visit the tent, and there God's Holy Spirit met them. They were convinced of sin, found peace in Christ, and went away with a desire to lead a new life.

With a courage which only Christ could give them, they at once made an open profession of Christianity before their comrades, and set to work diligently to reclaim others, so that now God has a faithful band of servants in these works once so infamous in wickedness. Prayer-meetings are now held there every day (sometimes at five o'clock in the morning); and as the visitor passes through the buildings, instead of swearing and foul language he hears the sweet hymn of praise and the kindly words of brotherly affection. At present the unconverted men in these works appear as if awed into silence, and the morale of the entire community is in consequence greatly improved.

It is most important also to note that the converted workmen are proving themselves in many instances to be the best workmen on the premises, and are attracting the somewhat surprised notice of those who are set over them. A manifest improvement has also taken place in the homes of these men. Many of the wives and children have been so much impressed by the blessed change in their husbands and fathers, that they too have accepted the great salvation, and in many instances whole families have been brought to Christ. Some of the recent ringleaders in almost every kind of evil are now the foremost in doing good to their fellows, and in promoting the well-being of their homes.

The second general instance of the great blessing that has followed the evangelistic services is afforded in the Mumbles. This village is almost entirely inhabited by fishermen and oyster-dredgers—a bold and brave class of people, but most of them utterly careless and reckless, and frequently dissipated. Nothing was able to induce very many of these poor fellows to go to the house of God, and so in numerous instances they lived without the pale of Gospel teaching. But when the tent was erected in their midst, many of them, attracted by the unusual sight and also by the singing, came to the door to see and listen. By degrees they were drawn inside, and there learnt they were sinners, and Christ their Saviour. A goodly number of these wild fellows have thus experienced the new birth, and are manifesting this in a completely altered life.

At a large meeting held in the Mumbles only a few days ago, I heard a gentleman of position, who resides in the neighbourhood, state publicly that a change for the better had taken place in the entire village. He believed, from his own personal observation, the work done was real, and would in the majority of cases prove permanent.

In referring to individual instances of blessing, such a large number have come under my own immediate notice, and they are all so interesting, that I scarcely know which to select. But I give the two following as examples of many similar ones:—

A young man (foreman of one of the works) came to a tent service, was there convinced of sin, and eventually found peace and the new life in Jesus. The next night he brought his wife, who, too, believed to the saving of her soul; and on the following night she induced another relative to accompany her, who also found Christ. This young woman in her turn persuaded her mother to come, who was likewise brought to the Saviour. I have since had the pleasure of meeting these four persons at one of their houses, and was much impressed with their earnest faith and simple piety.

In one case, all the young people engaged in a large shop, and in another case, three servants residing in one family, have been blessed through the tent services.

FALLEN ASLEEP.—On Wednesday morning, Dec. 15, quite suddenly, JOSEPH APPERLEY, Hillfield, Stroud, aged 68.

REVIVAL AT THE ANTIPODES.

Our kind friend Mrs. Barbour favours us with the following interesting extracts of letters received from Australia, telling of the Lord's work there:—

Great works are going on up here. It began on Sunday night; and ever since, praise God, it has been getting brighter and brighter. The first night there were about twenty-five inquirers, the second night thirty-five, and so on. If I were to tell you who was among the inquirers to-night, you could scarcely believe it: it was Mr. —.

These are indeed times of blessing for us. First we had the young, now the old. We are to have a love-feast on Sunday afternoon instead of school, and I am sure it will indeed be such, as there are not less than fifty brought in at this time. I know how you will sympathize and pray for us all. I did not feel happy while I was listening to the preaching, but after I had gone to bed I was praying, and such a thrill of joy went through me from seeing that my sins were all washed away. May God keep us all faithful to the end.

The mother of this young convert adds:—

The trophies of redeeming love have been wonderful. The first inquirer was little B—, a boy of ten years old. It was the day on which we had special sermons preached on account of a new Sabbath-school being erected. The Town Missionary preached, and after the evening service we had a prayer-meeting. Little B— was the first to show he wanted salvation; a number of the boys of the Sabbath-school followed his example; and oh, how God showed his approval, by giving them such evidence of his love that neither themselves nor those in charge of them could doubt.

One young man went up to his widowed mother, put his arm round her neck, and wanted her to get the same blessing. It was some nights after she was brought to be of one mind with her son. I was there that night, and, like the poor cripple at the Beautiful Gate, she became a wonder to all who knew her. There were two other boys whose care for their mothers was great. They brought them both to the meeting, where they remained as inquirers; both were elderly women, both grandmothers, and they seldom came to the house of God. One said the way her son talked to her would have melted any heart. One may say that all the girls of the Sabbath-school have professed to come to Jesus. There are a number of aged men, heads of families, whom you would have thought it a marvel to have seen coming among inquirers before so great a congregation.

From another correspondent we have received details of a good work at Windsor and Richmond, New South Wales. We quote the following with respect to the meetings at Windsor:—

The first morning prayer-meeting (seven o'clock) was attended by twenty-two. This number constantly increased, until they had a crowded room. Petitions for prayers were numerous and varied. All the rough boys and men, and the thoughtless girls, gathered to the church. Numbers flocked to church and parsonage to be conversed with. A regular stream of people stayed to the after-meeting, and found it the best of all.

On Sunday morning the change was wonderful. The school has been in a bad state for want of teachers; the children wild and disorderly. This morning the majority of them were hushed and earnest, some with bright, happy faces, some with serious ones—big, rude boys sitting quiet and attentive. A number of men were waiting to offer themselves as teachers.

It has been a very wonderful time—such a hush and rest upon the town; such a deep, earnest feeling; such a quiet, orderly, real work; and such a spirit of brotherhood. Everyone came to church; the Congregational church was closed, and minister and flock came. There were drunkards, and little children, night after night, eagerly coming; girls we regarded as utterly giddy and flighty, sitting there crying quietly; old people learning like little children—no words can describe it.

The Rev. P. Campbell writes from Sydney:—I am glad to tell you that a quiet and steady Revival blessing is being felt throughout many portions of this colony.

I am busily engaged as a Voluntary Missionary, labouring in the cities, towns, villages, gaols, hospitals, outlying pastoral, farming, and gold-mining districts. I have had very cheering evidences of blessed spiritual good resulting from the various services. May I ask that your readers will pray for myself and work?

The Lord has inclined my heart to endeavour to build three small Mission (Christian and non-denominational) churches in the Monaro district of New South Wales. The names of the places where I purpose erecting them are Duke's Springs, Jindabyne, and Kiandra. The churches will be fifty miles apart, and managed by local committees. No Christian church exists at present at the three places I have named. At only one of them is there any school.

My Mission is aided by no society; but the Lord various Christians of different denominations to send or give voluntary contributions to aid my great work. Any kind friends may aid this work of God by sending their donations to "Peter Campbell, Voluntary Bush and Gold Field Missionary, Box 138, General Post-office, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia;" or to "Miss Campbell, 60, North Castle-Street, Edinburgh, Scotland."

"WEEP WITH THEM THAT WEEP."

"The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away."—Job. i. 21.

THE hand of affliction has fallen heavily on our dear brother James Scroggie and his wife. Their four little children—the whole of their family—have all been taken away. The eldest, a little boy of six, was taken about a fortnight ago. Then fever entered their home, and on Sunday, the 12th, two more were called away; the only remaining child, little Janie, followed the next day.

They are at present residing at Annan, in Dumfriesshire, where they have only been for a few weeks, during which time the doctor has scarcely been out of their house. Their stripped and desolated home seemed to be almost more than they could bear, and Mr. and Mrs. Dunn have rejoiced to take the dear stricken ones to their home in the meanwhile.

They are most graciously sustained in their deep sorrow; and when Mr. Dunn asked his beloved fellow-labourer in the Gospel what he could do for him, Mr. Scroggie's answer was, "Just praise the Lord, Mr. Dunn." Mr. Scroggie feels it impossible to write to all his friends, so has asked that this notice might be forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN by way of intimation, and also that thus the prayers of believers may be secured on his and his wife's behalf.

After the death of the eldest, the others talked so much about heaven that their parents feel now that it has been quite prophetic,—as if their little hearts were so fixed there that they could not keep away; and as the parents were standing round their little coffins yesterday, it almost seemed as though they heard their children singing in heaven.

Such a sorrow, which is of no ordinary kind, will, we are sure, call forth more than ordinary sympathy from the Lord's people. We think that God must be preparing our brother for more special service even than he has been called to before. His desire and that of his beloved wife is that God may be glorified in this sore trial. We are sure that the Lord will not fail them. "For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ" (2 Cor. i. 5.)

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.

ON Thursday evening last, Dec. 16, the members of the Lawyers' Prayer Union invited several of the law clerks, and others connected with the legal profession, to tea and a subsequent meeting in the Doughty Hall, Bedford-row. The meeting was well attended, though perhaps not quite so largely as on some previous occasions. Mr. Robert Baxter presided, and several leading solicitors were present on the platform.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Inskip, of Bristol, and Mr. Gresham, the Chief Clerk at the Mansion House, who made a solemn and earnest appeal to those present to decide at once to be on the Lord's side. The meeting was then thrown open, when several clerks from the body of the hall gave valuable testimony to the benefit they had derived from the Union.

Mr. Croome, of Stroud, then delivered an able address on "Prayer," which was followed by silent prayer; and, after a few remarks from Mr. C. V. Child, the meeting was closed by the chairman.

It is a pity that the opportunities afforded by the Lawyers' Prayer Union are not more extensively known among the members of the profession; an agency of the kind is of great value to those who know the power of prayer amid the temptations incident thereto; and the help derived from Christian union and sympathy should induce many to join it. Any information will gladly be supplied by the Honorary Secretary, Mr. H. C. Nisbet, 35, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.

BLACKHEATH.—The "Week of Prayer" meetings, held hitherto in the Alexandra Rooms, will (D.V.) be carried on in the schoolroom of the Congregational Church, Blackheath, from Jan. 3 to 8 inclusive, daily from 9 to 10 a.m.

WOOLWICH SOLDIERS' HOME AND MISSION HALL.

ALL who are interested in the Lord's work will be glad to hear that the Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall at Woolwich is to be opened, if the Lord will, next month. Mrs. Digby Dent, a lady who has been working amongst soldiers at Portsmouth and its neighbourhood during the last six months, and whose efforts to bring some to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus have been owned and blessed of God, has accepted the post of Superintendent, and she will be assisted by her sister Miss Robertson, who has also been working with her at Portsmouth.

Nothing is now wanted but the necessary funds to complete the furnishing of the Home; £350 is needed for this, and an earnest appeal is made to the Lord's stewards thus to use some of the talents committed to their care, so that this most desirable institution may be opened free of debt.

There is to be a library for the use of those attending the Home, to which Christian authors and friends are asked to contribute suitable books. Those interested in this work believe that it is only needed to make known their wants to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to cause them to respond warmly to this appeal.

Contributions may be sent to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN; to Colonel John Travers, Langholm-villas, Shooter's-hill; or to Lieut.-Colonel W. D. Forster (Hon. Sec. and Treasurer), Herbert-road, Woolwich.

HOME OF INDUSTRY,

COMMERCIAL-STREET, SPITALFIELDS.

MY BELOVED FRIENDS AND READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN,"—These ten years, through your kindness at this season, it has been our privilege to "send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared," making the widows and fatherless "sing with joy."

Hitherto we have given dinners to the thousand we try to influence weekly; but our borders in the past year have been greatly enlarged through the Lord sending us efficient voluntary fellow-helpers. Therefore, this season, we desire to brighten literally "the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind," lying in hospitals and workhouses around us. This is a day of glad tidings, and we do not well to hold selfishly the love with which He has filled us.

It is not always money the Lord requireth of us; our people crave sympathy from us. No more joyful service on earth than to seek out his poor members, and listen to their patient, uncomplaining songs. Stoop low, and listen to the last words of the dying mother, as, with her last breath, she commits her three fatherless children to your care.

On Christmas-day, think of us in our Home in Spitalfields, entertaining right royally on true English fare our gathered-in family of waifs of all ages, of either sex, and, like ourselves, many lonely ones who have few kindred here. On Jan. 6, Dr. Mackay, of Hull, will speak to our widows. Christmas-trees given to hospitals and workhouses after Jan. 10.

Yours in gratitude for every loving thought and helping hand,
ANNIE MACPHERSON.

WORTHY OF REMEMBRANCE.—A friend truly says:—At this season of general benevolence amongst the poor, there seems to be a class of persons almost entirely overlooked. I mean those who labour for their spiritual good—the Scripture-readers, Bible-women, and Mission-women. I know several cases where the poor man earns his 20s., and in some cases 25s. weekly, and receives a substantial gift at Christmas; but the spiritual labourer, receiving 12s. or 15s. weekly, is entirely forgotten, or considered not to need it. Perhaps if you would make this public through your valuable journal, that class may meet with a little encouragement; for surely their work is too often very discouraging.

POLICEMEN AND POSTMEN.—May I, through your paper, answer some of the many letters of inquiry about my health and the progress of the work amongst policemen and postmen? For the past few months I have suffered so frequently from a most distressing noise in my head, which, added to usual ailments, unfits me for much brain-work, and, consequently, many letters from kind friends have been either insufficiently answered or entirely laid aside. Will your readers pray that, if it be possible, these new sufferings may be relieved? As regards work, I can only further say that, on the few brighter days, I am only too glad to do my utmost to further this cause; and though sending out far fewer packets myself, God helps wonderfully. One lady has taken several hundred of my men, to whom she sends packets as fast as I can pay the expenses, so the need for funds is always great.

SUFFERERS FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

THE following narrative is extracted from a letter sent by Dr. Douglas, Medical Missionary at Amoy, China, in connexion with the Foreign Mission of the English Presbyterian Church. The Missionary Record of that body, in the December number of which the narrative appears, contains from month to month deeply interesting reports of the work in China, Formosa, &c.:

Last Sabbath I was at Ju-hoey-kio. A considerable number of the Christians there are suffering much for the Gospel; they have been robbed and plundered over and over. When they come to church, they must travel by roundabout, unfrequented routes, as the people of a powerful robber-village are almost constantly watching to seize them. Just while we were at the communion, one of their cows was carried off. They have made complaint in due legal form nine times to the various mandarins, gradually rising from the local magistrate to the prefect, but they can get no redress. So also in the neighbouring congregation of Aw-sai, a family have been plundered and driven away from their home, and have made about the same number of applications to the mandarins, but with no result. In like manner at Tung-kio, the half-built chapel lies in ruins, and the very ruins are being stolen, and no help is given.

Sabbath week I was in Chin-chew; there also the poor men are still in prison, and the new chapel cannot be got. Yet the company of Christians continues firm, and even increases. No one there has gone back through all these troubles. I had, indeed, the sad duty of excommunicating two men; but they had quite apostatized some time before the troubles began; and another, whose excommunication had been authorized by the Presbytery, has returned, showing signs of penitence, so that we did not need to carry out the sentence. Truly in the midst of the violent opposition of the powerful Literati of Chin-chew, God has wonderfully shown his grace and power in watching over his little flock in that city. In the neighbourhood of An-hai, several of the Christians continue to suffer much persecution without any apparent hope of redress.

CHRIST THE YOUNG MEN'S EXAMPLE.

DR. OSWALD DYKES, of Regent-square Church, lectured to the young men in Exeter Hall, on the evening of Tuesday fortnight, on the subject which heads this brief notice. Viewed intellectually, the address was full of that ripe and chastened eloquence which characterizes Dr. Dykes' pulpit efforts; in every respect it was worthy, as far as human thought and speech can make it so, of the great theme—the greatest of all themes—God manifest in the flesh.

Having sketched in bold, clear outlines the peculiar circumstances and dangers of that period of life stretching from youth to manhood, Dr. Dykes held up Christ—as his character is revealed to us—as the one eminently suited to meet and satisfy our highest and noblest cravings after sympathy and strength, and as our "perfect example" in striving after real, true, and manly life. We give the substance of his closing words:—I hope that what I have tried to say may help you to a choice for life. I hope some of you will feel a little more confidence that there is one Person who can help you, and who does understand you; from whom no youthful indiscretion or secret folly needs to be hid; who can make allowance where allowance is just, and correct you where correction is needful; in whose hand you can trust yourself, and who will prove Himself a wise friend, a generous deliverer, and a strong and noble Master.

If we put the development of our character and the formation of our manhood into Christ's management, He will make us, like Himself, free, but subject in love to the will of our Father, strong and wise of understanding, and above all feebleness of sentiment, as becomes men, yet with the boyishness and simplicity of children; large-sighted and wide-hearted in our sympathies, while ever bent on life's one great end,—the advancement of our King's kingdom; young, bright, and fresh, though sober and temperate, manly in our youth, and in our manhood youthful. So shall we advance towards an old age that shall be mellowed with the sunset hope of a larger and broader day beyond this life.

THE HELPING HAND—a little illustrated pamphlet, by Miss DAVIES (Herbert, 117, Grafton-street, Dublin)—gives some "Stories of the Coombe Boys' Home," which ought to awaken an interest in the work of that institution, and lead many to give "a helping hand" to those waifs and strays to whom such aid may be the beginning of a new and endless life.

NOTES OF REVIVAL WORK.

HARBOLD.

EVANGELISTIC services are being conducted here by Mr. and Mrs. Croxford (of Hastings), whose labours during the past five weeks have been graciously owned and blessed by God. Many a name is, we trust, added to the list of redeemed in the Lamb's book of life.

The Lord's people are asked to unite in heartfelt prayer that these evangelistic services, which will be continued through the winter, may redound to the honour and glory of God, and that many, many precious souls may be led to Him.

FARNSFIELD, NOTTINGHAM.

A friend writes:—On Saturday last I preached two sermons, and next day at the Wesleyan chapel there. On Monday morning I was requested by the leaders to give a Gospel address in the evening. I consented, and they sent a crier round the village, as no announcement had been made the previous day. The place was filled, and there was decided blessing.

WALTON.

Mr. W. W. Martin, of the Evangelization Society, has lately visited Walton and Trimley, Suffolk. Will Christians praise God for abundant answer to prayer in manifest blessing, chiefly at the former place?

VINEGAR GROUNDS, CITY-ROAD, E.C.

Last week, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the special services were exceedingly encouraging, and much good seems to have been done in bringing in some who had never attended a place of worship.

COMBER, COUNTY DOWN.

Very successful meetings have been held here during the past two weeks. On the fifth night of the meeting, about fifty persons remained for the "inquiry meeting." Since that time the number of souls anxiously seeking the Lord at the after-meetings has been on the increase, and many have evidently found peace at these meetings.

BAILIEBOROUGH.

The Rev. O. L. Leonard writes—I am happy to say that a great work is going on here. Many young men are among the converts, and they are coming out bold and strong for Christ.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH.

A series of evangelistic services in connexion with the French Protestant Church in the West of London has been held in the Lecture Hall of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Leysfield-road, Shepherd's-bush. There was a good attendance of native French, resident in the locality of Hammersmith and Kensington. In these localities there is need of religious accommodation and means of grace for the French-speaking population resident there. Christian friends have, therefore, inaugurated this effort, and earnestly invite the sympathy and co-operation of Christians of any country or denomination.

LONG SUTTON, LINCOLNSHIRE.

Mr. F. Monk, of the Evangelization Society, has been holding a series of Gospel meetings in the Corn Exchange with blessed results. God's people have been refreshed, numbers have been awakened, and some precious souls have found the Saviour.

KEYNSHAM, BRISTOL.

The Lord's people at one of the United Methodists' Free Churches here were gladdened at the close of last Sunday night's service by seeing ten penitents seeking for mercy, one being an old woman seventy-eight years of age. During the singing of the hymn "Almost persuaded," a lady in the singing gallery was so overcome that she burst into tears, and joined those in the inquiry-room, where God spoke peace to her troubled soul.—A. H.

SKIBBEREEN (IRELAND).—During the past three weeks a series of revival meetings have been held here by the general missionary, Rev. J. S. M'Dade, resulting in many conversions. A notable feature in the movement is the restoration of several prominent backsliders. Most of the young people of a large congregation have given their hearts to God, and showed their love by working for Jesus. The good work is spreading in the country districts around, especially in one place where a few devoted men have long been working and praying for a revival. The droppings of a glorious shower have fallen in Ballydehob, where the general missionary was to commence his labours on Sunday, the 12th inst.

A YEAR OF GRACE FOR CHINA.

FOR many months some kind friend (unknown) has supplied me with a copy of THE CHRISTIAN. Will you allow me in this manner to present to that friend my heartiest thanks? At the same time, I feel it my duty to say that much good has been derived from the perusal of the copy sent, both by myself and others. The reports of the work of God in Great Britain, Ireland, and on the Continent, especially of the glorious meetings under the direction of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have been refreshing to read even so far off, and so long after the events recorded had transpired.

You will be glad, I doubt not, to hear that this has been a year of grace to the missionaries resident in the three adjacent cities of Hankow, Hanyang, and Wuchang. During the first week of January we met for united prayer. The meetings were attended by members of the American Episcopal Mission, of the London Missionary Society, of the China Inland Mission, and of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. They were all of them remarkable for the manifestation of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Men of such different Churches and creeds, and of different nations, were united together in the holiest of bonds—namely, those of true Christian brotherhood. It was felt by all that, in order to improve the state of our mission work, we ourselves must be afresh baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire.

It was decided to meet monthly to pray together over our own spiritual life, and over the spiritual life of the native churches committed to our care. So far these monthly gatherings have been better than we ventured even to hope for. Indeed, the Lord has been present in our midst, and several of our number have been enabled to consecrate themselves afresh and fully to the Master's holy service, and have proved Him able to save "to the uttermost."

As might have been expected, the native Christians have felt the influence of the revived life of their pastors. In the church in connexion with the London Mission a week of special services has been held, and such sights and sounds as are seldom seen and heard in China were there witnessed. At some of the meetings the presence of the Divine Spirit was so powerfully manifested that many shed tears, and prayed with emotion that refused to be controlled. We trust, and not without good reason, that whilst we are being quickened and blest, our native fellow-believers are being similarly favoured. For the "droppings" we are thankful, very thankful, but we look for, long for, cry out for, the "shower."

May I not ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to make China a special subject of daily prayer, especially now when political complications threaten us with the dire prospect of war?

Yours truly,
Hankow, China.
WILLIAM SCARBOROUGH,
Wesleyan Missionary.

[The prospect of war is happily now removed.—Ed.]

A LETTER FROM MRS. BARNARDO.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—I write on behalf of my husband and myself, to return our most grateful thanks to all your readers who have so kindly aided us with gifts for our annual sale, which was held last week at Willis's Rooms. Not yet being able to estimate our expenses, we cannot say how much the sale realized; but we think it was, on the whole, much more successful than last year's, and in a short time I hope to acquaint your readers with the exact result.

Many articles remain unsold, and we hope to dispose of them during the first week of the New Year, at a sale to be held in the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, on Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 5 and 6. In addition to this, I have still about fifteen boxes filled with fancy articles, to the value of £5 each box, and I shall be glad to send a box to any lady in the country who will kindly undertake to dispose of the contents among her friends, on behalf of our work among the children.

The work of the Christmas and winter season presses heavily on us both, so that I must not now write more, but would once again express our sincere and heartfelt gratitude to all who have, in however slight a way, contributed to the success of our annual sale.

18-20, Stepney Causeway, E. SYBIE L. BARNARDO.

YORK.—At a meeting in connexion with the Methodist Free Church Missions held here on Monday, Mr. Leeman, one of the members for that city, said that the present Mission was one of those efforts promoted by the Established Church, and upon which the blessing of God had ever rested. He urged those present to give that effort all the assistance in their power by their presence and their prayers. He trusted that the Spirit of God would rest upon the Mission and on the minister who had come to their city, and whom he believed to be thoroughly imbued by the Spirit of God.

WEEK OF PRAYER,

JANUARY 2-9, 1876.

THE following are the arrangements for the meetings to be held by the Evangelical Alliance, at

WILLIS'S ROOMS,

King-street, St. James's, S.W., each morning at eleven o'clock.

MONDAY, JAN. 3.—"Thanksgiving and Confession": A retrospect of the past year. The Rev. H. C. Billing, president.

TUESDAY, JAN. 4.—"Prayer for the Church of Christ": For the members recently added to the Church; for the union of true believers in fraternal fellowship and active co-operation; for the removal of error, the increase of godliness, and a clearer testimony among believers to the doctrines and power of the Gospel of the grace of God. The Rev. Gervase Smith, president.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 5.—"Prayer for families": For godless parents; for prodigal sons; for children at school; for those entering upon professional and commercial life; for widows and orphans; for sons and daughters in foreign lands; and for all who are mentally or otherwise afflicted. The Rev. R. D. Wilson, president.

THURSDAY, JAN. 6.—Prayer for rulers, magistrates, and statesmen; for soldiers and sailors; for national institutions; for philanthropic and charitable societies; for prisoners and captives; and for the persecuted and oppressed. The Rev. J. Thain Davidson, president.

FRIDAY, JAN. 7.—"Prayer for foreign missions": Matt. xxviii. 19. The Rev. Henry Wright, president.

SATURDAY, JAN. 8.—"Prayer for all nations": For the maintenance of peace; for the cessation of tumults, wars, and civil strife; for the removal of intemperance, immorality, and infidelity from the land; and that the fruits of the earth may be brought forth plentifully in their season. The Rev. J. P. Chown, president.

Meetings will be held in the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, daily, from one to two o'clock, for persons engaged in business in the City. Short addresses will be delivered at each meeting.

Ministers of the Gospel and Christians generally are earnestly invited to be present, and to make these meetings known to their congregations and friends. Looking to the approach of this week of universal prayer, special supplication is requested for the Divine blessing to rest abundantly upon the meetings. At the

LONDON TAVERN,

Bishopsgate-street, at one o'clock each day, addresses will be delivered by the following ministers:—Monday, Rev. J. P. Chown; Tuesday, Rev. W. Haslam; Wednesday, Rev. J. C. Harrison; Thursday, Rev. C. D. Marston, M.A.; Friday, Rev. W. P. Mackay, M.D.; Saturday, Rev. W. Morley Punshon, D.D.

The evening meetings will be held as last year at

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

at 7.30. The following are the speakers:—Monday, Mr. S. A. Blackwood; Tuesday, Rev. G. Bowden; Wednesday, Rev. W. P. Mackay, of Hull; Thursday, Rev. Marcus Rainsford; Saturday, Rev. S. Hebditch.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK, N.

On Monday, Jan. 3, at 11 a.m., Rev. G. Head—subject, "Secret of Power"; 7 p.m., Rev. Dr. Paterson—subject, "Consecration." Tuesday, Jan. 4, at 11 a.m. —; 7 p.m., Rev. Dr. Mackay (Hull)—subject, "Different aspects of union." Wednesday, Jan. 5, at 11 a.m., Rev. W. J. Chapman—subject, "A restful year"; 7 p.m., Rev. M. G. Pearse—subject, "Starting afresh." Thursday, Jan. 6, at 11 a.m., Rev. Dr. Aveling—subject, "Religion in the family"; 7 p.m., Rev. T. Phillips—subject, "The Christian's influence." Friday, Jan. 7, at 11 a.m., Rev. Dr. Culross—subject, "Loving the unseen Christ"; 7 p.m., S. A. Blackwood—subject, "The pleasure of the Lord." Saturday, Jan. 8, at 11 a.m., Rev. D. B. Hankin—subject, "Quickening power of the Holy Ghost"; 7 p.m., Rev. J. Watson.

BIRKENHEAD CHRISTIAN MISSION.—This Mission, commenced in 1869, appears, from the report of the past year, to be a very vigorous one, and to be doing much honest hard work for the Master as opportunity occurs. The Hon. Superintendent is Mr. Thos. Lydiatt, 110, Old Bidston-road, Birkenhead, to whom communications may be addressed.

DEPTFORD INDUSTRIAL HOME.—In the third report of this "Home and Refuge for Destitute Boys," Mr. Fegan briefly details the labours of another year, which have been made known frequently in our columns. The report concludes:—"In again commending the work to the prayerful and practical sympathy of all into whose hands this Report may fall, the committee desire earnestly to impress upon them that the field of usefulness is practically unlimited, and as the sphere of operations is enlarged, the cost per head of each inmate is reduced accordingly. They trust, therefore, that, encouraged by the Divine blessing that has attended these labours in the past, each friend will make a determined effort to assist, not only in promoting the increased happiness and welfare of the boys in the Home, but also in gathering a much larger number of poor outcast friendless lads within its preventive and remedial influences."

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN COUNCIL.

AN unusually full attendance at the monthly workers' meeting at the Home of Industry, on Wednesday evening last week, betokened an occasion of special interest and importance. And so it proved. Our thoughts were directed to the crying need of service, both at our own doors and in the far East; we were also invited to consider the Scriptural teaching concerning that power, without which, by common consent, no real service for Christ can be done, whether at home or abroad.

As was fitting, we were first brought face to face with that which lay nearest our hands—the work of rescuing the "gutter snipes" of London, as they have been called. The Hon. T. Pelham, who was the speaker, had no new-fangled schema to propound; his remarks might be condensed into one sentence, to this effect:—What is now being done by the few, ought to be personally and individually taken up by the many. Paid agents will not accomplish the end in view; neither will physical compulsion. Moral suasion and dogged perseverance are essential requisites to success. If we were, as many as possible, "all at it," and, as much as possible, "always at it," we should see the desire of our hearts and the work of our hands abundantly prospered. Mr. Pelham not only told us how to do it, but gave us examples of how it had been done; we were therefore left without excuse.

Then, at a leap, Dr. Harvey carried us to China, where he hopes very soon, if it please God, to resume work as a medical missionary in connexion with the China Inland Mission. It was appalling to hear from his lips that in that wonderful land there are 150,000,000 of souls with no one to speak to them of salvation in Christ. Truly the labourers are few in proportion to the piteousness of the harvest. Who among our readers will hold themselves in readiness to go, at the Master's bidding, and witness for Him in China? Mr. Harvey gave many details connected with his proposed mission, which were of the deepest interest, and which we wish we had space to reproduce; we must refer our readers to the current number of China's Millions. They know enough already, we are persuaded, to elicit their earnest and unceasing prayers for the furtherance of the Gospel, not only in China, but in every place where, as yet, the name of Jesus is unloved or unknown.

After so much exhortation, we were ready for the teaching that came after. "The Baptism of the Spirit" was the topic that Mr. Morgan set himself to elucidate. The main portions of his address form the first article in our present issue. We trust it may receive the close and devout attention that the surpassing importance of the subject demands.

In the course of the remarks that followed, the chairman said that as the Spirit only works through the Word, the measure of the fulness of the Spirit in us must be regulated by the extent to which we study and appropriate that Word. Mr. McNutt quoted passages to show that the promise of the Spirit was "for ever," and that the way to prove our "life" in the Spirit was by "walking" in the Spirit—in other words, bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit. Mr. Scott suggestively compared the Spirit, first to the solicitor who guides the testator in the preparation of his testament, and next to the executor who carries the will of the testator into effect. He adduced Stephen as an example of one who was "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." Lord Radstock said that just as the priests of old were not anointed until they stood in Aaron's garments, so it is only as the believer definitely takes his place in Christ that he can expect to be "filled with the Spirit."

In reply to a questioner, Mr. Morgan thought that much confusion of thought arose by an improper use of terms. If people really thought about, and intelligently understood, the Scriptural teaching on this subject, they could not sing such hymns as "Descend from heaven, immortal Dove," &c. The subject was felt by all to be so full of interest and profit that there were wishes expressed to continue the consideration of it on another evening. Whether this be done or not, there was enough said to prompt much private reflection and research.

BIBLE-CLASSES FOR ADULTS.—A correspondent, referring to our recent notice of these classes as held in Birmingham, says:—"Your correspondent seems to be misinformed as to the Friends having unoccupied schoolrooms in London. There are several mission centres with schoolrooms, &c., which are well used, but we have not been successful to any great extent, like our Birmingham friends, with men's Sunday classes. More success has attended evening schools, especially amongst young men, and these come much more readily also on Sundays."

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—In connexion with the London and provincial midnight meeting movement, meetings were held lately in Gosport, having for their object the reclamation of fallen women. A meeting was held at Southampton a short time since, and a society started, having for its object the breaking up of brothels, and the rescue of their inhabitants. Meetings were also held in Portsmouth in the spring of the present year, and a temporary refuge was provided in which young women who wished to turn from their evil course could be kept for a few days prior to returning to their homes. The result was that ninety young girls applied for admission into the refuge, and 50 per cent. of those had reformed, and had been sent to service, placed in different homes, or had gone to their own friends.—Portsmouth Times.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ODD ONE. By A. M. MITCHELL PAYNE. Shaw.—We fancy few daughters would object to be called "the odd one" in the family, and treated accordingly, if they could be certain of faring as well in the long run as did the heroine of this interesting tale. Although we rather deprecate books that seem to teach our young people to do their duty for what it may bring, yet this story conveys lessons which the members of many of our families need to learn.

THE GATES OF PRAISE. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. 2s. Nisbet.—This prettily bound collection of "original hymns, poems, and fragments of verse,"—composed, says Dr. Macduff, in the midst of other studies,—will certainly not lessen his reputation as a writer on sacred themes. The longest piece in the book, "Sennacherib," exhibits considerable poetic fancy and constructive dramatic skill; the verse is flowing and vigorous. Altogether, it forms an excellent companion-volume to "The Gates of Prayer," with which it is uniform in size and price.

LETTIE'S LAST HOME. By LILLIE T. MEADE. 1s. 6d. Shaw.—Lettie's first home was poor and wretched enough—"a miserable court in one of the worst London localities,"—with a cruel drunken mother to boot. We doubt not there are many Letties in London town, and we could wish they all reached her "last home," even if they had to pass through as many youthful tribulations as she. This story, told with much pathos, incidentally illustrates the effects of the horrible system of baby-farming that is still said to thrive secretly.

THE BORDER LAND, AND OTHER POEMS. By L. N. R. Nisbet.—This re-issue of "Leaves from Life," under a new title, will be perused by many readers with pleasure and profit. Mrs. Ranyard truly says in her preface that "the histories of peaceful homes abound in touches of the poetical amid much plain prose." There are few who have lived beyond their teens who do not cherish happy memories, and sad ones too, which they would fain preserve. The gifted author of "The Book and its Story" has done it for them in this collection of sweetly expressed and truthful verses.

BIBLE WATERS: Lessons from Sacred Scenes. By the Rev. T. HILES HITCHENS. Elliot Stock.—The contents of this volume are the substance of a series of Sabbath evening lectures. It is evidently a work on which much loving care has been bestowed, and while it will prove instructive and interesting to general readers, it will be specially so to Sabbath-school teachers and Christian workers, owing to the quotations and references which are inserted as foot-notes to verify and amplify the subject-matter. The author, while supplying historic lore and the latest geographical information, draws from the incidents connected with the sacred scenes, valuable lessons for holy living. A noteworthy feature of the book is the list of authorities at the end, whence the student may further pursue his studies on the Holy Land.

FAC-SIMILE POCKET BIBLE. Oxford University Press, 7, Paternoster-row.—It is a happily redeeming feature of this reading age that in the growing tide of literature, good, bad, and indifferent, the Book of books is not relegated to the background, or even to an inferior place. Mr. Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, has just issued a "fac-simile pocket edition" of the Holy Scriptures, to correspond, page for page, with the Oxford Minion Reference Bible. The type is beautifully sharp and clear; the binding (kid-lined) of a highly finished and enduring description. A copious index to "the persons, places, and subjects occurring in the Holy Scriptures," and a complete "Dictionary of Scripture Proper Names, with other useful information," combine to make this a most invaluable pocket companion for the Biblical student. We cannot think of a more acceptable or appropriate gift to a Sunday-school teacher. It may be obtained in various bindings, from 3s. 6d. to a guinea.

THE LIFE OF SAMUEL HEBICH. By TWO OF HIS FELLOW-LABOURERS. Seeley. Translated from the German.—The Rev. G. T. FOX, of Durham, has written an exhaustive preface to this memoir of one whom he calls "a very remarkable man." The publishers, in sending the volume for review, took the somewhat unusual course of characterising it as "a book much out of the common way." We are bound to say that our expectations, thus aroused, have not been disappointed. Samuel Hebich was beyond doubt a remarkable man, and we are sorry to have to believe it, because such men are the salt of the earth, and they ought to be so common as not to be "remarkable." This man (born 1748), on his conversion (1821), which was of a very marked character, at once dedicated himself, body and soul, to the work of missions in India, and laboured there without intermission for a quarter of a century, with comparatively large success. He had eccentricities of character, but they were of the right sort; one of them was a direct, almost blunt, mode of addressing all and sundry on the subject of personal Christianity—an eccentricity by no means disagreeably common among ourselves. For a biography the book is "out of the common way," in that it seems perfectly honest—not hiding Mr. Hebich's defects or mistakes, or magnifying his undoubted virtues. It certainly deserves an honourable place among our missionary literature, and shows the power of a life thoroughly consecrated to the service of Christ.

STEPS UPWARD AND ONWARD, FOR LITTLE FEET. By W. L. LANG. Marlborough and Co., Warwick-lane.—The author has had considerable experience in Sunday-school work, and in this little brochure he advocates, rightly, as we think, a mode of teaching which makes a free use of suitable illustrations conveyed to the minds of the children in a conversational style. Teachers who are on the look-out for methods of increased usefulness will find many helpful suggestions here. At the same time, we think the space given to the exposition of God's wondrous ways in providence is somewhat out of proportion to that which speaks of his still more wondrous ways in grace.

HOME MISSION WORK. By Rev. THOS. COCHRANE. Johnstone, Hunter, and Co., Edinburgh.—Dr. Hanna writes a prefatory note to this pregnant little volume, in which he says its pages "will be hailed by many as helpful to the successful conduct of territorial missions, in which the main hope of the future as to our lapsed city populations lies." We cordially endorse Dr. Hanna's commendation. The author gives the experience of twenty-three years' continuous effort in this difficult work. The value of the book is enhanced by some excellent memorial verses on Guthrie, Chalmers, Cunningham, and Candlish, &c.,—men whose memory the Scottish churches will not willingly let die.

ILLUSTRATED PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Partridge's series of illustrated monthlies form a regular picture-gallery of engravings, of all sorts and sizes, on almost all subjects of popular interest and importance, all executed in the most faultless and artistic manner. We have received the following annual volumes, in all the bright array of their coloured bindings. We can only say, as we have said in effect so often before, that they will form a source of endless instruction and delight in any family into which they may find their way. Taken altogether, they form a complete pictorial household library:—Infants' Magazine (yearly volume, 1s. 6d.), Children's Friend (1s. 6d.), Family Friend (1s. 6d.), Friendly Visitor (1s. 6d.), Band of Hope Review (1s.), British Workman (1s. 6d.)

THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN (1s. 6d.), and THE CHILD'S COMPANION, issued by the Religious Tract Society, are hardly less attractive. The former is printed partly in very large type, to suit the falling eyesight of its aged readers. Both magazines contain many beautiful illustrations, and a selection of suitable music. The Christmas number of the Cottager and Artisan is a splendid twopennyworth.

The Religious Tract Society also publishes a packet of twelve cards, containing brilliantly coloured representations of BIBLE ANIMALS, with descriptive letterpress—a very beautiful and acceptable present to Sunday-school children.

NEW YEAR'S ADDRESSES.

THE CHRISTIAN A LIGHT. (Lyon and Gemmill, Edinburgh.) An excellent and appropriate sermon for young converts.

SALVATION: WHAT IT IS, AND WHO IT IS FOR. By J. E. H. (Hawkins), is a clearly written tractate, and we trust it may be productive of much good.

"I WISH YOU A HAPPY NEW YEAR" (Religious Tract Society, 9d. per dozen) is a most choice collection of new year's counsels and encouragements, in prose and verse, selected from the writings of CHARLOTTE ELLIOT, the author of "Just as I am," &c. Well deserves extensive circulation.

THE TEACHER AND THE TAUGHT. By Rev. P. B. POWER. 2d. (Hamilton.) Mr. Power always writes in an interesting and practical strain. A careful perusal of this new year's address will, we think, awaken in the devout heart fresh desires to learn more patiently and readily in the great school of this earthly life, and to experience how beautiful and blessed that life may become. Mr. Power has written three new illustrated tracts, to be had of the same publishers, price 1d. each.

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.—A correspondent says:—A school has been in existence in Calcutta for the last ten or twelve years, in which the daughters, not only of native Christians, but of heathen Baboos, have been receiving a Christian and first-class education. In very many cases the girls have been converted. Many of the former pupils are in different parts of India serving their Lord, some as teachers, and some as the heads of Christian households. Contributions are needed in aid of the expenses of this school, which is carried on as a private work, and does not receive support from any society. Ladies who desire a copy of the report may apply to E. Ryland Trestrail, Rose-hill, Newport, I. W.

Y. M. C. ASSOCIATION.—Last Thursday evening a deeply interesting social meeting for young men was held at the Aldersgate-street rooms of this Association, presided over by H. Matheson, Esq., who kindly provided tea in the earlier part of the evening. Earnest and stirring addresses, full of loving and sound Christian advice, were given by the chairman, and Revs. Radcliffe, Billing, and Braden. From 200 to 250 young men were present, and it was evident that they appreciated and heartily enjoyed the social gathering to which they had been so freely invited. At the close of the meeting, at the request of Mr. Shipton, all who were able to stay were requested to do so, to ask for the Divine blessing to rest upon this special service.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

A VERY SUCCESSFUL Free Church of England Mission is being carried on at Kinnerleigh, conducted by Mr. Hockley, licensed reader.

THE CHICAGO Y.M.C.A. has organized a service of song at its rooms, every Sunday afternoon, at 4.30 o'clock, which promises to be a gathering of unusual interest. Anyone can attend and join in the exercises.

LIVERPOOL.—It has been decided to have a short season of nightly meetings for prayer and exhortation, in Victoria Hall, from Dec. 24 to Jan. 14 inclusive; and Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, has promised to conduct the meetings during the last week.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONGRESS.—The Plainfield Sunday-school workers, led on by their fellow-townsmen Dr. Vincent, have projected another grand enterprise, which is destined to take rank with their historic Normal Institute of 1872. This new movement is a Sunday-school Congress, to meet in March of next year.

A MINISTER'S EXPERIENCE.—At the recent Ayr Conference, a minister, in addressing the meeting, said that in the course of his life he had now seen three revivals, and, with ample opportunity for observation, he could affirm of the professed converts who had made shipwreck, and gone back to the world, that in almost every case the cause was drink.

GIRVAN, AYRSHIRE.—The Lord's work is advancing. The "tent meetings" conducted by young men in Doune-park on Sabbath evenings and Tuesday evenings, and the kitchen meetings on Monday evenings, are always well attended, and the Spirit of the Lord is evidently with us, convincing of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment.

A BRANCH of the Church of England Temperance Society is being formed in the Lincoln diocese. At the inaugural meeting the Bishop presided, and he is about to issue a pastoral letter to the clergy and laity of the diocese. The Bishops of Bangor and St. Asaph are also taking steps to bring the operations of the Society before their respective dioceses.

THE BIBLE THE BEST BOOK.—One of the signs of the times is, that a heathen editor in Bengal should have declared in his paper—The Bible is the best and most excellent of all English books, and there is not its like in the English language. If a person studies the English language with a view to gain wisdom, there is not a book more worthy of being read than the Bible.

A NOVELTY IN JOURNALISM.—The Garden will every week in future contain a coloured plate, full-page size, "of a beautiful or rare flower or fruit, of proved value for our gardens, and executed in the best style of art," in addition to its other always well-executed engravings. Those who study the handiworks of God in nature will find the Garden a source of full and useful information.

LOWER WYKE.—On Sunday the completion of a hundred years since the opening of the chapel of the United Brethren at Lower Wyke was celebrated by special services. The Rev. John England, of London, preached morning and evening, when there were very large congregations, the more numerous at the latter service. In the afternoon a love-feast was held, when several of the older ministers from various places addressed the audience, which quite filled the chapel.

SINGING FOR JESUS.—In Edinburgh, said a speaker at the Ayr Conference, you may see ladies from some of the best houses, travelling a mile, a mile and a half, or two miles, on a cold sleety wintry morning, to sing to some of the poor neglected ones about Jesus. I cannot help raising my hat when I meet any of them. The other day I met one, and, as usual, raised my hat. A gentleman who was with me inquired who she was. "Well, I'm sure I can't tell you," I said; "I only know this, that she sings for Jesus."

CANADA—PERTH.—The following is a portion of a letter received by a contemporary from the Rev. W. Burns, Knox Church, Perth, Ontario:—A good work has been in progress in the village of Lanark for some weeks now. A great change is visible in the people, and large expectations cherished as to its extension. Already Middleville, a neighbouring village, has been thoroughly stirred, and nightly union meetings in the Presbyterian church (the largest in the place) are crowded with earnest inquirers. I have spent portions of four weeks assisting in Lanark, and now my own people are desirous of more frequent services.

CITY PORTERS.—One of those gatherings which does so much to maintain and improve the good feeling which ought to exist between employers and employed in every large firm, took place on Wednesday evening, when the porters employed in the well-known firm of Messrs. Copestake, Moore, and Co., of Bow-churchyard, were entertained by their employers at supper in the large warehouses of the firm at 36, Goswell-street, E.C. The married porters were accompanied by their wives, and many of the unmarried ones by their sweethearts. The supper was preceded by an admirably instructive lecture by the Rev. G. F. Head, of St. Mark's, Tollington-park, on the popular subject of the Tower of London. Mr. George Moore presided, and there were also present the Rev. J. Rodgers (the chaplain), the Rev. E. Rodgers, Mr. S. Hope Morley, Mr. W. E. Shipton, Mr. S. Hough, and other gentlemen.—Record.

CAUTION.—A correspondent requests us to warn our readers against one who is endeavouring to extort money in various parts of the country on false pretences. He gives the name of James Fender, Greenock, N.B.

THE DANISH BIBLE SOCIETY has distributed during the past year 3000 Bibles and 2000 New Testaments, and during the sixty years it has existed, altogether 340,777 copies of the Scriptures.

"THAT WHICH WAS LOST" is the appropriate title of the Christmas issue of the Reformatory and Refuge Union; the contents are also in keeping. It may be had from the office of the Union, 34, Parliament-street, S.W., price 3d.

"REVIVAL FACT."—Fifty-two persons have been received into the Rev. G. B. Sawday's church, at Pentonville, whose conversion was directly traceable to the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey at the Agricultural Hall.

THE RIGHTEBIRTH ANNIVERSARY of the Philadelphia Noonday Prayer-meeting, which has continued since its organization in 1857 without a day's omission, was held on Nov. 23 in the First Baptist church; Rev. Dr. Newton conducted the exercises.

JUVENILE MISSIONS.—A new monthly missionary periodical, illustrated, entitled The Children's Missionary Paper, is issued by the Orphan's Printing Press, Leominster, price 1d. The number for January, which has been sent to us, contains some very interesting letters from missionaries in Madagascar.

PERSIA.—When Henry Martyn translated the Bible into Persian there was very little use for the volume. Now, however, its time has come, as the Mohammedan influence is more broken in Persia than in any other Moslem country, and the missionaries are looking forward to a notable Gospel triumph in that land.

UTAH.—A colporteur in Utah, in eleven days, travelled 130 miles, visited 221 families, and furnished eighty Bibles and thirty-four Testaments to the destitute. Utah is a most needy field; and now, when the priesthood are rapidly losing their control over the minds of the people, the sacred volume should be carried to every family.

"THE LONDON CITY MISSION MAGAZINE" for December contains a well written and interesting sketch of meetings held last Christmas by the Missionary labouring near the New-cut; how the people were got together, and some of the ascertained results. The reading of it may incite to efforts of a like kind at the present time.

YORK.—A "Conference on the Spiritual Life" will (D.V.) be held in this City several days during the third week of January, 1876, commencing Jan. 17 or 18. Particulars will be shortly announced. It is hoped that Christian friends in the North-Eastern, North Midland, and other districts will make this announcement known.

UNITED KINGDOM BAND OF HOPE UNION.—The officers and teachers of Sunday-schools, promoted by the above Society, held a meeting in Exeter Hall on the 8th inst., with a view of obtaining the assistance of the Sunday-school teachers in promoting total abstinence. Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and several most useful addresses were given. A number of those present signed the pledge.

NEWARK, U.S.A.—On a recent Sunday a party of temperance Christians held a service in Walsman's saloon, on Market-street, Newark, and while the meeting was in progress the selling of beer and liquors went on as usual. Towards the close the proprietor charged an admission fee, thus adding to his gains. On Sunday next the same gentlemen had proposed to hold a similar meeting, but the proprietor would not agree to stop his business, and Library Hall, directly opposite, has been secured, where services will be held at 9 a.m., at 3, and at 7 p.m. The temperance movement seems to be gaining ground in Newark.

MISSION TO POLES AND JEWS.—The sixth report of this Mission, in connexion with the orphanage at Plochocin, near Warsaw, says:—"From 1870-1875, 60,000 Bibles, New Testaments, portions of the Bible, religious books and tracts, in seven languages, have been sold and distributed by the agents of the Plochocin Mission in Warsaw and in the provinces. From this seed a harvest must spring some day if our Lord God gives his blessing to it." Another sentence we quote, which is much less satisfactory:—"It is with a feeling of deep regret that I have to announce," says the founder of the Mission, "that the orphanage mission has greatly suffered during the last year for want of funds." Mrs. Finn, The Elms, Brook-green, Hammersmith, W., is the secretary, and will gladly give further information.

THE BROOKLYN YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.—The meetings commenced by Messrs. Moody and Sankey for young men in Brooklyn have been continued with remarkable success and interest. Very large audiences gather each evening at the Rev. Dr. Cuyler's church at nine o'clock, and the deep seriousness, with the earnest singing and the many testimonies from young Christians, make a very wonderful meeting. George A. Hall, of Washington, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, has charge of the meetings, and is sustained by pastors and people very remarkably. Mr. Hall is seeking to have the young men visited and organised into working bands. He spends from 9.30 to 10.30 a.m., and from seven to eight each evening, at the rooms of the Association in Brooklyn.

The Christian.

PROGRESS OF MISSIONS.

SOME remarks made in the Assembly Hall, at Edinburgh, on the Day of United Prayer for Missions to the Heathen, regarding the progress of the Gospel in modern days, as compared with that in the first century, have led to inquiries which prove that the question is, to not a few, possessed of much interest. The following brief statement, then, may be acceptable to your readers.

It is not possible to estimate exactly the rate at which the Gospel extended in early days. "It is difficult," says Gibbon, "even to conjecture the real numbers of the primitive Christians." Still, after saying this, he himself proceeds to conjecture, or compute, their numbers as they were in the days of Constantine.

But a question of still greater interest is the following:—What were their numbers at the beginning of the second century? About seventy years had then elapsed since the great commission had been issued—that all the nations should be evangelized. What was the result about the year 100?

The well-known German scholar, Dr. J. P. Lange, in his commentary on the closing verses of St. Matthew's Gospel, calculates that the number of Christians then amounted to 500,000. This is, perhaps, somewhat too low an estimate. The language of Pliny, in his celebrated letter to Trajan, written early in the second century, proves that, in Bithynia at all events, the Gospel was spreading rapidly. "Neque enim civitates tantum, sed vicus etiam atque agros, superstitionis istius contagio pervagata est." So too, in all probability, it was extending with rapidity throughout the whole of Asia Minor. But, taking all things into account, we shall hardly err if we put the matter thus:—About the year 100, the number of professing Christians in the world was, very probably, much under 1,000,000.

Come now to modern days. The far greater number of our missionary societies have been set up during the present century; but let us say that modern missions have been going on nearly as long as apostolic missions had been conducted, at the death of St. John, about the year 100.

Let us confine our attention strictly to Protestant missions. We do not forget the efforts to convert the heathen put forth by the Roman Catholic Church and the Russian branch of the Greek Church. But one sufficient reason for passing their efforts by at present is the exceeding difficulty of obtaining clear and accurate statistics regarding the results of their operations. I am anxious to eliminate, if possible, every element of doubt from the estimate now to be given.

The most recent and, I believe, the most exact statement regarding the progress and present state of Protestant missions has been supplied by Dr. Grundemann, in the Allgemeine Missions-Zeitschrift. In the November number of that valuable periodical we have the following tabular summary of the numbers of the converts connected with the missions sent forth by various nations:—

	Converts.
German (including Swiss) missions have	127,414
British	1,116,227
American	183,571
Dutch	87,226
French	14,000
Northern (i.e., Scandinavian)	8,836
Total	1,537,274

Every effort has been made to be exact, and the figures cannot be very far wrong.

But let it be observed that they give the number of Christians about the end of 1873. Evidently Dr. Grundemann took his numbers from the reports issued in 1874. Since then, missions have considerably advanced. For example, the figures put down to the Free Church of Scotland Missions are those given in the report of 1874, which supplied the statistics as they were two years ago. The number, as given in the report for 1875, had increased by one-twentieth and more; and in the forthcoming Report it will be fully—there is reason to hope—one-tenth above that which entered into the calculations of Dr. Grundemann. And now, assuming, as we may safely do, that a corresponding increase has taken place in other missions, we require to add a tenth to the number given in the table. A tenth is above 150 000. This would make the total nearly 1,700,000; or, more exactly, 1,691,001.

Another point needs to be explained. Certain Missionary bodies (such as the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Wesleyans, the Baptists, and the American Methodist Episcopalians) include in their statistics the membership they gather abroad, both from among professing Christians and the heathen. Now, Dr. Grundemann is fully aware of this, and has taken great pains to make the needful allowance for it. The estimate includes only the converted heathen and their descendants.

The figures may probably take those of your readers by surprise who have not previously had their attention directed to the subject. That modern missions—or, at all events, Protestant missions—are a failure, is still, in many quarters, quietly assumed as a point not needing proof. Very well; if this be still asserted—as it probably will be,—let it be done with these figures clear before the eyes of men. Meantime, Christians will unfeignedly rejoice and give thanks to God that well-nigh two millions of human beings are now worshipping the true and living God, who, but for our modern Protestant efforts, would have been sunk in all the brutishness of Pagan idolatry. And surely the marvel grows when we compare the results of early Christian evangelism with those of modern missions. Assuredly we have no cause to boast; but there is that for which we need to be infinitely thankful. The great difficulty in the conversion of the nations—as the admirable Marshman used to say—is not with the hearts of the heathen, but with the heart of the Church. She has never yet accepted intelligently, lovingly, rejoicingly, the great commission to evangelize the nations. The great marvel is that God should so graciously acknowledge the feeble efforts we are beginning to put forth. Let that gracious acknowledgment warm our hearts into tenfold zeal. Let the Church of the living God advance! He who calls us to be his auxiliaries is waiting for us. J. MURRAY MITCHELL.

FOR THE YOUNG.

TRIED WITH FIRE.

“I will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried.”—Zech. xiii. 9.

“I DON’T at all like all this beating and bruising,” said a piece of gold that had been under the hammer for a long half-hour, and was beaten into all manner of shapes. “I don’t see the good of it, and I quite ache with knocking about so.”

Heaps of gold and silver were lying about the room in different stages—some rough and shapeless, and almost hidden by earth and sand; some purer, having already been in the fire; but all had still a large amount of dross clinging to them.

They had been taken away from their native land and from their former surroundings, that they might be prepared for high and earnest work in the king’s service. But some of them did not understand this, and thought it all harshness and unkindness that put them to so much suffering.

“Oh, dear, dear,” moaned the gold again, as it was put into the furnace, “this fire is worse than all; the heat is terrible.”

“You seem in great trouble,” said a quiet, bright piece of silver, which was lying on the ground close by.

“Oh, I am!” exclaimed the gold. “No one knows what I suffer.”

“But it will not be for long,” returned the silver.

“I don’t know,” sighed the gold; “it offends seems very long to me, and I cannot see what good it is to do me; day after day passes, and I seem no further on—the same ups and downs, the same suffering, the same trial.”

“Shall I tell you a secret?” whispered the silver. “This trial is only for a while; we are by-and-by to bear the king’s likeness, and all this bruising and melting is but a preparation for it. It is no useless suffering we are bearing, it is all given us for that end.”

“Are you sure?” asked the gold wonderingly. “How do you know?”

“Because I have been told so by one I could trust,” said the silver quietly.

“I could bear anything, I think, if I was sure of that,” said the gold.

Just then his friend was taken away to a neighbouring furnace, and he was not able to ask any more; but he thought much and long on what had been said.

The days seemed long, and sometimes weary and painful; but the refiner knew what he was about, and did not try them above that they were able to bear.

After a time the gold met his friend again, and said—

“I have been thinking so much of what you said; if that is the end I ought to be glad and happy all the time, and I am not always glad,—I cannot be glad to suffer so.”

“One cannot be glad of the pain,” answered the silver, “it would be no pain if we did not feel it as such; but in and through the pain, we may be glad with the thought of what the end will be, and glad too in knowing that one who cares is watching us, and will not keep us in the furnace one moment longer than is necessary.”

“It is very strange that if he cares about us he should make us suffer so.”

“Nay,” gently replied the silver, “never think that. It is no strange thing that is happening to us. Everyone who would be like the king must go through suffering.”

“There were plenty of my brethren in the place I came from, who were happy enough, and yet never suffered like this.”

“No,” quietly answered the silver, “they were not called to such high honour.”

The gold looked wonderingly at his friend, and thought earnestly of what he had said—was it really such high honour? Was it really worth so much pain? And ought he to be glad now in that assurance? Then the end must be wondrously good, and there must be high and important service before him to make it worth the refiner’s while to spend so much time in watching him, and exactly measuring the time he was to be in the furnace.

[904]

Yes, he was sure it must be so, and he determined to bear patiently and quietly—ay, and joyfully too, whatever might come—beating, bruising, melting—because of the sure confidence that by-and-by, when all the suffering would be over, and all the dross purged away, he should bear the king’s likeness. MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

THE WORK IN PHILADELPHIA.

THE following telegram, dated Philadelphia, Dec. 20, appeared in the Times on Wednesday, the 22nd inst. :—

Messrs. Moody and Sankey began the fifth week of their services here yesterday, and prayer was offered by Bishop Simpson. President Grant, the members of the Cabinet, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Governors of Pennsylvania and the other States, several distinguished senators and members of the House of Representatives, as well as many prominent citizens, including the historian Mr. Bancroft, were present. Many eminent divines have attended from day to day, including Drs. Hodge, M’Cosh, and M’Closkey, of Princeton. The hall in which the services have been held is the largest on the American Continent, seating over 10,000 persons; but its capabilities have often been taxed to the utmost. The interest displayed was unprecedented, and the inquiry-rooms have been crowded.

Many of our readers will remember the interest that was wont to gather around the noon prayer-meetings in Exeter Hall, the Opera House, and Victoria Theatre, especially those devoted to reports of the Lord’s doings. This feature appears by the reports to characterize the meetings in America.

Making allowance for a vein of exaggeration that seems, very largely, to enter into American reporting, the following of one of the noon-meetings in a Philadelphia paper will be read with interest. As will be seen, the subject of prayer was the prevalence of drunkenness :—

The great majority of all those gathered in the Depot-Tabernacle yesterday afternoon were as sad-faced and tearful-eyed a collection of humanity as it would be possible to assemble in one place. Those who had not directly suffered by intemperance grew at once into sympathy with the hundreds about them, whose heavy sighs told the stories of unutterable anguish, and this influence increased until a cloud of terrible depression seemed to hang over the entire congregation.

Every class of society was represented in this throng united so closely by such painful bonds. Close to the half-starved, long-abused, yet faithful wife of some besotted brute was seated the child of fortune and culture—child no more, but an old, old woman, whose only son, still in his youth, had fallen almost to the lowest depths of degradation. Near her was a man, every lineament of whose features was some index of nobility of soul and rare talents, but whose threadbare coat and sunken cheeks betrayed to all gazes the lifelong victim of an unconquerable appetite. Just behind this group was a young girl, whose face, sweet as an angel’s, was already furrowed by grief. Beside her was a father, whom she seemed to worship, and this father, broken down in health, and almost ruined in mind by the excessive use of liquor, seemed at last to have resigned himself to hopeless ruin. He gazed about in a half-sleepy, half-childish way, and several times attempted to get up and leave his seat, but the hand of the child-woman held his very tightly, and each time he would conquer his restlessness and sit down.

By far the largest proportion of the congregation were women, almost all of whom had evidently clutched at their hearts the agonizing image of some past or present experience with woe in its most terrible form. As the exercises proceeded it was interesting to note the change which gradually came over the scene. As Mr. Moody declared over and over again, that the God who had once cast out devils could do it now, and would do it if only asked, and as fervent supplications for this Divine interposition were made, the cloud seemed to rise from all hearts, the noonday sun poured in upon the picture-like blessed rays of hope; eyes long dimmed by tears beamed with a new light; lips so long tightly pressed by anguish smiled with a new-found joy; and dissipated faces lost their reckless look, and became resolute in the strength of noble determination. It is probable that more than one slave was freed yesterday, and more than one heart made happy.

A speaker at the same meeting related the following incident:—

A lady of this city who once had a drunken father many and many a time had gone out to look for him at night, and, finding him in some saloon, would stand in the cold and snow until he came out. The touch of her hand would turn him, and he would follow her staggering to their home. One evening, while the keen winds of winter swept down every street and a freezing sleet covered everything with a coat of ice, she attempted in ~~the~~ ~~street~~ ~~and~~ ~~home~~, but he staggered and fell on the pavement. She bent over him, trying to revive him, and when he returned to consciousness her hair was frozen to his lips. She succeeded in getting him home alive, and in less than one month afterwards he completely reformed.

At another noon meeting it is reported that—
Mr. G. H. Stuart read several

LETTERS FROM MINISTERS

resident in the country, showing that in all directions the revival was gathering strength as it moved, and sweeping over the entire State in all directions. A gentleman in the audience rose, and, alluding to the fact that last week prayer was requested for the Plymouth Congregational Church, said that at the next prayer-meeting a large number of the members of the Sunday-school had expressed a desire to learn to know Christ. Another gentleman said that the devil could not stand the siege in the country, for the revival had been making its way very rapidly through the State of Delaware.

Mr. Roland said that on Saturday noon, while he was passing through the inquiry-room, he found a man who had only a few days before denied his Saviour. This man said he had found Christ. Over twenty-five more had in the same way acknowledged that they had been convicted of sin, and were anxiously looking for the Saviour. "But," continued Mr. Roland, "the great majority of those who are saved are those who shrink from going into the inquiry-rooms, and will not stand up for prayer. Ah, Christians! do not lose these opportunities. Stand at the door and clasp the hands of those who are slipping out for the want of some friend to help them."

Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, spoke of some special meetings now being held in Central Illinois. The first convert was the leader of a company of actors who had been a few evenings before performing in the same hall in which the meeting was held. He was an intelligent, highly educated man, and is now preaching the Gospel. He says, "I have served the devil for thirty years. I am fifty-one years old now. All my time and talents shall be upon the Lord," and one of the first things he told the people after his conversion was this:—

"I HAVE BEEN BEHIND THE SCENES."

You don't know all that goes on there. Take my advice, you Church members that have been in the habit of going to theatres, and don't go there again." That was pretty good preaching for a first sermon. He now goes about the street reading the New Testament, as he used to read Shakespeare, and he tells Brother Dean that every day he finds new texts that he never knew were in the Bible at all. That might be the case with all of us, for the Spirit will bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you.

Rev. Dr. Hatfield said there was one point which ought to be mentioned in this connexion. It was a matter of experience with him that very often what prevents persons who are anxious from finding peace is some difficulty in their business. There is some little thing which they are not prepared to give up. It was so with a young man with whom he was speaking last night. He found that he was engaged in the liquor business, and he told the young man that unless he was prepared to give that up he would not have peace.

MEETINGS FOR WOMEN

are held in one of the churches every afternoon, and are said to be most profitable and largely attended. The speakers are all women. At one meeting

A sister rose, and presented a request which, she thought, had not before been spoken of—it was for the many henses of shame in this city,—and said that she had been led, by God's help to rescue one, just one, from one of these houses, and she said: "Oh, if you Christian women could hear the stories she tells me, your hearts would burn within you to help to save these poor fallen women. This woman said to me after I had brought her home to my house: "Why did you come after me? I thought I hadn't a friend in the world." This sister begged the Christians to be filled with the Spirit and to go, in the love of Christ, and help to rescue these poor wanderers. She promised for herself that the rest of her life should be devoted to this work. Everyone was in tears during this touching appeal.

One verse of "Rescue the perishing" was sung, which was the expression of each heart present.

We notice that Mr. Sankey has been interviewed by the reporter of the Philadelphia Evening Herald, to whom he expressed his satisfaction with the general progress of the work in Philadelphia.

At the close of a sermon on "Confessing Christ," Mr. Moody called upon all the Christians to rise and sing, "Am I a soldier of the Cross?" and sing it as an open profession of their desire to follow Christ and spend their life in his service. A large proportion joined very heartily in the grand old hymn, during the singing of which many others repaired to the inquiry-rooms.

Many have been under the impression (says the New York Witness) that there would be an intermission in the services for several days during the holiday season. There is, however, good ground for believing that the meetings will be continued through Christmas and New Year's-days, and until, at least, the middle of January. Both the evangelists are now strongly of opinion that effective and permanent work cannot be accomplished in any great city if the services are held for a period less than two months.

INCIDENTS OF THE BROOKLYN MEETINGS.

If only a short sketch of each interesting case of inquiry could be made, a ponderous and most valuable volume would be the result.

Said a rough-looking man to a poor woman whose wants he had just relieved by drawing on his scantily-furnished purse: "My friend, don't thank me. You should thank the Lord Jesus, for if you had met me three weeks ago you couldn't have got a penny from me. It would have gone to that gin-mill over there."

Fourscore and five winters had whitened the locks of a feeble man who rose with difficulty. "The Lord has given me eighty-five years, and I have spent them to very little purpose. Pray that an old sinner may be forgiven." There were a hundred earnest amens and prayers for him. The Lord bless him and make his last days glad.

A man of about thirty years had joined a church in 1871, firmly believing he was a Christian, but soon neglected his Bible and forgot to pray regularly. Little by little he drifted away from good influences, until it was easy for him to spend his evenings away from his home and his church meetings. Finally he was dragged to the bottom of the pit by his appetite for strong drink. "I went down and down, and at last my wife and children had to leave me. I was without a place to lay my head, and walked the cold streets of New York the other night from sundown to sunrise. Then I went back to God. He has given me back his blessing; He has given me back my family; He has blotted out the dark past. I am rejoicing in his love, and realize my own weakness as I never did before. My little girl made me cry last night. She climbed into my lap, threw her arms around my neck, and said, 'You don't stagger any more now, do you, father?'" Here the speaker broke down, and many in the audience wept.

On one side of the same Christian worker knelt an old, grey-headed man, and on the other a tender girl of seventeen. As the tears coursed down their cheeks, the father and daughter began the Christian life together.

A confirmed sceptic came to the Rink to gratify the curiosity he had to "hear Moody and Sankey," but could not get in on account of the throng. Wandering over to the Reformed Church, he met a Christian acquaintance who persuaded him to remain, and they had a long conversation. The next night he came to the same meeting and was among the first to rise to be prayed for. Walking home from the meeting he said, "Well, I didn't think the time would ever come when I should prefer a prayer-meeting to a theatre." That day he had bought himself a little pocket Testament, and when his friend marked a special verse or two for him, he expressed the warmest gratitude. A praying mother, whose faithfulness has never waned, had much to do with all this.—Rev. C. M. Morton, in New York Christian Weekly.

THE GOSPELS, says a correspondent, can be obtained in foreign languages at the British and Foreign Bible Society, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., and also of Messrs. Gardner and Sons, Princes-street, Cavendish-square, for one penny each.

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT.

AN ADDRESS BY REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE, OF GLASGOW, AT THE DUBLIN CONVENTION.

THE Baptism of the Holy Ghost is a doctrine, very important, yet not without difficulties. There can be no doubt that Christ's disciples, who were converted men beforehand, received the baptism of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, according to Christ's words immediately before his ascension: "Wait for the promise of the Father, for John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."

The same baptism of the Spirit, however, is said to have been imparted to the company of Gentiles who for the first time heard the Gospel in the house of Cornelius, the Roman centurion at Caesarea, according to Peter's rehearsal of the case: "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning: then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that He said, 'John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.' Forasmuch, then, as God gave them the like gift as He did unto us," &c.

There seem to be three great blessings resulting from the baptism of the Holy Ghost to be enjoyed by us. These are—spiritual enlightenment; a fresh supply of spiritual life; and power from on high. As to spiritual enlightenment, nothing is more remarkable than the sudden opening of the disciples' eyes at Pentecost. Christ was revealed to them, as He had not been during all his residence with them on earth. They had seen Him depart from Mount Olivet, but now they beheld Him looking out on them from every verse of the Old Testament, of which He was discovered to be the Substance, as He is also of the New. As to fresh supply of spiritual life, three things may be noticed. First, the apostles received a mighty increase of faith, and were purified from the dross of corruption, so that they walked with God, as they never had walked before. Secondly, they were inflamed with a burning zeal to carry out the Master's great commission—"Go and preach the glad tidings to every creature of the earth." Thirdly, there was unkindled in them the fire of Divine love; the apostles were linked to each other in the bonds of mutual affection, so that there was no more contention among them which should be greatest; and in this glow of love for each other, and of compassion for mankind, they went forth to subdue the world to Jesus. As to power from on high, it is enough to say that it was power as the instruments of Christ at the right hand of the Father, to do, as He had said, even greater works than had been done by Him when on earth.

These three elements resulting from the baptism remind me of the three elements in the solar beam—the illuminating ray; the calorific or heating ray; and the actinic or germinative ray. Without the exercise of these three functions the sunbeam could not perform its part; and so with regard to the baptism of the Spirit.

Let me refer specially to "Power from on high." There is great need for this power, for there is a mighty work to be done. When in India, last winter, my eyes were often arrested at night by the well-known constellation of composed of four stars in the form of a diamond, the lower limb being elongated, so that when it stands upright on the meridian it has pretty much the appearance of a cross. Now, I will tell you what my Southern Cross is. I find it in the last three verses of the Gospel of Matthew. Jesus said to his disciples, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Here is my Southern Cross—its stars are the four "alls" of the passage. "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth"—that is the culminating star. Then on the right hand, a little lower down, representing one arm of the cross, is "Go and teach all nations"; opposite this, and on the left hand, is the star, "Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you"; and now we have the star at the termination of the lower and elongated limb, and what is it?—"Lo! I am with you always," or, as the Greek has it, "all the days,"—all power, make disciples of all nations, teaching them to observe all things that were commanded, and "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Such was the commission and encouragement. It is melancholy to think how far we have come short in the discharge of what was enjoined, and what, had we been faithful, might have been done. The Lord Jesus said to his disciples on going away—"I charge you to go with this invitation of mine, and put it in the hand of every man you meet, and to everyone who receives it deliver him a parcel of invitations to distribute them." So one man is to go to another, and is always to deliver a parcel of invitations to others, who receive the invitation for themselves. In this way all the world is to be reached.

In the course of the last hundred years, the men whom the Lord employed, and their immediate successors, went so diligently and faithfully about the work that there was not a region of the then known world that had not been penetrated, and where multitudes did not receive the invitation. Those people who received it are this day in heaven. Soon after that, the Church was involved in feuds, controversies, and contentions; she halted in the fulfilment of her Master's work, and for about 1740 years most inadequate effort has been made to pervade the earth with the Gospel. I believe that had the Church of God continued to act as she did during the first hundred years, there would not at the present time be a single spot where the Master's invitation had not been spread abroad.

THE FACT—THE POWER—THE INHERITANCE.

What is the fact? The earth has about fourteen hundred millions of inhabitants, and it is believed that there are nine or ten hundred millions of the earth's population who have never had the invitation put in their hands at all. It is high time, then, for us to awake to the importance of the power of the Holy Ghost, that we may set about the fulfilment of the Master's commission, and carry his message to all nations of the world.

What is the power of which Christ spoke? Allusion to it is made in God's earliest communications to man:—"The Seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent;" "Blessed is he that blesseth thee, cursed is he that curseth thee;" "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel, for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." In the New Testament, Jesus says, "All power is given unto Me," and then He announces, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you." What that power is adequate to effect we may learn from the instances of Othniel, Gideon, Jephtha, and Samson in ancient days, who, when the Spirit of the Lord came upon them, advanced with a power that proved irresistible against any multitude of foes, and to fulfil whatever needed to be done. When our Lord, before going to Heaven, said to his disciples and to his Church collectively, "Ye shall receive power," He meant that with this spiritual power—but not without it—they should fill the whole earth with his glory; and bear witness to Him in Jerusalem and in Judea, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. God grant that in these days all the churches may awake to feel that their strength lies in the power given as the Lord has spoken.

What is the inheritance promised to us? It seems to me as if the Church of God had been brought to Kadesh-Barnea, and that Christ was standing at the head of his Israel, pointing with his finger, not to that promised land to which Caleb so eagerly looked, but to another and wider domain, saying, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for thy possession." What was the Church's duty? Was it not to have caught up the cry, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it"? Alas! far otherwise has she acted. For hundreds of years the Church stood and said, "We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we." What has been the consequence? She has been chastised and kept in the wilderness. She has been sent back to wander in the wilderness of Popery, Mohammedanism, Rationalism, grievous error, worldliness, and spiritual corruption. The Lord give it to us, that now, when the Spirit of God is upon us, we may be aroused from our apathy and unbelief—that to-day, after so long a time—like Israel at the end of their forty years—we may rise up, take our journey toward our inheritance, and possess it.

For the neglects of the past I do not think anything will excuse us. The Church has been culpable in a high degree. By her intolerable feuds, quarrellings, contentions, and differences she has wasted her strength, and has been comparatively weak and helpless. Let us be wiser now. Though our denominations may continue, let us gather together in rank—stand shoulder to shoulder. Let us call upon the Lord God to give us a mighty power. The day is come for with respect to the necessities of the world. We must think of new methods, new expedients, new plans, new sacrifices. Mr. Moody used to say "the world was perishing for want of Christ." When we think of the pitiable condition of the nations, we might almost exclaim, "We have too many ministers at home." I feel ashamed, when I read in ancient history, to find what was done in those old times even by a few. Let us take the case of that rapid conqueror, Alexander the Great, who, 334 years before Jesus Christ appeared, established so wide and wonderful an empire that the Greek language spread over the world he subdued; and the New Testament Scriptures were written in the language of the Grecian king, as being that most suitable for the nations. What was the army, at whose head he issued on his memorable expedition? It consisted of about 32,000 foot and 4000 or 5000 horse, but they were brave, disciplined, and inured to fatigue. With these he conquered hundreds of thousands—the Persian Empire, and almost all the world then known. Strange to say, nearly all the officers and men who followed the youthful Alexander were old men; most of the officers were sixty years of age. The common soldiers had been trained under his father, Philip of Macedon, and were about fifty years of age. History tells us that when drawn up in camp they had the look of a venerable senate. Alexander conquered the world by the

BRAVERY, PROWESS, AND ENTHUSIASM OF OLD MEN!

I would say now—"Don't wait, old men, till the young men rise. Get ye up and go." I am an old man myself, and have gone over many parts of the world; and to-night you have heard before me an older, as he has told you, who has crossed the Atlantic to speak to us. We, old men, call upon our brethren, old men—"Come, sixty-years-old officers! come, fifty-years-old private soldiers! fall into the ranks; you will soon see a grand phalanx of young men at your heels, depend upon it. Don't be ashamed to follow the young Alexander of thirty-two, if you can find him." Is it not a shame that our great Commander in heaven, who has done so much to urge us on, and who places such resources at our disposal, should find at this time of day that the world is in its present condition with regard to the distribution of his invitation?

There is a great deal to encourage us to go forward. There is a word which often solaced me in India—"Fear not, thou worm Jacob; I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument, having teeth; thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff; thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall scatter them." What is there so insignificant or so fragile as a worm? What is so indicative of magnitude and of stability as a mountain? Well, here is the feeblest of creatures set down in front of the massive mountain, and yet it is not the worm that goes down before the mountain, but the mountain goes down before the worm! Why, the merest fragment of rock broken off from the mountain, and trundling down the hill, would annihilate the worm on the spot; yet

THE WORLD PREVAILS!

When I read this verse I give rein to my fancy, and, looking to the sky, I see the heavens open, and in a little there appears issuing forth a company of shining ones—oh, how beautiful in form, and how lustrous in aspect!—they come by hundreds and by thousands; with wings swifter than eagles' they sweep downwards; they have no severity in their expression, their countenances are benevolent, joyous, and loving. What is that which as they approach is visible in their hand? Is it a sword, or spear, or other martial weapon? No, it looks like a golden spade or shovel. They all come clustering round the mighty mountain, and wait for signal to be given; and then, as the worm begins to move, on the instant all that mighty host take each his spade or shovel of gold, and plunge it into the mountain-side. Whether it be soil, or rock, or glacier—whatever it be they touch,—it is heaved up into the air, and the breeze sweeping by bears all as dust away. Ere long, summits, shoulders, slopes, and the entire mass gradually subside and disappear. The great mountain has become a plain; and the shining company, their work now done, spreading their wings, retire as they came, and re-enter the gate of heaven.

What is the import of my vision? The mighty host represents the promises of God. Their multitude may be said to correspond with the verses of Holy Scripture; since if we knew how to manage the verses, we should find well-nigh each verse convertible into a promise. These promises are mightier than Gabriel, though his name means "the mighty one of God." Gabriel had the strength of a mighty angel, but the might of God himself is in his promises. Nothing can stand before them. That is the reason why, when the worm Jacob stood before the mountain, the power in the promise went forth to remove all difficulties, and so the mountain became a plain. If we had faith, even as a grain of mustard-seed, mountains of obstacle would be moved from their base. Let us be faithful in our preaching of the Gospel of the Cross.

While travelling in the South of Europe some time ago, I stood at the base of one of those giant mountains, whose sides are clothed with glacier and their summits with perpetual snow. A Swiss peasant was near, with his long Alpine horn that rested on two wooden props. Applying his lips to the rude instrument, he wound from it a few notes of the musical scale, which made but little impression on the listener. A moment or two elapsed, and then I was entranced, for far above me, among the icy pinnacles, these artless sounds were converted into chords of exquisite harmony. The melodious echoes—I can compare them to nothing but the aerial symphonies of colossal musical-glasses—seemed to sweep in circles among the heights. They rang out again, and again, and again, lingering still amid precipice and peak; then, gradually softening, they became fainter and fainter, and so died away.

The circumstances and occupation of this rustic of the valley not inadequately represent our own as witnesses for Jesus. Our performance of the work entrusted to us may be imperfect, and with little in it to attract the admiration of the world; but if, with faith and love, we sound out in notes sharp and clear, however artlessly, the truths of redemption by the Blood of the Lamb, than ever reverberate among the mountains of Switzerland. These echoes will spring from the ridges, clefts, pinnacles, and summits of the Rook of Ages; they will be given back from the gorges, towering eminences, and peaks of that range, whose breadth and length, and depth and height, as Paul declares, pass all knowledge, and which is known as the Love of Christ; yes, response will come from those mountain-barriers known as the Perfections of God—his wisdom, faithfulness, and power. God himself will give the echoes to your testimony, and the world will ring with their harmonies.

WE SHALL AWAKEN ECHOES MORE WONDERFUL

What is to be done? You have all Ireland to look after. While in India last winter, I found that the movement in Dublin surprised the Christian brethren more even than that in London. They knew the difficulties of holding the evangelistic meetings in Dublin; and as the tidings came out of the things done here, these filled with astonishment the hearts of all acquainted with this country. A year has now gone by, and it is well to meet on this occasion to commemorate the things then done. But we are also to consider what is to be done for the future. What a grand company of men of God, and of women too, I see before me! Let us awake; but while we think of Ireland, let us think of all the Continent of Europe, and of the whole world. It will never do for us to be pent up at home, as we have been. God's grand promise is held out to all to cling to, and to plead that He himself would make it good. And He will do it. "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

AT REST.—We learn with regret that Mr. Mimpries (whose labours in connexion with systematic Bible-teaching are so well known to the religious public) passed away to his rest on the 20th inst.

REVIVAL IN MICHIGAN.—Rev. A. P. Graves, the evangelist, began a series of meetings at Grass Lake, Michigan, Nov. 10. The churches of the place—Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, and Congregational—led by their pastors, engaged heartily in the work. For a village of 800 inhabitants, with less than 1000 people in the country tributary to it, the attendance at all of the meetings was remarkable. During the meetings all the business places were closed at 7 p.m., and everything was quiet and orderly, though the whole community were thinking and feeling most intensely on the subject of religion. Scores—nay, I judge hundreds—asked the prayers of Christians, and themselves sought and found a Saviour. All classes in the community were blessed; Christians were revived, and reconsecrated themselves to the Lord's work; backsliders were reclaimed—the young and the older, the moralist and the more dissolute, the high and the humble, were all reached, and many, very many saved. The evangelist, a discreet, loving, earnest man of God, devoted body and soul to the work of saving sinners, was attended by his loved and loving wife, a true helpmeet in the work, and by a Mr. Hillman, a young singer whose voice and heart are both in the work.—New York Daily Witness.

THE LORD'S WORK AT GEORGE-YARD, WHITECHAPEL.

"Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? Who can show forth all his praise?" Everything we have taken in hand for him He has smiled upon and prospered. We have our days of difficulty and times of perplexity, the same as other labourers in the Master's vineyard; but we are often in his presence, making known to Him all, and looking alone to Him for guidance. We have found the inspired words of the Psalmist true: "The counsel of the Lord that shall stand."

Little ragged, bare-footed boys and girls still flock to the schools. They come laden with home-sorrows. Life's troubles begin very early with these poor children; very soon care is printed upon their faces, and the furrowed brow is the rule, and not the exception.

Think of the importance of gathering in the neglected children, and telling them the "old, old story of Jesu's dying love"! Think of the privilege of being used as instruments in the Lord's hands of bringing these children to Jesus! Think, too, of the blessed fact that many dear boys and girls are testifying for Jesus in the presence of ungodly parents and opposing companions! At the close of the children's services there are always some anxious inquirers waiting to hear more about a Saviour's love.

It is gratifying to look back upon the labours of nearly a quarter of a century, and to find more than 150 who once were poor boys and girls attending here, and who now labour in some portion of the Lord's vineyard.

We have not forgotten that the dear children have bodies, and we often think of the Lord's compassion upon the multitude, and no poor child is refused necessary food. Many have been kept warm by garments lent to wear out; and we are grateful to the Lord for disposing of the hearts of his people to send clothing. It has greatly encouraged us when we have received letters telling us of servants using their spare half-hours to make up garments for the poor, and thus doing something for the Great Master.

It has been our privilege to gather in little invalids, and provide them two or three times a week with tempting and nourishing food. We still shelter destitute and helpless boys. A father called, telling us of the death of his wife. In one small room we found, besides the corpse, the father and four children; there they must sleep, and cook, and eat their food. We sheltered the two boys, and at length gave them back to their father, who had obtained employment and was renting two rooms.

Many of the homeless boys received into the shelter are happy in Canada, whilst a large number are engaged on board fishing-smacks, or, as sailors, they are at work on board larger vessels.

Our hearts are often pained when we witness the neglect of parents who are given to the debasing vice of drunkenness; but there are many deserving poor, who are not to blame for their poverty, and for whom we feel the deepest sympathy. We are now in the height of our winter campaign; not only is the Lord blessing his servants labouring amongst the young, but He is permitting them to do a great work for Him among the grown-up people.

Every room is under visitation, and the right sort of people are attending the evangelistic services. The very poor crowd the large-room; there is nothing to draw them hither but a desire to hear the Gospel.

Preaching in the lodging-houses is one of the means for reaching the lowest classes of the people. In these places we have laboured for years, and a glorious work is doing. Here we meet with the outcast, the criminal, and the very poor. We have seen in these houses the most wretched and miserable of the human family. Men, women, and children we have met with away from home and friends: they are just the sort the loving Saviour would have us carry the glad message of salvation to.

On Sunday evenings we reach hundreds of this class, who, for the most part, listen attentively to the preachers, whilst not a few have given themselves to the Lord. About 200 of the most depraved of criminal and vicious women and girls were invited to tea. They were spoken to by ladies, and many were moved to tears. Afterwards they were shown some beautiful dissolving views. At the close of the meeting we found the word spoken had been carried home to the hearts of many present. We cannot describe the grief and sorrow of many of the dear girls away from home and parents. They waited behind, and entreated us to rescue them from their degraded position. The next day Mr. Thomas received into his "Homes" seven, and some were taken by Mr. Cooper, whilst two were admitted into our Shelter for Girls at George-yard.

One girl, with her right hand terribly bruised, seemed to feel her position much. We urged her to look to Jesus. She said, "You don't know, I am so bad—such a bad girl. My poor mother! You don't think the Lord Jesus will have anything to do with one so bad as me."

The George-yard Shelter for unfallen girls is carried on at the "Black Horse"—for many years a notorious public-house of the lowest stamp. It was here the very off-scouring of society met to drink and gamble. Here the detective watched for the criminal he wanted; here, on the morning of the Lord's-day, drinkers could obtain a supply of intoxicating drinks, and workmen waste their weekly earnings. As much as £20 worth of drink has been sold here on Sunday morning. Here, also, many of our poor boys and girls learned to become drunkards, and are now in the grave or in prison; their histories are to be found amongst the records of our criminal courts.

The upper portion of this old public-house we use as a Shelter for Girls. The old gin-shop is used by the George-yard Missionary to "Inebriate Women and Girls." Very successful meetings of this class are held several times a week. In one case fifty meet for Bible-reading.

For more than twenty-three years we have laboured amongst the drunkards of East London, and, with gratitude to a gracious God, we can say that hundreds have been rescued from this terrible sin, and are now rejoicing in Jesus their Saviour. Two fallen women brought a poor homeless girl to us; they had fed, and sheltered, and prevented her entering upon a life of sorrow. They said—"Do take her in at once; she has been sleeping on the bare floor in our room; she has shared our food, and, if you will take the word of two lost ones like us, she's a good girl; and, if you won't believe us, for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ take her in." We are glad that we did, for she has obtained a good situation, and is grateful to the Lord for rescuing her.

But so much remains to be done. In a neighbourhood where the people are always coming and going, there will be always some work to be done of the Lord. Theorists may have their pet schemes, but there is nothing but the glorious Gospel of the grace of God that can produce practical changes amongst this class. This has been our experience now for many years.

Those who are fellow-labourers with us here were much refreshed at the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey; they have returned to the Lord's vineyard, determined to do all in their power to carry the Gospel to "every creature" they come in contact with. In these days we feel we must be up and doing, testifying for the Lord Jesus before an ungodly world.

We know not how soon the "little while" will be past, and the Lord appear. We labour on, longing for, looking for, and expecting a coming Lord, and as we work we listen for the cry, "Behold! the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him."

GEORGE HOLLAND.

George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, E.

MONMOUTH.—The late special services here were concluded with a tea-meeting, at which there were present about 250. At the evening meeting the Market Hall was crowded. Mr. Hafford spoke with great power on "The Great Salvation" (Heb. ii. 3). The people were most attentive, and I believe deeply impressed. When Mr. Hafford first came amongst us, eleven weeks ago, many of these might have been found in public-houses, and such-like places, and now they sit for nearly two hours, night after night, listening eagerly to the grand old Gospel. We are now anxious to be led in this work entirely for God's glory; we therefore ask continued prayer for guidance. A mission hall is very much needed, and also a Gospel tent for summer use; this would be a great blessing for the dark villages round.—M. T. HOWARD.

WOOLWICH.—The two Sunday-evening services that have been held at the Baths, Nelson-street, since the free tea given to 500 tramps, have been most successful. Considerable numbers have remained to the after-meeting, and several are evidently under serious impression. The singing of Sankey's hymns is an attraction, and much good is looked for from the series of meetings contemplated during the winter. The hall is becoming a rallying-point for a large staff of earnest Christian workers belonging to all the churches in the town, many of these being the fruit of the great religious awakening and of Mr. Moody's labours. Other meetings of a similar character are being organized in different parts of Woolwich. Is not the work of the churches in this field, so earnestly advocated at Bow and Camberwell, only beginning? Will your readers continue to pray for us?

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

BY MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM.

Long ages past, a glorious star,
Seen in the distant east,
Led watching wise men from afar
To find an Infant blest.

Its wondrous course at length was stayed
Above a mean abode,
Just over where the Babe was laid,
Incarnate Son of God.

With joyful haste, to worship there,
Before the Child they come;
Spread out their gifts, prophetic, rare,
And, warned, depart for home.

That star went out in Bethlehem's sky;
That humble house decayed;
That Child, accurs'd from men, did die;
Those kings in dust were laid.

Not so the blessings which attend
That strange, incarnate birth;
They live to grow, and never end
Till they have compassed earth.

That night brought in an endless day;
That star a Sun revealed;
That birth has opened up the way
By which our souls are healed.

Jesus! our all to Thee we owe,
And all to Thee we give;
Our worship and our praise shall show
By faith on Thee we live.

MISSIONS IN NEW MEXICO.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Evangelist describes a ride of two thousand miles through this portion of the United States territory. He says:—

Upon our return trip a Sabbath was spent at Las Cruces and Mesilla, and a service held with thirty or forty Americans, who are as sheep without a shepherd. Dr. Hentzleman and his wife, who had years of adventure in Old Mexico, gave us delightful entertainment, and a deeper insight into the heathenism of Mexican papists. But most of all were we touched by the condition of a few Mexicans, who, under the influence of the Baptist Mission years ago, became Protestants, and then were left for years, and are still without spiritual guides. One of them, through an interpreter, made a most piteous and feeling plea for a missionary. Another, who could not understand a word of English, sent for me to pray for her, saying that if she could not understand what I said, yet God could, and that was sufficient.

How long, oh, how long before the American Church will arise and show herself deeply in earnest to give the Gospel to these baptized heathen on her own borders? New Mexico has 100,000 American citizens, of whom not more than one in thirty can read or write their own names, and a large majority of whom are sunk in the most abject superstition. They already have the ballot. Shall they have the Gospel? They are knocking at the door of Congress to be admitted into the sisterhood of the States. Shall they be evangelized? Reader, are you doing all you can to sustain and encourage the Church in this great work? Have you given all that you should this year to Home Missions?

MONTBELLARD, FRANCE.—Pastor Henri Andru, of this place, has visited Great Britain for the purpose of raising funds to build a chapel for the preaching of the Gospel at Montbellard. He has issued an appeal, which is endorsed by many of the leading men in London of the Baptist body, to which Pastor Andru belongs. His address is 1, Granville-square, King's-cross-road, W.C.

PECKHAM AND NUNHEAD MISSION.—This Mission was commenced in December, 1874. In February, 1875, a hall was opened near Nunhead-green, and the glad tidings of salvation were made known therein. During the summer, convenient premises in the midst of a poor neighbourhood were secured, and, after undergoing repairs and alterations, were opened as a Mission Institute on Oct. 17, and a number of agencies are now in operation. About 600 families are visited every month. A good work among the young men of the district has been carried on, and several have decided for Christ. The Mission is wholly unsectarian. The Committee will readily forward full information to Christians willing to assist in the work, which has for its object the glory of the coming Saviour, and the turning of men from Satan unto God.

THE RAILWAY ARCH.

THE Mission with which the railway arch in Royal Mint-street is connected has been in existence for about thirteen years; and, by the blessing of God, has been during that period a light in a very dark neighbourhood, and a refuge for many an anxious and sorrowful soul, to whom the sound of the Gospel in the simplicity of Christ's own words has brought peace and consolation. The arch has been to a great extent made habitable by the hands of the faithful man and his wife, who, from the first, have borne the burden of the work; and it now presents the appearance of a large and comfortable hall, hung around with texts and simple decorations.

During the week, there are altogether eleven services of one kind or another, which are well attended; and there are children's classes, mothers' meetings, Sunday breakfast meetings, as well as Bible-classes, attached to the work. The Mission is in the midst of a large Roman Catholic neighbourhood, and in its earlier days, and even so lately as a few months since, Mr. Heath and his wife have been actually attacked, their property almost wrecked, and even their lives threatened, by an angry mob; but the Lord has on each occasion enabled them to escape without serious injury.

Last year a special mission to the dock labourers of the London and St. Katharine Docks and of the wharves in the neighbourhood was added to the work. These poor men present a promising field for evangelistic effort. They are not an entirely fixed body, but consist to a great extent of men out of work, or of lost character, who, in a starving condition, gather around the dock gates in the hope of picking up a pittance in lading or unlading vessels. It is a very precarious livelihood, liable to be affected by various passing events which little touch the outer world, such as the removal of the sugar duties, or the sinking of the Charles Dickens in Boulogne Harbour, both which occurrences brought much suffering for want of work to some of the men. No one who has watched their haggard faces, their thin and ill-clothed forms in cold wintry weather, huddled together for warmth whilst awaiting their chance employment, or seen the eager rush for work when the arrival of a vessel is announced, will easily forget it. The object of the special mission is to speak of Jesus to these poor men as they linger in unwilling idleness around the gates, and to help the most needy with tickets for soup and bread; and in the winter season, by gathering them together in the Railway Arch to a simple meal of tea and bread (most thankfully received), to seize the opportunity of preaching to them the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The expenses of the Mission, exclusive of the special work amongst the labourers (which is otherwise provided for), come to about £130 a year, and have been hitherto defrayed by a few friends whose personal acquaintance with the locality has enabled them fully to realize the blessing of the work.

There is good ground for believing that many souls have first received the seed of life at the Railway Arch; and the earnest prayers of fellow-Christians are requested, that the glory of Jesus and the preaching of his Kingdom may be the only motives of the work, and that God the Holy Ghost may sanctify every portion of it, and bring forth from it much fruit to the Father's endless praise.

A YOUNG BARRISTER.

PROTESTANT LECTURES.—We have seen the prospectus of the Protestant Tract Society and Lecture Agency, 17, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., which seeks to counteract the evils of Romanism, Ritualism, and Rationalism. Help is requested towards the delivery of Protestant evangelical lectures throughout all England.

THE MISSION IN BELLEVILLE.—By the kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Miller, of 5, Sussex-square, Brighton, a drawing-room meeting was held on Friday, Dec. 17, at their house, to hear an account from Miss de Broen of the mission she has established in Belleville—that suburb of Paris in which the lowest classes principally live. Miss de Broen explained the circumstances which led her, in 1871, to commence her Christian labours in Belleville, and how under God's blessing they have since been prospered. At the present moment special funds are needed for providing the balance required for putting up an iron room to be used as a day school, as well as for the other purposes of the Mission. About £1500 will be wanted to put it in proper order, and additional annual subscriptions to meet the current expenses. At the close of Miss de Broen's statement, one of her lady-helpers who was present gave some further details as to the importance of providing education for the children. A committee of ladies was formed for raising funds in aid of the Mission. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mrs. Gladstone, 31, Ventnor-villas, Brighton, and at the office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE first public meeting of this Society was held on Wednesday, 15th inst., at three o'clock, in the Young Men's Christian Association Rooms, Sloane-street, Chelsea, Rev. Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN enlarged on the special form of Christian work implied in the term "Medical Mission." The Christian Church has of late recognized the great importance of having medical men as missionaries, because it was found impossible to reach certain classes in heathen lands by the ordinary means of teaching. By this Association much more power has been given to the testimony of the Gospel than previously. The self-devotion that medical work requires has been a living testimony to Christianity. The Christianity and kindness of a medical man who loves his profession will win hearts if anything can.

In respect to medical missions, the power of children is not quite known. In one of our large societies one-eighth of the funds is raised by children. The present generation needs to be trained in medical mission work, that the next generation may understand it. It is a comparatively new sphere of Christian activity, and it is often hard therefore to arouse an interest in it. Hence the importance of interesting children.

Dr. HEWAN (President) observed that children were not only able to do much themselves for the work of missions, but were sure to interest their friends in such mission work as they loved; he judged from the success of the Medical Mission working party at his own house that the efforts of children in the matter of clothing the sick at the various mission dispensaries are likely to prove a great power for good.

Dr. DUDGEON (Pekin) said his life for twelve years past had been connected with this work. Three weeks ago he was present at the inauguration of the Glasgow "Children's Medical Missionary Association," and from the enthusiasm manifested on that occasion he augured well for its prospects. Forty years since medical mission work was begun by our American brethren. At his own station (Pekin) there were in the first year 20,000 patients from all parts of the country, from princes and dukes to beggars; and the success of the hospital had been so great that the quack doctors of China try to impose on the people with medicine-bottles prepared in imitation of those used by the foreign doctors. The greatest consideration is shown to anyone connected with the Pekin Hospital; indeed, the political importance of our medical work in China is very great. The eaves of his hospital were now covered with tablets of the most elaborate description, presented by grateful patients. "You have saved me like the return of spring," says one of them.

Dr. SAUNDERS spoke of the poor of this great city of London, living many of them within a stone's throw of the grand dwellings—people who are at present nobody's people—outside people. You may see women so huddled up in the corner of small rooms that you can scarcely tell what they are. He was never more humiliated in his life than when a woman lately said to him, "I will fall down and worship you, sir, if you will relieve me of my pain." The medical missionary meets such in their sufferings, alleviates their bodily pains, rescues them from death, puts clothes upon and nourishes them. Romanists take advantage of the mission, and many of them have embraced the Gospel of Christ; their souls have been saved, and this is the primary thing in all works of this kind. He said he was anxious to open another medical mission in London, and also to find another medical man willing to share in the work.

Rev. G. H. STANTON (St. Giles-in-the-Fields) said: I am glad to bring this work before the dear little children here. I give the names of some of the sick children of my parish to some little boys and girls, and these read them hymns and the Bible, and sometimes they pray with them. Can you do anything of that sort? Some of you might work; some might take cards; and you can advise others to help. And children can also ask God to help the good cause.

Rev. G. W. BUTLER said: Though this is the first public meeting of the Children's Medical Missionary Society, it has already done much. Its boxes are all over the country from Durham to Cornwall—from Wales to the eastern coast. The speaker drew special attention to the collecting-boxes, to the Medical Mission books for sale, and specimen articles of work to be seen in the ante-room.

The CHAIRMAN remarked that he was glad to find the widespread nature of the Children's Medical Missionary Society; when he had first heard of its existence, it struck him forcibly as a thing one ought to have thought of before; and a hearty expression of his good wishes for its continued prosperity brought the meeting to a close.

FOOD FOR THE HUNGRY.

MISSION HALL, GREAT ORMOND-YARD, QUEEN-SQUARE.

WITH the aid of the missionary who labours in this large and destitute district under the London City Mission, we purpose giving once a week a jug of good nourishing pea-soup to about forty of those whom we know to be almost destitute—widows, orphan children, and others who are in urgent distress. Help is given only to those upon whom the missionary has had his eye, and knows to be deserving. At present we cannot exceed this allowance, but if your readers will give us liberal help we would supply them three times a week during the winter, and give them besides small quantities of coals, and some nice warm blankets for feeble shivering limbs.

There are many most interesting incidents which I long to record of the great blessing which has rested on our missionary's self-denying labours, both amongst the children in the Sunday-school, and also amongst the rough men employed about the Yard, such as cabmen, ostlers, wheelwrights, &c.; but my present object is to obtain help for the soup-kitchen, which is a new institution, and has arisen out of the more spiritual work. I will just say, however, that the spiritual blessing we have lately received is most remarkable. A prosperous tradesman in the neighbourhood, who has since described himself as being formerly "everything that was bad," has been brought, entirely through what he heard from the missionary in the hall, to give himself to the service of Christ. After his conversion, he became, first, the active superintendent of our Sunday-schools; and next, feeling a great desire to enter on a larger sphere of work for his Master, he established a night school in one of the worst parts of St. Giles's, where he has 150 of the wildest boys, whom he is seeking to bring to Christ.

The only other fact which I would mention, as showing the reality of the work, is that some of the men who have received a blessing through the mission work in Great Ormond-yard have set their hearts on opening a new mission-room in Little Ormond-yard, becoming themselves responsible for a considerable portion of the rent. They have to collect the sum of £30 for the purpose of various fittings before the room can be opened. They have only yet collected about half that amount, and perhaps some of your readers may be disposed to help these poor disciples to realize their wishes.

Contributions for either of these objects can be sent to the Honorary Treasurer, C. J. Fache, Esq., 13, John-street, Bedford-row, London; or to myself at the same address.

EDWARD BANNISTER, Hon. Sec.

[We have inserted this as a new effort; our readers know how many more there are equally deserving their help.]

ANOTHER KILBURN HOME.

AMONGST the many Homes in Kilburn, for which the prayers and sympathy of your readers have been asked, few need them more than the small Home for Training Female Servants at 27, Pembroke-road, Kilburn-park. It was established by one Christian lady, who, in her visits of the abodes of misery in this great city, found numbers of children more destitute than many orphans, and yet ineligible for orphanages. Of those already admitted each has a history, which might almost be termed a romance. One babe of a month was taken in to enable the poor mother to take a situation, and thus provide for her other destitute ones, whilst its presence there gave many a practical lesson in nursing to the elder girls. The mother of another child, a most respectable widow, has not only supported her four little ones, but has, by toiling early and late, kept her own and her late husband's aged mother from the workhouse. She is now lying dangerously ill in a hospital.

Every effort is made to lead these dear children to Jesus, and the prayers and sympathies of all who have at heart the welfare of little waifs and strays is earnestly asked. Without such Homes they must eventually drift into the ranks of the degraded and criminal classes. All the girls who have left are giving satisfaction, but there are none now in the Home fit for service. Further particulars will be given by Miss Walker, honorary superintendent, at the Home; or Miss Firth, treasurer, 74, New Bond-street, W.

GOLDEN-LANE MISSION.—Mr. W. J. Orsman states that the work of the Lord at the Golden-lane Christian Mission to Costermongers is progressing exceedingly. The meetings on Sunday average 700 persons, and two simultaneous prayer and inquiry meetings are held after the evening service. The week-night meetings are also largely attended. The winter benevolent operations have now commenced. Mr. Orsman's address is 75, Oakley-road, Islington.

SOWING AND REAPING.—I.

BY GEORGE BREALEY.

"Herein is that saying true, one soweth, and another reapeth. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours." (John iv. 37, 38)
 "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." (John v. 17.)
 "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." (Matt. x. 20.)

So true it is still—one soweth, another reapeth. I was journeying to Bristol a short time since. I found one of my fellow-travellers was a City commercial. We had a few words on commerce and matters which concern the life which now is; and then I asked my friend whether he had any business transactions with the oldest firm in the universe.

"What is their name, and where do they live?" was the question.

"Their names are the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and their great place of business is Calvary."

"Oh, I see what you are," he said; "you are one of Mr. Moody's sort; I don't like such close dealing."

"But," I replied, "you deal closely with your customers on the matter of sale; and you would be of little account with your employer if you did not transact business; and there is no business like the matter of your soul and eternity—nothing so real as heaven and hell, Christ and the devil, life and death."

"Yes," he replied, "that is what Moody said. I did not like him."

"Or rather," I said, "you did not like what he said."

"Yes, that's what I mean."

"Well, what he said was either true or false; if true, you dare not shake it off; if false, you need not fear it. Now, can you decide which it is? Is there a heaven, and is there a hell?"

Well, yes, he believed there were both.

"To which are you going?"

"I don't know. But if what Moody said is right, and you are the same way of thinking, I suppose I must be going to hell."

"Is that a pleasant thought while rushing on at sixty miles an hour?"

"No."

"Are you willing to do a little business with my firm?" Taking out my Bible, I asked him to read Rom. iii.—and he said it was a dark picture. "But," I replied, "it is like life—a true photograph, written in the light by Him who is the Light. Now," I said, "the first part of the business is to accept the verdict of the judge and plead guilty; which, if done with the heart, will soon settle all the difficulty."

His reply was, "I must plead guilty to being a sinner; but I don't see how that will help me out of it."

"We will see," I replied. "The next thing in the chapter is a mercy-seat for the guilty, in the blood of Christ. He died for the guilty, and faith in that blood justifies the guilty: 'being justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus'; 'Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God.' Now, there are three aspects of how we are justified—in ver. 24, it is freely by his grace; in ch. v. 9, it is by his blood; in ch. v. 1 it is by faith. It is God's free love, but it is at a wondrous cost—the life of his Son—the blood is the life;—and Jesus died. Then it is through faith we receive it, and are made partakers. 'He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life,' said Jesus (John vi.). Will you do business with God in the matter by receiving his Son, and thus pass from death to life, from sin to holiness, from condemnation to salvation, from hell to heaven, and have Christ as your Saviour and Lord instead of Satan?"

The interest he manifested was intense. He confessed he had not been happy since he heard Moody at Bow-road Hall; but now he could see the other side of the matter, and would thankfully accept the terms of salvation in God's way.

I doubt not there are many such cases which do not come to light. He thanked me for the close way of speaking, and as we parted I said—"If you have done business with the Great Firm for yourself, seek to be a commercial for the Firm in the same way as I have to you."

PAPAL INTOLERANCE.—A New York paper states that the Protestant Indian Church at Oka was completely wrecked on Dec. 7 by a crowd of French Canadian Roman Catholics, roof, steeple, and walls being levelled to the ground.

MR. HAMMOND AND THE CHILDREN.

REMARKABLE AWAKENING.

THE Harrisburg correspondent of a Philadelphia contemporary sends a long and deeply interesting account of special services for children being conducted there by Mr. E. P. Hammond. We extract portions of his sketch:—

The Opera House is crowded every morning at eight o'clock by a congregation of boys and girls, all eager to hear and join in the singing, and to listen to the exhortations of Mr. Hammond and others who take part in the proceedings. The morning meetings are generally the largest, so far as children are concerned, as the hour before school enables them to be present. In the afternoon and evening the attendance is more largely made up of men and women, though, as the different schools disperse, delegations of boys and girls are added to the audiences, the effect of which is at once apparent in the singing. After the regular meeting, the sermon, and the address to the young, there is usually held the "inquiry-meeting," which consists in personal appeals to those present by Christian men and women who take part in the proceedings.

While Mr. Hammond reads a portion of Scripture, and he is in the act of exhortation, notes are passed to him asking for prayers for a husband, a wife, a brother, and a sister. Others again follow their friends to the green and dressing-rooms, so that while prayer, singing, and exhortation are had in the main audience-room, far behind the scenes of the stage are heard the notes of praise and prayer, the effect of which is beyond description. Where only a night or two ago Davenport and his troupe enacted Hamlet, we now have the evangelist performing his more real and elevated part. These inquiry-meetings are attended by men and women who never enter a regular church, while Christian men and women, preachers, and church officers are here brought into personal co-operation, who were perhaps never before thus mingled.

Among the incidents of yesterday's meeting was that of a lady who openly declared, "I thank God that two out of four for whom I have been praying came to God last night in our meetings." Rev. J. D. Robinson, one of the ablest and most revered men in the Presbyterian pulpit, said: "Sometimes a very strange thing occurs for which to thank God. I noticed, when Mr. Hammond asked all the children who felt that they were Christians to sing the last verse of that hymn this morning, among a group of girls one who had been singing the previous verses very heartily, when Mr. Hammond said that, she drooped her head and did not sing the last verse. I was very glad to see such evidences from a child that the Spirit of God was striving with her."

At a general consultation of the Protestant clergymen the character of these meetings was fully discussed; and while pastors were free to admit that most of the proceedings were new to them, no objection was urged to the effectiveness, and all readily confessed a recognition of the Divine influences which pervaded them. It is seldom that such a unity of action among the sects can be brought about.

THE WHITECHAPEL TRAGEDY.—A tract, bearing specially on the solemn lessons to be derived from the circumstances of this sad affair, has been written by Rev. Jas. Morris, Kelso Villa, Cotham Brow, Bristol, of whom it may be obtained; or of Messrs. Taylor Bros., 22, Baldwin-street, Bristol (1s. per 100). We hope much blessing to our young men and women may follow its circulation.

REDRUTH, CORNWALL.—There is a gracious revival going on in our midst and neighbourhood. Mr. Horton, evangelist, from Leeds, has been holding services in the Chapel, and numbers have been professedly saved. Mr. Watson, an evangelist from the North, has been greatly owned of God at Camborne and St. Day. He is expected to commence at Wesley Chapel, Redruth, next month. J. W. WILSON.

GORLESTON, GREAT YARMOUTH.—Each year for some years past the loss of life at sea from this place has been very serious, and we have therefore a large number of widows and fatherless children. There is much need to help these during this season of the year, and an earnest Christian of another denomination has joined me in an effort to alleviate the sadness of their case. We hope to be able to give some coals to the widows and aged people, and also to continue an effort we have already commenced, to supply them occasionally with good soup. I gave in your columns an account of my visit to the North Sea Fleet during last summer. God has blessed the Word preached. The vessel in which I sailed from here has just come into harbour, having lost three men. One of these dear fellows has left a widow and four children. On behalf of many like these I beg sympathy and aid, which will be gladly received by myself or at the office of THE CHRISTIAN.

GEORGE WILSON, Baptist Minister.

BASUTO-LAND, SOUTH AFRICA.

MR. R. H. DYKE, who is preparing in Paris, and in due time hopes to proceed to the African field as a missionary, sends the following account received by him of the conversion of a heathen 100 years old.

During the past year the Lord has been doing great things in our benighted South Africa. A thousand and more souls saved in Basuto-land during the last twelve months. Is it not glorious! The last of the students at the Morija normal school has yielded to Jesus after a long struggle. Many old renegades are coming back, and some of the chiefs who had opposed the Gospel from the first are yielding. The four evangelists who leave in the beginning of spring (March) for the tribes beyond the Limpopo are now going the round of the Lesuto churches, holding meetings of farewell: £300, besides oxen, &c., have been subscribed by the Basutos for this inland mission.

"I have to send you by this opportunity news which I am sure will cause you much joy. It is that of the conversion of Ratsin, aged 100 years, and his younger brother. You know these two men to be very aged. The one you will not have forgotten. He always occupied an important position in the tribe, being uncle to Moshesh, the late king. He is still looked up to. Four years ago he thought he was about to die, and ordered, through the Queen's agent in the country, an English coffin; he, however, recovered, and God, whilst granting him a few years longer, granted him a greater mercy—that of knowing Him and loving Him."

During the lifetime of Moshesh, I did not know a man more indifferent to the things of religion than Ratsin. To day he is a new man; his heart has been changed by the power of the Holy Spirit, and in him I now see one of the most irresistible, apologetical proofs in favour of Christianity. In speaking of this old man, we have been able to say to the most sceptical, "Come and see."

"It was on Sept. 19 that the baptism of Ratsin took place on 'the Mountain' (Shabo Bosigo), in the presence of over 2000 people. We gave him the name of Timothy. In reply to a question put to him, he said, 'By nature I am a sinner, but I am born again, I am a child of the Lord; I rejoice in Him, all else has lost its value.' Oh, what a joy lighted up the face of this 'centenarian.'

"Ratetenene, brother of Ratsin, took the name of 'Noe,' and was also baptized at his village, before a great multitude, which covered the rock and caves forming an amphitheatre around us.

"I pray the Lord to add to the number of his children all the old friends and companions-in-arms of Moshesh, who said on his death-bed, 'By this I shall know those who have me truly at heart, and those who thought but of the favours they enjoyed in my presence. None of those who loved me in this world wish to be separated from me for eternity; they will therefore take the road I have now chosen, and follow me.'"

THE NEW YORK CITY MISSION AND TRACT SOCIETY lately held its last monthly meeting. Mr. John Ruston gave an interesting account of mission work in tenement houses, showing the happy results of Christian effort in elevating and saving the degraded and abandoned. Rev. John Dooly, of the Carmel Chapel, in the Bowery, recited incidents of his labours among the friendless and homeless men who throng the Bowery, many of whom have been rescued by the brotherly hand extended to them.

IRISH EVANGELISM.—We are highly gratified to be able to inform our readers, from authentic reports that have reached us, that the agents of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland are doing good service in the cause of Christ in that land. Their ministrations are directed to Roman Catholics and Protestants alike, and many instances are occurring to encourage them in their important but difficult work. This excellent Society well deserves support. The office of the Society is 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and the indefatigable Secretary, Captain Kearney White, will be happy to give information or receive contributions.

CHILDREN'S OPEN-AIR SERVICES.—Some few months since I gave an account of how I had been led to start a meeting for children in the suburb of Brixton. These meetings were continued so long as weather permitted; the results are interesting and encouraging. The attendance was regular. Many who were present at the first meeting continued their attendance from Sunday to Sunday, helping by their young voices in the singing, and testifying to their love to Jesus by speaking to the children at the close of each meeting. I can point to many who gave their youthful hearts to the Saviour, and are now regular in attendance at Sunday-school and evening services. R. C.

OUR DEAF-MUTE BROTHERS.

How fair upon the mountains
Are the feet of them that bring Glad tidings of salvation
To souls fast perishing!
But there are those who never
May hear that joyful sound,
Whose ears are closed ever,
Whose lips are silent bound.

Shall we, whose souls are lighted with wisdom from on High,
To these, our deaf-mute brothers, the lamp of life deny?

Oh! if across the desert
Of their sad, silent lot,
One little ray of blessing
May by our means be brought;—
Oh! if one thought of Heaven,
One hope of life to come,
May cheer the dreary prospect
Of the poor Deaf and Dumb,

Shall we, whom God has blessed with wisdom and with speech,
Refuse that ray of life and hope to bring within their reach?

—Llandaff Leaflet.

* Written in behalf of the School for the Deaf and Dumb, Llandaff.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. Alexander Melville, at the School, of whom also may be had collecting-cards, by which the young may help to collect funds in support of this institution.

EVANGELISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

SOME years since, a well-known business man of Boston strayed into a church a thousand miles from home, where an eminent lay preacher, an old comrade of Mr. Moody, was urging Christian consecration. After a tender appeal, the preacher asked those present who were willing to adopt the Harlan Page Covenant—"Resolved, that, by Divine grace, I will act as though there were no one else to act, waiting not for others,"—to rise. Among the first to spring to his feet was our Boston friend.

At the close of the service, pressing through the throng, he seized the hand of the preacher, saying, "Tell me how I, an active business man, may carry out my pledge?" The outgrowth of the acquaintance thus made was a subsequent meeting in the far West of these two men, who planned a system of aggressive work which aimed ultimately to reach a score of States. The plan was to labour through the executive committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations of various States, seeking to come in contact with individual churches, rousing them to Christian activity.

For four years this work has been carried on in this State with greater force and power, winning the loving support and sympathy of the clergy. The canvass for the fifth year opened on Nov. 26, and bids fair to be fruitful of blessed results. Other States have caught the impulse given by the Old Bay State, and last winter Vermont was mightily moved by the Holy Ghost as the untried workers went from place to place. Over a thousand were admitted to her evangelical churches as the result of this lay effort. Local pastors joined heartily in the service, and union and sympathy never failed of direct blessings. Maine, New Hampshire, and Connecticut have also fallen into line, and this coming winter five of the New England States are to have a systematic visitation of the churches.

Who can estimate the result of such a campaign, that is baptized with daily prayer, and carried on under the guiding influence of the Holy Ghost? Wisconsin has issued a programme extending from Oct. 19 to March 1. New Jersey and other States are also engaged in similar work. Dependence upon the Spirit, a prayerful trust in God, the careful, conscientious study of the Bible, are the conditions of success in this mighty increasing service. An annual convention of the Associations is held in these States, to choose the executive committee, to look over the field, to plan and pray together, and thus sympathy and interest in each other are enlisted, and the fires of Christian love and devotion kept bright.

We watch with deep interest the columns of THE CHRISTIAN, often finding there words which quicken and stimulate us on this side of the sea, and we rejoice in all local enterprises which seek to revive the wayward ones and rouse the indolent disciples.

The work at Northfield, Mr. Moody's home (just above us), is going on, his brothers engaging heartily in sustaining the meetings there. S. E. BRIDGEMAN.

"GRACE FOR GRACE."*

A LITTLE while before Mr. Moody left England this book was brought under his notice by some American friends on whose judgment he relied, and in compliance with whose request he gave an introductory letter—not, indeed (as we have since learned), written by himself, but expressing his belief in the value of these letters, and warmly recommending them to Mr. Hodder.

The book has been severely criticized by the Record, and Mr. Moody has written explaining the circumstances, and regretting that he was induced to commend it. The publishers have, therefore, resolved to omit the introductory letter from all future issues.

The question remains as to the soundness or otherwise of the book itself. After our receiving it for review, it lay unnoticed until the article already mentioned appeared in the Record. We sent the book for review to a clerical friend, whom no one who knows him would suspect of want of honesty, but whose leanings and whose writings have always been in the same direction as those of the Record. We felt, therefore, that we were safe in his hands from a partial or unfairly favourable review.

His opinion was published in our issue of Dec. 2, and was animadverted upon by the Record of the 10th. We have asked him to give the book a second reading, and the following communication is the result:—

The Record has lately devoted a second article to the examination of "Grace for Grace," in which there is a continuation of the same adverse criticism to which allusion has been already made. The Record expresses regret that THE CHRISTIAN should not have reviewed the book more unfavourably, and, to justify its severer judgment, some of the most objectionable passages in the book are quoted apart from their context. In this way a far more unfavourable impression is conveyed to its readers than is at all fair. Take, for example, the following. The Record says:—

"Does Mr. Moody really think that in times like these it is wise even to seem to applaud the deceased writer's statement that 'the grandest and most elevating sentiment to me of Christianity is recognized in the Monastic system'?"

The italics are the Record's, and the impression conveyed to most readers would probably be the very painful one that the deceased writer regarded the monastic system as the grandest and most elevating sentiment of Christianity. But here are his own words (page 183), which will speak for themselves, italics only being used to point attention to what has been overlooked by the Record:—

"You said nothing to me in your letter about 'The History of Port Royal.' How did you like it? I trust it has done you no harm—of which, however, I am not so certain, considering its strong legal and ascetic tendency. Nevertheless, the grandest and most elevating sentiment to me of Christianity is recognized in the monastic system—the sentiment that Christ is the true and proper Bridegroom of the soul. Certainly, it was the influence of that sentiment which drove so many, both of the strong and the lovely, to seek in the cloister a shelter from the world's contamination. It was a devotion to the unseen Lover of the soul, though a superstitious and irrational devotion, which forbade them to find joy in anything but spiritual intercourse. I do not suppose that this was the common motive, but that it was so in many cases. I do not admire the institution, nor regret that we have nothing in Protestantism that corresponds with it. It is condemned alike by reason and Scripture; it was the natural product of an age of ignorance and licentiousness, and its best practical effect was to bind the conscience without at all relieving the heart."

Again, the Record brings what seems a serious charge against Mr. James in the following sentence:—

"Is it well that young men should be taught to believe that 'Strauss and Renan both represent the great intellectual want of the age in reference to Christianity, the want of an intelligible, human, or natural version of Christ's history and teaching'? Is it come to this, that not one of all the four inspired Evangelists, including the beloved disciple John, who leant on the bosom of Jesus, has been able, under Divine inspiration, 'to give an intelligible, human, or natural version of Christ's history and teaching'?"

My first feeling on reading this was that the Record's criticism of this passage was by no means too severe; but, on looking at the book itself it became apparent that a grievous injustice had been done—no doubt unintentionally—by altering the punctuation. The passage, as it occurs in the book (p. 191), reads thus:—

"The great intellectual want of the age in reference to Christianity—the want of an intelligible human or natural version of Christ's history and teachings."

* "Grace for Grace": Letters of Rev. William James, of Albany. With Introduction by D. L. Moody. Hodder and Stoughton. 8s. 6d.

The absence of commas, which the Record reviewer inserts after the words "intelligible" and "human," makes a considerable difference as to the sense. It is plain that the writer considers the great want of the age to be a "human or natural version of Christ's history and teachings" which would be "intelligible." There is no question about the Scriptures being intelligible, for they are not "human or natural"; but, on the contrary, Divine or spiritual. It may be very fair to question whether he is right in supposing that such a version is the great intellectual want of the age, but it is surely not fair to represent him as slighting the Scriptures because an intelligible version of the kind he mentions has not yet been produced. Farrar's "Life of Christ"—had he lived to see it—might possibly have satisfied him, but even those who regard that book as a proof of how unsatisfactory every "human or natural" life of Christ must necessarily be, and how far more suited to our need are the Divine and spiritual records of the Evangelists—even such would hardly regard Dr. Farrar's work as intended to be a studied insult to the Scriptures. And if not, no more should the expression of a desire for such a book be regarded in this light either.

There is one more point which needs to be noticed. One who had not read "Grace for Grace" would gather from the notices of it in the Record that the writer sympathized with the errors of Maurice and the other writers whose names "it is not desirable even to appear to quote with approval," as THE CHRISTIAN has already admitted. How far this is from being the case will best appear by giving a few sentences from what the book contains about Maurice, who occupies the largest share of space allotted to any of the heterodox writers who are mentioned. Whether what is said of him deserves to be described as "the incense of exaggerated flattery," is best left to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to judge for themselves. It is quite true that far too much praise and too little censure are bestowed upon Robertson, Faber, Manning, and the author of "Ecce Homo"; but, as has been before remarked, a private correspondence with congenial friends is very different from a public deliverance of one's opinion. Viewed, however, only in the light of a criticism upon Maurice, contained in a private letter to a friend, it may be not without profit for readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and the Record also, to read what follows (p. 241):—

"I think I have a very clear view of the root of all his errors. The end of all his refinement is to vindicate and magnify the love of God. But he does this by virtually denying the Divine holiness—by shutting his eyes to the worst effect of sin, and that in which the evil nature especially appears—viz, the wound which it inflicts on God's moral sensibilities, which is the cause of his wrath against it. The whole evil of sin, as Maurice views it, appears in its natural (not its judicial) effect upon the mind of the sinner; its only effect upon the mind of God is to excite his pity.

"Occasionally an expression may occur which intimates more, but it is meant evidently to conciliate orthodoxy, and in any deep sense is repudiated by his system. I cannot learn from him that God hates sin with a perfect hatred. It grieves him as the transgression of a child grieves a parent, but it does not provoke Him to threaten it in good earnest with everlasting punishment. On the contrary, the only effect of sin on God, as far as I can learn from Maurice, is to bring out in all its intensity His love to man. Love, according to Maurice, is comprehensive of holiness; they cannot be distinguished. The very holiness of God, therefore, obliges Him to save man from the effects of sin. And how is this done? According to him, all are righteous in the Righteous One, for all are in Him, or, which with Maurice is the same thing, He is in all, in one not less than another. What is the proof of this? The flimsiest that I ever saw adduced for a position so important, drawn from a particular interpretation, or I may say perversion of the experience of Job, which by an assumption still more glaring the writer asserts to be the experience of universal humanity. It rests absolutely on the amazing assumption that every man of every class, from the most contented Pharisee to the miserable malefactor, possesses, and in given circumstances always becomes conscious of, a righteousness which is deeper and stronger than his sin—a righteousness derived from his union with the Righteous One, in all whose redeeming acts all are alike interested. On the way in which this redemption becomes effectual he speaks only in general. But that the result of his system or of his principles is a refined universalism, there can be no doubt. In his last essay he is forced to confess it.

"Though I have always held that the system which makes love more prominent than wrath is the best system for men of all classes, and though if I felt, as Maurice does, that there was no other ground than the one he takes, on which the depth and sincerity of God's love could be indicated, I might go over to his side. This is far, however, from being my mind.

"My grand objection to the system of Maurice is, that, by divesting sin of its worst aspect, it robs the love of God of its highest and most peculiar manifestation."

In conclusion: the advice already given is again urged as.

the best escape from a difficulty into which all concerned have, it would appear, by inadvertence been betrayed. Let a new edition be at once issued, omitting all mention of these unsound writers. It will involve the omission of only about fifteen pages out of two hundred and ninety; or, if Maurice be made an exception (as we think he may well be, considering how well his errors are exposed), ten pages will suffice. What remains will, it is hoped, then be judged of on its own merits, apart from the prejudice which the ill-judged laudation of the style and gifts of these dangerous writers is calculated to produce. It will then be of little credit to the spiritual discernment of any critic who shall fail to appreciate the sterling piety, substantial soundness, and spiritual wisdom of the author of these interesting Letters.

[Our reviewer has not specially mentioned the almost unqualified commendation of "Robertson's Sermons" (p. 25), and considering the widespread and hurtful influence which they have exercised, and continue to exercise, we are constrained to mention the dangerous tendency of these eloquent and fascinating discourses. Still, it ought to be remembered that Robertson brought into prominence some important truths often overlooked by evangelical writers and preachers.

Some blame, doubtless, is due to all concerned in this matter, not—as our reviewer has shown—excluding the Record; but time is too precious for recrimination or self-justification. It is, however, worth while to consider whether it be true that this book, irrespective of its admitted blemishes, is "a mangle-mangle of truth and error," "covering over the gulf that has hitherto been recognized as separating evangelical truth from infidelity." If not, nothing is gained to the cause of truth by saying so.—ED.]

EVANGELIZATION IN MANCHESTER.

THE "Wooden Tent," to which I have before alluded, is at length completed, and was formally opened for evangelistic purposes on Friday night, the 10th inst. It is reared on the site of the canvas tent, at the junction of Union and Ogdon-streets, Ardwick. It is well constructed of good timber, with admirable contrivances for heating, lighting, and ventilation, and will accommodate 700 people. The entire cost—amounting, we believe, to £300 and upwards—has been defrayed. Trustees have been chosen from representatives of various churches, and the services of the building will be unsectarian.

The opening service was presided over by Dr. Ziemann, and was one of very deep interest. The spirit of praise seemed to have taken possession of almost the entire audience. Several anxious ones remained, after the service had been concluded, for counsel and instruction in the way of salvation. The first Gospel service was held on the following Sunday evening. Each night since the structure has been crowded, working men preponderating. Already "the harvest is great, but the labourers are few." Will the Manchester Christians who may read this take the hint, and go and assist in the prayer and inquiry meetings?

Good news reaches us of special services at Stretford and Blackley, two large suburban villages. They are the result, to a considerable extent, of the men's meetings held in the Museum. One who was induced to attend the latter became "a new creature in Christ," and went home to Blackley, and started cottage meetings. From these sprang the present services, which have been blessed to the salvation of many souls. J. R.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.—The annual prayer-meeting for workers in industrial schools, reformatories, penitentiaries, and similar institutions, will (D.V.) be held at 34, Parliament-street, on Jan. 5, at 7 p.m.

WHAT DO OUR CHILDREN READ?—Do we read with sufficient care those papers and periodicals which come into our homes, and which we place before our children? Surely we cannot be too careful. It is both painful and surprising to note how many books there are in the present day, bearing a religious exterior, whose teaching is decidedly opposed to that of the written Word. Let us therefore beware what we introduce into our homes, remembering how soon the mind becomes familiarized with error. "A little leaven spreads very quickly." L. S.

BIBLE CARTOONS.—The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union, 2, Ludgate-circus, E.C., have issued a group of five cartoons illustrative of incidents in the life of "The Child Jesus." The cartoons are on sheets, 27 inches by 23, printed "on a gold ground, in sepia tint, and graphic outline." They are most pleasing to the eye from their rich warm colouring and beautifully sketched outlines. They are specially effective by evening light, and will make, in our judgment, first-rate lesson objects for our children, both in the school and the nursery. We shall be much surprised if there is not a large demand for them. The price is only 1s. each.

TO OUR READERS.

In consequence of the Christmas holidays falling on Saturday and Monday, we have been obliged to prepare this issue for press two days earlier than usual. For this reason late communications could not be inserted; and amongst other necessary omissions is an account of Mr. Aitken's closing services in York.

ORPHANS' HOME, GRAVESEND.

THERE are 212 orphans on the books of the Orphans' Home, South-street, West-square, Southwark, but as there is not room in the parent home for all the children belonging to it, Baynard Castle has been taken and fitted up to accommodate sixty of them. Those who have been brought to Gravesend are most of them from among the younger children, their ages varying from two years to ten years. There are also a few elder girls who do the work of the house, and assist in taking care of the little ones.

Each orphan has been left entirely destitute. No child is ever received into the Orphans' Home whose relatives are able to provide for her. There is a whole family now in the Gravesend Home, consisting of five children (the eldest eleven, the youngest two years of age), who lost their father and mother within a few weeks of one another, and were left without a relative in the world to take care of them. The orphans are trained for domestic service. They receive a plain English education, and are taught good needlework. Our aim also is to make their young lives bright and happy, that their Home may be worthy to them of its sacred name.

The Home is opened to any destitute orphan girl, provided there is room. The poorer and more friendless a child may be, the more heartily is she welcomed. There is no funded property belonging to the institution, and it has no stated income except some annual subscriptions. I never make personal appeals for money nor collect subscriptions, but during the eight years that the West-square Home has been opened every want has been supplied. Contributions have come unsolicited from almost all parts of the world, and often in the time of greatest need. The average cost of each child's maintenance is £15 a year.

I shall very gratefully receive and acknowledge any contributions to the Home. Post-office Orders should be made payable at London-road, Southwark, and cheques crossed London and County Bank. I shall be happy to forward a copy of the last report to anyone who may wish to see it. CHARLOTTE SHARMAN.
20, West-square, London, S.E., December, 1875.

EMIGRATION OF CHILDREN.—Miss Rye writes from Ottawa to the Times on this subject, and says:—"Having myself during the past six months gone over the ground of the whole question again and again, having in a most searching manner considered and reconsidered the whole matter in all its bearings, I have no hesitation in saying that Miss Macpherson and her workers could place a thousand little boys (the younger the better), and I and my workers place a thousand little girls, wisely and safely, in Canada every year for the next ten years, provided, also, that we ourselves are not at the same time expected to do the work of a department, nor cross the Atlantic about twenty-four times every six years. Coming to Canada, moreover, is not an equivalent for conversion, so a margin must be allowed us for disobedience and discontents; it may be a minimum margin, but that margin must be claimed and allowed, for absolute perfection is only for the dwellers in the many mansions of the Father, in the City whose Maker and Builder is God."

THE GOLIATH TRAINING-SHIP.—We learn with deep sorrow that the Goliath training-ship, moored off Grays, in Essex, has been totally destroyed by fire, two or more lives being lost. The ship, says the Times, was for the training to a seafaring life of workhouse boys, and of this class there were 480 on board. A paraffin lamp was upset, and exploded. The most energetic measures were taken to prevent the spread of the fire, but all were unavailing, and those boys who could swim were ordered to jump overboard and swim ashore. It fortunately happened that there were no sick on board, the infirmary of the ship being ashore. On counting the boys it was found that no fewer than forty-eight were missing; but it is not feared that any calamity has befallen so many. Eleven who had taken advantage of the absence of supervision to escape were brought back in a batch, the boys having a great horror of returning to the workhouses whence they came. Two bodies of boys, have, however, been taken out of the water, and it is feared that a teacher who only joined the ship on Saturday has also perished. The Goliath was an old Admiralty vessel. Mr. Goschen gave the guardians of the three parishes all the assistance possible in obtaining the vessel, for he warmly supported the principle which in the last few years has been initiated, of training the workhouse children apart from the workhouse. The work has been so highly successful that this unfortunate accident is one of the first occasions upon which the system has been brought before the public, except for praise and congratulation—praise for the discipline of the ship, and congratulation that the boys who used to give trouble to parish guardians were now eagerly sought for to man our ships.

BANKRUPTCY OF HUMAN NATURE.

(CONTRIBUTED BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

"I SEEM affrighted and confounded with the solitude in which I am placed by my philosophy. When I look abroad, on every side I see dispute, contradiction, and distraction. When I turn my eye inward I find nothing but doubt and ignorance. Where am I? From what cause do I derive my existence? To what condition shall I return? I am confounded with these questions. I begin to fancy myself in a most deplorable condition—enviored with the deepest darkness. i., p. 458.

"The world abounds with wretches—"

In man is more wretchedness than in all other animals together. Man loves life, yet he knows he must die; spends his existence in diffusing the miseries which he has suffered—cutting the throats of his fellow-creatures for pay—cheating and being cheated. The bulk of mankind are nothing more than a crowd of wretches—equally criminal—equally unfortunate. I wish I had never been born."—Voltaire.

"There is nothing but roguery in villanous man."—Shakespeare.

"I am feeble, discouraged,—solitary in the midst of 800,000 men. I feel little attachment to existence; my imagination has taken the colour out of it. I am satiated of all, without having tasted anything. If you only knew how sad I am becoming! I love sorrow, and live much with her. They speak to me of literary fame and public employment. I have occasionally certain desires that way; but, frankly, I despise fame, and can scarcely conceive why people should take so much trouble to run after such a little fool. Where is the soul that shall understand mine?"—Lacordaire, of Paris.

"The approach of death is very dreadful. I am afraid to think of that which I know I cannot avoid. It is vain to look round and round for that help which cannot be had. Yet we hope and fancy that he who has lived to-day may live to-morrow."—Boswell's "Life of Dr. Johnson".

"The world and I may shake hands, for I dare affirm we are heartily weary of each other. What a prodigal I have been of the most valuable of all possessions—time! I have squandered it away with a persuasion it was lasting, and now when a few days would be worth a hecatomb of worlds, I cannot flatter myself with a prospect of half-a-dozen hours."—Buckingham's Letter to Barrow.

"I have been under the powers and influence of all the pleasures of this world, and consequently know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which, in truth, is very low. I look upon all that is past as one of those romantic dreams that opium commonly occasions, and I do by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose for the sake of the fugitive dream."—Chesterfield.

"Nay, for myself, so dark my fate
Through every turn of life hath been,
Man and the world so much I hate,
I care not when I quit the scene."—Byron.

"My days are in the yellow leaf—
The flower and fruit of love are gone—
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone."—Ibid.

"Hear the just law, the judgment of the skies:
They that hate truth shall be the dupes of lies;
And if they will be cheated to the last Delusions strong as hell shall bind them fast."—Couper.

"This ye shall have at My hand: ye shall lie down in sorrow."—Isaiah i. 11.

MITCHAM CONVALESCENT HOME.—A few Christian friends met at The Elms, Mitcham, the week before last, to supplicate God's favour and blessing upon this institution, which has been opened for the behoof of first-class female assistants in houses of business. The Countess of Gosford, Mrs. W. Thomas, and other ladies from town, evinced their deep satisfaction with the appointments of this interesting old house. The work was fervently and solemnly commended to God by Rev. M. Rainsford, and the chairman declared the Home open. The kindness of Mr. George Williams, Messrs. Marshall and Snelgrove, Lewis and Allenby, Redmayne, and others, was alluded to. Information respecting the Home will be supplied by Miss Dudin Brown, Buckingham Palace Hotel, S.W.

* Moore, the Irish poet, tells us that his friend Byron sought the Lord on his death-bed.

Y.M.C.A., MANCHESTER.

THE Committee of this Association announce that the alterations of the Museum in Peter-street for the central offices of the Y.M.C.A. are completed, and the whole of the central working staff will now be found there. In the new premises will be found a light, spacious, and well-furnished reading-room and library, class-rooms and other meeting-rooms, refreshment-rooms, bath-rooms and lavatories. The lecture-hall, capable of seating from 1200 to 1500; also a smaller hall, to seat about 400, are in course of erection, and, it is expected, may be ready for occupation by midsummer. A spacious gymnasium is also in course of erection.

Special attention, as heretofore, will be given to young men of good character, and satisfactory credentials, coming to Manchester as strangers, who may require advice or assistance in seeking situations or obtaining suitable lodgings. An earnest appeal is now promulgated for practical support being given to the Y.M.C.A. in men of Manchester, as well as in the neighbourhood, the object of which is to attract strangers constantly coming into the city, and to have them immediately met by so many varied, novel, and attractive temptations to vice and dissipation. In order to make the Association effective in its influence upon the city, and to support its varied agencies as they ought to be supported, it is desired to enter, as soon as possible, at least 1000 new members and subscribers. The inaugural soirée will be held on Jan. 10.

Mr. W. Hind Smith, the excellent Secretary, informs us that over twenty services are held in connexion with the Association every week. The spacious building, of which we have seen an engraving, will form a most fitting and enduring monument of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Manchester.

PECKHAM.—A meeting was held on Thursday evening, Dec. 16, in the Hall of the Peckham Evangelistic Mission, at which it was resolved that a Young Men's Christian Association should be established upon the basis of the rules of the Aldersgate-street society. A committee and officers were elected, and a number of those present enrolled their names as members of the society.

ANGLO-ISRAEL.—We have received several communications, some of considerable length, in reply to a note by a correspondent, asserting that "Jer. xvi. 13 should be sufficient to prevent the Anglo-Saxons from believing that they are the ten lost tribes of Israel." We have not space for this discussion. Whether our correspondent was right or wrong, we do not now attempt to decide.

PHILO-JUDEAN SOCIETY.—We have received the forty-eighth report of this Society, whose object is "to administer temporal relief to aged and distressed Hebrew women." Besides a comprehensive statement of the past year's work of the Society, this little booklet contains much information respecting the present condition of the Jews as a nation, and Christian effort among them. The Secretary is Mrs. Way, 18, Colville-terrace East, Bayswater, W.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER suggests that many who are not able personally to give much monetary assistance to our various Homes and Refuges, might greatly help them by circulating the reports of their doings among the members of Bible-classes, &c., who would probably each subscribe something. This has been done with much success by our correspondent and others known to her. The plan she advocates is easy of accomplishment to all, and we hope during the coming year to hear of its extensive adoption.

ZENANA WORK.—The Bombay Guardian, Nov. 20, says:—Miss Tucker (A. L. O. E.), of whom we made mention in our last, arrived on the 14th inst. We were wrong in supposing that her field of labour was to be in this part of India. She goes to Umritsur. The Zenana work in this Presidency has been reinforced by the arrival of two Misses Appleton from England. Miss McKitchie has arrived to take charge of the Free Church Female Boarding School in Bombay, her predecessor, Miss Brown, having left a few weeks ago for Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Dalzell, of the Free Church Mission, Nagpore, have returned from England, and with them Mr. Clubb, who will have to do with the school work of the Nagpore Mission.

LIVERPOOL.—The correspondent of a contemporary says:—"A crusade has just been started here against the dens of immorality around us. A committee has been formed, termed the Midnight Mission; and numbers of ladies and gentlemen meet once a week, at ten o'clock at night, in one of the lowest parts of the town, where a kind of mission-room is stationed. Here hot tea and coffee, &c., are provided; and, after prayer, these Christian friends rally out in couples to invite to this midnight meal all the poor abandoned women they can find. The results have been marvellous. Each effort has brought in some 130 of these poor degraded creatures, and the rooms have been filled. The result is that some twenty or more have been drafted into the homes and penitentiaries each night, so that they are now full, and other accommodation has to be provided. Naturally this work entails much self-denial on the part of those faithful Christians who leave their comfortable firesides to spend three or four midnight hours in these dark scenes. Cannot the Christians of other large towns follow the example at once?"

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

FATHER CHINQUY has received another threatening letter from a French Romanist, warning him to quit Canada.

CUMBERTREES, DUMFRIESSHIRE, N.B.—Evangelistic services have been held here for some months past in connexion with the Scottish Evangelistic Association, and have, to all human appearance, proved most successful.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY will renew their efforts with the present Congress to secure a commission of inquiry concerning the relations of the liquor traffic to crime, pauperism, taxation, the industry and prosperity of the nation.

THE INDIANA Young Men's Christian Associations are making remarkable progress under the leadership of Dr. L. W. Munhall and other active workers. A wonderful revival joined grass at Logansport, characterized by expect to do so soon earnestness. One hundred, a decided work of grace is also FREEDOM IN CHINA.—The Chinese Foreign Office at Foochow has recently issued a decree, of which the following are the important points:—1. That contributions levied on Christians for processions, temples, theatrical exhibitions, &c., are illegal; Christians who refuse to pay such contributions are not to be molested. 2. The right of foreigners to leased houses and chapels in the cities and villages is not to be questioned. 3. Christians are to be treated with propriety. 4. The term of "barbarian" cannot be lawfully applied to foreigners. 5. It is perfectly legal for foreigners to live inland in the departments, districts, cities, and villages, and they must not be annoyed.

PERSEVERE.—By a private letter from up-country we learn of an incident full of encouragement for missionary workers. A girl, who had been for some time in a mission school, and had there learned to love Jesus, was removed by her parents, and sent among the heathen to a heathen husband. They took her books away, and would not let her sing or pray or read. And now the missionary writes:—"On Tuesday I baptized her husband, two children, brothers-in-law, &c. They now want books to have her teach them to sing and pray, and read the Word of God. These five years of waiting were long to her, but she triumphed, and is happy. So the work spreads and deepens."—Lucknow Witness.

AMERICAN RAILROADS.—At the Fulton-street prayer-meeting lately a pastor brought good tidings of the work of grace among railroad men. He said:—"A few weeks since, in one city in New Jersey a noon-tide prayer-meeting was started for this class of sorely tempted toilers. An engineer read the advertisement of the meeting, and out of curiosity 'came to see the fun,' as he put it. Four days after he rose and said: 'I thank God I ever saw the notice of this meeting. Here I have come and found Christ. Only fancy,' continued the speaker, 'a prayer-meeting of railroad conductors, engineers, and baggage-smashers—and then the singing! Why, these men seem to be singing their souls out in glorious melody.'"

SPAIN.—Mr. Wm. Greene, writing to us from Neuhausen on the 18th inst., sends the following extract of a letter received by him, giving the details of persecution in Spain:—"A few days ago the Governor of Toledo gave orders that our brother Astral and his family should leave the province, and with great sorrow he was obliged to leave Camunas; and he came to Alcazar, all his family riding on asses, in the most severe night that we have known in these parts (five hours). I don't know how they were not frozen. This is what Astral and family have suffered who have laboured so much among us." Our correspondent adds:—"All this is the beginning of sorrows, and I expected they would begin in Spain."

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—Lord Shaftesbury writes to the Times on the position of these schools in consequence of the action of the School Board, and says:—"The new Board very shortly, by its commands for larger and better buildings, for improved teachers, and a higher standard of secular education, and for, in short, an enormously increased expenditure, proved to us that our occupation was gone. The schools were broken up, and 30,000 children were dispersed. How many were gathered up by the new establishments I cannot say; I can only assert that a vast number of the most forlorn creatures have been sent to the right-about, and can never, unless the present system be greatly modified, be again collected into one teachable body. We never pretended to give to these children a full secular education according to modern notions of the 'fitness of things'; but we gave them, as we thought, and as we still think, an admirable practical education, and one far better adapted than the present one (so far, at least, as it is known) to enable them to make their progress in life. We appeal to facts, as we have appealed to them for years, and we have never been contradicted. Since the time we began our work to the year 1870, when the calculations were completed, we had taken off the streets and placed in a way of honest livelihood more than 200,000 children, most of whom without these efforts would have been found among what are ordinarily termed 'the dangerous classes.'"

PORT JERVIS, N.Y.—The revival here has now been going on in the Methodist Episcopal Church about eight weeks, and several hundreds are said to have been converted, probably one-third of them children under fifteen years of age. The tone of the town is generally improved.

SACRED SONG.—A most interesting and important lecture on this subject was given in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening last week, by Mr. Proudman, the well-known leader of Soloists choirs. His excellent and practical remarks were well interpreted by a choir of 250 voices, who gave in perfect time and tune a variety of musical illustrations of the lecture.

BOSTON.—The "Washington Home for Inebriates, &c.," "Reform" is in successful operation in the Washington Asylum. Here Day, formerly at the victims of appetite have been humbled. About forty are now inmates, many of them gentlemanly in appearance, two or three with their wives as fellow-boarders. The daily religious exercises are very interesting to a visitor, and exert a most salutary influence on the inmates.—New York Observer.

ANOTHER "REVIVAL FACT."—Rev. W. A. Essery, of Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent-road, writes to a friend:—"During the present year, as direct and indirect results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work, we shall receive seventy members more than the most prosperous year of my previous ministry—our total admission being 138 persons." Mr. Essery adds:—"It grieves my heart deeply to hear so many ministers asking what has become of all the excitement, and where are the results? If Christ's ministers and churches had sought for blessing, they would have been largely refreshed."

CANTON.—Rev. J. C. Nevin, of the United Presbyterian Mission in China, writes that the missionary community in Canton recently offered four prizes for a tract to reach the educated classes on the importance of the religion of Christ as a means of elevating the morals of a nation, of promoting education, and of securing future happiness. Forty-two essays have been submitted, chiefly written by native Christians. The one that gained the highest prize has been printed and distributed among the 10,000 literary candidates attending the great examination for the second degree in letters at Canton.

THE LAKE NYASSA MISSION.—Information has been received from Mr. Edward Young, the leader of the Free and United Presbyterian Kirk Mission to Lake Nyassa, dated Mazara, Aug. 17. The expedition had not escaped without misfortune, for one of the two sailing-boats sent on by Mr. Young had been capsized, some of her native crew drowned, and nearly all the personal luggage belonging to the members of the Mission lost. The Englishman in charge of the boat fortunately escaped. It is supposed that Mr. Young reached Chibisa, at the head of the Sheri, below the Murchison Falls, by the end of August; and, allowing him a month to carry his steamer and goods past the Falls, and put the vessel together again, he probably launched on the lake about the first week in October, which would leave him ample time to establish the Mission station on Cape Maclear, and explore the lake, before the rainy season set-in in November.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For abundant blessings bestowed during a fortnight of mission services at Market Lavington.—For much blessing on special services at Matlock Bank.—For a revival in a town in the South of Ireland, where the Lord's cause had languished.—For two beloved sons delivered from the deep-laid snares of Satan.—For answers to prayer asked for in late numbers of THE CHRISTIAN.—For peace and strength vouchsafed during much trial in the year now drawing to a close.—For a blessing on the special united services at Tunbridge Wells.—For great blessing attending the special services at the Wesleyan Chapel, Barking.—For enabling an aged mother to rest on Jesus.

PRAYER.—For a lady and gentleman who are separated from each other, and the husband, it is feared, living in open sin.—A wife desires prayer for Divine guidance to her husband in Calcutta under very difficult circumstances.—For a wife whose husband has left her without means of support.—For a backsliding husband, who has not been heard of for twelve months.—For a lady and gentleman in New Zealand, that they may be faithful in witnessing for Christ.—For a young man in the Stock Exchange, exposed to much temptation.—An assistant professor in an Indian college requests special prayer on behalf of his wife, who is so sorely afflicted by mental derangement that he has been obliged to be temporarily separated from her.—For my dear son, seeking, but not as yet finding, peace in Jesus.—For the son of a believing mother, lately led astray.—For a young Christian soldier, in trial in a heathen land.—For a restored backslider, that his way may be made plain.—That a dear and only brother may be kept from drinking at this festive season, and also for his conversion.—Prayer is earnestly asked

"It Passeth Knowledge."

"The love of Christ, which passeth knowledge."—Eph. iii. 19.

MARY SHEKLETON.

Moderato. With expression.

IRA D. SANKEY.

It passeth telling, that dear love of Thine,
My Jesus, Saviour; yet these lips of mine
Would fain proclaim to sinners, far and near,
A love which can remove all guilty fear,
And love beget.

It passeth praises, that dear love of Thine,
My Jesus, Saviour; yet this heart of mine
Would sing that love, so full, so rich, so free,
Which brings a rebel sinner, such as me,
Nigh unto God.

But though I cannot sing, or tell, or know
The fulness of Thy love, while here below,
My empty vessel I may freely bring;
O Thou who art of love the living spring,
My vessel fill.

I am an empty vessel—not one thought,
Or look of love, I ever to Thee brought;
Yet I may come, and come again to Thee,
With this, the empty sinner's only plea,
Thou lovest me.

Oh, fill me, Jesus, Saviour, with Thy love!
Lead, lead me to the living fount above;
Thither may I, in simple faith, draw nigh,
And never to another fountain fly,
But unto Thee.

And when my Jesus face to face I see,
When at His lofty throne I bow the knee,
Then of His love, in all its breadth and length,
Its height and depth, its everlasting strength,
My soul shall sing.
