The Christian.

THE KING AND THE KINGDOM.

THE Gospel of Jesus, the Christ, is distinctly and distinctively the Good Tidings of the Kingdom of God and of Heaven. For four thousand years the usurper reigned. By his deceit he wrested the Kingdom out of the hands of man: King Adam became his serf, and Satan became the prince of this world. God swept away the polluted race by the Flood, reserving only the righteous remnant, now reduced to Noah's single family, and then again entrusted man with royalty, which was immediately forfeited once more by Noah's drunkenness. Sin culminated a second time in the rebellion at Babel, and God scattered men abroad upon the face of the earth. For the third time He committed government to man, when He constituted the seed of Abraham into a kingdom; but they rebelled, and on their apostasy the royal prerogative passed over to the Gentiles, in the person of Nebuchadnezzar, whom the God of Heaven made a king of kings.

At the end of the world's fourth millennium, when Gentile monarchy had degenerated, in excellence of dignity and power, from gold to iron, the fullness of the time had come, promised by God in the Garden of Eden, and constantly foretold by all the prophets with increasing definiteness down to Malachi. Then Jesus, of the seed of David, son of Abraham, and Shem and Adam, Son of Man and Son of God, came after His herald John, and preached the Gospel of the Kingdom: "The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the good tidings" (Mark i. 15).

It is needful to keep this past history of the KINGDOM in view, in order to understand the full significance of the baptism and temptation of Our Lord. At His baptism He undertook the responsibility of our sins as the first step in the fulfilment of all righteousness, the bringing in of everlasting righteousness. "When all the people had been baptised" (confessing their sins), "Jesus also being baptised" (confessing thus the sins of the people, as though they had been His own; being baptised into our condition that we might be baptised into His condition), the Spirit identified Him as the promised Messiah, and the Father declared Him to be His beloved Son, in whom He was well pleased, in direct contradiction of the confessed sinfulness which baptism by John implied.

Let it be remembered that our Redeemer had now not merely pledged himself to take away our sins, but to recover the KINGDOM which man by sin had lost.

Immediately upon His baptism, the Spirit drieth Him into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Not a moment must be lost in bringing the conflict to an issue. Satan had come unchallenged into the garden, and by deceit and guile succeeded in one day in defrauding man; now, for forty days, in the wilderness among the wild beasts, the Son of Man endured far greater temptation than that by which his father Adam fell; the Son of God vindicates His Father in heaven, who had been dishonoured by the defalcation of the being whom He had made in His own image, and whom He had ordained to be King, next in glory to Himself.

It has been truly said, that when certain brethren recovered the truth concerning the Church, they lost the truth concerning the Kingdom. The importance of this will be discovered by anyone who reads the New Testament (especially its first book, the Gospel of Matthew), observing and marking the passages which relate to the Kingdom. He will soon perceive that the Gospel of the Kingdom is the royal thread upon which the whole is strung, and the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God will shine forth with a splendour he never before imagined.

In tracing this everlasting Gospel through the four Evangelists and the Acts of the Apostles, until he leaves Paul in his own hired house at Rome, "preaching the Kingdom of God, and those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him," he will have observed that previous to His death the Lord had been (with small exception, and then always for some special reason) spoken of only as Jesus, and that He himself frequently commanded His disciples, and the devils whom He cast out, and the people whom He healed, not to make Him known; whereas, in the Acts, He is the Lord Jesus Christ, and the sum of the testimony is that the Christ must die and rise again, and that Jesus is the Christ—i.e., the Anointed Priest and King.

In tracing Him from the cradle to the cross, and from the cross to the cloud, he will have caught, once in the Gospels and twice in the Acts, a glimpse of the Divine glory of the Son of God. He will also have observed that, while in the Epistles frequent reference is made to His resurrection and ascension, it is rather doctrinally than historically; and that, indeed, from the day of His ascension the direct history of Jesus the Christ ceases until it is resumed in the Revelation.

Now as never before appears the blessedness of those who read and keep the words of this prophecy. Here we are taken with the beloved disciple through the open door of Heaven, to see the Lamb in the midst of the throne. Here we resume the interrupted history and teaching, and He who had opened the understandings of the disciples to understand the Scriptures of the past, now reveals to their brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, the roll of the future; and as He had showed how it behoved the Christ to suffer and to enter into His glory, He now reveals the sufferings of His Church and the glories that shall follow.

In the restoration of the Bible, which is one of the happiest signs of the present time, two features are conspicuous—that attention is being directed to the King and the Kingdom, and that God is giving light upon the Revelation. It was well that the subject of the Mildmay Conference was the Power and Glory and Presence of the KING; and although it was but too evident how new this old, old subject was to some of the speakers and to many of the hearers, yet the seven Spirits of God will surely anoint the eyes and enlighten the understanding of all who are willing to be taught of Him.

All the misunderstandings and sectarianisms and controversies which have embittered Christians against each other, would be of necessity dispelled by the perception and reception of the laws and principles of the Kingdom of God. These are not only antagonistic to those on which all worldly society is based; they are rooted in the eternal counsels of God, and will bear fruit in the ages to come. The history of man, as revealed in the Bible, is but the segment of a circle of infinite circumference; and to attempt to fathom the mystery of God in any of its details, whether it be the older controversy as to Election and Free Will, or the newer one as to what is called the Higher Christian Life, without reference to the eternal past and the eternal future—the purpose of God with relation to the Kingdom of which Jesus the Son of God is King, and the saints the joint-heirs with Him,—is to argue without sufficient data, and to give judgment upon partial evidence. THE MOSAIC TABERNACLE.

LECTURE BY DR. CRANAGE.

By the kind permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Doctor Cranage, of Wellington, Salop, exhibited and described at Stafford House, on Thursday afternoon, a complete model of the Mosaic Tabernacle, on the scale of an inch to the cubit, together with full-sized models of the table of shewbread, the golden candlestick, the altar of incense, and the ark of the covenant. To these extremely interesting and beautiful objects were added fac-similes of the sacred robes of the High Priest of Israel, including not only those which he wore in the more ordinary services of the Tabernacle, but also the vestments in which he was wont to perform the ceremonies on the Great Day of Atonement. In response to the cards of invitation which had been issued, a select company of nearly a hundred gathered in the great hall upon the occasion. Amongst those assembled, besides the noble host and hostess, were the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Blantyre, Lady Caroline Lascelles and the Misses Lascelles, Sir James and Lady Matheson, Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild, General Alexander and Miss Alexander, Hon. Mrs. T. Bruce, Lady Wenlock and the ladies Parker, Countess of Bradford and the Lady Mabel Bridgman, and many others.

At the request of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and in a few brief sentences introduced Dr. Cranage to the assembled guests. That gentleman, having offered prayer, at once proceeded with a very striking "Object Lesson." Attention was directed—1st. To the Sin Offering outside the camp of Israel on the ashes (Lev. iv. 12, compared with Luke xxiii. 33). 2nd. The Tabernacle itself, with its court, its sockets of silver, its boards, its pillars, and its four coverings, as described in Ex. xxvi. 3rd. The Brazen Altar, on which were offered—(1) The Burnt Offering (Lev. i.); (2) The Meat Offering (Lev. ii.); (3) The Trespas Offering (Lev. v.), as described in Exodus xxvii. 1, &c. 4th. The Laver (Ex. xxx. 18). 5th. The Golden Candlestick (Ex. xxv. 31, &c., compared with Rev. ii. 1). 6th. The Table of Shewbread (Ex. xxv. 23, &c., compared with John vi. 31, &c.). 7th. The Altar of Incense (Ex. xxx. 1, &c., compared with Ps. cxli. 2). 8th. The Ark of the Covenant (Ex. xxv. 10, &c.).

This outline, though strictly authentic, gives but a faint idea of Dr. Cranage's lecture, as we presume it must be called, of which the models and the accompanying verbal explanations were the very life and soul. It was almost startling to find oneself in the very presence, as it seemed, of the holy furniture of God's tent and dwelling-place in the wilderness, and to hear the tinkling of the bells on the fringes of the High Priest's garments.

The golden candlestick, with its seven branches, stands nine feet high, and the diameter between the extreme branches is six feet. It has been modelled strictly after the representation on the Arch of Titus, at Rome.

The shewbread table, with its twelve loaves of unleavened bread, and its double marginal crown, is not depicted on the triumphal monument of the siege of Jerusalem, any more than the altar of incense, and these have accordingly been restored by Dr. Cranage after the sacred text alone.

As to the ark of the covenant, it was the glory of the earlier temple, destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. Judeed, there is an interesting Jewish tradition to the effect that, shortly before Nebuchadnezzar's capture of the city, the ark was buried by the priests for safety in one of the limestone caverns with which the strata beneath the Temple are known to be honeycombed.

Of course Dr. Cranage's reproduction of the design in its Biblical dimensions is entirely based on the Scriptures. Certainly nothing can be more impressive than this sacred chest, with the mercy-seat and the overshadowing cherubs, unless perhaps we must except its mysterious contents—the two stone tables of the law in the native Hebrew text, the golden pot of manna, and Aaron's rod that budded. Highly realistic, too, not to say dramatic, were the models of the High Priest, first in his habitual robes of office, and then in the special white array in which he entered into the Holy of Holies once for all every year—viz., on the Day of Atonement. If the former dress, with its scarlet and blue and fine twined linen, the curious ephod or covering tunic—Dr. Cranage's took two years to weave and embroider—with its bells and its pomegranates, is more barre, the severe simplicity and purity of the other, especially when we call to mind its propitiatory symbolism, seems after all immeasurably more impressive. The breastplate and its twelve gems, engraved with the Hebrew names of the twelve tribes; the turban and its encircling gold crown inscribed in the same sacred language, "Holiness to the Lord"; the girdle and all the other sacred paraphernalia, needing a volume for their elucidation,—all these things present a tout ensemble which must be seen in order to be understood and appreciated.

Dr. Cranage accompanied his life-like descriptions with constant references to the evangelical symbolism of the Mosaic cultus. He enjoys the immense advantage of being a perfect enthusiast in his subject, and he kindles enthusiasm in his hearers, or perhaps we should rather say the spectators—for eyes go for more than ears in this case—of the marvels he undertakes to expound. None, we are sure, could have grudged him the cordial thanks which Lord Shaftesbury tendered him in the name of the no less deeply awed than interested assembly. At the close many of the guests at Stafford House lingered to inspect more closely Dr. Cranage's marvellous models, and to press that gentleman himself for further information.—Standard.

THE EVANGELISTIC CHOIRS.

MR. SANKEY desires us to state that the meeting of the several choirs which have assisted him in London has been postponed for the present. He still hopes, however, to have the pleasure of meeting them before he leaves for America.

DAWLEY, SHROPSHIRE.—An eight days' mission, which has been the subject of much prayer for many months, closed here on the 28th of last month by a "thanksgiving service" in the parish church, which was well attended notwithstanding the unpropitious weather. The Dawley Parish Magazine for this month, commenting on the mission—which was conducted by the Rev. J. A. Aston, Vicar of St. Luke's, Cheltenham—states, "We are quite sure that to every penny in our midst the past month will prove the 'beginning of months,' for much solemn work has been going on amongst us. The careless have been arrested, God's people have been quickened and revived, and poor wandering sheep from the Good Shepherd have been brought back from the dark mountains. 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad' (Psalm cxvii. 3)."

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—We especially appeal on behalf of the sixty aged ones for whom we are caring in our homes. Some terrible cases of destitution amongst people of gentle birth in extreme old age are now on our case-book, and unless funds are sent us we can give them no help. By the recent sale of work for this charity we realised £187, and about £80 has reached us in special donations towards our Building Fund. Will not the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN come forward and enable us before the winter sets in to buy two houses, and thus shelter some twenty more aged and waiting ones? We do not desire to take up valuable space with speaking of our work; we rather leave our need and our wants in the hands of the Great Caretaker for the Poor. E. G. HARRISON.

NO ROOM FOR CHRIST.

ADDRESS AT CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL BY MR. D. L. MOODY.

"There was no room for them in the inn."—Luke ii. 7.

FOR four thousand years the Jews had been looking for Christ, and now He has come. And the first thing we read of Him is that there is no room for Him in the inn at Bethlehem.

The sinner's heart is very much like that little inn at Bethlehem; it has no room for Christ. If a Prince comes to this country from some foreign land, there is sure to be room for him, and the best you have is not good enough to bestow upon him. Your Crown Prince is going next autumn to India; there will be plenty of room for him in that country. When he went to America a few years ago there was plenty of room for him; every mansion was open to him, and the nation received him almost as one man. Yet here is the Prince of Heaven, the Prince of Peace, come to earth, and there is no room for Him in the inn at Bethlehem!

Think what He was come for; He had come to seek and to save that which was lost, to redeem a lost world. He might have come with all the pomp and grandeur of heaven; He might have had a million of angels in His train. But He left behind Him all the glory He had with His Father, and stooped from the throne and went clear down into the manger, that He might get His arm under the vilest sinner and lift him up to the heights of glory.

Some one has said that the Jews did not know He was the Messiah, or they would have given Him a glorious reception. Would they? Why, we read that when the wise men came with the glad tidings that He was the King of the Jews, "Herod and all Jerusalem was troubled." There was no one in Jerusalem that wanted Him any more than in Bethlehem. Herod hunted for His life as if He were some terrible murderer, so that His parents were obliged to flee into a foreign land.

Has the world grown any better during these eighteen hundred years? Is Christ wanted to-night? If He should come, would He be welcome? Would the nations of the earth receive Him with delight and gladness? What nation would make room for Him to-night? Is there any nation under heaven that would invite Him to come back? If it were put to the public vote, what nation would vote to have Him come back to be their King? That nation does not exist. Talk about England and America being Christian nations: do you think either of them would invite Him to come? Has England got room for Him? Eighteen hundred years have rolled away since He went away, and more has been written about Him and said about Him than any other man, or thousand men, or million men, and yet there is no nation under heaven that wants Him. When He was down here there was not a village in any part of the country that wanted Him. He went to Nazareth, where he was brought up; He went into the synagogue and began to tell out the glad tidings. They took Him to the brow of the hill, and would have cast Him into hell if they could. They put Him out of the town. And there is not a town or village under the sun to-day but would do the same. People say the world is growing so much better; but, as I have said, there is not a nation anywhere to-day that wants Him. Does Germany, or France, or England, or America?

Not only that; there is something a good deal worse than that. There is hardly a Church in Christendom that wants Him. Go to any of the churches next Sunday, and ask if they would vote to have Him back. Why, my friends, the Church has not got room for Him. She is not praying and longing for His return. Go down to the Exchange and ask if they have got room for Him. Why, a great deal of the business would have to be done on different principles. Men would say, "We cannot make quite so much money, and we don't want Him." If it should be put to the vote in Parliament, would they have Him back? Is there room for Him among our statesmen and noblemen, and those who are making our laws? Would they invite Him back? Why, there would be a great commotion among the nations of the earth if He were to come. If I should stand up and tell you that I had a message that Christ was coming to-morrow, I think this audience would be terrified. I don't think there would be a shout of joy going up. The fact is, there is no room for Him in the world yet. Our homes, our churches, the nations of the earth, are like that little inn at Bethlehem. There is room for everything else; but in the Church and the world to-day is "no room for Him."

Sad picture! Nevertheless, I believe it is true. I found one man in Scotland who said they would invite Him there. He was quite sure they would be glad to have Him come. But I did not find them praying for Him and looking for Him; I do not think they have got room for a real personal Christ. It is one thing to talk about Christ and salvation, but when we come to talk about the return of a personal Christ, is there a Church that is crying for Him?

It is time for every true child of God to wake out of his sleep, to trim his lamp, and make ready for the return of the Lord Jesus Christ. If the nations of the world, if the churches, are not longing for His return, let us as individuals make room for Him. Look at the hundreds of thousands hastening down to death and ruin! Let us invite our rejected King back again to this world. Do not let us be like the men of Decapolis, who, when Christ snapped the fetters from the poor demoniac, came to Him, and, with one accord, constrained Him to depart out of their coasts. There was no room for Him in Decapolis.

There is a passage in the 7th chapter of John, last verse, that is very touching. It has often brought the tears to my eyes—"And every man went unto his own house." Then we read in the opening words of the 8th chapter (the two chapters should not be divided; they are really one)—"Jesus went into the Mount of Olives." There was no room for Him in Jerusalem that night; no one wanted Him. He had no house of His own to which He could go. "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." Oh, friends, think of the Prince of Glory coming down into this world and having no place to lay His head; no one to receive Him. He had to go into the Mount of Olives and spend the night there alone. I have often thought I would like to have had a house in Jerusalem that night, and to have invited him there. But if I had, I suppose my door would have been locked against Him like the rest. There is one thing we can all do—our hearts can receive Him, and that will please Him best of all.

What a blessing Martha got by receiving Him into her house. There was one home at Bethany always open to Him. He was a welcome guest there, and He often went when He was tired and weary. They had room for Him there, and He will always go where there is room for Him. The moment you make room for Him in your hearts He will come in. Was it not the best thing Martha and Mary could have done to make room for Him? One day sickness came to that dwelling, and Lazarus lay on his dying bed. They had physicians, I suppose, from Jerusalem, and the moment they pronounced him to be in danger they sent a message and told Jesus all about it, but before He gets there Lazarus is dead. There is sorrow that night in Bethany. I can see those two broken-hearted sisters weeping over the body. They laid him away in the little graveyard at Bethany, and they came back to their dark and desolate home. Many of you know how dark a home seems when some loved one is gone. Some friends came to comfort them; but what poor comforters they were, compared to Him who was absent. The messenger came back and told them what Jesus had said, and at last He comes Himself. Out goes Martha to meet Him; and she says, "If Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." He calls for Mary, and away goes Martha and tells her, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." Is there a Mary here to-night that the Master is calling? Up rises Mary to meet Him, and she, too, says, like Martha, "If Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." On that occasion were uttered some of the sublimest words that ever fell from the lips of the Son of God—"I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." I can see these two sisters, one on each side of Him. They tell Him all about their brother's sickness and his last messages, and the Son of God begins to weep. If there is a broken heart here to-day, Jesus is in full sympathy with you. You can have no friend like the Son of God. He has got power to help you. They go to the grave, and Jesus bids them take away the stone. Martha's faith begins to stagger. Some one has said it was a blessed privilege to roll away the stone. It is a blessed privilege to do anything the Master tells us to do. I hope there will be a good many stones rolled away to-night, that the dead may live. With a word the Son of God calls him up—"Lazarus come forth." The moment Lazarus heard His voice he knew it, and forth he came out of the sepulchre. Look at him as he goes back to the house, arm-in-arm with the Son of God. How astonished the people must have been; they must have gone mad almost with excitement. Look into that little home: there is Jesus at the table, and Lazarus; Martha still serves, and Mary looks on in wonder.

Sinner, was it not the best thing Martha could have done to make room for Christ? You do not know how near death is. The best thing you can do is to receive the Resurrection and the Life into your home and your heart. Make room for Christ to-night. If the nations, if the professing Church, won't have Him, let us welcome Him into our hearts. Say this minute, "Welcome, thrice welcome, Son of God, into this heart of mine." He will come. What does he say? Hark! "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice and will open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." Does your heart throb? Do you hear the still small voice whispering to you to let Him in? That is Jesus; He wants to come into your heart to-night. Sinner, receive Him. Then let death come; you can shout over death and the grave and hell. He holds the keys of death, and it has no power over you. May God help you to make room for Christ. You make room for Him here, and He will make room for you up yonder. He will come back by-and-by, and receive His own out of this dark world into that home He has gone to prepare. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."

Is there one in this whole assembly who will receive Him to-night? Thank God! there is a young lady who has risen right up; and a young man away back there says, "Yes, sir." Who else will make room for the Son of God? You find room for self, for money, for pleasure, for pride; why not make room for Christ to-night? Are you going to bolt the door of your heart against this blessed King of Glory?

Did you ever have a period in your life when you felt as if no one wanted you? I had that experience for about two days, and it nearly broke my heart. I wanted to die. It was a terrible thought that no one wanted me. I was a stranger in a strange city, looking for work. I went from place to place, and got only a gruff answer—"No, sir;" "No, sir?" No one wanted me. It seems as if the Son of God must have had something of that feeling down here; no one wanted Him. The world did not want Him; it took Him and put Him to death. If He should come into this audience, and go from seat to seat, would you say "No, Jesus, I do not want you; go Thy way this time"; or would you open your heart and let Him in? In one place it speaks of His locks being wet with the dew of the night. Oh, may God help every unsaved soul here to receive the Son of God. He has gone up on high to make room there for us. We are told in one place that He looked towards heaven and sighed. He saw sickness and disease and death all around Him, and no one wanted Him, so He looked towards home. I can imagine He was home-sick. There He was loved by all. Oh, sinner, won't you have this rejected King? Won't you do as Martha and Mary did—receive Him into your heart and home to-night?

FRIDAY, JUNE 25.

The most delightful weather, that lasted throughout the entire Conference, helped, no doubt, to swell the large numbers who attended. On the last day the meetings were more crowded than ever.

LARGE HALL.—MORNING.

After some appropriate opening remarks from the Chairman, and silent prayer, a hymn was sung, and part of the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah read. Prayer was then offered by Mr. Edwards, and followed by the hymn—"Oh! to be over yonder."

The subject for the day was—

THE PRESENCE OF THE KING.

Rev. J. DENHAM SMITH was the first speaker. His address was mostly devoted to the contemplation of "the beauty of the King" when He shall come again and every eye shall see Him.

Mr. HENRY VARLEY offered prayer and presented special requests, among the public subjects mentioned being the evils of the opium trade, the Queen and Royal family, the Viceroy of India, &c.

Dr. DONALD FRASER next spoke, taking for his text the first passage on the paper (2 Samuel xv. 21). He drew an analogy between the power in King David to draw out the affections of Ittai the Gittite and his friends, and the attractive and attracting power of the person of Christ for all who follow Him. It is our love to Christ that makes us cling to Him when others forsake Him. We are not to come to Him for reputation or advantage or any subsidiary object; but we are to love Him for Himself. As Ittai was not allured from his allegiance to David by the beauty of Absalom or the splendour of his court, so we must not allow "the beautiful deceits" of this world to draw us away from Christ. He is worthy of all our love, and the more we know of His power and goodness the more we love Him. But we must not be content to say fine high-sounding words when we mean nothing and are running no risk. Let us be like Ittai, who determined "in death or in life" to serve King David; or like Paul, who was ready to die at Jerusalem for the Lord Jesus. We will be strong and cheerful only as we are loyal to the person and cause of our heavenly Lord and Master. Let nothing else content us. And let not the servants or the institutions of the King come in the way of the King Himself. Some do not understand gatherings like these; they are looked upon as vague affairs. He did not expect externalists to understand it, and did not wonder at the objection. But every heart that was true to Christ could say with gladness that where the Lord the King was there they desired to be. As Absalom had no power over this Gittite, so may the enemies of the King have nothing in us. Let Christ possess every faculty, every power, and every possibility of usefulness in us. There is much meaning in the hymn we learned in our childhood—

"Blessed Jesus, wouldst thou know Him, Give thyself entirely to Him."

The speaker closed with some thoughts on the happiness and joy of always serving in the light of the King's countenance: By-and-by we shall see His face and live. Oh! to be where His servants shall serve Him day and night!

Rev. W. H. AITKEN said: "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" You will not find Him amidst the luxuries and splendours of the world, but as of old He is yet an exile, a fugitive, a wanderer. We must make up our minds that while this present state of things lasts, the King's glorious crown is not to be outwardly placed on His brow, and that the thorny crown He is content to wear shall be placed on the brow of His followers. Wherever the presence of the King is felt in this world, it will be now as it was of old, when Herod heard of His birth and was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. If we realise the presence of the King in the world we shall be under the influence of a certain holy jealousy, as Ittai and his followers felt towards David. We shall see with holy indignation this world rejecting His sovereignty, and we shall cry that the day of His vengeance may come speedily. Mr. Aitken dwelt on the sense of love and gratitude, and also of self-humiliation, that would come from a full discovery of the truth that Christ the King dwells within His people. He further pointed to the difficulties that are in the way of Christ having entire possession of the hearts of Christians. We are willing to give Him a subordinate position there, but we are not willing to subdue our will completely to His. If we did, the result would be power for service, and victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil. In closing, he prayed that all might be prepared for the last supreme manifestation of His power.

EVENING.

At the closing meeting of the three days' Conference, Mr. BLACKWOOD gave a short address. Having read part of the 52nd Psalm, he said: Our Gospel is the Gospel of salvation; but it is more than that, it is the Gospel of the Kingdom. I believe it has been well that we have considered these subjects for these three days. Many of us feel that these Conferences have been in the hand of God a great instrument for the furtherance of His work and the accomplishment of His purposes. Beginning with the first gathering of 120 disciples at Barnet, fifteen or sixteen years ago, how they have increased, and how God's people have been led into sweet and true unity! I believe that in that day when we can trace all the links in the chain of the accomplishment of God's purposes, these Conferences will prove to have had no small part in hastening that day. I cannot but feel that these Conferences will conduce to the awakening of the thoughts of Christians with regard to God's purposes as to the Kingdom. Seeing the place it occupies in God's Word, it is of the highest importance to understand the form and character of the Government under which we live. Till that is clearly established how can there be order or obedience or progress? Till we see the Kingship of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that God's great purpose is not salvation but dominion, we shall not be in a position to cry, as they did in Judah, when their hearts beat together as one man, "Return, return, thou and all thy servants." I suspect (I have not looked out, but I mean to do so), that next to the personal names of God and Jehovah, you will find in the Bible that the name God most often claims for himself is that of King; you will find that it runs through the whole Bible; and while there are four books of the Kings, there is but one book of the Kingdom. The history of the Bible is the history of a kingdom. The Gospel begins the Kingdom in this world, and it runs right through. And by-and-by the Son of Man shall send His angels, and they shall gather out of His Kingdom all things that offend and all them that do iniquity. If the angels were to come to-night, friends, would you be gathered out of the Kingdom? Let us come into sympathy with God in His purposes, and then we can intelligently pray, "Thy Kingdom come."

In resuming the consideration of the morning's subject,

Rev. GEORGE HEAD gave a short address, founded on the words in Isaiah xxxiii. 17: "Thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty," and devoted chiefly to an unfolding of "the beauty of the King" in His various offices and aspects.

Mr. HENRY VARLEY then spoke. Premising that the subject as suggested by the passages of Scripture in the circular was identified with the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, he directed attention to the words of the King himself (Luke xix. 12), "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return," &c. There is no doubt but the nobleman represents Christ. There is a distinction made between the citizens, who sent a message after him, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us," and the servants to whom the pounds were delivered. The word servant implies a master, just as a kingdom implies a reigning lord of that kingdom. Christ's word to us is "Occupy till I come." We are His servants, entrusted with His money. His grace in us is to be our capital. We are to labour with His resources that we may meet Him with joy at His coming. He comes again, as we read in Daniel, chap. vii., to receive "dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him." Does His coming affect our hearts and lives as he intended it should affect us? When Saul was converted by the revelation of Christ from heaven, it seems to me that the vision he had at that time of the glory of Christ was so wonderful that he became blind to the earth from that time. Let us go out of this meeting into our homes and into the busy scenes of the world constantly using the strength of the Lord Jesus Christ, and able to say with the Apostle Paul, "striving according to His working which worketh in me mightily." Let not our reception of the Lord Jesus Christ be a mere notion; let it not be simply a question of theory with us. In the presence of the Lord may we know, like Moses, what it is to have our faces to shine. May the power of Christ so possess intellect, and spirit, and soul and body that we shall naturally exhibit the Lord Jesus Christ. May we realise from to-day more of the inner "presence of the King," that will draw us after Him, and not after His servants. In one of the passages given for our consideration it says, "The King hath brought me into His chamber." The idea of solitude is here. And it strikes me that there is no greater need in this busy, bustling day than for God's servants to be in the solitude of those chambers, where He speaks to our souls. And let us realise that the experience of to-day will not suffice for to-morrow; that the grace we had around the table of the Lord this afternoon is not to be the power we shall need for to-night or for our life to-morrow. Oh! that while he is preparing the glory for us yonder His voice may reach us to-night afresh, "Occupy till I come." Mr. Varley closed an earnest and telling address by urging Christians to have exalted views of what the Gospel is, and to spread it abroad among all the nations of the earth.

After some pointed remarks by Lord RADSTOCK, first to the unsave and then to Christians, the three days' Conference was brought to a close with prayer.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.

On the first afternoon of the Mildmay Conference, a very interesting gathering was held under "The Mulberry Tree" amongst the friends of this Mission.

Lieut.-Colonel Sandwith presided, and after the hymn "Sowing the Seed" had been sung—led by some of Mr. Sankey's choir—Capt. Moreton thanked the Lord for having suggested to the hearts of his handmaids new plans by which to cheer sick and dying ones, and to carry the message of God's love to the lost.

Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND, of the George-yard Mission, White-chapel, then gave a short account of the blessed effects of the Mission upon the wretched inhabitants of his own neighbourhood, and mentioned an incident which brought tears to every eye. A poor girl, having received a bouquet, was so much impressed by it and the text, that she came to the Mission Room asking for prayer that a new heart might be given her, and soon after she could not be found in the low den in one of London's vilest streets. The neighbours said she never rested after seeing those flowers; they reminded her so much of the country home she had left, with the sweet honeysuckle twining round the cottage door, that she could no longer stay in the abode of wickedness, and returned to her own family. Mr. Holland said he had himself given some 5,000 texts and flowers away, and urged all to join in the blessed privilege of thus sowing the living seed.

Cases of conversion, too, we begin to hear of, causing much thankfulness. We hope that in October a detailed account will be published—"Records of the Flower Mission."

A tent, with the bouquets of various sizes ready for distribution, was a centre of interest during the three days' Conference; and through it friends in foreign lands have been stirred to start a similar work in their own towns—in Italy, France, Germany, and Switzerland.

Owing to many Flower Missions being now started of a solely philanthropic character, it has been deemed advisable to name the one which has its depôts at Mildmay and the Home of Industry, "The Bible Flower Mission," its special object being the diffusion of God's Word by means of the flower gifts. It would be well to associate the branches in provincial towns which work on the same principles. Friends willing to supply 100 to 300 bunches of flowers to smaller private depôts would oblige by writing to the Secretary at the chief depôts. Also, information will be gladly supplied to any who are desirous of opening branch depôts either in London or in provincial towns.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' AND SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

This Society was represented at the Mildmay Conference on Wednesday, the 23rd June, the assembly being gathered under "The Mulberry Tree" in the gardens.

Several of the Conference hymns were sung, and Mr. EVERARD, Vicar of St. Mark's, Wolverhampton, opened the proceedings by asking the Lord to solemnise each one present, and to bless everyone connected with this work of carrying the glad tidings of salvation amongst our soldiers.

General CLARKE, the chairman, said it was very gratifying that so many of the Lord's people had gathered on this occasion to hear what great things were being done in our barracks. He bore a brief testimony to the value of the work going on, and he referred friends to the many papers which were printed detailing the work of the Society, and added —we ought all to rejoice that so many of our soldiers were not only good soldiers of an earthly sovereign, but were earnest, true soldiers of the great Captain of our Salvation. He entreated those hearing him to aid in this important work, as they knew best how to do.

The Rev. C. SKRINE, once an officer in the army, explained that when he left the army there was no such work as this going on, and the men were mostly unheeded; and it is from the known want then existing that he could well plead for further help, first by the prayers of the Lord's children, and then for the silver and the gold.

Colonel FIELD gave his testimony of twenty-five years' knowledge of the Army Scripture Readers, and detailed hospital work, and asked how could the members of the Church of Christ be satisfied with seventy Readers? Would they not come to the help, then, of true men, who, with the love of Christ in their heart and the Word of God in their hand, were spreading the Gospel of Christ amongst our troops? The chaplains cannot reach the men as the readers do. He earnestly commended this cause to the Church—70,000 British soldiers in India, and only eight readers of the pure Word of God for so many!

Mr. RAWSON, late 67th Regiment, but now one of the seventy who go forth into our barracks, detailed, in an interesting manner, somewhat of his work, but space will not allow of our mentioning more of the labours of love of this truly missionary society. We do commend the work to our readers.

Colonel SANDWICH, one of the secretaries, gave away papers, and we conclude by reminding our friends that the office of the Society is at 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, W.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

On the afternoon of Thursday, June 24, a meeting was held in Room No. 6 of the Conference Hall, Lord Radstock in the chair. The room was well filled.

After a few brief remarks by Lord Radstock,

The Rev. J. T. LAYARD, Rector of North Walsham (the uncle of Mr. Augustus Margary, recently murdered at Manwyne, on the Burman frontier of China), asked very earnestly for God's blessing on the missionaries, Messrs. Stevenson and Soltan, who have recently reached Burmah, hoping to convey the Gospel to the very parts in which Mr. Margary was killed, and touchingly referred to the longing desires of the bereaved mother and relatives that his very murderers should be saved.

Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR then addressed the meeting, pointing out the vast need of China—nine provinces wholly unevangelised, nine others inadequately worked,—and referred to the utter impossibility of ever meeting this need by the localised efforts of European labourers. He called attention to the apostolic plan: they had faith in the message—God's living seed; they dared to sow it, and leave it if needful, and often they were compelled to do so at once; they dared to commit little bands of Christians to God's care, believing that He who had begun a good work in them was able to carry it on. They sought to help the converts by constant prayer for them, by epistles, and by occasional visits; to ordain elders from among the members of each church, but not to permanently reside among them themselves. Thus, a few men were able to plant many churches, and thus we must work in China.

Mr. RUDLAND, who has been for nine years in China, followed with some stirring remarks on the need of the province in which he had laboured, and in which he was the only foreign worker, containing three million souls, his nearest neighbour being sixty miles away.

After some words of encouragement from the CHAIRMAN,

Mr. H. G. GUINNESS said that some of the young men now in the Institute under his care were looking forward to China as their sphere of labour, and called attention to the new illustrated magazine "China's Millions" [Morgan & Scott, price 1d.] which is just being issued, and which he hoped would be widely read, as it would tend to make China's need more realised.

Mr. GUINNESS concluded the meeting with prayer.

CLOSING MEETINGS.

"Thou hast kept the good wine until now," was the expression of those who stayed to Saturday's meetings. The morning prayer-meeting was well attended, and was felt to be a time of real communion. Mr. Blackwood, who presided, dwelt upon Paul's farewell address to the Ephesian elders, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let those who had been receiving from the Lord during the Conference, go home and give to those for whom nothing had been provided. Mr. St. John Mildmay also spoke, dwelling upon the three subjects considered during the meetings, showing that it was God's purpose that His glory, power, and presence should be seen in and manifested to the world by His people.

At the eleven o'clock meeting in the large hall, Captain Moreton presided, and dwelt upon the beautiful harmony and happy fellowship seen throughout the meetings. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. George Savage and Mr. George Müller. The latter gave an address upon Prayer, dwelling consecutively on Mark xi. 24; Matt. vii. 7, 8; and Matt. xviii. 19. In a fatherly way, and with great simplicity, this venerable man related his own experience of the power of prayer, and produced a deep impression upon the audience. He declared that during the last fifty years he had not only received hundreds and thousands of answers to prayer, but literally tens of thousands. Sometimes the answers came immediately, and sometimes it was weeks, months, and years, before they came.

It was remarkable that on this the closing day of the Conference a note of thanks was sent up that a pastor had been found for St. Jude's Church. Mr. Cobb, Mr. Pennefather's successor, found his health would not allow him to remain, and he has gone to Switzerland for a change of air prior to taking charge of his new parish of Teston, near Maidstone. The Rev. D. B. Hankin, of Ware, has accepted the charge of St. Jude's.

Never has the Conference Hall been so crowded for five consecutive days since it was erected. Twice a day during the Conference every seat was occupied, and every space where a chair or camp-stool could be placed. Thus filled, the number could not be far short of 3,000. Then, on Saturday evening, when Mr. Moody met and addressed the house-to-house visitors, and also on Sunday, when the venerable George Müller preached twice, the utmost capacity of the building was tested. Mr. Müller's addresses were exceedingly precious and suggestive. In the afternoon he spoke of the "faithful saying" in Timothy, and in the evening expounded the twenty-third Psalm.

REST NEEDFUL FOR SERVICE.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."—ISA. XL. 31.

BE not restless, busy Christian,
Come apart, and stay awhile
By the ever-flowing fountain
Where Christ on His flock doth smile.

Oh! regret not time thus passing,
Nay, it is not waste or lost,
'Tis but needful sweet refreshment,
Grudge it not, nor count the cost.

"I must hasten," so thou sayest,
"Work in earnest while 'tis day,"—
True! for night too quickly coming,
Wears Time's fleeting light away.

Listen! how thy Father speaketh
To thy busy earnest soul:
"Wouldst thou give Me truest service,
All thy burden on Me roll.

"When so weary, weak, and fainting,
Work like Mine, say, canst thou do?
Wait upon Me, so they mayest
Thy fast waning strength renew.

"Then refreshed, well plumed, and winged,
As an eagle in thy flight,
Thou shalt work with blessed freedom,
Walking ever in the light."

GREENWICH.—Under the auspices of the South-East Auxiliary Sunday School Union, a special service for senior scholars was conducted at Greenwich on the 24th ult., by Mr. Henry Varley. Special teachers' prayer-meetings were held in many of the local schools in anticipation of the service, and much blessing was given in answer to the teachers' prayers. Many young people expressed their desire to come to Jesus, and the greater number of these afterwards testified that they had found peace. In addition to this converting work of the Holy Spirit, many of the teachers and other Christians present have since stated that the words spoken by Mr. Varley have led them to a fuller realisation of the constant presence of the Saviour.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON MEETINGS, VICTORIA THEATRE,

TUESDAY, JUNE 29.

In commencing his address at the meeting to-day, Mr. Moody said:—"As our meetings are drawing to a close, I find a great many people coming and anxiously inquiring, 'What must I do to be saved?'" He proceeded to show how the answer to this all-important question was scattered up and down the Gospel by St. John, in every chapter of which, except two, was to be found the word "believe" in some shape. In chap. xx. 31, the apostle says,—"These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name." Unbelief was the crowning sin of the world. Mr. Moody went over the various passages in this Gospel having reference to "believing," and applied them to his hearers. Addressing the Christians, he described three classes of them set forth in the 3rd, 4th, and 7th chapters. Being born of water and the Spirit they had entered the Kingdom. The second kind of Christians are portrayed in the 4th chapter as having within them a well of water, springing up unto everlasting life. No Christian can work for others unless he has got enough for himself and something to spare. But the best kind of Christians are those described in the 7th chapter as a flowing river—a perennial stream of blessing. Every Christian ought to be like an Artesian well. In the 10th chapter we read that "many believed on Him there." They didn't wait till they had an inquiry meeting. Why not believe on Him now?

Mr. Sankey usually sings the gospel. To-day he gave us what we might call a short, but very pointed "prayer in song." We give it as taken down while he sang:—

More holiness give me, more sweetness within,
More patience in suffering, more sorrow for sin,
More faith in my Saviour, more sense of His care,
More joy in His service, more purpose in prayer.

More gratitude give me, more trust in the Lord,
More zeal for His glory, more hope in His Word;
More tears at His sorrow, more pain at His grief,
More meekness in trial, more praise for relief.

More victory give me, more strength to o'ercome,
More freedom from earth-stains, more longings for home,
More fit for His coming, more use would I be,
More blessed and holy, more, Saviour, like Thee."

Mr. Sankey then prayed specially for two widowed mothers who had written to him, stating their anxiety for the conversion of their sons who were sailors.

Mr. Paton related an incident for the encouragement of any seeking souls who might be present. A lady of considerable intelligence came to the Opera House to scoff at the whole movement. After getting to the meeting she spoke against it to those around her. She could not see the speaker where she sat at first, but some kind friend gave her a better seat. Mr. Moody had not spoken very long till she began to be interested in what was said. She left that meeting ceasing to be a scoffer, but nothing more. Mr. Moody's subject was "immediate conversion," and that was the particular phase of this movement to which she objected. Ten days ago she went to the meeting at Camberwell, and, strangely enough, Mr. Moody spoke on the same subject. The lady thought that surely God must have a controversy with her, and somehow she found her way to the inquiry room, where she was spoken to by a young Scotchman, and she seemed greatly impressed by his earnestness. She attempted to go to the meeting in the evening for men, but failed to gain admission. Some Christian worker spoke to her outside. Presently a third person came up to whom this worker also spoke, and during this conversation the lady, as it were in an instant, saw the truth, and was brought to Christ in the very way to which she had formerly objected so much. She and her husband were both pronounced Unitarians before, and she is now seeking to lead him to the Saviour she has found.

After prayer Mr. Henry Moorhouse made some remarks on the difference between believing about Christ and believing in or on or upon Christ, as it is put in John's Gospel.

Several persons rose for prayer on their behalf at the close, and were afterwards conversed with.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30.

To-day there was a goodly attendance, many working men being in the upper gallery. Among the requests was one from a schoolmaster, who had come to the meetings from the country, and was returning to-day, still without having the assurance of salvation.

Mr. Moody, following up his address of yesterday, read the conversion of the Philippian gaoler and other passages to show that salvation is accomplished, and has only to be received by faith. "I hope every man and woman will go out of this theatre 'justified from all things' to-day," said Mr. Moody, as he threw the meeting open for testimony.

Mr. H. L. HASTINGS, to show the way of salvation, told of a deputation from the Southern States that came to President Lincoln, saying that they wanted peace. He replied that their only way to obtain it was to "stop fighting." So, he said, what the sinner has to do is to "stop fighting," and accept Christ.

Alternate prayer and testimony followed, and then was sung the 50th hymn, the chorus of which calls upon all

"To receive and believe and confess Him,
That all His salvation may know."

A clergyman on the platform, after quoting the text, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," said every anxious soul who did not believe was dividing this passage—believing the first half, and not the second. Why not be consistent, and accept the latter part of the text on the same testimony as the other?

The close of the meeting was a repetition of the very solemn and hallowed scene that was witnessed at Monday's meeting. From the numbers who rose to ask prayer for themselves and others there was very joyful proof that the Spirit of God is working in our midst mightily. May the desires thus implanted in many hearts find an abundant answer.

FRIDAY, JULY 2.

At the meeting to-day, which was fully attended,

Mr. HENRY MOORHOUSE gave an exquisite little address—a miniature Bible-reading it might be called—on the "Sweet word 'Come.'"

The first "come" in the Bible, he said, was a "come of Salvation," when God invited Noah and his family into the Ark. The last "come" in the Bible was a "come of Salvation," too,—"The Spirit and the Bride say come," &c. After John had seen all the glories of heaven, the Lord Jesus Christ sent him the message, "Come,"—the last message Jesus sent from heaven to this earth.

Luke xix. 5, "Make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." People said Zaccheus was very much in earnest, but if he was, he would have been like the woman who pressed through the crowd to touch Jesus, instead of hiding himself up in a tree. It does not say that Zaccheus saw Jesus, but Jesus saw Zaccheus. We are naturally proud, and, like Zaccheus, we wish to exalt ourselves; but before Jesus can do us any good, we must come down.

Matthew xi. 28, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This is a very important "come"; there must be a coming unto the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Many people think salvation depends on receiving the doctrines of the Bible, but we may receive every doctrine in this Book and not be a Christian. I was crossing the Atlantic, said Mr. Moorhouse, and on board the ship there was an American who argued on every question that came up, no matter what it was. Christianity was spoken about, and he wanted to prove to me that he was as good a Christian as anybody in the ship because he believed all that was in the Bible. He was too smart for me, and I could not argue with him, but I said, "I have been three times in America. I have gone right from New York to California and back again. If you were to ask me my opinion of America, suppose I should say it was just as good as yours, and that I was as much an American as you?" Views about Christ don't make us Christians; we must come to Him as a person. Come unto Me.

In 2 Cor. v. 17 we have another "come" from the lips of God. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." Some people think that should be the first "come"—that coming out and being separate makes them Christians. But this is Jesus' message to His people. I do not come out to make myself a Christian, but because I am a Christian. Mr. Moorhouse, in illustration of this point, told the incident (which is often quoted by Mr. Moody) of the gold chain lying for three days in his pocket along with a lead whistle, and how, when he pulled it out at the end of that time, it was so covered over with the lead, he thought it was a spurious chain. The gold did not purify the lead, but the lead corrupted the gold. The lesson for Christians is obvious.

John xxi. 12, "Come and dine." As soon as we cease to let the world satisfy us, God satisfies us. There are three sweet words of the Saviour to Peter in this chapter, "Come and dine"; "Feed My sheep"; "Follow thou Me." God never sends a hungry Christian to feed His sheep; they must themselves first be fed. If we dine with the Master, we are able to go and satisfy some one else. Therein we shall follow Him.

John xi. 43, "Lazarus come forth." Jesus has but to speak the word, and the dead will live. Ah! but that was Jesus, you say. "Greater things than these shall ye do." We have not got this power, simply because we have not got the other "comes" that go before.

Another sweet "come," Mark vi. 31, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile." They had received power to cast out devils; they had come back and told Jesus of the sermons they had preached, and the mighty deeds they had done, expecting Him, perhaps, to pat them on the back and say, "Ye did well." There is something we need just as much, and that is to be with Himself. Notice one point: Christ did not say, "Go into a desert place." He never sends us into the desert; He takes us there. The desert is a sweet place when the Master is with us. God sends us these seemingly mysterious visitations of His providence that we may "come apart."

John xiv. 3, "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself." Christ said He would go away, and He did. He has promised to come back, and this word is as sure as the other. Then His word will be, "Come home." Salvation begins with "Come down," and ends with "Come home."

Put these six sweet "comes" together: "Come down," "Come to Me," "Come out," "Come and dine," "Come forth," "Come apart," "Come home." May God open your ears to hear the Master's voice.

Such a casket of gems, so beautifully set, we have seldom met with. Surely each one of them, and all put together, will afford theme for our readers' wondrous meditation for many a day and many a month to come.

During the subsequent stage of the meeting a woman in the gallery engaged in prayer in a way that thrilled our hearts.

CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL.

Four months have passed away since that memorable Tuesday evening, March 7, 1875, on which the evangelists opened their mission in the metropolis, and Mr. Moody called on the vast assemblage to "thank God for what He was going to do in London." Everyone who has followed the course of the meetings, north, east, west, and south, during these four eventful months must be constrained to admit that the results have amply justified Mr. Moody's faith. "The Lord hath done great things, whereof we are glad." How far the Spirit's working has been hindered by the want of a like faith on the part of many London Christians who have either given this great movement the cold shoulder, or, at most, a half-hearted support, it is impossible to determine. Looking at the estimate given by our Saviour himself as to the worth of one human soul, and being assured that hundreds—we think we may safely say thousands—of human souls have received a new and endless life through the channel of these four months' services, we cannot but gratefully record our thanksgiving to God for sending our American friends into our midst, and for the varied blessings that have flowed through them to so many individuals, and to the Church at large. Four days only now remain for them to labour in our midst. Even in this brief space we trust many a goodly sheaf will be garnered for the winnowing time that lies beyond.

The meetings in the South, during the past week, have been full of encouragement. The attendance has been fully and steadily sustained, and, as a rule, the capacities of the hall have been taxed to the utmost, though the overflow meetings have not been numerous or large. These, when found necessary, were conducted by Mr. Henry Moorhouse, in Chamberwell-green Chapel.

Taking Wednesday evening as a sample of last week's meetings, we feel disposed to refer specially to one very noticeable feature of this movement—viz., the absence of anything like physical disturbance or excitement. If the test applied by Dr. H. Bonar, at the Mildmay Conference, be a true one—that the less of excitement there is at the meetings, the more likely is the Spirit of God to be at work—then the Holy Spirit's power and presence have been very manifest throughout. During Mr. Moody's address on the text "There was no room for them in the inn" (which will be found reported on a previous page), we were particularly struck by the almost deathly stillness that reigned over the eagerly attentive audience. The subject was a very touching one, and Mr. Moody's treatment of it was, we think, eminently calculated to awaken and draw out the tenderest emotions of the heart towards Him who, while on earth, "had nowhere to lay His head." What a wonderful power there is in the story of Christ's humiliation, when told out of a sympathetic heart, to hush men's minds and subdue men's spirits.

This was equally noticeable on the afternoon of Sunday last, when Mr. Moody, addressing an audience of women that filled every corner of Camberwell Hall, chose as his theme the story of the Cross foreshadowed by the words of the prophet, "He was wounded for our transgressions."

"If I could just make this scene real, and the great truth could be brought home to our hearts that 'Christ died for our sins,' I am sure all here would bow at the Cross and take salvation as a gift. But the great trouble is, we do not make these things real. We read about the sufferings of Christ, and almost before we have ceased reading we forget all about it. I have often thought, if I could picture this scene of the Cross, and bring it out as it took place, I would preach but one sermon, and that would be from these words, 'He was wounded for our transgressions.'"

Such was the purport of Mr. Moody's opening sentences, and it must be confessed that he succeeded in making this "divine tragedy" as real as human speech could well make it. With great minuteness of detail he followed the footsteps of the Saviour into the upper room, through the incidents of the Last Supper, the bitter agony of the garden, the shameful betrayal and arrest, the indignity of the mock trial, the intensely painful scourging, and "the crowning act of earth and hell" at Calvary's tree. Then he portrayed the brighter scenes of the burial and resurrection, the brief earthly sojourn that followed, and the Ascension of Our Lord, with the comforting promise of His return. As he drew this picture with vivid touch, he drew at the same time the tears from many eyes, and it was difficult to conceive of there being a single listener in that immense audience remaining unmoved. Many, at all events, were moved so far as to respond with readiness to the customary appeal of the preacher to rise, in token of their wish to be prayed for, or to become disciples of this crucified but now risen and exalted Saviour. Just as Mr. Moody was on the point of making this appeal at the close of his address, he was somewhat disconcerted by a severe and prolonged fit of coughing by a child on the platform; and this untoward incident disturbed the usual order of the service, though we are fain to hope it did not mar any of the solemn effect evidently, produced by Mr. Moody's recital of the story of the Cross.

The evening service, when the hall was filled to overflowing with an imposing array of men, was an exact copy of the afternoon one. At both Mr. Sankey sang, with that marvellous pathos which is a prominent quality in his voice. The tune, which is one of his own composition, is admirably wedded to the awe-inspiring sentiments of the hymn, and this part of the service well harmonised with the sermon. Out of two such audiences, and as the result of two such services as those of Sunday afternoon and evening, one may fairly expect large accessions to the followers of the Lamb.

Though last in order of mention, certainly not least in importance, was the early morning service for Christian workers. The hall was not crowded out, as on the previous Sunday, owing, doubtless, to the wet morning, but it was nearly full, and those who were regardless of the rain were amply rewarded by hearing Mr. Moody's valuable address on "How to study the Bible." A brief outline of this address was given on page 13 of our issue of May 13.

Mr. Sankey contributed to the interest of the service by singing that rousing call to action:—

"There's a cry from Macedonia, Come and help us!

The light of the Gospel bring;

Let us hear the joyful tidings of salvation;

We thirst for the living spring."

Mr. Moody announced the meetings of Sunday next as the close of their present labours in this country.

In the evening a large overflow meeting for women was held in Chamberwell-green Chapel, and was addressed with considerable effect by our esteemed contributor Miss Cotton, of Dorking.

BOW-ROAD HALL.

The glad tidings of salvation are still proclaimed in Bow-road Hall, though its days are numbered. After this week the voices of the preacher and the singers will cease. Last week the Jubilee Singers drew large crowds to hear them, and, we need scarcely say, charmed and enthralled the thousands who went. We doubt not they helped many on the way to heaven by their "ladder of song," and, we trust, allured many more to leave the downward path and enter on that one which leads to life eternal. The way in which these American (or African?) friends have stuck to their posts at Bow-road Hall is beyond all praise, though we feel assured they seek not the praise of men, but the glory of God, in the redemption of their fellows. Still, we hope their generous devotion will not be forgotten when they follow anew the more immediate object of their mission.

Mr. H. Varley has preached for some nights with much power, and the slain of the Lord, we trust, have been many. On Friday evening last he gave his parting address on "The Paschal Lamb," and a very solemn and suggestive word it was both to the "protected" and the "unprotected" sinner. He gave a detailed and minute description of the ceremonial required of the obedient Israelites in the observance of the first Passover, and he showed the wealth of meaning that lay under the smallest of these commands, in a way that must have been both fresh and profitable to many of his hearers, as it was to us. What a wonderful storehouse of treasures, new and old, is the sacred volume!

Meetings both for young women and men were held at the close of the regular service.

VICTORIA THEATRE.

The interest and attendance at the meetings here, conducted by Major J. H. Cole, increases as the weeks go by. Many cases of undoubted and striking conversions are taking place.

One evening last week, at the commencement of the service, a man rose up and said, "For five years there has not been a day but I had been drunk till a week ago, when I heard you (pointing to Major Cole) speak on the words, 'God so loved the world, &c.' That whosoever rang down in my soul, and I got no rest when I went home until I asked God for Christ's sake to save me. I want to say that I have not touched the drink since. I am a saved man, and God has kept me till now." The effect of these sentences was such that Major Cole deemed it best, instead of giving an address, to throw the meeting open for testimony, and the whole service was occupied by the young converts telling out what God had done for them.

Last Sunday afternoon the Major had a social gathering of about fifty of his young helpers, after which they sallied forth into the alleys and courts of the neighbourhood, which is almost the lowest of the low, and sang the people into the evening meeting. The result was a crowded house and glorious ingathering.

Mr. Henry Moorhouse was present and spoke one evening recently, and he bears testimony to the wonderful work of God going on in connexion with the theatre services. Thus is Major Cole, with his little band of earnest helpers, encouraged to go on in his good work.

Major Cole has three times said good-bye to the thousands of children who gather to his Saturday afternoon services at Bow-road Hall, but so much anxiety was shown by the children that each time he has had to promise them another meeting. Last Saturday afternoon some 6,000 or 7,000 were there, and a happy time of ingathering was experienced. Next Saturday he will hold what will, in all likelihood, be the last children's meeting in Bow-road Hall, and the Jubilee Singers, with their unflagging zeal, will be present to help by their powerfully winning voices.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING.—VICTORIA THEATRE.

There was a large gathering this morning—the last Monday's noon meeting,—the key-note of which is usually "praise" for the doings of the past week.

After Mr. Sankey had sung his beautiful and increasingly popular hymn, "I am praying for you,"

Mr. Moody read the last four or five of the Psalms, all full of praise. His argument was that every Christian must be happy in order to be powerful for good. There had been much cause for praise, he said, during the last four months; let there be more praise during the last week than ever. He then returned fervent thanks to God for all His past goodness, and for health granted in the midst of much happy service, and entreated a great blessing on the remaining services.

A clergyman on the platform addressed an appeal to the unsaved, which, though very earnest and touching, was somewhat apart from the purpose of the meeting, as Mr. Moody had called for reports.

After a few words from Mr. H. L. Hastings,

Nod Wright gave the account of an interview he had had with a messenger on an omnibus who was carrying a load of money, and who, on being asked about the load of his sins, said it had been lightened lately through being spoken to by the people going to the Camberwell meetings.

The next speaker attributed much of the success of the meetings to the unity that had existed among all bodies of Christians.

Lord Cavan read part of a letter of praise from one who had been for thirty years an invalid, but who had rejoiced to read of the Lord's doings.

Mr. Moody said the very essence of praise was confession (Romans x. 10); and many had been greatly blessed during these past two years through boldly confessing Christ. There was too much moral cowardice among Christians and in the Church generally. He then requested all who wished the liberty of soul that springs from confession to rise, and special petition was offered for those who did so by Mr. Stone and Mr. Graham in succession.

Mr. Moody invoked a parting blessing, and pronounced the benediction.

THE PRINCESS MARY'S VILLAGE HOMES AT ADDESTONE.

On Saturday week the Duchess of Teck laid the foundation-stone of an Infirmary in connexion with these Homes, which are named after her Royal Highness, and which, as an offshoot of the Prison Mission, train for domestic and other services about 140 girls, principally young criminals themselves or children of criminal parents. The little colony is conducted on the "separate home" principle, each of the fourteen homes being assigned to the care of a "mother," whose whole time is devoted to her little family, the various members of which are thus trained to habits of order and cleanliness, to which the majority, if not the whole of them, were formerly strangers. The educational wants of the Institution having outgrown the original accommodation provided, it has been found necessary to enlarge the school, and advantage was taken of the visit of the Princess on Saturday to have the foundation-stone of a new wing laid, which ceremony was performed by the Earl of Kintore in the unavoidable absence of the Earl of Shaftesbury. A third ceremony consisted of the opening of a pair of new finished and furnished homes by Sir Henry and Lady Selwin-Ibbetson, the donors, whose initials are inscribed over the doorway. Each of the other homes also have inscribed over them the names of the benevolent founders.

A large company went down from London with the Duke and Duchess, who were met at the station by the band of the Byfleet Industrial Home and a company of ladies, one of whom (Miss Newland) presented her Royal Highness with a splendid bouquet. The ceremonies mentioned above were preceded by a thanksgiving service in the schoolroom, presided over by the Rev. Canon Conway, who was supported by the Duke and Duchess of Teck and their little daughter, Lords Kintore and Radstock, Sir John and Lady Selwin-Ibbetson, Mr. A. O. Charles, Mrs. Meredith, and a large number of other ladies and gentlemen. The foundation-stone of the Infirmary bore the following appropriate inscription: "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses" (Matt. viii. 17), that on the memorial-stone of the new school wing being "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom: and to depart from evil is understanding" (Job xxviii. 28). As the Royal carriage left the Homes the boys' band struck up the National Anthem.

Does any ask how much must we each do to maintain this and similar instrumentalities for bringing little ones to Jesus? "All we can," is the only answer to this question. Reader, will you give all the money you can, and all the prayer you can, and all the time you can, to help this one? It will be gratefully received, where it is much needed. There are several things required to make the work go on, and the absence of money renders it impossible. The children and the houses must separate if this fails. If they are to keep together there must be funds for their maintenance, and these are now completely exhausted. The Lady-Superintendent is Mrs. Meredith, Princess Mary's Village Homes, Addlestone, Surrey.

REVIEW OF WORK IN MANCHESTER.

THE Central Work in Manchester has been diligently kept up by ten young men, seven of them converts at Mr. Moody's meetings, who gathered around Dr. Ziemann, the representative of the Evangelical Committee. No association, no committee, has been formed, no rules have been fixed: night after night this little band gathered together for prayer, and then going out, two by two, into the streets, gathered together their congregation—having an eye especially for young men. Thus, without interruption, during seven months the meetings have been carried on night after night, with an average attendance of eighty to a hundred men. God only knows the result, but we can state that not a night has passed without inquirers remaining. Souls have been saved, and many prodigals have returned.

Dr. Ziemann has been so much encouraged that in faith he took the Grand Circus, holding 1200 people, and much used by infidels for their lectures. For the last week the name of Jesus Christ has been preached there, and the Lord has owned those efforts above all expectation. On the first evening, when Dr. Ziemann commenced the meeting by saying that he could not open his lips in this circus without praising God for the great privilege, the whole assemblage arose and sang with great enthusiasm the Doxology! Beginning with praise, they ended with praise. Over twenty inquirers remained. It was a soul-refreshing time.

In addition to this enterprise, a large tent has just been bought, where nightly meetings will be held.

The Daily Noon Prayer Meetings have kept up the average daily attendance through many difficulties; but the interest and the power of the meetings have undoubtedly increased. The lay members of the Committee (all merchants connected with large concerns) have found time to sustain this meeting; but it is greatly to be deplored that in a large city like Manchester there are not more Christians who value the privilege of united prayer. May not the Saviour's words be addressed to many who, with a little effort, might, but do not, attend—"What! could ye not watch with me one hour?"

The Weekly Meetings for Christians have a history of their own. Commencing in the drawing-room of Dr. Ziemann with a few ladies, who met for prayer, and the reading of the Scriptures, the number increased to twelve, then to twenty; and the next step was to adjourn to the Religious Institute, and latterly to the Town Hall. The wisdom of this step was apparent at the first meeting in the latter building, at which about five hundred persons were present. It will suffice to remark that these meetings have been signalled by the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God. The meetings were essentially what they were professedly—"meetings for Christians." The life in Christ, spiritual fitness for Christian work, the charity that never fails, the faith that works by love, whole-heartedness, and entire consecration; these, enriched by an endless variety of illustration, enforced by irresistible arguments and appeals, are the subjects. Thus, his hearers return to their homes with deepened impressions. Not a mere sentimentalism—not an undefined emotion—but a real life, having its springs in Christ, and its outflow in works of love; such is the life that Dr. Ziemann would have his hearers to seek, and which he believes is waiting for the acceptance of all who would become the disciples of the Lord Jesus. If such be the feelings enkindled in the hearts of not a few of his hearers, what may not be the result if faith takes action in work? It is interesting to notice that some of our leading Christian merchants have encouraged these meetings with their regular attendance.

In addition to the work referred to is a department of labour, unique perhaps in its character, but full of importance. We refer to the Saturday Noon Children's Meeting. This is not a usual children's meeting, but Dr. Ziemann, assisted by a few ladies, goes out every Saturday, and gathers from the streets and lanes the "waifs and strays." An interesting company is then brought together and entertained by simple little stories, teaching Gospel truths. These meetings have become exceedingly interesting, and on Saturday, the 19th ult., 700 ragged boys sat down to a tea at the Circus. Many of those boys have shown, by their greatly changed behaviour, that the trouble taken with them is not lost.

WEST GREENWICH RAGGED SCHOOL. — Suitable teachers are much needed. If any Christian friends have time and a mind for this work, let them apply at the School in Bridge-street any Sunday at three o'clock.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN LIVERPOOL.

I AM happy to have to report that the work is still going on in Liverpool; the week-day services have been continued in the Circus for the past few weeks by various evangelists. The attendance has generally been satisfactory, and we believe that the result has been good in the number of souls converted to God.

On Monday, 21st ult., Mr. Henry Varley, of London, delivered a powerful address to a large audience; and on Tuesday the Circus was so crowded that it became necessary to move to the Victoria Hall for the Wednesday evening meeting, which was attended by between four and five thousand people.

About 2,000 persons remained for the after meeting, which was also conducted by Mr. Varley, who, after prayer by a minister present, proceeded to bring out by comparison of various texts the simple truths of the Gospel, in the hope that some poor burdened ones might be led to grasp the salvation so freely offered.

It has been decided for the present to carry on two meetings every evening at the Circus, viz., an evangelistic service at 7.30, and young men's meeting at 9, in addition to the boys' and the carters' meetings on Sunday; and we hope that all Christians will remember us in prayer, that God may be pleased to pour out His blessing on all our efforts.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS.

[We willingly give space to the following letter from our esteemed brother Pastor Theo. Monod, believing that numbers of our readers who had the pleasure and profit of hearing his addresses at the Brighton Convention will gladly embrace this opportunity of testifying their gratitude, and also of forwarding the cause of Christ among our French brethren.—Ed.]

DEAR SIR,—Your columns are too much crowded with good things, "new and old," for me to take up more space, for a special and almost personal purpose, than is strictly needful. I therefore dispense with all introductory remarks.

I have, as you know, in the beginning of last winter, been led to give up my pastoral charge and enter upon missionary work among the French Protestant churches. This change was, of course, a painful one for the church to which I had ministered for eleven years in Paris. Nevertheless, it was consented to, under a clear conviction that it was the will of God, and in faith that He would make up to His children the sacrifice willingly accepted for His sake. The pulpit has thus far been supplied from week to week, and pastoral functions provided for, but my successor has yet to be found, all efforts thus far having proved unsuccessful.

The contemplated change involves on the part of the church (a small one—the membership being between fifty and sixty—the whole congregation not over 300) a considerable effort, financially, to raise the salary of my successor (the stipend hitherto given being quite insufficient); a new subscription has been made and has been successful. But—here I come to the point at last—another needed change is, the re-building of the upper part of our chapel, to make it into a larger, sunnier, healthier, dwelling for the new pastor. To this enterprise the church is not adequate; at any rate, I do not think it would be right, nor prudent, nor, in fact, practicable, to squeeze out of this little flock, sad with parting and weary with waiting, the necessary sum, which from the architect's final estimate will amount to £600.

I have taken it upon myself to say (whether imprudently or not, the result will show) that I would undertake to find the money among friends outside of the church. By private application I have collected (through the great kindness of a subscriber, who also acted as solicitor) nearly £200. There remains, therefore, a little over £400 to be found, and I see no way to secure this except to mention the facts through your columns to those who may be able and willing to help us.

If, through their kindness and the goodness of God, the needed amount can be found promptly, we will begin the work at once; the pastor, I doubt not, will also be given to us; and the cloud which still seems to be brooding over the little church will have vanished from her sky.

Ever yours faithfully and hopefully, TH. MONOD.

SWANSEA.—Arrangements have been made by the Young Men's Christian Association for evangelistic services here. The prayers of the Lord's people are requested for the success of these efforts.

"FAIRLOP FRIDAY."

CERTAIN weeds, indigenous to certain kinds of soil, are hard to uproot. The same may be said of established customs, especially if they are of a useless, or worse than useless description. "The advancing tide of civilisation" has swept a good many old institutions out of existence, but, from our experience of Friday last, it has left "Fairlop Friday" as high and dry as ever.

It was a wonderful, kaleidoscopic picture that presented itself to our sight as we emerged from Bow-road Hall about nine o'clock on Friday evening last, and gained the leading thoroughfare that runs from Aldgate Pump to Bow and Stratford. We found ourselves in the midst of a seething crowd of East-end humanity of all sorts and sizes. It would be useless to attempt a detailed description. The poverty, filth, and squalor, the drunkenness and vice, the ruffianism and crime of this densely peopled quarter of the metropolis, were all represented, though it would be unjust to say that either of these obtruded themselves on the view of the casual looker-on, and we were happily surprised to find so few outward manifestations of the vice of drunkenness in a crowd of perhaps a quarter of a million human beings, extending along, say, two miles of streets. But, altogether, the picture was a very mixed one, the darker tints largely predominating. There was much to sadden the thoughtful spectator, and somewhat, too, to relieve the gloom.

The darkest spots were seen in the thirsty, struggling masses that crowded into and surrounded the accursed drink-shops that dot almost every corner and many parts of the streets besides. It must have been quite a harvest for them. What a sad harvest of shame and sorrow for the thousands who were greedily and wittingly putting "an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains." However meaningless and absurd this annual spectacle may be, we believe it would be comparatively harmless if the drink element could be eliminated from the evening's proceedings. Coloured fires intermittently burst forth from many of the houses along the route, and served to cast a weird and lurid light on the scene.

Just a word or two about the brighter and more hopeful side of the picture. The weather was delightfully pleasant, and thousands on thousands no doubt enjoyed the promenade in the quieter parts of the highway. But we wish to draw attention to the little groups of six or seven that were scattered up and down the road at intervals, and were busily engaged in preaching and singing the Gospel. After a successful and unanimous conference at the East London Tabernacle in the afternoon, upwards of seventy of these little bands took up their positions in the Bow and Mile End Roads about eight o'clock, and for full two hours they had the privilege of preaching and singing to, and with, groups of respectful and well-behaved listeners. Mr. Sankey's hymn-book was used, and the hearty way in which the hymns were sung, even by those who apparently were not greatly touched by the sentiment of the song, was another proof of the widespread popularity of the collection. The suggestion forces itself into one's mind, whether the holding of these services in the midst of a temetia of noise and tumult is not something like "casting pearls before swine." But the earnest attention of many, notwithstanding the surrounding distraction, and, above all, the plain commands to be "instant in season and out of season," and to "sow beside all waters," are, we think, sufficient justification for the efforts made by Mr. Knight and his zealous fellow-labourers to shed the glorious light of the Gospel right into the worse than heathen darkness that even Christian London contains. We are not in a position to speak of results, if any are known; but if the good seed of the Word be sown in faith, the results, under such circumstances, may well be left till the great harvest day.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHANAGE, WEST-SQUARE.—The anniversary meeting of this orphanage home was held, as in past years, in the Lecture Hall of Westminster Chapel, on Wednesday evening, the 23rd June; Mr. Graham in the chair. Addresses were delivered by the chairman and other friends of the institution, and the report—a most interesting document—was read by Dr. Bateson. It is a record of the loving kindness of the Lord to His handmaid, and of the blessed work which, without doubt, He gave her to do. The Home is being rebuilt as funds are received. One wing is now being proceeded with. This and the daily needs of the children afford an opportunity for sharing the burden with Miss Sharman, whose health is as feeble as her faith is strong. The foundation-stone of the new wing will be laid by her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, on the 22nd inst., at three.

YOUNG WOMEN'S SPECIAL NUMBER OF
"THE CHRISTIAN."

OUR next will be a Double Number, and will contain sixteen extra pages devoted to articles and intelligence having special reference to the social and spiritual interests of the Young Women of our land.

We have felt considerable hesitation in carrying out our announcement as to making this issue for Young women a Double Number, because we have received remonstrances from a few of our readers, urging that they were not specially interested in young men, and did not like being obliged to pay twopence for the Young Men's Double Numbers. On the other hand, we think that the great majority of our readers would be disappointed if, for the sake of an extra penny, these deeply interesting numbers were withheld from them; for there are young men and young women in most homes. We, therefore, beg the forbearance of those of our friends who would prefer that we issued no Double Numbers, and trust that, in the interest of our Young Women, they will not grudge the extra cost, at least in this instance.

MISS DE BROEN'S MISSION IN PARIS.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.—It is with great joy and praise to God that we can tell you it has pleased Him to give us at last a piece of ground suitable for the erection of the iron room, instead of that which disappointed us so much last year. It is in an equally good situation, close to the Buttes de Chaumont, but has not the houses attached for carrying on the other branches of the Mission.

This necessitates the erection of a lodge for the protection of the iron room. Nearly £2000 are still required to complete the purchase, pay expenses, and erect the lodge. The poor people, who have been cared for both temporarily and spiritually, are anxiously waiting for the opening of these day schools, so as to bring their children under Christian principles. Will not those who know the importance of training children in their youth for Jesus make a special effort to help us at once? The Protestant school at Belleville is overcrowded, and is of course established for Protestants, while our efforts are amongst the Romanists, or, as we may justly say, among those who have no religion at all.

The iron room, for which I have had the money in hand nearly two years, will be used not only for these schools but for evangelistic meetings for the numerous passers by; and we hope that Christian friends passing through Paris will add their help to that of the evangelist of the Mission, who is well suited for this work. We sometimes wonder, knowing the numbers of English Christians visiting Paris, how few avail themselves of the omnibuses that bring them almost to our door, to cheer their own hearts and ours, by coming to see what the Lord is doing amongst our poor friends, who, by means of the Medical Mission, &c., are gladly hearing the Word of God explained to them. It would be as pleasant a sight as any afforded by the bright and beautiful streets of Paris.

Those of our friends who have seen the large gatherings at the sewing classes will be glad to hear that the little annual fête, when these classes broke up for the summer months, took place at the end of May, when nearly 300 women and children were gathered in the National Schoolrooms, kindly lent by Pasteur Robin; and that the kind friends from Paris, as well as Pastors Holland, Lichtenberger, Bastide, who, with Monsieur St. Hilaire, addressed them, were much pleased to see the great attention of all these people, some of whom we know can really join in thanking God, who has drawn them from the horrible pit, by faith in His beloved Son. When we look back to the beginning of the work, nearly four years ago, and even to the fête of last year, we praise God for what He has done in the fulfilment of His promise, "My Word shall not return to Me void." As one case among many of the good gained at these sewing classes, always opened by reading and prayer, I quote the words of a woman belonging to them on leaving Paris: "How happy I am, to have come here," she said, with tears; "I did nothing but swear and blaspheme, and embitter the life of my husband and strike my children; I did not know salvation as it has been shown me in Jesus Christ; now all is changed in me." Her husband, who entered at the time, looked happy though ill. He used to avoid his own home, in which there was no peace.

The dispensary is a special means of blessing, but we are still looking for a Medical Missionary for the constant carrying on of this most useful means of good, by which, through the Gospel address given before medical consultation, many whom we could not otherwise reach have found peace and forgiveness through the blood of Him who cleanses from all our sins. One man thus expressed it: "I needed to become ill to learn the Gospel"; and another who comes to the Sunday service said, "I have not lost all, for I have found the Gospel."

To avoid taking more of your space, let me refer those who would like to know more of the work to the last report of it, which can be had at any time at my Paris address as below. The need both of voluntary helpers, and for means to carry on the ordinary expenses of the Mission, as well as for what is urgent for the moment, is very great.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES IN GERMANY.

DEAR SIR,—I have often been anxious to see the work of children's services spreading to the Continent, but the want of suitable hymns has always appeared the great difficulty. I am now glad to find that it is removed by the publication of what appear excellent translations of many of Mr. Sankey's hymns—especially those most suitable for children—in German, and to the same tunes.

This has led me to think of visiting Germany this summer, and, if the way is open, of holding some children's services there. If you will kindly insert this letter, I may hear of some friends of the children who would like to join in such an enterprise, for I could hardly undertake it alone; also of some pastors in Germany who would be willing to make arrangements for services. My knowledge of the language is small, but I think that this and other difficulties might be overcome.

I thought of going about the end of this month, to stay for three or four weeks, perhaps visiting Heidelberg, Mannheim, Carlsruhe, Heilbronn, Stuttgart, and other towns near.

Yours very faithfully,

T. B. BRIDGER, Hon. Sec. Children's Special Service Mission.

WHITEHAVEN.—Messrs. Dunn and Weeks have been conducting a series of evangelistic services here, Sunday week being the last evening. They attracted very large outdoor meetings. Crowds listened with breathless attention to Mr. Dunn's gospel addresses, and the sweet solos of Mr. Weeks accompanied by the organ. Many were melted to tears, and several anxious souls found peace through believing the glad tidings.

DEVONPORT.—We have lately been favoured with a revival of religion, of which the young in connexion with our schools have more especially been the subjects. The Ker-street Sunday School has particularly been visited. For some time past the superintendents and senior teachers have been very earnest with their young charge, meeting such as were disposed to attend on a week evening for instruction, religious conversation, and prayer. In connexion with devotional services held in the school on May 2nd, symptoms of religious movement became manifest. Many of the children were in tears, and showing evident concern about their souls; and an invitation being given to such to retire into a separate room that they might be spoken to, many at once retired, and the room was filled with anxious souls, and Christian friends who prayed with them and directed them to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Other meetings of a similar character were held at intervals during three or four weeks, and many were led to accept of Jesus and trust in Him as their Saviour. The Rev. William Taylor, of California, visited Devonport just at this juncture, and held mission services for a week in the Mechanics' Hall, and the young people who had previously been prepared for revival services crowded into the inquiry rooms, and many obtained peace through believing. As a result, we have about fifty offering themselves for Church membership, whom we have placed under judicious and experienced persons, that they may be dealt with as their tender years and state of mind may require. About thirty persons, chiefly young, have lately been added to our Gloucester-street Society; and in the various congregations around, in the villages as well as in the town, God is graciously reviving His work. We are encouraged to expect still greater things. The Lord hears and answers prayer; and our motto is—"Not unto us, O God, but unto Thy name be the glory, for Thou hast wrought all our works in us."—GEORGE TURNER, Superintendent of the Wesleyan Devonport Circuit.

WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN AMERICA.—II.

A FOR MEN article closed with a promise that the next should give some account of the wonderful temperance movement in Brooklyn.

Throughout the Western States the ladies had marched in the streets from saloon to saloon, in large companies, praying and singing, and pleading with the saloon keepers. Frequently the crowd of men, women, and children was so great as to completely block the streets, and as our large cities all have laws authorising the police to disperse such crowds by arresting those who may be the cause of them, it was decided that it would be useless to attempt to visit saloons in this way in Brooklyn. Therefore the ladies who felt called to the work, met together for more than a week, waiting upon God and consecrating themselves to His service. This resulted in the organisation of the Temperance Union of Christian Women, with Mrs. Mary C. Johnson for president, and Miss E. W. Greenwood and Mrs. Mary E. Hart for secretaries, and an executive committee of forty-seven ladies.

When they were ready for action, God was not long in showing them how to visit saloons. One day, while they were engaged in prayer, a request came from a rum-seller that a committee of two, or at most not over three, ladies should visit him at his saloon. Two ladies were chosen, and, after a season of prayer, this committee went forth, but not without tears and great shrinking on the human side. They found the man troubled in conscience and ready to surrender. The note from this man gave the ladies the idea of visiting the saloons in bands of two or three, thus passing from one saloon to another without creating any excitement. In this way they have visited over 2000 saloons besides hundreds of drug stores and groceries where intoxicants were sold.

Of these 2000 saloons, over 900 have quitted the business. That is to say, one year ago we had in Brooklyn 3110 saloons; whereas to-day we have 2200. What has done all this? We answer, prayer to Almighty God, offered by men and women, who have laid their all upon the altar, and who take God as his word. Nothing else could have done it. The means used by God to accomplish this work have been various. The moral sentiment of the city has been so wrought upon by the pleadings of these women, by their own self-sacrifice, by temperance lecturers, and by ministers of the Gospel denouncing moderate drinking from their pulpits, that thousands upon thousands of men who formerly drank moderately have given it up entirely; so that many saloons have closed for want of customers to support them.

Others in large numbers have closed because God, through these women, has so troubled their consciences that they could neither eat nor sleep. We have our reformed rum-seller, who at one time had four saloons. He was visited by the ladies, and consented to have a saloon prayer-meeting in his rooms. This resulted in so moving upon his conscience that, for three days and nights, he walked his floor without food or sleep, and then surrendering himself to Christ, he poured into the street over 3000 dollars' worth of liquors, consecrated himself to the temperance cause, and so faithfully and persistently has he wrought that he has been the means of effectually and permanently closing over one hundred saloons by obtaining a revocation of their licences for violation of the Sunday laws.

In this city, as in all parts of our land, we have found the great obstacle to our onward movement to be the liquor in the churches; hence these ladies have found it as much their duty to visit and plead with the churches as to call upon and plead with rum-sellers; and to this end they have held over seventy church meetings in the largest and most influential churches in the city, where they have told their experience and besought the people to come out on the side of total abstinence.

Many prominent churches which in the beginning were uncompromisingly opposed to permitting ladies to speak in them, now welcome them gladly, and are co-operating with them in every possible way.

The first saloon captured by the ladies (of which mention has already been made) was converted into a temperance lunch-house, with prayer-meeting rooms, and temporary lodging-house, where reformed drunkards are taken in and cared for until they have found work suited to their capacity. This lunch-house is supported by faith in God, the ladies trusting in Him for all needed supplies, and thus far the blessed Master has verified His promise by supplying all their needs.

Of the seat of all this power we have not yet spoken. The ladies engaged in this work in Brooklyn are women of refinement and culture. They have laid their all upon God's altar; and there it remains. They have said, "Here am I—send me"; and wherever the Lord sends, they go, without any wavering or holding back. Then, again, for fourteen months they have held a two hours' prayer-meeting every afternoon, where the very highest type of Christianity is held up as the standard. This meeting is regarded by all who attend as the most heavenly place in all Brooklyn. Here scores upon scores of drinking men have made their peace with God, and a majority of them have stood up and testified that since they have found Christ all desire for intoxicants has been removed. In addition to this, there are a large number of evening temperance prayer-meetings, which meet from one to six times per week, in charge of these ladies.

In one of these a young man arose and said, "A month ago to-day I went into the reading-room in this building, not knowing there was a prayer-meeting here; if I had, I suppose I should not have gone there. A lady said to me, 'Brother, won't you go in to the prayer-meeting?' That word 'brother' softened my heart, and I said, 'Yes.' It was in that meeting I found Christ, and He has taken away all appetite for liquor."

In another meeting a young man arose and said, "Last Christmas-day I was in Washington, carrying a banner over an image of the Virgin Mary; but I left there and got into bad company. One day I came to these rooms, and here I found Jesus. I here learned that I did not have to go to a man in a box to confess my sins. I have been a Christian eight months. I do not have to worship a dead statue, but a living Christ."

One day, just as the meeting closed, an old man came into the rooms who had once gone to a foreign land as a missionary, and there, being directed by his physician to drink brandy, an appetite was formed which led him step by step until he was now bordering on delirium tremens. The ladies gathered around him. So great was his agony of soul, that he prostrated himself upon the floor, and cried to God for mercy. A few days after, he arose and said, "In much weakness I arise to acknowledge, with grateful heart, that I have found Him who healed the sick and raised the dead, and who, I am rejoiced to say, has delivered me from the chains of Satan. Though grey-haired, I am only four days old! What I am I owe to those ladies. May God bless them for their interest in me! I am only a wreck, but so borne up that I know not whether I am in the body or out of the body. I now consecrate all to God. I have nothing but this whisky-soaked carcass to give Him, yet I am sure the offering is accepted."

Upon another occasion an old man arose and said, "I have been drinking for thirty-five years. I promised a lady to-night that I would come to this meeting, and now, by the help of Almighty God and His Son, I intend to quit the drink. I go upon my knees to ask you to pray for me." He then stepped forward, and, falling upon his knees, he remained there for over half an hour. This man was one to whom a lady's attention was called by a rum-seller in a saloon, who said, "There is the meanest drunkard I ever knew; if you can do anything with him, then I will give up that you have a power of which I know nothing."

At another time a man said, "Rum has made me a wanderer over the earth for ten years. It has caused me to lose everything; my wife, my home, my money, my friends, my reputation—all are gone, and drinking this vile stuff did it. I had been on a long spree, when, a week ago, God arrested me in my drunken revelry, and something seemed to tell me this was my last and final call. I feel that I have been rescued from a drunkard's life and a drunkard's death. I was brought up in the South on whisky. My mother taught me to drink by first giving me blackberry cordial, when a very small boy! I am a lawyer by profession. I have made political speeches all over seventeen States. I have lost all of this earth; I do not want to lose my hope of heaven. Everything has been spent in the service of Satan. I was a wreck when Jesus passed by and saved me. To-day I make a complete surrender of all that I am to Jesus, and from henceforth it is my purpose to serve Him. Pray for me that I may be kept from falling."

These instances all came under my personal observation, and the remarks were taken down as they were uttered. Their number could be increased by scores; but these will suffice to show the character of the work, and to prove that God has not only called these women, but that He owns and blesses their efforts in a most signal manner. And why should He not do so? Was it not to the fallen, the outcast, the "scum of creation," that Jesus went? Did not the women always go with Him? Did He not come to seek and to save the lost? And who so utterly lost as the poor drunkard? Did He not say, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature"? Did He not say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"? These rum-sellers and rum-drinkers know not what they do. Their eyes are blinded by Satan, and they are led captive at his will. Oh! that the blood-bought sons and daughters of God would go down where these men are, and, in the arms of their faith, lift them up to our loving Father, in the name of Him who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and who is as ready to plead the cause of the poor Satan-blinded drunkard or moderate drinker as He was to intercede for His own benighted crucifiers.

SAILORS' REST AND INSTITUTE, DEVONPORT.

I AM thankful at length, although amidst a chaos of rubbish, bricks, and dust, to be able to date from the house so long prayed and worked for. "My God shall supply all your need," should be written on every rafter. The iron room further up the street, which we have used so long, is bought, and my notice to quit was served last week. God's marching orders having come, we left the place which has been the birth-place of so many souls, and went to our own house, which the workmen have so pulled to pieces that little more than the shell is left. The drawing-room floor, the future reading-room, was intact, and we hastily fitted it up with benches, and on the first Saturday evening we inaugurated the Prayer-meeting for Christian Workers, which we hope will be held fifty-two times every year. A considerable number gathered: there were many short and earnest prayers, and much power and blessing in the meeting; while on the following day (Sunday) the fruits of Saturday were very apparent in the numbers of "blue jackets" that thronged the large room, sitting wedged together, and listening with earnest attention. Several anxious ones remained behind with the Christians, and fruit for the Master was gathered. One poor fellow in the street, when invited in, sadly said, "I've had a glass or two; I'm not fit to go up now; I should only disturb the meeting." How we wished that our house had been finished and opened, and we might have invited him first, before the public-house overcame him. Another "blue jacket," a backslider, who had fallen away through drink, came back after a long absence. "I'm miserable," he said (and it only needed to look into his face to see it); "I was tempted by companions, and fell into sin, but I want to come back, if Jesus will have me." He was reminded that the dear Saviour "saves to the uttermost," and that "to as many as believe, to them gives He power." He sought pardon for his sin, renounced his drink, and went away with a happy face.

All the accumulating work makes me long for the opening of the place. I have enough money for the first contract, and I am sure that my Christian friends will help me towards the £1500 which I need by September, to fit up and set the place going. This "Sailors' Rest" has been a work of faith: money has come from unknown sources—hearts touched by Him who has the key of all; and I state the need, looking to Him to give the silver and the gold through those who love Him.

ASSAM AND CACHAR MISSION.—Encouraged by the success which attended the Rev. A. N. Somerville's evangelistic tour through some parts of India, the Committee of "the Assam and Cachar Missionary Society" have decided upon advertising for an evangelist (see Advt.), to visit our neglected countrymen in Assam and Cachar. They invite the sympathy and prayers of all who are interested in this object.—Wimbledon, June 23, 1875.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—Dear Brothers,—The Lord has made some stewards, and we can much help the Lord's work by taking with us, to the various meetings, young Christian working-men who would not otherwise be able to go. Last year the Lord inclined my heart to take one to the Oxford ten days' meeting. He was greatly blessed, and is now an earnest worker for Jesus. To the Opera House Convention I was enabled to take another for part of the time. Let us take them with us to the same hotel, and show the reality of our love. To have been staying at the Charing-cross Hotel with a young working-man would have been an almost impossible burden for pride to bear a short time since, but at the Convention the Lord made it easy, for in His sight there is no difference—He looks not outside, but on the heart. The Lord loved the poor.—Yours faithfully,

H.

HOMES AT PARSON'S GREEN, FULHAM.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—Let me beg your attention to the advertisement on the back page. I do believe that the effort I am making, as therein stated, is in accordance with the mind of God, and that by your help that object can be easily achieved, and at once. During the last twenty-five years' labour on behalf of the friendless and fallen, the Lord has done great things for me, and to Him be all the praise and glory ascribed. I appeal to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN to help by prayer, that when the property is secured, and until the Lord comes, the grand object may be to point sinners to Christ. Further, I ask every reader to help with a donation as the Lord enables.

Yours faithfully,
200, Euston-road, N.W. EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

[This divine work of "rescuing the perishing," in which our brother is engaged, is one which we feel certain has the approval of the Master, and we recommend it with all our hearts to the large liberality of our readers.—ED.]

MISSION WEEKS IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

WHEN I wrote last we were on the eve of our "Eight Days' Mission" for Penrith, and, as I told you we were going to have a time of great blessing, even so has it been. Our Lord and Master gave us more than we asked and looked for: we had indeed showers of blessing. The church was crowded at every service, and from 47 to 110 attended the 7 a.m. prayer meetings. The after-meetings were very solemn—the Master in the midst. From the first Sunday afternoon some persons remained at the close of every service or meeting, asking the vital question—"What must I do to be saved?" Over 100 persons sought personal interviews with the Missioner or myself, and it was delightful to witness the joy which many of these realised as they accepted by faith the finished work of Jesus Christ for them. And ever since the Mission I am continually meeting with men and women who received the message from God during the eight days. Some cases are most remarkable triumphs of grace, and there are not a few whole families who have received the grace of God.

Henry L— was brought to us full of faith and power, and was wonderfully strengthened and taught of God. Our congregation is indeed quite changed, and we do have some delightful meetings. Still the work goes on. For the last six or seven weeks I have had a meeting or service of some description every night, besides my three services on Sunday, and yet I am thankful to say I am quite well. God has supplied the strength.

During the Mission several Wesleyans and Presbyterians received a blessing, and I hope both their Churches will be stirred up. It is very refreshing also to know that a large blessing has rested upon all the other "Eight Days' Mission" services which have been held in various parishes here; and I am encouraged to look for a large blessing on the parish of Dapto, where I am going, the Lord willing, to hold a Mission. Continue to remember us in your prayers.

Penrith, N.S.W., April 9, 1875. JOHN VAUGHAN.

SUNDERLAND.—Mr. Henry Lyon is labouring at Spring Garden Mission Hall with great success. Many recent converts are rallying round him, and carrying the message of life to those sitting in darkness and the shadow of death. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. NATIONAL REFUGES FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

A LARGE party of friends and subscribers to this valuable institution went from London on Wednesday last week, on an excursion to the training-ships Arctura and Chichester, lying off Greenwich. A steamboat conveyed the party, and the trip was much enjoyed. On board the Arctura, in the course of the afternoon, a meeting was held, at which Mr. W. Williams, who has for so many years been identified with this movement, gave a brief sketch of the manner in which the Arctura came into their possession as a loan from the Government. The vessel has been fitted up for the purpose of training boys for the sea, through the munificence of the Baroness Burdett Coutts, wip, on the recommendation of Colonel Henderson, placed £5,000 at the disposal of the Committee towards the expenses connected with the establishment of the vessel. It should be stated, however, that in addition to the £5,000 given by the Baroness, the Committee have been compelled to spend £3,000; and this expense was the more serious because it crippled their operations. They had now nearly 900 boys and girls under their care, and they were anxious to increase the number until they had reached 1,000.

On Saturday, the 26th ult., the claims of the institution were brought under the notice of a large audience of ladies and gentlemen in the Quebec Institute, Portman-square, by Mr. Westmacott, M.A., at a "reading" of selections from popular authors. In the course of the afternoon, Mr. Westmacott took occasion to remark that all who had inspected the work of the Committee in its various branches and in their untiring efforts on behalf of destitute boys and girls, could not but express their grateful sense of the value of the work done. It was no small thing to rescue these young Ishmaelites from their career of want; but to lay hold of them when they were in imminent danger of lapsing into a life of crime, and to train them aright, was to engage in a task for which the nation at large could not be too grateful, and one which, in the coming years, will surely yield, as it has already done, rich and blessed fruit.

A MEETING OF YOUNG MEN is held every Tuesday evening, from nine to ten, in the Lecture-hall, Trinity Chapel, Westminster, Edgware-road, W., to which all young men are affectionately invited.

GOSPORT.—Mr. H. Cook writes: "A blessed work is going on amongst a number of young marines and soldiers here. The Commandant of the Royal Marine Light Infantry has kindly given the young men every opportunity of attending the meetings. I am greatly in need of help for my Sailors' Home."

CROYDON.—A correspondent sends us encouraging accounts of a good work of grace among the young here, and says:—"We have succeeded in gathering out upwards of eighty—the great majority of them from twelve to sixteen years of age,—whom we have formed into a Christian band, with a good hope that they really belong to Christ." Some of these have been received already as members of different churches, and the work of grace seems widening and deepening. We have lately had Mr. Spiers to conduct a week of services, and with blessed results. At his last service we calculated that there were at least 1000 present. About 300 remained to the after-meeting, amongst whom were found many anxious souls, and we have reason to believe that many then decided for Christ. Many letters received from the dear little ones give us great encouragement; requests for prayer of the most touching kind are sent in, and we are looking for 'greater things than these.' Will your many Christian readers plead earnestly for us, that still greater blessings may be showered down on these special efforts to feed the lambs in Croydon?"

The Christian.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

BY MR. G. MÜLLER, OF BRISTOL, AT THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," JULY 5, 1875.

ONE of the most important points in service for the Lord is private prayer and communion with the Lord. We must take care of our own souls, day by day, and, if we are happy in the Lord, out of us will flow rivers of living water. Also make the reading of the Word of God, with prayer, our special concern. Don't read your Bible here and there, but go right through, beginning at the New Testament; and read with self-application—How does this concern me? What reproof does it give me? And how is my soul refreshed and strengthened by this Word? When we have studied and meditated on the Word of God, let us go out and tell others of what God has done for us and what He has given us. We must present our work with prayer, for just in the measure that we are found earnestly seeking the blessing of God upon our service, in so far shall we be blessed.

If we desire to be used of the Lord, a lowly mind must be in us, and a desire to be nothing but an axe or a sword in the hands of the Lord. When we are really in this state of soul, so shall we be used. You must be humble, and say from the heart, "Lord, if Thou wilt condescend to use me, I will give Thee all the honour and glory." If we have to be honoured by God we must honour Him.

We must look, too, for blessing; we must expect it, for we speak into the heart of our Heavenly Father, and He delights to give us blessing; and when we seek His blessing on our service we are doing just what He would have us, and we must look out for blessing when we have laboured for Him and given ourselves to prayer.

We hope there are none here who are trying to work for God and their sins not forgiven. Oh, what miserable service is this! I never could force young disciples into service. First get blessing for your own souls; make your own calling and election sure, and then go out to work for God, if He has taught you a little of his own mind.

These are the few needs which I throw out with regard to workers generally.

Now I have a word for those who are particularly engaged in preaching the Word. First seek to enjoy the truth that you preach in your own soul, and if you have not been doing so hitherto, seek to do so at once. Let the truth become a reality through you, so that those who hear you may say "He believes what he preaches."

Another point is to seek from God himself the right message. You cannot know, as God knows, what, at the time you preach, is adapted to your congregation. Pray that God may be pleased to give you the right message. I fall on my knees, and ask God that He would be graciously pleased to impress on my mind the portion from which I should speak, and if I have a text on my mind I ask God if this is the portion from which I am to speak. Sometimes I do not get the portion; what am I to do? Under these circumstances I ask God, and go on reading my Bible, and then pray again, and then go on reading. If God does not impress me, I read again, and I have sometimes read eight or nine chapters before I got the portion from which to speak next time. Sometimes only a little while before I went to preach was the portion given me, but never was I left without. One Thursday evening I found a nice chapter, and I found so many beauties in it that I thought I had better keep it till Sunday evening, and then, like a flash, it came into my mind, "If I live as if I expected the coming of the Lord, how can I keep it till Sunday?" I read the chapter, and, wonderfully, it so came to pass that a woman came, as she said, for the last time, and the chapter I read was blessed to her conversion. Never determine in our own wisdom what is a good message. I never presume what message I should deliver; I wait on God, and He blesses me, for while I preach I am happy, and the people feel the power as well as I. I must wait on Him, and seek his face and his guidance, and if I do this I shall have the right message.

Let me impress this on the mind of the younger brethren who are just going to labour for the Lord. My own deliberate advice is—and it comes from experience—do not make two or three words a text, but expound what is contained in the Word. I began to preach in this way at a place where the people did not bring their Bibles to read, and I found that the people brought their Bibles with them, and got interested in the Word; I could hear the leaves fluttering as I turned over my Bible.

After I had been converted eight months I desired to preach. The first time I preached, it was a sermon I had committed to memory. I had it word for word, and it took me a fortnight to commit it well to memory. I delivered it without a mistake. The sermon was three-quarters of an hour long. In the evening of the same Sunday I was not obliged to preach, but was asked to do so. I did not like to deliver the same sermon, in the same place, and the thought came, "You might explain a few verses from a chapter," so I began reading the 5th Matthew. The moment I opened my mouth the Lord filled it, and while in the morning, to use a common expression, I shot over the people's head, in the evening, when I began to read the Word, the people opened their ears and eyes, and listened attentively for three-quarters of an hour. The aged clergyman offered me a cup of coffee, but I was so happy that I did not have it. Then it came to my mind, "This will not do for an educated audience, if it will for the country people," and when I preached before a large congregation I had to learn my sermon. But when I came to this country, on principle I gave myself to expounding the Word of God, and sought to lead readers and hearers into the understanding of it. I have found this beneficial, and the people remember what they have heard.

When you preach from only two or three words the hearers have not the connecting link, but when they have the passage it will refresh their souls afterwards. Perhaps by this method you will not get such a good name as a preacher; but we want to please God, and if we honour Him, He will see to it that we are honoured. I have found it very helpful always to meditate on the meaning of the words of the Bible, especially in some passages. If you cannot understand the Hebrew, get a good translation, and find out the meaning of the different words and passages; and when you have asked God's blessing, get pen and paper, and as the thoughts come into your head so write them down. Do we ourselves enjoy what we preach, giving the impression that we do not preach merely for hearers, but that we do it because we enjoy it?

There is no comparison between the "read" sermon and one which is delivered from the heart, and as you use the gift you have for God, so God will enlarge your gift more and more. I particularly commend simplicity of speech. Luther said, "Although I preach every Sunday before forty doctors, I always preach so that the children present can understand me, for if they can understand me, then the doctors can; but perhaps if I preached otherwise, the doctors might understand me, and the children could not." It should always be Christ who is preached. It should be our particular aim, as preachers of the Word, that full salvation is made the theme every time we preach.

About visiting, I would say that, when we visit, we must listen to the people's sorrows, and not cut them short, but point them to the Sorrow-bearer and the One who died for all. If, when sick persons are visited, we prolong our visits, pray too long, or read too much, we shall do more harm than good. Ungodly relations will not like it, and it will make them oppose our visits. Pray short, and to the point; read a few comforting verses, and with a few kind words take your departure. Don't let young brethren, or children, do this work, but let them be taught a little first, and have wisdom in this matter, before they do it. This work is just as important as preaching, and ought to be done in much prayer and faith, and if those visit who are young in the faith, they get asked questions which shake the very foundation on which they stand, and which they cannot answer.

Now a few words with regard to those who are engaged in preaching, not in regular services, but in schools—Sabbath, ragged, or day schools,—and otherwise, I would particularly say, let the great point be to give yourselves to prayer about your work. The service may be of little honour in the sight of men, but in God's sight it is a work of glory and honour, and we must pray about it, and expect large things. The more we expect, the more we shall get. Pray believingly, and expect when we pray, and we shall have abundant answers to prayer. Sometimes we have unruly children that we cannot manage, who seek to put the whole class into confusion. Don't be dismayed; take them alone; reason with them, and speak kindly to them when by themselves, then pray with them and for them. If once speaking kindly and praying with them is not enough, try it again and again, until the boy, from shame, will give in. As far as you can, bring each child by name before God, and pray for him believingly, for it is a prayer according to the mind of God, for He says, "I will not that any should die." Then when we pray, if we look for the answer, it is sure to come. I have now 2000 orphans, and between 9,000 and 10,000 children in our schools, and I have sometimes found that the very worst children in the schools turn out the very best. Let us expect great things from the hand of our Heavenly Father, and great things will be the result.

About tract distributing. We very often look at the number of tracts we give away. Never reckon up the thousands, but look for blessing. Let us say, "I will not look at the number of Bibles I give away or sell, but I will seek the blessing of God on what is given away or sold." Pray over each tract, and say as you give one away, "Lord bless that tract." David, when he was ascending the hill, was informed that Ahitophel was turned against him; he prayed, "Lord turn the counsel of Ahitophel to nought," and God did. But suppose we have not, while we are in the body, seen any fruit to our labour, when we see Christ we shall see of the fruit of our hands.

Now, believer in Christ, as I have besought you, pray for me, for I cannot do without your prayers. You pray for me, and I will pray for you. Pray that the last days of my pilgrimage may be the best days of my life. Do pray for me, that I may be upheld in the ways of God, and strengthened in my inner man, and that while my life is spared to me I may live to be helpful to my friends, the brethren and sisters in Christ.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.—The permanent evangelistic services in the minor hall, in which for some years many of our readers have taken an interest, are regularly carried on as before the great gatherings to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and the attendance on Sunday afternoons is usually limited only by the size of the building. The evening service is now at eight o'clock, so as not to interfere with the ordinary congregations at the churches and chapels around, and if possible to draw in some of the countless loiterers on the streets at that hour. For the last four or five weeks the services have necessarily been held in what is called Berners Hall, owing to St. Mary's Hall undergoing painting and repairs, and on every Sunday afternoon numbers have been disappointed of admission. Next Sunday, however, St. Mary's Hall will be re-opened, having undergone a remarkable improvement; and the evangelistic work will, by God's blessing, be carried on continuously there. The Rev. Thain Davidson, the present lessee of the building on Sundays, has arranged with the Rev. Dr. Henry Allon to give the use of it on Sunday mornings and evenings to the congregation of Union Chapel, Islington, whilst their place of worship is re-building; this arrangement to commence with the first week in August. As, however, Dr. Allon's congregation meet at the usual hours of public worship, the evangelistic services will not be interfered with. The re-opening services on Sunday will be conducted in the afternoon by the Rev. J. H. Wilson, and in the evening by the Rev. Thain Davidson.

THE GREAT DELIVERER.

ADDRESS BY MR. D. L. MOODY AT CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL.

"Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?" (Isa. xlix. 24.)

If you will turn over to the 4th chapter of Luke, you will find that verse that I have quoted so often since I have been here—the 18th verse. If you are not well acquainted with it, you ought to be, for it tells us the seven things that Christ came to do. One of them is to deliver the captives. He did not come to show us his eloquence, to preach great sermons, or to speak of the greatness of man. The devil has preached that very well for the last 6,000 years. He did not come to preach about any of those institutions we hear so much of. He did not come to preach science or literature, but to preach deliverance to the captives. If everyone here would get their eyes off everything else, and fix them on this one thought, that the Son of God left heaven and came down to this world to deliver the captives; if they would stop trying to get the victory over the flesh and the world, and flee right to Christ, this would be a glorious night. And the quicker men and women who have been taken captives by Satan learn this lesson, the better it will be for them. Of course a man will not come to Christ until he learns this lesson. There is not a man or woman in all London who has not been taken captive by Satan. Some have been delivered; others are still under his power. Every man who has not been saved is under the power of the devil; and the worst of it is, that those whom he has taken captive do not know it.

There is not a man or woman here, out of Christ, but is really a slave to Satan. He holds them by some besetting sin. Some are held by one sin, some by another, but Satan has got them all bound. I do not know how many people have come into the inquiry-rooms, night after night, and told me that for many years they have been bound by the power of the evil one. If you will but take the text to-night, you need not wait until the second meeting before you get liberty. You can be set free this minute, because He came to deliver the lawful captives. Do you think He is not able to deliver every man and woman here? What we want is to know that we are captives, and then to bring our sins to Him, without attempting to put them away ourselves.

I have met with quite a number of men—I suppose there are hundreds here—who are slaves to the habit of swearing. Only the other night a man said he had tried many a time to stop swearing, but the more he tried the worse he swore. Well, I can sympathize with that man, for I used to be a slave to that terrible habit. If I tried once, I tried a hundred times to stop, but I always failed. At last I gave it up; I thought there was no use in trying any more. But when I gave myself up as lost, and came to God for mercy,—that very night He snapped the fetters, and set my soul free, I found that Christ was able to deliver me from that awful sin.

Another class of people are troubled with a bad temper. There are a great many who would shrink from the sin of swearing—they would not swear for all the world; but they have got terrible tempers. They try to control them, but they cannot keep them in their place. They have tried not to get angry, or say things that caused themselves and their friends a good deal of pain. My friends, Christ will give you victory over your temper; He came to deliver you from that very sin and every other sin you can conceive of. There is not one in the whole catalogue but Christ can give you victory over, if you only come to Him; I do not care how great it is. The Son of Man came to deliver the lawful captive.

There was a lady in our country greatly troubled with her temper. If her servants did anything that displeased her, she would get angry and would scold them for it. Then she would be ashamed of herself. She resolved she would control her temper, but her resolutions were broken about as quickly as she made them. She kept resolving and trying, and resolving and trying, until at last she got discouraged. It was of no use, she thought.

She was out one day with some Christian friends, and she told them what a struggle she had, and that she had become utterly discouraged. A lady friend said to her, "Did you ever think of allowing Christ to keep your temper for you?" "No, I never thought of that." "But He is able to do it; He has kept mine for a good many years." It was as if a light from heaven had flashed into her soul. "Why," she said, "of course Christ is able to keep my temper. I am not able to keep it, for I have tried and failed." She got hold of the truth that Christ was able to do the work, and the captive was set free. As she went along, it seemed as if she floated through the air. When she got home, she found that the servant had tripped, and destroyed something that was very valuable. Her old temper rose up. She stepped into another room and said, "Dear Jesus, keep my temper." She came out with a smile, and spoke so kindly to the servant that it quite broke her down. It was so unlike her mistress. And Christ has been able to keep her ever since. Let me say to any of you who are troubled with this sin, that Christ came to deliver you from it.

I need not go through the catalogue; there are a great many sins by which men and women are led captive. Let us put them all into one bundle, and say that Christ is able to deliver us from every one.

Here is some one, perhaps, who is full of pride. Bring it right to Christ and ask Him to take care of it for you, and He will do it. He is mighty to save, able to deliver unto the utmost.

I remember when I was first awakened, the thing that stood in my way (I was in business) was that I thought I could not sell goods without misrepresenting them. And I have had a good many letters from clerks saying that that stood in their way—that they could not get on, in plain English, without lying. The first time I ever went to the inquiry-room I told the minister who spoke to me that it was this necessity, as I thought, of lying in business that troubled me. He left me in horror and went right off. I suppose he thought there was no hope for me. And many men think that they cannot carry on business without telling downright lies. That is the snare of the devil. May God deliver you from it to-night. When I made up my mind that I would come to Christ, though I should lose my situation and everything else, I found I had been deceived by the devil all these months. I got on in business a good deal better afterwards than I had done before. Don't you go away with that terrible delusion, that you cannot succeed in business without lying. It is a good deal better for you to be right with God, than He will take care of you. He will stand by you in the time of trouble if you stand up on his side; He will never leave you. We want a Christianity that we can carry into daily life. If a man is not a better business man for being a Christian, I doubt his Christianity. If he is not more consistent in his daily walk, if Christ has not delivered him from doing mean, contemptible things, from a mean, contemptible temper, and from the mean habit of misrepresenting things, then he has not got the Christ of the Bible. He was without guile; and if we have got the Spirit of Christ, we must put on Christ.

There is another vice that a great many people think there is no deliverance from, and that is strong drink. One thing that made me take this subject to-night was that I met a lady last night in the inquiry-room who was under the influence of liquor. If ever I mourned over any person it was over this lady,—an educated, accomplished lady, yet she was under the influence of strong drink. And she seemed to think that there was no deliverance. She says she has resolved that she won't drink, but her will is so weak that she cannot resist. If she is here to-night I hope she will not be discouraged. Let me tell her that Christ is able to give her the victory. It was when we were without strength that Christ died for us. He can turn your appetite and give you victory over the infernal cup if you come to Him for strength. No doubt there are many here who have resolved to give up the drink; they have tried and failed, and tried and failed. Let me say, my friends, that if you will give up trying, and flee right to Christ and say, "Lord Jesus, keep this appetite of mine; hold me with Thy mighty power," He will do it. He has got the power. If He could speak a world into existence, surely He can save the poor drunkard. He can save the weakest and most abandoned in all London. Nothing is too hard for the Lord. Thank God! there is a Saviour who is mighty to save. He can give that poor woman power to hurl the infernal cup from her. "Oh Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thine help." When will we learn the lesson that our help is in another, and not in ourselves? When will we learn to get done trying to fight with the devil?—we are no match for him. That old dragon from hell, as he is called—why, we cannot meet him. A little child might as well try to meet a lion, as for us to meet the lion of hell. But, thank God! we have an elder brother who is able to conquer him. He met him at Calvary. There was a battle fought there, and when Jesus cried, "It is finished," it was the shout of victory. He had overcome the lion of hell. And if I flee to Him I am able to get the victory. I have heard of a little boy who was coming home from school, and a bigger boy wanted to fight with him. But the little boy said, "You stay till I get my big brother." He went for his big brother, and away went the other boy. We are no match for Satan; let us not attempt to fight him, but let us go to our elder brother, the Lord Jesus Christ, and He will give us power. He can deliver the lawful captive. May God deliver every poor captive here to-night. I suppose there is not a Christian man here but knows a great many witnesses that he could call up from those who have been slaves to drink, but have been saved by the Lord Jesus Christ. Did you ever hear of a man who came to Christ,—who threw himself right into Christ's arms, but He was able to deliver him? He can deliver from the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, from every sin, I don't care what it is. He is able to save to the utmost. What we want is to bring our sins straight to Him and ask Him to deliver us.

There was a young man came into our Association in Chicago, a poor, miserable, drunken soldier, who had left his right arm on the battle-field. He had gambled all he could get hold of, and I thought he was beyond reach. He came into our Association and wanted to know if we could get anything for him to do. A friend of mine spoke somewhat crossly to him, and after he had gone out, his conscience smote him, and he thought "Perhaps I might have done him some good." He ran out after him, and, putting his hand on his shoulder, he asked him to come back. He talked to him very kindly, and asked him to come to the meeting that night. The man came, and, to make a long story short, that act of my friend in putting his hand on his shoulder touched his heart, and the man became a Christian. I thought he was about the roughest diamond I ever did see, when he was first converted, but now he is one of the most eminent Christian workers in all America. For the past six or seven years he has been one of the most successful laymen in our country. He was one of the most abandoned wretches you could imagine; his father, and mother, and family had cast him off, and he was a poor, miserable, worthless, drunken gambler. But now he is one of the brightest lights in all America.

I need not enumerate cases. I suppose London is full of them; I see them all round me here now,—men who have been saved by the grace of God. What further testimony do we need? Is it necessary to try and prove that Christ is able to save every one here? I can imagine some of you say, "But my case is a very peculiar one." Well, we have got a very peculiar Saviour. I hardly ever saw a person but seemed to think that their case was more peculiar than that of anyone else. Like a good many of the towns we have been to: we have hardly ever gone to a place but they have said it was a most peculiar place. It was so at Liverpool, and Manchester, and Edinburgh; and when we came to London, they said London was so different from any other part of the world. But I find human nature is just the same here as anywhere else,—poor, miserable, lost humanity that needs a Saviour as much as in any other place. It is not a change of circumstances that men want; it is a risen Christ, and if they have got Christ in them they can overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil.

Now, my friends, bear in mind that Christ came just to deliver the captives, and if there is one here whom Satan has led astray and taken captive, let me say that Christ came expressly to deliver you. Will you limit the power of the Holy One of Israel? Will you say He has not got power to deliver you, that He cannot snap the fetters that are binding you, and set your captive soul free? If you say that, it is because you do not know Him, and do not believe his word; He is able to deliver every captive in Camberwell Hall, and if any of you go out without being delivered, it will be no one's fault but your own.

There is a little parable I once heard, I think from the lips of Mr. Spurgeon. A tyrant once ordered one of his subjects into his presence, and told him to go and make a chain of a certain length. He gave him no money to buy the material, but ordered him to make the chain. The man toiled and toiled, and after awhile he came, bringing the chain with him into the presence of the Emperor. He ordered him to go and make it twice the length. The man came again, and he was again ordered to make it longer. The man toiled and worked, and after long hard months, at last he brought it in. When he had done so, the Emperor told some of his subjects to take the man and bind him hand and foot with the chain he had made, and cast him into prison. That is just what the devil is doing with every sinner, making you forge your own chain; and by-and-by he will have you cast into the prison-house of hell. But if you come to Christ to-night, He will snap the fetters asunder. The devil has got no power to bind you against the power of Christ. But do not think you can deliver yourselves, and do not go away with the delusion that you are not being taken captive by Satan. Many do not believe they are under his power. Suppose to-morrow morning, when you get up, you say, "I am going through this day without committing sin." See if you get through it! Not one of you could live one day without sin, and God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Therefore no one here ought to say again, if they have said so before, that Satan has not taken them captive. You are already captive. And I come with the glad tidings that Christ can set you free.

In our war there was a military prison at Richmond, and there were a great many of our Union soldiers who were taken by the rebel army and put in there. When the Southern States were suffering for want of bread, many of these soldiers starved for lack of food. When we heard the news, you may imagine our distress at the thought of our own brothers being taken captive and dying there for want of food. At last the lines were broken, and the Union army went marching into Richmond. There was the prison where hundreds of them were dying, in a strange land, away from father and mother, away from home and from loved ones, and buried by those who did not love them or care for them. All at once they heard the tramp of a coming army, as it came along down those streets, and in a few minutes those iron doors were unlocked, those gates were thrown open, and these men were proclaimed to be free. They came out with joy; their liberators had come. I bring you good news to-night—you that have been taken captive by the devil; you that are in the prison-house of Satan. Here is One who is mighty to save. Do you want to be free? Flee right to Him, and this very minute He will speak the word of power; the fetters will fall off, and you shall go free. He is able to save to the utmost.

When Chicago was burnt up, there were a hundred thousand people on those Western prairies. We were very hungry, and it looked dark for twenty-four hours. All our telegraph-wires were burnt; our newspapers were burnt, and we could not hear from the outside world. There we were with our wives and children, and the first news we got was a despatch posted up, "Help is coming." I saw men who before were worth millions, and who had lost all in the fire, yet they did not shed a tear. But when they read this despatch, they could not keep back the tears. We wept for joy. We needed help, we were in ruins, and when help came we received it gladly. Poor sinner, you are in ruins; you need help; you cannot save yourself; your friends, or your ministers, cannot save you: I come to tell you that Christ can save you. If there is one here who really wants to be saved, receive Him as your liberator to-night. The God who delivered Israel from the hand of Pharaoh, is He not able to deliver a poor sinner from the grasp of Satan?

Some of you say, "What am I to do?" I will tell you. It is the simplest thing you ever did. Come right to Christ just as you are. A man said to a minister in the North of England, "I feel as if I was chained." "Well, come along, chains and all." My friend, you need not wait another minute. God will break the chains for you. You cannot break them; Satan has got you bound hand and foot, and you need not try. Come to Christ and He will do it. Did you ever hear of anyone coming whom He did not receive? Did you ministers ever know of one? ("No;" "No.") Of course not; you never heard or read of such a case. "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." You could not have a better illustration than that of the prodigal son in the 11th chapter of Luke. He came to his father just as he was. He did not stop till he had got some shoes and clothes. If he had he would never have come, for he could not get any. He was half-starved, and he came just as he was. So with you, poor sinner! If you could get rid of one sin you would not need a Saviour. But it is because you cannot do this that you need a Saviour; therefore come just as you are, and come now. May God bring home the wanderers to-night.

EPSOM MISSION.—We are sorry to learn that, in consequence of Miss Alexander and family having to leave Epsom, the Mission that has been carried on here for some years will be closed in September next. Mr. Browne, who has laboured with indefatigable zeal as town missionary there for seven or eight years past, will then be open to an engagement in similar work in some other part of the vineyard.

THE GEORGE-YARD (WHITECHAPEL) MISSION.—The admirable work which has been carried on in one of the worst districts of London for something like twenty-one years, under the energetic guidance and personal supervision of Mr. George Holland, received, last Friday evening, an augmentation of no inconsiderable importance. This was the formal opening, under the new phase of a comfortable Refuge for Houseless Girls, of the building notorious for considerably more than a century under the name of "The Black Horse," or more familiarly, in its immediate locality, as the "Cadgers' Motel." The magistrates, owing to the representations repeatedly made to them of its condition, refused some six months since to renew the licence, and notice having been given of a new application in its behalf, the house was purchased out of the funds of the Mission, and rapidly fitted up for its present purpose. A meeting, preceded by a tea to about two hundred persons, was held in the large room of the George-yard Ragged Schools, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, who, for his kindly personal interest in the many features of the Mission, is well known in the neighbourhood. He delivered a short address, impressing upon those engaged in assisting Mr. Holland the nobleness and magnitude of the purpose for which they were all striving, which, indeed, was nothing less than plunging into the darkness to bring to light souls sunk in the depths of neglect, misery, and iniquity. In doing this they performed a far more honourable, though in the eyes of the world a more lowly, task than many of those who figured in pulpits and on platforms under the full gaze of the great metropolis. The happy influence which had been wrought amid the densely populated and poverty-stricken purlieus of London since the dawn of the great Ragged School movement, thirty years ago, was simply incalculable. And of the many steps which had been taken in George-yard, few had furnished better matter for congratulation than the closing of the detestable den of vice, the conversion of which they were then celebrating. The room throughout the meeting was well filled, chiefly by persons receiving benefit in some way or other from the mission. His lordship's address was succeeded by several others, and hymns—chiefly from Mr. Sankey's collection—were sung from time to time in excellent tune. Without fully enumerating the branches of work carried on in connexion with the institution, it may be stated that among them are Sunday, Ragged, and evening schools, lodging-houses, a nursery for very young children, indoor and outdoor religious services, temperance meetings, and visits organised for the rescue of unfortunate women and girls. There are no fewer than 100 voluntary besides many paid workers, and it is gratifying to find persons thus helping the Mission who have themselves been rescued by its aid.—Daily News.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

On the first afternoon of the Conference, a large gathering of the Children's Special Service Mission friends met in Room No. 4 of the Conference Hall to hear some account of the Lord's work amongst the children. The chair was taken by the Rev. G. Savage, of Bexley Heath.

The Rev. G. H. KIRWOOD, Vicar of St. Martin's, Hereford, gave an account of Mr. Spiers's visit to that city last November. Two Children's Christian Associations have been formed at Hereford as the result of the special services. Several of the principal boarding-schools in the city are now opened with prayer and singing. The Sunday schools have been revived, and many have had the number of their scholars increased.

The CHAIRMAN mentioned that the Rev. Sholto Douglas, Vicar of All Saints, Derby, had said that the mission services for adults which had been so largely blessed in that town arose out of the success of the children's services there.

The Rev. T. H. BROCKLEHURST spoke of his knowledge of early conversions, and the many evidences that children of very tender years understand the blessed truth of substitution, and that they also realize God's hatred of sin.

Mr. SPIERS then very earnestly addressed the many children present, saying—"Although it is a meeting to talk about the work, there is no reason why some children should not be saved this afternoon."

The Rev. H. TROTTER told of the great results of Mr. Spiers's visit to Sheffield. Many who had been sceptical became satisfied of the reality of the work, and joined in it heartily.

The eighth Report of the Mission will shortly be ready, and may be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, Mr. R. Westall, 309, Essex-road, Islington, N.; Mr. T. B. Bishop, 71, Thistle-grove, West Brompton, S.W.

THE LORD'S WORK AMONG THE YOUNG MEN.

A meeting to consider the best means of carrying on this work was held on the Friday afternoon, under "The Mulberry Tree," at which Mr. Joseph Weatherly presided.

After an opening prayer, the subject was introduced by the Chairman, who called attention to the variety of means now used to reach young men of all classes, and the willingness to listen to the Gospel now manifested by them, and illustrated this by a case which had lately come under his own notice. In considering the work particularly among young men of the upper classes, he referred to the meetings which have been held from time to time in gentlemen's houses in the West-end for Gospel addresses; and as the Lord had blessed that work, it had occurred to him that an extension of it might be carried on during the summer months, if gentlemen in possession of private gardens in the suburbs would invite young men to meet together there for the same purpose.

Mr. FAIRFULL, of Oxford, late of New York, who has had much experience in the Young Men's Christian Association there, described what was being done by the Association with which he had been connected in New York to bring young men under the influence of the Gospel. Among other means of innocent amusement, a gymnasium was provided, and he considered that by joining in athletics young men would have greater influence with their companions in leading them to Christ. As an illustration of this, he believed that one reason why a much greater work had been lately carried on among the undergraduates of Cambridge than of Oxford was, that in the former university Christian young men did not feel compelled to keep aloof from rowing and other athletic sports, as was the case in the sister University of Oxford.

Mr. HENRY DRUMMOND spoke as a man of one idea; that idea was "young men's meetings." He advised all young men who were present from the provinces to establish young men's meetings in the towns and villages in which they lived; he thought no place ought to be without such a meeting. He described the work among the young men of Liverpool, and stated that very night there would be from forty to fifty meetings of the kind in that town, and he had no doubt they were doing an immense work. He then gave an interesting account of the young men's meeting held in connection with a Presbyterian church, near London, at which he had been present, and the surprise shown by the young men at seeing each other there. He made an earnest appeal to those present to aim at being manly Christians, instead of exhibiting the sickly sentimentality which we sometimes see.

Mr. W. B. CULLIS, of Philadelphia, spoke to the importance of those engaged in leading others to Christ studying "the art of putting things."

After a few words from Mr. Edward Trotter, Mr. G. H. Somerset Gardner, and Pasteur Jean Nicolet, of Chênée, near Liege, in Belgium,

Professor GLADSTONE spoke as to the possibility of getting young men into private houses, and referred to his own experience of a Bible class held in his own home for several years, and believed there would be very little difficulty in carrying out Mr. Weatherly's idea of garden parties for Gospel addresses among young men of the upper classes.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the Chairman answered questions which by his request had been sent up on slips of paper. In answer to the question, "How are the young men of the labouring classes of London to be reached?" he said that young men of that class could be reached much more easily than many imagined; for fifteen years he had himself had a Bible class of such, and he could look upon the time thus spent as among the happiest of his life. The meeting was closed with prayer by the Rev. George Savage.

Among the questions that were sent up was one as to the possibility of getting up similar meetings for young women. The Chairman stated that there were young women's Christian associations established in various parts of London, of which the Hon. Mrs. Kinnaird was lady president; further information could be obtained by application to Miss Weitbrecht, Young Women's Christian Association, 19a, Great Portland-street, W.

THE LITTLE BOYS' HOME AT FARNINGHAM.

THE annual summer fête of this most interesting and valuable institution took place on Saturday last. A party of about 400 ladies and gentlemen went down by special train, and the weather being fine, a delightful day was spent. The first gathering took place on the arrival of the guests in the chapel in the grounds, where an address was given by the Rev. J. C. Harrison, of Camden Town, in which he remarked that we take so little heed of little things because we are so little. Only great men comprehend the importance of little things. He specially applied this to little boys, for "it is not the will of our Father in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish." An examination followed of the infant class in Gospel history, as also later in the day of the elder boys in Scripture history and mental arithmetic. The answers, especially of one boy, drew from the Rev.—Wilson expressions of surprise, proving as they did not only that events had been remembered, but their significance understood. The examination in mental arithmetic, conducted by one of the pupil teachers, quite astounded the audience by the immediate replies given to intricate calculations.

Lord Hampton presided at the luncheon, and said, in the course of his appeal for increased support to the Home, he did not think anything could be more impressive or touching than the sight of the 300 boys who had been brought to that institution from wretchedness, immorality, and vice—rescued from such a life to be reared to habits of industry and virtue, and, it was hoped, to enjoy prosperity and happiness. One of the most striking features of this country was the awful contrast between the extreme of wealth and the extreme of poverty. England never was so wealthy as now; and he was afraid he did not exaggerate when he said that the depths of poverty were deeper than ever. Mr. W. H. Willans, treasurer, mentioned that the charity was in debt to the amount of £3500. Her Royal Highness the Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, accompanied by the Duke of Teck, subsequently arrived on the ground. In the chapel her Royal Highness heard the boys sing and examined in Scripture and mental arithmetic, after which she presented the prizes to the successful boys. Lord Hampton, on behalf of the friends of the Home, expressed the warmest appreciation of her great kindness in paying the visit, and the Duke of Teck, in response, referred to the pleasure which the visit gave to the Duchess and himself. The Royal party inspected several of the homes afterwards, and was present in the marquee whilst the boys were at tea.

CHELTENHAM YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The above Association was opened on April 30, after having been laid before the Lord specially for more than six months. From the commencement, Bible classes have been held at eight o'clock each week-day evening, and on Sunday afternoon. Remarkable blessing has attended these classes, in answer to the prayers of the believers' meeting, which takes place each evening one hour before.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON,
NOON MEETINGS, VICTORIA THEATRE,

TUESDAY, JULY 6.

TO-DAY'S meeting was of very varied and absorbing interest.

Mr. Denny presented 254 requests for prayer for relations, friends, and places, including thirty by persons for themselves. Among those specified were:—"For a Christian youth who is suffering great persecution from his relations on account of his religion"; "for a man over eighty years old, whose only pleasure is in accumulating wealth"; "for the restoration of Mr. Pearsall Smith, and that his wife may be sustained."

Mr. Moody's address was on "Obedience." He showed how this was the rock on which man originally fell, and it was by obedience only that man was restored. He contrasted the two Sauls of the Bible. The Saul of the Old Testament was disobedient to God's command, and he lost his crown, his kingdom, his family, the friendship and counsel of Samuel, God's favour, and, at last, his life. The Saul of the New Testament, on the other hand, by obedience, gained more than the disobedient Saul ever lost. What a happy city London would be if everyone in it would obey God! From the exclusion of Moses from the promised land, on account of his disobeying God's command, he read a solemn lesson to Christians to beware of this sin of disobedience, and also addressed some words of warning to parents concerning the effects on their children of neglecting to train them to obey God's commands.

A young convert, on the platform, gave some testimony that was very indistinctly heard by the audience. Mr. Sankey prayed that he might have courage to confess Christ and work for Him. He also offered prayer for friends who had come to the meetings from the country.

Rev. T. Richardson read a letter from a man who was converted in Bow-road Hall a fortnight ago, and who was now rejoicing in the conversion of his wife through his instrumentality. Mr. Richardson had read the letter, he said, at his own church last Sunday, and this was the means of stirring up one of his congregation to speak to his wife about salvation, which ended also in her conversion. The husband himself related the circumstance to Mr. Richardson on Sunday evening, at the after-meeting, and there, before the assembled congregation, the family altar in that household was set up. Mr. Richardson urged converted husbands to speak to their wives. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house."

A gentleman requested special prayer for India and for the Lodianna Mission. He said the proportion of labourers in that vast country was something like what it would be if we had eight foreigners labouring for the conversion of London. At Mr. Moody's request, silent prayer was offered for India.

Dr. Ziemann, of Manchester, had a very thrilling story to tell of the wonderful workings of God in Manchester during the past six months. An outline of it will be found in our issue of last week, and we only give, therefore, some of the incidents connected with this encouraging development of evangelistic work in Manchester.

In speaking of the difficulties encountered in getting a site for the tent, he said that, when all their efforts had failed, they laid the matter before the Lord at one of the noon prayer-meetings. That afternoon they received a letter from some solicitors, stating that if a large sum of money were given they might get a temporary site. Dr. Ziemann sent a messenger to the solicitors, with instructions to get the ground at the best possible terms. He returned with the joyful tidings that he had got a site. When he went to the solicitors, the owner of the ground happened to be there. Hearing what the messenger said, he asked what was to be done with the tent. The reply was given that it was wanted for meetings. Revival meetings? Yes. The owner rejoined that he had just come from London, where he had attended Mr. Moody's meetings, and had liked them very much. He added, "If you are going to have Moody's meetings, you are quite welcome to the place without money and without price. I have another place in the town; if you like, you can have it too, and I will level it without any expense." Last Sunday the tent was opened, and not only was it crowded three times, but hundreds of people could not get in, and there were a great many inquirers.

Dr. Ziemann also told the following striking circumstance. One evening, some months ago, he was going to the meeting in the Museum, when he saw a man standing at the door, apparently hesitating as to whether he should enter. He was invited in, and took his seat in a corner. Dr. Ziemann was guided to speak about men professing themselves to be wise and becoming fools. He had been visiting the prison, and if anyone wanted to know the truth of these words, let them go to the prison, and ask of those who are there. The man in the corner burst out, "That's true; that's true!" At first it was thought he was going to make a disturbance, but they soon saw he was in earnest. The fact was, he had come that evening direct from Millbank, where he had been in prison seven years. He had come to Manchester with his little bundle, and the Lord led him to that meeting, where he was converted that night. The returned convict became a son of God. Next morning he said he was going home to his mother, whom he had not seen for long years, and instead of taking with him his ticket of leave, he was going with his Bible to tell her he was now a saved and happy man. "Pray for the young men of Manchester," said Dr. Ziemann, as he sat down, and very hearty were the "Amens" that responded to his request.

Mr. Sankey sang, to gratify the wish of a little invalid girl who was present, "Knocking, knocking."

We wish we had space for a very beautiful incident related by Rev. Newman Hall, of a stray, starving lamb he found in his travels on the Westmoreland hills, and which he, after ineffectual attempts to find its mother, handed over to the tender care of the strong, stalwart farmer with whom he was staying. Some time after, on revisiting the place, he found the half-starved lamb had become one of the stoutest and fattest of the flock. His description of the lamb and its bleating voice, that seemed to say, "Pity me, help me, save me," was very touching, and the application of the story most appropriate.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7.

At the meeting this day, Mr. Sankey sang two fresh solos, one of them asking in the refrain, "Who is on the Lord's side?" and the other, a very sweet and soothing song, commencing—

"I need Thee every hour,
My gracious Lord,
No tender voice like Thine
Can peace afford."

Mr. Henry Varley gave the address from the story of the man with the withered hand whom Christ cured on the Sabbath day. Mr. Varley, in condemning the conduct of the Pharisees, who "watched" the Saviour that they might find occasion against Him, was very severe on those hearers who go to church or meeting, not to catch souls for Christ, but to catch some stray word of the preacher that might afford them the opportunity for criticism. He also dwelt on the power of Christ, as set forth in this passage, to give a present blessing to all who really feel their need and seek relief.

Mr. Paton gave some interesting extracts from letters, and the bulk of the second half-hour was spent in earnest prayer that the closing services of the Evangelists might be signally instrumental in the conversion of sinners.

THURSDAY, JULY 8.

Mr. Moody's address to-day was an exposition of the Christian life as portrayed in Scripture under the figure of water. He quoted a number of passages setting forth the fullness of blessing treasured up in Christ, who is both the bread and the water of life. One reason why we do not get more of the water of life is because we do not thirst for it. It would be a good thing to have a meeting for dissatisfied Christians—dissatisfied, not with Christ, but with themselves.

Mr. Sankey spoke of having recently been up the Thames with some friends, and he noticed as the tide flowed in how it covered up a great many unseemly places, and when it was full how the water came up to the very brink of the land. There was the beautiful landscape to be seen, with the flowers along the shore, and the whole scene looked so sweet and lovely, I thought how impossible it would be for man ever to make this tide to flow in. So when the water of life flows into our hearts, how the things that are unseemly are covered up, and how it cleanses and beautifies our natures. He thanked God for the tide of blessing that had been flowing through the land and into the hearts of God's children. How many hearts had been flooded with God's love, and were to-day feeling how gracious the Lord is. Do not let us try to make the tide flow, but let us lie low at the feet of Jesus, and say, "Come, Lord Jesus, into this heart of mine." Mr. Sankey then sang one of his new hymns—

"It passeth knowledge, that dear love of Thine."

There is a certain stateliness and majesty in the melody, especially in the crescendo passage in the fourth line, that interprets well the reverential tone of the hymn.

FRIDAY, JULY 9.

The last meeting in this Theatre where the familiar voices of our brethren should be heard. The spacious building was crowded by twelve o'clock—stage, boxes, pit, upper circle, and gallery. We were reminded of the closing meeting at the Opera House. On the stage were a large number of those who have been prominent workers at these evangelistic services.

The meeting opened with the hymn, "Tell me the old, old story," one of the most precious, and, at the same time, one of the most popular in Mr. Sankey's collection.

Among the requests for prayer, classified and read by Mr. Denny, there were many of touching significance. A large list of requests for praise, for various blessings experienced through the services, were also presented.

Mr. Moody said that, when he first came to this country, they had a little meeting one day at twelve o'clock, at 165, Aldersgate-street, and he was led to take for his subject "The gift of the Holy Spirit." That subject had been agitating his mind for a number of years. He believed it was the privilege of every child of God to be filled with the Spirit; if they were not, it was their fault. If he should ask all to rise up in the meeting who were filled with the Spirit, he did not think any one would dare to stand up; they were all living beneath their privileges. In Matthew xv. 18 it says, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." A great many Christians were satisfied with the bare life they received at Calvary. That was the work of the Holy Ghost, but there was such a thing as receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost for service. He believed this gift the Church had lost sight of and mislaid. He quoted various passages to show further that the Apostles and early disciples received the gift of the Holy Ghost on several occasions, both before and after Christ's death. Many Christians, he said, seemed to think that they could receive power at one time that would last them all their life. But there was such a thing as a constant anointing. He believed it was right to pray that the Holy Ghost should come on us. The grace that God gave them in order to do his work in Liverpool did not suffice for the work in London. And if they were to attempt to go back to America, and work for God there on the grace God had given them here, they would very soon break down. If they were filled with the Spirit, there would be no room for the devil, for self, for pride, or darkness. It would be all light and peace and joy—the fruits of the Holy Ghost. May the prayer of every heart to-day be to be filled with the Holy Ghost. If we were filled with the Spirit, we would have a hundred times more influence in this dark world than we have. Instead of getting up and talking so that people were glad when we sat down, we would have something fresh to say. One hour's work would tell more than a whole day of service without the filling of the Spirit. He thought Christians would not lose much by going into the desert for a few days, and get there a fresh anointing for the work that lay before them. The Church wanted nothing so much as Holy Ghost power. Some people could not get on without having men's hands laid on them. If he was sure who were the undoubted successors of the Apostles, he might not object to having their hands laid on him; but they could all receive the Holy Ghost from the hands of Jesus Christ. Let us pray that the Holy Ghost may fill every one of us and qualify us for God's service. He engaged in very earnest prayer that thousands might be brought to Christ through their closing services, and thanked God for all the blessings and successful services of the past.

Mr. Sankey sang the appropriate hymn, "I need Thee every hour;" and followed in prayer.

Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow, quoted the verse, "To Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think." He said the showers that had brought this year's harvest to maturity would not do for next year. So it was with us in our Christian life; even if we have received the Holy Ghost, we must come to be filled with it again and again. That was the root of the whole matter. In the Old Testament we have some very remarkable lessons as to God's people needing constant renewal of strength. There was Jonathan, who, with his armour-bearer, could put a whole army to flight, and yet, when one man came out and challenged the army of Israel, Jonathan did not dare to meet him. And David himself, who slew a lion and gained victory over the giant of Gath, in the later years of his life was almost killed by a brother of Goliath's. He came upon him with his sword, and if it had not been for one of David's captains, he would have been killed by the brother of the giant he had slain. So we need fresh grace. Let us go back to the verse, "To Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think." Let us be ashamed of our little faith, and expectation. It would be an interesting study to look up all the places in the Bible where God's people asked for something and God gave them a great deal. The prodigal son was a notable instance. He wanted to be a servant, but there were the best robe, the ring, the shoes, the fatted calf—everything. "To Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think, to him be glory in the Church, world without end, amen."

After silent petition, Mr. Varley offered the closing prayer, and Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Victoria Theatre ended with the Doxology and the Benediction.

CAMBERWELL-GREEN HALL.

We find it difficult to realise that we are called upon to chronicle the closing services of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in this country. By their self-denying labours for the evangelization of our fellow-countrymen and women, they have endeared themselves to every honest, loving Christian heart, and their long stay of two years in our midst has almost made us look upon them as two of ourselves; we have well-nigh lost sight of the fact that they came to us from across the sea, and we have, as a consequence, not been disposed to dwell upon the other fact that they must needs return to their own kindred and their own land. We find it hard to use the language of Job, and say, "The Lord gave; the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord." But facts are stubborn things, however unwelcome they may be; and the fact that, before these lines are read, Messrs. Moody and Sankey's public labours in great Britain will have ended, only reminds us of the onward march of time, and the coming end of all things. Well, we suppose we must accept the inevitable, and in the midst of our sincere sorrow at being severed from those whose names have become, and will ever remain, household words in our mouths, and who have been used of the Lord to do such great things for us, we will seek to comfort ourselves with the thought that the parting is not a final one, and also with the blessed assurance that the Lord of the Harvest remains with us, however his servants may come and go. Still, no words of ours can tell the heart-felt sorrow that clouds this parting hour, and we will not seek to conceal it. When we have sometimes felt bodily weariness in the congenial task of attending so many meetings, and telling out to our readers the goodness of God as we have witnessed his saving power in the great congregations, day after day and week after week, we have been re-invigorated by the remembrance of how our American brethren have stood the strain of two years' incessant toil without the thought almost of personal rest or ease. What an example of persistent, devoted, loving service these friends have set us. It is one, unhappily, that we are slow to imitate. Would it were otherwise!

But we must cut short these reflections in order to give our readers some brief account of the services that have closed up the four months mission in London. As may be supposed, there has been intense anxiety shown to attend the services of the last week. Many of our country brethren and sisters having hoped against hope that Messrs. Moody and Sankey would pay their respective districts a visit, and having seen this hope flicker and vanish, as a last resource have come to London specially to attend the meetings. Many, if not most, have come just to see and hear our two friends; but we are assured that not a few of them have had the eyes of their understanding opened, and have seen Jesus as the Saviour they needed. We have heard of some who have come up from their homes with a heavy heart and sin-burdened conscience, and have returned to their homes justified and rejoicing in a Saviour's love and pardon. We hope there have been many such from among the crowds of strangers who have every evening found their way to Camberwell Hall.

It has been asserted that the meetings in the South have proved, to all appearance, as fruitful as in any other part of London. The last week has, we believe, sustained the promise of those that went before. Invariably at the close both of Mr. Moody's Bible readings and Gospel addresses, the searching power of the Word has been made manifest in large numbers who stood up for prayer, and afterwards flocked into the inquiry-rooms, to seek and receive counsel and direction from those who, having found Christ to be precious to them, could say, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good." We have heard of many promising and decided cases of conversion, but the Lord alone can register the number of those who have been saved at these closing week-day meetings by faith that is in Christ Jesus.

Time and space would fail us to tell of the deep impressions made by the singing of Mr. Sankey, and how hearts that were frozen and sealed against the Saviour's love have been melted into submission by some tender message of mercy wafted to them on the unseen wings of sweet song, the way being thus paved for the reception of the Gospel more fully delivered by the voice of the preacher. When the history of this movement comes to be written by competent hands, we doubt not full justice will be done to the part Mr. Sankey has, in God's good providence, been enabled to play in this most blessed work of pointing sinners to Christ. In his hymn-book he has left us a legacy, the value of which, we believe, will never be exhausted, as long as there is a single singing pilgrim left in this vale of shadow and of tears. During the closing days of the week, Mr. Sankey has afforded us the opportunity of hearing many songs till now unknown to the Christians of this land. Amongst those recently composed by himself, the one that has gained the firmest place in popular favour is, "I am Praying for You," and we think deservedly so. Mr. Sankey, we believe, has used it largely as a letter-leaflet, and we cannot think of a better. We hope this hymn, now popularized by his sweet melody, may speak for the Master to many a heart.

Mr. Moody's closing Bible-reading on Friday afternoon was on the word "Able," and specially suited to confirm the faith and courage of the young converts, though useful for all. Towards the end, Mr. Moody referred to the fact that it was his last Bible lecture in London, and thanked the people for coming out day after day. Nothing had encouraged him so much during the past two years as having the people come to those Bible readings. He had seen so many Christians with a better knowledge of Scripture than himself come, that he had wondered they came at all; but it had encouraged him to study the Word of God more. He had one request to make, one favour to ask—that they would pray God to bless them both, that they might know more and more of his love, and more and more of his blessed truth. He had been for two years constantly unable to study much, and he felt great leanness of soul. He felt as if he would like to go into the desert, and when he was gone he hoped they would pray for him. He did not know what they would have done if it had not been for the prayers of God's people; for if they had come to criticize, as some had come to do, the whole mission must have failed. Of one thing their friends in this country might rest assured, they would be praying for them; they had become very dear to each other. Let them pray God to increase their love for Him, and their passion for souls. He finally made a very affectionate appeal to all who were out of Christ to come to Him without delay. The whole meeting was deeply moved, and many shed tears as Mr. Moody spoke of their departure. A number rose to be prayed for, and afterwards were conversed with in the inquiry-rooms.

The evening address was on the Ark, and gave Mr. Moody another opportunity of entreating sinners to flee from the wrath to come, by taking refuge in the Ark of Safety—Christ Jesus.

The gentleman who offered the closing prayer committed our brethren to God's care while on their homeward voyage, and prayed that great blessing might attend their labours in their native land.

SUNDAY, JULY 11.—LAST DAY.

How shall we write of it? Fresh from the meeting in the evening, we feel how inadequate are human words to portray that most marvellous close of a no less marvellous season of revival throughout our land.

The doors for the morning service were opened at half-past six, and by seven o'clock the Hall was comfortably full. An hour yet intervened before the commencement of the service, and the time was profitably and pleasantly occupied with a service of song from the familiar book. About half-past seven Mr. Hodder announced that there were thousands outside, some of them from a great distance, and if the audience would kindly sit more closely, a few hundreds more might be got in. The request was good-naturedly complied with at once, and room made for a few more. For the great numbers who were unable to get admission, an overflow-meeting was held in the Presbyterian church close by, and was addressed by Dr. A. Bonar, of Glasgow.

Shortly before eight o'clock Mr. Sankey appeared, and delighted the audience with a few solos. Before singing "I am praying for you," he said he hoped in the days to come they would not forget to pray for Mr. Moody and himself when they were gone.

In consequence of the crowd at the gates, Mr. Moody could not gain an entrance, and had to be conveyed through a private house opening from the back upon the site of the building. This delayed the opening of the service till about ten minutes past eight o'clock—a thing altogether unusual at these gatherings, as one of the most noticeable features of them has been the punctuality observed by our brethren.

Mr. Sankey having sung "Only an Armour-bearer," the audience swelling out in the chorus, Mr. J. E. Mathieson offered very earnest prayer, making special reference to the occasion.

Mr. Moody then delivered his well-known address on "Daniel," beginning with the secret of his wonderful success, which he attributed to his being able to say "No" at the right moment. He sketched the eventful career of this man, "beloved of God," through the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Darius, showing how he was delivered from all the many snares laid for him by his enemies, because he was faithful to God and his commandments. The history of Daniel in the telling of it rous'd Mr. Moody's enthusiasm, which he succeeds in a large degree in imparting to the audience, and many thousands of hearts were stirred by this closing address to Christian workers. Before parting we sang with Mr. Sankey "Dare to be a Daniel."

The afternoon service for women was a deeply interesting one, both in itself and from the fact of its being the last of them. The Hall was crammed in every corner. The opening hymn was "Yet there is room," very appropriate to the occasion.

All through his mission in Great Britain, Mr. Moody has striven to make the Gospel so plain as to be understood by the meanest comprehension. He has avoided collateral issues, and eschewed theological discussions—which, we suppose, never yet saved a soul; but he has held to the proclamation of the good news of salvation through faith in a crucified and risen Saviour. One of his favourite texts has been the question of the gaoler, "What must I do to be saved?" and this he chose for his final gospel addresses to London audiences. Many people, he said, still disbelieved in sudden conversion, and he proceeded to draw from the treasury of Holy Scripture numerous illustrations to show that the new birth is, of necessity, an instantaneous act, and not a gradual change. He quoted the Ark, the salvation of Lot from Sodom, the preservation of the children of Israel in Egypt by sprinkling the blood on their doors, the cities of refuge, and others, as well as illustrations from history and from daily life. At the close he spoke, with much emotion, of how he had tried in all possible ways to allure sinners to Christ, and entreated those present not to go out of the building without receiving Christ as their Saviour. They might never hear his and Mr. Sankey's voice again on earth, but he hoped there would not be one missing at the last great meeting. Many rose in response to his pressing appeal at the close, and the inquiry-rooms were afterwards the scene of much earnest conversation and prayer with the crowds of anxious sisters. The evening meeting for men was almost filled before the last of the inquirers and workers had left the building.

The last meeting of all will, we think, be reckoned, by those who have attended the London meetings throughout, the best of all. It was as closely packed with men as could be: how many were left outside we cannot tell. A meeting for them was held in the Camberwell-green Hall. Mr. Sankey took his seat at the instrument about half an hour before the time, and while he was singing for Jesus to the eager crowd of listeners, Mr. Moody and a few friends were in the little waiting-room below, supplicating God for a Pentecostal blessing on this parting service. And their prayer was answered of a truth. We have not witnessed such a wondrous scene during any of the many gatherings these last four months; the only approach to it was one Sunday afternoon at a women's meeting in the Opera House.

Mr. Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, who, with others of Mr. Moody's American friends, were present to witness the crowning service of this mission, offered the opening prayer, and his words were a premonition of what was to follow.

Mr. Moody took for his subject, as in the afternoon, that all-important query, "What must I do to be saved?" and the bulk of his discourse was essentially a repetition of that delivered to the women. But the power and presence of the Holy Ghost to apply the spoken word was far more wonderfully manifest.

As he drew to a close, Mr. Moody became very earnest and urgent in his appeals to the vast and intensely interested audience to accept Christ. "Just let me pause here," he said; "ask yourselves whether you ought not to receive the Lord Jesus Christ now. Who is there in this assembly will receive the gift of God and be saved?" After a brief pause, a voice came from the left-hand gallery, somewhat feebly, "I will." It was speedily followed by others from all parts of the house. "Well," continued Mr. Moody, "Thank God for that. I am just passing round the cup of salvation; who else will take it?" "I will," "I will," "I will," "I will," "I will," came resounding on every hand. "That's right, my boy," replied the speaker to a little fellow down in front of him, whose "I will" came up to the platform with the rest. "Will the Christians keep praying. Men do not speak out like this unless God is at work. Who else will accept the gift?" Again came a perfect volume of "I wills." "Would it not be a glorious thing if every man here would take it to-night? Is there another?" "I will." "Another?" "I will." "That is right; speak out. If you are willing to have God's gift, just say so." Then there came a louder response from a manly voice in a distant part of the Hall, followed by the shrill tones of a little boy, and many other "I wills," came to our enraptured ears in close succession. They came so thick, we could not note them down.

And then Mr. Moody said: The time has come for us to close the two years and three weeks we have been trying to labour for Christ among you. This is the last time I shall have the unspeakable privilege of preaching the Gospel in this country at this time. I want to say that it has been the two best years of my life. ("Have another week, Mr. Moody," shouted a stentorian voice from the crowd below.) My friend, you can all be saved this night, if you will believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. If I stayed another week I do not know what more I could say. I have brought Christ before you; I have told you of his beauty. It is true I have done it with stammering tongue. I have never spoken of Him as I would like; but I have done the best I could. And now, in this closing hour, I want once more to press Him upon your acceptance. I do not want to close this meeting until I see you all safe in the ark, safe behind the walls of the city of refuge. How many are to-night willing to stand up before God and man, and say by that act that they will join us in our journey for heaven? You that are willing to take Christ now, would you just rise. (A mighty army of men rose to their feet at once.) "Why not three thousand? The God of Pentecost still lives." Numbers more stood, until one could scarce distinguish between those sitting and those standing. Then Mr. Moody led in prayer, with a faltering voice, often choking with suppressed emotion. He besought the power of the Holy Ghost to fall upon those who had risen and those who had not, and that great multitudes might be saved.

"And now," he said, "we will sing, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus.'" While it was being sung, the inquiry-rooms were filled with seeking ones, and our hearts were rejoiced to see many come tearfully, others calmly and trustfully, declaring their trust in Jesus as their Saviour and everlasting refuge. It was a season of ingathering never to be forgotten by those who were present, and was a fitting close to the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Great Britain.

CLOSING MEETING AT BOW-ROAD HALL.

It is good to be always zealously affected in a good cause, and it was really a brave farewell that the good people of the East accorded to the services at the Bow-road Hall. The place was comparatively full by 7.15, and thronged by the time of commencing. The choir sung as if they appreciated the importance of their last opportunity, and the heart and delicacy of the rendering have not been surpassed in any section of London. Then in the intervals rose the sweet weird notes of the Jubilee Singers, telling of the "Mansions of bliss," and of "peace" in the "valley of the shadow of death."

The solemnity of the occasion would have inspired a less sensitive and far-seeing man than the Rev. Hay Aitken, and we were more thankful than surprised at the thrilling address that he delivered on Luke xix. 37-44. He bade those who had been blessed of God, either personally or relatively, to join in the loud "Hosanna"; and called on all prepared to do so to "stand on their feet, and bless the Lord." A very large number responded, singing as they did so, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." It was a never-to-be-forgotten moment, and gave a slight idea of what the harvest shall be in the "sweet by-and-by." Then followed terribly weighty words on the "day of visitation" which has come to our land. The women's meeting was crowded with inquirers up to a late hour, and the last words heard in the hall were the thanksgivings of new-born souls, and the praises of grateful workers.

And thus closes the brief existence of this hall built in faith that God would fill it with his glory. He has done it, and to Him be the praise.

FAREWELL AND THANKSGIVING MEETING.

Not the least interesting of the long and wonderful series of meetings held in London in connexion with our beloved brethren Moody and Sankey was the farewell at Midmay Conference Hall on Monday afternoon. The area was crowded with ministers and laymen, and the three galleries with a mixed audience of ladies and gentlemen. Dr. Bonar's hymn "Rejoice and be glad, the Redeemer has come," was sung as the keynote. Then the Rev. C. D. Marston offered prayer; and Mr. Stone, chairman of the Central Committee, spoke out the thanks of himself and his brethren for the unremitting grace with which God has blessed this movement.

Mr. MOODY said we were met to give thanks to God, and not to honour men, and very emphatically laid it down that nothing should be said about the instruments.

Dr. ANDREW BONAR gave a deeply interesting address on the man who lay at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple, which we must reserve for our next. He then gave the most unqualified testimony to the wonderful results of the work in Glasgow. All the ministers are agreed that at least 7,000 have been added to the Church membership in that city. The results to the poorest of the people are manifest in the tent work every Sabbath-day.

Rev. R. C. BILLINGS said that it was premature to speak of the results of the work at the Agricultural Hall, and added that one of the most cheering has been the increased union of Christians.

The hymn "Only an armour-bearer" was now sung, and then

Rev. ARCHIBALD BROWN noted some of the features of the work: religious stagnation swept away; a longing desire to hear the Gospel created and developed; God has taught his people to get up early on Sunday morning to hear how to study the Bible; an intense desire for the conversion of souls; such prayers offered as we used not to hear; God has shown that the Gospel of Christ is the power to move the masses; the gauntlet thrown down by philosophy God has taken up, and we are seeing the fruits at the East-end.

Dr. DONALD FRASER bore testimony to the fruitfulness of the meetings at the Opera House, and dwelt specially on the necessity of now feeding the flock of God, and giving Bible instruction to the higher as well as the poorer classes.

Rev. T. RICHARDSON gave some most interesting statistics resulting from the meetings at the East-end; Rev. R. TAYLOR and Rev. Mr. FLINDT gave most thrilling accounts of the work in the South; and Rev. Mr. NEWTON added to what Mr. Billings had already said about the North of London.

Dr. JOHNSON rejoiced in this work as an open and public rebuke of scepticism; it shows the power of Christianity to save the souls of men, and has checked the flood of worldliness flowing in with the increasing wealth of the nation; it has shown the importance of lay operation in the work of the Lord; and he reported that in all sessions and assemblies of members of his own denomination this work was never referred to but with sympathy and interest.

"Rescue the perishing" was now sung, and Mr. Moody, with broken utterance, led in fervent and humble thanksgiving in prayer.

Rev. MARCUS RAMSFORD, dwelling on the greatness of the work, said that the masses had been more influenced than the ministers. He proceeded to tell a most graphic story of the way in which a coetermonger showed the Gospel to an inquiring comrade, and some cases which came within his own experience. This work is not to stop. Our dear brethren are going away, but God is not going away. Why should we not all be preachers of the Gospel—each man, and woman, and child—in his position? If God Almighty will just pour his Spirit upon us, we may have 10,000 Moodys and 10,000 Sankeys to welcome them when they came back among us.

Rev. J. P. CROWN said: While you meet, representing London, not only London, but the country also, is represented in this blessing on London. The Master is saying, "Thou shalt see greater things than these." If we can't be the Peters and preach great sermons, we may be the Andrews to bring Peters to Christ. The great want of the present day is the lifting up of a personal Christ. We want to be all Christs—Christ living in us. Live so that Christian must be written with a capital letter.

Rev. W. HAY CHAPMAN thanked God that these beloved brethren had been sustained through these long weeks of service; and added, that had there been still more union and sympathy among ministers, there would have been a still greater work.

Mr. H. VARLEY, feeling that there was a certain amount of weakness, yet believed there was a greater spirit of unity than ever before. He hoped the young converts would be cared for. Some old sheep don't believe in lambs; they never were lambs.

Rev. W. H. M. H. AITKEN had had some work to do in gleaming after the American brethren; had been preaching at the East-end with the Jubilee Singers as coadjutors, and the Hall, instead of being thinly attended, was crowded. He was pleased to observe how reverentially the Jubilee Singers entered into the work, and much blessing resulted from their singing. He repeated the opinion of a publican at Liverpool, that if Moody and Sankey had remained there five months, instead of one, half the public-houses in the town would have been closed, and mentioned some most cheering facts connected with his own congregation.

Mr. SMITHSON, the indefatigable secretary of Mr. Moody's Dublin Committee, gave very interesting facts with respect to Ireland.

After some emphatic testimony from Lord SHAFTESBURY, Mr. SANKEY sang "The ninety and nine," and the gathering shortly afterwards dispersed.

We very much regret that the hour of going to press prevents us from giving this week a full report of this most interesting meeting, but what we have omitted will be supplied in our next.

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK IN THE VICTORIA THEATRE.

The following are a few of the many gratifying facts that have come to light in connexion with Major Cole's labours at this theatre:—

One writes:—"I am the fifth one in our family, thank God who have found Christ at the meetings in Victoria Theatre. I was converted on Wednesday night from a sinful life, during the preaching. There remains one little boy, aged thirteen years, who has not accepted Christ, and will not admit that he would like to be one with us. Will you have prayer offered for him, and cause a whole family to rejoice in being saved?"

One of Mr. Spurgeon's workers called on a friend, a shop-keeper, and took him to Victoria Theatre. He prayed during the address that the Word might be blessed, and at the close of the first meeting he led him to the stage. Introducing him to a worker, the three were soon on their knees. It was difficult to tell which looked the most joyful, the young man who had found Christ, or the dear old man who led him there, as they went out arm-in-arm.

The evening that Major Cole spoke of Christ as the Saviour of the drunkard, one poor woman glanced at the speaker with interest, and then would look back at the door with fear. She was asked the cause of her uneasiness. She said, "If my husband caught me here he would kick me all the way home." She was urged to accept Christ then, and she went out with a light heart.

The same evening a woman said, "That's a lie; I can't be saved. I am drunk to-night, and I stole the money to buy the beer. Yes, I am a thief; I am the vilest woman in the 'New Out.'" She was spoken to kindly, and urged to come again. She has been regularly since that evening. Her face is pale for the want of stimulant, and with a modest face and calm voice she said to a worker one evening, "I have been kept from that hour. I am saved." All we can say is, Mark v. 15.

A sea-captain came up to Major Cole—"I am not a Christian, sir, but I was interested in your address. I believe you are in earnest, and I like the American people. I am acquainted with many of your cities. I ran the blockade several times during the war. At twenty-four years of age I commanded a ship." "Glad to meet you—Where are you going to anchor your bark? It can't stand many days; you are old. Where will it be, Captain, in heaven or hell?" "That's just what I would like to know." The next evening, with face full of faith, he said—"In heaven; Christ is pilot now!"

It was interesting to see a mother, with an infant in her arms, stand up for prayers, while tears of repentance coursed down her cheeks. It was still more joyful, at the second meeting, to see her resting as sweetly in the Word of God as her child on her arms.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF THE RECENT REVIVAL IN EDINBURGH.

(A Letter to a Friend.)

LAST year, when I came to Edinburgh, I was agreeably surprised to find that the glowing reports I had read of the "work" in Edinburgh were true, and in no way overstated. This year these favourable opinions have been confirmed, and I think I may best convey to you the information I have collected in answering the following queries, presuming, of course, the existence of what we may call a revival. The queries I shall attempt to answer are these:—

Is the revival movement still going on?

How are the professed converts standing?

Is there revived Christian life? and if so, how is it manifesting itself?

First, then, "Is the revival movement still going on?" My answer is, Yes. I have every reason to think so because the meetings are still being held. These meetings are the Mid-day Prayer-meeting, the Saturday and Sunday Evangelistic, Cottage, Hospital, and Open-air Services, Singing Bands, &c. I have seen and attended most of these. The mid-day meeting is both well attended and joyous. I have been to several, and see little difference from those of last year, excepting in attendance, which is a little smaller; but, on Saturday, not any less. Of the other meetings the same may be said, and I am justified, therefore, in saying that the revival is going on.

The same simple, stirring Gospel addresses are being delivered. I attended the Saturday night's Evangelistic Service. This service, being the outgrowth of the revival, may be taken as an index of its success, both past and present.

When I went in (some few minutes after the hour), the speaker, an intelligent doctor of medicine, was speaking from the text "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O Lord." It was an exceptionally good Gospel address, and delivered in the quiet, intelligent way of a believing, educated Christian. Its effect was quiet, but quite marvellous to me, and I thanked God from my heart for the address.

A minister then applied by anecdote and exhortation what had been said. A working-man illustrated it by his own conversion; and a mere youth further found an illustration in his case; and so on.

But meetings are not only being held, but conversions real and lasting are occurring. In all the churches, too, I find the fruits of the awakened zeal of ministers, and numbers are being reaped in the steady growth of the membership of these churches.

The second query I am to answer is, "How are the professed converts standing?"

True conversion is a change from a life of ignorance to one of knowledge; from indifference to trust and obedience; from acts of sinfulness to holy living. It may be well to test the converts by this text, and ask, "Is there in their conduct and conversation such evidence of these things as we may reasonably expect?"

This query has been prosecuted by such experienced examiners as Dr. Horatius Bonar, the Rev. J. H. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Professors Blaikie and Charteris, and the report of these gentlemen is "Yes,—unequivocally Yes!" I asked a person—most likely to know—if there were signs of a growth in grace on the part of those converts (because I attach importance to this point), and he told me this was remarkably apparent in the case of most. I was satisfied, therefore, that those conversions were not the result of mere excitement, but of adequate knowledge of the merits and requirements of the Saviour.

My third query to answer is—"Is there revived Christian life, and how is it manifesting itself?"

We know the existence of a thing by its manifestation. If, therefore, we see manifestations of revived Christian life, we know there is such. It is manifesting itself in more thorough consecration.

In listening to the prayers at Monday's Mid-day Prayer-meeting, in thinking over the tenor of the chairman's remarks, in following the drift of the anecdotes and illustrations, I was forcibly struck with the desire almost everywhere observable, of the anxiety to be more free from dominant evil, and more entirely used for God's glory. But it is not only desire that those Christians have; it is work. Just run over the engagements for the week; just see the daily notices in the Scotsman newspaper; just listen to the long list of requests for prayer for some special effort to rescue the perishing; and you will know whether or not it is merely desire or work that those Edinburgh Christians want. And they are not each stilly following out his own plan—working only as he or she thinks best—but meeting in conference, and agreeing upon the adoption of any or every suggestion calculated to accomplish the end they have in view. And they know how frail they are, and also where they can get the strength they need, and are found in large and steady numbers daily at the throne of grace in the Mid-day Prayer-meeting.

I leave this God-gifted city as a man who is leaving a genial party in a warm and cosy room steps into the cold, and alet, and blast of a drear November night.

But I am reminded by a friend, who is taking part in Mr. Moody's meetings in London, that the same God who is working so unmistakably in Edinburgh and London can do the same glorious things in South Shields. That He may do so is the prayer of your absent friend,

W. E. L.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS AT NASHVILLE.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Memphis paper, writing of the work of these evangelists at Nashville, on May 14, says:—

"Our audiences still keep up to the full capacity of our building, from 4,000 to 5,000 sittings, and at no time has there been so much interest as on last night, especially among young men. The whole city and vicinity are thoroughly aroused. There are many things in this work worthy of special note, and sacred to memory as testimony of the Spirit's power attending the faithful presentation of his Word, nor will they soon be forgotten by this people.

"First—the great unanimity of the churches. Considering our poor human selfishness, conceit, and weakness, our dwelling together in such unity is not the least among the great blessings of the meeting.

"Second—the quiet, yet profoundly solemn character of this interest, is a very marked feature, nothing wild or extravagant, but sober, earnest, and convincing.

"Third—the singing, with its definite object, Christ and salvation, will do much to raise the standard above the mere idea of entertainment. Singing for Christ, singing the Gospel. Oh! that all our choirs and singers could be baptized with this spirit. And the preaching or talking, as Mr. Whittle calls it, scriptural, plain, earnest, simple. It is the Gospel without the variation, full of love and faith—the Word of God in power and demonstration of the Spirit. The meetings for prayer and testimony have been very profitable; they break up old channels and grooves of habit, and give liberty, sympathy, and Christian communion.

"The Scripture-reading meetings will, I am sure, introduce a new era among us. We wonder now that we have not been having these always. They are great sources of comfort and edification.

"Fourth—the example of these brethren as unpretending, faithful, hard workers; whether in the great meeting, the inquiry-room, the sick-chamber, or the personal contact, in the crowd or on the street, it is the same pleasant, earnest work. They work constantly and rapidly, and keep everybody else at it. There is a joy in their work which is not only attractive and effective, but contagious, and disseminates itself everywhere.

"The meeting here is reaching all classes of men and women, and the extent of the good results will only be known in the Great Day. We regret much that Mr. Whittle and Mr. Bliss leave us early next week for Memphis, but will continue our meetings, and send you results as they develop in the future."

A CONSTANT READER writes:—"For several weeks I have made a point of reading your CHRISTIAN at the earliest convenience, and then posting it to some unconverted friend or stranger, having previously put a mark against any remark or quotation which may be suitable. But I always endeavour to select the families into which the paper has not been introduced. I write this thinking it may be a good suggestion to some who would otherwise destroy them, or at least accumulate them to no purpose, because the reading of THE CHRISTIAN may be used by the Spirit as an instrument in the conversion of souls."

FRANCE.

THE INUNDATION AT TOULOUSE.

MY DEAR BROTHERS.—More calamities still for poor France! Whilst we were gathered at the Tuesday evening prayer-meeting, June 22, at Mildmay, the river Garonne, fed by torrents coming down from the Pyrenees, had so swelled its banks as to threaten to engulf part of the town of Toulouse. That same night it overflowed, and the working population of the Faubourg of St. Cyprien (a large district on the west of the city, inhabited by more than 30,000) were all prisoners in their own houses. The river nearly surrounds this quarter; two iron bridges connecting it with the rest of the city were swept away, leaving only the stone bridge standing. On the Wednesday 6000 people were rescued and transported to the town; 1055 houses in the Faubourg and the Commune have fallen, and 1500 in the neighbourhood. Several thousand persons have perished, and the remainder are without home and without bread. The Marquis d'Hautpoul, one of the first who proceeded to the scene of the calamity with a gendarme in a boat to rescue the perishing, was swept away by the raging torrent, a victim to his noble intrepidity. The gendarme escaped.

We have been in great alarm about the safety of our sister Pauline, who lives and labours there, an active and devoted Bible-woman. (See the fifth report of "Bible Women in France," pp. 24—27.) To our great relief her letter and report for June came in this morning. She says:—

"June 24.—The town of Toulouse is in consternation under the weight of a terrible trial. The quarter of St. Cyprien has been invaded by the Garonne. It is a terrible inundation; there has been nothing like it for 200 years,—houses fallen, poor creatures perished in the waters. I endeavoured to get amongst the crowd. I spoke to them, to draw them to worship the true God; but no one was disposed to listen, all are terrified at what has happened; there is a general consternation, and everyone comes to look on at the sad spectacle. I mounted to a first floor, and the water is already three metres high (about ten feet).

"June 24.—I have with me a family of four persons who have escaped from the inundation, saved after passing the whole day yesterday in the water, and the night on the roof of a house, expecting every instant to be engulfed; but the Lord delivered them, and they got away in a boat. It is sad to hear these details and see how little they thought of God in the face of death. They are so cast down and troubled that nothing seems to touch them; they can only think of the danger they ran. I trust that it will lead them to seek salvation, and that my exhortations will not be in vain. This I ask of the Lord for them.

"June 25.—I found a woman who escaped with all her family. On seeing me, she took my hands, and said, 'Oh! what fear I had never to see you again. You said truly, it was not necessary to have to go to church to pray. I lifted my heart to God, so as I had never done before in my life, and I believe He heard me; for not only all my family are saved, but even all my goods. How powerful and faithful God is!' I sought to show her that she must turn away from her graven images and every false way, and worship God alone, and give Him her whole heart.

"June 26.—A poor, wretched man, blaspheming. He has lost a relation, a victim of the inundation. I read to him the ninth chapter of Ecclesiastes, to show that such calamities fall on the righteous and the wicked, and what is our condition by nature—'None just, not one.'

"June 28.—Went to-day amongst those whose houses had been inundated, and who have been spectators of such terrible things; but the impression has quickly passed away, and they are as indifferent as ever. Oh! how hard the natural heart is! I do not know what could move them, if these things do not; but they do not see the hand of God, and they are more wretched than ever; for they will not submit to his will, and learn that He is God alone, and will not permit us to serve two masters.

"June 29.—Read and prayed in the houses. I found souls who have been made serious by these events, for all had relations and friends in this Faubourg, consisting of 35,000 souls. I, too, had three cousins and their families, and a good number of others, who listened to the Word of Salvation and prayer with respect and attention. The ways of God are impenetrable!

"June 30.—On my round, heard a woman call to another and ask her where she was lodged since the inundation. She replied, 'We are with any who will take us in, but it is not living now, for those who have taken us in are poor.' 'The Curé here preached on Sunday that the devil had fallen upon that quarter because we were very wicked—we went neither to confession or on pilgrimage.' On hearing this, I spoke to them about the true confession, and the true way of serving God; and they said, 'We are indeed happy to hear such promises, for these men speak only of condemnation; how happy to be along with you, and to hear that if we believe in Jesus we shall be saved.'

"The soldiers work tremendously; they find many bodies under the ruins—men, women, children, animals. They now fear an epidemic. President MacMahon has come to see this heartrending spectacle: he has judged it desirable to blow up with cannon a wall which remained standing. The whole of this Faubourg of St. Cyprien is in ruins."

What a time and what a sphere for the ministry of Christ to these poor desolate hearts!

PARIS AND THE SOLDIERS.

Our soldiers' work has been going on quietly and successfully since last autumn. They come in to the meetings sometimes in fewer, sometimes in larger numbers, as there are continual changes. The Marines have left for Cochin China, and showed some emotion in parting with their English friends, and took care to take Testaments and good books with them for the voyage. Others left for Algiers. We had some anxiety about a young man who had received good at the meetings, but was kept away by his duties. We asked him if he was faithful, and he replied, "How can I fall away if He keeps me?" An elderly soldier, covered with decorations, but who cannot read, followed up the meetings for months, bringing young men with him who were under his influence. He could never tell us in clear theological terms how he was going to get to Heaven, but he told us almost in the words of Ruth: "Whither thou goest I will go; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Others, on going away to the North of France, promised to find out a place of worship where they could hear of God in their own tongue. One man leaving has got a situation, and tries to communicate to others the good he has received. Another became an artisan, and keeps to the meetings, saying, "I cannot live without them." So many came in to change their books, even in the midst of the meeting. A corporal would have a large-type Bible, and carried it with him, for fear some comrade should tear out a leaf to light his pipe. Many came through rain and sleet. I wonder if our English soldiers value their Bible as much as do some of our dear Catholic men. A dram-shop keeper is in high dudgeon with us because the men pass his shop, and they never go in, and says it is cruel to hurt a man so in his trade: the soldiers don't drink. Another dear man said he had never missed coming. He was first attracted by the happy look of the speakers and helpers, and then he was astonished at the beautiful things he heard, and Gospel truth made so plain. Some, on going home, ask for books and hymns to take home with them, and to do good in their dark villages, where perhaps the Gospel has never penetrated. I mention these facts of individual good to souls as they greatly cheer us. But will our friends permit me to say that we are at a very low ebb for funds, and that, in banishment here from the privileges of our own favoured land, we shall be thankful if they will remember us and our need?

Yours affectionately in Christ,

16, Rue de Tilsitt, Paris, July, 1875.

GEORGE PEARSE.

CALLED UP HIGHER.—It is with great regret we have received the following from a correspondent:—"Charles F. Parrin had been labouring as an evangelist in Melbourne and Tasmania for some time, where he was much used in bringing many to the Lord. In April last, when travelling through 'the bush,' with his wife, in Tasmania, preaching the Word, he got a severe wetting, bringing on rheumatic fever, which afterwards attacked his heart and lungs, and he gently fell asleep 7th May, at Hamilton, Tasmania, aged thirty-three years."

WHITFIELD TABERNACLE SABBATH-SCHOOLS, TABERNACLE-ROW.—Dear Sir,—Having greatly profited by the addresses of Mr. Moody, and knowing that he is doing an amount of good which cannot be estimated, I felt anxious to contribute my iota to the expenses of the meetings; and thinking that many of my fellow-teachers might wish to do the same, I drew up a list for subscriptions, and announced it in the school, and had a hearty response. There may be many other teachers who have not yet contributed, but who feel as we do. I would earnestly ask them to do as we have done, and the Sunday-school teachers of London might be enabled to subscribe nearly the amount required by the Committee.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A LITTLE BOY'S TROUBLE.

"After the 2000 children had gone away, and the last of the little groups composing the after-meeting had left, one little fellow, aged 13, came to me, and with his cap under his arm and his eyes brimming over with tears, he said, 'Please, sir, I haven't found Christ.'

"He soon poured out his heart as though it would break, and had he been an aged person I should have fancied he had committed some dreadful crime.

"What is it, my boy?"

"Oh, sir, I have a wicked soul; I have been very disobedient to my father and mother."

"Have you asked their forgiveness?"

"Oh yes, sir, they have forgiven me; but I want my sins to be taken away."

"I opened to him the mission of Jesus dying for sin, and the dear lad went forth, as he said, 'praising Jesus for dying for my sins.'—Extract from THE CHRISTIAN, June 3rd, 1875.

A FEW weeks ago, in the great hall at Bow,

A service was held for the young,
Where Scripture was read and prayers were said,
And hymns about Jesus were sung.

Two thousand attended, and all were commended
To give themselves up to the Lord,
To come to the Saviour, and let their behaviour
Be found to agree with His Word.

And after the preaching, exhorting, and teaching,
A great many lingered to pray;
To search in the truth for the Guide of their youth,
And to learn something more of the way.

And hearts that were saddened were sent away gladdened,
Rejoicing in pardoning Love;
And, led by the Spirit, they'll one day inherit
A crown in the mansions above.

But one little lad, with a face looking sad,
And his cap tucked under his arm,
Came close to my side, and bitterly cried,
Like one in a state of alarm.

With eyes full of tears scarce suiting his years,
"I haven't found Christ, sir," said he;
Then bursting with grief, he sobbed for relief,
While telling his trouble to me.

"I have disobeyed my parents," he said,
"My soul is so wicked, I know;"
The burden of sin was heavy within,
And Jesus he wanted to know.

I felt for the lad, and asked if he had Obtained their forgiveness at home:
"Oh yes, sir," said he, "and they have pardoned me";
And they had allowed him to come.

But he wanted his sin, so heavy within,
To be taken for ever away.
For this he was sighing, and sobbing, and crying,—
For this it was led him to stay.

I told him of Jesus, who came to release us
From all that was due unto sin;
Who suffered and bled, and died in our stead,
And gave us His righteousness in.

The truth was received; the lad he believed;
His sorrow was turned into joy;
He went away, praising the Love so amazing,
To die for the sins of a boy.

And now, dear children, let me ask
This question of you all—
Have you, like this dear boy, believed
On Jesus as your all?

If on the Lord you're resting now,
Then happy now are ye,
But happier then will be your joy
All through Eternity.

If not, then think about your end—
How soon that end may be.
Let each one ask, "Where shall I spend
My long Eternity?"

DEPARTURE OF MR. R. PEARSALL SMITH.

With much regret we have to state that Mr. Pearsall Smith's health is quite broken down. Mrs. Smith writes us that he is suffering from an attack of nervous prostration, similar to the one which made it necessary for him to leave America two years ago; it is his third attack, and each time before it has taken many months for him to recover, and nothing but entire rest is ever of any avail. Mrs. Smith adds that the doctor has forbidden writing, reading, or even talking, and commands the most absolute quiet. By the time this reaches our readers they will in all probability be on their way to America, as they were preparing to sail on the 14th, one great inducement for going so soon being that a relative of Mr. Smith's is returning in the same vessel. We know they will not lack the sympathy and prayer of their many friends.

MEETINGS FOR CONSECRATION AT KESWICK.

DEAR SIR,—Our "Union Meetings for the promotion of practical holiness" came to an end on Friday morning last. God has been mindful of us, and He has blessed us. Like results to those which we witnessed at Oxford and Brighton followed the teaching of the same truths of God's Word here also. We had been suddenly deprived of the advantage of the presence of our gifted friends, Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, but the Lord himself came to our help in such a way that over and over again I have heard it stated, even by friends who had attended the former conventions, that there was nothing left us to wish for. The Spirit of the Lord was mightily present, especially when Mr. Peplow was speaking on the subject of the great "promise of the Father," and of the possibility of being "filled with the Spirit." Many, many have left Keswick rejoicing in Christ as a present Saviour, and in the Holy Spirit's comfort and peace, and the influence of the meetings all around has been very great. I trust that a more detailed account will be furnished by friends who were present for your next week's number. Meantime, may I appeal through your columns to any such who took clear and full notes of any of the addresses to be so kind as to write them out and send them to Mrs. Compton, Hanford Vicarage, Stoke-upon-Trent, as that lady has kindly undertaken to draw up a report of the addresses for future publication.

Yours sincerely,
T. D. HARBORD BATTERSBY.
St. John's Parsonage, Keswick, July, 1875.

A prayer-meeting was held on Monday evening in the tent which was erected in a field close to the upper part of the town. This, through the thoughtful care of Mr. Robert Willson, of Broughton Grange, was well secured against the weather, and the floor boarded over. Indeed, all who attended the Conference are indebted to the same kind hand which provided so well for the comfort of those who were there in so many ways. At that prayer-meeting the presence of the Lord was felt by all, and the tone of encouragement given to all the subsequent gatherings.

For the three following days an early prayer-meeting was held at seven o'clock for an hour and a half. This was followed by a meeting for ladies, and two meetings for inquirers at a quarter before ten. The general meetings were held at twelve, at four, and at half-past seven. These, together with a ministers' meeting at a quarter past six, constituted the assemblies during the Conference, terminating on Friday, July 2, at the early prayer-meeting before breakfast.

Canon Battersby presided at the general and prayer meetings, assisted by the Revs. Messrs. Peplow and Thornton, and by Mr. Croome, of Stroud, and Mr. Henry F. Bowker, of London.

The subjects treated of were confession of sin and failure, the duty of a full surrender of all to Christ, of faith and trust in Him for all things, of fellowship with God, of entire obedience, of the power and willingness of Christ to give all blessings and to supply all need at all times, of effectual prayer, of the work of the Holy Ghost, of conflict with evil within and without, and, finally, of thanksgiving and praise. These subjects were treated from Scripture alone, with more or less fullness as time permitted. The tent, which will hold a thousand people, was generally well filled; in the evening it was crowded. It was a time of heart-searching, of much fervent prayer, and of great blessing to many.

Some came expecting a blessing—few went away without one. As in all cases where people meet to wait upon the Lord, the sense of his presence became more manifest as the days came and went. Few will forget that Thursday, when the Scriptural teaching as to the work and power of the Holy Ghost was dwelt upon, and the long-continued apparent pouring out of heart in silent prayer at the close. In the afternoon of the same day the claims of Christ as the affianced Bridegroom of the Church were dwelt upon, and in the evening the connexion between a close walk with God and the second coming of Christ, together with his ability to save from the dominion as well as the guilt of sin strongly urged. The President's observations at the commencement of each meeting gave the tone to the subsequent speaking, and shed a hallowing influence over the assembly.

The inquiry-meetings were well attended and were very animated, many questions of great interest and importance being put, and the testimony of Scripture respecting them given.

It may be remarked that these meetings form an important feature in such conferences, tending to correct false impressions and remove difficulties from many minds.

Let it only be added that these conferences or conventions, attended by such large numbers, show a craving of heart after some greater power from God over self than has been seen in the Church of God for a long season.

Their one object at Keswick, as at Brighton, was to lead the believer to yield himself wholly to Christ, and to trust Him in obedience to his commands in all things.

THE LORD'S WORK IN RUSSIA.

(Extract from a Letter.)

We have indeed had "times of refreshing" during these happy weeks—it would be impossible to explain half to you—and great blessing to the Russians.

Before Lord Radstock came we had glorious times in this house in a distribution of Testaments, tracts, and a copy of the Psalms to the people. It was quite a case of "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come!" and never have I seen such an insatiable Gospel thirst.

In two days—gave away 3500 Gospels or tracts. Those who came for them were of the working class, soldiers, policemen, and droakney drivers.

But the crowds became so great that this mode of distribution had to be stopped, as the thoroughfare was obstructed, and we feared it might cause prohibition at head-quarters. Several thousands were given otherwise, and still the distribution goes on.

I see more of Christ in —'s daily life than in any Christian I know. To him "to live is Christ," and the roof under which he dwells must surely be blest. I think I can count ten converted persons under this roof, and there may be more among their Russian servants than I know of. Twice a week Lord Radstock has preached in the American Chapel in English, and three times in the Reformed French Church in French. This is well filled, and numbers of Russian gentlemen, militaires, &c., attend. Every morning a prayer-meeting in French is held in Lord Radstock's rooms at half-past eleven, these I believe having had great blessing. Twice a week, also, French réunions were held in his rooms at 8 p.m., so that each day has been well filled. The Lord has given much blessing, and to Him be all the praise.

I lately visited with much interest a new prison, which would show you the interest taken in "les misérables." I assure you nothing could exceed the cleanliness and comfort provided for criminals. In every cell a nice bedstead and mattress, basin and water-cock, jet of gas, and good windows—just my idea of how poor erring ones should be treated: as erring children of humanity, not as wild beasts, like the long-ago times. Oh! why are we not more Christ-like to the fallen? that is the way to win them. If our Father in heaven were to treat us as we treat each other, in what sort of dungeons should we be? Men such as M—, and the Princesses G— and D—, are the visitors, and others who live for Christ and his poor ones. — has solemnly dedicated herself to the Lord Jesus, and I trust her brother will follow.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Mr. William Jeffrey, who has taken such an active interest in the South London Auxiliary since its formation, nearly twenty years ago, has been compelled by ill-health to resign the post of honorary secretary, which he has held for several years.

"I'LL MEET YOU IN THE MORNING."

(With Quotations from some of Mr. Sawkey's Hymns.)

Lines suggested by Mr. Moody's last words to the young converts at Victoria Hall, Liverpool, on Easter Monday.—"I cannot say, Farewell; I will only say, Good-night, I'll meet you in the morning."

I'll meet you in the morning,
You who have here been taught
That Christ, the loving Saviour,
Has with his blood you bought;
And, trusting in its shelter,
You found the burden fall,
And learned that his salvation
Is perfect, "once for all."

I'll meet you in the morning,
Till then, oh! "hold the fort,"
By the grace of your Commander,
Though often this world's sport.
But "dare to be a Daniel,"
And "up for Jesus stand,"
"Scattering seeds of kindness,"
Always, on every hand.

I'll meet you in the morning,
So "the old story tell,"
That "whosoever willeth
May come" to Christ as well.
"Work, for the night is coming,"
Cry, "Here am I, send me,"
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by,"
"What shall the harvest be?"

I'll meet you in the morning,
"Whiter than snow" you'll be;
"Nothing but leaves" some others bear,
But you with joy I'll see,
"Sweeping thro' the gates" above,
With crown, and robe, and palm,
"Joyful will the meeting be"
When gathered round the Lamb.

I'll meet you in the morning;
"Think of the home o'er there;"
God all tears shall wipe away,
And banish sin and care.
"In the sweet by-and-by," I know,
We shall meet the saints in light,
So I cannot say—Farewell,
I'll only say—Good-night.

WM. H. NEWETT,

Hon. Sec. Liverpool House-to-House Visitation,
Birkdale Park, Southport.

UNION HALL MISSION.—We extract the following from an "occasional paper" just issued, detailing the work of this Mission conducted by Mr. Bilke:—"For all the need of the work of the Mission in Lisson Grove, Kensal New Town, and St. John's Wood, which together amounts to about £250 per annum, we are in simple dependence upon the Lord, who has ever helped us through his people. The receipts for the General Fund during the past quarter have been very small; I would therefore ask prayer that sufficient to meet the amounts that became due for the June quarter might be sent in. About £40 is required."

CHILDISH THINGS GIVEN AWAY.—Mrs. Meredith returns her most grateful thanks for the rocking-horse and sundry other most useful toys that have been sent to the "little ones" at Adlestone, in answer to her appeal in THE CHRISTIAN. She begs that the kind donors will send their names and addresses, not for publication, but that they may be informed of the safe arrival of each gift. There is another need that may be supplied under the same head as the toys. In the "Families" are some cripples, for whom, and for a few young infants, perambulators are of great use. Two, very much the worse for the wear, were procured last summer, and they have since done good service; now they are quite worn out. Will some friends replace them?

WATCHING FOR SOULS.—A Bible-class teacher has found great good result from trying to interest each of the Christian young women in one of the unconverted members of the class, making her the subject of special prayer, &c., taking opportunities of speaking to her about her soul, such as walking to and from business together, and in every way in her power seeking lovingly to win her to Jesus. It does good to both; it brings a young Christian out, makes her feel that, though, from various circumstances, she may not be able to do any distinct work of the usual kinds for God, this is something within her reach, and it greatly deepens the interest and feeling of unity with the teacher—working together for the purpose of bringing souls to Jesus.

PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

WHEREVER "a great door and effectual" is opened to God's workers "there are many adversaries"; it is, therefore, not surprising that serious difficulties have arisen at Portsmouth. The large hall for meetings is being rapidly completed, but this the Keepers of the low houses (who complain the Institute injures their trade) are determined to prevent. From the first, threatening and insulting messages have been sent to Miss Robinson and to the Manager, and all sorts of petty annoyances given. This is now followed by violence. Upon an utterly groundless pretext that the building obstructs the light, three night attacks have been made from a notorious house adjoining, and a great part of the new work destroyed. The police refusing to interfere, Miss Robinson is compelled to keep men watching at night until she can get the protection of the law (a tedious process); while the Manager cannot go outside the Institute without personal danger. There would be no lack of defenders did not the rules of the Service strictly forbid soldiers taking part in any civilian disputes, but the praying men join their friends in the Institute in committing their cause to God, and asking that many of these very people may one day find Jesus as their Saviour in that hall. God is manifestly blessing the Institute. Miss Robinson was prevented by these disturbances from being at Mildmay, where many were hoping to hear her speak of Portsmouth and troopship work. She objects to print details, but gladly goes wherever friends, wishing to hear her tell of the Lord's work among our soldiers and their families, will convene drawing-room meetings for this purpose.

Several hundred pounds have yet to be raised. It is hoped, notwithstanding the hindrances, that the large hall will be opened at the first anniversary meeting of the Soldiers' Institute, early in September, when the presence of any Christian friends will be welcome.

RESULTS OF THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

DURING the Convention at Brighton, I took some little interest in the poor of that place, and was the means, with others attending these meetings, of commencing a work in Park-street, a very poor and needy district, quite as bad as our East-end of London. And now, for the delight of many of those who took part in this work, I write extracts from letters received from ministers and others in this neighbourhood:—

"Brighton, July 1.

"Dear Brother,—It is with feelings of great joy and satisfaction I reply to your inquiries respecting the tent work going on down here.

"How manifestly do we see the hand of the Lord in the pitching of a tent right in the heart of such a neighbourhood. Several men and women, young and old, have stood up to acknowledge their need of a Saviour, and then our hearts have been delighted by seeing the same afterwards rise and testify they have found, or rather, vice versa, that same loving Saviour has found them."

Another gentleman writes:—

"Brighton, June 25.

"My Dear Sir,—The tent and its services continue to prosper. God is blessing them. There was a good attendance again last night."

A minister in the neighbourhood writes, in answer to inquiries as to the desirability of carrying on this work:—

"Brighton, July 7.

"My Dear Brother,—In reply to your note of inquiry, I may say there cannot be two opinions about the results of the faithful labour carried on in the Park-street tent. There were six young men in our chapel last Sabbath morning, who were there as converts from the Park-street tent. I know a ginger-beer manufactory, in which three or four young men work, who have been converted in the tent. Doubtless there are many others to be found in other parts of the town who know of similar results. I think, therefore, that as long as the Lord continues to bless, the tent ought to remain; and I am sure there can be found in Brighton labourers who will be willing to carry on the work there for some time longer. I would be quite willing to spend one or two evenings in the week in the Park-street tent, if necessary, and I have no doubt some other of the Lord's servants will do the same. Thanking you and others for the help rendered in making Brighton brighter by the diffusion of truth among the poor,

"I am, my dear Brother,

"Yours in our risen Lord,

"J. MARTIN,
J. J. JONES."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE WORLD BEFORE THE FLOOD, AND THE HISTORY OF THE PATRIARCHS. By the Rev. Dr. EDERSHEIM. Religious Tract Society.—Such a multiplicity of books now teem from the press that we could spare almost all except those which help to elucidate the Scriptures; but these we always welcome. This is the first of a series of volumes on the books of the Bible in which the results of scholarship and research go hand in hand with a form of writing so popular and easily intelligible as to be of use not only, as the author modestly puts it, "to the Sunday-school teacher, the advanced scholar, and the Bible-class," but, as we think, to teachers and preachers of all degrees and denominations. There is nothing more needed in pulpit teaching than the abolition of the system of textual discourse, which, having severed a verse from its context, dissects it into a series of platitudes, each of which is made a peg whereon to hang some thoughts of the preacher, which are more or less foreign to the text, and the substitution, for this artificial method, of the intelligent and simple exposition of the Scripture, and the application of its spiritual import. This is the design of the manual before us, and it is well and wisely carried out. We heartily commend it as replete with suggestive thought, unlightened apprehension of the Word of the Spirit, and chronological, historical, and doctrinal information.

EVANGELICAL PRINCIPLES. A series of doctrinal papers, explanatory of the Positive Principles of Evangelical Churchmanship. Edited by the Rev. EDWARD GARRATT, M.A. William Hunt and Co.—Twelve interesting papers, written by Evangelical clergymen of note, setting forth with considerable ability truths which are for the most part the common property of all Christians. The names of Ryle, Blakeney, Boulbee, Bernard, Priest, Sir Emilius Bayley, amongst others, will be sufficient guarantee as to the character of the teaching they contain.

SANCTIFICATION BY FAITH. By SAMUEL GARRATT, M.A.

ST. PAUL'S EXPERIENCE AND THE HIGHER CHRISTIAN LIFE. By SAMUEL GARRATT, M.A. William Hunt and Co.—Mr. Garratt discriminates wisely in these two little tracts between what is scriptural and what is not so in the teaching of "The Higher Christian Life." He points out what is really valuable because supported by Scripture in the doctrine of sanctification by faith; and, on the other hand (to quote his own words), "sanctification by faith is true, so is the existence of evil within. The eighth of Romans is true, so is the seventh. Both truths contrary, though not contradictory, exist together; and we must hold fast each. We must not let one truth hide the other, or weaken the other; but learn with Paul at once in the same breath to say, 'Oh! wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?' and 'I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord.'"

Thurs., July 15.—"Enoch walked with God three hundred years." "Before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God."—Gen. v. 22; Heb. xi. 5.

Fri., 16.—"As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on." "They two went over, on dry ground." "They still went on, and talked."—2 Kings ii. 6, 8, 11.

Sat., 17.—"Can two walk together except they be agreed?" "That I may know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings." "From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with Him."—Amos iii. 3; Phil. iii. 10; John vi. 66.

Sun., 18.—"As the Lord liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will Thy servant be." "These are they which follow the Lamb, whithersoever He goeth."—2 Sam. xv. 21; Rev. xiv. 4.

Mon., 19.—"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee?" "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness?"—Ps. xciv. 20; Ephes. v. 11; 2 Cor. vi. 14.

Tues., 20.—"Praying us that we would take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." "If there be, therefore, . . . any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."—2 Cor. viii. 4; Phil. ii. 1, 2.

Wed., 21.—"If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." "The communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen."—1 John i. 6, 7; 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

"TRULY, OUR FELLOWSHIP IS WITH THE FATHER, AND WITH HIS SON, JESUS CHRIST."—1 JOHN I. 3.

The father's health is quite broken up through drink, and he is unable to work.—For the beloved father of a girl in my class.—That God will take away the unbelief and superstition from an aunt's heart.—For my late foreign governess, an avowed Unitarian.—For my father, that he may be born again.—For my uncle, near eighty years of age, out of Christ and unconcerned.—For a person advanced in life, who sees the way of salvation but cannot realise it.—For my husband, who is a great prodigal.

ANGLO-INDIAN CHRISTIAN UNION.—Our columns from time to time have contained accounts of the wonderfully successful mission inaugurated in India during the last winter by Rev. A. N. Somerville, of Glasgow. Mr. Somerville received invitations from important places, where great spiritual destitution exists amongst our countrymen, that he could not accept for want of time. It is therefore the desire of the committee to send forth in October next as many faithful and experienced evangelists as their funds will admit. God's people in India are greatly interested in the mission, and are praying fervently that the agents it sends forth next winter may be multiplied. The committee hope that all who wish success to the winter mission, and who intend to contribute to it, will kindly do so without delay, as so short a time remains for selecting evangelists and arranging with friends in India a plan of operations for the approaching cold season. Hon. Sec., Lockhart Gordon, Esq., 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

DR. CRANAGE'S MODELS OF THE TABERNACLE.—The lecture on the Tabernacle, given by Dr. Cranage at Stafford House, by the kind permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, was illustrated, as our readers are aware, by full-size models of the Ark of the Covenant, the Golden Altar, the Golden Candlestick, and the Table of Shewbread, the Tables of the Law, the Golden Pot of Manna, &c. No such reproductions of these ancient symbols have probably ever been attempted, and now when attention is being so generally directed to the study of Scripture, it would seem that these models have providentially been prepared, to be a means of instruction, by visible and tangible object-lessons, to the thousands of Christians who have been revived, and of young converts lately born into the Kingdom of God. But, as it often happens, the man who invents has not the means of carrying out his invention, so in this case. The expense of producing these models has been considerable in actual outlay, besides the thought and study, the value of which cannot be assessed; but Dr. Cranage is unable to spend time and means in giving publicity to the results of his studies. It would be true service to Christ if some hall were provided where the models could be shown, and a series of lectures given; collections being made to defray expenses, and the balance handed over to the lecturer for his expensive mission at Wellington. We hope this suggestion will be first adopted by some friends in London, where the models still remain.

SAMPLEY, PEMBROKE.—From a long communication concerning the above village we learn that God is using Mr. and Mrs. Diprose to do a quiet, but extensive, work for Him in Pembroke and the outlying villages and hamlets. The people for miles round are visited and dealt with personally about their souls, and to many Mrs. Diprose is able to render valuable medical assistance. A deep interest is aroused in the neighbourhood, and Mr. and Mrs. Diprose are blessed with many seals to their loving, unostentatious labours. In their open air and other services a need is felt of a portable harmonium. Will any of our readers help in this, and will all of them bring their work, with its many hardships and discouragements, before God in prayer?

LETTER FROM MR. SANKEY TO THE EDITOR.

My Dear Sir,—I am very glad to hear that you propose having a Special Number of The Christian for the Young Women. I have no doubt the Number lately published for Young Men will have done much good, and hope that an equal blessing may attend your effort on behalf of the Young Women of this land. I think I can safely say that quite as much good has resulted from the humbler labours of our sisters in the great work which has been going on in Great Britain and Ireland for the last two years as has accompanied the efforts of our brethren, although the latter have seemed to be doing most of the work. And I desire to express my deep gratitude to the Christian Young Women of the towns and cities where we have held meetings, for the valuable assistance they have rendered in the Service of Sacred Song. Eternity alone will tell how much of the great blessing has come through the singing of the sweet message

"Of Jesus and his love."

I hope thousands of Young Women to whom God has given time, talent, and voice, will now find it a joy and pleasure to go into the homes of the poor and sorrowing ones, and there tell forth, in tender and gentle strains, that

*"God loved a world of sinners lost,
And ruined by the fall;
Salvation, full, at highest cost
He offers free to all."*

Allow me to express the hope that in this Special Number we may find words of encouragement in this line of Christian work from other pens than mine; and that, among the many suggestions and plans for bringing out the latent talent of our Young Women, we may have running through them all a sweet melody, so that we may lighten our labour with song.

Many of the hymns most blessed of God in our work in this country have been written by women, who, although they may not have been able to sing for Jesus, have done what was just as good—written for Him.

With this expression of my hope that very much blessing may attend the "Special Number for Young Women," will you allow me to send for it a New Hymn—"The Cross of Jesus," the words of which are written by a sister whose name will ever be dear to us as the Author of "The Ninety and Nine." ...

With offerings of praise, yours truly,

Wm. D. Sankey

WOMAN'S WORK FOR CHRIST.

THANK God that in the present day He is calling every one of his children forth to service. Thank Him that the weak and the feeble have a mission as well as the strong and vigorous. Thank Him that while He is calling men forth in a special manner to fight his great warfare before the world, He is also calling women in a special manner, in their narrower circles and quieter lives, to be among his witnesses.

As we see God's power and love so manifestly shed abroad it cannot fail to bring the grave and solemn question to every thoughtful Christian woman's heart—Am I but a cumberer of the ground, or am I, in that place where God has put me, doing the work He has given me to do? It may seem little, it may be utterly unrecognized and unknown, but is it God's special work for me—the work in which I am to glorify Him on the earth?

Some of his daughters it has pleased the Heavenly Father to call forth in a very especial manner in his service, and as we watch them we praise God, and take courage for our smaller duties. Doubtless He has specially fitted them for their works—is specially guarding them, specially teaching and leading them in it. What a joyful, what an ennobling thought that that very same special care is around us in our humbler spheres!

It is not what we do for God, since He Himself portions to each her work, but it is how we do it. Some of our sisters are greatly desiring to know how they may work for God. Time is at their disposal; they know Christ is their object in life, and yet no definite work for Him has yet come to them. It is for helping these, and for the encouragement of those already definitely employed for God, that this special number of THE CHRISTIAN is now issued, in the hope that in the mention of work among young women, in shops, in district visiting, in the flower mission, in Sunday classes, &c., the Holy Spirit will guide any such into service for Him "who for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." And oh, do we not want to become poor in that way? To become poor like the Lord Jesus is the most wonderful richness; no one knows it till they try it. Once rich like that we want every one else to join us; and it is one of the beauties of Christ's religion that the more we give the more we have; the more we expend the more we receive. It seems to enlarge our heart, and then Christ fills it.

You know that old, old saying, that there is no sin, no sorrow, no trouble in the world, but a woman is at the bottom of it. Do you sometimes think of it? Do you believe it? I think almost every woman must feel something of the awful truth that is in it; some perhaps have quailed before it, and felt as if it crushed them. Yet it may not, cannot do that; only it seems to lay a grand and great responsibility upon us; it seems to cry to us to "awake to righteousness;" it seems to summon us forth in a very special manner, and bid us tell and live the message of the Gospel. To live it, that is our first duty; it is what we are, not what we do, that really tells in the service of Christ. What we are before Him, will determine what we do, will show us our path, will keep us in it.

This is not a time for women to run about, seeking for something great and powerful: we never find those sort of things by seeking them. If they come to us they come when we are closest to Christ's heart, quietest before

Him, simplest before the world. We hear a great deal about "women's rights" in these days, till the words have come to have something ridiculous and almost scornful about them. Oh, what is a woman's right after all? Is it not in "holy trust and high humility" to walk the quiet life that God shall give her, dependent on his will?

Is it not to stoop to the lowest, that through the blessed Christ who has raised and ennobled her, she may raise to the highest? Is it not to step forward and do those hidden and secluded works, that often seem left as if there were none to do them?

Is it not to give a hand to those left behind in the onward rush and struggle, to "draw out her soul to the hungry," to "bid the oppressed go free"? Is it not to speak words of hope, when hope seems fled; to proclaim the light, when the darkness is thickest; and strength in Another, when weakness is despair? Is it not in "charity's eclipse" to obscure the faults and failings of others, "to comfort the sorrowful, to support the weak, to be patient toward all"? Is it not to turn from all that is mean, evil, and selfish, and foster and cherish all that is noble, pure, and Christ-like? Is it not to renounce herself, in things great, and what is so much harder—in things small? Is it not "power to heal, to redeem, to guide and to guard; the power of the sceptre and shield; the power of the royal hand, that heals in touching—that binds the fiend and looses the captive"?

And where can we learn this, and such as this, save at the feet which were bruised and wounded for us, save on our knees before the heart that broke on Calvary, that lives again, High-priest and King.

Is it not enough? Let us fulfil the duties God puts into our hand, in the manner He desires, and we shall have enough to do, but let us at the same time diligently seek to know the will of God; let us hold our hearts open to Him, that His light may be showered down upon us, and that we may never miss His leading. A step at a time, that is all God gives us. We cannot see what is coming, nor what our life will have been at its close, yet He tells us "This people have I formed for Myself;" and He adds in promise "They shall show forth My praise." (Isa. xliii. 21.) A blessed and holy calling, with Christ within us to teach us to fulfil it. "A chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light."

A SHOE CLUB, for those who attend the village school, has proved very successful in our village. Not only is it a help to the parents, and an encouragement to them and to the children to lay by, but it also makes the school popular, and necessitates a regular weekly visit to it from a lady. The amount of their payments is allowed to vary, and 2d. is added on every shilling the children put in. When the necessary amount is nearly complete, the child is given a written ticket to the shoemaker to allow him to be measured; but no child is permitted, under any circumstances, to appropriate the boots till they have been seen by the lady, and the whole amount paid. At the time of receiving the money (which must always be on the same afternoon in the week), the lady receives it herself from the children as the names are called over. It is a stringent rule, that the shoemaker should return the ticket taken him by the child, and also send in the bill with each pair of boots when completed; the name of the child for whom they are made being also on the bill.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

IN these days of active life and stirring interest, this question is no unnatural one; and is doubtless at this moment passing through many a newly-awakened, or I might say, newly-revived soul. May God answer it, in his own mighty power, before the heaven-born impulse dies—before the active principle subside, or be turned by an enemy's chill hand into some worthless channel.

The branches of useful labour in the Lord's vineyard for women are now so numerous, that it would be impossible for us to detail them at any length. Many of these duties—or rather let us call them privileges—palpably suggest themselves to the Christ-loving heart—such as Sunday-school teaching, district visiting, home and foreign mission work.

But perhaps amongst all this loving service for the Master, we have too much neglected that of united prayer, and study of the Scripture.

Mr. Moody is now most anxious that, before he leaves our country, he might have the happiness of seeing started in many different parts of London WOMEN'S MEETINGS of this description.

These might at first, and indeed must necessarily, be commenced on a large scale, but might afterwards resolve themselves into smaller divisions, such as weekly Bible readings, Bible-classes, and prayer-meetings. With the view of accomplishing this end, Mr. Moody gathered an impromptu meeting of ladies in room No. 4 of the Mildmay Conference Hall, after a large general meeting of workers connected with the house-to-house visitation. He then proposed as a commencement of this work a meeting for women only, on Saturday, the 3rd of July, at the Conference Hall, when he pressed the expediency of inviting many of the young shop-women to come and join the movement.

If each of our Christian women were now to realize the enormous responsibility attaching itself to each member of God's Church, and perhaps especially at this time of general awakening, and now offer herself to the Master as his loving servant, praying Him to show her the right work—the sphere—He has opened, whether large or small, for the employment of the powers He has given, we might see a new tide of blessings overflowing our land. The Intercessor is pleading for us above; his power is with us here. May we not now "agree" to send up one united cry to a loving Father in that all-prevailing name of Jesus—"Lord, fill us, Thy handmaids, with wisdom and power in the Holy Ghost; show us Thy will, and give us now willing and obedient hearts, that we may do Thy bidding." And then let us watch for his guidance, nor shrink from any step to which He may call us.

SCRAP BOOKS.—A very simple and easy way of giving much pleasure to young and old people in hospitals and convalescent homes, is the scrap book. Get a large blank book, and paste in pictures, interspersed with short stories, interesting paragraphs, hymns, &c., collected from magazines and periodicals, and make the whole as attractive as possible, with painted borders to the scraps of printed matter, and many who would not read religious books will gladly wile away the long dreary hours over a book of this kind.

THE BIBLE FLOWER-MISSION.

At a time when numberless young hearts are filled with joy realizing the wondrous simplicity of the message of God's love to them in Jesus, "Salvation, a free gift, just to be had for the taking,"—many a loving spirit is yearning to show its gratitude for the glorious gift by carrying to others the glad tidings which have effected so marvellous a change in their own hearts and lives. Life to them is no more an unmeaning dream, but a great solemn reality,—one aim its moving spring—to yield back the life redeemed at such a cost in faithful loving service to the Lord. Like Saul of Tarsus, their first impulse is to ask, "What wilt Thou have ME to do?" while in some cases the current of the rivers of living water is so strong that but little human guidance comparatively is needed; in many others, timid ones are longing for some friendly voice to suggest and point out some way in which the heart's love may find vent.

There is one branch of sweet service for the Master that has been so blessed by Him, we feel it may be still more so, if submitted to the notice of those recently brought to God, who through circumstances are hindered from going out into very active service, and yet would be well able to help in this work of spreading God's truth, through the medium of "The Bible Flower-Mission."

Whilst the workers at the Central Depôts, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., and Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields, E., are most thankful for gifts of fruit and flowers on Tuesdays and Thursdays, for distribution among the poor, their great desire is to extend the Mission to provincial towns. It is our rule never to give a bouquet unless encircled by a text, as the special object of the mission is to reach the heart through the flowers, and so obtain access for the message of salvation. The following incident will illustrate our intention.

Some flowers having been given with the text—"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," a poor woman was invited to attend the meetings in a mission-room.

She replied that "she had no time, her business kept her at home washing."

"My friend, has the great washing been done for you?"

She looked wonderingly, and the giver continued:

"You know Jesus says, 'If I wash thee not thou hast no part in Me.' Have you let Him wash your sins away in His precious blood?"

The woman admitted she had not, and seemed much solemnized, saying, "Ah! that would be a grand wash; I must try and get it."

Specimens of the text labels will be furnished on application to the secretary at either depôt.

If young Christians would ascertain the number of inmates in the nearest hospital or union, and take little bunches of flowers, with the texts attached, they would be so joyfully received, and would be surprised at the wonderful ease with which, through the sweet flower gifts, they find entrance to the recipients' hearts, and are able to speak to them of Jesus and his love. Will not many of our dear young sisters take up this little work for Jesus, and also consecrate their voices, and sing in the long dreary wards some of the songs of the better land which have brought peace to so many hearts in these times of blessing? We shall be glad to hear of any young workers who would thus associate themselves with us, either in London or other places

MISSION WORK AMONG YOUNG WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

WE gladly welcome the appearance of a special number of THE CHRISTIAN for young women, and thankfully take the opportunity of introducing to notice, through its valuable pages, an agency which, for nearly twenty years, has been steadily pursuing its course of effort and blessing in our metropolis.

The Young Women's Christian Association, embracing various homes, institutes and classes, for the women employed in shops, show-rooms, work-rooms, offices, and factories, is already well-known in many quarters, as a worthy sister society of the Young Men's Association, which affords the advantages of Christian intercourse and fellowship to the other sex.

It is an impressive fact that our vast metropolis is constantly drawing thousands to its centre, and especially the young from all parts of this and other lands. Many hundreds of these are young girls from quiet country homes, who come to acquire a knowledge of business. "Alone in London" is the experience of numbers of such in our million-peopled city; and can it be wondered that, thus cast adrift, as they too often are, from the sympathies and ties of home and friends, the temptations of worldliness and evil assail these young hearts with an overwhelming force. It is here that the Christian Association comes to the rescue, and by its agencies, draws many a lonely girl within the warm influence of the love that seeks and saves.

Nine institutions are thus working actively in London at the present time, each under the guidance of a resident superintendent, and all affiliated with the General Parent Association, whose head-quarters are situated at 19A, Great Portland-street, W., where all information and further details can be obtained by application to the secretary or superintendent. Nor would we ignore the efforts of various devoted Christian ladies who are doing the same work in several similar Young Women's Homes in London, fully in sympathy with the objects of the General Association though not in affiliation with it. The blessing accompanying the whole work has been marked throughout its progress. Many who have gained spiritual benefit through the influences of the homes and institutes are able to testify to the high value in which they are held. Not a few now scattered throughout England and in foreign lands live to thank God for the light and joy they gained in the happy social Sunday and week evening gatherings at the various centres, while a goodly number are already praising Him in the home of rest above for the lessons they learnt through the same medium. We feel it is not too much to say that the institutions have been found a refuge of comfort, help, and sympathy to thousands of young girls who might without them have wholly missed any decided personal Christian influence in London.

With sadness, however, we are bound to confess that though something has been done, it is little indeed, compared with what remains to be accomplished. The visit of Mr. Moody has more than ever led us to realize what a sphere of work is lying at our very doors. The three evening meetings at the Opera House especially devoted to young women were thronged with eager listeners, and experience leads to the conclusion that wherever the hand of loving Christian interest, is held out to them, their response is ready. Some suggestions have been made which, to be carried out to any adequate extent, await the co-operation of many earnest-hearted practical helpers. Who can estimate the intense and ever-increasing importance of making a great effort to reach this class, and to such we would very urgently appeal in advancing them?

The first I would name is public evangelistic addresses (specially for young women), followed by inquiry meetings.

The second is the establishment of private Bible-classes for them all over London.

The third is the formation of an organized band of lady associates, who will undertake to correspond privately with young women awakened at public meetings, to a desire after spiritual things.

The fourth is the establishment of Christian libraries, and the circulation of Christian literature.

It only remains to be added that if each lady in such a band of associates would fix on some especial house or houses of business in her own locality, regarding it as her peculiar field of Christian interest and effort, and looking on herself as a missionary to that house, following out the suggestions given above with regard to it, and taking the young people employed there into her sympathies and prayers, the results might be greater and more blessed than we can even imagine. Are there no Christian ladies who will volunteer for such a service?

"SINGING FOR JESUS."

So many and varied have been the testimonies which have reached us, especially during the past months, of the power of the Gospel message when told out in the voice of song, that we feel that we cannot let our little paper go forth without a few words on this subject.

Perhaps of all forms of woman's ministry, that of singing for Jesus is one which lies most within the reach of all, since it demands neither power of mind, nor any great measure of bodily strength; but never let us forget that the heart must be tuned by the Master's hand, and filled with the love of Christ, before the voice can be used in his service.

In visiting in the homes of the poor, and amongst the sick and the afflicted, those who have never tried the effect of the singing of a simple hymn, have yet to learn its wondrous power to soothe and comfort the children of God, and not unfrequently to arouse those who are as yet far from Him. Many a hymn, sung, it may be, by faltering lips and with a beating heart, has found its way, and gained an entrance, where words—faithful, earnest, loving words—have failed, and has been in God's hand, as it were, a golden key to unlock deep memories of the past, and to bring under the warmth and light of the Gospel, seed sown long years ago by loving anxious hands. How many of those whose voices are now swelling the anthem of the redeemed could tell us that the first notes of that song were caught while listening to the singing of a long-forgotten hymn—recalling lessons learnt in a Sabbath-school, or at the knee of a praying mother!

Have you, as you have gone in and out on your mission of love, met with wearied and careworn ones, whom you have sought to cheer with words of love and sympathy; and, finding all such fail, have you sung of the rest and peace which Jesus gives, while you watched the face of the burdened one, as the expression of anxious care gave place to one of quiet repose, which told you that the tired listener had exchanged the anxious foreboding for a calm and happy trust in Him of whom you sang?

Have you sat by the sick bed of a little child, and as you have looked on the weary tossing to and fro, in the restlessness of pain, have you sought to soothe it with the soft, low singing of a childish hymn? Then, as you have ceased, and the eager cry of "More, more" came from the parched lips of the little sufferer, has the note of praise ascended from your heart, as you thanked the Lord for the privilege of thus ministering to one of his little ones?

Let none think such a ministry too small to be called service; rather let us remember that nothing done out of love to Jesus, or with the earnest desire to please Him, is little in his sight, or passes unnoticed by his eye of love. Shall we not praise God that He does use the weak things in his service; and as we consecrate our voices to Him let us ask Him to use them for his glory, and to keep them in his holy keeping, until they too join in singing the "new song" in the presence of the King.

M.

"TWO OR THREE."

DEAR SISTERS IN JESUS.—It is in my heart to urge you, wherever practicable, to establish young ladies' meetings, such as it has been our privilege to attend for months past. About a year ago a few of us determined to meet together every week for one hour, just to help each other spiritually.

The Lord had been blessing us greatly, and we thought by searching the Scriptures together we might grow yet more in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. I only wish each dear one who reads this paper could be present at one of our little gatherings—we have such happy times together with the Lord, and very rarely, if ever, do we separate without some of our number having received definite blessing.

Constantly do we hear one and another say, "Our little meeting helps me so much. I look forward to it all the week."

We meet in a very simple way, usually commencing with a hymn; then, if any have special requests for prayer, they are mentioned; after which we kneel, but no one is asked to pray. With one accord we bow before our God, and it is precious to wait on Him either with silent or audible petitions. Usually three or four of our number speak aloud to Jesus, and it is so delightful to join with them in asking spiritual blessings. As the main object of our meeting is to get help for daily practical life, our prayers are definite: we seek to forget others, and realize the presence of Jesus only.

After prayer we take our Bibles, and any one who has during the week received blessing from any portion, calls our attention to it; we then talk over the subject together, and either ask questions or give Scripture proofs. The hour is always gone too soon. We close with prayer, sometimes a hymn. We have never found any difficulty in the guidance of the meeting—from the first our one desire has been that Jesus should sit Chief and teach us by his Holy Spirit; and week by week we put the gathering definitely in his hands, and very sweetly has He kept us in peace. One of the senior young ladies, at whose house the meeting is held, usually announces when it is time to commence and close; and in case of a long pause may ask if some one will not select a hymn or read a portion, but beyond this no leadership has been found necessary. Secret prayer is always offered before we gather, and we expect Jesus, according to his promise, to meet with us and feed our souls. We have found it exceedingly helpful when dear ones are enabled to lay aside natural reserve and tell out what the Lord has done for them personally. It may be some very trivial circumstance in daily life, but coming from the heart it has gone straight to the hearts of others present. Often have we been struck by the fact that many labour under similar difficulties at the same time.

All controversy is carefully avoided; therefore, belonging to various sections of the visible Church, there is nothing to mar our communion.

We are in earnest, more religious phraseology or even intellectual Bible knowledge will not satisfy; we seek and obtain real food for daily life—that which will enable us to glorify Christ in our daily home lives. As we read glorious promises we meditate on them, stir up each other to lay hold of them by faith, so that they are practically ours in times of need; and one and another, as opportunity occurs, tell how they have dared to take God at his word and victory has been given.

If only two in a town can thus meet, begin with two: others will soon be glad to swell the number as they hear of the happy hours spent over the Word. We thank God there are many such meetings, but why should there not be one in every town and village of the United Kingdom?—Yours in the Lord Jesus,
E. M. L.

DISTRICT VISITING.

With what variety of feeling will these words be read,—District Visiting. With some the heart will bound forward as at meeting one who knows a dearly-valued friend; from others may come perhaps the deep longing that they could feel glad about it; from others again the sigh of dissatisfaction and want that must ever spring from unfulfilled hopes.

Perhaps of all work undertaken for God, this is, in one sense, the most difficult. Missions, meetings, definite special efforts for a time or among a shifting people, have all a certain amount of variety, and generally of apparent and definite results; but for the steady, continual, weekly or fortnightly visiting from house to house the same people, hearing the same tales of trouble—this of all works needs the love and patience of the Lord Jesus Christ.

There are so many difficulties to contend with. As we enter more and more into the troubles and needs of the poor, we cling to the blessed lesson He taught who went about doing good, and who so often made the healing of bodily distress a channel towards the healing of spiritual deadness or sickness, and we love to feel we have the authorization of his loving example to strive to tend soul and body at once,—but then comes the baffling knowledge that some attempt to trade upon this; some will receive us for what they can get; some for the bare hope of being temporarily benefited in the future; cases of deception in those who seemed most promising rise up and trample on our hopes; hard, and even shameless and disgusting facts are thrust on us, when we least expect them, and then startled and heart-sick, and even angry, we are tempted to think all the fault is in us; to imagine that we are not fit for Christ's work; that it needs some one with more energy, more influence, more tact.

But what does it really need? Granted, that we are all and much more than we can write against ourselves, does that unfit us for this work? It is far more likely that some fancied righteousness, or love, or tact, will unfit us, than any knowledge of our unfitness. When we know and feel ourselves to be really incapable, really nothing at all, then is our best hour, for then we cease to look for anything from self, and throw ourselves entirely on God. It is his work. In one sense He does not need us in the least. He is all-powerful; He could do the work quite well without us. But in another sense He deeply needs us; He graciously condescends to associate us with Himself in his work, and shall we hesitate to answer that loving condescending call?

Surely what we need first of all is to take it to our heart that it is God's work; not mine for Him, but his in which I work under Him; and then we need a spirit that shall never "tempt the Lord, saying, Is the Lord among us or no?" (Ex. xvii. 20). Whatever you doubt, never doubt Him. He knows you have taken this work, hard, plodding work, for Him; He needs you in it; He needs your sympathy, your love, your confidences when you are discouraged, shaken, fearful; your utter trust in Him when all appears wrong and hopeless. Without such abiding in Him this work must be tasteless, but with it the love of Christ will constrain you, draw you, lead you, teach you. You will grow to feel, not the hopeless, or hardened, or indifferent, or graceless character of the man or woman you visit, but you will let that rest on one side as it were while you feel—Here is a soul Christ died for; here is one Jesus loves; loves now, just as he or she is; here is one to whom He is stretching his loving, compassionate arms; shall I draw back, shall I be discouraged? Oh, you will indeed lose sight of discouragement and hopelessness if you speak to the Lord about it all. Everything seems so different when with your own mouth you've told Him about it. It is so safe then; you can then "wait with patience, for that you see not" (Rom. viii. 25) and your want of wisdom will not seem such a loss to you, for you will know you have it all in Him. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, and it shall be given him." Is it not simple? Ask, and you have; have it to use the moment you need it. You will find you have to give up fidgeting so about what to do, and what to say; instead you will tell that blessed, great Friend of yours, and then wait on Him. There won't be so much hurry; you will find yourself waiting before the door, or waiting in the midst of your talk, saying, "Now, dear Lord; what now?"

"And evermore beside Him on His way,
The unseen Christ shall move,
That he may lean upon His arm, and say,
'Dost Thou, dear Lord, approve?'"
"Oh, holy trust! Oh, endless sense of rest!
Like the beloved John,
To lay his head upon the Saviour's breast,
And thus to journey on."

Only a few thoughts and ideas can be suggested in a little paper like this.

First, may it be said, when you visit the poor, visit them in the same way as you would visit your equals in birth and education. Be simple and unaffected; say to yourself, God is this woman's Father, as He is mine; He is calling her, loving her, needing her, as He is me; and think that perhaps she, with less teaching than you, will perhaps obey Him sooner or more simply than you did at the first. That will put you on an equality, and give you the right spirit, whether you are well or badly received. The poor quickly feel if we respect their condition; if they are not hurried, if they receive true politeness, very often they will meet you half-way, and at last admit you to their confidence, but first they will generally judge you by their own standard, and study your motives; be patient with it; you will never force a soul to good by rough handling; but you may "win" soul upon soul to Christ. Then, if we are to believe half what is written and spoken in the present day on the evils of indiscriminate charity, should we not be very careful in this matter; careful not with our own pros and cons merely, but with "the wisdom that cometh from on high;" and above all should it not be known—be a settled fact through our district—that our object is a religious one; to teach how to "cease to do evil, and learn to do well" (Isaiah i. 16, 17), by bringing souls to Christ? And this brings us to the thought, are we to expect conversions? Is not that our aim? Must we not expect to reach it, that is, expect that God expects and intends to reach it with us? It makes a wonderful difference if we actually and definitely expect conversions, or if we only think they might perhaps happen. In the latter case we are pretty sure not to be thinking very much about its being God's work, and perhaps not to be speaking to Him very much about it; in the former we shall be set upon it, praying, working, tending, not impatiently, but patiently, sure in God that what seems so impossible out of Him, will, must come. It seems out of the question to try and follow any definite rule for reading and praying in each house; some will not leave a house without either one or both. Must not the "wisdom from on high" teach us wisdom in this? And then, when we have asked it, and the way does not seem open, and we come away without having done it, do not let us distress ourselves, but let us believe God led us not to do it, and believe that since He was willing for it, and we willing to obey Him, it was the best that it should not be done.

Yet, surely our aim should be to read the Bible, not every time we are in a house, but certainly sometimes. The difficulty of doing it the first time is very great—though sometimes it is found to be much greater the second or third time—but, as a rule, people cannot be very put out if you ask to read a bit of something which interested you that morning? Perhaps no comments may suggest themselves, perhaps no conversation arise, but has there been no blessing? "My word shall not return unto Me void," saith the Lord God Almighty.

Personally it is a wonderful strengthener to us of our faith in the words of God himself. Then, if people find we like to read the Bible, they don't often object to let us have the pleasure, and will begin themselves to think there may be something in it; for those who find these things a great effort, whose hearts tremble as they speak, and whose words seem to fail on their lips, those may find a sort of common sense help in the thought suggested to a most shrinking child of God—"They don't know in the least how frightened you are; they have not an idea that you are trembling, and most likely are very afraid of you!" After all, that is but the negative side, for beside us there is One who holds our right hand, saying, "Fear not, for I am with you."

Wo women have much to help us in this work; women will sit and gossip with us about their children, their clothes, and their ailments, as they cannot do to a man. This gives us an advantage; don't let us think the time lost that is spent thus: it opens many a heart, and in their turn they will listen to us for our story; theirs is old enough and wonderful enough, but ours is older and stranger still.

Then ought we to content ourselves with visiting the women, and only seeing their husbands if they happen to be ill? This is bad policy if we want to win the house to God. For the most part we only get half a woman till we get the husband. We must not forget that in most cases he is emphatically the master, and the house his; it is a hard stand for a woman to make all by herself on the side of truth and religion. We know all that is said on the other side against women teaching men; well, we don't want to teach them, we want to ask them. Perhaps one of the most wonderful things, under God's blessing, is the persuasive power of a Christian woman on a man, rough, uneducated, despising his wife, neglecting his children, and indifferent to God. Perhaps one reason is that they know we cannot make them; that it is a sort of grace in them to listen; it brings out a gift from them to bestow, and to give always enables. However it be, must we forget them? Must we not thus strive to help the wives and mothers? Our evenings?—"God loveth a cheerful giver."

These seem very worthless ideas, and perhaps all who read them may have thought these and many others out far better, yet the need is so great, there is a longing in every soul to swell the call to God, for God, in God.

Oh! let us pour out our hearts, our lives, over the people committed, in however subservient a way, to our charge. It needs it, the very gift of ourselves, the giving out of all that makes Christ dear to us to these people, of all that makes sin hateful to us—and let us never be afraid of condemning sin and evil unequivocally; their consciences answer to our words, and they soon feel the difference between hating sin and hating them.

Has not St. John said, "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren"? How little we understand such words; how little we ponder them; yet, He for us "poured out his soul unto death."

OUR FACTORY GIRLS.

Few of our readers are aware of the depth of degradation to which a large number of our factory girls sink, and of the consequent violence of the persecution borne by the few who are brought to the knowledge of Christ, and who venture to declare their faith.

A factory girl often becomes her own mistress when very young, refuses to live at home, and takes lodgings with one or two other girls of her own age, where, with no parental influence or check, she does that which is right in her own eyes. She spends her evenings in the public-houses, penny gaffs, &c., and thus becomes acquainted with, and often a prey to, the lowest of all her sex.

Thus her tastes become depraved; all of womanly modesty is lost; a rein is given to the high spirits of her age, and they find vent in the coarsest and most unwomanly language, and not unfrequently these poor girls find an absolute pleasure in fighting. Of course, intoxication is very common among them, and it is fearful to contemplate that the wives and mothers of a class amongst our working men are receiving recruits from these wild creatures.

There is a great deal of kindness among them. Often for one of their number they will exercise considerable generosity, if she is placed in a position of want. Thousands of these girls are congregated together, and we are informed that the language and songs in some of the factories are of a lower description than could be conceived.

What is the cause of this state of things? Surely these poor girls want a living Jesus, and loving hearts to tell them of Him. My own experience among them is that they are keenly alive to anything which is unreal, and their coarse jests upon sacred things are frequently most painful. But a loving heart and patient persevering effort does win them.

And now as to the way of recalling them. To do so at home is out of the question. If they are not at the factory, they are "hanging about" the streets, or in the public-houses, theatres, or penny gaffs until a late hour, after which they are neither in a state nor humour to listen. The only hope is to attract them to meetings where the Gospel is pressed upon them with the least formality possible, and where every girl will find herself lovingly and warmly welcomed.

They are, when touched, a very emotional class, from their long lack of self-control, and are just as easily moved to laughter as to tears, and often when in a meeting keep up a subdued giggle the whole time, which is best dealt with by being unnoticed.

Most sadly do these poor girls need some safe places to spend their evenings, for, of course, their lodgings do not comprise any more than a bedroom where several sleep together; and in some towns where these have been provided they have been warmly welcomed.

Will our sisters in Christ cry unto God with faith that while London is being moved by the power of his Spirit the factory girls may come in for a large share of the blessing? Efforts are already made to reach them, and more are in prospect. Should God lead some of the wildest to Himself, they will prove the best missionaries to others of their class; and we cannot but hope that should there arise an awakening among them some Christian women would find it on their hearts to band together and provide some rooms where these girls can sew, read, or be read to, hold their prayer-meetings, &c., and so have some place to call home ere the winter sets in.

"The time is short," we may not long have the precious privilege of ministering to our beloved Lord in this work.

Oh that his own voice might say of each of us: "She hath done what she could." L. BAXTER.

EVENING SCHOOLS FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

THE few following suggestions are offered for those young ladies who are asking what they can do for Christ, as being a work for which there seems great need and ample scope in country towns as well as in our cities.

Generally there are to be found numbers of girls from thirteen years old and upwards gaining their living by working in factories and paper mills, or as machinists in drapery and outfitting establishments, or else as helpers by the day in domestic service, and during the winter months (at any rate) these are released from their work as early as seven o'clock in the evening. When the weather admits of their being out, the two following hours or more are often passed walking about the streets. Most of them are very ignorant—many quite unable to read. It is amongst this class that for the last four years some young ladies, with myself, have had the privilege of working, and a few hints as to what we have found to be the best mode of carrying on the work I now give very briefly.

After having obtained some suitable room for the purpose, once, twice, or three times a week, invite some of the girls about to come in, telling them it is an evening class, only going to be for those of their own age. Many may at first refuse, not having the least desire to be taught any more; but in most cases they will change their minds by the reports brought them by those who go—and in our case, by the second year of its being carried on, it was found necessary to make a decided limit to the number admitted, otherwise we had more than our staff of teachers was at all sufficient for. And here I would say that it is very important not to have a greater number than can be easily kept in perfect control, though as regards this, much depends on the number and efficiency of the teachers. Very much also depends on not taking the girls too young; those under fourteen years of age should not be admitted. The older ones do not like learning with young ones, many of whom know much more, having had greater advantages these last few years from the schools, and it requires great tact not to treat them as if they were little children. Many of them are very ignorant, but we have to remember that they are beyond the age when instruction can be forced upon them.

From 7 till 8.30 we have usually devoted to reading, writing, &c., on one evening of the week; needlework generally the other, one of us reading a simple suitable book whilst the others are engaged in fitting the work. At half-past 8 the books, slates, &c., are taken away as quietly and quickly as possible, so as to allow no time for talking, and a hymn is given out, after which one of us reads a passage of Scripture and speaks for a short time to the girls, the especial object being to set forth Christ as a Saviour for them, and we conclude with prayer.

The Lord has very much owned these feeble attempts to set forth His love to them in blessing his word to their hearts, and we have good reason to believe that many have taken the Lord Jesus to be their Saviour, and are going on their way rejoicing in Him, whose lives are now proving that He is theirs.

In giving these few details of our work here, I do not, of course, mean that they would apply in all places. Circumstances surrounding must affect our arrangements, but I do think that in all cases punctuality as to the hours of commencing and closing, and kindness with a firm, steady control ought to be strictly observed by those who take the chief management.

Many of this class of girls are poor, miserable, abject creatures, whose hearts need to be warmed and won by love; others are bold and forward, and with these it is necessary to guard against undue familiarity. How much do we need to have our hearts filled with the spirit of Him "Who of God is made unto us wisdom." It may, perhaps, be thought by some longing to enter on some field of service for the Lord, that it does not seem directly so, to devote so much time to secular instruction; but if we ever let our pupils see that our greatest desire for them is their spiritual life and growth, let us help them also to use the brains and hands that God has given, that there may be so much the more wherewith to glorify Him.

May all work which is put in our way of this or any other kind be taken up, not as the outcome of any restless desire which shall be gratifying to self, but done joyfully with a single eye to our Master's glory!

Since writing the above it has struck me to make a suggestion about books for reading to this class of person. It is well no doubt to vary them, but it is also well now and then to read them something that opens out their sympathies and widens their interest, such as some accounts of Dr. Barnardo's work or Miss M'Pherson's, which takes away the too often prevailing idea with some of them that they are the most worthy objects of pity in the world.

W.

SCHOOL INFLUENCE.

For those who are still at school I should like to write a few words of encouragement. A school life is one which affords constant and continual opportunities for witnessing for our loving Father and gracious Master. If the reader of this paper should be the only sincere earnest Christian in a school, dear reader, take courage. Seek to find one other ready and willing to hear the Gospel (there will always be some longing for Christ), pray with and for that one in faith, till she is one with yourself in the Lord Jesus. If there are other Christians around you, praise the Lord for that, and get to work speedily amongst them. In recess time, or after work in the evenings, or whenever the time may be that you have at your own disposal, get leave for some of you who are believers to go to a bedroom or sitting room for a prayer meeting; let each one take part, and never mind how shortly or stumblingly, only be sincere, and have Bible reading together also. Make the unconverted girls a special matter of prayer, and then get leave for a meeting—say once a week—for any to come who will, those who are on the Lord's side making it as bright and interesting as they can.

You will soon find that the interest for religion will grow; they see you are in earnest, and willing and ready to be laughed at and teased for what they may call your "sanctity;" but notwithstanding they are convinced of the reality of the whole matter.

Get an opportunity of speaking privately with each one who has attended the meetings—much may be done in this way—in the walk or in the garden, and also by slipping little loving sympathizing notes into the hand of one and another, when occasion offers itself. Oh! do stir yourself to work now for Jesus. You are daily brought in contact with those who, when once they have left you may never meet again, until before the judgment-seat of God. What sorrow you will then have that you had not spoken a word for Jesus when you might. I beg of you, consider solemnly and prayerfully Ezek. iii. 17-19, xxxiii. 8-11, and Prov. xxiv. 11, 12, and see if your mouth can be closed any longer.

FROM A SCHOOLFELLOW.

OUR ENGLISH SISTERS IN PARIS.

"I will praise Thee, O Lord, with my whole heart."

"I will sing of the Lord, because He hath dealt so lovingly with me."

"I will praise Thee for ever, because Thou hast done it."

Yes, He hath done it! The Mission Home for English Women in Paris is felt to be his gift, and the burden of praise has replaced the oppressed sense of want with which the need of the purchase of this Home was made known only a few months ago—fully answering the query, "Is there anything too hard for the Lord?" But although the house is secured and paid for, the amount needed for necessary alterations, furnishing, &c., is not quite made up.

Another need, too, presses very closely—that of lady helpers. Much prayer is going up unto Him in whose hand are all hearts, to move such as He would call to this important work.

Few can realize the creeping sense of loneliness with which, weary and disheartened by want of success, many a friendless girl has walked along the gay and crowded boulevards of Paris. One whom chilling disappointment darkened to despair—which a kindly word of sympathy might have dispelled—felt death better than life. Mercifully she was stayed. "I should not have done it," she wept, "had I thought any one cared! It was not that I wished to die, but that I did not know how to live. If only a dog had pulled my skirts I would have come back!"

Surely as a preventive work this appeals to the strongest sympathies of Christian men and women.

Some come to the Home (which has now sheltered 430) needing rest and care, ere they continue the too often single-handed struggle for daily bread. One was recently brought very spent. All she needed was rest, she said. With her the words seemed to have a double meaning. She knew something of Jesus, and of coming to Him, but had not yet given Him her full confidence.

"Somehow He seems very near to me here. He must be in this Home!" she said.

She was urged to break the barrier, and to give full entrance to the One who knocked without, who only asks for an undivided heart. She did so, and her little room became the trysting place between a newly found Saviour and her soul, realizing its rest.

Not so her body—it was too worn out in an active faithful service, which she had carried beyond her strength, even to rally so as to get to her distant home in Prince Edward's Isle, to die! The overstrained nerves refused the fresh impulse of life it was sought to give, and in a few weeks "her lifeless body lay a worn-out futter, that the soul had broken and thrown away"—obedient to its Lord's call, to enter a higher rest and a better Home.

Dear Margaret! it is sweet to recall her testimony, which will ever be precious among the earthly records of the Home—"He has arranged it all so lovingly for me"; and to remember that there is a more enduring one in heaven, of the prayers of blessing on the Home, which rose from her dying lips.

And shall it not be one re-echoed by the living, and upborne upon the hearts of many, for the life-giving power of his presence to fall upon many a dead and weary soul within the walls of this Home, and for the full realization of his promise: "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually?"

OUR SERVANTS.

I THINK there is one little thing that every Christian can, and ought to do, for Jesus: it is this, to seek kindly and prayerfully the salvation of their servants' souls.

There are many young Christian ladies who from various circumstances are shut out from much active work and feel perhaps

"There is nothing I can do."

May I ask such—Have you spoken to your servants of the love of Jesus? or if you have done it once, and have not been very cordially received, have you grown disheartened? Ah! try again and again; remember the Lord Jesus was very long-suffering with you and me. How long did we keep Him waiting before we trusted Him?

Invalids, too, have many opportunities of speaking for Jesus to their servants; and they will value what you say, if they see you patient in suffering, grateful for their services to you, and not too hard to please.

Then there is another class of Christian ladies—they are very much occupied in the Lord's service, they are out most of the day, visiting in hospitals, teaching classes, mothers' meetings, &c. &c., and often come in weary. May I ask such to give a little time to the servants? You will find in the end how they will like it, and above all you may have the joy of leading a poor weary one to the Saviour.

There are many ways of working among our servants. I can't help thinking the first is by our lives; we little know how they watch us, our conversation at table, our manners, our dress, and above all, our behaviour to them—a hasty word, a harsh suspicious judgment, and we have done a great injury to them, and more than may be apparent at first sight, for when we wound their feelings, we lose our influence, and they doubt our Christianity, and the power of God. I have known of servants saying, "My mistress can't be a Christian and do so and so." Then let us live Christ before them in the little details of daily life, and so when we come to speak to them about their souls, they will believe that we have a power in us (1 John iv. 4).

Each of us knows what little opportunities we have of speaking to our servants; in some homes, some of the servants are always in on Sunday evenings, and perhaps they feel lonely, and have nothing to read, then won't you ask them to come and read with you next Sunday evening, and when they come, make them at ease, and set Jesus very clearly before them; and perhaps, you will find to your joy that servant is a sister in Christ, though you never knew it before; then you can help each other, knowing you have the one Master (Eph. vi. 9). In some cases an afternoon in the week is more convenient for them—suit them, for they are often hard worked. If you can, sing a hymn for them, it does so cheer them and attract them to come again. I would beg you not to be content with having your servants at family prayers, and seeing that they go to some place of worship on Sundays, but do speak to them individually, and when you can, let them go to special meetings.

Then when Christian mistresses are engaging new servants will you pray much about whom you are to take, and of course you will see some who do not suit—give them a little tract with a kindly word. When servants leave you, don't lose sight of them, get their address, and send them a letter sometimes, suited to their state of mind (as far as you know it), and also some papers like "The Herald of Mercy," or "The Christian Arabassador;" others will benefit by them, and it makes the poor things happy to feel they are not forgotten. Most of us may shortly meet with new servants, when we go for a summer change—to the country, seaside, or watering-place—then do remember the servants in hotels or lodgings, and give as little trouble as you can, and here again offer a little book, and tell what a dear Saviour and Friend Jesus is.

The Lord has led me to work thus with our servants, and lately when I heard of the death of one who had lived with us some time ago, I felt so thankful that she had been told, though in much weakness, of a present salvation. I have great hopes that she accepted Jesus, she certainly loved to hear of Him. Another, who has gone into a new situation, writes that she wishes she could come again and read and hear of Christ. But let our confidence be in God who promises Isaiah lv. 10-11.

Should this meet the eye of a believing servant, I have a word for you too. There is something you can do for the Lord. Do your work very thoroughly, be very obliging, and not self-seeking, and you will find the religion of Christ commended to your mistress and fellow-servants. Remember the little Syrian maid (2 Kings v. 2, 3): "Go and do thou likewise" (Luke x. 37).

PARISH WORK IN LANCASHIRE.

A MISSION specially to women and children has been carried on for about three years in the parish of St. Thomas, St. Helen's, Lancashire, and has been greatly blessed of God. There are five meetings each week, for women of all classes, and two children's meetings. The work was originally begun by deaconesses from the Liverpool Deaconesses' Home, who worked with great devotion among the women. Bible-classes, mothers' meetings, cottage meetings, children's prayer meetings, and children's Sunday evening school-room service, make up the sum of weekly meetings. The Bible-class numbers nearly 200 women of all ages. There is a mothers' meeting and a cottage meeting specially for the women of the very lowest class, who have been reached most successfully in a way I would earnestly recommend to ladies working among women. To some of the better class of working men's wives, earnest Christian women, I represented the sad state of many lost ones around them—reminding them of the blessing they, having received themselves, should try to make known to those careless ones. They agreed to bring them if possible to a cottage meeting and to a mothers' meeting, to be held in the evening for them. They go to their homes, call for them, and accompany them to the meetings—indeed I know they have sometimes to lead them clothes to come in, which they do rather than lose the opportunity of getting them within the sound of the Gospel. We began the movement in fear and trembling, dreading the possible behaviour of those rough women; but God heard our prayers. We have never had any rebellion, and some of these women have, I do trust, begun to live sober and steady lives; and we have great hope, with God's blessing, that more than one is permanently rescued and reformed.

We have also a meeting for girls, exactly on the same plan as our mothers' meetings. This has been most successful, and I wish it were carried on more generally. We get a great hold over the girls; they become attached to us, and having them all there quietly by themselves we can speak to them plainly and lovingly (at the Bible lesson, with which our meeting concludes) of their own peculiar trials and temptations.

This meeting should be made as lively as possible. We have a good deal of singing, and our girls sing well, and take great pleasure in learning new tunes, &c. On Sunday evening we have about 400 boys and girls. Here again the "respectable" children are trying to bring with them as many as possible of their little neighbours, too ragged, alas, for church-going.

The great secret of this work is, first, of course to ask God's blessing on all one und takes, and to wait for his leading; then to make it a missionary work. Let those you have every reason to hope are Christians be urged to begin at once to "bring a neighbour;" even little children do this. It is cheering indeed to see a woman come in to the Sunday Bible-class, followed by a friend, whom she will introduce with "Please, ma'am, that is my next neighbour, so I've brought her." The dear little ones, too, will try their best to bring in all they can—with such delighted faces when they succeed.

As a result of this work, many homes have been reformed, and are clean and tidy now. I look for this practical test. Some too have become communicants, and are bright and happy Christians. To God be all the praise!

I may add that I find a lady works best among the manufacturing classes. Indeed the large numbers that have to be met and spoken to make the work (in my husband's parish at all events) quite beyond an ordinary Bible woman—who would, however, be useful as an assistant. If I could be of use in giving any further particulars I should be glad to do so.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHING.

This is one of the most frequent ways in which young women work for Christ. They begin with ardent, longing hearts, which many, thank God, carry with them for ever—more ardent, more longing, more loving than at the first.

There are others, however, who find the interest gradually lessens; the difficulties increase; the children are noisy, impertinent, indifferent; and what was at setting forth a pleasure, becomes a hard duty. It is now, "I ought to go," "I ought to like it," "I ought to be interested," &c., instead of the pure outflowing of a soul that must work in this special way for Christ; that must have a share in gathering in the little ones of his flock.

I much want to say a word about this, as I know these two states so well, and God is so willing to teach us the remedy, and make it an increasingly joyful work.

The first great step is learning—knowing—that in one sense it is not your work at all; it is God's work: He is going to lead it in the very best possible way, and bring about the very best possible results. Have not you been thinking a little—perhaps unconsciously—that you were to lead it for Him, and that your leading would issue in these good results? Now put that thought away, and a great hindrance will be gone. It is God's work, and He will not let it suffer: submit yourself most entirely to his blessed, loving, wise leading. Do not think of you and Him working side by side, but of you working under Him. It is the same thing, and yet, perhaps, the latter words help us to understand it more easily. Discouragements, difficulties, disappointments, must come. To the end of the world boys will be boys—some full of fun and mischief, some rude, some noisy, some dull; and girls will also be the same as in the past—some vain, some stupid, some all impressionable for the moment, some hard, &c. But when these things come, do not forget that God, the Father Almighty of you and these children, is going to do wonders both with you and with them.

When you feel that you cannot possibly manage them—when you think that all your influence is gone—do not think the work of grace is at an end. Perhaps it is just begun: perhaps God had to teach you your incapacity before He could show you his power.

Expect great things from Him, for Him; do not imagine the disappointment and sorrow are all on your side. When you are grieved about a child, think that God is far more grieved; when you are anxious, remember He who gave his very life is far more anxious. Trust in that living, loving power, and, come what may, fear not.

There can be no room for fear if our hearts are right open to God, and we are walking faithfully towards Him.

Strive for a quiet, firm rule over your class. Inward perturbation or irritability communicates itself to the children. The quieter you are yourself, the more will the firmness tell. Patience subdues far more certainly than noise. Do not be for ever finding fault—it makes the fault of small importance; it is better sometimes even not to notice a thing than call special attention to it. Yet do not be afraid of a sound rebuke when it is justly needed.

Be very sure you yourself know what you are going to teach before you begin, and give your best every time. More and more the conviction seems growing of the utter uselessness and even of the hardening effects of teaching bare facts. A great amount of Bible knowledge will not necessarily serve a child of itself; children cannot easily apply things, or quickly see their connection. Aim to implant every fact, not as a simple fact, but as something of special importance to them—something which they will be the better for knowing; do not let them think the Bible incidents are told at random.

It is a matter of much pain to most teachers, the glib way in which children rattle off the Gospel truths, showing plainly they are mere words, to which they attach no very definite meaning.

Will not the only remedy be to teach the Law to a child; to strive to educate the conscience to see what sin is; that it is sin, whether in children or grown people, which must separate from God? Teach the Gospel, but show from what it saves, and why it saves, or it will lose its truth and strength.

If possible, visit the fathers and mothers. It makes a great difference in your teaching, it is a check on the children, an interest to the parents. It gives a kindly affectionate feeling; to all; parents like to be consulted and talked to about their children, and like to feel that you desire their help. If possible, never complain; let your visit be a pleasure, and gradually they will second you in all your aims.

Seek opportunities occasionally to talk to each child alone. Don't let them think they are just "a class," but teach them there is a special bond besides—"You and I." It must be a very rare case that will altogether resist such appeals; be as careful in making them as if you were speaking to the most refined person in the land. However rough, or even low, children are, Nature preserves a chord of simple goodness in every heart; touch that, and the child will know there is such a thing as the possibility of a better life. Try to foster a feeling of responsibility, especially in the elder ones; let them feel they can help you; that you look to them; want to trust them if possible.

And is it wise to praise for always doing right? It sometimes seems to make right, in one sense, a cheap thing, and in another, an expensive thing, instead of the grand, noble thing it is,—standing by itself, just because it is right. Probably circumstances and differences of character can alone teach this.

Then, above all, pray for your class, not only collectively, but individually. Talk to your Father in heaven about the one that will laugh and make such capital jokes, and the one that will fidget, and the one that won't speak, just as you tell it to your neighbour. Your neighbour cannot do much to help you, if anything: "with God all things are possible." Expect the conversion of the children; surely He who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," expects it.

If you have never seen a child's conversion, and do not feel able to believe in it, ask Him to teach you about it. He is most tender and merciful in answering such prayers. The thing that will grieve Him most will be for you to grow discouraged and faint-hearted; it seems to say that He has forgotten you and them. Do put all uneasiness away, and trust

Him to lead and teach you aright, and to instruct those children of his wisely. You cannot have faith either in yourself or the children, but you can have faith in God for both of you. Trust Him; trust that living, loving, almighty Father. Satan's desire is to hinder you by making you discouraged and undecided; all he can put into your heart about yourself or the children is very probably less than the truth—acknowledge it; say, it's all true, but God is on my side; it is His work; I am going His way; following His commands; I am working under Him, and I will not, dare not, fear.

SINGING IN HOSPITALS.

A short time ago, one of my friends and I began to visit the sick wards of the workhouse in our town. It has proved such blessed happy work, that I venture to send this suggestion to THE CHRISTIAN, in the hope that some others may be encouraged to do the same in their own neighbourhood.

The first time we went we sang a number of Mr. Sankey's hymns, and these formed a good introduction, as the people evidently liked them, and asked for more. It was so easy to speak of the precious truths expressed in the words of the hymns, after singing; and we went from one to another, just having a few minutes with each. We always sing a little, and the very sick ones tell us how in the night often the words ring in their ears, and help them to bear the pain. The convalescent room is very interesting, and here it is possible to speak to the whole, and read or have prayer with them, as one sees fit. Of course, no rule or plan can be laid down, but all needed wisdom, strength, knowledge and guidance in these things, we have, in answer to believing prayer. I could tell of many touching cases and of much blessing, but I must not in this short account. I think if six or even fewer could arrange to go in turn, two together, if more could not regularly, it would not only be a help and comfort to the poor lonely inmates of our workhouse, but prove a real help and joy to any who will take up this work. We have found it to be so, and often have come away from the sad scene of suffering, strengthened and refreshed in our own souls. Our God is faithful to his own promise, "He that watereth shall be watered also himself."

BRIGHTON AND HOVE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

DURING several years of Sunday-school teaching, it was constantly an anxious thought with the writer as to what became of the mass of our Sunday scholars, when they grew beyond the influence of their early instruction. This led to the commencement of a Bible-class for young women over sixteen, made known by the circulation of small printed bills.

Five young women were thus first gathered together in April, 1857. Reading round was quickly ascertained to be a decided hindrance, and singing was soon instituted at the beginning and close. A small lending library, given out monthly, was shortly set on foot. It was felt, that to be successful, the meetings must be carried on as little like a Sunday-school class as possible, and therefore, as numbers increased, no register of names was taken beyond that of those who held a library book. Cards of the class were for a time circulated by the members in different localities. In the course of time it was found that great objections were raised so long as the meeting was not held on unsectarian ground. So, a few years back, a separate room was rented, capable of seating eighty persons. And, for the sake of strangers especially, it was found expedient to have a name, which was then put up at the windows; and during the time of the Sunday meeting, from 3.30 to 4.30, a board is put out at the door, thus giving passers-by a welcome.

There is also a meeting for singing, with an harmonium, every Tuesday evening, followed by a prayer-meeting; and on Thursday evening the room is opened for those who wish for the opportunity of personal conversation. The average attendance on the Tuesdays is from fifteen to twenty, and on the Sundays from sixty to seventy. For the advantage of many who can come only on alternate Sundays, it has been found most beneficial to take subjects from the Old and New Testaments alternately. The library, which hitherto has been perfectly free, contains 300 volumes, and is given out before and after the Sunday meeting once a month. A tract or little book is also given to each one on passing out. All the work is voluntary, and, except with the kind and unsolicited aid of a few friends, the expenses are met by those who benefit from the meetings.

The chief feature of the work is, that it is thoroughly unsectarian, the members coming from all sections of the Christian community—love to the Lord Jesus, and to young women for His sake, being the one bond that unites us; and as our needs have never failed to be met, so we conclude the Lord would have this little corner of his vineyard continue to be occupied. Finding many young women get no other opportunity for Christian instruction than this Sunday afternoon meeting, it has merged into a simple service; and since the blessing of the Lord has undoubtedly rested on all the work carried on in his name, to Him be all the glory.

A SUCCESSFUL COFFEE-ROOM.

WITH regard to special branches of work for those of us who have truly given our hearts to the Lord, I should like to suggest one in which I have myself been much interested during the past eighteen months, and in which the Lord has granted us much success. I refer to a coffee-room for working men. This room was opened one autumn to meet the needs of our poor men in these various ways:—For breakfast, many having hitherto been obliged to go to the public-house for their early meal before going to their day's work, and thus commencing their day on beer, or perhaps some strong spirit. For dinner, or any other meal during the day. For a sitting-room, where they might turn in at any time, as a refuge perhaps, from the noisy, comfortless homes in which too many live; or from the public-houses, where so many are absolutely ruined both in soul and body. As a refuge, too, from the thousand temptations that beset the working man, in the shape of evil companions, the ridicule of scoffers, and the blighting influence of the language so constantly heard at the corners of the streets.

Our rooms are open from 5 a.m. till 10 p.m. each day in the week, except Sunday, and a warm welcome afforded to all who like to enter. That all may feel perfectly at home in coming in and out of the building, no charge is made, except for the food sold: Coffee, 1d. a cup; bread-and-butter, ½d. or 1d.; dinner, 6d. or 8d.; besides coffee, gingerbeer, lemonade, syrups, tea and cocoa, are sold to a great extent among the people—beer and spirits being always excluded.

These rooms have been so strongly appreciated, and so much sought after by the class of men for whom they were opened, that they are now far too small for us.

Attached to the men's coffee-room we have a similar room for boys, in which books and games are provided. During the winter months and on wet evenings in summer this room, too, has been always over-crowded, the boys welcoming most heartily any effort made for their good, such as reading aloud, hymn-singing, or quiet conversation about the loving Saviour who cares for the boys. Many of these poor fellows have been won to Him, through the peaceful, happy influence of these hours, when, as one of them said, "It's all good, and there isn't temptation."

But this brings me to the point, on which I believe truly rests all the success we are enjoying, and from which we still expect far greater things. And this is the prominent place The Bible has taken in our machinery.

On every table we have a very large print Bible, and a Testament of large size with Psalms. These are in constant use, and are greatly valued by the poor men; even at their hasty five o'clock breakfast a hand is stretched out to grasp "the Book," and "just a verse" taken before the early start to a hard day's labour. How many a heart has been cheered and comforted by the precious sentence, often repeated to one and another during the day, and carried back again to the coffee-room at night—"I just want to look up that nice word I saw this morning." Every night, too, the rooms are closed with prayer and singing, and perhaps a few verses of Scripture. This is always kindly received, if cheerfully and pleasantly introduced and made very short; we commence this at a quarter before ten, making it last only a few minutes: and as it is the rule of the evening no one objects, though occasionally a man may walk out as we begin, thus making his quiet protest against the proceeding. A very little persuasion, however, at perhaps some other and quieter opportunity, generally convinces him that "as God has so graciously given us the room, it is our duty to thank Him for it, and our privilege to ask his best blessings for ourselves." Over these two coffee-rooms we have others of a corresponding size, in which meetings, for reading the Scripture, prayer, and singing—all very short and homely—are held twice a week; a Bible-class for the men only, once a week; in winter, a night school, twice a-week; and, every Saturday night, a very popular gathering for practising Mr. Sankey's hymns.

These hymns are great favourites, and are constantly asked for in the coffee-room, the poor men often saying, "Oh, is it time to close! we could go on all night with the singing!"

The men who are engaged in serving the coffee, and taking a general care of the work, are all bright and earnest Christians, and full of interest in those who attend the coffee-room and meetings. "Love ye the strangers," is also quite one of their daily mottoes, and is strongly manifested in their care for the poor wayfarers who, from time to time, drop in, often meeting a kind and cheering word, or the helping hand of a fellow-man, just to lead them to the Saviour, whose heart is love, and whose power is greater than the power of strong drink.

In visiting the coffee-room one evening, I saw a man sitting alone by one of the tables. "How are you getting on?" I said to him; receiving rather a hesitating answer, I asked if he had tried the happiness of serving the Lord Jesus, when he said, "Well, miss, I find rightouances a very hard job!" and in saying so, expressed what multitudes of our poor as well as rich neighbours are feeling at this moment.

Will our sisters not carry a message of love to these weary hearts? a message of power and victory over sin through a conquering Saviour? a message of joy and peace through the indwelling presence of a Holy Comforter? Your message will be well received—"fear not"—on Jehovah's arm you may safely lean, while you go forth steadily and patiently to this all-important work.

In concluding, I ought to mention that though the tone of our rooms is scriptural, we have general reading for the people, large musical boxes, stereoscopes, a model electric telegraph, galvanic batteries, microscope, graphoscope, &c., as well as quantities of games of different kinds, excluding cards and dice, of course, as this would, or might, induce to gambling, which, even on a small scale, would be objectionable.

By general reading, I mean books of various kinds, with which friends have generously supplied us—also the daily papers, and various popular magazines. The walls are covered with maps, texts, and pictures, and the place generally is as attractive and as comfortable as we can possibly make it.

If the Lord will graciously incline the hearts of some of his people to take up this or some similar work, my object in thus writing will have been accomplished. In commencing such an undertaking, however, let me suggest that much prayer should be offered, and much wisdom sought for the arrangement of each detail; a devoted heart being the first essential to success.

Let me commit this paper to the prayerful consideration and loving effort of your lady readers.

RESCUED AND RAISED.

SEEING in THE CHRISTIAN for June 17 an invitation to young women to give some account of their Christian work, I thought I would say a few words about ours, to help and encourage those who are beginning to work, and with whom it may be "the day of small things."

About four years ago we were led to reside in a neighbourhood where there were a great many girls and children too ignorant and ragged to go to an ordinary Sunday-school. At the suggestion of some friends, three of us, one Sunday afternoon, held a children's meeting in a poor woman's kitchen. There were thirty-six of them present, boys, girls, and infants. We did not do much besides singing and telling; them a few little tales, &c. We continued there for a few weeks, till the numbers made it necessary that we should seek increased accommodation. We took a house, and had the three divisions of boys, girls, and infants in separate rooms. We soon found the girls' department becoming very important, and after due consideration decided to give up the boys' class. Since then we have had a steady increase of members, and also of interest; we have had to change our premises several times. Now we have nine teachers instead of three, and a school of about 100 girls, exclusive of infants. Of these several are young married women, and above twenty are young women employed in manufactories; many of them, especially during the meetings held here by Mr. Moody, have definitely decided for Christ, and are seeking as far as they can to bring others to Him.

Our plan is very simple. We commence our school with singing and prayer, using generally Mr. Sankey's hymns: then two of the classes draw off to their own rooms, and we have Scripture teaching for about three-quarters of an hour. Then we all join again, and sing a new hymn, a verse of which has been learnt in the separate classes during the time for teaching; we then read some nice book for about a quarter of an hour, generally one of the "Jessica's First Prayer" series, and conclude with singing and prayer. The whole takes us from three o'clock till half-past four. Of course this is merely the outline of the Sunday work; it necessarily involves a great deal more than appears of personal effort and influence during the week. One indirect result of the work of the last four years is that the school has risen from the condition of a ragged school, in which it began, to nearly that of an ordinary Sunday-school, except that a class of girls attend which it would be difficult to bring into a school with younger and better-educated children.

DRIED FLOWERS.—"The old people in our district have greatly valued some bouquets of dried flowers and ferns which we arranged for them during our absence from home last summer. They were very roughly done, but nevertheless were thought worthy of a frame in each house. It occurred to us that perhaps you might suggest the same to other ladies, who would be glad to provide pleasure for the poor during their summer rambles."—M. S.

BE CONSISTENT.

Be consistent, worldly maiden,
Thou art this world's willing guest;
Do not spoil thy pretty pleasure,
Do not leave the pretty quest
Of all this world can give thee,
For it will be thy best.

Be consistent! Think! Thy world-work
Is to weave a pretty snare;
Is to help thy sweet companions
Prove the ways of sin are fair,
And, with clever perseverance,
Disguise the fact of care.

Be consistent! Canst thou listen
To God's Word, or kneel to pray,
Knowing that thou dost not love Him,
Moaning nothing thou dost say?
And, except as Fashion sanctioned,
Never kept a Sabbath day?

Keep consistent, worldly maiden!
Hast thou any time to spare
For thoughts of Jesus Christ, or heaven?
Wilt thou ever meet Him there?
This world's swift joys are passing,
And thou art going—Where?

Keep consistent, worldly maiden!
Half-hearted worldlings know
Nothing of this world's pleasure
From dread of that world's woe.
Grasp eagerly the Present:
What will the Future show?

God says—"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Luke xvi. 13.)

God advises—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." (Josh. xxiv. 15.)

God pleads—"Wilt thou not from this time cry unto Me, My Father, Thou art the Guide of my youth." (Jer. iii. 4.)

A WEEKLY MEETING IN DUNDEE.

More than a year ago a weekly meeting for young women was begun in Dundee, which, under Divine blessing, has been eminently successful to the strengthening of many Christians and the ingathering of immortal souls. Knowing that the record of the work is written in heaven, no particular notice of the meetings, or the origin of them, has till now been forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN, but my attention having been drawn by one of the young women—an active worker—to the paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN, asking any worker to send a short account of special work, I am constrained, in the love of Him who has done so much for us, to yield to the request, and tell what great things the Lord has done for us in blessing specially a simple act of faith.

Change of residence having for a time, to some extent, lessened my sphere of Christian usefulness for many months previous to our dear friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit here, a desire was raised in my heart that the Lord would open for me some new work in the great vineyard. For some time I continued pleading earnestly, that He who putteth forth his own and goeth before them would make the path plain and open the way. At last, when the American evangelists were here, doing so much for young men, my thoughts were turned in Christian love to the young women, many of them hard-working, toiling ones, and I remembered that they, too, had never-dying souls. In dependence upon the Lord, I resolved to open a weekly meeting for them, mentioned my intention to a few, but not with dis-

BE CONSISTENT.

Be consistent, Christian maiden!
For thou too art this world's guest,
Under protest of its pleasure,
Knowing it is not thy best.
And all that it can give thee
Cannot be worth thy quest,

Be consistent! For thy mission
Is to break the fatal snare
Woven round thy sweet companions,
And prove to them how fair
That heart and life must be
With Jesus dwelling there!

Be consistent! Thou canst listen
To God's Word. Canst kneel to pray,
Glad that thou mayst love Him—
Mayst mean what thou dost say—
Mayst keep in dear remembrance
Thy risen Saviour's day.

Keep consistent, Christian maiden!
Hast thou time to play with sin,
Or trifle with the sinner, when
It is thy work lost souls to win—
Win for Jesus—and He waits
These souls to welcome in?

Keep consistent, Christian maiden!
Whole-hearted Christians know
All of this world's true pleasure,
Nothing of that world's woe.
Glad work for Christ—Heaven's Present,
What will Heaven's Future show!

couragement—was told by a missionary that I shouldn't succeed in getting young women in Dundee to take part in meetings. I replied: "You don't know what the young women of Dundee may do." Still leaning on and trusting in an unfailing Guide, lifting my heart to Him who knoweth all things, I sent out invitations to a few young friends to attend a prayer-meeting at my house. We spent a precious time together at the mercy-seat, and agreed to insert a short advertisement in newspapers intimating a weekly meeting for young women. It gradually increased and prospered, the hall in winter months being filled. One Christian young woman after another came to the meeting, felt blessed, and engaged in the work—one in particular, whom I called on before beginning the work, gave no encouragement, and would not promise to attend or give any assistance; one evening, however, she was led to come to the meeting, and, to use her own words afterwards, she felt she could not then remain away, so sensible was she of the nearness and power of the Lord amongst us. Others have said it is the most blessed meeting they attend, coming as they do to be blessed, as well as give a blessing, Christians often bringing unconverted friends along with them. The meetings are conducted in a very simple way. Very often, at the beginning, there is a pause, when all Christians can ask for a blessing—the pause is generally followed by vocal prayer and praise; a portion of Scripture is read, and a few remarks made; then those present are affectionately invited and encouraged to speak a word for Jesus. We have found no diffidence on the part of the young women of Dundee, whose hearts are burning with love for souls, in speaking to the unconverted, and pleading with believers to be more diligent.

During winter the young women received fresh impetus from a course of earnest practical addresses by Mrs. Baxter, of London, who was invited to Dundee by several Christians interested in young women. An illness has prevented my being present at the weekly meeting regularly for a considerable time, but the daughter of the United States Consul, who voluntarily offered her help, has taken a prominent part in the work and has carried it on heartily.

One of the most successful of our meetings was a tea meeting for the poor in the winter—the simple story of Jesus and his love from the lips of the young women themselves relating their own experiences under the power of the Holy Spirit, penetrated many hard and stony hearts, and a number were blessed. Hour after hour passed, and it was difficult to bring the meeting to a close. We ourselves could exclaim "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." One poor woman under conviction of sin said, "The tale of one of the young women went right to my heart." In engaging in this glorious work I feel it a privilege to admit that I have received more blessing from the young women than I have given them, realizing that they who water others shall be abundantly watered themselves. Young women as well as others require much loving sympathy; let the Christian who engages in the harvest field sympathize with those amongst whom she works, not only in the meetings but out of the meetings. Let them be invited to her house, and let them feel that they have a friend to whom they can come in trouble, for many may be without father or mother. No social position is lost thereby, for hath not God chosen the poor in this world rich in faith? and are we not all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus? Do not many fail in their attempts to do good because they will not humble themselves, and become the "servants of all," whom the Scriptures declare to be the greatest? Would it not be well for those engaged in special work amongst young women to have the greater part of the meetings open and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit? They, too, we believe, will find many willing and able, as we have done, to pour out their souls in prayer, and give a word in season to those who are strangers to the covenant of grace through the ability which the Lord alone can give.

Let there be perfect liberty—no restraint; for "where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty," and leaning on and trusting in Jesus, the only sure Foundation—the Rock of Ages—"with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning," sinners will, as we have experienced, be converted unto Him who died for them; many will be found with eager, anxious countenances inquiring the way of life and salvation; their faces will be seen to exchange a sigh for a smile, sorrow for gladness, darkness for light, when the glorious Gospel of Christ shines into their hearts, and one after another will be heard to say, "Jesus is mine." EXPERIENCE OF A NURSE.

DEAR SIR,—I have often felt a longing to join with those who are engaged in special efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ, but being one amongst hundreds of domestic servants (a nurse), I have very little time I can call my own, night or day, none for outdoor special efforts. And yet, in answer to the prayer, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" I have found work for Him. One thing that I was led to do, was to walk home from chapel alone with some young women, and speak to them of their soul's salvation (some of them I persuaded to go with me, as they seldom attended any church in particular); and I believe, as a result, several have been brought to Jesus—although not instantaneously. I have made each of them an object of definite prayer, and led them on step by step, writing passages of Scripture on paper for them to read at home.

Some of them, when opportunity offered, I have taken alone to the throne of grace, and pleaded with and for them there; and I believe in the hands of all I have placed a little book.

Some I have helped by conversation, others by writing to them, previously seeking Divine guidance. Some I have lost sight of; others I have followed up for eight, five, or four years; I lose sight of none if I can help it, for I believe in the promise, "In due time ye shall reap if ye faint not." I believe God has enabled me by so doing, to help them out of slippery paths, and to cling closer to Christ. Some of these have led others to Christ, and those others, still more, thus helping to extend the kingdom.

Other things have suggested themselves, which I have followed, such as making a garment for some needy person, or writing text flower-holders. These things sometimes demand some amount of sacrifice, such as rising early on a summer morning, but there is not much love where there is no sacrifice.

Another work has been to collect money for various needy causes, not from house to house, as some do; I have no opportunity for that, but just by asking those with whom I am brought in contact. I have always laid it before the Lord before beginning, and He has always given me more than I could ask or think. Even a nurse can sometimes spare a few minutes after leaving public worship, to visit a sick person, when there is no infection. A few days ago I visited a dying woman, who has since gone to her rest. She was an acute sufferer, and too ill for me to read to her, but seemed thankful to grasp at the precious promises I repeated to her. I visited another, paralyzed and helpless. She said with tears in her eyes, "I am no use, I can do nothing." I said, "They also serve Him that wait, and can glorify Him by doing so patiently and cheerfully." The Christian smiled through her tears, and said, "Yea, yes, 'He doeth all things well,' this must be best for me."

These are but little things, but the lonely Christian woman in her retirement longs to do something for Him who has given his life for her, and scarcely knows what to do, when time and opportunity are not given for regular work.

And can we not do something for Jesus by striving to add to the peace and happiness of a household by rendering a cheerful loving service to those by whom we are surrounded?

And are not the children of the rich placed beneath our care and influence for the first five or six years of their life? Can we not make our nursery a nursery for heaven? I think some of us try to do so, and pray over our little ones, when they have prayerless parents; here we sometimes meet with difficulties, but can thank God He has promised wisdom to all who seek it. I wish nurses had as much of the prayers of the Church as Sabbath-school teachers have, I am sure we need it; and I cannot help thinking, as the little ones cling to us with as much love as if we were their mother, that our influence and training must in some degree help to form the character of those who shall some day be the great men and women of the world. That they may be good as well as great is the earnest prayer of

CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.

"I was naked and ye clothed Me."—Matt. xxv. 26.

It is probable that these pages may fall into the hands of some who are longing to be actively engaged in the Lord's work, but, from home duties or circumstances, are unable to undertake anything that involves their being much out of the house. There is a very simple but useful way of doing good that I would propose for such—to make clothes for the poor. Do you not know some destitute child or family who would be truly grateful for any garment that you might be able to make for them? What joy it brings to the heart of the sorrowing and forlorn little one as she trots off to school in a nice new frock, no longer feeling that she is unfit to mingle with the other children! And how the poor lonely widow's heart is cheered as she is warmed and comforted by the flannel petticoat the kind "young lady" made for her. She feels she is no more wholly forsaken; there is still some one who cares to work for her.

How frequently, also, these gifts, if prayerfully bestowed, might be the means of reaching the hearts of some of these sadly neglected ones—the little frock might be the instrument used of God to show the child the love of Him who is willing and waiting to clothe her in the robe of His righteousness.

Besides working at home in this way for the outcasts, it has been found a very useful plan to have working parties amongst the poor children themselves. Get them thoroughly interested in some institution for children, tell them as many stories as you can about the inmates. They will soon gladly give up their half-holiday to work for those who they hear are poorer than themselves. They have a peculiar sympathy with those who are without a natural home. Many times, as I have looked at the members of our own party, have I thought how it must gladden the heart of the loving Saviour to see these dear girls, many of them truly working from love to Himself, giving their time and their money (for they deny themselves to help in this way also) for those who enjoy even fewer of the comforts of life than they do. The meeting is held once a fortnight; the work is all cut out and prepared at home by the young lady who superintends the children. It is found well to read an interesting book aloud, and when the little workers show signs of getting tired, let them choose a favourite hymn and sing it together, or tell them any interesting story you may have heard since last seeing them. Every attempt should be made to keep the meeting as fresh and bright and cheerful as possible, so that the working party may be looked forward to with real pleasure by each little member.

If any who wish to consecrate their leisure hours for needlework to their Lord do not themselves know any poor people to work for, it may be well to mention that clothes for children are always acceptable at Mr. Toye's Home for Orphans, George-terrace, Lewisham-road, Greenwich; at Miss Mittendorf's Home for Destitute Children, 6, Kilburn-gardens; at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry, Spitalfields, and many other institutions or missions among the poor. Mr. Toye's work is one of deep interest, but is little known; there are about sixty children supported in simple dependence on God, and any help in the way of clothes or contributions will greatly cheer this devoted, self-sacrificing worker.

THE "BIRD'S NEST."

THE "Bird's Nest" is a home for destitute little children. It was opened in October, 1859, by the late Mrs. George Wale, then Miss B. Whately. It was the last labour of a short life devoted to the service of God. The Institution is left as a legacy to those who wish to follow the example of Him who "gathers the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom;" who willetth not that any should perish; but that even little children from the "highways and hedges" may be brought in and taught the way everlasting.

Are there not some children in happy homes who love the Saviour willing to work for Him?

The "Bird's Nest" is almost supported by children and young people, and any child or party of children collecting £7 per year can support one child. If any one who reads this would like to know more about the Nest and work for it, if they will write to Miss Davies, 36, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, she will be very pleased to send them collecting cards and some "Bird's Nest" stories. The "Bird's Nest" receives children from all parts of Ireland. It is situated in a very pleasant spot at Kingstown, near Dublin.

Dear children, remember our loving Saviour's words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

COMMUNION.

FATHER! fold Thine arms around me,
Press me closer to Thy breast;
There, a little child, I'm lying,
Knowing now a perfect rest.

Glancing upward! I am reading
All the hidden tale of love;
Love too deep to find expression,
Save in yonder home above.

With Thy voice of tender meaning
Falling on my raptured ear,
Every doubting thought is vanished,
Fled away is all my fear.

Leaving all for Thee to manage
In Thine own most perfect way,
All the darkness of my journey
Thou art smiling into day.

'Tis Thy pierced hand that brings me
Every cup of joy or pain;
Loving Saviour! I will drink it,
And return it Thee again.

Never should I know the pressure
Of Thy sweet eternal arms,
If I were not sometimes timid
Of the cruel world's alarms.

But it sends me closer to Thee,
As I shelter 'neath Thy wing;
And I hear the Father teaching
His poor "little one" to sing.

Oh! the sweetness of that lesson,
Learnt when we are quite alone;
Thou, my heavenly Lover, wooing
All this heart to be Thine own.

None can tell the heaven within me,
As I lean upon Thine arm;
Nor can see the wondrous reason
Of so sweet an inward calm.

'Tis Thy peace, my God, that floweth
As a river through my soul;
'Tis the Sabbath of believing;
Perfect Love will keep me whole.

LITTLE THINGS.—May I earnestly press upon all young women the duty and pleasure of perfect faithfulness in the small engagements of life? "Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? . . . He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not" (Ps. xxi. 1, 4). David is speaking of those with whom, because they are in Christ, "old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new"—all things, from those we consider the highest, to those which we—often mistakenly—consider the lowest. It is an almost universally acknowledged fault with women, that they make engagements and appointments, and fulfil them or not at their own convenience. Now, however we may argue, an appointment is an appointment, and to break it is a fault, and wrong. Do you think that when the Lord Jesus Christ said He would do anything while He was on earth, those to whom He spoke had not the slightest idea if He would do it or not, and had to reiterate their desires again and again? It is a slur upon women that they are not to be depended upon; that the engagement to pay a visit, to lend, or return a book, to carry a message, to see a physician or dentist, is frequently as easily broken as made. Should not we who bear the name of Christ act in the spirit of Christ? Of Him it is written, "He pleased not Himself." Now, must not we, at any inconvenience, so act that it shall be one of the signs of a Christian woman—as it is the sign of so many upright business-men—that those about us have the utmost confidence in our word, and promise?

MISSION HOMES IN PARIS.

WHILST lately in Paris, unusual opportunity was afforded me not only of investigating the organization of the Home for Governesses, but I was a guest at one of the local gatherings which Mrs. Forbes, wife of the British Chaplain, has kindly inaugurated to relieve the life of daily toil which governesses undergo. On this occasion I met over fifty governesses, and it is on their united testimony of the value this Home is to them all, and of the individual care Mrs. Forbes exercises in their behalf, that I would especially found its claim to continued support.

A glance at the relative positions of shop and servant girls will serve to prove that the original mission for the former is now, if possible, more needful than ever, as their very engagements depend on their classification being separately maintained.

This was a point many of the governesses I conversed with begged me, if possible, to draw public attention to, assuring me that, in several instances, they had suffered from employers fearing that, while out of a situation, they had been resident in a Home of mixed class associates.

It may be well for friends unacquainted with the existence of this Home, or who may have merged its individuality with the New Mission in Paris (which I myself did till lately), to give here a slight sketch of its organization.

The Home for English Governesses was established in Paris in 1864, and it is now at No. 69, Avenue Wagram. Although small and unpretentious, making up only about twelve beds, it yet seems sufficient to meet the need of as many governesses as are generally found to be out of their situations at one time. To such it offers temporary residence at the nominal charge of two francs a day each, and every assistance in seeking another sphere of independence.

The internal arrangements and economic management of the Home are admirable, so much so that it might be taken as a model for similar institutions.

The cost of this Home at Paris does not exceed 300 francs a year, a portion of which sum is met by the payments of the inmates, whilst the benefit it confers are as follows:

1st. Its existence serves as a check to employers against much of the oppression which, before it was opened, was brought to light.

2nd. Last year it afforded temporary residence to eighty-four governesses while in search of situations, and gave further advice and assistance to 2000 applications from the same class who sought its shelter.

On Sundays it serves as a resting-place between services to governesses who live at a distance from the English church, whilst such as have engagements in Roman Catholic families, can, if they are spared, pass a quiet Sabbath holiday at the Home.

A lending library is attached to the Home, and once a week Dr. Forbes holds a Bible-class there.

Of Mrs. Forbes's heart-interest in her work I need hardly

She not only devotes her time and strength to its need, but is ever ready at any exterior call from its members to care for them as though they were her own children. I myself was present at a dinner party at her own house, when, news being suddenly sent to her from a school two miles off to say the English teacher was stricken down with typhoid fever, she instantly excused herself to her guests, and repaired to the invalid's side—a visit which was daily repeated till the young person was out of danger.

I desire to induce visitors to Paris to go and see it, and judge for themselves of its merits.

The Christian.

"FORBEARING ONE ANOTHER IN LOVE."

THERE is a story told of a husband and wife who were childless. One evening, as they sat and talked of their disappointed hopes, they began to consider how they would bring up their children if they had any. They agreed as to the first two or three, but after this their views became more and more divergent, until they actually quarrelled, and the controversy became so hot that it resulted in their separation.

We know not whether the story be true or false, but there seems to be a possibility among Christians now of a controversy equally foolish, and with results no less disastrous.

All true Christians are agreed that God has set the perfect example of Christ before us, that we should follow his steps; and that Christ has said, "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." We are all convinced that each member of the body is necessary to the welfare and growth in grace of the whole; and yet, instead of setting ourselves to follow Christ and to go on unto perfection, we are drifting into a controversy as to whether we ever can be perfect, and as to how far we can travel on the journey which we have scarcely begun.

That there has by the grace of God arisen in very many of his children a desire for deeper knowledge of the mind of the Spirit, and a truer fellowship with the Father and the Son, is thankfully recognized; and to help one another to fulfil this desire after God is the responsibility of all true Christians.

But Satan, true to his antecedents, seeks to divide us at the very outset. Are we to let him have his own way? There are men of acute reasoning power on one side, and there are men of gracious disposition on the other; these two kinds of men are mutually necessary; shall we not, by all our desire for the glory of God, who commands the blessing where brethren dwell together in unity, earnestly draw near to the Throne of Grace concerning this, and in doing so draw near to one another?

It would seem to be true that there are two platforms of Christian life, and that believers may be divided into two classes—those who are in the spirit of bondage under law, and those who have apprehended the grace of the Gospel dispensation. But it does not necessarily follow that the latter walk more closely with God; it is possible for one with less light to be more pleasing to Him than his more enlightened brother—just as a Reubenite, dwelling beyond Jordan, might have been more really longing after God than a high priest who entered into the secret place of the Most High. And it is patent to those who are looking on, that some who make no claim to the "higher life" are really walking on their high places like hinds with equalled feet (2 Sam. xxii. 34), while some who do claim the higher life are really on the lower plains. While, therefore, it is true that there is a higher and a lower experience, it is also true that only God can truly assign to each believer his real place.

A speciality of doctrine or of experience is strength to a party, but it is weakness to the Church of God. In order to the success of a special movement, it must have a banner with some definite gathering-cry; but a "movement" within the Church only means division and a sect, and the mind of the Spirit is not an imperium in imperio, but the edifying of the body of Christ.

To justify the higher position claimed by some, experience has been stated, which has frequently only shown that the Gospel has been more fully apprehended, and that an advance has been made from a legal and wilderness condition to a knowledge of the grace in which all Christians stand. In connexion with this, there has sometimes been a tendency to exalt experience above the Scripture, and to set before others a particular form of experience as the "higher Christian life," which is as erroneous as it would be to teach the unconverted that a sensibly sudden conversion was the only true one.

Another weak point has been the tendency to tone down our conceptions of sin and holiness to meet our own experience. This is a very grave error, and on the highway to a fall.

Another mistake has been the dwelling on holiness without equal reference to righteousness. Righteousness is the visible fruit of which holiness is the hidden root; and the only proof to others of our holiness is not profession of holiness, but manifestation of righteousness.

But, on the other hand, there is a most real and substantial truth at the foundation of the teaching to which we are referring, and it is this: that Christ risen is the power of our life, just as Christ crucified is the propitiation for our sins. And because the risen Saviour has been glorified by a fuller and simpler trust in Him, the Holy Spirit has been more largely given; and thousands of Christians have been filled to overflowing, who before were dwelling in a dry and thirsty land.

It would have been better if those who have manifested such decided hostility as has been shown, had sought, like Barnabas, to see the grace of God in their brethren, and tried to find how much of truth there was in them, and to how small dimensions the differences which separated them could be reduced.

But we hope this controversy will not be fanned into a flame. Some of the old quarrels that wrought so much mischief in our fathers' days have lost their virus now. Surely this generation need not invent another, and transmit to our children the folly and the sorrow of a controversy about holiness. May the God of all grace prevent us.

PERTH ANNUAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.—This Conference will be held, if the Lord will, as usual, in the City Hall here, on Tuesday, August 31; and on Wednesday and Thursday, September 1 and 2. The arrangements for the present year are somewhat different from those of former years. It is proposed that on the second day the Conference should meet continuously from eleven to four o'clock; that the subjects and the chairmen should be changed every hour; that the chairmen's addresses should be restricted to a quarter of an hour each, and that during the rest of the hour the meeting should be open for remarks, or prayers, or praise, but none to exceed five minutes. The committee have thought that this will introduce greater variety, promote mutual fellowship, and give an opportunity to brethren who have come to the meeting without special invitation to take a part in the Conference. We shall hope to have your presence; and we ask your prayers, with those of all the Lord's people to whom this may come, that He would largely bless these meetings with the power of the Holy Ghost. Mr. Mudie, Montrose, will be happy to furnish any information on the general business of the Conference. Arrangements are made by which those attending the Conference may dine together at five o'clock each day. Communications about lodgings, &c., to be addressed to Mr. T. C. Craigie, 6, Charlotte-street, Perth.

PAST AND FUTURE.

Now that the testimony of the two witnesses whom God has sent us for the past two years has for the present closed amongst us, we only give expression to the deepest desires of all our readers, and of all earnest Christians in Great Britain, in praising God for the abundant blessing of which He has made them the instruments, and in praying for them the best spiritual gifts for all the future of their lives. We are sure that while on their voyage home, and for many years to come, they will be borne up in loving prayer by thousands who will never cease to hold them in grateful remembrance. Messrs. Moody and Sankey's last meeting in this country will be held in Victoria Hall, Liverpool, on Tuesday evening, August 3. They propose to sail on August 4.

There must be thousands of incidents far stranger than fiction which have come to light in inquiry-rooms and elsewhere; and so far as these can be narrated without any breach of confidence, and without, in any degree, particularising in a way that would be unpleasant to those concerned, we shall be glad to receive accounts from our friends.

It is also our wish to devote a column or so weekly to—(1) Young Men; (2) Young Women; (3) Children. We shall esteem it a favour if those of our readers who take an active interest in the Lord's work, especially amongst each of these, will send us brief and pithy accounts of the progress and results of their work. And last, but not least, we shall be glad to receive News from the Churches of all denominations of the progress and success of all efforts to win souls to Christ, whether in the Sunday-school, the Bible-class, by house-to-house visitation, or by any other ordinary or extraordinary means.

THE "TIMES" ON MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MISSION.

It is a significant circumstance in connexion with the four months' mission in London that has just been brought to a close, that the Times of Saturday last devotes no less than three columns to reflections on and criticisms of the movement—exactly the space given in the same issue to the list of stocks and shares. On the whole, the remarks of the leading journal are not unfavourable, as the succeeding extracts will show. The adverse criticisms, to which we shall presently refer, are, we do not hesitate to say, based on a most imperfect knowledge—we had almost said a total ignorance—of the facts.

The first column is taken up with a report of the farewell meeting at Mildmay; and here, in passing, we may note that the supposed omniscience of the Times is at fault, as, for instance, when the attendance at the meeting is put at 1500 instead of nearly twice that number, and the number of ministers present is stated to be 300 instead of 700.

After the account of the meeting, the article proceeds:

"Some time ago we directed attention to the admitted 'extraordinary success' achieved by these men—that is, their undoubted success not merely in having attracted large congregations, but in the more difficult feat of having attracted the same large masses of people again and again. Taken on this ground alone, the Revivalists and their 'mission' demand somewhat different treatment from a contemptuous dismissal on the ground that 'cant' and 'sensationalism' have once more carried the day. Instead of condemning what may merely be foreign to our habits of thought, we prefer to inquire wherein the power to attract these large masses of people lies, and whether on the whole that power is healthy. It were needless to say that no clergyman or minister of religion in the United Kingdom can consider himself above such an inquiry, however much he may disapprove Revivals and dislike Revivalists. The complaint is general that our churches and chapels, save in exceptional instances, are not crowded, and least of all by workmen."

After detailing the various expedients adopted by different sections of the Church to create an interest in religious matters, we have the following:—

"The attraction is at times far from unexceptionable. No one, for instance, can deny that the walls of London are regularly placarded with terms as the themes of lectures more extravagant and 'sensational' than any used by these Revivalists. Religious services are frequently announced under such headings as 'The Flag that's braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze.' One pities the man, whatever his position or his sect, who finds himself falling back on such a basis of operations; but this and many other facts not necessary to be named, show that men engaged in active religious work are at their wits' end to discover some means to fill their respective places of worship or their lecture-halls.

"Meanwhile, these two men come on a 'mission,' which turns out to have been singularly well organized and adapted to the end in view. You cannot listen to them and say that they are impudent or intrusive men in any sense of the word. The one who preaches stands in a half-apologetic manner, and rarely lifts his hand or uses a gesture of any kind, till he becomes excited with his own thoughts, and even then the gesticulation only lasts for a minute or two. The one who sings has, with a well-modulated voice, a manner altogether unobtrusive."

This is succeeded by a free criticism of Mr. Moody's style of delivery, and a résumé of his early Christian career, taken from a "published biography." Here we are constrained to make a remark about the several "lives" of Mr. Moody that have sprung up, mushroom-like, as an adjunct to this movement. It ought to be widely and unmistakably known that if his wishes had been at all consulted, not one of these "lives" or "biographies," good, bad, or indifferent, would ever have seen the light. We have frequently heard him say, "It is time enough to write a man's life after he is dead."

The following extract is with reference to Mr. Sankey's part of the work, and is, we think, true to fact:—

"What, it has been said, 'would the Revivalist be without his singing companion and his hymns?' The question is hardly fair—he is here with his singing companion and his hymns, and the services must be taken as a whole. The hymns, however, are in many cases set to music quite artistic, without being so 'fine' as to be above the understanding of anyone. They succeed where cathedral music fails, and perhaps for the simple reason that while the music in cathedrals seems as if it were especially devised to prevent the congregation joining in it, these hymns are intended for everyone, old and young, to sing, and the intention is to a considerable extent carried out in practice."

Then comes the other side of the picture, as painted by the writer in the Times, and which we repeat is the outcome of an extremely superficial view of this work:—

"There is much in the proceedings which must ever be abhorrent to the feelings of many persons distinguished at once for piety and refinement of taste. There will not long be much sympathy, we hope, on this side of the Atlantic with several of the circumstances of this Revivalism. We must censure alike the theatrical act of sinners standing up to be viewed at once by the saints and by the greater sinners who have not arrived at the point of exhibiting themselves as reprobates; those sudden conversions; and those (to our view) most obnoxious 'inquiry rooms,' at the doors of which stand snarling men, asking the outgoing people if 'Christ is precious to them' (we heard one such man ask this very question of two or three little girls, who knew no more what he meant than if he had spoken Greek)."

It is very evident that the writer's knowledge of the "obnoxious inquiry-rooms" is limited to a passing glance at the letters printed above the doors or the hearing of a casual question such as that he quotes. Those who know most about the inquiry-room will not be disposed to set much value on an opinion based on such slender grounds. We will only say, on this point, that the universal testimony of those who have really made a practical acquaintance with the movement, in all its bearings, has been, that the after-meetings, and the personal dealing with anxious souls in the inquiry-room, have done more than any other agency to bring about the very results which the writer in the Times rejoices over.

Further on, we have this extraordinary animadversion:—

"Nor do we reprobate less the scattering about broadcast of the photographs of the Revivalists. It is hard, indeed, to know on what ground a man like Mr. Moody can allow this to pass without stern reproof, especially when he preaches of the meek Moses, and remembers that of the Great Master we have no acknowledged portrait. Whatever may be said to the contrary, the photographs have been used as advertisements on a large scale, and with an effect altogether unhealthy. Mr. Moody ought to give this up, as a sin of pride into which he has unwittingly fallen."

We presume that the Times is glad to be corrected when it is in error, and we are not sorry it has made public the above sentences, because it affords us an opportunity of disabusing the public mind with respect to the sale of the (so-called) photographs. This statement is an utter perversion of the facts.

Not only is it untrue, as far as Messrs. Moody and Sankey are concerned, that "the photographs have been used as advertisements on a large scale," but it is the fact that everything has been done by them, that could possibly be done, to discourage and put a stop to the sale of these caricatures—we cannot call them photographs, because they are not.

Since writing the above, we have received the following letter from Mr. Stone, the Chairman of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN.

Moorgate-street Hall, July 19, 1875.

DEAR SIR,—In the Times article of the 16th inst., reviewing the mission so recently closed by the American Evangelists in London, the writer deploras "the scattering about broadcast" of Mr. Moody's photographs. Allow me, in reply, to assure your readers that during Mr. Moody's visit to this country he has steadily refused to sit for his photograph, though frequently tempted to do so by large monetary offers, and that eight years have elapsed since he consented to have his photograph taken, which was then done only for family use. Mr. Moody deeply laments the unauthorized circulation of his photographs, many of which are rather caricatures than likenesses; and he is still more pained by the publication of all books giving accounts of his life and work, which are, every one of them, issued without his consent and contrary to his wishes. I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

THOMAS STONE,

Chairman of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee.

Here is another paragraph from the Times:—

"There is much, we say, to condemn in these services, much that, as time goes on, even the most ardent admirers of the Revivalists among reasonable people will condemn. Perhaps before Mr. Moody and his friend reach home a reaction will have set in to the extent of a disapproval of much in their manner of teaching. It will come to be remembered that the preacher, even when most fervid, laid less stress on purity of life, on 'holiness before the Lord,' on that grand duty which some think embodies all others, the duty of sacrifice, upon honesty, upon integrity, than upon some charm he finds in such words as 'Come unto Me,' &c. We do not mean that Mr. Moody does not hold up and exemplify these Christian virtues. He does the former, and may do the latter. We do say that the effect of his teaching is to push the Christian virtues to the background, that all attention may be directed to his central fact that 'faith in Christ can be had this moment,' and 'can this moment save the worst sinner' and make of him a saint. Mr. Moody's friends will not dispute this."

We have no hesitation in rejoicing that all Mr. Moody's hearers (not to speak of his friends) who were present at his addresses to Christians will emphatically "dispute this." In his gospel address to the unconverted, it is true that he exalts "faith," and not "works," as the way of salvation, but all who have heard Mr. Moody throughout, will agree with us that the general "effect of his teaching" is exactly the opposite of what the Times writer attributes to him.

Before giving our concluding extract, we would simply express the hope that before the Times, with its vast influence, animadverts on a movement of this kind, it will take a little more pains to acquaint itself with the real facts of the case.

"Let us do Mr. Moody the justice here to admit, and we admit it with pleasure, that, so far as we can see, he has owed little to the 'terrors of the law.' The gospel he preaches is one of 'glad tidings.' His Christ is 'waiting to be gracious.' His theme in the main is the boundless compassion of the Saviour, not the terror of hell. It will, however, be for religious teachers themselves to draw a moral from what they have seen, and, after they have disapproved much, we think they will find much to learn. There cannot be a doubt that the Revivalists have scattered truths where truths are few and falsehoods powerful. It is an error to say that they have not reached the lower strata of the life of London and of our large towns generally. It is no opinion, but a fact that they have done so. Can we bring ourselves actually to say that harm has been done if depraved men or women, rich or poor, have been led even to think of a higher life? The men have gone into all manner of places, have invited the rich, have pleaded with the poor, have blundered as to ticket arrangements, and have made 'the right and the wrong' to blend in a unity which, as a fact in human life, may be either approved or disapproved, contemned or criticized, but which cannot be ignored."

NOON PRAYER-MEETING.

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

FRIDAY'S meeting was a "sweet hour of prayer" in every sense of the word. It was gladdening to see Mr. Moody there; it was sweet to hear the happy testimony of young converts; it was sweet to find the spirit of prayer still in exercise in the ladies' meeting afterwards, and young converts there, too, making confirmation in their most holy faith. The Rev. Richard Roberts presided, and spoke from Hosea ii. 14, 15, of the gracious methods of God in restoring and disciplining his people; of the wilderness, where we find our nests shaken up, our cisterns broken, and all resources insufficient; how there, in the place of our loneliness, God gives the empty soil vineyards of fruitfulness and beauty.

Mr. Moody told a touching incident of a young man from South Wales; he met him coming out of a business house, and talked with him a little. Only as he was leaving the thought came that he might not be a Christian, and in reply to the inquiry he said, "I have come up from South Wales to find Christ, but arrived just too late for the last of the services. My father is dead, and my mother gave me £2 to come up to town and be saved, that I might return and be a comfort to her and the family, and now I'm too late." Mr. Moody brought this young man and laid him on the hearts of all in the meeting for earnest and unceasing prayer.

Next arose two young men, to testify that after long uneasiness and distress they had rested on the blood: one was brought to faith by the words of the hymn "Jesus paid it all, all to Him I owe," the other through the words spoken to him by a friend in the inquiry-room, "There is nothing Satan hates like the blood."

More particulars followed of blessing in a clergyman's family at Camberwell; another father gave an account of his son's conversion, and the hour was all too short for the records of blessing to be given.

There is indeed "more to follow." Let us be looking on for it, and, strong in the Lord, and stimulated by hope in Him, let us be "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The other meetings of the past week have been well attended and deeply interesting.

The following is the programme for the next six days:—

Thurs.—The building of the Sanctuary (Ex. xxv. 8, 9)	Rev. Theo. J. Meyer.
Friday—"Eternal life" (Titus i. 2)	James Knaggs.
Sat.—"The Holy Scriptures" (9 Tim. iii. 15)	Mr. R. C. Morgan.
Mon.—A living sacrifice (Rom. xii. 1)	Rev. W. Tyler.
Tues.—Christ our life (Col. iii. 4)	A. McMillan.
Wed.—Christian life in the city (Rom. xvi.)	J. Nimet Wallace.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS, CAMBERWELL.

The meetings conducted by Mr. Drummond in the Lecture Hall adjoining the Presbyterian Church (and occasionally, under pressure from space, in the church itself in the evenings) during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services in the neighbourhood, were usually filled to overflowing. It was felt by those interested in its effort, that the work must be carried on, and on Monday, the 12th inst. (the evening following the last service conducted by Mr. Drummond), a meeting was held, when it was resolved to form a Central Young Men's Meeting for prayer and Bible-readings in the neighbourhood. This meeting is intended to work in connexion with other meetings of a similar kind in the district, such as has been formed in connexion with the Presbyterian Church, all of which will be represented on the Central Committee. The meetings have been held every evening, and although the weather has been exceptionally unfavourable, the attendance has on the whole been as good as could have been expected under the circumstances. They are held in the meantime in the Lecture Hall adjoining the Presbyterian Church, but it is hoped that ere long a permanent meeting-place may be secured. The Central Committee is composed of young men belonging to the various places of worship in the neighbourhood, who have taken a leading part in the work. The prayers of all interested in the effort are earnestly desired. A Young Men's Christian Association has recently been formed in connexion with the Brunswick-square Presbyterian Church.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S FAREWELL MEETING.

LAST week we were able to give only a very condensed sketch of the farewell and thanksgiving service convened by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Midmay Conference Hall, on Monday week. We now give the most important of the numerous addresses delivered by representative London clergymen and others on the occasion. Dr. Bonar's (of Glasgow) interesting speech we shall give as a separate article next week.

It may interest our readers to know that, of the 700 and odd ministers who were present at this memorable gathering, there were 188 belonging to the Church of England, 154 Congregationalists, 85 Baptists, 81 Wesleyan Methodists, 39 Presbyterians, 8 foreign pastors, 8 United Methodists, 7 Primitive Methodists, 3 Plymouth Brethren, 2 Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, 2 Society of Friends, 3 Free Church of England, 1 Bible Christian, and upwards of 20 not known. These figures we take from the official statement supplied at the meeting, and they significantly show the catholic and unsectarian character of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services, as well as the universal esteem with which our evangelist brethren are regarded by all sections of the Church of Christ in this country. A large number of influential laymen and Christian workers were also present, among the best known of them being Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Cavan, Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., &c.

As already stated, we only give those of the addresses containing interesting facts and statistics relating to the movement.

Rev. R. D. WILSON, of Craven Chapel, said a new spiritual glow had come into the hearts of many during the last four months. They had learned, too, that their cherished traditions had no more sanctity or authority about them than the new things, which startled some of them at first, but with which they had now become most blessedly familiar. It was too soon to speak of the results as a whole, but within the last three days he had met no less than twelve or thirteen distinct cases of conversion in consequence of the ministrations of the evangelists. He read the following extract from a letter he had received:—"I feel it my duty and inexpressible pleasure to tell you that I and one of my brothers were converted at one of Mr. Moody's meetings last week. Could you know my inner life for the past ten years, you would indeed say I have been plucked like a brand from the burning. I cannot cease to marvel at the greatness of my salvation." The mother of that young lady, said the speaker, had come to him yesterday, and stated that for twenty-five years, with few exceptions, she had regularly attended the service of the sanctuary, but the happiest day in her Christian experience was the previous Sunday, when she sat with a converted daughter on her right hand and a converted son on her left. As the speaker told this affecting little story, we felt certain that the tear of joy gushed in many an eye, only we could not see for the mist that came across our own. He went on to say that we had never known what it was to "sing the Gospel" of Jesus Christ till our two brethren came. We could now understand how the sweetest tones could become the highest sort of Christian eloquence, in declaring to men the Way of Life. He would so far disobey the rule that no reference was to be made to the two evangelists, as to assure them that they would carry home to their American country the warmest love and heartiest esteem of the ministers and Christian people of this country. At this remark the pent-up feelings of the audience could no longer be restrained, and they burst out into loud and prolonged applause. We were extremely glad that the natural emotions of the congregation for once refused to be smothered by that false and frigid idea of decorum which obtains too much in our religious assemblies, and prevents the legitimate expression of the deepest feelings of the heart. But this is a digression. Mr. Wilson continued: "We shall not forget, when the Atlantic lies between their home and ours, at our family altar, at the place of secret meeting with our God, in our prayer-meetings, and in our Sabbath assemblies, to pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon them there. And it will be a glad day for us all, if ever that day comes, when we shall hear from the other side of the Western Main the intelligence that they are coming again. Until then we shall continue to pray that, when God sees meet that they should come, they may come in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

Rev. THOS. RICHARDSON, of St. Benet's, Stepney, said the effect of the meetings in the East-end had been to make his church and congregation "enlarge the place of their tent, and stretch forth the curtains of their habitation." He would rather wait for a year before he gave his testimony as to results, as there were many reasons why they should not now begin to count. But he had no doubt that thousands of souls would be recorded in their various chapels and churches all over London by next year. His district visitors had sent in to him formal returns, showing that of 1,008 families in his parish, 672, or two families out of every three, had attended the services at Bow-road Hall. Further, he had two direct testimonies that the attendances at the theatres of East London had sensibly diminished. Some of the officials of these theatres had given up the profession, and he had only to-day had an interview with one who was starting a different course. He had something too to say about the influence of the movement on the dock labourers. He had received testimony from several of the large docks that the men did not swear so much since Messrs. Moody and Sankey came: praise God for that. Besides, drinking was not so prevalent amongst the dockmen, and that was the kind of work that the world believed in. He had been privileged to attend every service in Bow-road Hall, and he would thank God to all eternity for it. He had seen the power of sympathy—that sympathy which brought Christ down to die for sinners. Sinners had felt its power, so they had stood up and declared they wanted to be saved. He had had the privilege of conversing personally with 450 anxious souls; his wife had spoken to 150, and his curate had spoken to 100. There were thus 700 souls whose names and addresses they knew, and to whom they had written. Formerly, he had an after-meeting once a month; now he had one every Sunday evening, and not a Sunday passed without some souls being gathered in. The direct results of the meetings were seen in his church, his wife's Bible-class, his young men's meetings, and among his district visitors. He urged the general adoption of the after-meeting, as being the key to the success of the services, and added that if the Spirit led him to adopt Mr. Moody's style of preaching he was going to do it.

Rev. ROBERT TAYLOR, of Norwood, gave some intensely interesting facts respecting what had transpired in the inquiry-room at Camberwell-green Hall. He had to do what Mr. Moody called "police work" there, and in this capacity he was able to take a general view of the inquirers who, night after night, thronged the rooms. One or two things had struck him. First, the large number of old people who came as inquirers, and who went away as very young Christians. He was afraid that, in their anxiety to shut up and shut in the young, they had been in danger of shutting out the old. They had fallen into the unbelief of Nicodemus, who said, "How can a man be born when he is old?" But many blessed births of the old had been seen in the inquiry-room at Camberwell. He was also struck with the amazing variety of opinion—religious opinion and no opinion—represented. One evening he gave up his seat in the hall to a distinguished literary man, who lately wrote that "there was a Power above us that, at least, we know to be working for righteousness." One evening, in the inquiry-room, he met a young woman, and asked if she was anxious. Yes, to know if there was a God. Did she not believe it? Well, the sum of her belief was that "there was something above us." He could tell of a wife, deserted by her husband, who had been in such utter misery and agony that she had twice contemplated going to London-bridge to commit suicide. In that inquiry-room she was brought to faith in Jesus Christ and peace with God through the preaching and singing. Afterwards she prayed so beautifully for her husband that the lady who conversed with her was deeply touched as she listened. She did not pray that he might be restored to her—now she did not care so much about that,—but that God would bring him to Himself, and that they might be re-united in heaven. He could tell of several Roman Catholics brought to simple faith and sweet peace in Jesus. He could tell of a man who for twenty minutes hid his face from the lady who spoke to him, so deep was his distress and shame. He afterwards told her how he was standing at St. Giles's, and tossed up whether he should go to the theatre or the meeting. It was, "Heads the theatre, tails Moody and Sankey." It was tails. He went to the meeting, was led to go into the inquiry-room, and, as he described it in a letter to the lady who was the means of bringing him into the light, "She fought manfully with him for the Lord Jesus," and he went home a rejoicing believer. These were but specimens of hundreds of cases he could quote, and when friends said to him the night before, with sad hearts, they were so sorry the meetings were over, he could only reply, "Yes, and I am so glad the work is so gloriously begun."

Rev. G. FLINDT, of Denmark-hill, also spoke of the work in the inquiry-room at Camberwell. He said that one result of the services had been to increase the local congregations. In his own church they had on several occasions not had standing room during the visit of the evangelists. He had learnt this lesson: that, if the ministry is to be useful, a personal Christ must be lifted up. A man in the inquiry-room had said to him, "It seems as if that man (referring to Mr. Moody) had his Friend quite close to him, and he was talking about him." Only eternity would reveal the good that had been done in the South of London. The night before, at the closing service, there were scores of anxious ones who came asking if it was possible to get a grip of the hands of the evangelists, and thank them for what had been told them about the Lord Jesus Christ; and tears of gladness flowed down many a furrowed cheek, when they were asked to go home and tell God all about it, and thank Him for the messengers He had sent. One remarkable circumstance in connexion with the Camberwell services had been the attendance of a number of medical students from the various hospitals. Some of the medical men in the neighbourhood had found time and opportunity to invite them to their houses to dine, and afterwards had spoken to them about salvation. If only half a dozen young students were brought to Christ, what might not be the result when they were attending the sick-beds of those who should be committed to their care? The South London Committee were 160 strong, and they were going, by God's grace, to work shoulder to shoulder and hand to hand in this blessed work.

Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD said he felt we were living in days which many had looked and longed for, but had not seen. He thought that God had been working much more with the masses than the ministers. For his own part, he had learnt much since Messrs. Moody and Sankey came to London. Many prejudices had been broken down, many difficulties removed, and many a lesson learnt that he would never forget. He had been taught by a costermonger how to preach the Gospel. He was talking to a costermonger one evening, and trying to show him the great salvation, when a bright-looking young fellow came up and quietly put him aside, saying, "Sir, I found Christ last week; I think I can talk to this man better than you." "Well, let us hear what you have to say." I never heard such lingo, said Mr. Rainsford. "Now, Joe, s'pose it was all up wi' yer; mother starvin', wife starvin', children starvin', and the mackerel nowhere. S'pose I see yer lookin' very pale, and sad, and miserable; and, says I, 'Joe, here's a fat half for you.'" (I wondered what that was, but the other seemed to know all about it.) "I give it yer with all my heart; be off and do your work. Away you go to Billingsgate and spend the fat half." (It means half a sovereign, and a sixpence means a "thin half.") "You get the mackerel, and bring it home; you get the money, and you bring home some bread; yes, there it be at home; now what would you say?" "I would say, 'Thank you; God bless you!'" "Well, say that to Christ, for He didn't give you the fat half, but the whole." And that was the Gospel as ably and spiritually preached, and as blessedly preached, as the Archbishop of Canterbury could preach it. After some further striking experiences, he expressed a hope that the work would go on after our brethren had left, and that many would be found to imitate their example in telling of Jesus to all around.

The Earl of SHAFESBURY said nothing but the positive command of Mr. Moody would have induced him to come forward on the present occasion and say but a very few words in the presence of so many ministers of the Gospel. But as Mr. Moody had asked him to speak of what had occurred during the past four months, he did so with the deepest sense of gratitude to Almighty God that He had raised up a man with such a message and to be delivered in such a manner. And though Mr. Moody said they were not to praise him or his friend Mr. Sankey, yet if they praised God for sending them such men as these, they did no more than express their admiration of the instruments that He had raised up while they gave Him all the glory. He had been conversant for many years with the people of this metropolis, and he might tell them that wherever he went he found the traces of these men, of the impression they had made, of the feeling they had produced, and of the stamp that he hoped would be indelible on many of the people. He could speak that as the truth as to many parts of London, and the lowest parts of London. Only a few days ago he received a letter from a friend of his, a man whose whole life was given to going among the most wretched and the most abandoned of the populous city of Manchester, and who spoke of the good that had been effected there by the preaching of Moody and Sankey. A correspondent in Sheffield had also written him that he could not satisfy in any degree the wants of the people, that they were calling out for tracts and something that should keep up the appetite that had been created. He said, "For God's sake send me tracts by thousands and millions!" Even if Messrs. Moody and Sankey had done nothing more than to teach the people to sing as they did with energy and expression such hymns as "Hold the fort, for I am coming," they would have conferred an inestimable blessing.

Mr. SANKEY then sang the hymn commencing "There were ninety and nine that safely lay," after which he said that when they got to their own country they would often sing this hymn again, and they trusted that God's blessing would accompany the singing of it. They asked their friends here to pray for them, and that the Lord would continue to bless them. They would be glad to hear from their friends here, and they trusted to hear that the work was going on.

Mr. MOODY said he would ask them to spend a few moments in silent prayer, but, before they did so, he begged to thank the ministers for the sympathy they had shown them in the past two years. They had had nothing but kindness shown them. He also wished publicly to thank the Committee, and also the stewards, who had manifested towards them nothing but kindness. He had also to thank the reporters for the press. He knew that he had made mistakes, but they had not reported his mistakes or his failings. In fact, they had all been kind. He also wished to thank the police for the considerate manner in which they had performed their duty. He had one favour to ask of them—he would not ask them to pass a resolution, for their hearts were worth more than a resolution,—he asked them to pray for them, and to continue to pray for them as they had done for the last two years. He now asked them to pray for a short time in silence.

The congregation then bowed their heads, and, after the lapse of two or three minutes, audible prayer was offered by some one on the platform, after which Messrs. Moody and Sankey hastily retired, in order to escape the painful ordeal of bidding so many of their friends a formal good-bye.

FÊTE TO POOR FOREIGNERS.—Last week a rural fête was given by Mr. Robert Barclay, of High Leigh, Hoddesdon, Herts, to about 150 poor foreigners, principally sailors, who attended the religious services conducted by the Mission to Foreigners in London. The party assembled in the forenoon at the Bishopsgate-street Station of the Great Eastern Railway, and a motley gathering it was. There were Frenchmen, Italians, Germans, and German and Austrian Jews, Swiss, Norwegians, Swedes, Lascars, Chinese, Japanese, and men from Koordistan. The party proceeded by train to Broxbourne, and walked thence to Mr. Barclay's residence, where a tent had been erected close to the lawn for their reception, and where they partook of a substantial dinner, after which some of them amused themselves with various games, and others wandered about the grounds, and then returned to the tent, where they were served with tea and other refreshments. At intervals they sang Moody and Sankey's hymns, which had been translated into French, Italian, and German, and addresses were given by the missionaries, of whom it was stated there are eleven devoted to foreigners in London. Mr. Salter, of the Home for Asiatics, stated that the four men from Koordistan are Nestorians, and had come to this country with a letter from their Patriarch and Bishops requesting that missionaries might be sent to them, and aid for carrying on schools. An address followed from the Rev. Mr. Livingstone, rector of Broxbourne, which was translated into French, Italian, German, and Hindustanee by the missionaries, and after a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Barclay, the company took their departure, and were brought back to London by train.—Daily News.

LIVERPOOL: EVANGELISTIC SERVICES IN THE CIRCUS.—These meetings, which are under the management of the Young Men's Meeting Committee, and are carried on every evening in the Circus, Whitechapel, have been conducted during the past fortnight by Mr. William Taylor, of the Evangelization Society, London. Notwithstanding the fine summer evenings, when we have generally found it difficult to obtain anything like a good attendance at religious meetings in Liverpool, the services have been well attended. On week evenings the congregations seem to have been growing larger each evening, and twice on Sundays this large Circus has been quite as full as with any degree of comfort (owing to the extreme heat) it well could be. Besides good attendances, we have had much blessing; each evening numbers have remained behind as inquirers. Sunday night week being Mr. Taylor's last service, we had the largest meeting of all, and, apparently, the greatest blessing. At the close quite a number desired Christians present to pray for them, that they might find peace in Christ Jesus. This week the meeting will be addressed by Mr. Edward Hurditch. The nine-to-ten meeting for young men is still continued, with many tokens of Divine blessing.

THE DUBLIN BELIEVERS' MEETINGS.

JULY, 1875.

Our hearts are overflowing with gratitude and praise to God for the deep and manifold blessing vouchsafed at these gatherings, in the Metropolitan Hall.

Some, who have been attending these half-yearly meetings for years, said they did not remember having spent a more truly happy and profitable occasion. A large number of the Lord's people (mostly those actively engaged in his service) assembled from all parts of this island, as well as from England and Scotland; and although for some weeks previously the weather had been singularly unfavourable, the Lord graciously gave beautiful sunshine during the days of the meeting.

TUESDAY.

The meetings commenced on Tuesday morning at eight o'clock, when a large number were gathered to spend an hour and a half in prayer. This was a very solemn time. The Lord seemed to have laid heavily on many hearts the burden of desire for those spiritual blessings which He purposed to bestow on his people.

At the close of this meeting they adjourned to the Side Hall for breakfast, after which there was more prayer, and a brief touching address from Mr. F. H. WHITTS, of Chelsea, on the 3rd and 4th verses of the 43rd Psalm. He dwelt on the intense longing expressed in the words "Oh, send out Thy light and Thy truth." There might be this longing for light and truth from an impure motive, merely to shine before our fellow-Christians, &c., but the Psalmist's desire was that the "light and truth" should lead him to the altar (verse 4); and so truth is only valuable to us as it leads us to the altar of whole burnt-offering.

After a short interval the second meeting commenced at twelve o'clock. There was, of course, a much larger number present than at the early meeting, the lower part of the hall and platform being crowded, and a good number in the galleries. After nearly an hour spent in prayer for special requests,

The first address was given by Mr. HENRY DYER, of Exeter, his subject being the story of the poor widow and her pot of oil, in 2 Kings iv. 1-7. In the extremity of her need, the servant of God directed her to borrow "empty vessels not a few," and having done so she went into her house with her two sons and shut the door (verse 5). Thus she was shut in with nothing but her poverty and God. She had no helpers but two sons as poor as herself, and her deep need was expressed by the empty vessels all around. And this very absence of all human help, this very dearth of all human supplies, was the occasion for God to come in to her help in sovereign grace and supply all the need. As long as a single empty vessel remained in the house, the oil flowed out to fill it. It was not until the need ceased that "the oil was stayed." Thus it is with us as Christians when, in the deep consciousness of our need and emptiness, and the utter absence of all human help, we are shut up to God alone. His rich grace supplies all our need, meets every claim that comes upon us, and gives us heavenly life; and we realize the value of that grace as we remember that, like the oil, it was pressed from the olive-press of Gethsemane. That Mount Olivet where was the garden of Gethsemane, was the same where Jesus took farewell of his disciples, and where (according to Zech. 14) He will stand on the day of his return in glory; and so that mount is as full to us of resurrection-joy as of redeeming grace.

After a hymn had been sung, Mr. STANCOMBE made a few remarks, from the 62nd Psalm, on the exceeding blessedness of waiting only upon God. The "excellency" in the creature, from which his enemies seek to cast him down (verse 4), is dependence on God. This was the happy position which Adam lost by his sin.

Dr. MACKAY, of Hull, read Acts i. 6, 7, 8. In the Gospel of Matthew we find the Lord teaching the disciples as to "times and seasons," but here He tells them, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons," because the Cross had changed everything, and the history of the present time is the history of a cross waiting for a crown. The place of the disciples is not looking for times and seasons, but witnessing for Christ in the power of the Holy Ghost.

At seven o'clock in the evening the Hall was again well filled. After a season of prayer, during which a large number of requests were read,

Mr. A. A. REES, of Sunderland, spoke. God's way of holiness is in the 6th and 8th chapters of Romans, not in the 7th chapter. The 7th chapter is the failure of holiness. The first two verses of 1 Peter iv. contain a summary of Romans vi.

and viii. Suffering in the flesh is the moral cross, and that the world cannot bear. The world glories in the literal cross, and wears it as an ornament! Suffering in the flesh is the normal condition of the true Christian. Faith in the death of Christ makes us partakers of that death judicially; union with Christ makes us partakers of his death morally and practically. Thank God, "Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." The Holy Spirit is able to overcome the evil of the old nature, and so "he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin"—that is, sin is no longer his master. As soon as we sigh for the evil that is in us we are on God's side. It is easy to glory in the literal cross and wear it as an ornament, but it is not easy to glory in the cross that kills me!

Mr. F. H. WHITTS spoke on the four occupations of saints while here below, from Jude xx. 21—1. Building; 2, Praying; 3, Keeping; and 4, Looking. First, The word "building" implies stability, "adding to faith, virtue," &c. There is no such thought as having attained a point where there is nothing more to be added, but continued progress. That which builds up is the "Word of God" (see Acts xx. 32). "Praying" is "in the Holy Ghost." "Keeping," not in our love or attainments, but "in the love of God;" and then "looking" "for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ"—not implying any doubt, but rather expectation of that consummation of mercy to be revealed at his appearing.

Mr. HENRY TAYLOR read part of Ephes. vi., and spoke on the exhibition of this Christian life which had been spoken of, which was, in fact, bringing Christ with us into all the relationships of life, whether as child or parent, master or servant. A beautiful example of this is found in the history of Joseph—not merely looking at him as a type of Christ—but as a young man living for God. As a child, as a servant, in the dungeon, standing before Pharaoh, and as ruler of Egypt, he lived for God. Four times in Genesis xxxix. it is repeated that "the Lord was with him," and this was his power to honour God under every circumstance.

The meeting closed with a hymn and prayer.

WEDNESDAY.

On the following morning, after some time had been spent in prayer, Mr. T. SHULDHAM HENRY requested that any who had received blessing, in answer to prayer, since the last meetings (in February) should stand up and acknowledge the fact. This request was immediately responded to from all parts of the building, and for half an hour one after another briefly returned thanks for relations and friends (for whom prayer had been made at the last meeting) now rejoicing in Christ, as well as for other spiritual blessings given. It was a time never to be forgotten, and many a touching story of the Lord's mercy was thus heard, which would otherwise have, probably, remained unknown.

The first address at the noon meeting was by Mr. T. S. HENRY, from Matt. i. 21, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus," &c. He had been much impressed lately with this verse. The power of Jesus to save his people, both from the penalty and power of sin. In connexion he read John xiii. 10; Heb. x. 2; John xiv. 16; 1 John ii. 1. In Galatians v. 17 we see the Christian's conflict. He has a threefold enemy—the world, the flesh, and the devil; and to meet them a threefold Friend—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Faith overcomes the world, communion overcomes the flesh, and the Word overcomes Satan. The Holy Ghost is the advocate within, that the Christian may not sin; Christ is the advocate above, to intercede for him if he does sin.

Mr. HEATH read Col. i. 19 and ii. 9, and 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27, the first passages bringing out the all-sufficiency of Christ; the second, definiteness and reality in the believer's course. We see the all-sufficiency of Christ to meet every demand upon Him in his life on earth. In John viii. we have the Pharisees convicted by light on the conscience, and the sinner by the power of the Holy Ghost. They went away from Christ, but she remained with Him. Grace was shown to her in the words "Neither do I condemn thee," truth in the words "Go and sin no more." Again, in John v. 1, his all-sufficiency is seen, when there are 5,000 hungry men to be fed, and only five loaves and two small fishes to feed them: but it was enough that Christ was there. The need was met, and the disciples were brought into happy fellowship with Him in meeting it. Again, in the storm on the sea, when, in the disciples' utmost need, the very waves, which unbelief suggested would be their destruction, brought the Lord to the ship, and their need was met. It was enough that Christ was there. Again, see the disciples unable to cast out the devil out of the poor man's son (Mark ix.), and perplexed by the questionings of the Scribes, until He comes, shelters his disciples, deals with the ease, and answers the enemy. It was enough that Christ was there. The Colossian Christians were troubled with philosophies and vain deceits; but Paul says, "Ye are filled up in Christ," and that was enough to meet it all. If the heart is pre-occupied with Him, there remains no avenue for the entrance of evil, and this gives definiteness to the Christian life. No one could doubt for a moment what Paul lived for—"not as one that beareth the air." We should be definite in our calling, our service, our worship, our hope. So there should be reality in our Christian life, so that everyone can see what it is; that our conduct, our personal appearance, and all our surroundings may show we are "beating the flesh black and blue," which is the literal meaning of "Keep under my body"—in the passage 1 Cor. ix. 27. Let us not merely suck the sweets of doctrine, but stand under the judgment of the Word of God.

Mr. J. G. McVICKER desired to direct attention to the many wonderful blessings said to be obtained by "faith" (which is equivalent to the word "trust" in the Old Testament). By faith we have "justification," "Christ," the "Holy Ghost," "eternal life"; we "stand," "walk," "fight"; it is our "shield" and "breastplate"; by it we are "sanctified"; we have "love," "joy," "comfort," "rest"; by it we "glorify God," and by it we "please God." Let us then rest in Christ, and allow Him to do what He has undertaken. We are free by His death from our old master, Sin, and must not let him assert his dominion over us, for we have a new and better Master. Do we count on Christ to do this for us? Often, alas, are we not, even in our preaching, counting as if Christ was like a doctor going through a hospital full of sick people, looking at all, yet doing nothing to relieve them? whereas we know that He came "to seek and to save the lost," and we should count on Him to do it! The disciples, defeated on the occasion which has been already referred to (Mark ix. 28), asked the Lord, "Why could not we cast him out?" and his answer was, "Because of your unbelief." God's best gifts are far down, and we must be thoroughly humbled if we are to get them. In John v. 44, the Lord speaks of those who, instead of being in a lowly condition, were receiving honour from one another, and thus were not in a position to seek the honour which cometh from God only. In that case, in Mark ix. the Lord also said to his disciples, "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting." The neglect of prayer and the pampering of the body will surely hinder faith! We may gain in earthly enjoyment, but we shall lose power with God. Another help to faith is the knowledge of God. "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee." As we grow in acquaintance with Him, faith will be strengthened. Let us delight in Him. "Delight thyself"—not in thy holiness, or thy position, or thy attainments—but "in the Lord." Let us get out of self, and let Jesus be glorified.

The last public meeting was held at seven o'clock in the evening. After an hour had been spent in prayer,

Mr. H. MOORHOUSE spoke on the Lord's precious promise to his disciples in John xiv. 2, 3. There were "many mansions" in the Father's house, but these were not for them, because He said, "I go to prepare a place for you." Comparing Acts i. 11 with Luke xxiv. 51, he said these passages show us how we are to expect Him back. As He went up into heaven in the very act of blessing his disciples, even so, in like manner, will He return to bless them for ever!

Mr. C. R. HUDRICK read part of Hebrews vi. His had seen an inscription, when in Paris, on the entrance of the Palace of Versailles, "To all the glories of France," and the inscription might be written on this Epistle to the Hebrews, "To all the glories of Christ." There never was a time when it was more true than at the present day that we have need to "go on unto perfection."

Mr. JAMES BARTON spoke of the lessons conveyed by various places mentioned in Scripture, and the meeting closed with prayer.

THURSDAY.—MEETINGS AT WILLOW-PARK.

On the following day (Thursday) a large number of guests, including all the visitors from the country, assembled at Willow Park, Booterstown, by invitation of Mr. Henry Bewley, and after dinner there was a most happy season of prayer, and a number of short addresses in the large conservatory, which accommodates about 600 persons.

Dr. OWLES, of Liverpool, spoke on the words "We see Jesus," in Hebrews ii. 9. Everything of type, or shadow, or ritual, which is brought forward in this Epistle, is cleared away to make place for Him, but when at length, in the end of it, He is brought in, it is to remain as "Jesus Christ the same yesterday and to-day and for ever."

Mr. REES read 1 Sam. xiii. 9, &c., and xv. 8, &c. He spoke very solemnly of the character of Saul as a warning to mere professors. Saul was the Judas of the Old Testament, and, like Judas, he received distinct warnings from God before he was left to his final doom. Judas had three warnings. First, the Lord had said "One of you is a devil"; then, "Ye are clean, but not all"; and, finally, "One of you shall betray Me." But all were unavailing; and when the Lord said, "That thou doest, do quickly," it was all over with him—his doom was sealed. Saul had his first warning in 1 Sam. xiii. 13. He presumed to intrude on the priest's office. No doubt he had a fair excuse ready for Samuel, but Samuel told him it was disobedience, and warned him of the consequence. His second reproof we read of in chap. xv. He had been commanded of God to "utterly destroy" Amalek, and "all that they had." Yet he spared Agag, the King of the Amalekites, and the best of the flocks, to "sacrifice unto the Lord." This time the reproof is stronger and more terrible, and his punishment—the loss of his kingdom—announced; but Saul's request, "Honour me before the elders of my people," showed that his religion was rotten at the core! David also sinned, but when his sin is brought home to him he says, "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned and done this evil in thy sight." Saul's only anxiety was that he should not be disgraced before the people. He never had true fear of God in his heart, and though he still went on calling "Lord, Lord," he hated David, and ended by falling on his own sword after his interview with the witch of Endor.

Mr. H. MOORHOUSE took the words "Behold the Lamb of God," and, beginning at Exodus xii., he showed how all through Scripture we are presented with a suffering Lamb until we come to the book of Revelation, where we see the Lamb cralted on the throne.

Dr. BARDEEN said that in Germany, alas! the people did not hear of the Lamb. The ministers preached from a mutilated Bible, for they had taken the Lamb out of it; and the Bible without the Lamb was no Bible at all. But, thank God! the churches are getting empty, because the people do not like such preaching; they feel they need a sacrifice. Since the meetings lately held in Berlin, there were openings in all parts of Germany for preaching the Gospel, and people hungering for the truth.

Mr. COMBS gave an interesting account of his own conversion from Judaism through reading the passage Leviticus xvii. 11 at Swansea thirty-five years ago.

After tea, the company re-assembled in the Conservatory, and, after a season of prayer, Mr. McVICKER spoke on Romans iv. 5. He dwelt much on the wonderful character of the grace of God—its perfect suitability to man when he has learned his own utter ruin and helplessness—how hard for the natural heart to understand it, and how easy to forget it again.

There were also addresses by Mr. Dyer, Mr. Stancombe, Mr. Allen Windle, etc.

On Friday morning there was a very interesting and important meeting of upwards of 100 evangelists and others engaged in the Lord's work, invited by Mr. Bewley to breakfast, of which a report will appear in our next.

SALISBURY.—It is purposed (D.V.) to hold a Conference of Christians here on October 12, 13, and 14. Further particulars will appear in due course.

MITCHAM INVALID HOME.—We warmly commend to our readers the proposal to establish an Invalid Home at Mitcham for invalid female assistants in houses of business, with religious privileges, under a motherly Christian matron. It has the warm approval of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Bishop of Norwich, the Countess of Gosford, the Hon. Mrs. Kinnaird, Mr. George Williams, and many influential friends, as well as some of the leading firms. The rent of the proposed house will be £100 per annum, for which Miss Dudin Brown is responsible, and a small premium for fifteen years' lease. It stands on gravel, in an open position, only twenty minutes' rail from town, and in a garden of about two acres. Taxes about £20 per annum. About £300 must be expended in repairs and adaptation, and £400 or more will be needed for furniture, &c. It is intended to make the institution in some degree self-supporting; but a large sum must be provided through annual subscriptions for the expenses in maintaining it, and the necessary staff. The house will accommodate about thirty young people very comfortably. Address, Miss Dudin Brown, Buckingham Palace Hotel, Buckingham-gate, S.W.

VICTORIA THEATRE.

THIS building, which has played no inconsiderable part in the recent evangelistic campaign, was, on Friday evening last, the scene of two most interesting gatherings.

At five o'clock, about 400 friends, comprising the stewards, members of the choir, and those who had in any way assisted in the work at Camberwell-green Hall, sat down to a social tea, under the presidency of Mr. H. M. Hodder, who has from the first devoted much time and energy to the arrangements connected with the meetings south of the Thames. After tea, a very delightful and profitable hour was spent in telling out something of what the Lord had done by means of this special effort. The testimony was chiefly confined to the meetings at Camberwell-green Hall and Victoria Theatre, and many instances were given by the various speakers of marvellous results. The time was not sufficient to tell a tithe of all that was to be told, and the proposal that another meeting of the same kind should be held soon will, we hope, be carried out.

At eight o'clock the theatre was filled for Major Cole's closing service. Many of those who attended the workers' meeting remained, and God's presence and power were wonderfully manifested. Major Cole was led to change the subject on which he proposed to speak to that of the prodigal son, and the result justified the course he took. As he told out in graphic words the downward career of the prodigal, step by step, it was plain that the speaker was only translating the sad experience of not a few of the audience, and the effect of Major Cole's most touching address was seen in the numbers who stood up at the close to ask prayer for themselves and their friends. It was a most gladdening sight, and we felt sorry that, with so many encouraging tokens, the services in the theatre had to be discontinued. They are now, we believe, carried on—at least, for the present—at the school-room in Roupell-street, near the theatre.

One of the most noteworthy circumstances in connexion with Major Cole's services has been the singing of himself, Mrs., and Miss Cole. Night after night these New Cut audiences have been enthralled by the sweet trice sung by them. With voices of surprising richness and sweetness, and most delicately harmonised and suited to each other, the Major, with his gifted wife and daughter, have sought to woo their hearers to the Saviour. On Friday evening they sang a new version of "Steal away to Jesus," entitled "Come away to Jesus," and it is not too much to say that the effect was equal to that produced by the Jubilee Singers—though, of course, the volume of sweet sound was not so powerful. Later in the evening they sang, in a very delightful way, "We shall meet beyond the river." We can well understand the reluctance with which the audience on Friday evening said good-bye to the Major and his zealous co-workers. It was quite late before the crowds, that pressed on to the stage to get a parting shake of his hand and a word of encouragement, could be dismissed. May God's rich blessing rest on the good seed he has so abundantly sown.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.—Mr. Radcliffe writes:—"Next Saturday may be the last time I shall have the pleasure of meeting the superintendents and visitors before leaving London for a season. May I beg that as many of them as can make it quite convenient will assist us with their counsel and prayers that evening, at 48, Great Marlborough-street, at half-past seven to half-past eight, punctually. In accordance with the advice given by Mr. Moody to the superintendents and visitors at the meeting at Mildmay-park, one of the superintendents writes:—"Most of my visitors are willing to carry it on as long as the way seems open; and may we not confidently believe that the way will be kept open as long as the visitors are ready to occupy it?"

A GOOD WORK IN THE RHONDDA VALLEY.—An earnest Christian man near Pontypridd, engaged in business, has been obeying the Divine command to go out into the highways and hedges to make known the glad tidings to the poor. With back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN under his arm, he visited a number of English-speaking families, and invited them to send their children to Sunday-school, and themselves to attend the Gospel services in a room in his own house utilized for the purpose. In about four weeks the Lord has much honoured his servant's simple work. There are sixty children in regular attendance; a Bible-class of fifteen young men; and the room is overcrowded in the evening. He and other friends are naturally anxious for better accommodation, and intend, if it be practicable, to erect a small hall, capable of holding about 300. A gentleman in the neighbourhood has kindly given the ground; will others of the Lord's stewards do what they can to assist in this quiet but hitherto successful work for God? Communications to be addressed to Mr. John Adlum, Trealaw, Pontypridd.

TIMES OF REFRESHING IN MANCHESTER.

OUR hearts here are cheered and refreshed by what the Lord is doing in our midst. The work is his, and all the praise shall be his. Many of us had planned a certain method by which we expected the "showers of blessing" to descend, and we were almost discouraged when this method seemed to fail! Again, we had to learn the lesson, "Trust not in man"; but the Lord has done in his own way exceeding abundantly above all our expectations. In No. 284 of THE CHRISTIAN we alluded to the purchase of a large tent for religious services, and in page 10 of last week's number will be found an account, as given by Dr. Ziemann, of how wonderfully the Lord had given a site on which to erect the tent—right in the centre of a thickly populated district, one of the "dark places" of the city.

On Sunday afternoon, the 4th inst., Dr. Ziemann, assisted by his band of young men, opened the tent, which was speedily filled to overflowing. In the evening of the same day it was literally packed with hearers. Hundreds upon hundreds could not gain admittance, and were addressed outside by young men. Dr. Ziemann spoke in the afternoon on the words, "Whom seek ye?" (John xviii. 4), and in the evening on "What is thy name?" (Gen. xxxii. 27). Labouring in the same district as a medical missionary he is well acquainted with the homes and lives of his hearers, and knows how to speak plainly to them. There were men without jackets, women without bonnets, the poorest and most destitute class that linger about our streets. The power of God moved that day in the tent. Large numbers remained for the inquirers' meeting, and the place thus received its highest consecration, for souls were saved there.

Services continued to be held during the succeeding week, and, on each evening, large crowds had to be addressed outside, while in the tent, often up to a late hour, great numbers remained, deeply anxious, and seeking the Saviour, who was freely preached to them. One evening the inquirers' room was so full that private conversation was out of the question, and when Dr. Ziemann asked those who were really anxious, and would like to see him in a private house, to rise, over fifty—men and women—arose, and thus testified their earnest desire to be on the Lord's side. Dr. Ziemann asked the Christians to praise the Lord especially for the fact that he had never seen meetings so well attended by men. Here were hundreds of men night after night sitting eagerly listening to the Gospel, just such men as we are accustomed to see filling the public-houses.

Sunday, the 11th inst., was a day of special blessing. The work in the tent commenced at six o'clock in the morning. About thirty Christian ladies, some of whom came from our wealthiest houses, gathered at this early hour to prepare a breakfast for 300 criminals and outcasts. Dr. Ziemann read to the workers the 149th Psalm. He said the ladies should not think they had done a hard duty, in coming at such an early hour to serve criminals with breakfast. They had come there "to bind the kings and the nobles" of the Spirit of Wickedness "with chains." "This honour have all his (the Lord's) saints." He wanted them to work this day under a sense of being the most privileged ladies in Manchester.

And surely there was a spirit of happiness resting upon God's people in that tent! Though busy from early morning until a late hour, every worker confessed they had scarcely ever spent a happier day. The breakfast commenced at eight o'clock. Tables were neatly laid, provisions richly provided, and nothing could be more striking than the picture of those 300 men, with their countenances mostly marred and ravaged by sin, and those young ladies, with their happy faces, all full of kindness and tenderness, serving those poor outcasts, and dropping here and there a word of sympathy. By some means Dr. Ziemann had contrived to get the names and addresses of returned convicts and prisoners, of whom 186 were present—the others gathered from low lodging-houses. After breakfast, Dr. Ziemann said a few words to them, when they heard of grace that can save to the uttermost; and they listened with marked attention. Nearly thirty remained for private conversation, amongst whom was the son of a clergyman, who said that he had long ago given up the thought that he could be restored; but that morning gave him new courage. All were greatly taken by the kindness shown to them by the Christians in the tent. For a few employment has been found; others are looked after by the young men. So fruits have been seen, and who knows what still shall be gathered?

That Sunday was a glorious day. The crowds moved towards the tent as in Mr. Moody's time, and God was in the midst in great power. In the evening, when Dr. Ziemann spoke on "This shall be to you the beginning of a new year," a deep-felt solemnity rested upon that large gathering, and the results were seen in the inquiry-room. Meetings are still held there every night, and the attendance and power are unabated. Many earnest Christians from all parts of the city have gathered around this work, and get their own souls refreshed and stirred in the inquiry-room. Dr. Ziemann intends to move with this tent from district to district, so as to reach the masses.

The meetings in the Circus have by no means suffered through the addition of work; but the blessing there has been also greater than ever. Night after night from 200 to 300 men have been brought together, and in a free, informal way "the things of God" have been spoken of. The young men connected with this work have organized themselves as a band of "Christian volunteers," with Dr. Ziemann as their chairman. They have selected from their midst a general committee of twelve, dividing itself into four sub-committees, each three taking the responsibility of the work—viz., 1, for inviting to the meetings; 2, for dealing personally with the young men; 3, for visiting their homes; 4, for supplying suitable speakers for the different meetings. Those twelve are like captains; thus the labour and responsibility is divided. Wednesday night is set apart for the study of the Scriptures. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that the Lord may prosper those volunteers, and make them a Daniel's band?

The Meetings for Children are also kept up with good results. The Meeting for Christians, on Thursday afternoons, is at present discontinued, as Dr. Ziemann is about to go for the benefit of his health to the Continent, and to visit, with Lord Radstock, the young converts in Russia, where he has been before.

The Daily Union Prayer-meetings in the Religious Institute have lately improved in their attendance. The tone of the meetings has been characterized by a spirit of elevated piety and soul-refreshing power. They that thus "wait upon the Lord" feel their strength renewed, and they are enabled to return to their daily warfare with the assurance that He who "fainteth not, neither is weary," is able to support them when his aid is most needed.

MR. H. VARLEY'S MOVEMENTS.

WILL you make me a little space for an earnest request? I am this week preaching and giving Bible-readings at Woolwich, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, from Monday to Friday. Already there has been some blessing, and many are yearning for more of the power of the Holy Spirit in our meetings.

I have spent two evenings there already, and evidently there is much quickening. Brethren, my whole being asks you, "Pray for us." For Lord's-day next and Monday I go to Birmingham, to Graham-street Church, long under the pastoral care of one who is now present with the Lord—I mean our honoured brother Charles Vince. There is quite a large number to be received into the fellowship of the Church, many of whom are the fruits of our American brethren's work in that town. For this feeding of the lambs I need special help. On the responsibility of dealing with these recently saved ones, again I beseech you, readers, "Pray for me."

Thence, on Tuesday, the 27th, to Edinburgh, where I shall stay for some days, preaching Jesus and seeking to strengthen many in the faith of Christ. There is a great yearning amongst God's children for increased spiritual life in Scotland's capital, and I believe I shall go "in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ." Not, however, apart from the means—study of the Word, watchfulness, and prayer. This latter I earnestly again seek help in. "Pray for us."

The Lord is with us here. The Tabernacle very full to-night, and a very solemn meeting. Several cases brought to Christ very fully. HENRY VARLEY.

BURNHAM, SOMERSET.—Special Sunday Afternoon Services have been held in the Town Hall here, conducted by Rev. W. Wiggins, and, humanly speaking, they have been a great success, each Sunday the audience becoming larger, and the interest being more deep. At the close of a month's meetings, many friends are most anxious that these services should be continued. Will the Lord's people pray that a true and genuine revival of God's work may be the result, and that many precious souls may be brought to Jesus.

MR. HAMMOND IN CALIFORNIA.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND has been for four months in California, and he has so often told us of his experience in Great Britain, we feel that multitudes of Christians there will rejoice to hear some account of the blessing of God which has followed his labours here. Never during our twenty-five years' existence as a State has there been any such movement of the great masses of our population as the present. Our churches have prospered fairly, and have been well sustained. Yet there were multitudes who never came within sound of the preacher's voice, and were absorbed with the pursuit of wealth and pleasure. Your readers are many of them familiar with Mr. Hammond's methods, and know his peculiar skill in reaching the masses. He obeys the command to "go out into the highways, and compel them to come in."

After spending some weeks in our neighbouring city San Francisco, he came to Oakland on April 17, and held his first public meeting on Sunday afternoon, April 18. Oakland is a conservative, dignified city; she aspires to be the "Athens of the Pacific," and is cautious of innovations. This spirit extends even to our churches, and many of their members and some pastors did not cordially approve of the invitation which, by vote of the majority, was extended to Mr. Hammond. Yet they resolved to lay aside all personal prejudice, and aid him in his labours, which God had so signally owned elsewhere. The first meeting was for children, and filled to overflowing the largest church in the city. At its close an inquiry meeting was held, and many expressed themselves anxious in regard to their eternal welfare. In the evening such a throng assembled, that a second church was opened and filled to overflowing. During the following days the interest so increased that it was evident some larger place of meeting must be provided. The committee of arrangements, therefore, caused to be erected a large pavilion, capable of seating 3,500 people, and affording standing room for 1,000 more.

On some nights, particularly on the occasion of Mr. Hammond's farewell meeting, this building was crowded to its utmost capacity. On the platform with Mr. Hammond were clergymen of every Protestant denomination, who all took an active part in the services, and rendered valuable aid in the inquiry meeting. To insure some degree of system, the pavilion was divided into sections, for each one of which one man was responsible in endeavouring to see that no one was passed by who desired a word of religious instruction. While this personal effort was going on, the choir continued singing, and there was not a night when many did not linger, till, at eleven o'clock or later, the gas was turned off, and they reluctantly left the place.

Every morning, at eight o'clock, meetings for Bible-reading, prayer, and praise were held in the largest church in the city, and were to many Christian hearts the most precious of all the gatherings. Especially rich were the lessons of Christian experience brought out in the praise service. Mr. Hammond, in his cheerful, earnest way, would say, "Now, you that have one thing to thank God for, rise and tell it." While he and other pastors walked up and down the aisle encouraging the timid, and speaking for those who had not courage to utter aloud their thanksgiving, how many testified out of a full heart to the faithfulness of God's promises and the power of prayer as shown in answer to special petitions! How many new-born souls gave thanks for their salvation and spoke of the preciousness of Jesus! How many cold and backsliding Christians received a fresh baptism of the Spirit, and vowed new allegiance to the neglected Lord! How the inflowing tide of Divine love melted all hearts into one, and we forgot all denominational distractions while we remembered only Jesus and his Cross—our common hope of salvation! How unexpected were some of the voices we heard in those meetings, and how often did Jesus seem to say to us, "O ye of little faith, wherefore did ye doubt?"

On one occasion a lady of culture and refinement, who had been making science her religion, and doubted the divinity of Christ and even the existence of a personal God, rose, and with radiant face and joyful tones testified her love to a personal and present Saviour. On another morning a prominent lawyer rose and said he did not call himself a Christian, but he was thankful he had an earnest desire and purpose to become one. "Stop a minute, dear brother," said Mr. Hammond, "and let me ask you a question. Do you love to pray, and do you find relief and comfort in prayer? Do you feel that God sometimes hears you and answers you?" "I think so," was the reply. "How does God's Word appear to you? Don't you sometimes find a word there that is precious to you, a promise that strengthens you?" "Oh, yes." "How do you regard the people of God? Do you prefer them to your former ungodly companions? Do you choose their society in preference to any other?" He answered that it was associating with them which had been the chief instrumentality in leading him to choose a Christian life. "And you deliberately choose Christ as your portion, and his service as the service of your life?" Humbly as a little child the man we had all known as a loud and vehement talker stood and confessed that such was his choice. "Now, brother—for I must call you brother—I want to ask all these Christians who think you are entitled to call yourself a Christian to hold up their hands." Every hand welcomed the man, who stood with bowed head, thus publicly acknowledging his new allegiance; and none of us doubted, I think, that the Saviour also welcomed him to the number of his chosen ones. A leading physician was also one who gladdened us by similar testimony.

Scores and hundreds, as the days went on, joined the army of the Cross, and at the end of Mr. Hammond's three weeks of labour with us 1,060 names were on his book, and it is estimated that nearly as many more have begun the new life. When the fact is stated that our population is only 20,000, some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the work, yet omniscience alone can compute its actual results. We have learned, pastors and people, so many lessons of wisdom that, if rightly practised, their effect will reach far into the future, and be the means of bringing many souls into the Kingdom. Chief among these lessons are the value of direct personal effort, and the importance of bringing personal practical questions to the sinner, ignoring all discussion of speculative points or theologic dogmas.

Our dear brother has conquered prejudice, and won for himself our warmest personal affection. Not long ago a beloved pastor, professor in our theological seminary, a man thoughtful, scholarly, and conservative in an unusual degree, rose in one of our morning meetings and said, in substance, "I desire to thank God for the variety of ways in which he speaks to the sinner's heart. Words that would fail to impress me bring other souls to Jesus, and men whom I might preach to for years without effect are persuaded by the earnest call of our dear brother to choose the better way." The same pastor said on another public occasion that these meetings had done very much to wean him from his old forms and methods and bring him into greater freedom and liberty.

"I think we all realize as never before the wonder-working power of God's Spirit upon the hearts of men. The most doubting among us are ready to confess that this is indeed God's own work. We have felt his presence in the solemn hush of the assembled thousands, when his claims were urged upon them, and when, in tears of joyful thanksgiving, hearts overflowing with love to Jesus told in broken accents of his conscious inter-dwelling.

Dear Christians, far across continent and ocean, rejoice with us, for "the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

NEW MISSIONARIES.

THREE new missionaries are (D.V.) leaving us on the 31st inst., to carry the Gospel to the perishing millions of China. Their names are—Mr. James Cameron, Mr. George Nicoll, and Mr. G. W. Clarke. The two former are from Mr. Guinness' Training Institute, the latter from Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry. Please ask prayer for them, for a safe journey, for blessing by the way, and for their future success.

THE FIRST OF THE NINE UNOCCUPIED PROVINCES.

We have received most cheering tidings this morning from Mr. W. Henry Taylor. His first visit to a province having twenty-five and a half millions of souls is filling him with joy and gratitude. He finds everywhere an open door. Shall not we give God thanks, and continue to pray for him and them?

DOVER.—It is proposed to hold Special Evangelistic Services in Dover in the month of September next, and preparatory to this arrangements have been made to have prayer-meetings at the Union Hall every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 8.15 p.m., during the months of July and August. The attendance of all Christians is earnestly requested.

ON THEE MY HEART IS RESTING.

(FROM THE FRENCH OF TH. MONOD: "SUR TOI JE ME REPOSE.")

TUNE—"Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

On Thee my heart is resting:

Ah! this is rest indeed!

What else, Almighty Saviour,

Can a poor sinner need?

Thy light is all my wisdom,

Thy love is all my stay;

Our Father's home in glory

Draws nearer every day. . . .

On Thee my heart is resting:

Ah! this is rest indeed!

What else, Almighty Saviour,

Can a poor sinner need?

Great is my guilt, but greater

The mercy Thou dost give;

Thyself, a spotless offering,

Hast died that I should live.

With Thee my soul unfettered

Has risen from the dust;

Thy blood is all my treasure;

Thy word is all my trust. . . .

On Thee my heart is resting, &c.

Through me, thou gentle Master,

Thy purposes fulfil:

I yield myself for ever

To thy most holy will.

What though I be but weakness?

My strength is not in me;

The poorest of thy people

Has all things, having Thee.

On Thee my heart is resting, &c.

When clouds are darkest round me,

Thou, Lord, art then most near,

My drooping faith to quicken,

My weary soul to cheer.

Safe nestling in thy bosom,

I gaze upon thy face.

In vain my foes would drive me

From Thee, my hiding-place.

On Thee my heart is resting, &c.

'Tis Thou hast made me happy;

'Tis Thou hast set me free.

To whom shall I give glory

For ever but to Thee!

Of earthly love and blessing

Should every stream run dry,

Thy grace shall still be with me—

Thy grace to live and die!

On Thee my heart is resting, &c.

INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

DURING the late services in the Agricultural Hall, many of the young women who are "costume makers," or are engaged in the manufacture of artificial flowers, &c., were met with by the different workers in the inquiry-rooms. Some time ago several of the lady Christian workers, belonging to different denominations, had an opportunity of meeting again those with whom they had conversed in the inquiry-room, at a pleasant tea-meeting, after which there was a service of sacred song in one of the large rooms belonging to the church of which Mr. Billing is the pastor. It was a happy, joyous meeting. All were loth to separate, even when the evening was very far advanced, and it was determined to hold another meeting. These gatherings were found to supply a great need, and to afford such satisfaction to a number of Christian young women, and others who were persuaded to accompany them, that meetings are now regularly held three times a week, and it is proposed to form an "association" for the young women, somewhat similar to the "young men's associations" with which we are all so familiar. A visit to one of these gatherings would convince anyone of what a happy influence they are calculated to exert, and how devoted to their work are the Christian ladies who are engaged in this holy enterprise. It is delightful to know that the work carried on in the Hall will not be allowed to stop—indeed, has not been allowed to stop—as this and other Christian efforts, lately put forth, certainly prove.

A PEEP INTO THE BEEHIVE.

A FEW days before another band of little emigrants started for Canada (they left on the 14th inst.), it was a happy privilege to witness the gathered stores of honey, which the busy bees had accumulated through the long autumn and winter evenings, now being turned practically to account for the benefit of the rescued children so soon to leave our shores.

With tears of gratitude we gazed at the huge piles of clothing with which every part of the large room at the Home of Industry was strewn—shoes and caps, made by the widows out of bits of velvet and tailors' cloth-cuttings; and heaps of knitted scarves, cuffs, socks, waistcoats, hoods, &c., for the cold Canadian winter, speaking of many "fragments gathered up" and used from stores of wool; and also a large amount of delicately wrought fancy work for sale in Canada. The best sight of all was the bags and boxes literally overflowing with the wealth of good substantial clothes, and nicely stored desks and workboxes, which kindly hearts had sent for the children who know little love but for those whom He who cares for the oppressed raises up to befriend them. An illustration it all seems of the Lord's words—"Give and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together and running over, shall men give into your bosom;"—for it is a rule at the Home that when the last party of emigrants for the year is started, poor labourers and helpers in the vineyard, whose claims and needs are not so publicly known, are called together, and receive each a share from the stores remaining over for the supply of their own needy little ones.

As we look at the beautiful garments, it is pleasant to think of the hundreds of loving hearts who have supplied them—some of the stitches put in by their wasted hands in the intervals of suffering, and others by round fat fingers belonging to rosy little cheeks, who from love to Jesus' lambs have often wearily (but so patiently) learned to knit and hem in hours which might have been given to the merry game; and then too by the eye of faith to trace the golden threads of prayer inwoven with every stitch—prayers that the little wearers might be covered with the blood-washed robe, and, after the life's storms are over, reach safely the glory-land.

A glimpse too at the children! That gentle-looking lad is one mentioned a year ago in THE CHRISTIAN; when brought in by the city missionary he had not tasted food for three days, nor worn a shirt for as many months. The wan, hollow cheeks told a piteous tale, all light had fled from the eye, he could not smile, and, when food was brought, the jaws were too stiff to bite. This boy has become a Christian and a great help among the others, but the marks of the miserable past will probably never be effaced. This little fellow clambering on my knee and prattling about "Tanada," and being "dopted," and getting "a new mother," is the case spoken of in "Occasional Papers," No. xiv., "Mother, is this the day for bread?" His mother was found dying in a box, having no mattress whereon to rest her weary limbs. The children asked us to pray that "Jesus will give them clean hearts," "more of his wisdom, to understand the Bible better," "grace to keep their temper down when being scolded," "to bring more children into the Home," "to keep them safe on the sea," to give "more of the love of Jesus in us."

As these little ones trot up, nestling their curly heads in one's gown, or throwing their arms round your neck—little ones who have shrunk from the blows of drunken parents, and have shivered and starved through drink—the piteous wail is wafted to our ears of 200,000 just such dear children who lie uncared for in the gloomy workhouses, all the sweet young affections crushed out in the monotonous routine of a pauper child's life; of other thousands on the street, in the vile lodging-houses, drifting on and on to destruction, bits of the world's great wreck. And Jesus said, "It is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones perish." Christian sister, what are you doing to fulfil this part of the will of God? It is his will they should be rescued; it is your duty to do the rescuing. When so many mothers are needed for the ingathering of these unloved thousands, why should any heart be aching for an object worth living for?

It was not his purpose, in redeeming us at the cost of his own blood, that we should give back to Him the "odds and ends" and spare moments of our blood-bought lives. Whilst numbers are wearing out health and strength working to save salvation, will not you in the enjoyment of a fuller light, having received a free salvation, work, in all the freshness of your love to Him who so loved you, to do his will? These little ones perish, because you will not lay your all upon the altar—though you often sing it—and yield up your life a living sacrifice in order that these may be plucked as brands from the burning, and trained for eternity. "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." And O how great your joy, how ineffable your peace, when, having looked into eternity, you hear the Master's voice asking—"Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" and then replying "Here am I, send me!" obey his command, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard!"

Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields.

KILBRIDE, IRELAND.

THE awakening in this place, noticed in THE CHRISTIAN of February 4, I am thankful to say still continues. Evangelistic meetings have been held in different parts of this scattered country parish from time to time since the beginning of the year, and at each series of meetings souls have been brought to Christ. On one of these occasions the School House could not contain the numbers that flocked in; hence two rooms in the adjoining parsonage were obliged to be thrown open for the overflow of about sixty people.

At a distance of three miles from this gathering, we held a mission for five evenings in a barn, when the local clergy took part. The after-meetings here were largely attended, and on the last evening all remained as inquirers or helpers, with the exception of five or six persons.

On two occasions we held a thanksgiving service in the parish church, when a large number partook of the Supper of the Lord, who before these times never thought of coming to testify thus of the Saviour's dying love. God has wrought a remarkable change in this neighbourhood. We are "a wonder unto many." A man in an adjoining town said to me a few days ago, "I have lodged for months in the houses of some of these people, and they lived like horses, and never bent the knee." A different story can now be told; some of these very individuals are now amongst my active helpers as visitors and Sunday-school teachers.

God has called out as many as two, three, and four in a family. In one instance a whole family of nine have been made happy. The Christian stability of the young converts, as well as their consistent walk, is a cause of deep thankfulness. The drunkard has been made sober (our temperance society, recently started, numbers nearly eighty members), and the blasphemer has now a new song in his mouth. Last year there were very few who did not attend the annual races at Rathdrum; this year there were very few Protestants who cared to be present.

Another remarkable evidence of the change in this parish is seen in the conduct of the farmers and others during fast-days; formerly they frequently returned home in a state of intoxication, but now cases of this kind are rarely observed.

A weekly prayer-meeting is now held by a number of the new believers amongst themselves. The lives of some of these had, in times past, caused me much anxiety and sorrow.

Our communicants have largely increased of late, there being now on the roll more than 100 names.

These few facts, out of many that might be mentioned, are sufficient to indicate the willingness of God to pour down large blessings in response to believing prayer with earnest effort.

Incumbent of Kilbride, Arklow.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN DEVONSHIRE.—We are rejoiced to have good accounts of a successful evangelistic work among the Devonshire villages, under the labours of Mr. J. Denning and Mr. W. W. Wills, a farmer, whom we remember hearing at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Convention at the Opera House. In the village of Colyton there is a great lack of preaching accommodation. It is desired to build a small Gospel Hall, to seat about 200 persons. A plot of land has been offered to rent in a suitable part of the town, where a wooden or iron tent could be erected. Anyone disposed to help may address to Mr. John Denning, Mount Cottage, Musbury, near Axminster, Devon.

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES IN ENGLAND.—"A stranger in a strange land" applies to French girls in England, as well as English girls in Paris, and the Rev. Pontet de la Harpe asks us to remember such who have to leave the houses of their employers for a vacation of two or three months; during this time they must provide board, lodging, and clothing out of a salary varying from £20 to £30. Ladies going to the seaside or the country would find them a comfort, as companions, to themselves or their children, and save these poor strangers in our city many a sore heart-ache and sleepless night. MR. McALL'S MISSION IN PARIS.

HAVING been well acquainted with Christian work in Paris, especially that of my beloved and honoured friends the Rev. B. W. and Mrs. McAll, for about three years, I am struck with the wonderful progress which has been made since then; and in visiting the different centres of the work from day to day, I have found abundant cause to thank God and take courage.

Three years ago the stations of the Mission were four in number; now they are fourteen. Of the first four, with one exception (which is likely soon to be no longer an exception), all have had to be enlarged or moved to larger rooms in the same neighbourhood, and it has been the same with several of the stations since established. The earnest attention and regular attendance are now even more encouraging than when the work was still young: a considerable number of persons, led to the Gospel by these efforts, have become members of the various evangelical churches, and not a very few cases of marked conversion have occurred. It is true that the number of these is small in comparison with the number of hearers, but no one who has not laboured amongst a Catholic population and gone into their homes can understand the exceeding difficulty of making them even comprehend the need of the new birth and the doctrine of salvation by faith. The simplest metaphors, the most pressing and loving appeals, seem to fail; but we fall back with confidence upon the sweet assurance—"My word shall not return unto Me void."

Whilst the extension of the work seems only limited by the supply of material resources, and, far more important still, of Christian workers, it is only right gratefully to acknowledge that in the latter respect God has graciously answered prayer that more labourers might be sent forth into the harvest. Mr. McAll is aided by a very efficient little staff of permanent helpers, and the number of volunteer workers, especially from amongst the Protestant young men of Paris, has greatly increased.

It has been my privilege more than once to tell your readers something about the Young Men's Christian Associations in this city. I am now thankful to say that the results of their two weeks of prayer, last November and last February, have proved lasting; that solid progress in Christian life has been made by those who then received much blessing; and they themselves attribute this chiefly to the fact that nearly all of them have, in one way or another, entered into the work of evangelization.

Last evening I had the privilege of attending the meeting in the largest of the stations—a hall (formerly a riding-school) which contains more than 300 persons, and which was nearly filled by a most attentive audience. After a hymn, the Scriptures were read by one of the French helpers in the absence of Mr. McAll, who from time to time becomes utterly prostrated by the immense labour of attending personally nine meetings a week, and organising some forty more, besides the other multifarious details connected with so large a mission. Another hymn, and a Russian Christian spoke. Next came M. Recolin, a pastor of the Reformed Church, whose large-heartedness is even more winning than his rich eloquence; he began by reading the story of the Philippian gaoler. He impressed upon the audience, by apt illustrations drawn from family life and from the dreadful inundations at Toulouse, the solemn importance of the question—"What must I do to be saved?" With an eloquence not so polished, but perhaps almost as powerful, the great question was replied to by the next speaker, M. Saillens, a young evangelist trained in the East End Institute.

I have been induced thus to give a somewhat detailed account of the work by the remarks of two Christian ladies here on a visit, whom I accompanied on their way home, and who assured me that, in Scotland, at all events, the extent and influence of the work was scarcely known.

A Mission which, in this city of Paris, so much divided between superstition and infidelity, every week brings the simple Gospel before more than 2,000 persons in the ordinary services, besides reaching nearly 1,000 children weekly in the Sunday schools, surely only needs to be known to be appreciated. M. Recolin put in a plea last evening for his own parish, the very centre of Paris, promising his own valuable aid. I can safely say, from my knowledge of Mr. McAll, that if some one will find the funds he will be willing to trust in God to send workers. And then as to workers—are there not superfluous workers in our own land whom God would have come over to Paris and take part with these who, though utterly weak in themselves, are yet privileged to see "a great spoil divided"? To all Christians I would appeal to uphold, by their prayers, the little band of workers, and especially the honoured leader of the movement and his devoted wife.

GERMAN TRACTS FOR CREUZNACH.

WILL the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember Creuznach in their prayers? A colporteur, by name Zellweger, has been working there actively since May, selling Bibles for the Trinitarian Bible Society, holding meetings which are attended by all denominations, and speaking of Jesus to all who will hear—rich and poor, learned and unlearned, Jew and Gentile, old and young. I thought it better this year to have no shop for the sale of Bibles, but to have instead a Bible carriage. In August the usual annual fair will be held, and I want to make a very special effort in the distribution of tracts. I want to get about a million, but have not sufficient funds. Will any kind friends send me help at once? For every £5 given me I can, through the kindness of publishers, get £10 worth. I also wish widely to distribute the edition of Sankey's Hymns in German, by Gebhardt of Zurich, published by Spittler of Basle. There never was such an opening before in Germany and Switzerland for the reception of tracts. The people devour them with the utmost eagerness wherever you go, and the only difficulty is the supply. I expect nothing less than a real revival at Creuznach, simply because there is already so much earnest pleading with God for it every day. We have again the theatre engaged for three nights, and hope this year to have it filled, and to hear the sweet hymns sung there. Christians coming abroad now for their holiday cannot do better than fill one box with these hymns for distribution; they are invaluable.

THE RHONE VALLEY.

THE following are extracts from a letter from Pasteur Lasserre, of Sion, the only Protestant church (English congregations excepted) in the long stretch of the Canton of the Valais, which extends from St. Maurice up to the Glacier of the Rhone:—

"You know that the Valais, where I am the only person for the work of visiting 800 Protestants, scattered over an extent of twenty-six leagues, is still entirely closed against the Word of God. Some few Valaisans here and there possess it and read it, but they are too much isolated, and wanting in courage, to abandon the errors of Rome. A work of colportage is carried on, more or less secretly, for it requires much prudence in this country, where the priests are, more than in almost any other place, all-powerful.

"Besides this, taking into account the extent of my parish and the multiplicity of my duties, it is impossible for me to give to the German-speaking Protestants, more especially those scattered in the Upper Valais, the pastoral care which is required. For two years I have been wishing to have by my side an evangelist, who should visit regularly our remote German-speaking Protestants, should conduct services at Brigue, Tourtemagne, and Sierre, and should sometimes take my place at Sion, that I might be able oftener to visit the Lower Valais.

"I think of applying to M. Rappard, of St. Crischna, for a man qualified to fill this difficult post. You are acquainted, no doubt, with M. Rappard: I have great confidence in him, and am, thank God, of one mind with him. Since Whit-Sunday I have held revival meetings, on Sunday and Thursday evenings, in French and in German. They have been well attended. But I feel myself very weak for the work of drawing the net single-handed.

"If you have the opportunity of laying our work in the Valais before the Lord, in any prayer meetings, I shall be thankful for it."

Any contributions or communications to be addressed to Rev. Horace Noel, White Rose Grange, Woking Station.

BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

—During the last month 298 cases have, after proper investigation, been placed upon the books; 1,875 visits have been paid to the abodes of the sick and destitute (showing an average of nearly 400 families per week); and the sum of £34 2s. 6d. has been distributed. Total since last October—3,815 cases, 19,925 visits, £1,181 10s. distributed. The treasurer is considerably in advance.

DROPS OF RAIN IN HANOVER.

It is believed that many readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be interested in the following translation from the German Baptist Missions-Blatt for May, 1875, the original having been communicated to that magazine by the pastor of the little Baptist Church in Hanover.

"We are constrained, dear fellow-members of Christ, to make you participators of our joy in the rich blessings which our God has shed upon us during the last few months in the glorious way He has been working among our children.

"Towards the end of last year, the daughter of our brother and sister R—, a young woman of about twenty years old, became converted to Christ. This acted as a spur upon one of her friends, and she also believed unto salvation. Soon afterwards two daughters of our brother and sister G—, and, eight days later, two other young girls, also daughters of members, received Christ. And now arose among several of our children a longing to become converted, and on Sunday, January 24, we began to hold a special prayer-meeting with them, continuing this every evening for about three weeks. In these meetings a wonderfully serious and earnest impulse to prayer became manifested among our young people. Several became deeply troubled on account of their sins, and supplicated for grace and forgiveness. Those who had already found peace were made yet happier, and were importunate in their prayers for the conversion of others, always making special mention to the Lord of the names of those who were already under conviction. On every occasion there were also several of our members gathered together with the young people, who powerfully sustained the latter in prayer. On one of the evenings, the two sons of our brother and sister F—, from sixteen to eighteen years of age, found peace. The mother of these, who has been for the last ten or twelve years untiringly active in the Sunday school, was overjoyed when she could fold her own two children in her arms as saved sinners. On the other evenings of that week, six more children and a youth found sweet peace through the blood of Jesus.

"On Sunday, February 2, we had the joy to add five souls to our church by baptism; but our great festival-day was on Sunday, March 7, when we kept a glorious harvest-feast. Twenty-eight were to be baptized on this day. Some fifty brethren and sisters and friends had come from our stations and neighbouring churches; and already in the forenoon, when brother Cramme with unction preached the Word, our chapel was pretty full; but in the afternoon it was so crowded that bare standing-room could be found. While I spoke to the congregation on Mark xvi. 15, 16, the twenty-eight about to be baptized sat in their white baptismal dress in a half-circle around the open baptistry; and then I had the high joy to baptize this happy band 'into Christ's death.' Afterwards we partook of the Lord's Supper, and then the church members and many sympathising friends remained still together for the 'Love-Feast.' On this evening also many souls became convinced of sin; and eight or nine, after persevering prayer, found peace in believing in Jesus. Among these twenty-eight baptized were four grown-up persons; the other twenty-four were young ones, from eleven to eighteen years of age; and my joy was specially heightened by the fact that my own two eldest children were among them.

"Our prayer to the Lord now is that they all may remain faithful to the Lord Jesus, and by a holy and devoted life may glorify Him who has redeemed them by his own blood. To his name shall be eternally the praise. "H. BOLEZMANN."

Soon after the above took place, the translator came to Hanover, and has had the privilege of attending the ministry of this faithful pastor, who, some years ago, was "counted worthy to suffer shame" for the name of Jesus by being three times imprisoned for preaching the Gospel, &c. In the middle of May there was another solemn and joyous festival, similar to the one described above, when twelve more confessed Christ in baptism, making forty-five as the fruits of last winter's revival; and, judging from the life and power in the services, one cannot but hope that to the already received blessing "still there's more to follow."

Dear fellow-Christians who read this, will you add to the many intercessions desired of you yet one more—for Hanover? Will you ask that the blessing may extend beyond the limits of this little chapel, and that the Spirit of God may work mightily and manifestly in this professedly Christian city?

Dear fellow-Christians who will be sojourning on the Continent this summer, you are leaving behind you much blessing in England. O! let me entreat you, each one, seek to bring hither much blessing with you. Into whatsoever town or village you may enter, cry earnestly to God on behalf of its inhabitants, and no less earnestly seek to be yourselves faithful witnesses for Jesus and his Word wherever you go. O! I beseech you, bring Christ, bring the Holy Spirit, bring your whole suit of Christian armour with you; leave nothing behind—and then you must bring blessing.

Ferdinand Strasse, Hanover, July 1875.

BREAKFAST-MEETINGS AND THE MASSES.

GLASGOW.—No. I.

EXACTLY a year ago, shortly after Messrs. Moody and Sankey left us, Sabbath-morning breakfasts were commenced in the tent on Glasgow-green, that poor city outcasts might be attracted to hear the Gospel. The attendance, which numbered on the first morning 300, increased during winter to 2,000, while at present fully 1,800 guests assemble every Sabbath morning. The Lord's stewards send the necessary funds spontaneously, regularly, cheerfully, showing that the work appeals strongly to the Christian heart. In other cities and towns throughout Scotland, breakfast-meetings have been crowned with much blessing, and now we learn that earnest Christians in Calcutta, stirred by the burning words of the Rev. A. N. Somerville, have adopted the same plan in order to reach fallen Europeans. The success of the movement has, therefore, in these respects been very remarkable. Still there are a few brethren who, never having seen our meetings, oppose this method of reaching the masses; and though we are not vain enough to expect all to agree on points so debatable, we think a few words on the aim, working, and results of the breakfast movement might go far to remove all reasonable objections. Apart from this, we wish to declare the Lord's doings, that others of his children, hearing our song of praise, may be stimulated to go forward, expecting great things from the Master's hand, and who, if they do not start free breakfasts, may undertake some other work in the name of our Glorious King. Men are perishing; if old methods fail to reach them, and if this new measure is not wise, let wiser men give better measures, but by all means let us have work, not theory or talk, that our home heathen may be gathered to Jesus.

Our aim is to reach the most degraded—those seemingly readiest to perish, nearest to the brink of perdition. We go out as a forlorn hope, bearing the good news of the Kingdom to those who otherwise should never hear or know of a Saviour's love. We give food because we find it impossible to speak to men of heavenly bread when by look and voice they cry aloud, "But we perish of hunger, not for the bread of heaven, but for the bread of earth." We admit that it is a libel to say that the "working-classes can only be reached through their stomach"; but it is equally a libel to assert that a hungry man can be reached in any other way. "One touch of nature makes the world akin"—thieves, drunkards, women of the city, Catholics, Protestants, sceptics, and Christians, meet and hear of a common salvation, hunger being in the first place the power which draws and binds them together. But it is sometimes asked, Are you sure your guests are deserving? Do you weed out the worthless? Assuredly not. The strength of our position is that we seek to save those already cast over the wall as weeds and worthless. We say to the vilest, You are not worthless, you are not hopeless, you may yet be saved. Your friends have given you up, you have given yourself up, but God does not give you up; there is help at hand if you are only willing to rise. Our first aim is to get them to look up—to feel that they have yet friends on earth, and a Saviour at the right-hand above who cares for them.

"Down in the human heart, crushed by the Tempter, Feelings lie buried that grace can restore,
Touched by a loving heart, awakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken shall vibrate once more."

Yes, the chords are there, the loving hearts are there, but they must meet—touch each other. We must go to the fallen, mix with them, make them feel the love and experience the kindness, if we would win them to the service of our Lord and Master.

Another objects that the "simple Gospel" is of itself sufficient to draw the poor together. But the Gospel, as it appeals to men, is never "simple." It is compound, the Gospel and the "gospeller": the measure and the earthen vessel are looked at as one. Nine-tenths of the so-called "objections to the Gospel" raised by the masses are not against the Gospel or its Founder, but against us who preach the Gospel. We are said to be selfish, grasping, "lovers of money." We give tracts or good advice, and make loud professions of love because it costs us nothing so to do; but if a man is perishing of hunger or cold, we refuse to relieve his wants. Christ was one of the poor, had not where to lay his head; but we must have our mansions in the suburbs, our servants, our months of rest at the coast or in the country. We can afford all this; but, though people are starving around us, we sacrifice nothing in order to relieve their wants. I do not say this argument is fair, but it is used against us. By filling the mouths of the hungry we stop the mouths of the grumblers, and by throwing ourselves alongside the people, and showing our readiness to grapple with their everyday wants, we secure their affection and confidence. The men who preach the Gospel are thus recommended—the Gospel they preach speaks for itself, and needs no commendation from anyone. Once the masses have confidence in us, they are not far from trusting in the Master we serve.

But this paper is already long enough. We ask your readers to remember our work at a throne of grace, that the poor and ignorant may be led to look to the Saviour, find in Him riches unsearchable, and a Friend who sticketh closer than a brother. Every Lord's-day morning, as the clock strikes eight, our guests are assembled. Pray that the Master may be in our midst, revealing Himself as the "Bread of Life."

AWAKENING IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

A CORRESPONDENT, under date May 18, 1875, writes:—"A few weeks ago, Mr. K— was preaching at the Moonta Mines a funeral sermon with respect to one of the Sunday-school girls. A remarkably religious feeling was awakened in the meeting, and several were brought to the Saviour. Meetings were held night after night. The work spread; the Wesleyan and the Primitive Methodists caught the flame, then at the Yelta Mine, and all the centres of population lying around Moonta the work extended. During these last few weeks some six or seven hundred persons are supposed to have found Christ. Singularly, the work did not begin at the township; it did not seem to touch us, although some young men went out from the township to the Mine, and were converted. At the same time the work of salvation has not been unknown at the township in a quiet way. Last week I kept back a man for conversation after the Bible-class, and he received Christ with great simplicity of faith. But there was no revival symptom until on Sunday night, Mrs. L— preached at the Sunday-school anniversary, and there was an after-meeting, when the work began upon a small scale. Last night I went to their public meeting, and they had an after-meeting, which was kept up till between eleven and twelve, and twelve persons were said to have received Christ. I quite believe we are going to have a great blessing."

DIFFICULTIES OF WORK IN SPAIN.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER FROM MR. A. FENN, SANTANDER.

I ASK OUR Lord, if his will, to send his servants to Spain. Work is becoming more and more difficult (public work). The ultra-Catholics, who before have sat in sullen silence when we have spoken of Jesus or given away books in the trains, &c., now are emboldened to heap storms of abuse, and wish they could send us to hell—almost threatening to do their part towards it.

Last week one of the officials of the Custom-house refused to let the owner have a box because it contained Protestant books (in the English language) from America. Our English Consul here (who is a Roman Catholic) says they have no right to stop them; but it shows which way they think the wind is blowing in Madrid. The American Ambassador has been written to, and no doubt the books will be forthcoming.

Pray for poor Spain. She must be morally the most degraded of the so-called civilized nations, with the pride that boasts superiority. Yet God has his people here. May He use us more and more in making them manifest!

REV. WILLIAM BOOTH, the indefatigable superintendent of the East London Christian Mission, has, we are very sorry to hear, severely sprained his knee, and will, the doctor says, be unable to move for several days, and be lame for some months. He and Mrs. Booth are both at Lower Hardness, near Canterbury, where they had gone hoping that Mrs. Booth's exhausted nervous system might be restored. Our readers we are sure will pray for them.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE BRIDE AND THE HOUSEHOLD. Suggestions toward the attainment of the Higher Christian Life. By E. J. A. Longley. —The idea which underlies the teaching of this little book, and which gives it its name, is that the children of God may be divided into three classes. "Out of the Kingdom He organizes the household, out of the household he condescends to select the Bride." At first sight this might seem to have Scripture sanction, if the Kingdom be taken in the sense of Matt. xiii., where it plainly includes mere professors, who are afterwards cast out; but our author does not use the term "Kingdom" in this sense, but clearly defines it to mean those who are born again. "When the sinner accepts the Substitute, and believes God's testimony concerning his Son, then he is born of God, and this brings him into the Kingdom." We have, therefore, at once, this unscriptural position: that all God's children are not his household, and not even do all the household constitute the Bride; but she is an election out of a select class from amongst the ordinary children of God! How all this fanciful teaching falls to the ground before the few verses addressed to believers as such in Eph. v. 22-33. As might be expected where the leading idea of the book is so little in accord with God's Word, the misapplications—nay, we must call them sometimes distortions—of Scripture are numerous; for example—the "Father's house" (Psalm xlv. 10) is made to mean, not the earthly, but the Heavenly Father's house. The "revelation of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter i. 13) is not his appearing, but the experience of Him as "the Sanctifier." However much the spirit of earnest piety breathes through this book, nothing can make amends for such perversion of Scripture. It is unintentional, no doubt, and the author means well; but when Scripture is handled as it is in these pages we cannot but raise a note of warning.

THE BIBLE READER'S ASSISTANT. By Rev. JOHN BARR. New edition, revised and enlarged by Rev. G. M. EASTON, D.D. Blackie's.—A new and much improved edition of a very useful condensed Bible-dictionary, with chronological arrangement and other tables; containing also the meanings of proper names. It is an admirable compendium of Biblical information, portable and inexpensive.

THE TEMPLE: ITS MINISTRY AND SERVICES AT THE TIME OF JESUS CHRIST. By Rev. Dr. EDERSHIM. Religious Tract Society.—Many books have been written, and much study has been expended, on the Tabernacle. The elegant volume before us carries on the theme of the Levitical worship into the Temple, and while this is described as it existed in the time of our Lord, reference is continually made to the original pattern and the primary instructions, which were all minutely carried out, "as the Lord commanded Moses." These deeply interesting chapters attribute its true value to "the precious blood of Christ." They are untainted by the rationalistic perversion, so common now-a-days, of the true old Gospel, which teaches the expiation of sin by the atoning sacrifice of Christ. The expositions of the priesthood and the sacrifices are specially valuable, and the comparison of the Mosaic ordinances with the rabbinical traditions is very helpful to the ordinary reader, as explaining many passages in the ministry of the Lord Jesus. It gives us far more pleasure to recommend books which open up the Scriptures than any other class of literature; and this is one on a most important line of truth, with which Christians generally are much less familiar than they ought to be.

A NEW MANUAL OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL ADDRESSES. Elletts' Stock.—These sermonettes may afford subjects for thought, and show the method of treating them; but they seem to us too sermonic to be very attractive to the children of our Sunday-schools.

"THE CLEFT ROCK."—We have on several occasions levied tribute on this exquisite little collection of poems, published by Macintosh, 24, Paternoster-row, both for the pages of THE CHRISTIAN and "The Herald of Mercy." We omitted to state that the poem, "Rest Needful for Service," inserted in THE CHRISTIAN on July 8, was from this choice volume. The price is one shilling.

"BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS."—A burden that presses on many toilers in our towns at this season is the want of a week or two's change and recreation. We have before us a letter from one who would be glad to combine a little rest in the country with work for the Master, if any kind friend in the country would afford the opportunity.

NOTTINGHAM CONFERENCE.—This Conference, which was postponed on account of Mr. Pearsall Smith's illness, has now been fixed for September 27 to October 2 next. Details will be announced soon.

"I AM PRAYING FOR YOU."—In our report of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's closing meetings at Camberwell, we unwittingly used language which would lead the reader to infer that Mr. Sankey composed the words of this beautiful hymn. We meant to say that the melody was Mr. Sankey's composition. The hymn itself is the production of the Rev. Saml. O'M. Cluff, who has written other hymns, some of which we hope to give our readers soon.

MY DEAR SIR,—In this distant place we should be very thankful if you could kindly send us some tracts for gratuitous distribution, and also some narrative and Gospel books for lending. It is difficult to get a supply of these; and I think, if the readers of THE CHRISTIAN knew our need, some would be willing to help.

Tracts are distributed weekly among the sailors in port, soldiers at the fort and other military stations, and among the patients in the large hospitals of the city. The patients are always very thankful for books to read. "Life of George Müller," "Life of Duncan Matheson," "Lifted up," "Grace and Truth," by Dr. Mackay, and "Precious Truths," by S. M. Haughton, are now in circulation and are eagerly read; but, in passing through so many hands, we are likely to lose sight of some of them, and thus need to renew our supply. A soldier who is now lying in prison, awaiting his trial for attempted murder, read with much interest "Precious Truths," and took with him a little book by the same author, "That Precious Name."

Any parcel sent to the address of Mrs. Rouse, Baptist Mission House, 19, Castle-street, Holborn, would be forwarded to us, and be received with great gratitude.

"STEDFASTLY."*

"And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."—(Acts ii. 42.)

We cannot fail to notice the word "stedfastly"; it forms a striking contrast to the beginning of the chapter. After ten days of united prayer and earnest waiting, according to the command of the Lord Jesus, the disciples were filled with the Holy Ghost, who for the first time came down from the glorified humanity of Jesus to remain for ever in his Church.

They began to speak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance; the outward and visible manifestations of the energy of the Holy Ghost attracted multitudes of Jews, out of every nation, who were then dwelling at Jerusalem. Piercing was that conviction which made them cry out, "What must we do to be saved?" and in true contrition of heart, with the joyousness of lively faith, thousands took hold of the crucified Saviour, who is exalted to give repentance and the remission of sins.

Of these converts it is said, "They continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." That which began in miracle, with outward striking manifestations, was continued by the Spirit in holy, quiet calmness; for quietness is not necessarily stagnation; calmness does not imply shallowness, and regularity need not be routine.

We are slow to recognize the work of the Holy Ghost. If there is no outward sign, then in our unbelief and apathy we are apt to say, "Is the Lord God in truth in the midst of us?" and if the Holy Ghost manifests Himself, and we notice emotions and struggles not usual at ordinary times, immediately suspicion creeps into our minds, and we attribute what is produced by the Spirit to natural enthusiasm and excitement.

Let us remember, "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and work commenced in the Holy Ghost will continue in the Holy Ghost; those who are really converted, though in the midst of the earthquake and the fire, will continue stedfast and listen to the still small voice, which is the very chariot in which the Lord God himself comes to take up his blessed and permanent abode in the soul.

"They continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine." By the apostles' doctrine there had been given to them eternal life; by the exposition of Peter, showing that all the predictions of the Psalms and prophets were fulfilled in Jesus, the Holy Ghost had turned their souls from darkness to light, from self-righteousness to repentance and faith in the Mediator appointed by God. And that which was the beginning was also the continuance of their spiritual life; so in all the apostolic arguments and epistles the Word of God is exalted and magnified. If you have been born again by the power of God unto eternal life, as new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the Word, that you may grow thereby.

When the Apostle Paul was leaving his congregations, he commended them not only to God, but also to the Word of his grace, which is able to build them up and give them an inheritance among them that are sanctified. Thus when Jesus himself was leaving the world, He said of his disciples who were to continue in this world of sin and temptation, "I have given unto them thy Word," and this is his prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy Word is truth."

The new-born children must love the Word of God; it must dwell in them; they must continue stedfast in the apostles' doctrine; in no other way can the life kindled by the Holy Ghost be sustained, in no other way is it possible for them to grow, to become strong, furnished unto every good work, and able to serve God.

"Stedfastly,"—for the Church of Christ is a fold, and the sheep are to go in and out and find pasture. The Church of Christ is a temple, and those who by the Spirit have, through faith, come unto the living Stone, are to be built up on their most holy faith. The Church of Christ is a school, and those who have come to sit at the feet of Jesus are to remain learners, disciples, that they may be wise unto salvation, fully instructed in the Word of God, children in malice, but men in understanding, in strength and patient service.

If we wish to protect our children, and to fortify them against the twofold evil of superstition and unbelief, of Romanism and Rationalism, which, like a mighty tide, is rushing in, we must see that they obtain a true, full, systematic, lively heart-knowledge of Scripture.

It is a shallow opinion that, in our age of civilization, knowledge, and progress, we are safe against the inroads of Romanism. For men of the profoundest intellect and of the greatest genius have submitted to the authority and teaching of the Papal Church. And these two evils, unbelief and false belief, help one another; the one is no safeguard against the other. Given a nation thoroughly rationalistic, and ignorant of the Scripture doctrine of sin and redemption, and in a few years it may be captivated by superstition and the false doctrines of tradition. Given a nation sunk in superstitious thralldom and in false faith, and it may easily be merged under the fearful waves of infidelity. For the Word of God is the only light which brings rest to the mind, heart, and conscience of man.

"Not upon the rock of the Divine Word," thus Luther often said, "is the Papal Church founded, but upon the shifting sand of human reasoning." The entrance of the Word giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple. The Scriptures known from a child make us wise unto salvation. You, therefore, who have children to educate and young minds to influence, see to it that they be thoroughly and fully instructed in the Word of God. Do not rest satisfied with superficial and desultory reading of religious books. Think not that interest in fragmentary sermons, news in the religious world, listening to favourite preachers, will be of avail to lay a strong and solid foundation. Teach, train, indoctrinate; instruct them in Scripture truth. Give them a connected view of the whole counsel of God. State the foundation-doctrines—the Divinity of the Lord Jesus; his threefold office as prophet, priest, and king; his death on the Cross as the substitute; justification by faith; the work of the Holy Ghost; the second advent of the Saviour; show them the Scripture passages on which our faith rests; ask them to commit them to memory; bequeath to them the form of sound words. As the Israelites were commanded to teach their children the statutes and ordinances of the Lord, and to speak of God's acts and words, morning, noon, and night; even so—and by our clearer and dearer Gospel light much more—let me beseech you, teach your households from God's Word the blessed truths of salvation.

And as it applies to your children, so to yourselves; it is a matter of intense importance, of the greatest moment, that the churches of Jesus Christ in these days should be masters of the Scripture, and no longer remain babes, but be able to teach others also; that they should be able to give a reason of the hope that is in them; that they should be fully instructed, so as not to be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine; that they should be fully established, comforted and strengthened by the Divine truth, so as to be able to stand and to rejoice in the midst of all trials and afflictions. Continue stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine.

A NOBLE CONFESSION.

It is with no ordinary pleasure that we give the following extract from the Hour's account of the leading prize rifle competition at Wimbledon:—

“When it is all over there is a sharp, quick cheer, and as Captain Pearse comes out of the enclosure with radiant countenance the cry is raised, ‘Up with him,’ and a dozen strong hands are ready to lift him on to strong and willing shoulders. But apparently Captain Pearse is dubious about their capacity to carry six feet five inches of healthy humanity, for he declines, or at any rate postpones, the honour. When, however, he emerges from the Council tent, with the band before him vigorously playing ‘See the Conquering Hero comes,’ further resistance is useless, and he is borne in triumph to the camp of the Victoria Rifles, surrounded by the enthusiastic crowd, and thence to his tent in the A lines of the Association camp, where he makes a speech.

“Besides being a ‘crack’ shot, Captain Pearse is a man of great moral courage, for he tells something to his expectant listeners which they were not prepared to hear, and which is certainly without precedent in the speeches of Queen's prizemen. He says that six months ago he was led to do everything from a higher motive than had actuated him before, and he ascribes his victory to the fact that he had hoped and trusted he might win, in order that he might tell them in those few words of his faith in the Bible, and exhort them to have that faith too.

“This statement was made in a simple, earnest, and straightforward manner, which is sufficient proof of sincerity, and certainly none but a sincere man would have spoken as Captain Pearse, of the 18th Devon, did. He is a native of Hatherleigh, North Devon, where, we believe, he is engaged in business as a solicitor.”

POLICEMEN'S TEAS, IPSWICH.—The policemen of our town, and their wives, have been gathered together in two meetings, half of the force attending one meeting, and the remaining half the other. The invitations sent out were very readily accepted by the men, and two most pleasant meetings were held. Sankey's hymns were sung by a few ladies and gentlemen, who gladly volunteered their services, and the Gospel was simply and plainly set before the men, both in the singing and in short addresses. Your readers will, I am sure, remember in their prayers not only the policemen of our town, but also the whole of the men throughout Great Britain. I send this to you, trusting that it will lead others to gather the policeman together at similar meetings, and thus show a most deserving class of men that they are cared for and thought of by those around them.

MR. SANKEY IN SWITZERLAND.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—We have had here, at Berne, in the centre of Switzerland, two meetings which reminded us very much of those never-to-be-forgotten gatherings around our dear brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The latter of these two honoured friends visited us on a short Continental ramble which he has undertaken before leaving Europe, and we had the great privilege of hearing the now so familiar strains of “Jesus of Nazareth passeth by,” “Sowing the seed,” &c., from his lips.

Before giving you a short account of these meetings, I must tell you that it was THE CHRISTIAN which first brought us the news of the wonderful work which began, just two years ago, at Sunderland, and by means of your excellent reports we have been able to follow Messrs. Moody and Sankey through Scotland, Ireland, and England, till, a month ago, we had the joy of attending for some time those blessed meetings in the capital of the world.

I can well remember how, at first, our friends here would not share our enthusiasm for Mr. Sankey's “Songs and Solos.” “We have our good old hymns,” they said; “do not talk to us of those American songs. How could you compare them with Luther's ‘Chorals’ and Zinzendorf's ‘Geistliche Lieder’?” However, this feeling did not last very long. Here and there translations of “Sankey's Hymns,” as they are familiarly called in Switzerland, were circulated, and in a very short time, “Safe in the arms of Jesus,” “I am so glad,” “Jesus of Nazareth,” &c., have become popular all over the country. Several translations have been printed. Zurich has its hymn-book, and so have Basle and Berne; translations in French have also been issued at Geneva. Now these songs have become the staple of all the Union meetings, which I may say are a very blessed feature of Christian life at Berne. You hear them in the assemblies in church and chapel, as well as in the Sunday-schools, down to the remotest parts of the hills and valleys of this canton, the “Old, old story of Jesus and his love,” being not only preached, but sung also, wherever the pulse of Christian life beats high.

The rumour of Mr. Sankey's probable arrival had preceded him at Berne. A public meeting was arranged for Sunday evening, the 18th, in the largest church of Berne. It was to be a service of song, in which it was hoped that Mr. Sankey would kindly take a part, although he had declared that he came to Switzerland for rest. However, he kindly gave up his incog. for the occasion, and great was the pleasure of all present when he made his appearance on the platform.

The church was quite full, and is said to seat about 1500. The choir sang Luther's old choral “Ein feste-Burg ist unser Gott.” Prayer was offered. Mr. Sankey sang “Safe in the arms of Jesus” (in German, “Sicher in Jesu Armen”), the choir joining in the last verse. A minister first spoke, then Mr. Sankey gave the “Prodigal,” which is so well translated that the people could follow his singing in their books. He made a very deep impression; many eyes were moistened with tears as “Come home! come home!” sounded for the last time through the vaults of the old building.

Taking this touching appeal for his text, Pastor G— called upon every poor, lost, and wandering soul in the audience to come home. He told of the love of Jesus; of his tender compassion for sinners, and showed the Father waiting for them, always ready to take them home. Mr. Sankey in a few words, which were very ably translated, affectionately invited all those who were present to decide for Jesus at once; not to expect a more convenient season to come, for they might never get a better opportunity to hear the Gospel. The choir sang the old German psalm, “When the prisoners came back to Zion, their mouths were full of laughter.” May many have responded to the invitation!

After the meeting had been dismissed, all the ministers came up to shake hands with Mr. Sankey, and thank him for his kind assistance. It seemed as if he had been a friend of old standing, so affectionate was the greeting on both sides.

The following day a Christian gentleman invited the choir and a number of friends to take tea with Mr. Sankey at the "Enge." From the terrace, which is probably well known to those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have visited Berne, you enjoy a splendid view of the glaciers of the Oberland; it is a beautiful spot. After the rainy days and weeks we have had it was a great treat to see the giants of the Alps unveil their snowy peaks. The sun having disappeared behind the blue range of the Jura mountains, the whole party, numbering about 200 persons, adjourned to the drawing-room. The choir sang "Ho! my comrades," after which an appropriate speech was addressed to Mr. Sankey, thanking him for his songs, and for all the blessing of which they have been the means. A bouquet and three photographs of Berne and its environs were presented to him as a modest token of the regard of the Bernese choir.

Mr. Sankey returned thanks with very cordial and friendly words; and the former speaker having alluded to the fact that, however excellent the local preachers might be, their merits were not always fully appreciated, no man being a prophet in his own country, Mr. Sankey impressed on his hearers the duty of rallying around their ministers, and supporting them in their labours among them by their prayers as well as by their singing. He then sang "Sowing the seed," the words being translated into German. Pastor G—— earnestly called upon all present to look away from earth up to Christ, and to put all their energy into the noble work of winning souls for Jesus. Prayer was offered, and Mr. Sankey sang "Jesus of Nazareth." It carried us back in thought to the Opera House, where, for the first time, we had heard him sing this heart-melting solo.

Mr. Sankey then addressed the meeting as follows: "Perhaps we shall never meet again, dear friends, before the day when we shall stand before the judgment-seat of God. A serious thought came over me of the account which we shall have to give of the opportunity offered us this evening—to me of speaking for the Master, and to you of hearing my message. Years ago I tried hard to become a Christian; I tried many ways before I found light in John iii. 14, 15. I discovered that instead of looking to Christ I had been looking into my own sinful heart. Many look into themselves and cannot find peace. Look away from yourselves straight to the Crucified One. 'But how am I to believe this?' you say. Believe it because God's Word says it. You don't want a better word than God's Word. God's Word is good enough for me, and I find rest. I trust not myself, but I trust God's Word. God wants us to love Him and to put all our confidence in Him. We are not to trust ourselves, but God. Here is the difference between God's way and man's way. Dear friends, why not trust Him to-night? Does distrust make you better, or will God be more willing to bless you to-morrow than to-day? Not before our heart is given up to God can we serve Him; the old heart is enmity to God. God gives a new heart with which you can serve Him. Turn to your Bibles, and you will find that this new life is offered to all who believe. All our works for God before we believe upon Him will go for nought. 'This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent' (John vi. 29). God wants our love. When we love Him we keep his commandments, and if we believe that He has redeemed us, we will gladly follow anywhere it pleases Him to lead us.

"Let me tell you a little story as an illustration of this. In the Southern States, when slavery was in force, they used to sell the slaves at the auction-block. One day a woman was put on the stand to be sold. Men bid for her. In a remote corner an individual bid higher and higher with the perseverance of a man who is determined to have his own way. At last she was knocked down to this stranger. The poor woman wanted to know what sort of a man her new master was, and looked over the heads of the people at the corner, where he had been standing. Then she became aware by his dress and appearance that he was a Northern man. She took a strong dislike to him, because he came from the States where they kept no slaves. However, the man asked her former master to keep her a day or two longer, till he came back to fetch her. When he came he said to her, 'Mary, you are free; you may go where you please. Here is the deed which sets you free.' She looked at the Stato seals appended to the document, and saw that it was all right. Then her rapture knew no bounds. Falling at his feet, she cried, 'Oh, sir, may I follow you, and be your servant? I will be faithful to you.' Well, she followed him northwards, and followed him because he had redeemed her. Now, when we believe that Jesus has bought us we will follow Him. I hope that these young men and women will give themselves up to Jesus. I shall carry back the most agreeable remembrance of Berne, and if it please God to bring us together once more, I shall be happy to tell you the 'old, old story' over again. God can do it if it be his good will. I will remember to pray for you; and when you look upon your beautiful mountains, remember to pray for Mr. Moody and myself."

The choir sang "The Great Physician," and Mr. Sankey expressed his full appreciation of the way in which it was sung. A very hearty and warm feeling prevailed all through the meeting. We were not strangers to each other—all children of the same Father. The time to break up came at last, and Mr. Sankey was pressed from all sides, everybody wanting to shake hands with him before parting.

Many said it had been the most blessed season they ever had experienced, and certainly these gatherings have been a very gracious gift of our Father. Let our hearts respond to his love; may our testimony be joyful, and our light shine brightly before men. A young girl wrote to Mr. Sankey a nice letter, in which she thanked him for the "Prodigal Child," which had been the means of her conversion.

Our best thanks follow our dear brother on his way home. God bless him and Mr. Moody. Their names have become dear to many a Swiss household, and our united prayers will go up to heaven on their behalf.

Berne, July 21, 1875.

B. DE WATTEVILLE.

ORPHAN EMIGRANTS AFLOAT.—Long and interesting letters have been received by Mr. Quarrier, of the Glasgow Home, describing the voyage of the last party of children from Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Leith. The passage was rather prolonged, owing to heavy fogs and attendant delays. The conduct of the children was uniformly satisfactory, and it is hoped that some hearts were reached during the voyage.

EVANGELISTIC WORK AMONG SAILORS, BARGE-MEN, AND DOCK-LABOURERS.—In September, 1873, a large hall was hired for two years, in which to hold special services for the above class. From the opening night, until the present, God has graciously manifested his approval; very many who were quite ignorant of the Saviour's love have received salvation, and prove by their lives that the Gospel is the Power of God unto salvation. The attendance gradually increases, and in addition to the services held for adults, we have a Sunday-school with 150 children. Although the existing agencies for the spread of gospel truth were numerous, it was felt that a place of this sort was much needed, and the result has exceeded our expectations. Numerous cases of conversion to God have come under our notice, especially among men who, having spent the greater part of their lives at sea, are working in the docks, or on the River Thames. The consistent conduct of these men testifies wonderfully for God in this place; and it is most pleasing to notice the anxiety displayed by these to bring others to the Lord Jesus. One man, through inviting others to attend our services, has been instrumental in the salvation of no less than eighteen precious souls within the two years, all of whom are living out the truth. Our hall will shortly be removed, and the solemn importance of the work has caused me to hire a large building in the Barking-road. We shall (D.V.) continue the services in the upper part, which will hold about 400 people. The rooms underneath will be opened as reading-rooms for the men after working hours, if it should please the Lord to supply us with means. May we ask the prayers of his people for this work? Doubtless He will do great things for us in the future, and many, many more precious souls will be brought to Christ. We greatly need funds for the purchase of additional seats, and repairs to the building; and trust our gracious God will incline the hearts of his dear stewards to help us, in order that the work may not be hindered. This work is known to Captain Smith, of the Evangelization Society.

THE WORK IN SCOTLAND.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

As the time for the departure of the messengers who have gone up and down through the United Kingdom for two years is near it becomes every child of God to take a solemn review of the past. This cannot be done in a spirit of doubt or fear for the future. The results and continuance of the work in the places they first visited inspire the liveliest hope and confidence. But each one is asking, How can I consecrate myself entirely to "the waging of the work?" How can I gather up a basket of fragments of these blessed feast-days of glorious grace? If there be in any sister's heart the desire to tell of God's mighty love to her soul or circle through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN, without giving a clue to her neighbourhood or family, a communication addressed to the writer of this letter will be gratefully received. It is indeed enough that the Lord's eye be rejoiced by resting on the work of His own hand; yet there are many who have no courage to tell others what the Lord has done for them, but whose simple story of grace would refresh many a heart.

In Scotland the work goes quietly on. Places unvisited as yet apply for evangelists whose work is blessed, and if ever there was a time to pray in the Holy Ghost for the extension of the work on every side, it is now. Christians passing through Edinburgh will not fail to visit the noon meeting. Brief statements from brethren regarding the work from places whence they come are hailed there with warm sympathy; while the sister in Christ may slip her line of prayer or of thanksgiving for blessings received or sought, along with a request for the day, and so add her tribute to the interest of the meeting.

For the information of those who are passing through Edinburgh, we may mention that the mothers always meet on Thursday at eleven o'clock, and the workers on Friday at eleven. The free breakfast in the Drill-hall, Forest-road, continues. Many workers are out of town, and the visits of strangers will be most acceptable. There is another meeting for the same class of outcasts at 3 p.m. in the same hall. The evangelistic service is always held with blessing at 6.30 in the Assembly-halls; and the converts are addressed on Monday, at 8 p.m.

Ladies will find it very interesting to visit the Young Women's Christian Association in Young-street. We found there, last Lord's-day morning, a class of intelligent young Christians around the open Bible, which a lady was explaining to them, and where, as in all meetings of believers, the work in London was commended in loving sympathy to the great Head of the Church. As we crossed the court of the hospital, after realising the Lord's presence in speaking of Jesus in a ward, we saw two convalescent women who said they had learned to believe and trust in Jesus since they had come thither.

WINSLOW, DUCKS.—A correspondent writes:—"The Tent Mission here has been, through God's mercy, a great success. It commenced on Monday, July 12, the day on which Messrs. Moody and Sankey held their farewell meeting at Mildmay Hall, and notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, and the abundance of rain and wind, which have done their best to shake the building, large congregations, especially of working men, have assembled every evening, except on Wednesday and Thursday, when the rain compelled us to adjourn to an iron room. The Rev. T. Richardson, of St. Benet's, Stepney, gave the address on the first three days. He has been followed by Rev. S. Pennefather, vicar of Kenilworth, and Mr. Wales, an evangelist from the Evangelization Society. There has been a good deal of opposition from a certain portion of the inhabitants, but very large numbers have been gathered together; larger than, for such a purpose, has been known at Winslow in the memory of man. The largest congregations were on Friday evening and Sunday afternoon, when the Tent, which will hold 1000 persons, was full to overflowing. Many have been influenced, we trust permanently, by the good news, and we have every reason to hope that, during the next few days, many will have set to their seals that God is true. The Tent will be kept in use during the summer months in the adjoining parishes, and we ask the prayers of the Lord's people that an abundant harvest of souls may be brought in while the mowers and reapers and gleaners are at work in the corn-fields."

AN ORPHANS' HOME IN SOUTHWARK.

ON Thursday last our highly esteemed and dear friend Miss Sharman had the pleasure of seeing the foundation-stone laid of one wing of her new Orphans' Home; and seldom has stone been laid with more evident interest and satisfaction and grace than this one by her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland. The story of this Home has been one of those true events, stranger than fiction. A steady advance from two to two hundred, with a corresponding increase of income, with no machinery for obtaining money, and a steadfast adherence to the principle not to ask of man, but only of God—such, in few words, has been the history of this Home. The founder is a lady whose health has, from the commencement, been delicate, but the hands of the Man Christ Jesus have been beneath the wings of her faith; and there has been this great advantage about the course she has taken—the tender Shepherd has not led on more quickly than she could follow. Accepting the means supplied as the measure of the work to be done, she has been preserved from over-pressure, and kept calm, trustful, and happy, while patience has been exercised and experience has grown with the progress of the work.

The following particulars are given by the Daily News of July 23:—

"The foundation-stone of the north wing of the Orphans' Home in West-square, Southwark, was laid yesterday afternoon by the Duchess of Sutherland, under attendant circumstances of a very favourable character. The orphans assembled in considerable numbers, and there was a large gathering of the people of the neighbourhood, who appeared to regard the proceedings as possessing much interest. The chair was taken at three o'clock by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who was accompanied on the platform by Miss Sharman, the originator of the institution, the Rev. M'Connell Hussey, the Rev. P. J. Turquand, the Rev. Mr. Cavell (Vicar of St. Jude's, Southwark), Mr. J. A. Smith (honorary secretary to the trustees), Mr. Roger Smith (honorary architect), and many other friends and well-wishers of the Home. The Duchess of Sutherland, on her arrival, was received with a cordial cheer. Upon taking the chair, Mr. Morley called upon the Rev. M'Connell Hussey to open the engagement of the day with prayer, and this having been done,

"Mr. J. A. Smith read a statement descriptive of the origin and progress of this remarkable charity. It was founded in 1862 by Miss Sharman, who commenced with two orphans; and the first report was issued in 1866. The idea so commended itself, that in 1870 there were 130 orphans in the Home; in the following year there were 163; in 1872 these had increased by 17; and the present number was 206, the ages of the inmates varying from two to sixteen years.

"A statement was next read by Mr. Roger Smith, the honorary architect, which showed that the freehold site secured for the new institution, purchased in 1873 for £3,500, was three-quarters of an acre in extent, with a frontage of 113 feet, and a depth of over 200 feet. It was admirably open and airy, occupying a most healthy situation, and the Home itself would be lofty, while the surrounding houses would be low. The proposed new building was to consist of a centre and two wings, that now commenced being devoted to the elder girls, and comprising about one-third of the whole structure; the corresponding wing was to be appropriated to infants, the centre block containing the rooms required for general purposes. The Home was to be a substantial and plain one, and the contractor had undertaken to complete the wing now in question by October 31.

"The Chairman then said a few words, assuring the company of the gratification which he experienced in acceding to Miss Sharman's request that he would preside on this occasion. In congratulating this estimable lady upon the success of the work which she had so worthily initiated, Mr. Morley felt that she deserved the hearty, genuine, and practical sympathy of the public—a sentiment which met with the warm approval of the meeting.

"The Duchess of Sutherland then laid the stone, spreading the mortar with a silver trowel, made especially in anticipation of the event. A plan of the building, some current coins, and a copy of the last annual report, having been placed in the cavity, the stone, a huge block hewn from the quarries of Portland, was duly lowered amid great cheering. Upon it was the following inscription:—"This stone of the north wing of the Orphan's Home for Girls was laid July 22, 1875, by her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland. "In Thee the fatherless findeth mercy."—Hosea xiv. 3.' Her Grace then declared the stone to be well and truly laid, and added—"I am very much pleased to have this opportunity of expressing the deep interest I feel in the work carried on here. I shall always pray that the blessing of the Father of the fatherless may rest upon this institution. Three enthusiastic cheers were then given for the Duchess, to whom Mr. Morley conveyed the heartfelt thanks of the gathering for her presence. Loud cheers were also given for Miss Sharman, and some kindly words of encouragement having been spoken by Mr. R. C. Morgan and the Rev. P. J. Turquand, the benediction was offered by the Vicar of St. Jude's, and the company separated."

NEW SOUTH WALES.

ABORIGINAL TRAINING INSTITUTION.

THE Rev. R. W. Vanderkiste, of Sydney, writes:—"I think the mournful history of this school should be known to your Aborigines Protection Society, and also to the Colonial Office. It affords just another illustration of the wretched manner in which all our efforts to benefit the native races here are thwarted by the cruelty, and licentiousness, and debauchery of the colonists. The no plus ultra of duty towards these people by their white brethren appears too often to be esteemed by them to consist in shooting them down and exterminating them. What can be done for the blacks, in the way of saving conversion and outward reformation, has been, and is, shown at the existing aboriginal settlements of Poonindie, Conderrick, and Lako Hope, but the story is far too long for your pages.

"The institution of which I now write is in private hands; it has no committee, but one Mr. Daniel Matthews, of Moama, a farmer, and Mrs. Matthews, his wife, have long had very great sympathy for the aboriginals of the Murray, which they have shown, according to their means and opportunities, in a very practical manner. These excellent Christian people had managed, with some little aid from Sydney and elsewhere, to set up, on their own land, a large wooden dormitory, and took in young aboriginals of both sexes to feed, train, and educate them. Two of the inmates were girls of fourteen, each with a half-caste infant belonging to her. This is how matters go on! A stockman called and informed one of these girls that her mother was dying, and wished to see her. Mr. Matthews could not detain her, but it proved a ruse on the part of the squatter's son to get the poor girl again into his power. Such conduct leads to the dispersion of all the inmates, for Mr. Matthews possesses no lien on their persons. They will probably, however, gather again at the dormitory now that winter is approaching, and get perhaps six months' instruction before there is another scatter. You are perhaps aware that every colonial governor finds one clause in his instructions binding him to cherish in every way the interests of the native races. Whilst I sadly think of the process of extinction of these aborigines now going on, I am forcibly reminded of that passage of Divine inspiration—"Thus saith the Lord my God: Feed the flock of the slaughter, whose possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty: and they that sell them say, Blessed be the Lord, for I am rich; and their own shepherds pity them not" (Zech. xi. 4, 5). I should esteem it a great favour if any of your readers would mark this paragraph, turn down the page, and post THE CHRISTIAN containing it to any philanthropists and men in power who are likely to feel interested in the welfare of native tribes. I happen to know that good—sometimes unexpectedly—is to be effected by such means."

FLOWERS FOR THE SICK POOR OF LONDON.—A correspondent writes:—"During the next two months, hundreds of families resident in London and the suburbs will be leaving home for the seaside or elsewhere, and myriads of lovely flowers will, during their absence, bloom and die, unseen and unappreciated. I therefore suggest that those who possess gardens should, when practicable, leave instructions for the gardener or other servant to send flowers to one or other of the various receiving-houses of the Flower Mission. By the adoption of this simple plan, a very great boon would be conferred upon the sick poor of London, for whose benefit this Mission has been established." The central depôts for both fruit and flowers are, the Conference Hall, Milldam-park, N., and the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spital-fields, E.; and the receiving-days are Tuesdays and Thursdays. We are glad to hear of a similar work being in operation in Hull and Liverpool.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S FAREWELL TO ENGLAND.

It has been arranged to hold a Christian Conference in the Victoria Hall, Liverpool, at three o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday next, August 3; and at seven o'clock the same evening Messrs. Moody and Sankey will hold their farewell meeting in England. Friends from a distance wishing to be present will please apply for tickets to Mr. D. M. Drysdale, Regent-road, Liverpool.

THE DUBLIN BELIEVERS' MEETINGS.

(Concluded from our last.)

EVANGELISTS AT WILLOW-PARK.

THESE truly refreshing meetings were brought to a close on Friday morning (July 9), at the hospitable table of Mr. Henry Bewley, Willow-park. At nine o'clock, about 160 sat down to a substantial breakfast in the spacious conservatory. The company consisted almost exclusively of evangelists and ministers of the Gospel labouring in different parts of the United Kingdom—all, we doubt not, earnest-hearted men. The presence of two or three clergymen of the Irish Church helped to give a catholic aspect to the meeting.

At the close of the meal, after singing a hymn, Mr. BARTON, the Chairman of the Conference, engaged in prayer, and then briefly stated that it was the desire of the generous host that the meeting should be left open, and that any present should feel free to give an account of Gospel labours, to pray, to read, or make remark upon scriptures bearing on the work of an evangelist; only with this proviso—that no one should occupy at the most a longer time than five minutes.

A few moments only of silence, and then a brother, whose name I lost, offered a few well-chosen remarks upon 2 Cor. vi. 2.

A thoroughly practical turn was then given to the meeting by Mr. HURDITCH, who made reference to a letter just received from Lord Radstock, urging the claims of the China Inland Mission especially upon Christian women. Mr. Hurditch then made an appeal to the young men present, to give themselves to missionary labour.

Mr. RUDLAND, of the China Inland Mission (now in this country for his health's sake, and who was one of the Lammernuir band), then spoke an encouraging word to any who were fearing the difficulties they would meet with in acquiring the Chinese language. He told how God had helped him, in a very short time, to speak in three different dialects, notwithstanding the fact that when he left this country he had never learned any language but his own. Some he knew had begun to preach in six months, imperfectly of course, yet sufficiently well to be understood. Mr. Rudland's earnest simple address went to all hearts.

Mr. HENRY MOOREHEAD followed, urging San Francisco as presenting a most promising field for missionary labour amongst Chinese. Here the missionary would meet with no opposition from the "powers that be," since all were under American rule. The Chinese, employed by thousands in California, learned to speak the English tongue, and were, moreover, most anxious to be instructed in the Word of God. Most of them, he said, earned sufficient money to return to China and live upon for the remainder of their lives, and remarked what a power for good amongst their own countrymen would be exercised by those who carried back with them a saving knowledge of the Gospel of Christ.

Mr. FRANK WHITE rose and asked for the sympathy and prayers of all present for the thirty-six young men now in training for home and foreign mission work at the East-end Training Institute, three of whom, he said, it was expected would sail for the land of Sinim in September. He closed with a solemn reference to the words of our Lord in Matthew ix.: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."

Several brethren then rose (among others a medical man), and, stating that it had been laid on their hearts to go forth to labour in a foreign country, earnestly entreated the prayers of all present for the removal of various difficulties which for a time hindered. Then an honoured servant of Christ stood up and asked prayer for his three sons, all converted, that each may be led to give himself to missionary labours abroad.

Mr. T. SHULDHAM HENRY drew a contrast between such a father and the many Christian parents who not only did not encourage their children to go abroad and work for Christ, but even sought to keep them back when they had a mind to go. He asked prayer for such.

Several brethren, whose hearts seemed too full to refrain any longer, then led in prayers of much urgency, fervour, and directness.

After reference to the dark, neglected state of too many of our English villages, the meeting was brought to a close by an appeal from Dr. Baedeker on behalf of Germany, and by Mr. Faithful, who pleaded for the 16,000,000 of Spain.

Altogether it was a remarkable meeting, though not of a character to be described with pen and ink, and was felt to be a fitting sequel to those which had filled up the preceding days. Some of the addresses, especially those by Mr. McVicker, Mr. Rees (of Sunderland), Mr. Windle (an Irish clergyman), and Dr. Mackay, will long be remembered; they were full of precious and deeply important matter.

We could have taken exception to some things that were said, which, in our judgment, did not hold with Scripture statement, but there was so much that we could not but agree in, and withal such an earnest, prayerful, brotherly spirit pervading the whole of the proceedings, that we cannot be sufficiently thankful that we were permitted the privilege of being present. It is our earnest hope and conviction that real and abiding results will follow. Of this we are sure—that the only safe test to be applied to these and similar conferences now so largely on the increase is, "What comes of them?" Do they lead to those who attend them becoming holier, more humble, less worldly and selfish, and more self-denying and devoted in the service of the Gospel? Do they move such to put forth larger and more wisely-directed efforts for winning their fellow-sinners to God? In proportion to their increase, do we see a corresponding readiness on the part of well-to-do Christians to pour of their abundance into the Lord's treasury—a quicker and more practical response to the claims, spiritual, moral, and social, of the destitute of our own land, as well as of the many perishing millions of China, India, Africa, who, with mute appeals to our Christian compassion, cry, "Come over and help us"? God grant that the Brighton, the Mildmay, and the Dublin Conferences may alike stand this crucial test; else will there not appear some ground for the objection which not a few have, not without some show of reason, raised to such meetings, as being mere "religious luxuries," for which truly earnest-hearted Christians can have no heart or time? That the happy Christian fellowship of some of the most devoted and spiritually-minded in our churches is in a sense a "luxury" we cannot doubt. It is, however, a luxury for which we ought to be devoutly thankful, and in the indulgence in which we may humbly hope through the grace of God to reap lasting and blessed fruit to the praise and glory of God. Let us "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." F. H. W.

Dr. Baedeker writes to us that our report of his remarks at the Dublin meetings is somewhat incorrect, and requests us to insert the following as conveying more precisely what he said:—

"In speaking of a mutilated Bible, I referred to a Bible which has been published by one of the Rationalistic pastors at Zürich, in Switzerland, and spoke of the need of an atonement being openly denied by the teachers of that school; but, thank God! their churches are getting empty, because the people are not satisfied with such teaching. There are now open doors for evangelists in many parts of Germany."

THE HOP-PICKERS' MISSION, ALTON.—Will you allow me a short space in your next issue to plead the claims of the hop-pickers, many of whom will visit this neighbourhood during the season? The crop is likely to be very good this year, and this will bring great numbers to the district. The opportunity afforded to do mission work amongst them is great, and I am desirous of taking up the work as in former years. During last season three evangelists were engaged day by day in visiting the people in the various gardens, holding camp meetings, and reading the Word of God to individuals in their separate tents,—in this way aiming to lead them to Jesus. The work and its results are very encouraging. Last year about 500 were gathered in a field, kindly lent by one of the farmers, when a free tea was given them. It was an interesting sight to see this assemblage of all ages and shades of colour, sitting on the grass at their meal. It was gratifying to hear their expressions of thanks for the attention shown them. After tea several addresses were delivered, and hymns sung to the accompaniment of a musical instrument. The attention and behaviour throughout were most becoming. The friends who interested themselves in getting up the tea have kindly offered to do so again, and we hope, should means be forthcoming, to gather a thousand together this year. SAMUEL CHINN.

ALLIANCE OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

We do not usually chronicle the proceedings of Church Courts and Councils. The gathering, however, of delegates from nearly all the Presbyterian churches of the world, held in London last week, was of an unusual character, and promises to be not only an era in Presbyterian Church history, but an event that will ultimately exercise a widespread and beneficial influence on the progress of Christ's Kingdom everywhere. The avowed object of this conclave was, not to strengthen the Presbyterian cause at the expense of other Christian Churches, but rather to unite the forces of a number of Church organizations, holding essentially the same fundamental doctrines, for the purpose of combating the powers of evil, and carrying on the work of evangelizing the world. Other subsidiary ends will be sought, such as the training of those devoted to the ministry, the aiding of weak or persecuted churches, the sanctification of the Sabbath, the suppression of intemperance and other vices, &c.; but the grand object of the Alliance will be—as expressed by Dr. Wilson, of Alleghany, at the last public meeting of the series—"the world for Jesus."

The Conference was attended by representatives of upwards of twenty different Presbyterian churches, gathered from the British colonies, the United States, the Continent of Europe, and the Three Kingdoms. On Tuesday evening, last week, the delegates were welcomed at Regent-square Church, the talented pastor of which, Dr. Dykes, delivered a remarkable opening address. One or two sentences from it will indicate the scope and aim of the deliberations that occupied the following days:—

"What our brethren have gathered in London to do is, not to form an alliance of individual Christians; it is to form an alliance of Christian Churches—a very different and a much greater thing. How fast and how strangely has this feeling spread itself and deepened among us all. Churches which have so very much in common as we all have, ought, as churches, to know each other better, and to stand closer in the fight—shoulder to shoulder,—for the sake of the common Master. Surely that must be a right feeling, for it is a kind and a Christian one. Hitherto disunion has been our reproach. We have passed through a long and weary era of division and sub-division, schisms, ruptures, disruptions, and estrangements. Have they not made sad work among us, till the hearts of the best of us have grown very sick of it? Within the last generation the tide has turned. It is not that men hold less conscientiously or less firmly any atom of known truth, or any of those beliefs, or even mere opinions, which have divided us; but we are beginning to discover that we may differ without dividing. The more important and the less important beliefs are finding their several places. Let the more important step to the front; over them we clasp hands. Let the less important step to the rear; in these we may differ, but over them we will not wrangle."

Dr. Dykes closed his very able address with some very warm words of formal welcome to the delegates, several of whom made most fraternal response. The whole tone of the meeting was a conspicuous illustration of the psalm with which the proceedings opened—

"Behold how good a thing it is,
And how becoming well,
Together such as brethren are
In unity to dwell."

The main part of the Conference was private, this first series of meetings being only preliminary, and the chief business being the settlement of a constitution on which the future labours of the Alliance will be based.

A public dinner was held on Wednesday at Freemasons' Tavern, presided over by Mr. H. M. Matheson, who referred to the remarkable progress made by the Presbyterian Church in London during late years.

The Rev. Dr. Schaff, of New York, in speaking on behalf of his countrymen, made the following remarks with reference to the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey:—

"One of the most interesting and remarkable facts in the history of these days is the wonderful effect produced amongst you by the efforts of two laymen from America. It is a greater marvel to us than to you, and the only way to account for it is at once to refer it to the grace of God. Such a movement the world has not seen since the days of Whitfield and Wesley, and it is a wider movement than that which followed the efforts of these two honoured men. It is the most unsectarian in its character, and, I may add, the most unselfish movement, known in our common history. It was for the purpose of winning souls to Christ and of extending his kingdom, without any regard to denominational boundaries, that these two men came to England, and every church may reap the benefit . . . We in America had no idea that these two men could have produced such a commotion amongst you all; but it is just the old, old story of the simple fishermen of Galilee over again."

A very large public meeting in connexion with the Conference was held in Marylebone Presbyterian Church on Thursday evening, at which Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, New Jersey, presided, and gave a historical sketch of the circumstances which had led to the formation of the Alliance. He endorsed the opinion of Dr. McLeod, of New York, who had described the movement as "the solemn league and covenant of the nineteenth century."

A number of eloquent addresses were given in support of the objects of the Alliance. The venerable missionary, Dr. Duff, in the course of his short address, drew a vivid picture of the coming conflict between the powers of good and evil, and exhorted to more devotion to missionary effort, and to faith in God that all would be overruled for the best ends.

The first general Council of the Alliance will probably meet next year at Edinburgh.

OUT OF DARKNESS INTO LIGHT.

"He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted . . . to comfort all that mourn . . . to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."—(Isa. lxi. 1-3.)

DARK was the night of sorrow,
Benumbed and cold I lay,
Round me the robe of heaviness,
Eyes closed to break of day;
I footsteps heard, but could not see
The One who passed that way.

I heard Him stop and call me;
But I heeded not. I lay
As one too faint to mark or care
For the call of the bright and gay;
I knew not the "Man of Sorrows," though
'Twas HE who passed that way.

He spoke; but I would not answer—
I wished Him away, away.
He spoke again, but I deemed Him one
Who had robbed me of sunshine's ray—
Who had stolen my treasure, and left me lone,
Frenzied with wild dismay.

And I would have lain in my misery;
I begged Him to let me stay;
But He gently came, and tenderly
Lifted me as I lay;
And faint and weary though I was,
He bore me from thence away.

He opened my eyes to the sunshine
Of a world of perfect day;
He gave me treasure—oh! better far
Than that which He took away!
And I wear the gift of Jesus' love—
The garment of praise to-day.

CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.—A correspondent writes, in reply to the "Letter of a Nurse," and "Clothing for the Poor," in our Young Women's Number, that she has the desire and the leisure to devote to working for medical and other missions, but cannot be much from home. She therefore asks that materials may be sent to her, new or second-hand, or cast-off garments. The clothes are to be forwarded either to Dr. Saunders, Endell-street, or Mr. Toye's Orphanage. Address, M.P., 10, High-street, Kensington, W.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE FOR CORK.—A pressing need of a soldiers' institute is felt in the city of Cork. It is a large and important garrison town, and a great number of troops yearly embark and disembark there. An eligible site lies near the principal barracks, offered at a small rent. The building is to include a bar for tea, coffee, and other refreshments for the men at small cost, a reading and lecture-room, apartments for a lady superintendent and non-commissioned officer in charge, and a hall for Gospel services. The amount required will be £1,000. Communications may be addressed to W. Perrott, Esq., Manager, Bank of Ireland, Tralee; or to Leonard Potter, Esq., Wellington-road, Cork.

YOUNG WOMEN'S COLUMN.

OUR COUNTRY LODGING-HOUSES.

It may help some of my sisters in Christ, who are seeking to tell "the old, old story" of Jesus and his love, if I tell them how graciously He has lately helped me.

One Sunday afternoon it was put into my mind to visit a poor old man at a lodging-house near; and, offering up a simple prayer for help and blessing, I set out on my errand. The old man—who had met with an accident, but was recovering—was gone out a little way, for the first time since his illness; and as I stood waiting his return I heard many voices talking together in another part of the house. A voice within me—I knew it was the Good Shepherd's—said gently, "You might tell that party of the love of Jesus." My heart shrank at the thought. I did not know how rough, or how many in number, they might be, for I had only gone once or twice before to see the old man; but again the Saviour spoke, and again a prayer was breathed, as I stood there alone, for direction and courage. It was indeed granted; and I hope to trust my Lord and Master more and more each day I live.

The old man by this time returned, and I read to him the story of Jesus' death on the cross, begging him to accept the offered salvation. I no longer felt any fear, and asking the landlady whether the party I could hear talking would like me to speak to them, she said they were poor foreigners, and she would ask them. Soon I found myself with a company of strolling players; and God, by his Holy Spirit, permitted me to tell these poor strangers of a Friend in heaven, who loved and gave his life for each one of them. I asked if they could sing a hymn, and found there was one English girl amongst them, but she only knew part of one hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood."

So, having in my pocket one of the little books of Mr. Sankey's songs, I read (for I cannot sing so as to set a tune) "The ninety and nine." Then we knelt in prayer together, and I commended them to the loving care of our Father in heaven. The English girl sobbed and wept bitterly. I saw the tears running down her cheeks whilst the hymn was being read. It seemed to be the key the Master made use of to unlock her heart, for she burst forth with a tale of sin and sorrow such as would touch any heart to hear. Without home, without friends, what should she do, or how should she get back into an honest path in life?

In service in London, she said, she had left her place with a man who promised to marry, but soon deserted her, and had not this party of strolling players taken her up, she must have been lost. Her whole cry was, "Oh! if I could get back to service." I could not help her much, but gave her the address of Miss Stride's Home for the Destitute, which was thankfully received, and early on Monday morning the party left our town to travel to London.

This is all; but it has made me think how God might bless a visit from any of his dear children able to go to our country lodging-houses, especially in the summer months. Many shelter there to whom the tale of Jesus' precious love might be a blessed thing. Even the reading of that beautiful hymn, and the feeble prayer, seemed owned by God; and whilst teachers are busy in our Sunday-schools, are there not some who could visit the lodging-houses in our small towns and villages, and so do good amongst the poor strangers there? It may seem difficult at first, but the words are full of help and heart-cheer that tell us—and they are the words of Jesus our Shepherd—that, "when He putteth forth his own sheep, He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him, for they know his voice."

MR. JOSHUA POOLE writes:—"Will you be so kind as to say in THE CHRISTIAN that I am at home for a rest? I have not been well since I came home. Friends will please address to 7, Gladstone-road, West-hill-park, Halifax."

MR. SANKEY'S SOUTH AND WEST LONDON CHOIRS.—These Choirs have been formed into a permanent institution, and last week we announced that they would give their services to any Mission effort to win souls to Christ. Christians with useful voices are earnestly invited to join the choir. Apply to the Hon. Secretary, R. J. A. Dobbie, 65, Meyrick-road, Clapham Junction, S.W.

CADNAM, NEW FOREST.—Special services have been held daily in this village the last three weeks by two agents of the Evangelization Society—C. Edwards and G. Hefford—with very marked success. Many persons who never attend any place of worship have regularly listened to the Word of Life. The gratitude expressed by scores for these services is a clear proof that they have not been in vain.

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

DURING the past months, when our columns have been so largely taken up with accounts of the work of revival in our midst, we have reluctantly been obliged to neglect, to some extent, the numerous reports of missions that have reached us. With less pressure on our space, we hope in future to do more justice to the strong and, in many cases, urgent claims of those workers who have laboured long, often amid much discouragement, in this teeming metropolis and other places. We have accumulated such a pile of these reports that we must, perforce, in order to mention all, dismiss each in a few lines. We give the address of each mission, so that those friends who feel interested in any special effort may write for copies of the report, which we doubt not will be readily supplied.

St. Giles's Christian Mission.—The first thing that strikes us in this annual record of work amongst the poor of St. Giles's is a lithographed map of Seven Dials, which tells us that in this district there are twenty-five public-houses, ten bakers' shops, one church, and two mission halls. It will at once be seen that there is a wide field for the efforts of Mr. George Hatton and his co-workers. The last year's work, carried on chiefly in the new hall in Little Wild-street, has been large and varied. We read with much regret that Mr. Hatton's state of health is at present unfavourable, and that the funds of the Mission are very low. Mr. Hatton's address is 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

Golden-lane Mission.—The best way in which we can recommend this Mission and its indefatigable superintendent is to quote what Mr. Spurgeon has recently written about the multifarious agencies it comprises:—"We know of no evangelistic work in London so wisely conducted and permanently useful as that which was inaugurated by Mr. Orsman, and has been carried on by him for so many years. He is one of that honourable body of men who are not chargeable unto the churches, but abide in their callings and preach the Gospel freely. Only by labourers of this class can our back-slums be reached. Hard by the very centre of infidelity our brother exhibits a practical Christianity, and he ought to have the sympathy of all believers in so doing—a sympathy not of words only, but shown in pecuniary help towards the building he requires." We would only add that the continued countenance and support of the philanthropic Earl of Shaftesbury (whose portrait adorns the annual report) is an additional guarantee, if any were needed, of the good work sustained among the costermongers by Mr. Orsman, whose address is 75, Oakley-road, Islington, N.

Bell-alley Mission and Ragged School.—The tenth annual report of this Mission says:—"As is well known, the district of St. Luke's is crowded by those who strive to obtain a livelihood by brace-making, a dozen of which they are obliged to make before earning 2d., besides finding their own needles, thread, and light. Thus it will be seen that by doing their utmost they are scarcely able to earn sufficient to keep body and soul together. These are the persons our Mission tries to help, by providing for their souls and bodies; and we know of many cases in which hungry men, women, and children have been saved from literal starvation by our timely assistance." Mr. John Salmon the superintendent's address is 6, Bell-alley, Goswell-road, St. Luke's.

The Orphans' Home, South-street, West-square, Southwark.—Miss Sharman has issued her ninth report, which, though made up of light and shade, is yet another fulfilment of God's promise to be a "Father to the fatherless." With her increased accommodation we hope will flow in increased support and increased blessing to the needy little ones.

Hackney-road Mission.—The sixth annual record of this Mission, entitled "An Atom of Work," is quite a novelty, being in rhyme throughout. We cannot say that this mode of dress adds much to the interest of the report, which, however, is full of work done for the Master in various ways. It contains a selection of hymns written by Mr. Girling, the pastor of the Mission. As in the case of some of the other reports before us, we regret to see the money balance on the wrong side. Mr. Girling's address is 17, Millard-road, Stoke Newington-road, N.

Home for Little Boys, 15, Palmerston-road, Kilburn-rise, N.W.—The history of this youthful institution for boys who have lost both parents, for the past year has been a chequered one; but it has signally illustrated the saying that "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." We commend it to the continued succour of the Lord's stewards. Communications to be addressed to Mr. George Pledger, at the Home.

Young Women's Christian Association, 19A, Great Portland-street, W.—This established and invaluable institution needs no commendation from us. We are glad to read in the last published report that young women's institutes of a similar kind have been started, or are in process of formation, in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Bath, Cambridge, Cheltenham, Exeter, Ross, Sunderland, and Truro. If there should be any of our readers who are not acquainted with this Association and its object, we could not put it in more appropriate words than those of the report:—"Its aim is to lessen, as far as possible, the many forms of temptation to which young women coming up from the country to our great metropolis for employment are so particularly exposed, and to afford them the comfort and safety of a home, where they can meet with loving sympathy flowing from Christian fellowship, which will lead them to a knowledge of the Saviour." Our readers will have perused with interest the article in our "Special Number for Young Women," by the secretary, Miss Weitbrecht.

We can only mention the names of the following, all of them doing good service in a very practical way and worthy of support. We advise those interested to procure reports for themselves:—Cripples' Home and Industrial School for Girls, 17A, Marylebone-road, W.; Home for the Blind, 62, Londoun-road, St. John's-wood; Homes for the Aged Poor, 87, Portland-road, Notting-hill, W.

Next week we hope to reduce further the heap of reports on our table.

A GOOD WORK.

MAY I be permitted to add a word to the appeals already made for speedy help to be given to the homes for the "friendless and fallen"? None but visitors to hospitals can tell the need and the blessing of these homes. I must speak of them with the deepest gratitude. Just now I have seen a young orphan girl mercifully laid by through suffering in her foot, and hindered from pursuing her miserable occupation of stage-dancing. With many tears of gratitude she told me of the hopes of a better life in future, through Mr. Thomas's kindness in promising to receive her; and how many respectable young women have I seen in hospitals, far away from their homes, and broken down through hard work in lodging-houses, unable to enter any place of service till rest had been given them! Daily is the need for these homes seen more and more, and daily may praise be given for rest there found for the weary soul, as well as for the worn-out body.

HASTINGS.—There has been held lately, at the Music Hall, Hastings, a series of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. S. Trevor Francis and others, which have been accompanied by much blessing. At the close of Mr. Francis' visit, all those who had received blessing at the special services were invited to tea in the Wellington-square Lecture Hall to meet Mr. Francis, after which all those who professed to have received salvation were asked to stand up and declare "what the Lord had done for them." About twenty responded. Gospel addresses by Dr. Mulock will (D.V.) still be continued for a few weeks in the Music Hall; prayer is asked that a still greater blessing may accompany them.

READING-ROOMS FOR WORKING-MEN.—The delightful account of a coffee-room, in your last number, ought to be published in every newspaper in the kingdom. I refer to the paper from Tower Hill, Dorking, signed "E. R. Cotton." Now, what is done on a small scale in Dorking, may be done on a large scale in London. London is far behind many provincial towns. I have never had the good fortune to see, in our great metropolis, a mechanics' institute, or such a coffee-room as that described in your last number, although we have public-houses and beer-shops at every corner. I live on the south side of the Thames, and have looked in vain for a mechanics' institute. I could not find one between Westminster and the Crystal Palace; while in many small towns the working-man has a comfortable place of resort, where he can see the newspapers and the best periodicals, for 10s. a year. We blame the poor man for intemperance, but we educate him for it, by placing the newspaper in the public-house instead of the coffee-room or reading-room. If some influential people would push this matter just now, we think it an appropriate time for such a movement. As mankind must have society, if we can introduce anything better than the tap-room, we shall confer a great boon on many a working-man who now goes to see Boniface more for company than drink. The plebeian enjoys society as well as the peer of the realm. No doubt many gentlemen and ladies would not scruple to give a word of advice to those who resort to the coffee-rooms, as has been done at Dorking. Who will go and do likewise?—I remain, your obedient servant,

AN OLD MAN.

WORKERS' MEETING, HOME OF INDUSTRY.

A LARGER number than usual assembled last week at the Home of Industry. The meeting was an admirable one—a real missionary meeting,—including the home and foreign field. Captain Liebenrood presided, and gave the key-note to the proceedings in the words "Occupy till I come." He reminded the workers of the Alpha and Omega of their Master's life—"Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" and "I have finished the work that Thou gavest me to do." He urged also the prayerful effort to combine outward activity and inward repose.

After prayer, Miss McPherson read one or two of that day's letters, as giving the best idea of the present state of the work on the other side of the water. These were full of particulars of the prosperity of girls well known by name and character to the friends at home, and the lively interest evinced in the writers' reports indicated almost a mother's affection. Miss McPherson touched on various departments of their home mission efforts, and said that our dear American brethren had left their hands so full of work that they needed great increase of faith and strength to meet it, everywhere the desire to hear of Jesus was so strong.

The girls in training for domestic service stood up while Miss McPherson told in loving words of what they were and what she hoped, by God's help, to make them. The report of the Flower Mission's prosperity and success was very pleasing, and Miss McPherson closed a most interesting and suggestive address by saying—"And now we want to do less work, but to do it better; to care less for quantity, and more for quality." The subject of foreign labour was then taken up, and Mr. George Clarke, one of the earliest converts in the Home, described how God had led him on, till at last he was on the eve of starting as a pioneer for the unevangelized provinces of China. He was followed by Mr. Cameron, who, with Mr. Nicoll (who was not present), expect to sail on the 31st of this month. Both these young men entreated earnest prayer, not fitful and spasmodic, but constant and believing; and a solemn appeal was made to those present whether God had not need of them, and whether they might not be keeping others in the background, who, if they were away in the foreign field, would come forward to fill their places.

A very solemn influence was felt in the meeting at this time, and it really seemed that God was making his voice heard, and we expect to hear of volunteers as the result. Mr. Hudson Taylor spoke as one having authority, in pleading for China, which lies so near his heart, and specially commended Mr. Nicoll, who leaves a motherless babe in England, to the prayers and sympathy of Christians. His closing prayer touched our hearts greatly. May the good Lord fulfil all his petitions, send him help from the sanctuary, and strengthen him out of Zion! We renew the request of Mr. Clarke, Mr. Cameron, and Mr. Nicoll for prayer on their account.

THE AGED PILGRIMS' ASYLUM, CAMBERWELL.—

An old and valued friend is now erecting "forty additional rooms," and a hall, free of all cost to the Society, which will be ready for occupation early next year; hence the necessity of increased help to the "Sustentation Fund," to meet the coming demands for maintaining the Asylum, which will then accommodate 120 pensioners—Secretary, Mr. W. Jackson, 29, Marlborough-road, Upper Holloway, N.

DEPTFORD.—WILSON-STREET CHRISTIAN YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.—At the beginning of the present year this organization was started (its head-quarters being in a building formerly used as a Gospel Hall by William Carter, and afterwards by Ned Wright) with the object of affording assistance in training Christian youths and young men anxious to engage in evangelistic work, and also to make a station from which help could be supplied at services for children, cottage-meetings for adults, &c. The association has proved eminently successful; it has now between thirty and forty members, who, besides affording assistance at many other evangelistic services, have for some time past carried on a service on Sunday evenings in one of the largest of the lodging-houses for itinerants in Mill-lane, Deptford. This is in addition to large Bible-classes and a juvenile mission at the head-quarters, comprising a Sunday-school with about a hundred scholars, and special services for children—that on Sunday evening being generally attended by as many as the room will hold—viz., 130. Special meetings for young men were held on the 28th and 29th ult., and the 12th and 13th inst., when large numbers were gathered in by the members going into the streets and inviting them; and several cases of conversion have resulted from these meetings.

W. H. GRIFFIN.

FAREWELL! AND AWAY TO CHINA.

ON Friday evening a deeply interesting meeting took place at the "Edinboro' Castle," when three young brethren were commended to God in prayer for their life-work as missionaries in China. The chair was taken by Dr. Barnardo, who, in a few words, stated the object of the meeting, and commended to the prayer and fellowship of God's people the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, the founder and honorary director of the China Inland Mission, in connexion with which the three brethren present were going out.

Mr. Taylor gave a deeply interesting account of the Lord's dealings with him in China, and of the great needs of the millions of heathen there. He instanced some remarkable conversions, one of which must have touched the hearts of all present. It was the story of a man, now a zealous native pastor, who, when in search after truth, had travelled nearly 3,000 miles before coming in contact with a single disciple of that Saviour who, when leaving his church, had said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." However, the native, a most intelligent and earnest man, heard of Christ in the open air at Chinkyang, and being led to embrace the truth, became, and is now, a devoted and able minister of the new covenant.

Mr. Cameron, from Mr. Guinness's East-end Training Institute, followed. He is a tall, strong, vigorous Scotchman, and speaks with great feeling, evidencing not a little spirited perception and cultivated intelligence. His remarks upon the words of the Master, "Follow me," were very impressive, and gave the key-note to his own life of proposed devotedness to that Master's service in China.

Mr. Nicoll, also from the Institute, at once won the sympathies of those present. With a heart that has learned not a little of the ways of God in a peculiar school of experience, he has laid himself and his motherless child upon the altar of his Lord's service in that distant land. The words he spoke on Friday night were few, but deeply solemn and touching.

Mr. Clarke, the third missionary, has been for some eight or nine years a fellow-labourer with Miss McPherson, working in Spitalfields, and visiting even Canada, as the needs of her work demanded. His experience in dealing with souls has been considerable, and his address on the present occasion, given with a view to reach the unsaved who might be present, was marked with singular power, and all the signs of a true evangelistic gift. We are quite sure our brother, by God's grace, will ably do the work of an evangelist.

The speech of the evening was, however, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's. The character of our brother's addresses is well known to all to whom his name is familiar. But this evening his spirit was stirred to its depths by the occasion which had brought us together, and his words were words of faith and burning zeal, which can never be forgotten by those who were privileged to listen to them. All in the meeting were deeply solemnized and refreshed; the spirit of the Lord was there, and when Mr. Radcliffe fell upon his knees to plead for the Divine blessing to follow our brethren, to keep and energize them, and to stir up thousands in the land to be earnest in toiling for the Master's kingdom, oft-repeated "amens," and the manifest worshipful feelings of the audience, proved that a meeting may be protracted until past ten o'clock if God is present and the Lord Jesus glorified.

Dr. Heywood Smith followed, closing this precious and never-to-be-forgotten meeting with earnest and believing prayer; and when we arose and shook hands with each other, and looked into the faces of our brethren, we felt that Christian fellowship and sympathy and the power of Christian prayer were not a mere sentimentality nor poetic figure of speech, but deep and vital realities.

These three brethren will probably sail on Saturday next for China, and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN are earnestly asked to implore the Divine blessing upon them and the scene of their labours.

The Rev. J. Hudson Taylor's address is 6, Pyrland-road, Newington-green, N. T. J. B.

MR. WALTER PENROSE, of the Costermongers' Mission, has been holding services at Rochester.

MANCHESTER.—On Saturday evening last, a meeting of converts was held here, the object being to arrange how to care for them in the future, their instruction in the Scripture, and their association with different bodies of Christians. The number on the list was 173; of these, 107 gave their names for church membership with various denominations. About eighty inquirers stayed at the conclusion of the free breakfast given by Dr. Ziemann and his friends on Sunday morning.

SOLDIERS' HOME, CHATHAM GARRISON.

THE first soldiers that ever left England for Fiji, sailed from Gravesend on Friday (9th). They are a company of Royal Engineers, who are to provide an official residence for the newly appointed Governor, Sir Arthur Gordon, to make roads, and a general survey of the islands. They consist of three officers, four sergeants, and fifty-eight men—all skilled workmen. On Wednesday night, the Rev. R. Hardy invited the non-commissioned officers and men to a tea in the Soldiers' Home. The Commandant of the Royal Engineers, Colonel Gallwey, kindly gave the use of the spacious lecture theatre, and the Rev. Wm. Wilson, of London, seven years a missionary in Fiji, delivered a lecture on Fiji, the Commandant presiding.

The lecture was attended by a large number of officers, ladies, and several hundreds of soldiers. Mr. Wilson very vividly described the islands, their scenery, productions, the cannibalism and crime that pervaded them when he first knew them, and the glorious triumphs of the Gospel in those once morally dark and polluted islands. Heathenism had disappeared from many of them, and many thousands had been brought to rejoice in the Saviour's love. Very impressively did he urge them to abstain from drink, to worthily represent England's army and England's Christianity in those far-off isles. He urged upon them the need of being living Christian examples in the midst of those who had been so lately reclaimed from heathenism. We are persuaded his impressive utterances will not be speedily forgotten. At the close of the lecture, the Soldiers' Home was speedily filled. A selection of Mr. Sankey's hymns were sung. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Hardy and Wilson, and, in pleading supplication, Mr. Hardy commended those about to sail for Fiji to the blessing of God. A happy night, pervasively Christian in its influence, was spent. Mr. Hardy provided for the voyage four very large parcels of religious literature, trusting that, on the voyage, hearts might be opened to receive the truth as it is in Jesus. On Friday the men were paraded at four o'clock. Colonel Cox, R.E., very impressively addressed them. He begged them not only to act worthily as English soldiers, but as Christians; to remember that they were going among a semi-civilized and only partly Christianized people; to attend to the advice they had received, and act worthily. Many prayers will follow this detachment, which has left for at least five years of service in Fiji.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE MEETINGS.—The Council of the British Organization of the Alliance announce that the next Annual Conference will be held in Belfast, on Tuesday, October 13, and the following days of that week.

THE HOLIDAYS are coming, when many young ones will like to do something for the Lord they love, or want to love. Bouquet-holders for hospitals, &c., are very easy and pretty to paint, and many wet days might thus be happily and usefully employed. I would gladly send patterns to anyone enclosing a halfpenny stamp to Z. Z., Park-hill, Hooting.

Mr. HENRY HOLLOWAY AT DERBY.—Last Sunday evening it was my great pleasure to give the right hand of Christian fellowship to nearly fifty who have just been added to the Church. On this very interesting occasion some hundreds sat down to commemorate the Lord's death, and the gathering-in of some of the first fruits of the blessing on our brother Holloway's labours was indeed a time of great rejoicing. Your readers will remember a paragraph recently inserted in THE CHRISTIAN, giving an account of the season of refreshment we have enjoyed during the last five months, in answer to many prayers. Our brother Holloway, from Manchester, is now nearly at the close of his fifth month with us, and we have invited him to remain with us some time longer. During these many weeks, meetings have been almost continuously held, and the Gospel has been earnestly preached to the masses of the town. Many precious souls have been brought to God. Most of these have been personally conversed with, some visited at their homes; and these are now to be seen standing by our brother in the open-air and other services. There has been a very good impression made on the minds of many of the workmen at the railway works, where our brother has spoken each week while the men have taken breakfast. Some of these have come out on the Lord's side. In these special services the children have not been overlooked. Meetings of some hundreds of children have been held each week, and addresses given by brother Holloway and members of my own family. A change in the conduct and character of some of these is very noticeable, and leads us to trust they are lambs in the Saviour's fold. Altogether, over two hundred have professed a change of heart; some have attached themselves to other places of worship, and many are remaining with us. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember the Lord's work at the Old Theatre in Derby, and bear us before the Lord?

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING.

THE noonday hour at Moorgate-street usually brings together about a hundred. One is pretty sure that they are mostly praying people, otherwise they would not come.

On Tuesday, last week, Mr. Weatherley presided, and dwelt appropriately on the responsibility that devolves on Christians to earnest service in this "accepted time." He gave several incidents from his own experience, showing the spirit of readiness and anxiety to be spoken to about eternal things that prevailed. The speaker that followed gave corroborative facts, and Mr. W. Nobbs expressed his belief later on that ninety-nine cases of backsliding out of a hundred come from the cold, selfish lives of Christians who hold their peace and do not speak for the Master. We were struck with an expression used in one of the prayers that filled up the hour. It was that the lives of Christians might be "letters of introduction" to the hearts of those about them. Mr. Weatherley prayed, in closing, that Christian men of business might be converted from the immoralities of trade that are being brought to light.

On Friday, the Rev. J. Knaggs gave an address on "Eternal Life," having first read the 6th chapter of John. What is eternal life? he asked. It is not mere endless existence; it is a spiritual thing. The bad cannot possess it, however long they may exist. Jesus Christ is its all-sufficient source and ever ready communicator. The words of the text are the medium of this life. His ever-living presence will be eternal heaven.

A few remarks by a poor man (who stated that he was out of work and had been formerly in prison), about his experiences at the Guildhall in the morning, led to some earnest prayer for prisoners, policemen, &c. Mr. William Nobbs, who was formerly a policeman, read some passages bearing on the subject of Mr. Knaggs' address, and made some appropriate remarks.

Mr. Paton told of a young convert who was troubled at the thought of sin still remaining in the heart and life after conversion. He urged those who had lately found Christ to cultivate the new life within them, in order to kill and crush the old one. Mr. Knaggs remarked that as we receive life at first through the words of Christ, so that life must be perpetuated by studying God's Word continually. Let us be Bible Christians.

We are thankful to believe that one grand result of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey among us will be to give a strong impetus to the prayerful study of the sacred oracles.

On Saturday the subject was "The Holy Scriptures." The leading thoughts were—the words of God must be eaten (Jeremiah, Ezekiel, John). If we do not eat the Word of God, men's word will eat as doth a canker (2 Tim. ii. 17). We may distil from bread-corn spirit which will intoxicate us and make us quarrelsome; and instead of eating the Word of God we may distil from it doctrines that will have a similar effect. Mr. Nobbs, who has much helped the meeting during the past week by records of evangelistic work in which he has been engaged, and other brethren, stated some very interesting facts, accompanied by remarks bearing on this important subject. There was also much earnest prayer.

GOSPEL TENT SERVICES.—ASTON TYRROLD.—The Rev. Thomas Curry, assisted by Dr. Raitt, Messrs. Slade, Dixon, and others, have been holding a special Gospel Tent Mission in this neighbourhood. The Mission extended over thirteen days—from the 7th to the 19th inst.—and embraced eight villages, each with a population of from six to thirteen hundred. The services have created quite a sensation among the people, and night after night the tent has been crowded; some being present who, on their own confession, had been neither in church nor chapel for twenty years. After each service there was a meeting for anxious inquirers, and numbers have been spoken with personally about their salvation: many of whom now profess to have found the Saviour. Along with the preaching in the tent, a system of house-to-house visitation has been carried on, and almost every house, rich and poor, in the eight villages, has been entered, and an opportunity taken of stating the saving truths of the Gospel. The experience of those engaged in this work goes to prove the fact that there is a great spiritual movement among the people in this part just now; many are anxious to know the truth. We may add that £2 worth of tracts have been given away in connexion with the Mission, the gift of the Religious Tract Society. Mr. Curry writes that Mr. Dixon's services have been invaluable. He is a young man from the "East-end Training Institute," under Mr. Guinness.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

THE London holidays are upon us, and, ere more of the workers should have dispersed to the country and to other lands, a special meeting of superintendents and visitors was held on Saturday evening last at 48, Great Marlborough-street, for counsel and for prayer.

A number of letters had come in full of cheer, telling how well the visitors had been received, detailing conversions, telling of the sick relieved (although the visitors modestly report little of these cases), declaring what a blessing the work had been to the visitors and superintendents themselves, and saying that some districts had been gone over a second and even a third time, and how impossible it was to discontinue the work. For again and again were there entreaties to the visitors to repeat their calls, and they feel they must go back again to recent converts, to awakened souls, to backsliders, or to relieve the sick or comfort the dying. For example, a publican appears to have been blessed, and entreats a visit in the quiet of Sunday afternoon, which it seems hard to refuse. This desire to continue, expressed by so many visitors, is just in accordance with the instances of perseverance in Chicago given by Mr. Moody. Besides, there are a good many of the districts that have not yet been gone over once entirely, and a few in London proper that have not hitherto been taken by anyone. So there is much to be done before London can be said to have been fully visited. It has, therefore, been announced that the office, No. 48, Great Marlborough-street, will be found open daily, and that we are now in a position not only to supply the leaflets, but, through the kindness of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and of other donors, to give the superintendents New Testaments, Mr. Smithies' pictorial publications for children, "Scripture Words of Comfort," "A Saviour for You," &c.

Notwithstanding the holidays, then, there will be some who will steadfastly "Hold the fort," and be prosecuting the work right on; and, after a season, it is hoped they will be strongly reinforced for a more steady prosecution of the work than ever in the autumn.

Meanwhile, may the present "scattering," like that in olden time (Acts viii. 4), be made greatly to further the spread of the Gospel. In this view, special prayer has been made for Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, so shortly to sail for America. At the meeting was present Mr. Hudson Taylor, who has been so many years in China, and who looks upon it as his adopted country. His heart is full this week of the sailing from among us of three missionaries going right into China's inland provinces. Thus to America, which has sent us such a blessing, the meeting joined in its prayers China and its destitute millions. Then there was present one of our superintendents, an officer shortly returning to India, so the meeting could not leave out India, with its millions of secluded women, who can be reached by house-to-house work alone, and by women only. What a field for Christian women, and especially for those who have enough medical knowledge to minister to these heathen women when sick! Again, there was with us a German, and we have been earnestly helped in this visitation by German ladies and gentlemen; let us not forget their fatherland. Some of those who have been with us in labour or in prayers are deeply interested in the Lord's work in Russia, Holland, Belgium, France, and amongst the Jews, and some of these brethren and sisters have already gone to their labours on the Continent. May we ask prayer to follow them? England, Scotland, and Ireland too, sent us visitors to help in London; and now that these visitors will have returned, has not the time fully come when the Gospel should be carried to all the homes of our country by visitation, simultaneously with public preaching or otherwise?

But why should not the disciples of this day, who are scattered amongst far greater populations than the early disciples, have faith to grasp the tribes of the whole earth, and to "subdue kingdoms"? For "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things; and blessed be his glorious name for ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen" (Ps. lxxii. 18, 19).

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

MR. WALTER DOUGLAS has been holding meetings in Mr. Trancheon's Mission Room, at Truro. Mr. Trancheon writes us that an American friend held a special service at the Friends' Meeting House. He threw the meeting open, and Mr. Douglas spoke a most thrilling word. Prayer is asked that many may be led to Christ.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES IN GERMANY.

DEAR SIR,—I write to ask the earnest prayers of your readers on behalf of my visit to Germany. I hope to start, with my friend Mr. S. Tyler, of the Surrey Chapel Children's Services, on the 30th inst. I have arranged to spend the Sunday in Amsterdam, and we then go on to Cologne and Heidelberg. We hope to have our first meetings at Heilbronn, in Württemberg, on August 5 and 6. We are taking a sheet of hymns in German.

I have had encouraging letters from several places—Heilbronn, Stuttgart, Gernsbach, Frankfurt, Elberfeld, Freiburg, Basel, &c. The Lord is certainly opening a door for the work. We shall be able at least to meet with pastors and Sunday-school friends, and tell them what great things God has done amongst the young in this country; and in most places, I hope, we shall be able, even with our imperfect knowledge of the language, to speak a few words to the children.

I shall be very thankful if any friends of the Children's Special Service Mission who are acquainted with pastors in any of the towns on the Rhine will kindly write to them about the work, and send to me the addresses of those to whom they have written.

I hope that some Christian friends who may be travelling up the Rhine during August may be able to meet me somewhere and give me help. Mr. Tyler can only stay a fortnight, I am sorry to say. Any who could sing Mr. Sankey's hymns in German would be valuable. I am told that it might be possible to do something in villages, &c., by gathering the children in the open air.

Any letters sent to my address below during my absence will be attended to, or forwarded to me if necessary, and I shall also get letters addressed "Poste Restante, Heidelberg," up to about August 20.

Yours faithfully,
T. B. BISHOP.

EVANGELISTIC WORK AT THE ANTIPODES.—The New Zealand Christian Record, of May 8, contains an interesting account of evangelistic work at Dunedin and other places by Messrs. Johnston and Wright. In a farewell address to young converts, Mr. Johnston referred to the awakening in Great Britain under the preaching of Mr. Moody, and said that its influence had reached even that land, for when he heard of it his heart rejoiced, and he was led to seek greater earnestness and zeal in preaching the Gospel, and to pray for a blessing on Dunedin and neighbourhood; others had no doubt felt and acted in the same way. Reviewing his labours during the past year, he said the first tokens of blessing were received at Caversham, where a goodly number were led to the Saviour. At Timaru and Oamaru blessings also accompanied the ministry of the word. The most especial blessing, however, appeared to rest on Port Chalmers, where the influence of the Gospel was felt in almost every house. For a month or more the interest was unabated, and, indeed, still continued, and the young Christians were giving most satisfactory evidence of a thorough change of life and walk. There was the work in Dunedin: for six weeks, night after night, in one place or another, the sound of the Gospel had gone forth, and in the theatre on Sunday evenings the interest was very marked, and much blessing had accrued from these meetings.

MILITIA MISSION WORK.—Will you permit me through your columns to intimate to the Christian friends who have, from time to time, sent me money, either direct or through you, for the Militia Mission Work in this city, that the total amount received, £87 2s. 6d., has sufficed to meet the expenses incurred for rent of hall, hymn-books, tracts, printing, and tea-meetings, at which Gospel addresses were given, leaving a balance in my hands of £22. This amount I have placed in the branch of the London and County Bank at this place, to the credit of Mrs. Bainbridge, to whom the entire credit of the movement is due. This aged servant of the Lord has herself paid the missionary, who has been most blessed in the work, and he continues to labour now amongst the resident militia and soldiers of the garrison, having been engaged by Mrs. Bainbridge at a fixed yearly salary. There is great cause for thankfulness in that the result of the Militia Mission has led to the opening of a mission room by one of our citizens in Gas-street, where numbers of those who will not attend any place of worship, assemble to hear the Gospel. There is also a weekly meeting at the Town Music Hall, on Friday and on Lord's-day evenings, from eight to nine o'clock. The theatre has been filled—stage, pit, and boxes—by members of all congregations, as well as those who will go nowhere else. The proprietor of the theatre permits its use for a nominal sum, but there are many expenses, apart from the rent and gas, which must be incurred to carry on this work. To meet these, I ask, on Mrs. Bainbridge's behalf, that the Lord's people will remember her before the Lord, and set to their seal of approval by giving—leading to the Lord.

MISSION SCHOOLS IN DUBLIN.

DEAR SIR,—Some of your readers may perhaps be interested in a few particulars of the progress of the Lord's work in Dublin in connexion with the "Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics." I have been revisiting, after an interval of more than seven years, the scenes of former labours in Dublin; and very encouraging it was to see the steady increase, the widening and deepening of that work of which I had witnessed the small and apparently insignificant commencement.

Twenty-two years ago the first Irish Mission ragged school began in Townsend-street. This year the inmates of six homes for destitute children of all ages and both sexes in Dublin and Kingstown assembled in the beautiful grounds of a generous proprietor at Bray, to celebrate their annual holiday—a party of nearly 700. Every year numbers pass out of these homes, thoroughly trained in all that is most useful in this life; but, above all, built up in sound scriptural instruction, and with a knowledge of the Word of God which I have never seen equalled in any teaching I have ever witnessed. Adult Sunday-schools and classes for scriptural instruction every night of the week are added to this work; and also a diligent and constant house-to-house visitation, in which Gospel truth is faithfully and clearly set forth. It has been customary with some to speak of "controversy" and Gospel teaching in a spirit of love as two things in direct opposition; but any who have watched the working of the Irish Missions will see at once the fallacy of this notion. Controversy, as carried on by these Dublin Mission teachers, means only an open, frank, and affectionate setting forth of the difference between the distinctive teaching of Rome and that of Scripture. And with the generality of Irish Romanists this is absolutely required in order to make them understand what Gospel teaching is. Their minds are so preoccupied with the ideas inculcated by their priests that the way has to be cleared for the entrance of truth. An interesting case which occurred lately will show this. A respectable artisan, a Roman Catholic, was one day returning home, when he was joined by an earnest young Christian worker who spoke to him and endeavoured to set the Gospel simply before him. He could make no impression, and, as the man afterwards remarked, "I could not understand a word of what he meant." The young evangelist seeing he failed to make any way, wrote to one of the Mission readers to come and talk to the man; but before this he had heard of some schools where his children would be cared for. He was ill and out of work, and came to a Christian lady interested in the Mission schools. She spoke to him of his health, and then of his soul, and asked him at last if he had read the Bible. He owned afterwards he perfectly dreaded the sight of the book, though he had never opened one in his life.

"Here," said the lady, "is your own Bible (the Douai version),—take it; but first observe, you will not find one single doctrine of Rome in this Roman Catholic Bible. Look through it and see. You will find the work of redemption is a finished work. Look to John iii.; search for yourself if it be so." The man took it home and began to read eagerly, in hopes, as he owned afterwards, of finding that the lady was wrong, and his Church's teaching was to be found there. But diligent study convinced him of the contrary. His eyes were opened; he was astonished at the view of the blessed Gospel which, for the first time, was presented to him.

"It is a beautiful religion," he said at a subsequent interview, "but, if it is true, how can I have been living all this time among Protestants, and godly Protestants, and not one of them ever said to me till now, 'You are wrong'?"

The man has had much to suffer for his newly acquired faith, from employers and friends; but neither persecution nor failing health can disturb his joy and peace. His soul is stayed on his Saviour, and he is ever rejoicing in Him. "Now," he said, "I understand what the gentleman said to me that day about the Good Shepherd. I know now what he meant."

Time would fail to give the results which we see and hear continually of this Gospel-work among the Irish Romanists. Numbers have been led by this preparatory teaching to flock to Mr. Moody's meetings, and the way was opened for them to receive the blessed message he set forth with such power, and which otherwise they might never even have come to hear. A body of earnest, sound Gospel-Christians is being quietly gathered out of the Church of Rome day by day, both in Dublin and in the West. Will not our Christian friends join in praying that the Lord may continue to prosper and strengthen the work of his people? E. J. WHEATLEY.

THE WORK AT WOOLWICH.

Those who predicted that the work would cease with the departure of our brethren from America, have proved already false prophets. Many hundreds went from Woolwich to Burdett-road and Camberwell, and evidently returned with the blessing. All over the town was a spirit of inquiry and readiness to hear the Gospel. Before Messrs. Moody and Sankey left, evangelistic services, addressed by Mr. Russell Hurditch, Drs. Edmond, Donald Fraser, Boyd, Morison, and the Rev. W. Haslam (of Curzon Chapel, Mayfair), in St. Andrew's Church, were largely attended, and not a few were won to the Lord.

Last week, however, when Mr. Henry Varley gave himself to the work, a sight was seen which Woolwich has never witnessed before. Much earnest prayer was offered for him before he came, and it has been wonderfully answered. Not only has the church been crowded in every part, but the large lecture-hall below, extemporized into an inquiry-room, has been filled with all classes eager to be directed to the Saviour. Many who had been professing Christians for years were not ashamed to confess the "great things God had done for them." The local committee, presided over by Lord Cavan, and consisting of the clergy and leading Christian workers of all denominations, very heartily and efficiently backed Mr. Varley in his unwearied labours. One very interesting feature in the work was the large number of young people who, having found peace in Jesus, gave themselves to his service in singing Mr. Sankey's hymns. At Mr. Varley's desire an early morning prayer-meeting was held on Friday, when, notwithstanding the difficulties of those connected with the garrison and arsenal, several hundreds met to pray and thank God for his goodness. On Friday evening three or four hundred remained to be spoken to in the inquiry-room, and it was not till nearly eleven o'clock that the last anxious seeker went away rejoicing in Christ.

The Bible-readings were held in the Gospel Hall every afternoon, and a "prayer and praise meeting" every evening before the service. It is too early to speak of converts, but already there is abundant reason to thank God and go forward. It has been arranged that Ned Wright should come this week, and take up the work in another part of the town. May he too have a rich harvest of souls. Will Christians pray for the work in Woolwich—for its ministers and other workers, and those yet unconverted, and that the work may go on and prosper?

TENT AND GOSPEL HALL FOR BUXTON.

EARNEST men from time to time have come and held a few meetings in this town, or preached in some of the places of worship. Mr. Neville Sherbrooke, Mr. Drysdale, and others have been blest in their labours here, and united tea-meetings have occasionally been held, with Gospel addresses following.

Later services were held in the Co-operative Hall, not without direct blessing from God, and with much encouragement from day to day among the quarrymen and lime-burners on the hills adjacent, at their dinner-hour.

However, it was only this year that the Christians of the place were moved to take steps for more permanent work, and, after much prayer, a letter was printed and circulated, calling attention to the great blessing flowing from united action in other places, and recommending the formation of a local evangelistic committee. We are thankful to say that this has been accomplished. A series of most valuable meetings have been carried on for a fortnight in the large room at the "Royal," and the ball-room at the "Crescent," by Mr. Poynter, one of the preachers of the Evangelization Society. A very earnest and solemn spirit pervaded the meetings, and many souls were helped and strengthened, and brought out into clear acceptance of the Gospel. A noon-day prayer-meeting has been carried on for three weeks, and the Christians of the town have been led to see the importance of united action for the spread of the Gospel.

An evangelistic committee has been formed for carrying on such undenominational labours; and, if funds are forthcoming, they propose, besides having prayer-meetings and special services on neutral ground, to hire a tent during the summer for preaching to the working-classes; engaging a Christian colporteur under the Association, 15. Hanover-street, Long Acre; and, ultimately, if God will, to build a Gospel Hall, and vest it in trustees for evangelistic purposes. Dear Christian friends, will you help?

A LOUD CALL FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—We have been deeply interested in reading in your paper the accounts of God's work in Great Britain and elsewhere. Thinking that some of your readers might like to know something of what is going on in this out-corner of the Master's vineyard, we write the following. Will you allow it a place in THE CHRISTIAN?

Africa is generally looked upon as a mission-field, and much of it is still lying in the darkness of heathenism; yet the Lord has a people here also. It is with shame that we confess that comparatively little has been done by them for the heathen around, the work having been left almost entirely to those at a distance. Want of men—perhaps I should rather say want of spiritual life—has been the great cause. Another reason may be found in the fact that in many parts of the country the white population is thinly scattered over large tracts of land, and greatly in want of the means of grace. The Church has felt it her duty to try as far as possible to supply these first. The great need here seems to be evangelistic labour. In very many parts the fields are indeed "white to the harvest." God has stirred up his ministers and people to see and feel this need as never before. If this could be supplied, and if the Holy Spirit should be poured out upon the labours of the evangelists, there would be no want of missionaries to the heathen.

Many of the children of the Lord in this land have been led to realize that they have been living far below the Bible standard, and to seek a fuller consecration to his service. Prayer-meetings on the subject have been held in several places. Many feel that they are groping in the dark with regard to sanctification by faith, and are longing for some one to lend a helping hand. Books, and articles on the subject, THE CHRISTIAN, &c., have been very helpful to many. Pray for us. We are longing for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the children of God as well as on the world yet lying in darkness. We need help greatly, and yet in this field language would be a difficulty, Dutch being mostly spoken in our country districts.

There is, however, another work lying at our door, to which we must call the attention of your readers. Hundreds of emigrants have in the last two or three years come over to us from Britain as workmen on the various railway lines lately commenced. With regard to these, it may truly be said, "The cry goeth up to heaven, No man careth for our souls." With the exception of a little tract-distribution here and there, these men are left almost entirely without the means of grace. Away from home and home influences, and strangers in a strange land, they are surrounded by temptations on every hand. The majority of them live in tents or small comfortless rooms. A few have their families here, and for these our pity is even greater: the rest, as a rule, are their own cooks. Always near at hand is the gin-shop. Can we wonder that, on a hot and dusty day in summer, or a cold wet one in winter, so many prefer going there to the trouble of making a cup of tea for themselves? One said to me but the other day, "It is harder to get through Sunday than any other day, because we can't get beer."

They are always very polite to the tract distributor, and glad to get anything to read. A large number of tracts, British Workman, British Evangelist, and other papers have been distributed, but something more is wanted. What these men need is an earnest, whole-hearted evangelist; one who will be able to rough it, who is willing to give up all for Jesus; who will be able to accompany them as they move from place to place along the line; one who will be their pastor, their friend, their adviser. Such a friend would be doubly appreciated here, and would, we feel assured, prove a great blessing to these precious souls. Some of the men have declared themselves ready to aid in the support of such an one. Would not one of the many young men who have lately dedicated themselves to the Lord's service think of this call, and come over to South Africa for a few years to preach Jesus to his countrymen? We would not hide the difficulties. A good many discomforts will have to be put up with. The men are often spoken of as a rough lot, and their surroundings are such that we can hardly wonder if they are rough. And yet those who go amongst them as tract-distributors never meet with anything like rudeness. When circumstances prevented my going one week, I have often been accosted on the next with "We looked out for you last week," or "How are you, miss? We were afraid that you were ill." Some weeks ago a note was received from one who had been stationed here before, requesting "religious and temperance tracts," and offering to distribute them among the men. We sometimes hear from some who have been working here, but have left—"We miss the papers so much." They are in a reading, and anyone labouring amongst them should be in possession of a good lending library. Many have been accustomed to something better, and would be very glad to get back again to Old England. As we have said, there is almost no provision made for their spiritual need. Some of the better disposed occasionally attend a village church.

May the Master, who knows his work as well as his workers, Himself choose some one to come to the rescue. Will those who pray for the work of the Lord remember South Africa? Anyone who might take this call into consideration, and wish for further information on the subject, may apply to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN for the address of the minister of this place. He may be assured of the warm sympathy and hearty co-operation, as well as of the pecuniary aid, of Christians here.

THE COUNTRY TOWNS MISSIONARIES AT WHITEHALL, CUMBERLAND.

THESE meetings, which have now become a sort of annual festival, were held at Whitehall on Thursday, the 15th, and Friday, the 16th inst. In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Moore, there were present Mr. Justice and Lady Lush and their daughter, the Rev. Dr. and Miss Moffat, Rev. Dr. Stoughton, Mr. T. B. Smithies, Mr. Robert Wilson (of Broughton Grange), Rev. Canon Battersby, and Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Bowker.

Mr. Bowker presided, and the subjects for conversation were "The Things Promised in the Scriptures to Faith" and "The Elements of the Future Happiness of the Believer in Christ." The conversation, especially on the second day, was well sustained, and much interest shown in the treatment of the subject. The missionaries, to the number of twenty-seven, were quartered in the neighbourhood through the hospitality of Mr. Moore. They are a most earnest, true-hearted, and devoted band of men.

These meetings, which have now been held for many years, afford a pleasant and useful occasion for the interchange of kindly good wishes, and that sympathy which is the source of so much strength under God's blessing in all Christian work.

The occasion was used, as formerly, to hold meetings in behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society in the neighbouring villages. They were largely attended, and upwards of £60 was collected on behalf of the Society. It is scarcely necessary to add that the venerable Dr. Moffat, the father in the missionary field, drew many together, and he was listened to, as he related some of his South African experiences during his fifty years' service there, with the closest interest and attention. It was pleasant to find Mr. Moore restored in a great measure to his former health and vigour.

ZENANA CONVERTS.

SOME particulars appeared in THE CHRISTIAN lately relative to a work of grace in our Christian girls' school, which has greatly rejoiced our hearts. We have thought your readers would be glad to learn that the interest concerning the things that make for their everlasting peace still continues among them.

Since that, other girls have professed their faith in Jesus, and their acceptance of his full and free salvation. Several, quite young, who gave themselves to the Lord some months ago, have come forward, expressing a desire to commemorate the Saviour's dying love in his own appointed way, and the dear little Begum who was alluded to, her wish to confess Him by baptism.

Our great desire is, that this blessing may be but as a few drops which presage a copious shower, and we ask those who are the Lord's remembrancers to join us in pleading that it may be so. More than two-thirds of our girls have now made a profession; five are communicants, and several among them shining lights, adorning the doctrine of God their Saviour in their lives and conversation. The simple unquestioning faith of some of the wee ones among them is very touching.

We long and pray for "still greater things than these," even that the wave of blessing may reach the native church and flow over to the heathen beyond. A revival in India's infant Christian Church is what is greatly needed.

Kindly insert among the requests for prayer one for Lodiana, for its missions and its missionaries, and a revival in its native Christian Church.

THE GOSPEL IN NORWAY.

We have been much cheered from time to time by the very interesting accounts of the Lord's blessing attending the preaching of the Gospel in so many different parts of Great Britain.

In various parts of Norway, Christians have been stirred up and are praying for a similar shower of blessing. Some souls in different districts have been awakened and found peace. I am thankful to see fruit in various parts in which I have been able to preach; also I have found in most places some Christians who are thankful for help and instruction given. True-hearted Christians are praying and longing for a great awakening of souls, and desire much to see many thousands of sinners brought from darkness to light.

There is more Christian life manifested among some of those in the Lutheran (State) Church, and I am happy to say that some of its preachers proclaim a clear, simple, and plain Gospel. Such preachers are represented by the so-called orthodox Lutherans as preachers of a new gospel, because they point sinners away from themselves, &c., to Christ and his precious shed blood as the object of faith to the salvation of the soul, instead of preaching to them to remember their new birth at the time of baptism, &c. The so-called orthodox party go so far as to refuse very frequently the loan of their preaching-halls to those Lutheran preachers who preach "the new gospel."

I have had the satisfaction and pleasure of having heard some of the said preachers, and I can testify that it is the oldest Gospel ever preached, the same as preached by Paul and other apostles—the same that is so fully and abundantly proclaimed and blessed in Great Britain.

The Gospel of Christ is never stale, but ever fresh—the power of God to salvation, to powerless, undone, ruined and lost sinners. When a poor sinner realizes this spiritual poverty in his soul, he will never say that the Gospel is too easy.

It will be well for Christian readers to pray that such faithful preachers of the Gospel may be further delivered from semi-Popish teachings, that they may be able to teach the young converts more fully the ways of the Lord.

BOYS' HOME, DEANSGATE.—Mr. A. Alsop writes, respecting a special effort in open-air work in the worst parts of the city of Manchester, a large band of Christian workers are ready to engage in it, and desire the prayers of God's people that the work may be crowned with success. They also beg for large supplies of tracts for distribution amongst the lowest classes. Address, Mr. Alsop, Wood-street Boys' Home, Deansgate, Manchester.

SIGN OF THE TIMES.—At a recent meeting of the School Board for London, Sir Charles Reed, who presided, announced that a letter had been received from Mr. F. Peek, offering £500 for the purchase of 1000 prize Bibles and 1000 prize Testaments, to be given to Board School children who display superior attainments in the knowledge of the New Testament, especially of the Gospels.

MILITIA AT RICHMOND.—The Evangelization Society, assisted by a few members from Mr. Sankoy's South London Choir, have held a week of mission services with marked blessing from God, especially amongst the militia, who came in good numbers. Many of them are returning now to their homes and families rejoicing in a "knowledge of salvation," and thanking God that He led them to Richmond.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN BOARDING-SCHOOLS.

We have our divinity lesson every morning; and although we are thus enabled to open up to the boys some amount of religious truth, no opportunity is then afforded for private conversation. In fact, the greater part of the seed is lost in the ordinary work that follows.

About three months ago, however, our respected vicar announced a confirmation. He at once kindly granted my request that the boys who might offer themselves from my school should be prepared by me. We are not exclusively a "Church" school; nevertheless, six bright lads of the requisite age gave in their names. We held a weekly meeting, and very solemn, happy gatherings they proved to be. At the first meeting three of the six lads gave "themselves, their souls and bodies," as "reasonable, holy, and lively sacrifices" to Christ. I know nothing of it at the time, but heard of it subsequently in this way. About a fortnight before the day appointed for the ceremony I saw one of the boys standing by himself in the playground. It was the work of a moment to go and ask him on whose side he was. The bright fellow, happy in a new-found joy, caught my meaning at once, and replied "On Christ's." "I am glad to hear it, my dear M—," was my rejoinder; "tell me, when did you make the decision?" "At the first confirmation meeting," was his answer. After some further conversation I left him, fully convinced that he had tasted for himself the sweets of the Gospel.

A few days afterwards I came across his brother, and learnt from him that he too had decided for Christ at our first meeting. The Spirit of God confirmed at the same time, in the hearts of these loving brothers, the saving message of life, love, and mercy.

About that time we had a new servant whose language savoured of profanity. On one occasion a third candidate for confirmation, a grown lad of fifteen, overhearing her, rebuked her with such earnestness and tremulousness that he brought tears to the eyes of the other servants, amongst whom was one under powerful conviction of sin, through the preaching of the well-known converted gypsies. This lad afterwards gave me a sad account of his previous life at a "barrack-school," his father having been in his lifetime a non-commissioned officer, before he received his commission for bravery on the battle-field.

Two other lads of the six who were confirmed informed me that henceforth they two intended to live for Christ only. Truly each gave me, before the holidays, good proofs that they desire their lives to be "well-pleasing to God"; still their spiritual light at present only flickers, one of them being "smoked" by his intense desire for study, the other being "dimmed" by his innate mirth. The latter will, perhaps, one-day learn that—

"As by the light of op'ning day
 The stars are all concealed,
 So earthly pleasures fade away
 When Jesus is revealed."

Let us pray that the baby-plant may not be dwarfed.

I received a letter the other day from a lady, in which she asks whether I could discern the very faintest spark of religious desire in her son Charles. I could only then reply in very general terms. When I had posted the answer, I told the boy the inquiry which his mother had made, intending to make the question a text for some personal dealing.

"I have had a letter from your mother, Charles. What is it, do you think, she wants to know?"

"Whether I am a Christian, sir?"

"Yes. Now, what answer am I to make?"

"Tell her, 'Yes.'"

"You a Christian, Charley! How long has this been?"

"Not long, sir."

"How came it all about? What led you to decide for Christ?"

"Oh, sir, I used to look at A— (a little fellow who has been before his schoolfellows as a Christian for a couple of years now), and see how happy he was. So I determined that I too would become a Christian; and now I am happy to tell you I am one."

The result of further inquiry left no doubt upon my mind that the great change had really taken place in his heart. The Lord be praised!

The other evening three boys were reported to me by an usher for a trifling offence (leaving the boundaries to post a letter for a schoolfellow without leave). One lad was a Christian, the second was seeking Christ, the third was "almost persuaded." Here was a grand opportunity; and, thank God, it was embraced. It was an easy thing, in such company, to pass from "the offence" to the "free gift." It enabled "the Christian" to "confess Christ," which he had not previously done; it cleared some rubbish out of the way of "the seeker"; and it materially assisted the "almost persuaded." It resulted in the formation of a Sunday morning boys' prayer-meeting, conducted by themselves. The duller eyes would have been moved to tears to have heard last Sunday morning their youthful voices swell in one of their dormitories with the well-known hymn—

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me;
And that Thou bid'st me come to Thee,
Oh! Lamb of God, I come!"

My vacation having commenced, I write from the seaside. Nature presents her bounties and her beauties. The swell of the sea, the carol of birds, the odour of flowers, the golden-waved harvest-fields—much that is pleasant to the eye and gratifying to the taste are here. Pleasure-seekers by hundreds crowd the beach—

"Every prospect pleases, and only man is vile."

Sweet at such a time to contemplate the work of the Divine Spirit in the heart. When a new heaven and a new earth, no more sea, no more curse, no more death, are manifested,—then it will be seen how much these lads have been saved from, how much they have been saved to!

 Wed., 4.—"A stubborn and rebellious generation, a generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God." "Their heart was not right with Him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant, but He, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not." "Ye therefore beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness; but grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—Ps. lxxviii. 8, 37; 2 Pet. iii. 17, 18.

The Christian.

A WORD TO YOUNG CONVERTS.

THE Master has said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of heaven." What shall we say to those who have just entered the Kingdom—"being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever"?

An aged disciple, who had heard the Lord address the eleven by the endearing title, "little children," when giving the new commandment to "love one another," has left to the babes in Christ a series of exhortations and of encouragements—each of them fourfold—which we may present to young converts in the present day for the furtherance of their faith. Take first the encouragements:—

1. "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake" (1 John ii. 12).—A finished salvation! the great controversy settled; our sins put away, not at the close of our Christian career, but at its very commencement; for how could we pursue such a journey if burdened with such a burden? Blessed be God, "through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins, and by Him all that believe are justified from all things." Start with a firm apprehension of this grand truth—I am forgiven; I am now and for ever under the shelter of Christ's most precious blood.

2. "I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father" (1 John ii. 13).—Strange, indeed, if children did not know their father! Yet this knowledge of God the Father was a mystery, hid from ages and from generations, till Christ came and revealed to us the wondrous truth, "My Father your Father, my God your God." Through Christ only, and, as it were, taken by his hand into the great Presence-chamber, should we ever have ventured to utter the cry, "Our Father which art in heaven"? But if we know the Father, what then? Why, take the place of children: "as obedient children . . . as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." And just as an apostate world "did not like to retain God in their knowledge," and his Fatherhood was at length forgotten among men, so when this knowledge is restored in individual hearts by the Holy Ghost, the true filial Spirit will always prompt us to be "increasing in the knowledge of God" (Col. i. 10).

3. "Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that Antichrist shall come, even now are there many Antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time" (1 John ii. 18).—Not much encouragement here, some one will say; strong meat for babes, another might exclaim. Nay, friends, look at it again; what does the last time precede? The coming of the Glorious One! What do these dark days and perilous times betoken? The dawn of the bright morning when at his appearing the darkness shall flee away! Cheer up, believer, our mighty invisible Leader is nigh at hand. The scoffer may say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Tell him, It is hid in my heart, and with loins girt and lamp burning I wait for Him. "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning" (Psalm cxxx. 2).

4. "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world" (1 John iv. 4).—Discernment to discover and power to overcome false spirits and to reject false teachers, can only be obtained by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. God has not forsaken his Church. Since Pentecost there has been upon this earth "an habitation of God through the Spirit"; and this dwelling-place of God the Holy Ghost has been greatly enlarged in recent days; for whilst seducing spirits and doctrines of devils had been increasing and manifesting their presence on every side, God has come in mighty power to raise up witnesses for his truth. But in every Christian, consciously or unconsciously, there dwells a mighty One, whom be careful not to grieve by unbelief. Yielding ourselves to that blessed Spirit, we realize the power to overcome.

Are not these wonderful encouragements for the feeble new-born children?—

Peace through the blood;
Joy in knowing the Father;
Hope of Christ's return; and Victory through the Holy Spirit.

Hearken for a little to the fourfold exhortation of the beloved disciple:—

1. "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not" (1 John ii. 1).—Forgiveness, which we make our starting-point in the Christian life, is no encouragement to sin; no renewed heart could harbour so base a suggestion. Whilst the apostle adds a word which will prevent despairing thoughts in those who become increasingly conscious, with increasing light, of the evil of the old nature and the hatefulness of sin, he nowhere encourages unsteadiness of walk. Broken fellowship immediately follows sin. Get sin removed by instant confession to God and the application of the precious blood; but the aim should ever be "sin not," "walk in the light," "walk even as He walked."

We began with the encouraging words, "Your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake." Listen now to the affectionate entreaty, "Little children, sin not."

2. "And now, little children, abide in Him, that, when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at his coming" (1 John ii. 28).—This is the next link in the chain; as it is put in verse 24—"Continue in the Son and in the Father"; a steadfast persuasion that up in the glory two persons in the Godhead are actively and perpetually engaged on behalf of every believer: our Advocate answering for us whenever the accuser mentions our utter unworthiness, and presenting our confessions and prayers with his own most precious blood; and God the Father hearing, answering, pardoning, and showering down blessings. In this passage we are not told to "continue in the Spirit" as well as "in the Son and in the Father," just because the Holy Ghost is a present friend and comforter. It is the absent whom we are apt to forget; but if we remember our absent Lord, maintaining unshaken faith in his continual priesthood, and hope of his glorious appearing, we shall not be put to shame when He cometh the second time.

Couple this second word of exhortation with the second word of encouragement; and as we have been brought into acquaintance with the Father through the Son, so let us abidingly maintain unbroken communion with our elder Brother and our reconciled Father.

3. "Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous" (1 John iii. 7).—Some teachers preach works before faith, as if a corrupt tree could ever bring forth good fruit; and other teachers, equally unscriptural, need the admonition of the Apostle James—"as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." The servant that is expecting the Master's return will be doing the Master's work; the disciple who believes that he is under the Master's eye, will be living as seeing Him who is invisible; the watcher for his Lord's return will not be companion in the occupations and enjoyments of the Lord's enemies: and in the midst of a world that knows not and loves not Jesus, we have to live by a higher and a holier standard than the world comprehends, even if they should sometimes say—"He is beside himself."

This third exhortation against deceivers fits into the third word of encouragement. Anti-Christian errors, though abounding, are the prelude to the better time; but how watchful we must be: "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not" (1 John v. 18).

4. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen" (1 John v. 21).—Not only in those early days of Christianity, when the magnificent idolatries of Greece and Rome appealed so powerfully to the carnal mind by external attractions, but now, in our own time, and in every human heart, there are lurking idols which seek our worship, claim our strongest affections, and would jealously monopolize time, and thought, and energy. There is but one cure for idolatry—what a divine of the last generation called "the expulsive power of a new affection"—"Come in, thou blessed of the Lord!" Open the door to Him who stands without, knocking; once in, give Him the supreme place, and all questions about giving up this amusement or that pleasure will quickly be settled; there will not be room in the heart for many of its present guests, if the Lord comes in and dwells there. This "keeping ourselves" is but another way of putting the truth—"as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. viii. 14). Thus are we led to victory by a Leader who never knew defeat.

We see in this fourth exhortation, to keep out the idols and let Christ reign within, a correspondence with the fourth encouragement—"Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." J.

CHILDREN'S HOME, VICTORIA-PARK.—At a recent meeting of the Wesleyan Conference, the report of Rev. T. B. Stephenson's work in connexion with this Home was read. It stated that the institution was commenced in July, 1869, with two poor boys as inmates, and it now contained 300 at its four branches, besides having sent out 270 children to earn a livelihood. Besides this, the Home was training a number of young men and women for Christian service, and by mission establishments in the East of London, it was influencing a large body of adults whose religious needs would otherwise be unsupplied, and 500 children of the poor of Bethnal-green. The training department was becoming increasingly important, several of the students having entered the ministry. The London School Board has promised £1000 towards the expenses of a new branch of the Home at Milton, near Gravesend, for the reception of boys. There are also successful Canadian and Lancashire branches; and an enterprise which had been commenced this year, though not carried out for want of funds, would probably place a training-ship for boys under the care of the Committee, as a fifth branch of the Home. The Government had promised to lend Her Majesty's ship Conqueror for that purpose, but a guarantee of £500 was required (towards the outfit) from the Home, which would undertake the maintenance of the ship when afloat.

"TWO AND TWO"

ADDRESS BY DR. A. A. BONAR, OF GLASGOW, AT THE MILDMAJ FAREWELL MEETING, JULY 13.

WE must all have noticed that it is the manner of our Lord to carry on important works by more than one instrument; He likes to work by two. He sent out his disciples two and two in the days of his flesh. You read in the Acts of the Apostles that Paul is scarcely ever alone; it is Paul and Barnabas, or Paul and Silas, or Paul and Titus—always somebody helping.

And it is just so in this present work. The invitation to our beloved brethren from America was sent from two—one whom you all knew so well here, Mr. Peunefather, and the other Mr. Bainbridge—both of them now in glory. Then when God was going to work here, He sent over two brethren, both now so well known amongst us.

I think it is good to notice this; and I notice it for another reason. It brings me to a passage of Scripture that will be interesting and profitable perhaps; if the Lord use it, it cannot but be profitable to us all. One of the most remarkable cases of conversion in all the Bible was wrought by two men in company with each other—Peter and John. In the 3rd chapter of Acts we find what I look upon as the most singular instance of immediate conversion and free salvation that we have in the whole Word of God; and it is by the instrumentality of two of God's servants, as we have said. You recollect the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple. He had been lame for forty years, and did not wish to be anything else than lame. I want to show you how he was a grand monument of free grace.

He went to the Temple—carried, I should say, up the fifteen steps of the Corinthian gate,—and there he lay to beg. The Temple was his house of gain, never his place of worship. He did not go to the altar; he did not go in any way to praise God in that Temple. This man stood out all Christ's ministry. And there was a remarkable day, when he must have seen a tumult in the temple—the buyers and sellers driven out by the Saviour. And then the day of Pentecost came, when there were three thousand souls brought to Christ. He must have seen the 120 as they passed down the steps, with their countenances changed; but it produced no change in him. He was there to get money, for it was money he wanted.

And yet such is the sovereign grace and power of God through the Holy Ghost, that this man was wonderfully, in a few minutes, brought out of darkness into light. Peter and John, we are told in the chapter, were going into the Temple, and they saw this man carried up before them and laid down at the gate. And it is said, "He, seeing Peter and John, asked an alms." I do not think he had been wont to do so, for he knew that Christ's disciples were very poor. But I suppose he had heard that the Christians had been throwing their money into a common stock, and thinking that Peter and John would have money to give, he asked an alms of them. They said to him, "Look on us," and Peter, as the spokesman, said, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." He held out his hand as he said, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." He held out his hand, as much as to say, "Will you take a gift to-day, in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, whom you have despised?"

Now, you know, this was a time when the Holy Ghost was working, going through Jerusalem quickening souls. How the scales fell from the man's eyes in a moment! The man is healed; and not only so, but he is saved. He stood, and he never had stood before. He stood, and then he leaped, and then he walked;—he had never leaped or walked before. Now he felt he was whole in body; his ankle-bones had received strength. And that he was whole in soul is quite evident from Peter's testimony in the 16th verse: "His name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong; yea, the faith that is by Him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all!"

I wish you to notice that here was free salvation given to this lowest of sinners. No questions were asked about his former life; no payment was asked. Did you ever notice that on the day of Pentecost there was something evidently required; they were pricked in their heart for some hours? But here the man is not kept a minute waiting. He gets salvation like a flash of lightning: it is as sudden as it is free. Heaven flings an alms to this beggar, and the Holy Spirit enables him to close his hand upon the ransom-money. I do not know a more wonderful case of sudden, sure conversion than this, and no case in which you can so certainly say, "He paid nothing for it."

And so we ask sinners here—for it is not likely that all here are saved,—we ask any unsaved one to-day, "Will you take the gift to-day in the name of Jesus of Nazareth?" Away to the Cross, and read what is written there—"Jesus of Nazareth." Will you grasp the Cross, and, as you look in his face, say, "I take Him"? This is the time when the Holy Ghost is quickening souls and moving the hearts of men.

How did the man that was made whole and saved act on that occasion? It is very beautiful to notice the words—"walking and leaping and praising God." The first thing he did was to praise God, and it is twice stated that he praised God as he walked on the Temple floor. Here was the lame man leaping and the tongue of the dumb singing, and I am sure there never was a song so sweet sung in the choir at Jerusalem as was the new song that this saved man sang that day in the ears of all the people.

That is not all. Some people seem to think that grace does not allow us to say anything at all about instruments—to ignore them. That is a misunderstanding of grace. It leads us to put them in their place, but not to ignore them. This man teaches us a lesson. Was he ashamed of Peter and John as instruments? Did he say "I will praise the Lord; I will say nothing about these men"? No, he did not. In the narrative we have a most beautiful account of him. As the lame man, it is said, was walking in Solomon's porch, he held Peter and John by the hand while he praised God. He does not seem to have mentioned their names, but then he would not let them go, and all the while he sang his song of praise. He acknowledged the instruments, and praised God for them. Let us do the same to-day.

Do you want me to say a little about Glasgow before I close? We can give most satisfactory testimony about God's work in Scotland, but as I come from Glasgow, I want to speak of it. Here is one thing about it as to the ministers of the Gospel. If you want a man to believe, it is about one of the worst ways you could take to talk about faith. Speak about the object of faith. So we never talked about union; to talk about union is not the way to bring it about. We talked about Him who unites us all. We found ministers of all denominations that hold the Head, meeting together in union, and from that day to this we have worked in perfect harmony, asking no questions. We found this—and I had better mention it in case I forget—we are prepared to state, over and over again, that at least 7000 souls were gathered in last year in Glasgow. All these are under the superintendence of our ministers. You in London have this disadvantage, that you are not likely to know, and take the converts under your care, as we can do in a smaller place. I wish to say this too. All these 7000 know something about the shorter Catechism, so that we have confidence in them, that it is not feeling only.

Some brethren in Glasgow were not at all pleased with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey at first for not going to the lowest classes. I think it would have been a great mistake if they had. What we needed was that those in our churches who had but the name to live—yet had the name and were in most peril—should be reached first; and the blessing came to them first. We have found that there was not one minister who took an interest in this work who did not gain great additions to his congregation. There have been added to my own congregation over 100 souls, and there is scarcely one I have any doubt of.

When God's people had been greatly stirred up, the work among the lower classes began. And it is going on in a way that is most wonderful. If you are spending a Sabbath in Glasgow you could do this: you could go to the Green, and there see 2000 outcasts every Sabbath morning get their breakfast, and then the word preached; and you never saw a more attentive audience. At eleven o'clock you would find in the same tent at least 1000 people, and in the afternoon perhaps 1200. These ragged children are a most interesting congregation. In the evening the tent is overflowing to hear the preaching of the word. Taking the numbers outside and in, you never have less than 3000. Then there are meetings during the week, and all over the city smaller works are going on. The Lord is amazingly blessing us. If there is anyone who has stood aloof, I do not wonder he does not believe in the work. If he has only come once or twice, he might as well not have come at all. But go among them, and you will discover the reality of the work. You know Christ said about believing, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

There is a solemn thought that is always occurring to me as well as many others—What is this amazing work to end in? In London we have been noticing that your newspapers have been far more favourable than ours were to the work. Why is all this? Is it not as though God has given the four angels charge to hold back the four winds for a little till He has sealed his servants in the forehead? Then comes the terrific storm that ushers in the coming of the Lord.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S GOOD-BYE.

OUR American brethren have nominally been resting since the close of the Camberwell services, but virtually they have not. Last week we gave an interesting sketch of meetings with Mr. Sankey in Switzerland; and this week we have to record the fact of Mr. Moody's combining recreation with work for his Master in our British Switzerland—Wales. In our next issue we hope to give our readers some account of these labours; we shall also give an extended report of the conference and final meeting in England held at Liverpool on Tuesday.

We take this opportunity of informing our readers and contributors that, in consequence of the general holiday on Monday last, and the cessation of business on that day, we have been obliged to make up the issue earlier than usual, and late communications have, perforce, been kept over till next week.

FREEDMEN IN THE UNITED STATES.

DEAR BROTHER,—As I am now on the point of returning for a time to the work amongst the liberated slaves of the Southern States, which my broken health had checked, let me ask that all those who have written me on the subject had better communicate with the Freedmen's Aid Society for further information. I know of no agency in England where expenses and a living would be promised, and therefore all who wait for this before proceeding to the South may wait in vain. I have no engagement with any man or society, and go out alone, trusting in the living God. This statement, I hope, spoken in kindness, will relieve me from the inquiries of persons merely seeking bread. But to all who can commit their whole service to the Lord, there is a wide and effectual door open amongst the dear coloured people of the South. My object this time is to reach the most distant freedman in the most southern State of Florida.

I beg to add, in reply to many inquiries, that I have the utmost faith in the "Jubilee Singers" and their grand mission; who ever helps them will, under God, benefit the freedmen most materially.

If any of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN desire to communicate with me, my address, till further notice, will be "American Missionary Association, Reade-street, New York."

Your brother in Christ, J. SABINE KNIGHT.
[As we have been requested, we shall be most happy to take charge of any pecuniary help to assist in meeting the heavy expenses of this servant of the Lord, who devotes his life to this service without money and without price, although having no private resources of his own.—ED.]

CHRISTIAN WORK AMONGST THE YOUNG.

From a circular letter, issued by the Suffolk and Norfolk Association of Particular Baptist Churches on this subject, we extract the following:—

“Regarding our subject in its Missionary aspect, we must rejoice in the largely augmented interest taken in, and devoted efforts made for, bringing under teaching and culture those most pitiable young creatures running wild, neglected, crushed, cast out by the depravity of unnatural parents, and too long overlooked in the rush of busy men in the worship of the Mammon and other gods. And yet there is room, we suggest, for the Churches and individual members of our own denomination taking a fuller part in the rescue of these waifs of society, who, though they may appear as lonely and as useless as sparrows, are doubtless as closely under the Divine eye as those poor cheap little birds—not one of which falleth to the ground without our heavenly Father’s notice.

“If any, gazing on the shocking condition of still outcast children—without home and friendless; crafty beyond their years; hardened by hardships; their ignorance of good only equalled by their acquaintance with evil,—if any, sighing over such with irrepressible pity, are tempted to despair of their reformation, deeming it a field too hard for their ploughshare, too weedy to pay for cultivation, let them go to those bright spots in our great cities where the courage of a loving faith has attempted great things for God and man, and constrained by his love for them, and their own love, even to such, for his sake, have obtained a precious victory. Let any doubters turn into Dr. Barnardo’s Home for the Destitute, and see the 130 boys, clean in person, busy at work, cheerful in play, or orderly at dinner, looking up to those who teach them with reverent affection, calling the lesson they would once have laughed to scorn, a pleasure. No, this is not fanaticism, it is Christianity. We may not call it visionary, for all is possible to him that believeth; and while the 15th chapter of Luke forms part of our New Testament, there is hope even for that ‘foolish son’ who ‘is heaviness to his mother,’ who, though he has spent his substance in riotous living in a distant land, when he comes to himself remembers a father’s home, and still believes in a father’s forgiveness. That priceless parable not only tells the power of a parent’s love, but the abiding nature of early teaching.

“Remembering that probably one-third of most of our congregations are children, and at least half of the households of believers are children too, we are impressed with the truth that in whatever office or relationship we stand, if we minister only to adults, and for their sakes alone arrange the order of our solemn assemblies, we are unfaithful to the providence of God, who has surrounded us with those cheerful but careful comforts, has dotted our plantations so profusely with those tender but pleasant plants. Our preaching and our teaching, our daily walk and our Sabbath talk, should be adapted as much to every age as to every class.

“We do not believe it is enough that our school children should have a distant gallery provided for them, and be allowed to sit in it during three hours on the Lord’s day, when too often the only parts of the service at all fitted to their capacities (at least the younger part of them) are the portions of Scripture read, and these generally of all that could be chosen the least suited to their understanding, and when accompanied by exposition probably less so still! How often do those of the congregation who are enjoying the ministry themselves, give a thought about its adaptation to the young up aloft, or the others by their side? Is it right to constrain the attendance of so large a part of our congregation, and only address ourselves to the rest who come voluntarily, never having a separate service for the benefit of young folk?

“The old Welsh system of devoting one portion of the day to catechetical instruction, had many advantages, and, though its general introduction now would most likely be resisted as an innovation, might not some modification thereof be at least occasionally permitted? Several wise pastors of the olden time have strongly commended this method. Good John Brown, of Haddington, wrote, when nearly closing his useful career: ‘I lament that I have not been more diligent in catechizing and exhorting the children in my congregation. I am persuaded that these exercises are some of the best means which ministers can use for the promotion of the welfare of immortal souls, and it would be happy for the Church if the zeal and care of teachers were chiefly manifested about this.’ Dr. Doddridge uses expressions of like import; and others might be easily summoned to bear the same testimony. We greatly need in these days of rapidly increasing information, keen discussion, subtle speculation, and ornamented services, to pay more attention to the furnishing our youth with, and training them up in, an intelligent knowledge of Bible facts and truths. This may seem a trite and threadbare piece of advice, but we have no improvement to suggest upon it, no change to recommend in it, no substitute to offer for it.

“We think it not out of place to write you a few words concerning what will doubtless always be a necessary part of young life—Amusement. Not to recognize such, or not to seek to direct it in right channels, and check its flow into injurious ones, would be neglect on the part of those who seek the highest good of our young folk.

“Ever since children played in the market-place of Jerusalem, and long before, playfulness and childhood have tripped hand-in-hand; and even when the hands have grown stronger, and hard work has roughened their palms, the fingers still open occasionally to the old games—and why not, if there be no sin in them? There is abroad, however, an eager appetite for diversion. Holidays and means of enjoying them are multiplied, not always in a way to prove that the pursuit of wealth and success in business have raised the intellectual tone of those engaged, or promoted purity of manners. At all this we do not wonder in those who are of the world worldly; but this worldliness has encroached sadly into the Church, and Christian households are hurried away on its stream. Recreation is needful, but it is for Christian parents to guard its purity, and to set their faces against everything inconsistent with their own principles, or tending to stultify Christian teaching and wither Christian life.”

TEMPERANCE WORK IN AMERICA.

[From a long and interesting paper on this subject, with report of the great Chicago Convention, we can only give the following extract.]

WHILE the advocates of total abstinence have been marshalling their forces, the liquor men have not been idle. The Brewers’ Congress of the United States have recently held a convention in Cincinnati, where it was asserted that the marvellous reports of the reduction of the liquor traffic were mere fabrications of the advocates of temperance, and were not to be relied upon. A committee was accordingly appointed to investigate and report upon this subject. A copy of that report is before me, and from it I find, by their own showing, that the number of beer and ale breweries in the United States have decreased 1013 since the great movement began, and that the President of this Brewers’ Congress charges this most wonderful decrease to the women’s crusade. The same report shows that the only State or territory of the Union which gave an increase of breweries was that of Utah, where a man may have as many wives as he can get—where God is ignored and the devil reigns.

All over the land, saloons are being closed, rum-sellers and rum-drinkers are being converted to God, and the work goes steadily on. We cannot give reliable statistics of the number of saloons closed or of the men reformed, but almost every day brings cheering accounts of new victories in different parts of America.

On the 13th of this month there will assemble at Sea Cliff a Union National Temperance Convention, where all organizations will be recognized, but where consecration, full salvation, and Gospel temperance will be made the leading features. For this meeting many of us are praying, and we expect a mighty power to overshadow it.

YOUNG WOMEN'S COLUMN.

AN INCIDENT OF THE "HOUSE-TO-HOUSE" VISITATION.

Two ladies engaged in this work had agreed to meet, at a certain house in their district, four women with whom they had already conversed in their own homes, and who were desirous of further instruction in the "Way of life."

By some seemingly unaccountable mistake, the visitors knocked at the door of the wrong house. But the woman who opened to them, and whom they failed immediately to recognize, was overjoyed thus unexpectedly to meet again with the ladies whose previous visit, as she hastened to tell them, had been so much blessed to her.

"You remember me, do you not?" she said.

"Oh yes," was the reply, after a moment's hesitation. "You were, I think, the woman who had such a hard heart?" For this had been her self-accusation—

"I've been again and again to the meetings, but it's all of no use; my heart is so hard. You know those great iron rollers they use in making roads, don't you? Well, if one of those even were to go over my heart, it wouldn't break, it is so hard!"

Yes, she was indeed that woman, she said. "But," she added, brightly, "it's soft now."

And then the visitors had to come in and sit down while she told them all about it.

"You prayed," she said, "that God would give me no rest until I found the true rest; and He did make me miserable!" But now all was changed, and she had so longed day after day that she might be able to find the ladies through whose instrumentality she had been led to the Saviour, that she might thank them for their faithfulness.

"You must not thank us," was the reply: "thank God."

"Oh, but I know He would have me thank you too," she said; and then went on to say how she had watched for them day after day, and searched for them among the throng at Bow Hall, and had only that very afternoon been grieving to a neighbour, "I fear I shall never see them more."

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening with old no tillage hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good" (Eccl. xi. 6).

READING-ROOM FOR WORKING MEN.

Many who would gladly help the working men to something better than the amusements of the public-house may do so with little expense or trouble. I have during the winter months given up my back kitchen to any who liked to come from seven to nine o'clock twice a week. The room, being made comfortable with fire, lamps, and a piece or two of old carpet, besides a supply of paper, pencils, magazines, and newspapers, has looked bright and attractive. A trifle was paid for coffee according to quantity, and the money spent in books for the room.

Living in a village, most of the men were known to me, and my manservant had charge of the fire and lights. Testaments and hymn-books were placed on the table. The men might be heard "reading round" and singing the hymns—beyond this, scarcely a sound. I went in myself only for a few minutes to show an interest, and look out for an opportunity of speaking "a word in season."

I hope soon to begin again in a better room, and trust this may lead some to adopt a similar plan if unable to do more.

TENT MISSION IN BUCKS.—Two things have been very clearly established by the experience of the last fortnight in our Tent Mission. First, that God does not limit his grace and blessing to any particular individuals, but that He gives the increase by whomsoever He pleases, and never fails to magnify his work above all his name; and, secondly, that large numbers of people are attracted to the services who habitually neglect both church and chapel, and these, too, of the working class. We had a remarkable proof of this during a heavy storm of rain last week. The chairman invited those who were afraid of the damp to put on their hats; the display of straw hats, and caps, and sou'-westers all along the thickly-seated benches proved to what class the mass of the congregation belonged. Nor has this been confined to towns, for in our first experiment in an agricultural village, which was made on Thursday and Friday last, we had the same result. The labourers came trooping into the tent straight from the hay-fields, and listened with the deepest attention to the addresses. The Mission is suspended this week, but it will recommence the following week, and, we trust, be continued for some weeks to come. But we can sympathise with St. Paul, 1 Cor. xvi. 9. A great door and effectual is opened unto us, and there are many adversaries. Pray for us. F.

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

WE continue our brief notices of various mission efforts at home: very soon we hope to give space to some of the kindred societies outside our shores.

The Prison Mission and the Princess Mary's Village Homes.—Nobody disputes the saying that "prevention is better than cure," but it is equally indisputable that cure is the next best thing to prevention. Mrs. Meredith acts on this principle in her unwearied labours for liberated prisoners, and the children of those who are undergoing their sentences. It would take pages to give an approximately complete account of these good works, and we advise all our readers who can to obtain a copy of the report from Mrs. Meredith, Nine Elms House, Wandsworth-road, Vauxhall, S.W. It will abundantly repay perusal.

Gray's-yard Ragged Church and School, James-street, Oxford-street, W.—These agencies are directed to the amelioration of the poverty and misery which even the West-end of London contains, and the preaching of the Gospel to those who would be ashamed to be seen in any of our churches and chapels. We have often had occasion to recommend this work, and we welcome the receipt of the annual report as another opportunity of reminding our comfortable, church-going readers of the spiritual claims of the physically destitute.

Home for Deserted Mothers and their Children.—Miss Rhoda Broughton sends us a sketch of this work, which, she justly says, "is almost equally important to that of guarding young girls from taking the first downward step which leads them away from God, their self-respect, and alas! too often from the sympathy of their fellow-creatures." This last clause, we fear, is sadly and deplorably true. And yet we cannot conceive of any human beings who more need the affectionate sympathy of all who seek to follow in the footsteps of Him whose tenderest words of love were ever uttered to the weak and erring, than those whom Miss Broughton seeks to reclaim and bless. We cannot express too strongly our approval of work of this description, and the cases Miss Broughton gives are ample proof that her labours are not in vain. Will anyone who kindly feels sufficient interest in this saving work to wish for a report, apply to her at the Home, Bensham-grove, Thornton Heath, where material aid will also be thankfully received?

Orphans' Home, Sibton.—The distinguishing feature of this Home is that it seeks to provide for orphans who have lost both parents, and especially those belonging to the middle class, who are frequently more in danger of being overlooked than those whose parents were very poor. Beginning with an attempt to save a family of orphans from the workhouse, this Home has now thirty-three on the list of inmates, gathered from various parts of the kingdom. We are sorry to learn that the institution is at present passing through a time of sore need, and hope that some of God's children who have the means of "lending to the Lord" will be inclined to help. Miss Margaret Green, on whom the sole care of the Home devolves, is anxious to secure a permanently suitable building, and to place the work in the hands of trustees, so that her death might not hinder it in any way. Further information, and copies of the last report, may be had by applying to her at the Orphans' Home, Sibton, Yoxford, Suffolk.

Sermon-lane Mission, Liverpool-road, N.—It is quite a comfort to read in the report of this young but useful Mission that it "is now entirely free from debt, and its prospects for the coming year are most hopeful and encouraging." We hope it may have the same story to tell for many a year to come. Its ramifications are "too numerous to mention," but we note with special satisfaction that, at one of the midnight meetings lately held, seven erring sisters were induced to renounce their unhappy life. The address of the Superintendent, Mr. George Fuller, is 54, Liverpool-road, Islington.

Costermongers' Mission, Vinegar Ground, Old-Street, City-road, E.C. (Superintendent, Walter Penrose); Homerton Ragged School and Gospel Mission, John-street, High-street, Homerton (Superintendent, J. R. Heward); Latymer-road Mission Schools (Honorary Secretary, Aulay Macaulay, Esq., 37, Netherwood-road West, Kensington-park, W.); East London Mission and Relief Society (Honorary Secretary, Hon. Henry Noel, 2, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.); Hope Mission, Chequer-alley, Bunhill-row, E.C. (Treasurer, R. J. Moser, Esq., 45, Bedford-square, W.C.). To each of these we can only wish a hearty "God-speed," and confirm the appropriate words which we quote from the report of the last-named institution, that all in their respective fields of labour are seeking "to reclaim this wilderness of human ignorance and misery, and thus to—

'Keep among the thirsty poor
God's holy waters flowing.'

Lowestoft Sailors' and Fishermen's Home and Refuge for the Shipwrecked.—Mr. Plimsoll, "the sailor's friend," has done much to prevent reckless loss of life at sea, and we hope he will be spared to see the work completed he has so nobly and disinterestedly begun, and carried on in the face of much opposition. But when human care and forethought have done their utmost, there will still be the dangers of unavoidable shipwreck hanging over the heads of our brethren "who go down to the sea in ships," and consequently the need of such institutions as the above. The report before us states that it is "a refuge for the shipwrecked of all nations," and that "since its commencement it has received 227 crews, numbering 1389." Attached to the Refuge is a reading-room and dépôt for the sale of Bibles and Testaments in different languages. In summer, when it is not so much required for the use of seamen, the building is used as a convalescent home for poor people who could not go to the seaside in any other way. The Treasurer and Manager is Mr. William Johnson, Sailors' Home, Commercial-road, Lowestoft.

Missions to Seamen at Gosport.—The simple enumeration of the agencies kept going here by Mr. Henry Cook will almost suffice to recommend his labours to the sympathy and support of the Lord's people. Here is the list:—"Gosport Ragged Free School, Home for Poor Boys, Seamen's and Poor People's Bethel, Girls' Free School, Floating Bethel Vessel and Mission Boat; Sailors' Resort and Mission Hall, Rudmore." A goodly programme of work truly, and all sustained with vigour, notwithstanding that the oil in the cruise often runs low. Mr. Cook's motto is, "Have faith in God." His address is Bellevue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport. A friend writes:—"Mr. Cook's mission is one of the most extensive of its kind that we know of, and the Lord is blessing it in each of its branches. Will your readers pray for further blessing, and, when they have an opportunity, come and see—and help?"

Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, Woodhouse, Wanstead, Essex.—Having carefully and eagerly read through this report, we could not help exclaiming, with all the energy of our being, "Thank God for such an institution!" During its forty years' existence it has admitted 1173 young girls who were in imminent peril of swelling the ranks of the vicious and outcast. Of these, it has placed in situations 900, and restored to friends 174, five have died, and only nineteen have been dismissed. "Look on this picture, and on that." Picture 1, before admission—"E. F., fatherless; mother has lost all control over her; evil companions are ruining her, and if not speedily removed, she must inevitably sink into the lowest depths of sin." Picture 2, after leaving for service—"I hereby testify that M. A. H. acts up to her profession as a disciple and handmaid of Christ, and that she faithfully fulfils her duties as the servant of an earthly master." These extracts, taken at a venture from the report, are more eloquent than any advocacy of ours. Most of the letters to the Matron from the girls who have gone into situations, are extremely touching, and brought tears to our eyes. The Home seems fairly supported by the public, and well it deserves to be. Office, 28, New Broad-street, London, E.C.; Secretary, Mr. James Beard Talbot.

DOVER CONFERENCE.—We are requested to announce that this Conference of Christians, which is usually held in September, will not take place this year, in consequence of the illness and temporary retirement from active service of the Rev. A. Rogers, who has always taken a leading part in the proceedings of this convention.

TEMPERANCE STREET-STALLS.—On Wednesday last there was on view in the grounds of Lambeth Palace the first specimen of a street-stall for the people, under the auspices of the "Church of England Temperance Society," of which the Archbishops of Canterbury and York are presidents, and the Rev. Prebendary Ellison the chief manager. The object of the street-stall is to provide a place where the working man can obtain light refreshments in the way of unintoxicating drinks and light edibles without being obliged to enter the public-house. The arrangement is convenient, and the most is made of the small space. There can be little doubt that it will prove a great convenience to the poorer classes if it be generally introduced. The cost of each stall when completed is £20, and it is proposed to introduce them by local branch committees, who will also see to the quality of the refreshments provided. A brief explanation was given of the character and object of the new stalls, which seemed to be generally approved by those present.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

TRIUMPHS OF GRACE.

I RECEIVED a letter desiring me to visit a man who was in great distress of soul. The distance was twelve miles; my hands were already full of work, but the request was urgent: "Do come." I found him greatly agitated—the terrors of God were upon him; he looked at the wall, his eyes seemed to read some terrible condemnation, and, like Belshazzar, he shook, and said, "Yes, there's no hope; yes, 'tis all true, I'm lost, and to hell I'm bound to go. I see four things, and there's no hope." "What are the four things you see?" I asked. "I see God and heaven, and I see myself and hell." Truly the scales had been removed from his eyes—he could see clearly what had been hidden from him before; the light of God's presence had discovered his sins which seemed to be like vipers crawling over him, and denouncing his soul; and, yet, how he cried to be delivered from them! "Take away my sins, take away my sins, Lord! Oh! what am I saying, Lord? I have never done anything to Thee but sin against Thee." Then, turning to me, he said, "There's no hope for me, is there?" "That depends," I said, "upon yourself; but," I said, "I read of one who had a similar sight to yours, let me read it." So I read Isaiah vi., "I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne;" v. 5. "Then said I, woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts."

"That's like me," he exclaimed, "that's like me!" "Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the Altar; and he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged."

I then spoke to him about the altar, the cross, the fire (the wrath of God), and the sacrifice (Jesus and his blood), and told him how that God's eye was now resting upon these, and to every sinner who cried for deliverance from sin, God says—"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—God's Lamb, which He provided that sinners "might not perish, but have everlasting life." "God gave his Son because He would save you and whosoever believeth on Him, and when you trust in Him you are saved. Jesus was there under the fire of wrath which you dread, and He bore all that was due to us as sinners, because God wanted to save sinners, and He must do it righteously; and now God is sending the message of salvation—which means forgiveness of all our sins and deliverance from all its power over us, and deliverance from hell and Satan's power,—and bestows upon the sinner a new life, a new name, a new inheritance: so that there are three blessed exchanges—sin for holiness, Satan for Jesus, and hell for heaven."

The man's eyes were fixed on me, and as I ceased speaking he cried out, "Glory, glory to God! I see! I see Jesus for me on the cross. Yes, plain enough 'tis there. God saith it. Yes, 'tis for whosoever—that's me. Whosoever believeth on Him. Lord, I do believe Thee! Thou hast died for such a wretch as me because Thou didst love me." And the great tears chased down his cheeks as he gazed upon the Lamb slain with eyes closed, but the inner eyes open. He had passed from death unto life; from a state of rebellion to subjection; from dread of God to peace with God and joy in God. I saw the step taken, as I have watched many similar cases. The face which was terror-stricken, now changed to a holy calm which settled down upon it. The lips had been touched, the sin pardoned. "And now," I said, "the sentence is not finished." I read again, "Also I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I, send me." "Now," I said, "are you willing to tell what the Lord has done for you?" "Willing, sir? why, I could not keep it back!" And while speaking, some of his relatives came into the house, and his mouth was opened for the Lord; and so until he was removed, a year after, to be with the Lord.

His last message to all his old companions in sin was, "Tell them I am a poor, worthless, wicked sinner, deserving the hottest hell; but Jesus bore the wrath for me, and I am pardoned through his blood. And tell them all to come at once and be saved from their sins."

Another said to me a short time since, "Well, sir, the Lord do pick up all sorts of sinners in all sorts of places. Why He don't mind where they be! One He saved in a gentelman's house. That was a wonderful thing to see: a poor wicked sinner weeping her heart out upon His feet. At the dinner-table I wonder what some of our gentry would have said if it took place in their houses. Well, bless his name, He picked me up in a ditch! all covered with mud outside and covered with sin inside. I was like the man who fell among the thieves." I was anxious to hear how the Lord had met with this man. "I had been to the meeting one night," he said, "when the words came home to my heart, so that I thought somebody must have been telling all about me; and I thought I knowed who it must be; so I thought I would pay 'em out for it. So, going on in the dark, I didn't see where I was going, and I fell into a deep ditch and couldn't get out. I thought my back was broke,—and then I began to think, Well, I may die before anybody comes this way, and where will my poor soul go to? And then all my sins flashed before my eyes,—I could see all my life back, from a little child till that moment, and I began to feel worse in mind than I was in body. I saw hell before me sure enough, and the old enemy close to me, saying, 'No hope!' But, bless the Lord, as He would have it, a word that I heard at the meeting came to me about the poor fellow which fell among the thieves by the wayside, and how the priest passed by, but didn't do him any good. Ah, thinks I, there be a lot of them sort about; they never axes a poor man about his trouble or his soul. But the good Samaritan came where he was—just by the ditch—and took him out, and bound up his wounds, and took care of him; and that good Samaritan was Jesus. And I thought if He could save that poor fellow He could save me, so, there in the ditch, I cried, 'Lord, Thou didst save that man, Thou canst save me'; and, bless his name, He did save me, and then helped me out, and I didn't want to find out who it was told about me. Yes, somehow all my sins was gone, my fears gone; and though I had a rough time on't with them I worked with, yet He always was near to save me out of my troubles."

I was with him when he passed over Jordan. There were no deep swellings. Why? Jesus was there! He did not forsake him. His last words, after praying for all his family, were, "Jesus, Lord, Thou didst save me in the ditch, and out of the mire of sin; be with me now in crossing over Jordan." And I watched him as he passed through the article of death, but there was a holy calm. "Jesus is with me!" were his last words.

And thus one by one we are privileged to lay hold of men and women for Jesus. Ours is hook-and-line fishing. We have sometimes to wait long before we see souls thoroughly hooked with the Gospel; but we ask your prayers, that many fishers skilled in the art of soul-catching may be sent out. We are expecting much blessing all around us; already we see signs of its approach. Will you not help to hasten it?

"PITY THE POOR BLIND"

We are anxious to call the attention of the Lord's people towards a small Institution for Blind Children, at 8, Springfield-villas, Goldsmith's-place, Kilburn, N.W. It was commenced in Worcester, and carried on there for four years and six months. Shortly before the end of that time, its originator and manager was called home; and rather than see the Institution broken up, friends in London undertook to carry on the work, and so it was transplanted to its present position. The work is a deeply interesting one; several of the little sightless ones, brought from neglected homes, have been drawn to the Saviour, and Jesus has become their light and their salvation. We feel sure God will not forsake his own work, but the necessarily heavier expenses incurred in carrying on the work in London, together with the falling off of many of the country subscribers, has brought us into great difficulties with regard to funds. We earnestly appeal to Christian friends to come forward and help in this extremity, to give of their substance, and to bear these little ones on their hearts at the mercy-seat. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

THE WINTER SESSION of the evening classes in connexion with Mr. Spurgeon's College will commence on Tuesday, August 2. They are held on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, at 7.15 p.m., and are free to all young men who are members of any Christian Church. The subjects taught are theology, mathematics, English composition, and grammar. Applications for membership to be made to Mr. J. Petts, secretary, on Tuesdays, at 9 p.m.

DOUBTS DISPELLED.

THE REV. G. W. BUTLER, of Cambridge-heath, in the course of a letter to the Record on Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, says:—"But the inquiry-rooms! So much was I set against these chambers of horrors, as I imagined them, that the services of the Agricultural Hall were nearly over before I brought myself to visit them. The first time I did so I was asked to speak to a weeping girl, so broken in heart under the preaching that she could not speak, and could only sadly shake her head in answer to what was said. During the last week of the services at Camberwell, a modest young lady, with a countenance beaming with that peace and joy which only God's children know, accosted me, and reminded me that she was the same to whom I had spoken three months before at Islington. She had found her Saviour that same week through conversations with Christian workers in the inquiry-room. I could occupy, not a letter, but several of your columns, were I to narrate the cases that have come under my notice since my scruples as to second meetings vanished. The question is, whether it is right for people to converse together about the Saviour and the plan of salvation, and to kneel together in prayer. In fact, there is no further mystery about an inquiry-room than there is in a pastor's or a district visitor's visit.

"There was, however, still one point on which I felt the gravest hesitation. 'Surely,' thought I, 'no good can come of novices and their experiences as set forth at the Young Men's Meetings.' At length one night I wandered into the tent at the back of the Bow-road Hall, where Mr. Ewing, of Dundee, was conducting the proceedings. I had not been there very long before I became conscious of a change of feeling towards this part of the work also, which from that time, instead of appearing like a blot upon the movement, I have regarded as the very brightest spot of all. I have known young men, who had left the large meetings unimpressed, to yield their hearts to God through attending these special gatherings. It would be impossible to convey an impression of the spirit of brotherly sympathy that seemed to be called forth. I cannot conceive that the most eloquent discourses of the soundest professional divines could touch the heart of a careless youth with such power as the broken utterance of a companion in the workshop, who tells how he has been brought to his Saviour, and who exhorts his young acquaintance to flee from the wrath to come. I think that there is nothing herein in contravention to the writings of the Apostle Paul."

THE WILTSHIRE VILLAGES.—The Spirit of the Lord is upon us mightily here in answer to prayer. The villages have been opened up marvellously. Hundreds have flocked together to hear the Word. A few of us began, in a tent, a week's services. It is thought upwards of a thousand came together the first Sunday night. They flocked in from all parts from five miles round. I have been labouring without the tent since. A farmer, whose heart the Lord has touched, has fitted up a large cart-shed, sixty feet by twenty-one. I spoke there last Sunday night; five hundred were present. Then, in a neighbouring village, another farmer has seated his barn, and here six hundred were assembled at the same time as my own meeting. I have gone through the villages preaching in sheds and in the open air; and through the wet, even on Saturday night, the whole of a little village, between two and three hundred, flocked to a barn and stood close together, high and low, to listen to the story of the Cross. God be praised! It all shows what prayer will do. For two years a few have been praying for this place. Though He tarry long, He will answer. May I ask the prayers of your readers for a like blessing on Mayfield, Sussex? CHARLES SNELL.

FRENCH EVANGELICAL CHURCH OF CANADA.—A meeting in connexion with the above was held last week at the National Club, the Earl of Cavan occupying the chair. The Rev. L. Langel, who attended as a deputation from Canada, stated that for thirty-six years the French Canadian Mission had been educating the young and sending Scripture-readers among the people. During that period they had trained at least 2000 pupils, twenty of whom had become ministers, sixty-seven teachers, and forty colporteurs. The success of the Mission had been so great, that it had been necessary to establish a Church of French Pastors, who preached in their native language to the Lower Canadians; and although the Church had only existed for eight months, it had ten congregations, and twenty mission stations, with 2000 adherents. The value of the present opportunity for interesting the people in evangelical truth was therefore manifest. The Church was passing through a great crisis; its members were comparatively poor, and it could not be carried on without assistance; and England was looked to, to render that assistance. Addresses were delivered by several friends, and a committee was appointed to further the object of the meeting.

YOUNG MEN'S COLUMN.

BIBLE-CLASSES FOR EVANGELISTIC WORK.

There has reached us a bulky report of the "Twentieth Annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and British Provinces," held at Richmond, Virginia, in May last. From the discussion of numberless topics bearing on the work of Young Men's Christian Associations, we give the following remarks by a speaker on the above subject. We have marked other parts of the report of this deeply interesting conference for transfer to our "Young Men's Column":—

"I believe in the Bible-class and in the study of the Bible for evangelizing the world. If the world knew as much as we know to-day of God and the Bible it would be a different world. We want to bring men into contact with God to know Him, and the way is through his Word. In cleaning a bucket out we must clean the mud from the bottom. Let us begin ourselves at the bottom of the world, and in some way let us have Bible-classes open to all.

"Let me tell you of a Bible-class I know; I will describe one week's work in that class. It is held in the church-room and the church and Sunday-school doors are opened to anybody who wants to come. It was for young men first, but when the young men wanted to bring in the fathers that they might learn as well as themselves, we did not shut the doors. It is a town containing from 20,000 to 25,000 inhabitants. They meet on Sunday at the same hour as the Sunday-school.

"Last Sunday week there were about 140 there. No women were admitted.

"First comes the collection, which is received in boxes at the door as they enter; then requests for charity are laid before them. That day they donated two pairs of shoes to a widow's family whose husband had been one of the class, and paid one month's rent for a member of the class who had been drinking and was to be sold out unless his goods were redeemed. They gave the rest of the money to a sick man's family whom many of them never knew. Then came the teachings of the lesson in God's Word. I never saw a more attentive audience in my life; I have known fifty of them stand up to be prayed for at once. After the lesson some of them go down to the closing exercises of the school before the separation. Some of them stay, often non-Christian men, to put away carefully the singing-books and Bibles.

"It is all voluntary labour; they go home at four o'clock, and at six o'clock a prayer-meeting is held by a few of them in one of the worst quarters of the town. It is so bad a place that a policeman not long ago accosted them and asked "What are you men doing?" They were young men who had formerly gone there to drink and carouse, and know the men and women that kept the houses, and now when they had learned themselves something of the influence of the Gospel, they wanted to carry it right there where it was needed. They hold prayer-meetings there two evenings during the week. There is no teacher or leader with them except the Master. On Monday night, at the teacher's house in a room fifteen feet by twenty feet, fifty men gathered. Last Monday night a man just out of the penitentiary, who had been in six months, came there and asked if he could bring his room-mate with him who had been just discharged. Of course he was told to do so, and this man at whose house they had held the prayer-meeting the night before also came and desired to bring his son, sixteen years old, saying, 'I have been bad enough myself—too bad, perhaps, to turn now, but I want to bring my son under the influence of the Bible if I can.'

"On Wednesday night there was a church meeting, which some twenty or thirty of them always attend. Of these fifty who attend the prayer-meeting on Monday night, twenty or thirty are members of the church; the rest are entirely outsiders. They come with their working clothes on; they would not go to any other place. When a man said to be the worst fighter in the middle division of a railroad, stops, don't swear nor fight any more, in the face of open and wicked provocation, it is a testimony of the power of the Gospel that no preacher in his pulpit can give.

"On Thursday night they held another meeting at the house of a woman some of them knew, who had tried to take laudanum, intending to kill herself. She had trouble, and they carried to her the medicine that healed them. After they had prayed for her she asked them to come back again. Friday night they had a men's meeting in their room in the church, and on Saturday night there was another prayer-meeting at the church. These are just the facts.

"Now let me ask you, if every town of 20,000 inhabitants had ten such Bible-classes, conducted by earnest Christian men, working down to the bottom of things, what a hope would there be for our land! There is nothing to hinder having such a class in every church and every city. I believe that God is willing to take charge of such meetings. We have sent 181 from our town, and wherever they go they will feel the influence of the experience gained there. All that is wanted is just to teach men out of the fulness and sympathy of your own heart, to teach you have learned of the Master. You don't want to teach 140; one is a beginning. If the class grows, you will grow also. We want men who can sympathize with sinners because they know how it is themselves. Begin with the worst men in your town, the ringleaders of all wickedness. Many of them are educated men, but have filled themselves with debauchery in getting where they are. Preach to them the power of a holy life, and after a while you will find them praying for you in their meetings, and God will hear their prayers, and will bless the teacher in the Bible-class; and I pray God there may be just such a Bible-class in every church in all our land."

Another speaker said:—"I have attended the meetings of Messrs. Whittle and Bliss. At first, I was surprised at the close attention they received. The secret of it was, Mr. Whittle stands behind the Word of God and so simplifies it that the common people can see the truth easily, and grasp it. Would you find the Lord Jesus Christ? Then find Him as He presents Himself through the Scriptures."

THE OPENING UP OF AFRICA.

On Monday afternoon of last week a meeting was held at the Mansion House, which we hope, in the good providence of God, will be instrumental in letting in the glorious light of the Gospel to many of the dark places of Africa.

The Lord Mayor presided, stating that some few weeks ago he received an influential deputation on the subject of Central African exploration, and it was suggested to him, seeing that the slave trade had to some extent been stopped by the Zanzibar Treaty, and that if conducted at all its head-quarters were more towards the centre of Africa and in the neighbourhood of Timbuctoo, that it was very important to reach that district with greater ease and facility than at present. It was proposed with that object to let the waves of the Atlantic into the Great Desert of Sahara by removing a comparatively small barrier of sand which now alone separated the low-lying lands of the desert from the sea near Cape Juby and opposite,—geographically speaking, the Canary Islands. The distance from the coast of Timbuctoo across the desert was 800 miles, and in the event of the sand barrier—five or six miles in extent—being removed, there would be uninterrupted access to the heart of Africa, and the commerce of Europe and America would be largely developed, besides effecting, what was more important, the abolition of the slave trade, and opening a way to the introduction of Christianity among the African tribes. The project, he thought, was well worthy of the consideration of every civilized nation. There could be no doubt that if the proposal was carried out the people of Africa would be largely benefited; and very much would be gained in the interests of humanity, religion, and commerce by obtaining readier and easier access to the centre of Africa. Dr. Donald Mackenzie then read a paper showing the advantage of opening up North-West Central Africa to commerce and civilization, and it was determined that a deputation should wait on the Earl of Carnarvon on the subject.

STRATFORD EVANGELISTIC BAND.—For some weeks past, a youthful but enthusiastic band have been seeking to win those who never attend the house of God, to hear the Gospel in the Working Men's Hall, Stratford. They have had successful meetings, and desire prayer for continued blessing.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—The first anniversary meeting of this work was held at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street; Dr. Rule, of Croydon, presiding. Mr. Joseph gave a very encouraging and interesting account of the Mission to the Jews which he has founded. One object he aims at is to teach trades to those Jewish inquirers who may have been forsaken by their friends in consequence of listening to his teachings concerning Jesus of Nazareth, that they may be enabled honestly to support themselves. Mr. Joseph's work thus includes seeking for work for them, the religious work of the Mission, and the providing funds for the conduct of the whole. Mr. Figg spoke in warm sympathy with the undertaking, and Mr. Miller related some instances of blessing during the open-air services held outside the House of Industry, 394, Hackney-road, where a report may be obtained and communications addressed.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

THE twenty-second annual report of the Open-Air Mission is before us, and is a very encouraging and suggestive document. We doubt whether any other record of Christian enterprise of the same length (sixty-eight pages) is so deeply interesting. Here we have records, not only of the progress of open-air preaching in general, but of the special visitation of 217 races, fairs, and other special gatherings. This department of evangelistic work is almost wholly neglected, save by this society; and no doubt there is a considerable amount of cross-bearing connected with it. To brave the rebuffs of betting-men, the contempt of the gentry, and the sneers of the vulgar, requires no ordinary amount of heroism; but so much fruit has been gathered from so unpromising a field, that it would be worse than cowardly to desert it now, while the indirect good that has resulted is simply incalculable. Let the following extracts be noted in proof:—

“At Blackmoor Fair a service was held which attracted most of the visitors. A showman tried to get customers by lighting his lamps and beating his drum, but failed to attract the people; so he shut up his show and came to hear the Gospel preached, as did many of the other fair-keepers.”—“Some of those brought to the Lord by our labours at previous galas (Bury St. Edmunds) are still walking consistently.”—“At Croydon races the ordinary sightseers were deterred by the inclemency of the weather. The snow was very trying, but the moral effect of such rough weather was good, and many remarked they were glad to see the agents could come out in bad weather as well as good.”—“At Edenbridge races a policeman asked me for a few tracts for his bedridden mother, who was a Christian. I had a good talk with him. Several I spoke to were very ignorant of spiritual things, especially the poor agriculturists.”—“At Glossop wakes I met, two years ago, a man who was a poor backslider, but had been previously a preacher of the Gospel. I talked with him, and he promised to return to his God. I am glad to say he was preaching the Gospel again in the open air at this present wake.”—“The Rev. C. H. Bazely, of St. Aldate's, Oxford, was present, and helped on both the race days. On the second day we were able to sing and hold two meetings between the races. The people gathered round and stood well, afterwards asking for tracts. About six thousand were circulated, and the Bible stall was well patronized, altogether affording a fine testimony for the truth.”—“At St. Austell I met a prizefighter, whom I had met at Totnes races with a sparring-booth some two or three years ago. He then told me he would give it up and get his living in some other way, which he has done. He has a shooting-gallery instead. With a smiling face he shook my hand heartily, and thanked me for the good I tried to do him.”—“At Torquay races, a farmer, on receiving a copy of ‘The Racecourse and its Accompaniments,’ said ‘Oh! sir, I thank you for reminding me of my inconsistency.’ On further conversation, I found he was a backslider. I often meet Christians at these places; one, a female, received a tract from me, and when her eyes caught the words, ‘What if your foot slips?’ cried aloud ‘Fearful will be my fall!’ and bidding me good-bye, immediately left the field.”

These extracts are sufficient to show that the labour is not in vain. But why should this work be left to a society with small funds and few agents? Ought not each gathering of this kind throughout the kingdom to be visited? and would not this be the case if Christians were more thoroughly alive to their responsibilities?

There is still less excuse for the general neglect of ordinary open-air preaching. There is no denying the fact that this apostolic mode of presenting the Gospel is not popular. How rare it is to see a minister engaged in it. And how few are the laymen of piety and intelligence who attempt it. Let the Church of Christ arise to her privilege in this matter, and the result will be a large ingathering of precious souls.

The address of the Open-Air Mission is 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

The Rev. P. S. O'Brien gave an address to the preachers assembled in Queen's-square Mission Hall, on Monday evening last week, entitled “The Earnest and Seal of the Holy Spirit.” Canon Conway opened the meeting as chairman with a few apposite words on the operations of the Holy Spirit. Prayer was asked for the visitation to Goodwood races, and services announced for the Bank Holiday on Hampstead Heath, Clapham Common, Blackheath, Battersea, and the East-end.

BIBLE CLOCKS.—The request for these, made at the Opera House by the Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Newington, and subsequently by Mr. Graham on his behalf, having been sufficiently responded to, and the time arrived for disposing of the clocks received, friends will please accept this intimation that no more are now required.

JESUS SAVES ME NOW.

No more in the border-land faint and weak—
Nay, lift up each downcast brow;
The Lord waits to guide to the rest I seek.
Jesus saves me now!

He waiteth to lead o'er the Jordan-tide;
Then, heart, to his promise bow.
Onward! for He will the waves divide.
Jesus saves me now!

With conquering shout is the Red Sea past;
His by the blood and the vow;
He wills no wandering in wild and waste.
Jesus saves me now!

He asks for the touch of a trusting hand;
Faith's step where the waters flow;
He wills I should enter the promised land.
Jesus saves me now!

To his power yielded—not that of sin;
No need for these falls, I trow,
When He fights for all who will enter in.
Jesus saves me now!

Oh! type and shadow; thou glorious land
Of rest, that I, too, may know;
Let us cross our Jordan at Christ's command.
Jesus saves me now!

What! saved from Egypt, to wander and weep
In fear of a broken vow!
“Able to save!” yes, and “Able to keep!”
Jesus saves me now!

To walk in the joy of the joyous land;
No more before foes to bow;
Who can fall when held by the Saviour's hand?
Jesus saves me now!

Away with the doubts that have marred my past,
The cares that furrowed my brow;
I have found the secret of peace at last—
Jesus saves me now!

The shout of a King in our midst is heard;
Before One shall thousands bow;
For I have “stepped out” on the Saviour's word.
Jesus saves me now! M. G.

BIBLE-CLASSES FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—Miss Rebecca Biggs, for twenty-five years a zealous worker among the young women of the North and West of London, especially in the houses of business, writes that she can testify to the extensive blessing resulting from gathering young shopwomen and others to study the Scriptures with prayer. The classes have to be held at a late hour, to suit business, but they avail themselves gladly of the opportunity. Miss Biggs says:—“I can speak of many hundreds who have, through the means of the Bible-class, been brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus, and are in large West-end houses, living epistles of Christ.”

GERMAN MISSION IN MADRID.—In the midst of all the political changes in Madrid, we have good news to tell which fills our heart with joy and thanksgiving. After four years' labour we have at last obtained a possession in Madrid: we have bought a house for our chapel and schools. Now we need not go seeking as formerly, when we get notice to leave any of our locales, or when we required another. We need no longer hear the words, which when we had found a suitable house so often closed its entrance: “I would rather let my house stand empty for years than let it to Protestants.” No, the bird has found a nest; and our little German mission, which has been permitted to lend a helping hand to the work in Spain, has laid a firm material foundation.—Leaves from Spain.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION had its first day in the country for the present year on Monday, July 26, when some six hundred people from the northern districts of the Mission in London went by train to Loughton. The day was exceptionally fine, and was altogether one of the brightest ever enjoyed in the Mission. From the moment the procession (which had climbed the hills some two miles from the station, singing) entered the ground at 10.30, till the return march at seven, large meetings were kept up without intermission, and many a weary heart was made glad with the love of Christ, so as to sing with the rest on the way home. Others who had withstood the Divine influence so abundantly manifest all day, were overcome and won for Christ in the fervent prayer-meetings held in the carriages. The absence of Mr. and Mrs. Booth made a sad blank; but it is hoped that, in answer to prayer, they will be able to attend the second excursion in which the southern districts proceed to Gravesend on August 10.

A WAYWARD SCHOLAR.

LET me tell you of a work that has been carried on successfully for five years in Christ Church Schools, Falcon-lane, Battersea.

I have been a Sunday-school teacher for many years, and some five years since I had a boy in my class, the son of a publican, who was very troublesome indeed, and I prayed that God would show me a way to reach his young and wayward heart.

As I was aware of the many disadvantages in the public-house, one evening I called on his parents, and asked them to let him come with me for a walk, and for a long time during that evening I talked with him alone, and by God's blessing what was said touched his young heart, and he became one of my most attentive scholars in the Sunday-school. As time went on he expressed a wish for a Bible-class to be started. I told his wish to the minister, Rev. E. C. Ince, who with myself asked God that a Bible-class might be a blessing to many in the parish. On the first evening about twenty boys came, and in a few weeks about 150 came regularly. In course of time christian helpers came to assist, and we have had much cause of thankfulness for many good results.

Many have from time to time left the place, and some very encouraging letters been written, and now over 200 boys attend regularly every Wednesday evening during winter, and it is a most delightful sight to see the school-room full of boys attending to the Word of God, 200 copies of which have been presented by the Bible Society and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

So much good resulted that the boys expressed a wish to form a Band of Hope as an additional guard against the sin of intemperance, which greatly abounded, and I was glad enough to do anything that would be a help to the young. This also has proved a great blessing to many a parent, as God has in many cases used the children for good.

My dear scholar has long since left the neighbourhood, and I shall never forget the tears he shed on parting. God made my worst boy my greatest blessing. I trust this may stir up others to hope and work, and pray on.

Yours faithfully,

THOMAS FECHELL, Conductor.

The Lodge, Beech Holme, Nightingale-lane, Clapham-common.

IS ANYTHING TOO HARD FOR THE LORD?

ONE of our foreign missionaries was lately returning to his sphere of labour, from which he had been absent for a short time in this country. While passing (on his way) through London, he was privileged to witness some of the effects of the movement in which Messrs. Moody and Sankey were the central human agents, and take part in those services, the accounts of which, in months past, from other parts of the country, had so delighted his heart while labouring in his own difficult field.

After embarking, it was arranged by him and others like-minded, that an opportunity should be given to all—passengers and sailors—to hear the glorious Gospel.

Sabbath after sabbath, morning, afternoon, and evening, the voice of one or the other of God's servants was heard making known to all the way of salvation. And the word was blessed.

The vessel had a safe passage and was within a day's sail of the port where many had to disembark. Our missionary was taking a turn in the evening previous to retiring, when he was accosted by another passenger, who, at the same time, apologized for so doing, adding, "I cannot leave the ship without telling you what has happened. You have saved my soul and my body as well." The missionary was "glad to hear of it, but did not quite understand. Would he explain?" Yes. He had come on board the vessel to return to the place they were now nearing, and the one purpose that he had in view was to murder his wife who had been unfaithful to him during his short absence in England.

But God had put it into his heart to attend, three Sabbaths ago, the service held on board, and the Spirit had touched his heart and convinced him of his great sin, and, said he, "That one word 'believe' saved my soul." During the telling of this he completely broke down, and said he could say no more meantime, but would talk to-morrow about it.

It was a memorable parting between the two on the following day. As he wrung the missionary's hand he said, "I'll remember you, sir, all my life, aye, in my death. You saved my body and soul. It was that one word 'believe' that did it. Yes, I love Jesus with all my heart; I am continually thinking about Him, and I am going to speak with my wife like a Christian man. Her life has been saved too." The Lord grant him success, and perfect the good work in his own soul.

"OUR GIRLS AND THEIR HELPERS."

DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW-HELPERS,—I write a little line to let you know a few facts about the Girls' Village Home, concerning which several inquiries have reached me from various quarters during the past few months.

We have now money in hand, or promised, towards the erection of thirteen cottages, and to-day I received a promise of the fourteenth from a friend living at some distance, who is very anxious that the task of providing the cottages shall not be spread over a great length of time, feeling, probably, with myself, that we have less chance of getting them built so economically if we are compelled to erect them one by one, with long intervals between each. He, therefore, proposes to give us the money (£450) for a cottage, provided that five other friends will each guarantee a similar sum for the erection of a cottage. If this were done, we should hope, within at least one year from this time (p.v.), to have twenty cottages built and ready for occupation; and I need hardly say that I am—although, I trust, ready to wait God's time—most anxious that, during the fine weather which God is now giving us, the foundations of these buildings should be put in. If we are not able to avail ourselves of our friend's kind offer, we shall have to wait nearly a year before we can begin building the additional structures, and then another year must elapse before they are fit for occupation.

I only mention these facts as matter for prayerful consideration by those who may have designed to help us, and who as yet have not avowed their intention; but if our blessed Master has not laid it upon the hearts of his stewards to aid us now, I trust we shall be kept waiting God's time, and relying unwaveringly upon his faithfulness. The pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night, are now, as they have ever been, the monitors by which the army of faith learns from Divine wisdom whether they are to "go forward" or to "stand still."

To-day, 127 little girls and 211 boys are within the walls of our various homes, whilst about 110 lads, connected with our out-door "wood-chopping," "shoe-black," and "City-messenger" brigades, are also being helped to an honest and industrious livelihood.

Faithfully yours, in service for Christ,

THOS. J. BARNARD.

MISSION WORK AMONGST THE PORTUGUESE.—A meeting will be held (God willing) at No. 4 Room, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Friday evening, August 6, to speak of the work now being carried on amongst the Portuguese, and to seek assistance therein. The meeting will be addressed by Rev. Robert Angus, from Madeira; M. C. Leite Rozas and J. M. Rendell, from Portugal. Chair taken at eight o'clock. The attendance of Christian friends and workers is invited.

SPREAD THE GOOD NEWS.—A correspondent writes:—"I have been in the habit of sending your valuable paper to some Christian friends in America, and have just received a letter in which the following sentences are found: 'I hasten to answer your kind letter, and also to thank you for the papers you so kindly send, which are a source of blessing to those who read them, and encouraging to those whose aim is God's glory. I received another CHRISTIAN from you to day; thank you, dear brother, I see you are not weary in well-doing. It is a joyous time to many in my native land. I thank the Lord for his mercy and love to many thousands. We little understand his glorious ways.' I think, by inserting the above, many may be encouraged to go and do likewise."

OUR GROOMS.—A correspondent, writing on the subject of Miss Cotton's letter in our Young Women's Number, pleads the cause of the grooms and under-grooms of our London establishments, whose position is pictured as very deplorable, the only provision for their comfort being the public-houses by day, and the lowest of lodging-houses and the vilest of associations by night. Many of the more respectable grooms, young men from the country, keenly feel these miseries, and the temptations they involve, and would hail with pleasure any effort made for their benefit, and would unite to render it speedily self-supporting. We give the substance of a much longer paper. To the wise, or to those whose hearts God has prepared for any special service, "a word" will suffice.

"THE STORY OF THE CROSS."

A PROSE POEM.

SIR,—I venture to submit the following lines—"The Story of the Cross"—for your approval, thinking they might serve as a little reminder to those who heard him, of Mr. Mooly's heart-stirring address at the Opera House, May 7th. The lines were originally written on Doré's picture of "Christ leaving the Praetorium;" but they seem as appropriate to Mr. Moody's vivid description of the Saviour's sufferings. I am sure many could say who listened to the "Story of the Cross" from his fervent lips—"And sitting down we watched Him there." ANNETTE.

"AND SITTING DOWN WE WATCHED HIM THERE."—
Matt. xxvi. 36.

"AND sitting down, we watched Him there." Oft had we done the same before; but never heretofore so near as now! We seemed to hear the din, and fierce rude shouts of the derisive throng! We heard, but heeded not, for our fixed gaze was turned on CHRIST; and in the glory round His face all other things grew dim and indistinct, and faded from us. We could not say as some, "There is no beauty in Him that we should desire Him." With tightened breath and quivering lips we gazed upon the shadow of his glory passing by, who is the Chief among ten thousand thousand, and the "altogether lovely."

And sitting down (cold attitude of formal interest!) while He, the Master stood before us, watched Him as the cruel crowd, and rude, rough soldiers led Him forth on his sad, lonely walk to Calvary. No loving hand stretched out to help Him then; no arm on which to lean his failing strength! A stranger forced to bear his cross when He was sinking 'neath its cruel weight; unaided by one word of love, one look of love's unspoken sympathy. For "of the people there was none with Him." All his disciples had forsaken Him! Thus He went forth to Calvary's bitter cross, "alone" amid the cruel throng who would "away with Him." No look of anger rests upon that face, so marred with the long watch in sad Gethsemane, where the dark, blood-stained earth bears witness to the fearful hour, when, for our guilty sakes, his soul was bowed "exceeding sorrowful, even unto death."

"And sitting down we watched him" standing there; a thorny crown piercing his holy brow, from which blood-drops are falling one by one (the first beginning of that precious stream which shall make glad the city of our God); the weary eyes looking right onward to a coming wee, which none but He could see, an anguish which He saw not far before; the weary feet, that all night long have stood before the unjust judges of the land that He had come to ransom, treading slow the road to Calvary, each step fraught with such bitter, bitter pain!

Now was fulfilled the patriarch's shadowy prophecy, when leading forth his only son to death: "God will provide HIMSELF a Lamb," he said, "a Lamb for the burnt offering." Now we see that Lamb, that holy, spotless victim led forth unto death, rejected by the very souls that He had come to save from misery.

Was it this sacrifice that David saw when to his harp he sung in words like these (but dimly shadowing what the truth would be)—"As for our sins, our vile transgressions, THOU shalt purge them all away"?

Was there not then silence in heaven? The angels pausing in their songs of bliss, as they beheld their King led forth by cruel hands, alone, to death? "Praise waited for thee, then, in Zion, Lord," and even now it waits, till all for whom thou diedst join in that endless song, until Thou speak the last great "ΕΡΗΡΑΘΑ" which shall unseal our long-tied, faltering tongues; till our feet, too, shall stand within thy gates, O city of our God! Jerusalem.

And we behold Him now "a little lower than the angels made," because of death's dread sufferings—sufferings that "once for all" abolished death. Yes! on that thorn-crowned head now rests an everlasting crown of joy and glory. Yet, as I sat and watched him there, it was the pain and grief I thought of; forgetful for a while that He was now beyond it all, upon the other side of death's dark, flowing river, safe in his home of glory, from which both He and all who enter in shall nevermore go out: safe, safe for evermore! And as I watched Thee there, it seemed as if Thou saidst to all of us who then stood gazing on that sight of thy great anguish: "Is it nought to you all ye that pass by, or sitting down do watch Me here? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like to Mine (and I alone deserve it not), wherewith the Lord hath now afflicted Me?"

Dear Saviour, that sweet face, marred more than any man's, is now "the altogether lovely" unto me. I could not bear to gaze on that thy suffering, but that I know that it is past with Thee! thy victory is won! Thou hast "abolished death" for all thy people evermore. Now Thou shalt "rest" in thy great love; for, "seeing the travail of thy soul," "Thou shalt be satisfied," yea, shalt be filled with an exceeding joy, which we shall see one day—our eyes, and not another's.

Oh! blessed hope! mine eyes shall "see his face," his precious face in all its beauteous grace! So I will wait, yes, all the days, the long, long "days of my appointed time"; till, happy thought! "my change" shall come: until "His hands make whole" the wounds that throb and quiver now so wearily. The time shall come when He and I shall stand in the continuing city—there, "not made with hands";—his own bright home that He once left for me. Till then I fain would take my place close at his pierced feet those feet, that once trod weary miles for me; and, listening to his voice, learn how I too may "work the works of Him that sent me" during my little day, joyful that one so weak, so vile, may yet approach to serve the Master "till He come."

And when He takes me home with joy exceeding, "satisfied" at last, I think that I shall once more turn and "watch Him there" (giving Himself a ransom for my sins); and from the Holy City look on those great sufferings which He bore "without the gate" for me and every man: seeing in that our cross on Calvary the shadow of the glory in that home above, which "eye hath seen not, nor the heart of man conceived."

A MESSAGE FROM INDIA.

THE following passages are from a private letter from a friend in Calcutta, dated June 8:—

"I had a happy time in Madras, and was much refreshed in spirit by meeting — and other dear children of God. There is a good, well-directed, aggressive work in progress there. In Madras, the revival started under Mr. Taylor is still in progress, and the converts, young and old, are being organized, as they become fit, into a continually increasing army of lay-workers.

"Up the country, at Coimbatore and Coonoor, a quiet but effective work is carried on; whilst at Ootacamund and several stations along the railway there are good openings for a successful soul-saving work. One cannot come to the knowledge of such facts without being reminded of the Master's injunction—'Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest.' This is amongst the Europeans and Eurasians, and, as it has come to be generally admitted that, after all, the natives can only be reached by the Christian army itself, and not merely by a few missionary generals, the cry is earnestly heard, throughout India, to God for these labourers, and the efforts of many missionaries have become divided of late between their own countrymen and the natives, being no longer exclusively devoted to the latter.

"Such an account as the above would apply to all India. Mr. Somerville, Mr. Sholto Douglas, Mr. W. Taylor, and others, have been the means of a grand preparatory work, and, if it is only followed faithfully up, a widespread and glorious revival will surely result. Oh, for the labourers! May those who are called be found 'willing and obedient,' and not try to flee to Tarshish, like Jonah.

"We all rejoice to hear of the gracious work through Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Last week, being the time appointed for the Convention at Brighton, a week of precious morning meetings were specially held for all who were interested in this subject, and many were blessed, getting up, on opportunity being given, and testifying to the fact."

THE HOMES, PARSON'S GREEN.—Edward W. Thomas begs to call attention to his advertisement on the back page on behalf of the above Homes. There are seven distinct homes attached to this institution, providing accommodation for about 160 inmates; and one of these asylums is kept open all night, in order to give instant succour to suitable applicants as they may apply. The great object sought in all cases is to win souls to Christ, and there have been many blessed instances of conversion. The anxiety arising out of the matter indicated in the advertisement necessarily distracts attention from the higher branches of the work, and this induces the more urgent request to those who sympathize in this mission of mercy to help promptly.

WINNING OUR FISHERMEN TO CHRIST.

I beg to call the prayerful attention of the Christian public, at this time of revival, to the following statement:—

There exists in the North Sea, between Yarmouth and Lowestoft and the Dutch coast, a field ripe for the Gospel.

There are about six "fleets" of fishing smacks engaged in trawling in these waters all the year round. Each fleet sails under the direction of an Admiral, and thus they are kept together. The largest of these is known as the "Short Blue," and during this summer there have been as many as 200 vessels in this fleet at one time. Most of the vessels carry six or seven hands. They go to sea for eight weeks, and are at home about eight days to refit, after which they go out again for another eight weeks. They have to endure all sorts of weather; and, even in gales, keep upon the fishing-ground, so as to be near their work.

I have just returned from my third visit to the "Short Blue" fleet, and, having spent two Sabbaths at sea, am able to state a few facts:—

These men respect any friend taking an interest in them. They appreciate an act of kindness, and often seek to repay it. Having the consent of a pious owner, I left here with a crew, not one being a professor of religion, and the kindness I received was never surpassed. They were very attentive when I read the Scriptures and offered prayer. During the week vessels were visited as opportunity offered, and the men spoken to personally. Many a tale of backsliding was heard, and I trust some were restored, while others felt their need of a Saviour.

On the last Lord's-day of my stay, the hold of a large smack having been cleared out, and fish-boxes placed around as seats, the "Bethel" flag was hoisted and the morning meeting filled the place. A larger vessel was sought for the afternoon meeting, and this was not much too large; while the presence of the Lord was realized, believers were edified, and some convinced of sin. Two addresses were delivered, and many fishermen offered praise and prayer.

A few good fishermen, led by one who can speak for the Master, have long and earnestly laboured for souls upon the sea, and once there was a good work in progress, which was only hindered by a rampant sectarian spirit being diffused, which divided those before united in love. This is absent now, and there is unity, and on behalf of these hardy ones, who claim our sympathy, I make this appeal.

Can we not obtain a vessel, the hold of which might be fitted with plain seats? Let it be used as a mission vessel from April to September. Its cabin could be at the disposal of any earnest preacher who might be led to offer a Sabbath or two to preach a simple gospel to the men away from home and away from the influence of the public-house. The master, who would be able to preach and visit, could render good service at all times, and thus these vessels would be well missioned. During the winter months—or say from September to March—the vessel could trawl as others, and would thus be nearly self-supporting. A pious shipbuilder says a suitable second-hand vessel can be obtained for £550. May I ask the Lord's people to prayerfully consider this, and, if right, to offer the necessary help for this unsectarian work? I shall be happy to answer any question relative to this appeal.

Yours in the Gospel,

GEORGE WILSON, Baptist Minister.

Gorleston, Great Yarmouth.

P.S.—There were four vessels lost from this place last year, containing thirty hands. One had on board all the books used at services, the Bethel flag, and also a nice plate and cup used at the Lord's table, which were given by some friends in London.

ATHLONE, IRELAND.—Christians in England who have been praying for Athlone will be glad to hear that prayer has been abundantly answered. The place of meeting has been nightly thronged, and a great many souls have turned to the Lord. The place is completely changed. Converts are rejoicing, and Christians who have long prayed for the blessing are praising God for hearing prayer.

Dr. DOLLINGER announces in a circular that the international conference of the friends of Christian church union will be held at Bonn, on August 12 and the two following days. Its principal object, he says, is to promote the union of the various Churches, not by means of ambiguous phrases, which might be construed in widely different senses, but by thorough inquiry and discussion to establish the truth of propositions which shall simply express the substance of Christian doctrine and practice as taught by the Bible and the fathers of the ancient Church.

JOTTINGS FROM THE COUNTRY.

You will be rejoiced to hear that the work which has gone on in London by our dear brethren Moody and Sankey is felt in this locality, and blessings have been received even here.

The son of a clergyman near here (and who is a student at St. Thomas's Hospital), when home last was given some pocket-money by a friend, and told to go and see Madame Tussaud's Waxwork, but after his arrival in London he went to hear our beloved brothers Moody and Sankey, and there found the Saviour. He wrote to his friend, stating that he hoped she would not be offended at his spending the money to purchase tracts, he having gone to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services and been led to Christ.

When in a railway carriage yesterday, I read a brief account of the farewell conference at Mildmay-park, and it brought tears of joy to my eyes—joy for so many precious souls saved, the uniting of God's people, and for such testimony to the solid good done by our brethren. Reading the paragraph in the Western Mail led me to praise and pray. Two Welshmen in the same compartment were talking freely and with great enthusiasm. I could glean, now and again, that they were interested in the Lord's work, although they were speaking Welsh. The words "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by" and "Mr. Sankey," &c., being most prominent, I asked one of them if he had been to the great meetings in London. He replied in the affirmative, and then the conversation was changed into English, so that I could join in. My friend said that a week ago he was at the early prayer-meeting, and he should think at least 2000 persons were at the hall by five o'clock—two hours before the time—and at seven o'clock thousands had to turn back. One man told him that he had walked twelve miles, and it was too bad he could not gain admittance.

I would ask prayer for blessing to attend my feeble efforts here in tract distribution and words dropped by the wayside for Jesus' sake.

I keep the word "Eternity" on my desk. It is printed on a small red card, and a question asked, "Friend, where will you spend eternity?" This is seen by a number of persons, from the director of a large company to the office-boy. I would ask prayer for this; also for a blessing on THE CHRISTIAN, which I send to Ceylon and Canada. Your paper brings many blessings to me in this dull and monotonous place.

The other day a tramp, a great septic, called at my house, and after a long conversation I pulled a few tracts from my pocket, and the first one which caught my eye was entitled "The Sceptic Traveller"—the only one of this sort I had. So I said to the man, "I am sure this is for you; take it, and I'll pray for you." His sarcastic smile vanished, and tears commenced trickling down his cheeks when he wished me good day and thanked me. I have had several similar cases.

I sat down to write this hurriedly, and seize an opportunity, as my secular duties are heavy, taking up all my time; but this afternoon I was obliged to return home by the train, through the boisterous weather giving me a soaking.

PROTESTANTS IN THE WEST OF FRANCE.

I AM desirous to gain the prayers of your readers on behalf of the Protestant churches of Poitou, where it seems as if the Spirit of God were preparing a revival like that which has already taken place in the south-west of France (the Drôme). In the department of Deux Sèvres there are 20,000 Protestants, but the earnest workers amongst them are but a tiny band, many of the pastors being rationalists, and several of the churches being at present without any pastor. But the population is one of the most intelligent country populations in France, bearing the traces of a superiority which it owes to its descent from Huguenot forefathers.

About twenty years ago a revival took place in some of the churches around St. Sauvant, a village on the borders of Vienne and Deux Sèvres, and many fruits of this revival still remain. Not a few evangelists from Poitou, converted for the most part at that time, are now working in various parts of France.

The neighbouring village of Chénay seems now to be the chief centre of blessing, the principal instruments there being the pastor's wife—a devoted lady who has gathered round her the young women of the village, and been privileged to lead many of them to the Saviour,—and a young man, son of a peasant farmer, who has been doing a similar work amongst the young men. This dear brother told me that till the war he had thought, like most around him, that all things came by chance, but that the five months' drought which then occurred, accompanied by the calamitous war and the effects in producing a famine amongst them, led him to feel that there was, after all, an overruling God. "And so," said he, "I began to seek Him, and, according to his Word, He was found of me." Is not this a striking instance of the accomplishment of Isa. xxvi. 9, "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness"?

Mme. A.—, the lady referred to, writing to a friend with an account of meetings lately held at Rouille, Vienne, says:—"Praise God with us for so great benefits, and let us join in continuing to ask for the revival of our Poitevin youth, with the revival of the lukewarm Christians, so that we may all arise together as a great army, striving with faith against the ignorance and incredulity of our poor France! The ground is preparing, and we have the firm assurance that God will soon come by his Holy Spirit and grant us the desire of our hearts."

Speaking of the young man above mentioned, Mme. A.— adds:—"J.— is seeing abundant fruit of his work at Theillé, a village where, for several years, he has been regularly preaching the Gospel on Sunday, by means of a Sunday-school, attended also by adults. Lately he has returned to this task with new vigour, so as to evangelize the village from house to house. His only regret is that he cannot consecrate his whole time to it; he would thus visit all the hamlets of the neighbourhood, and I believe it would be the means of much good, as he is gifted for such a work."

"The idea of preaching the Gospel for hire has always been so repugnant to him that he has not been willing to accept the position of evangelist for any society, and this is what gives him the great influence which he possesses, for people see that it is devotedness on his part, and not for money, that he does it, because he is a labourer, and earns his bread by the sweat of his brow like the rest. This is an idea generally received in our country, and my husband believes that laymen will do much more good here than pastors, precisely for this reason."

I am thankful to have been able, by the kindness of some friends, to adopt the suggestion of my correspondent, that this dear young man shall be liberated from his manual labour by paying for a labourer to take his place on his father's little farm; so that henceforth he will, I trust, be enabled to "consecrate his whole time" to evangelization, whilst remaining in the humble sphere in which God has already blessed his labours. Will your readers pray that he may be kept humble and watchful, and be filled with the Holy Ghost; and that all the other workers amongst the Protestants of Poitou may also be strengthened and encouraged, so that there may be indeed a mighty awakening that shall rebound to the glory of God?

HOSPITAL AND SCHOOLS IN BARCELONA.

THE Barcelona correspondent of the Times writes as below with respect to the work of our esteemed brother, Mr. George Lawrence, whose labours in Spain have frequently been chronicled in our columns. The Hospital is particularly deserving of support, and just at present, we are sorry to learn, it is greatly in need of help. Perhaps those of our readers who did not feel called upon to subscribe to the "Hospital Sunday" Fund in June last, would be glad of the opportunity of aiding Mr. Lawrence in his similar, and almost single-handed efforts. We have seen a long list of cases successfully treated in the Hospital, which are the best proofs that it is supplying a deeply felt want in Barcelona.

"Not the least pleasing among the sights brought under my observation was the gathering of several hundred children of the Evangelical schools of this city and its environs, assembled for their annual distribution of prizes in the Calle de San Gabriel, suburb of Gracia. An English gentleman, Mr. George Lawrence, a layman, I believe, has been for several years, both under the reign of the Queen Isabella and upon the first dawn of ephemeral liberty ushered in by the Revolution of September, 1868, working in silence and comparative obscurity at these institutions, relying solely on his own private energies, and on funds supplied by English and American Bible Societies.

"His success has been marvellous, and it affords a signal evidence of the good one man alone can achieve when working upon the impulse of true, earnest, and disinterested charity.

"Besides the educational establishments—something between ragged schools and infant asylums—which he has placed under the direction of able native teachers in all the poorest and most crowded and dingy quarters of this splendid yet unwholesome city, Mr. Lawrence has founded a hospital, of which he takes the principal charge, and which is the only refuge here for ailing seamen from English and American men-of-war or merchant vessels, an asylum for superannuated poor and incurable invalids, a dispensary for out-door relief, a printing-press, and a newspaper office—the Aurora. The whole is under his management, and the most proficient pupils of his schools, or members of his congregation, are his workmen.

"The children receiving instruction in the schools are above 1700 in number, and at such of these establishments as I have visited here, at Barceloneta, Gracia, and elsewhere, I have been charmed with the clean, tidy, and healthy look of the pupils, with the diligence and loving gentleness of the masters, and the evidence of thorough knowledge exhibited by the elder boys and girls brought forward for examination. The moral education is grounded on strictly Protestant, and perhaps somewhat Puritanical, though not dogmatic principles.

"In spite of the war waged against these establishments by the priests, the seed sown has taken such deep root that no future reaction will have the power to tear it up, and the wholesome influence exercised by a wise moral discipline on the children is not without beneficial effects on the parents and on an extensive circle of the grown-up generation.

"There was something agreeable in the thought that these boys and girls had been for the most part rescued from the gutter—in which, unfortunately, too many of the children of the lowest classes are still wallowing,—and saved from that life of beggary or thieving which the police here seem rather intended to encourage than to repress."

JEWES IN CHINA.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—In your issue of January 28, there were several indications that the spiritual condition of God's ancient people is being laid upon the hearts of many Christians at the present time. Such will bear to be reminded that even in far-off and, too often, forgotten China, there are remnants of an ancient colony of this interesting people. In Kai-fung-fu, the capital city of the province of Honan, there was formerly a synagogue of the Jews. Not many years since the building passed out of their hands, on account of their poverty. They are probably now, both in doctrine and practice, not far removed from the condition of their surrounding idolatrous neighbours.

At the present time, when an effort is being made to carry the Gospel of the Grace of God through the length and breadth of this province, shall the prayers of the Lord's people be sought in vain?

This province of Honan, of which Kai-fung-fu is the principal city, might compare favourably, as to size, with, say, Austria. Its population is about 25,500,000! Any one of them might shine in the Saviour's diadem; but alas! they are all without God, and thus without hope in the world!

Until a few weeks ago there has not been one Protestant missionary to give his time and strength to tell these 25,500,000 of souls of heaven or hell; of the means of finding the one or escaping the other—not one to tell them that the Son of God had been, and died in our world, and is now able and willing to save to the uttermost all who come to God by Him.

Mr. Moody is full of concern, and properly so, about the numbers in all your large cities who attend no place of worship, and for whom there are no places if they wished to attend; but oh! if with your Sunday-schools, ragged-schools, theatre services, open-air preaching, tract-distribution, and the much personal effort, their case is so bad, what shall we say of the state of those for whom literally nothing is prepared? How our hearts should mourn over the hundreds and thousands and millions who are born, grow up, and die "wicked," "idolaters"! In the province of Honan, as early as 1866, there were five foreign Romanist missionaries. There may be more now. As a rule, if one of their men dies, or is murdered in the interior, there are always two or three to take his place.

One of the members of the China Inland Mission has commenced to itinerate in this vast and important field. He goes preaching and selling Bibles and Christian books, waiting upon the Lord to guide him, in his own time and way, to a permanent location. Shall we not unitedly ask Israel's God to go before our brother, to guide him day by day; and, pre-servicing him from all evil, help him to preach acceptably the unsearchable riches of Christ? Let us pray that he may so speak that a great multitude may believe. Those who feel that "to the Jew first" is the proper order, will not fail to ask the Lord to have mercy upon His scattered ones at Kai-fung-fu. J. McC.

EAST-END TRAINING INSTITUTE.

BESTING AND WORKING.

ON Friday last a most interesting, though a small, meeting took place at the East-end Training Institute, Harley House, Bow, on the occasion of the termination of the session, and the scattering of the students for a two-months vacation. The House, as some of our readers know, is situated in the Bow-road, having in the front the busy main thoroughfare, and at the back a large old-fashioned garden, with an acre of good land in the rear. It is not often such a mingling of town and country lies in so small a compass. On this piece of ground the tables were set, and a party of interested friends and well-wishers assembled in a social, informal style for tea. The students, about forty in number, served with glad willingness, and the gentlemen who have so ably and generously assisted Mr. Guinness in the direction of their studies, were also present, looking with evident satisfaction on the scene, which spoke of labour accomplished and blessing vouchsafed, with yet the prospect of deeper responsibilities opening before them. Mr. Hudson Taylor, with the three brethren who are leaving for China, were also present, as well as Mr. R. Paton, who carries the cheer of his sympathy into so many good works. Some hymns were sung out-of-door, and then the party adjourned to the large class-room for an hour's prayer and praise.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Frank H. White, after which,

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, the Director of the Institute, spoke with gratitude to God of the way in which He had prospered them since their commencement, three years ago, in Stepney-green. More than three hundred and fifty young men had offered themselves for missionary service in twelve months. They would start in the coming session with fifty students in four houses, and a further number could be accommodated when a house in the country, which had been placed in their hands, should be ready for occupation. The pecuniary needs of the Institute had been graciously met. The first year £1500 had been sent in; the second, nearly £4000; and as it became necessary to build new class-rooms, means had been supplied. The lease of Harley House had been purchased at a premium of £1500, of which sum £300 had been subscribed, and the remaining £1200 lent by a friend at a low rate of interest. During the past seven weeks £700 had been sent in for building the class-rooms. Those who were engaged in teaching were enabled to give their services freely, because the Lord provided for them independently of the funds of the Institute. Mr. Guinness mentioned the interest awakened in him ten years ago concerning China, when a remark by Rev. Hudson Taylor led to his writing the hymn the refrain of which was—

"A million a month in China
Are dying without God."

The previous day two ladies had called, one of whom told him that poem had led her to resolve to do something for China. She began with one native agent, adding another from time to time, until now she sustains five, under the superintendence of Rev. Mr. Wolf, an Episcopalian missionary.

Mr. Parker, one of the students, gave a stirring account of recent tours by himself and fellow-students in Norfolk villages, with most encouraging results in the salvation of souls.

The Rev. J. Hudson Taylor then described the entire absence of Protestant missionaries in many provinces of China, in every one of which European Roman Catholic missionaries are found.

Prayer from several brethren for guidance to Mr. Guinness in the choice of students from among those who offered themselves, as well as for the needs of the home and foreign mission field, closed this exceedingly profitable evening. In the course of it, by a happy coincidence, Mr. Macarthy, of the China Island Mission, arrived from that country; he was ten years ago studying under Mr. Guinness's care, in Dublin, and has now been nine years in the mission field.

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

SIR,—The following remarkable case has been carefully watched by me during the past month, and I can vouch for its truth. As it illustrates the power of the Gospel, even in extreme cases, and may lead some other lost one to seek and find the Saviour, I venture to send it you for publication.

Yours truly,
W. P. PARTRIDGE,
Surgeon-Major, Bombay Army.

July 24, 1875.

On the last Sunday that Mr. Moody was at the Opera House, a young man was passing the Haymarket. He was a Jew; for twelve years he had led a most dissipated life; had travelled a great deal in connexion with a house of business; he had been a great gambler, and been in the habit of attending most of the race meetings in England. In addition to all this, for the last five years he had been accustomed to attend night after night a well-known dancing-saloon near the Haymarket, where he was a paid dancer, and was consequently constantly in the society of the most abandoned of both sexes.

On that Sunday evening he was on his way to a card party, when his attention was arrested by a crowd of people at the Opera House. A gentleman invited him to come in. At first he refused, but at last consented.

The first thing which arrested his attention was the arrival of Lord Cairns. He thought—If the Lord High Chancellor of England takes an interest in a meeting like this, there must be something in it. Then the choir sang No. 14—"The old, old story,"—which had a wonderful effect on him, softening and subduing him in a way he had never before experienced. Then followed some prayers—so different from what he had ever heard at the synagogues, that he could not help weeping—feeling quite brokenhearted,—and when Mr. Moody preached about the thief that was crucified with our Lord, and told how he said, "Lord Jesus, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," the thought came into his mind, "If I could only say the same words, I might also be saved"; and there and then, before the sermon was over, and heedless of the thousands present, he fell on his knees and asked the Lord if He would remember him. He felt relieved, but did not enter into full peace that night. After the sermon he stood up with some 200 others to testify that he wished to become a Christian. In the inquiry-room he was pointed to Jesus as the promised Messiah, and had a long conversation with a gentleman.

On the Tuesday night following he went to the young men's meeting in connexion with the Opera House services, and there heard, among others, the testimony of another Jew, who is now a bright and happy Christian, but who had for four years previously been a spiritualist and a medium, and who was converted at Mr. Moody's meetings; and that night he accepted Christ as his Saviour, and has been rejoicing ever since in the knowledge of sin forgiven, and in the felt indwelling of the Holy Ghost. This has enabled him to bear the great trials which have followed his conversion—cursed by his father and mother; sisters, brothers, and relations lost; turned out of his employment, not knowing as yet how to gain a living; insulted by Jews to whom he speaks of Jesus,—he has indeed had his faith severely tried, but he remains humble and firm, "looking unto Jesus" for all things. Last Sunday he was baptized at Trinity Church, Little Queen-street, Holborn, by the Bishop of Jerusalem.

One incident I may mention, as illustrating that the Holy Spirit is indeed working in him. Some days ago he was telling of Jesus to a Jew, who became very bitter, and at last spat in his face; yet he bore it meekly, having even then learnt the spirit of his Master, and went away to pray for him who had so despitely used him. And the prayer was answered, for the day before yesterday that Jew came to him, and begged his forgiveness. May God open a way for him to get employment (he has a Christian wife and child), and may he be kept humble and faithful, and thus be able to be used as an instrument in God's hands for the good of many.

MADAGASCAR.—A copy of the first Malagasy hymn and tune book, printed at the London Missionary Society's press, has just arrived in England. The editor, Rev. J. Richardson, has included a number of Mr. Saukey's hymns and tunes, which look strange in a Malagasy dress. He says they take wonderfully among the natives. Efforts are being made by the missionaries to improve the service of song in the churches, which has in the past been slovenly and bad. Mr. Richardson says "there are hundreds of Malagasy men and women, and thousands of children, who are heartily learning the Tonic Sol-fa system," so it is to be hoped that they are on the road to a general and cultivated psalmody.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ENGLISH PULPIT; OR, WHAT TO PREACH, AND HOW TO PREACH. An Expostulatory Appeal by an English Rector. Hatchards.—The writer of this pamphlet gives, in a prefatory note, the reason of its re-issue. He "was present on twenty-three occasions at the Evangelistic Services lately held in the Opera House, Haymarket; and he has repeatedly asked himself why it is that so marked results have attended those services at a time when the lack of power in the English pulpit is felt so painfully by the most thoughtful of God's servants? The inquiry has thrown him back on certain reflections—published some years since, and widely circulated—which he desires once again to lay before his brethren in the ministry, as well as before the many Christian laymen who are giving themselves so devotedly to the all-momentous business of winning souls." We gladly commend this interesting and profitable appeal to all interested in the subject. It will be found to contain much wise advice and loving expostulation. Christ is everywhere upheld as the great subject of the preacher's message, and no little Scripture truth is unfolded, with a power which shows that the writer is a master of his subject. We wish it a wide circulation.

BRIEF OBSERVATIONS ON SCRIPTURAL SUBJECTS; submitted to the consideration of those engaged in Evangelistic Work. Partridge.—This is a very useful little book, intended to give help in the right understanding of Scripture to "those who, although they may have received but little Biblical instruction, are yet engaged with true-hearted earnestness in Sunday-school teaching and other departments of evangelistic service." The authority most relied upon, and on the whole deservedly so, is the commentary of the late Dean Alford; but it is a pity that, with much that is excellent taken from him, there should be one alteration of an important passage which cannot be sustained. Rom. iii. 25 is given according to the Dean's rendering of it—"Whom God set forth as a propitiation in his blood through faith." But this rendering, though it may not substantially alter the doctrine, yet by altering the order of the Greek, it removes the object of the faith which is said to be "in his blood." Bishop O'Brien, in his well-known sermons on faith, devotes a note (second edition) to this subject, and after calmly weighing all that Dean Alford advances in favour of the new rendering, shows how insufficient it is to justify any alteration of so important a testimony to God's plan of salvation through faith in the blood. With this exception we would commend most cordially this little book to our readers, and would wish it an extensive circulation. It is sound in doctrine, and spiritual in tone, and likely to be of much use to those for whom it is especially intended.

THE CHURCH IN THE CHERUBIM; OR, THE GLORY OF THE SAINTS. By Rev. JAMES GOSSET TANNER, M.A. Hatchards. 6s. —We have little doubt that the quickened appetite for the Word of God has lately caused the question to be asked by many a lover of the Bible, "What are the Cherubim?" We see them first in Genesis, at the gate of Paradise, and last in the Revelation, in the midst of the throne; and intermediately we find them at one time gazing steadfastly upon the mercy-seat, and at another going and returning like a flash of lightning to do the will of God. In these wondrous symbols of the redeemed are combined all the highest powers of animated nature, energized by the Spirit and Life of Him that sitteth upon the throne, communicated through the Man that is Jehovah's Fellow. The invaluable little volume before us presents in a series of chapters all the various passages in which the Cherubim are referred to; and, by a comparison of Scripture with Scripture, proves, as we think, to demonstration, that they are identical alike with the Seraphim and with the redeemed people of God. We hope to take further and fuller notice of this book, but cannot defer our strong commendation of it as the outcome of a prayerful, studious, intelligent, and comprehensive comparison of Scripture with Scripture, by a spiritual writer, who has evidently sought not to formulate a system of interpretation, but to be instructed by the Spirit of God in the Word of truth. We hope all our readers will give it a patient, prayerful, and repeated perusal.

ILLUSTRATED PERIODICALS.

THE CHILDREN'S TREASURY, edited by Dr. Barnardo (Haughton), steadily improves. No family that can afford a halfpenny or a penny a week should be without it. THE BRITISH WORKMAN and THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW (Partridge) maintain their prestige. SUNSHINE (Macintosh) is as entertaining as ever. THE FRIENDLY VISITOR, THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND, and THE INFANT'S MAGAZINE (Seeley's), are full of excellent engravings and letterpress. But what shall we say of the first illustration in this month's FAMILY FRIEND? (Partridge). Here we have professedly "a life-like sketch" of Mr. Moody. Well may he say, "Save me from my friends!" He has had one or two versions of his addresses published without his revision, and against his will; another attributes to him words and sentences which anyone familiar with his preaching knows he never uttered; photographs, for which he never sat, have been hawked at every meeting—and then the Times has charged him with making money out of it; but perhaps "the most unkindest cut of all" is the ludicrous representation now before us.

DAILY TEXTS.

Thurs., Aug. 5.—"Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord." "Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof, and the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering, but unto Cain and his offering He had not respect." "Without shedding of blood is no remission."—Gen. iv. 3, 4, 5.

"David's heart smote him after he had numbered the people, and David said unto the Lord, 'I have sinned greatly in that I have done, and now I beseech thee, O Lord, take away the iniquity of thy servant, for I have done very foolishly.'"—1 Sam. xv. 30; 2 Sam. xxiv. 10.

Sun. 8.—"The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse." "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." Mon. 9.—"There was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle, and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land. . . . Abram said unto Lot, 'Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen, for we are brethren. Is not the whole land before thee?' "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle towards all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing them that oppose themselves."—Gen. xiii. 7, 8, 9; 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

Tues., 10.—"Thomas said, 'Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.'" "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?"—John xx. 25; xii. 40.

Wed. 11.—"Now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known." "Now for a season, if needs be, ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptation." "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."—1 Cor. xiii. 12; John xvi. 22.

BRIGHTON TENT.—The Gospel Services that have been held for the past weeks in a large tent have been fruitful in some cases of conversion among the lowest classes, and it would seem desirable that they should be continued. The Christian.

"WHERE IS THE LORD GOD OF ELIJAH?"

(2 Kings ii. 14.)

THE parting scene was over. The chariot and horses of fire had come, and Elijah had gone by a whirlwind into heaven. It was a time of sadness for Elisha. How he loved his master! This closing scene revealed the depth of his affection for the man who had found him plowing with the oxen, and had cast his mantle upon him. Elisha had ministered unto Elijah. He had lived with him. He had seen him in his private life and in his public life. Can we wonder at the intense feelings of reverence and love with which he clung to his master? "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee." He knew that Elijah was going, but he was determined to see the last of him. Nothing would induce him to stay behind. He looked upon the prophet as his spiritual father, and "as a son with his father" so he laboured with him. Very touching were those last journeys which they took together—walking, apparently, for the most part, in silence, with feelings too deep for utterance. The "sons of the prophets" seem to have been surprised at them both—awe-struck at the solemn sight. But they only added a fresh pang to Elisha's sorrow when they ventured to say to him, "Knowest thou not that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?" "Knowest thou not?" Yes; he knew only too well. But they had failed to see the depth of his emotion in the calm stillness with which it was veiled. "Yea, I know; hold ye your peace." Very touching, too, was that parting request of his. Elijah broke the silence first—"Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee." And the answer shows Elisha's feelings towards his master. The one thing he coveted was to have the spirit of Elijah. He was his spiritual son, and he asked for the birthright—"I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me." And very touching must those "parting words" have been which passed between them when they "still went on and talked," until they were parted asunder. And who can say what love was wrapped up in those words which wind up the scene?—"My father, my father! the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof!" The glory of the heavenly sight could not distract his attention from his beloved master. To him the chariot and horses of fire were but emblems of the mighty lustre of grace and glory which shone so brightly in his spiritual father. Yes; there was love—deep love, intense love, spiritual love—in Elisha towards Elijah.

But was that all? Oh, no! Such "brotherly love" is not only perfectly consistent with supreme love to God, but also takes its rise from that source. Faith and love towards Elijah's God had originated this strong affection for Elijah himself. And we soon see that the spirit which Elisha had received was, indeed, the spirit of Elijah. It was not the spirit of the man who trusts in man, and makes flesh his arm. Elisha wrought the same miracle as his master in the same strength as his master. When he returned to the bank of Jordan, and smote the waters with the same mantle with which his master had smitten them, he did not ask "Where is Elijah?" but "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" He thought of the man still, but he thought of the Lord in the man. It was not Elijah who had divided the waters. They had fled from before the feet of the Lord. Is it not plain that Elisha was looking away from man, and that his thoughts were fixed upon the Lord? He seems to say, "Where is the Lord God whom Elijah trusted? Where is the Lord God who wrought so effectually in him? Where is the Lord God who wrought so mightily through him?" Elijah was gone, and "he saw him no more." But Elijah's God was not gone. The Lord was still near—"The Lord is at hand."

Thoughts such as these will no doubt be in many hearts just now. We have said good-bye to our beloved brethren from America, and we have "wept sore" whilst we have "accompanied them to the ship." Many who were not permitted to join in the Farewell Services at Liverpool have none the less joined in the feelings of love and sympathy which were there expressed. Thousands of hearts have sorrowed—thousands of prayers have arisen—as our brethren have left us to return to their own land.

Our brothers Moody and Sankey are gone. But where is the Lord God whom they trusted? Where is the Lord God who wrought so mightily in them—clothing them with such wisdom and love and boldness of faith? Shall we not "glorify God" in them, and praise Him for all the meekness, humility, and disinterestedness which He gave them? Shall we not "covet earnestly" such good gifts too? Have we not all "been made to drink into one Spirit"? Are we not all followers of the same Lord? Is He not "able to make all grace abound" toward every one of us? We want no plagiarism—no vain imitation of mere men—no attempts at man-mimicry. But, in accordance with the Spirit, and in dependence upon the Spirit, may not every Christian long and ask for such graces as he sees in the brethren? Instead of such continual laments as—"I have not the gift that others have," "I could never do a thing of that kind,"—shall we not begin rather to cry, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Cannot He who works so mightily in others work mightily in me also? Is my weakness always to limit the Mighty One? Is my sinfulness for ever to limit the Holy One? Is my unbelief to go on limiting the Faithful and True? The Lord "open the eyes of our understanding, that we may know what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which He wrought in Christ."

"Messrs. Moody and Sankey have done a great work," say the newspapers. Now let us ask, Where is the Lord God who has wrought so mightily through them? Is the "great work" going to cease now that our brethren have left us? Are the pages of THE CHRISTIAN to contain no more soul-stirring information of God's work? Ought we not rather to expect to see greater things? For God's sake, let us not talk or think of "reaction." If we believe that this work is of God, and not of man; if we believe that it is the work of the Spirit, and not of human excitement or enthusiasm: then let us go on with it. The Christians of many towns had hoped to be visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, but were disappointed. And the result has been, we believe, in many cases, that those Christians have been led to cast themselves more entirely and more trustfully upon the Lord. Surely we have wasted enough time in finding out that we can do nothing without the Lord. Let us begin to find out what we can do with the Lord. Is the Lord with us, or is He not? Are we "workers together with God," or are we not? Some expect no results of their work,—and get none. Some think it wrong to look for results; others would be scared if they saw results. Some want to see results without working for them; others do not, or will not, see results when they have them. But farmers sow their seed with a definite purpose, and with a definite hope. Let us sow our seed in the same way. Farmers have long patience; let us have long patience. We all sow in dependence upon God. "God giveth the increase." Only, let us beware of charging God with the fault which belongs to ourselves. Let us desire and expect to see such results as those should have who are workers with God. When we see God using others, let us ask why we are not used as they are. Elisha might have said, "I am not an Elijah"; but he did not; he said, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?"

JOHN J. LUZZ.

MR. MOODY IN NORTH WALES.

(BY OUR OWN REPORTER.)

DURING the two years sojourn of the American Evangelists in England, Scotland, and Ireland, they have so assiduously devoted themselves to the unfolding of God's wonderful working in grace towards a lost world, that they have been left no time for any survey of his scarcely less wonderful working in nature, which any of these three kingdoms can show. They have passed the best part of three summer seasons in our midst; but while other labourers in the Lord's vineyard were taking their now universal "holiday," Messrs. Moody and Sankey were hard at work, entreating men and women to be reconciled to God. Now that their regular labours have ceased, a brief week or two has been devoted to well-earned recreation ere they return to their native land. As our readers know, Mr. Sankey traversed part of Switzerland, and returned to England, we may add, looking brighter and fresher than ever.

Mr. Moody has not gone so far afield, but has contented himself with a short tour among the Welsh mountains, in company with Rev. Mr. Aitken, and Mr. Balfour, of Liverpool, at whose country residence he has been a guest. Like Mr. Sankey in Switzerland, he has had to pay the penalty of a wide-spread popularity. His fame has preceded him wherever he has gone, and thrice he has been induced to break silence, and give Gospel addresses to the immense multitudes that have gathered to hear him.

A kind friend has translated for me, somewhat as follows, an account of his visit to Bala and Ffestiniog, as it appeared in a Welsh paper—Y Goleuad.

"The inhabitants of Bala have been privileged with the presence of the wonderful American evangelist, Mr. Moody. He arrived there on Monday evening, July 26, and his coming occasioned great excitement amongst all classes of the community, who came out of their houses that they might see the man concerning whom there has been so much talk and writing of late. When it was certainly known that Mr. Moody was in the town, some friends resolved to make an effort to induce him to preach before he left, and he agreed to do so, at nine o'clock on the following morning, in the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel (the largest in the town). The town-crier was sent out between ten and eleven o'clock that night to announce a prayer-meeting for seven o'clock next morning, and a sermon at nine. A numerous congregation gathered in the chapel at seven, and enjoyed a wonderful and excellent meeting. By nine o'clock the chapel was filled, and a local minister gave out the old Welsh hymn—

"Yn y dy froedd mawr ar tonau,
Nid oes neb a ddeil fy mhen
Ond fy nnwy! Brwd Jesu,
A fu farw a- y pren:
Cy failly yw yn afon angen,
Ddeil fy mhen i uwch y don:
Colwg arno wna i mi ganu
Yn yr afon ddofw hon."

For the benefit of those of our readers who, like myself are unfortunate enough to be ignorant of Welsh, I give a free version in English, which my kind translator, however, informs me, inadequately conveys the force and beauty of the original:—
[678]

"In the wild and angry waters,
There is none to hold my head,
But my faithful, loving Saviour,
Who, for me, his blood has shed;
He, a friend in death's dark river,
Will bear me up above the wave;
And one view of Him can make me
There to sing his power to save."

The Welsh report proceeds—

"Then the first hymn in Mr. Sankey's collection was sung, and the Rev. Mr. Aitken having read the 5th chapter of Isaiah, sang himself Mr. Sankey's choice hymn, 'There were ninety-and-nine that safely lay, and engaged in prayer. After this the congregation sang, 'There is a gate that stands ajar.' Mr. Moody preached from 1 Cor. xv. 3, 'Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures'; and at the close of his address, after silent prayer, he requested every one in the congregation who desired to be prayed for to stand up. At the close of the silent prayer there were about thirty who had risen to their feet, and Mr. Moody prayed earnestly for them. The congregation then sang 'Once for all,' and whilst it was being sung the inquirers retired to the vestry-room. Mr. Moody joined them there in order to give them further direction, and in this he was assisted by the Rev. Mr. Aitken and Rev. Mr. Peters."

Then follows a short account of Mr. Moody's visit to Ffestiniog, which, however, I need not reproduce. The "lightning" had previously announced his expected arrival, and, notwithstanding that the people were busy with the harvest, large crowds were waiting to see him. He declined to speak in public, but a promise was extracted from him that, if spared, he would visit Wales at some future time. I may here add that deputations from Oswestry, Chester, Bangor, Holyhead, and other places waited on him at Rossett, to whom he gave a similar reply.

GREAT GATHERING AT WREXHAM.

Of the great meetings at Wrexham on the 1st inst., and at Rossett the following day, I can speak from observation. Reaching the former place about eleven o'clock on the evening of Saturday, 31st ult., the first thing that my eye caught, by the light of a street-lamp, was a poster announcing that Mr. Moody would preach in Wrexham the next day (Sunday) at six o'clock p.m. A little further on, a peripatetic gentleman, with whose appearance the London meetings had made me familiar as a vendor of Mr. Sankey's hymn-books, and "The Career and Works of Moody and Sankey," was busily plying his occupation opposite the entrance to the public market. The town seemed in a bustle even at that late hour, and was palpably very full, as I had some little difficulty in securing a resting-place for the night.

At half-past seven o'clock next (Sunday) morning, a united prayer-meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, to ask God's blessing on the services of the day. I was not aware of it, and consequently did not attend, but I understand that upwards of 500 persons were present, including several of the ministers of the town, and that the proceedings were marked by a spirit of much devotion and earnestness. Early in the day, I encountered in the street an old man busy reading Mr. Sankey's little hymn-book, who stated that he had walked seven miles in the morning to be at the prayer-meeting, in the expectation of hearing Mr. Moody there. He also informed me that one of Mr. Moody's "followers" was to preach at St. Mark's Church in the forenoon. I found out afterwards that Mr. Aitken was meant, and the description was not so much amiss, as Mr. Aitken has of late acted somewhat as lieutenant to the great evangelist, and accompanied him on his short Welsh tour. At eleven o'clock St. Mark's Church was densely crowded. I am not greatly skilled in such matters, but it seemed to me that the mode of conducting the service was what is known in these days as "High." It looked strange, and contrasted strongly with the simple, unadorned services of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, which have formed the staple of my church-going for six months past, to see a choir of thirty men and boys slowly marching up the centre aisle, followed by the Vicar and Mr. Aitken in parti-coloured robes. Everything was "intoned," to the "Amens" of the congregation. Any formality, however, in the early part of the service was soon forgotten in the powerful and heart-searching sermon of Mr. Aitken, on the words, "Come, for all things are now ready." He preached for an hour and a quarter, exhausting the time or the patience of a number, who left before he closed.

Prayer-meetings were held in the afternoon in various of the Sunday-schools, and at an early hour a large crowd had collected in the beast-market, where Mr. Moody was to speak. This triangular space in one of the outskirts of the town is about an acre and a half in extent, and a rough but substantial platform was erected for Mr. Moody, the ministers and choir, &c., at one side of it, in front of the National School-house, which was intended for use as an inquiry-room. As it turned out, it was not brought into requisition for that purpose. Long before six o'clock (the hour fixed for beginning the service) the market was crowded closely from end to end, except at the extreme ends, where it was neither possible to see or hear. The people must have flocked from all the surrounding districts, as it was freely asserted that 20,000 persons were present; and, judging from the vast sea of heads that was presented to view from the platform, and the area covered by the closely-packed multitude, I am not disposed largely to reduce this estimate. Mr. Sankey's hymns were sung for some time, led by an efficient local choir, and, as a variation, the Welsh verse I have given above was sung to a beautifully plaintive air, which carried me away to a Highland churchyard, where the Gaelic-speaking population meet periodically to observe the Lord's Supper. It was joined in more heartily even than Mr. Sankey's hymns, and testified to the affection of the Welsh people for their native language.

When Mr. Moody arrived, in company with Mr. Balfour, and saw the immense congregation, he expressed his doubts as to whether he could make them all hear, and suggested that an adjournment should be made to an adjoining field, where a more central position could be got for the speaker. As all the preparations were made, however, he agreed to go on with the service, though, as it turned out, his opinion was the correct one.

"The old, old story,

was the opening hymn, and then Mr. Moody plunged into his discourse from the text "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He pitched his voice in a high key, and laboured hard to make his audience hear, but it was evident from the moving of the outside portion of the crowd that he was only partially successful. He was very earnest, and the sermon, which we had before heard him give many times, seemed as fresh as at first, many of the illustrations being told with thrilling effect. After speaking for about twenty minutes, his voice seemed to be fast giving way under the great strain to which he was subjecting it, and he wisely closed the discourse. After prayer he announced that a service would be held in the field in half an hour, when Mr. Aitken would preach.

To the field multitudes flocked accordingly, though a good many went away, the second gathering being a good deal smaller than that in the market-place, but still large enough to form an imposing congregation. Mr. Moody having recovered his voice, proceeded thither also, and himself resumed addressing the people, being heard freely by all. He asked and answered the question "What must I do to be saved?" and his words were carried home with such power that a number held up their hands at the close as desirous of being prayed for. An invitation was extended to those who were really anxious for salvation to go to the Public Hall; and upwards of thirty responded, and were conversed with by Mr. Moody and others, and subsequently addressed by Mr. Aitken. The record of such as were saved through the day's services is on high, but, at all events, the good seed was unsparingly and faithfully sown, to fructify in eternal life, we hope and believe, to many of our Welsh countrymen and women. The weather was beautifully fine, and this added much to the comfort and picturesqueness of the outdoor proceedings.

SERVICES AT ROSSETT.

Next day, the 2nd inst., the pretty little village of Rossett, about five miles north of Wrexham, was invaded by a multitude of people such as, I suppose, it has never witnessed before, and probably never will again. Mr. Moody was advertized to lay the foundation-stone of a new chapel belonging to the Calvinistic Methodist body at 3.45 p.m., and afterwards to give a Gospel address at 4.30 in the park surrounding Mr. Balfour's residence at Mount Allyn, whose guests Mr. and Mrs. Moody had been for some days previously. Early in the day the people began to converge on the spot where the ceremony was to be performed, coming from all points of the compass, and by all sorts of conveyance. The day was dry and warm; the roads were very dusty. A crowd clustered around the intended site of the chapel, and some hymns were given out, but being on the edge of a narrow roadway, only a small proportion of the assembled concourse could get near. Many of them, having nothing to occupy their attention, swarmed into and besieged the three or four public-houses that are apparently deemed necessary to the well-being of this little Welsh village, and, from a flying inspection of these establishments, I am much afraid that much more intoxicating liquor of various sorts was consumed than Mr. Moody would approve of. I saw no signs, however, of excess.

It will not be necessary to give the details of the ceremony of laying the foundation- and memorial-stones, which was performed with great good-humour and anxious care by Mr. Moody and Mrs. Balfour, inconveniently hemmed in as they were by a curious crowd of onlookers. The Scriptures were read by Rev. Mr. Jermán, of Wrexham, and a touching prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Meredith, the minister of the new chapel.

The ceremony being over, Mr. Moody and the friends who accompanied him drove to Mr. Balfour's fine and extensive park, followed by a multitude of people, which, when completely assembled, must have numbered some 10,000. Here, standing in the carriage, Mr. Moody once more proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation from the story of Nicodemus and his conversation with Christ on the new birth. Mr. Moody was listened to with the most devout attention, and at the close of a long and most earnest address some dozen hands were lifted in answer to his appeal. Mr. Aitken supplied Mr. Sankey's place, in his much-regretted absence, and led the singing as well as offered prayer. Under the circumstances an inquiry-meeting was hardly possible, and the benediction being pronounced, Mr. Moody drove away to Mr. Balfour's house, which was seen nestling among the trees at some little distance. The great crowd slowly melted away, much gratified, I doubt not, at having seen and heard the eminent evangelist, but above all, I hope, more desirous of profiting by "the words of this life" which had been so earnestly, though simply, proclaimed. Mr. Moody cannot fail to carry with him to his own country a fragrant remembrance of the short season spent in Wales, and the honour so universally accorded to him, both for his own and for his Master's sake.

THE GOSPEL IN PORTUGAL.—A meeting was held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Friday evening last, to receive information of the progress of the Gospel in Portugal, and to commend to the Lord Mr. J. M. Rendell, who is going to labour as a missionary in that country. Deeply interesting information was given by Mr. Rendell, Mr. M. C. Leite-Rosas, and the Rev. Robert Angus, from Madeira. Captain the Hon. R. Moreton presided. Mr. Rendell is being sent out from the Mildmay Christian Association, in the full belief that he is called to the work by the Lord. Those who sympathize with this effort to introduce one more labourer into a Roman Catholic country, may send their contributions to the Portuguese Evangelization, 4, St. Benet's-place, Gracechurch-street; or to Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LIVERPOOL
FAREWELL TO GREAT BRITAIN.

(BY OUR OWN REPORTER.)

In few of the towns visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey during the past two years has the work of their hands prospered more than in Liverpool. We call to mind with thanksgiving the wonderful scenes we were wont to witness in the Victoria Hall during the month of February last—the “eager, anxious throng” that waited patiently outside the doors for hours, despite the intense frost and cold that then prevailed; the multitudes who stood on their feet requesting prayer at Mr. Moody’s call; and the long array of anxious seekers who filed into the large inquiry-room behind the platform, filling it to the doors, so that the great hall itself had to be brought into requisition for the same gracious, happy work of pointing the sin-sick, weary souls to Him who alone can give rest. After our brethren left Liverpool for the metropolis, the work of revival was sustained with more than usual vigour and completeness of organization, and amid tokens of the most unquestionable success. The work among the young men of Liverpool, and the efforts that have sprung out of the services held in the Circus, have been simply wonderful, and their results have partially appeared in our pages from time to time—notably in our recent Young Men’s Numbers. The past six months have been very eventful ones in the spiritual history of thousands in Liverpool. In view of this, and seeing that Liverpool was the point of the evangelists’ departure from our shores, it was fitting that their final words of farewell to Great Britain and Ireland should be uttered here. There was, no doubt, a local interest attaching to the meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, but the occasion was almost a national—I had almost said an international—one. There were friends present from many parts of the country, and Mr. Moody’s long and important farewell address will be read with interest, and, we trust, profit, all over the world, as it was heard by those who were present. It need scarcely be said that the announcement of the farewell services gave great satisfaction, and the demand for tickets for the meetings on Tuesday, the 3rd inst., was far in excess of the supply.

I arrived in Liverpool on Monday evening, having come straight from the interesting services of the day at Rossett. The long train which carried us to Chester was so crowded that I, with about forty others, was fain to clamber into the guard’s van, and take refuge among the heaps of luggage, notwithstanding that the journey had to be performed with scarcely any light and less ventilation. From the landing-stage I proceeded straight to the Circus, which I found well filled with the after-meeting, presided over by that devoted servant of the Lord, Major Cole. One of Mr. Moody’s oldest and best friends, Mr. J. V. Farwell, of Chicago, was giving testimony for Christ in his own unpretentious, but most telling way. Others followed, and before the gathering dispersed there was yet a third meeting for conversation with the anxious, of whom there seemed to be not a few. I could not but thank God in my heart for all that had taken place in the Circus since last I attended the meetings for young men held there, which were then being successfully established by Mr. Henry Drummond.

The noon prayer-meeting on Tuesday at Victoria Hall was very well attended—more largely, I suppose, than usual,—and was a deeply interesting one. Messrs. Moody and Sankey were not present. The Rev. Dr. Lowe presided, and gave a short and very appropriate address from the closing verses of 1 Kings iv. He said he had chosen the passage as a su tablo reparation to the services of the day, and this because it directed our thoughts especially to prayer. The incident it relates of answered prayer is especially adverted to in the New Testament as an encouragement for us to pray. This prayer of Elijah’s was emphatically a prayer of faith. Some people think that if we are sure a thing is to come to pass, this at once stops the mouth of prayer. “Why should we pray,” they say,

“for that which we feel certain we shall have?” But the Christian knows that the blessing promised is given in answer to prayer. It was because Elijah knew the blessing of rain was promised that he prayed to God who promised it. After a very graphic account of this special manifestation of Elijah’s faith, Dr. Lowe said we could surely hear “the sound of abundance of rain.” Have we not already more than a little cloud in the horizon? Has God not already answered the believing prayer of those who, months ago, united to supplicate God’s blessing on the services that were then expected? Have not our prayers been answered more than we anticipated or deserved? How marvellous has been the blessing! How many I have known myself of whom I could testify that they have been blessed. And yet I think there is the “sound of abundance of rain” again. Is there not? Do we not feel that there is a blessing coming to-day? Have we not assembled in the spirit of prayer, however inadequate the measure of it? And do we not feel that this day shall not pass over without showers of blessing descending upon immortal souls? God grant that it may be so, and that it may be an afternoon and evening of much refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

This address and the prayers that followed were felt to be a very appropriate introduction to the memorable gatherings that followed in the after part of the day. It was announced that the Hall must be emptied, otherwise a large number would have remained for the two hours that intervened before the afternoon meeting, in order to secure their places.

AFTERNOON CONFERENCE.

About a quarter to three o’clock, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, with many well-known friends, emerged from the trap-door in the middle of the platform, and were greeted by an audience that crowded every nook and corner of the great building. The heartiness of the welcome found vent in a universal clapping of hands, which, however, Mr. Moody speedily stopped by a wave of his hand. Some kind friends had placed very beautiful bouquets of flowers on Mr. Sankey’s organ—a custom which is, I believe, common in American churches, and, within certain limits, a very pleasant and unobjectionable one. It would be invidious to mention the names of those on the platform without giving all, but it will be sufficient to say that they included most of the local friends of the movement, and many from London, Manchester, &c., and also from Scotland.

In the course of the opening exercises, Mr. SANKEY sang alone two verses of the fourteenth hymn “Tell me the old, old story,”—and here my opinion must conflict with that of the correspondent of a contemporary last week, who asserts that “the timbre of Mr. Sankey’s voice is perceptibly impaired.” I was struck with the clearness and rich quality of Mr. Sankey’s tones, and the circumstance was to me most gratifying. It would be no cause for wonder if, after the constant strain of two years’ daily public singing in all states of this changeable climate, his voice should be affected, but as far as I am capable of judging, it seemed on this occasion to ring out with more power and expression than ever. And considering the great work that we all hope lies before our brother in his own and, it may be, other lands, I repeat that this is matter of genuine satisfaction and thankfulness.

Mr. MOODY read part of the 105th and 107th Psalms, and from the 12th chapter of Isaiah, and said he wished to give two key-notes for the addresses that should follow; his turn to speak would come in the evening. The first thing was to praise God for what He had done,—to praise God and not man. He would call to order anyone who attempted to praise man; we want to get man out of sight, and exalt Christ. The next thing was to “advance.” What were they going to do? His faith had grown since he had been in this country, and he did not know why Christians should not go out and possess the land.

The first address was by the Rev. Mr. AITKEN, who said he thought they could not meet in that hall without feeling that the departure of their dear friends for America very greatly enhanced the personal responsibility of all who called themselves Christians. The blessing which God had been pleased to shower upon his work in various parts of the land had put them on a vantage-ground, for they occupied a better position now than they ever occupied before in this land. He did not believe that the Church of Christ had ever occupied a better position in this land than it did at the present moment; and if that was so, their responsibility must be proportionately heavy. And if they allowed themselves to lose their vantage-ground and slip back into the dull routine of the past, they would have themselves to blame. The question before them was a very practical one, and it was, How were they to push on the advantage? If they were really to avail themselves of the opportunity they must expect further successes. He was apprehensive of Christian people allowing themselves to think that the period of reaction had come—that they had been having such great encouragement that for a little time they must rest on their oars. If they placed themselves in this attitude they would have themselves to thank for it, if God turned the heavens above into brass, and made the earth as iron beneath their feet; therefore he felt it incumbent upon him to sound this note of warning. He thought that their attitude should be this: that they should thank God, and then rush on against the foe with fresh determination, believing that the victory was only commencing, and that inasmuch as God had given them a position of advantage, they must push it on and fight the battle out, until God in his own good time placed the crown of victory on their brow.

How was this to be done? God expected every one of them to come forward with the gospel of grace in their hearts; and if they realized their personal responsibility and went into the battle fully determined to win souls for Christ, England would very soon feel the results of their efforts. He desired to warn them against this season of revival being followed by a period of reaction. Before the present work closed, he thought that ministers of Christ and also lay people, especially those who occupied influential positions, should ask themselves solemnly what were the permanent lessons which had been brought before them in this great movement. Mr. Moody had given himself up to the work of evangelization, and he (Mr. Aitken) could not help believing that the Church of Christ from a very remote period had practically ignored the evangelist's office. They had their local pastors, but he thought that the evangelist was more likely to be powerful in a locality where he was not permanently fixed than in his own country. If they were desirous to see God's work still carried on on a large scale, those whom God had in a large measure gifted with the power of the evangelist should consider whether they could give themselves entirely to the work. He had done so, but he utterly disclaimed all credit on that score. He did not think he should have had the courage to take that step, but domestic circumstances had rendered it imperatively necessary that he should leave his flock in Liverpool. He had, however, long been convinced of this truth that if a man was to be a practical evangelist he must give himself over to the work; and he called upon God's people to take this matter into serious consideration, and say that the great work which had been undertaken must be followed up in all our towns and villages, for he believed that even the villages needed it more than the towns.

A great responsibility also rested on the ministers of Christ. In almost all the places where the wave of blessing had passed, there would be a large number of young converts who had given themselves over to God and wanted something to do. Their duty at this moment was to set all those young Christians to work. There were a great many ministers who fall into the mistake of trying to do all the work themselves. What was wanted to be done was to find specific spiritual work for those who had given themselves to God, and encourage them; and he wished to point out that unless this was done they must be the last persons to find fault with those extravagances which otherwise must develop themselves. If, instead of young converts being taken by the hand, they were left in the rear and not given any kind of encouragement, the result would be that they would either draw themselves up in their shells altogether, or rush into the opposite extreme.

It seemed to him that now was the golden opportunity; and unless they got their young Christians to work they would have to regret it to the end of their days. If after the departure of their American brethren they resolved to have a holiday time of it, then good-bye to their usefulness, and God's blight would rest upon them instead of God's blessing; whereas if they put themselves into God's hand, depend upon it this wave of blessing which had swept over the land was but the beginning of good things. He closed his stirring and practical address in the words of Wesley, which, he said, used to be sung at the close of his conferences:—

“A rill, a stream, a torrent flows,
But send the mighty flood;
Awake the nations, shake the earth,
Till all proclaim Thee God.”

The Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE spoke next, and it is not too much to say that the meeting was fairly electrified, as “the old man eloquent” poured out the wealth of his declamation and illustration in a perfect torrent of burning words, accompanied by highly dramatic and expressive gestures. He said Messrs. Moody and Sankey did not want them to occupy time by throwing their arms round their necks and kissing them, but they had given them the motto, and that was to “advance.” What, he asked, is our great encouragement? “All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth; go ye therefore and teach (or disciple) all nations.” Just before Christ ascended He said, “Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me in Judea and Jerusalem, and unto the uttermost ends of the earth.” Why did the Lord Jesus tell us He had received all power? That He might confer power upon us. Mr. Somerville recounted the exploits of the mighty men in the days of the Judges, upon whom the power of God fell and proceeded. The day has come when it will not do for us to remain within this little isle. Larger efforts must be made to proclaim Christ's name throughout the world. We read that Alexander the Great, while a young man (he died before he was thirty-two), crossed the Hellespont with only 35,000 infantry and 5000 horsemen. He had provisions and money to last them only one month, yet they went forth and took possession of the world. What! Is Alexander the Great to be always spoken of as the only man who can do the like of this? Is Jesus Christ not strong? Why should we not gather round Him, and in the power of his Spirit take possession of the world? We must not only send out men to engage in this blessed work, but the whole Church must by prayer and sympathy, by the voice of encouragement, and by liberal support, work together as one man for this great end. When I was in India, I felt that wherever I went I was borne up by the sympathy and prayers of many dear friends in my own city of Glasgow, in Edinburgh, in London, and in many parts of the world besides, and I was strong through their sympathy. If a man is sympathized with and encouraged in that way, he will do twice as much as he would do otherwise. Mr. Somerville illustrated the power of sympathy by telling how Alexander the Great was traversing a desert with his followers, who were suffering greatly from thirst. Some one brought him a little water in a helmet, and as he was about to partake of the precious refreshment, he looked towards his followers, and seeing their sufferings he refused to drink. His men were roused to action by the sympathy thus shown by their leader; they put their spurs to their horses, and sped on to a place where relief could be found. Speaking of the necessity of humility in Christian work, he quoted a beautifully apt simile, in the use of which he seems to excel. He said the Rhine before it reached Basle received no fewer than 1200 tributaries. How was this? It was by keeping at its lowest level. If it had not, these streams would have flowed somewhere else. He roused the audience to such a pitch of excitement, that when he sat down they burst into applause, which no attempt was made to suppress.

Mr. SANKEY then sang "My Prayer," a beautiful hymn of consecration, which we printed at length in our issue of July 8, on the occasion of Mr. Sankey singing it at the Victoria Theatre, in London. He prefaced it by saying that we would be able to go out and work better if we had the blessing of which the hymn told.

Dr. BARNARDO then gave an address, in the course of which he said the question was frequently asked, "How shall we reach the masses?" He knew of only one answer: "Go and preach Christ to them." That must be the bait; but there must be something more than that. Not only must they preach Christ in his boundless love to a dying world, but there must be the hook—such an application of the truth as should enter men's hearts and draw them to the Saviour. What was the great prerequisite to success? It was given in the two words of our Saviour, "Follow me." That was the secret of successful service: there was no royal road; their brother, Mr. Moody, had no knack in it. God help them to follow Christ, that they may be truly fishers of men.

Mr. MOODY now called for accounts of the work among the young men, and requested Mr. Drummond to speak first, as he had been very closely associated with this part of the work.

Mr. DRUMMOND said he wanted to tell Messrs. Moody and Sankey, before they went back to America, that it was very far from the thoughts of the young men to fold their arms and say they had done enough. He compared the work of the young men to one of the minor shows that followed a travelling circus; but though the great tent was soon to be struck, and the large show to be removed, the minor show would remain and go on more vigorously than ever. They were going to advance and try to win the young men of the United Kingdom to Christ.

Mr. STALKEB, of Edinburgh, said he felt that the past two years had been years of great importance to the whole country, and would be remembered for many years to come as great years. One thing that had made them interesting and memorable was that religion had been made respected among the young men of the country. Young men had been apt to look down upon evangelical religion; but in the part he came from they dared not do that now, because in all classes of the community the very backbone of these young men had been won to Christ, and they were bearing themselves so in the ordinary business of life that it was impossible for those around them not to respect them. He never thought of this movement without his mind wandering away into the future; and he thought not only of the number of men who had been saved, but of the young men who were devoted to Christ going on in their various spheres—in the family, in social intercourse, in business, at the University, in their shops, as clerks, and in all the different walks in life—distinguishing themselves, and showing that their Christianity, instead of keeping them back, was helping them on; that their spiritual regeneration had been at the same time moral and intellectual regeneration; and that they were determined to be men in all the departments of life. He read often with pity the remarks made by some, of the weakness of those who took part in this movement. At the University of Edinburgh, last April, there were only six or seven men who secured first-class honours, and three of these were head and shoulders in this work. Only one man got what was called a "double first," and that man he had heard addressing these revival meetings. That was the kind of revival of religion they were having now; and he thanked God for it with all his heart, for their preaching to young men was far more effective if they could show them that their religion was making them get on well in business and do their business well, and come to the front in the ordinary walks of life. Let them seek to serve God by doing their work thoroughly, and at the same time, standing on that vantage ground, exhort all their brethren to get that which had made men of them.

Dr. ZIEMANN, of Manchester, then briefly addressed the convention, pointing out the Evangelical work that was being carried on in Manchester, and said that many young men in that city had taken part in the movement, and were determined to carry it on to victory. He asked those whom he addressed to continue the fight, and let their watchword be "Victory."

Mr. D. M. DRYSDALE announced that boxes were placed at the doors, in order that those who wished might contribute to the expenses, in connexion with the Hall, still unpaid.

Mr. MOODY remarked that only £1500 was required, and they would please leave it in the boxes as they went out. If they did not they would require to take up another collection at night. They did not want to leave Liverpool in debt.

The doxology was then sung, and the meeting terminated.

THE EVENING MEETING.

In a touching chapter of family biography, that Mr. Moody was wont to use for illustration, he spoke of Thanksgiving Day in America, the observance of which brings all the scattered members of the household together. We were strongly reminded of this by the great gathering of friends who had come from far-off parts of the country to be present at the farewell services and departure next day. Many who had taken an active part in the London services came down expressly to say good-bye to their Evangelist brethren, and not a few had come from across the border, as well as the other English towns.

We have seldom had to record anything else but crowded meetings in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services, but this last evening meeting of all must have been—if that were possible—more crowded than any. As one of the local papers of next day puts it: "Every inch of space where a person could sit, or stand, or crouch, was occupied." As a consequence, the heat was exceedingly great, and in order to obtain more ventilation, some resorted to the dangerous expedient of breaking the windows. As the hall was filled to overflowing long before seven o'clock, the time was profitably used in singing the well-known hymns, in prayer, and in the delivery of short addresses by various friends.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey duly appeared, and after the opening exercises Mr. MOODY made a short statement as to the Hall which had been bought by the Committee, and appealed for a liberal collection, in order that the debt still existing should be cleared off. The collection was taken, and amounted, it was stated, to a considerable sum.

Mr. SANKEY sang, "I am praying for you," and before doing so he said: "When we are gone from among you, we hope that you will remember to pray for us, as we will surely remember to pray for you. Pray God that He may use us in our own dear land as He has used us here, and even more abundantly. May the blessing of God rest upon the singing of this hymn to-night." This hymn, of which we have before expressed our admiration, was sung very touchingly by Mr. Sankey, amidst the almost deathlike stillness of the vast congregation.

Mr. MOODY then commenced his address, which the length of our notice compels us to hold over. A full report will appear in our next issue. He spoke for more than an hour, but to the very last there was the most rapt attention. By some means the gas could not be lit, and as the fading twilight deepened into darkness, the scene became intensely solemn, as Mr. Moody's earnest and sometimes faltering words fell on the hushed and eagerly attentive multitude. At the close of his address he offered fervent prayer. He besought God's blessing on England and America, on the work among the young men, and on the ministers, his utterance anon being stayed by his evident emotion. Both during the address and the prayer the tears of the audience flowed freely, and, if the darkness had not in some measure prevented it, the closing scenes would have been most affecting.

Mr. SANKEY's voice found expression for the last time in the farewell hymn which he has sung at many of the towns visited, though not in London. We give it, with music, on another page, because of its memorable associations, and because we know that many of our readers desire to possess a copy of it. As Mr. Sankey sang it, by the light of a candle, to the justly popular tune of "Home, Sweet Home," the audience was much moved. It was the last time many of them will probably hear Mr. Sankey's voice, and we are sure none of those present will be able to forget it.

Before the meeting was dismissed, Mr. DRYSDALE, the Secretary of the Liverpool Committee, announced that the hall would be opened for continuous services in October next, and that Mr. Aitken had agreed to take the first week, commencing Sunday, October 3.

Mr. MOODY stated during his address, and much to the satisfaction of many, that a service, chiefly for young men, but open to all, would be held next morning at half-past seven o'clock.

On Tuesday evening, after the general meeting, a few friends gathered at the Compton Hotel, and two or three hours were spent in an informal conversation on the subject always uppermost in Mr. Moody's thoughts—the best way to benefit young men—to conserve and utilize in the way of righteousness, for the glory of God and the good of men, the young manhood of Great Britain, America, and the world. Happily, Mr. Shipton, the Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, was present, and he entered heartily into the feeling of all present that the time and opportunity had come in the providence of God, for that Association to take a more decided stand than it has ever yet done, as an aggressive organization for the evangelization of young men. It was felt that the various branches throughout the country may become much more closely and intimately allied in Christian work than hitherto, and that as so very much depends on the secretaries, as to the tone and conduct of each branch, it was felt to be of the first importance that those who occupied a position of such influence and trust should be men qualified for their office by capacity and education, as well as by Christian character and consistency, and that they should be adequately remunerated. Mr. Moody remarked concerning this, that it is easier to raise £500 a year for a well-qualified man than £100 for an inferior one; for people will give liberally and willingly in the one case, but grudgingly or not at all in the other.

The conversation turned upon Manchester, and the amount of influence for good which one man may exercise was remarkably illustrated by the effect of Dr. Ziemann's devotedness and energy upon the noon prayer-meetings, and the evangelistic work generally, since Messrs. Moody and Sankey's departure from that city; and it was felt by all that men like Mr. Henry Drummond, whose conduct of the young men's meetings had so well supplemented the work of our American brethren, are needed in order that the Young Men's Christian Associations throughout our land should develop the power and usefulness which lie latent in them. Mr. Moody also mentioned the case of the Young Men's Christian Association at Washington, which some years ago was in a declining condition, but soon became one of the most important and successful branches in all the United States, under the leadership of its present secretary (Rev. G. Hall), who was induced to give up his position as a Wesleyan minister, in order to devote himself to this no less honourable and influential ministry. When it was proposed to offer him the post of secretary, some objected that he was a Northern man, and would be unpopular in a Southern city; others said that, being a Methodist, he would be objectionable to those of other denominations, but the fact that a man's personal fitness outweighs all difficulties as to his circumstances and surroundings, was signally proved in this case, for soon this excellent young man (whose acquaintance, by the way, it was our privilege to make at Round Lake six years ago, and who has been our fast friend since) was surrounded by a numerous band of young men as devoted as himself, who were so much attached to him, that when he was wanted for another sphere they absolutely refused to let him go.

We believe that if one thing more than another will induce Mr. Moody to return to Great Britain, it will be the desire to weld together its Christian young men into a band of fellow-labourers, that, by the operation of the Spirit of God, shall be in the midst of many peoples as a dew from the Lord, and as a lion among the beasts of the forest. And to tell the truth, we expect that it will not be years before we see our brethren again amongst us.

In the course of the evening Mr. Moody gave away to his numerous friends about one hundred copies of "All about Jesus," with his autograph inside. This volume has just been published by his special desire.

THE LAST SERVICE IN ENGLAND

was held by Mr. Moody on the morning of their departure, so that we may say they left our shores "with their harness on their backs." Mr. Sankey was not present.

The hall was opened at seven o'clock, by which time considerable crowds had gathered at all the doors, and before Mr. Moody made his appearance at twenty minutes past seven there were some 5000 or 6000 persons in the hall. After praise and prayer by Mr. JAS. MATHIESON, of London—

Mr. MOODY read part of the first chapter of Joshua and twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus. He proceeded to give a short address to the young men, the first part of which was an earnest plea for a systematic study of the Bible and Bible characters, and for union with some organized body of Christians. He also urged on them the necessity of having some definite work to do, and not to attempt too many things at one time. "I have been wonderfully cheered," he continued, "during the past months by the tidings coming from Liverpool. I want to say from the depths of my heart, God bless you, young men. The eyes of Christendom are upon you. Perhaps there has not been a place where the work has been so deep and thorough as the work here among the young men. I believe it was in answer to the prayers that went up for it when we were here six months ago. And now, as we cross the Atlantic, it will cheer us as tidings come that the young men are still advancing. Do not fold your arms, and say, 'We will have a good time next fall.' God is just as ready to work in August as in July. If some have gone out of town on their holidays, the work should not stop; I think it is the best time to work when many are away. Every man ought to be worth the five or six that are away. Then the work will go on. The great revival at Pentecost was in the hot weather, and also in a very hot country. People think there cannot be any interest in the warm months; but if the prayer goes up to the throne, God does not look to see what month it is. He is as ready to bless in one month as in another. Let me give you the watchword we had yesterday afternoon—'Advance.' I hope there will be a fresh interest awakened in Liverpool as there has been in Manchester. I do not know of anything that has encouraged me more than to hear of the work going on in Manchester for the last six weeks. I hope Liverpool and Manchester will shake hands in carrying on the work, and let the lies of those sceptics who say it is only 'a nine days' wonder' be driven back. I cannot talk longer. I say from the depths of my heart, I love you; God bless you, and may the power of God come upon you this morning afresh."

In his prayer that followed, Mr. Moody made special reference to the work being carried on by Major Cole in the Circus, and he afterwards made some remarks, urging all to support and help on these labours.

After the hymn, "Free from the law," had been sung, Mr. ALEXANDER BALFOUR said, "I do not know whether I am the proper person on behalf of this audience to say good-bye to our dear friend, Mr. Moody, and our absent friend, Mr. Sankey; but I feel that there must be some mouthpiece to say to them what we really do feel. We thank them from the bottom of our hearts and souls for what they have come here and done. Unless Mr. Moody had been a man like a cannon ball for hardness of material, for directness of aim, and for strength of will, he could never have done what he has been privileged by God to do. His wisdom has been conspicuous in discovering this—that our young men in Liverpool and elsewhere in this country have been greatly neglected, and in choosing them to be, for the future, not merely the recipients of God's grace but the distributors of it. I do feel that Mr. Moody, in having given so much attention to our young men, has really done the right thing. Many know that Liverpool has been a curse to young men. They have come here and been led astray into all kinds of mischief and wickedness. How many broken hearts are there in this country because of the mischief done to young men in Liverpool! On behalf of the mothers and sisters of this country, I want to give Mr. Moody the most heartfelt vote of thanks that it is in my power to convey; and on behalf of thousands who shall be influenced by the young men in Liverpool, I want to convey to him the tribute of gratitude for what he has done. As President of the Young Men's Christian Association, I want to say this: that it is our purpose as young men to go on with the work; and, by God's grace, we shall not go back, but advance in our endeavour to do our duty before God and men."

Mr. MOODY, in reply, simply said, "I will now shake hands with you all in the person of the President of the Association;" and, the meeting having been closed, he returned to the Compton Hotel, surrounded by a large crowd, which sang "Hold the Fort" and the "Doxology" in the street in front of the hotel. Many of them lingered there during the hour and a half that elapsed before Mr. Moody, Mrs. Moody, and family, accompanied by a large number of friends, drove away to the landing-stage. They were followed by the enthusiastic cheers of the assembled multitude. Mr. Sankey stayed at the residence of a friend, and so escaped much of the popular attention that Mr. Moody had to undergo.

THE DEPARTURE.

The following account is from the local papers of the 5th inst.:—"A special tender was provided for the conveyance of the evangelists and their party to the Spain; and Mr. Sankey, who spent the night at Edge-lane, and most of the friends, went on board of it shortly before Mr. Moody. As Mr. Sankey passed across the landing-stage, upon which a large number of people had assembled, he was warmly cheered.

"There was a large gathering of people in front of the Compton Hotel to see Mr. Moody leave. His cab drove up shortly after ten o'clock. Mrs. Moody and their children entered the vehicle first. As Mr. Moody emerged from the hotel, a hearty cheer arose from the crowd, and people rushed to the door of the cab on each side to shake hands with him, and bid him good-bye. The cab was, however, immediately driven away to the stage, amidst renewed and warm cheering. For some time prior to the hour at which the special tender was to leave for the Spain, people began to assemble on the Prince's pier and the landing-stage, and when Mr. Moody arrived there were several thousands present. A wide strip of the stage was kept clear by the police for the party to walk to the tender, and as Mr. Moody went on board he was heartily cheered, which he acknowledged by bowing. When the company were all on board the tender steamed away. As it passed down the river the people upon the pier and the landing-stage cheered with increased heartiness, and waved their hats and handkerchiefs. Their example was imitated by the people on the ferry boats moored at the stage or crossing the river; and when the cheering had somewhat subsided the people on the stage struck up one of the well-known hymns. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey acknowledged this hearty farewell from the bridge of the tender by repeatedly bowing. The sorrowful countenances of many of the people showed that it was with no ordinary feelings of regret that they saw the evangelists going away. Arrived on board the Spain, which is one of the largest and finest of the Atlantic steamers which sail from Liverpool, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were introduced to Captain Grace, the commander, and their friends were shown the cabins which had been reserved for them. They are in the most comfortable part of the vessel, namely almost amidships.

"The tender reached the Spain about an hour before the time for the good ship to weigh anchor, and the interval was fully occupied in taking leave of the evangelists, and in receiving from them or conveying to them parting words of comfort and encouragement. Mr. Moody again urged those who have been his fellow-labourers in this and other districts to remain united, and to carry on the work with courage and determination; whilst, on the other hand, there were very numerous expressions of the hope that a success equal to that of the last two years may attend the evangelists' labours wherever and whenever they may be resumed. Many of the leave-takings, from their intense earnestness, were very affecting. Only when the Spain's anchor was being raised, and the tender was upon the point of starting, could many of the friends tear themselves away. As the last of the people 'for the shore' were leaving the ship, those who were already on board the tender sang the hymn, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus.' As the Spain moved slowly down the river, the people in the tender, which was still alongside, cheered heartily, and the passengers on board the Spain replied with another cheer, and the waving of handkerchiefs and hats. As the Spain passed on ahead, the people in the tender sang the hymn 'Hold the Fort,' and afterwards the hymn 'Work, for the night is coming.' Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey stood at the bulwarks of the Spain and bowed and waved their handkerchiefs until the two ships were out of sight of each other. Shortly before the tender reached Liverpool, prayer was offered up on board by Mr. R. Radcliffe and other gentlemen for the safe arrival of the evangelists at their destination, and for the subsequent success of their labours, whether carried on in England or America.

"The weather yesterday morning was anything but pleasant. A thick haze hung over the river and the bay; and as the Spain was leaving, rain began to fall, and continued for some time. The water was, however, perfectly calm. The travellers seem to have a prospect of fair weather on their voyage, which has been a matter of some anxiety to their friends, since it is known that Mr. Moody is but a poor sailor."

"Among those present at the leave-taking were Messrs. T. Stone, J. E. Mathieson, R. Paton, R. C. Morgan, R. Scott, W. A. Shipton, T. A. Denny, Castle Smith, Arthur Kinnaird, jun., J. Sands, M. H. Hodder, Hugh Matheson, Dr. Barnardo, all of the London Committee; Mr. Caupell White, Glasgow Committee; F. Midwood, Dr. Ziemann, W. Caddell, James Boyd, J. S. Stewart, Isaac Hoyle, Jeremiah Garnett, and J. B. Brierley, of the Manchester Committee; R. Lundin-Browne, Edinburgh; W. Wilson, Kendal; R. Bennett, York; Rev. W. Baxter; Rev. J. Baillie, Rector of Wyvenhoe, Essex; Mr. Wm. Atchison, Kilburn Priory; William Somerville, Glasgow; J. R. Somerville, Langham; Rev. W. Callan, Swansea; Rev. A. N. Somerville, Edinburgh; Mr. H. Drummond, Stirling; Major Cole, Chicago; Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken; and of the Liverpool Committee, the Rev. T. Mapherson, R. J. Lundie, A. M. Symington, Messrs. C. E. Dixon, A. Balfour, D. N. Drysdale, J. Houghton, H. A. Colville, R. Radcliffe, Nash, &c. Mr. J. V. Farwell, of Chicago, President of the Young Men's Christian Association in that city, went out in the same vessel."

A friend who goes out as a passenger in the Spain, writing from off Queenstown, says:—"All is well on board through the mercy of God. We had a little Bible reading last night and prayer. Many of the other passengers came round us to listen. I can see Mr. Moody expects great things on the voyage; the Lord grant him all that sail in the ship."

[At the conclusion of Mr. Moody's long address on Tuesday evening, which we are compelled to omit this week, he invited the young converts throughout the country to write to himself and Mr. Sankey, as, for the next two months they would be resting and would have time to read communications that would cheer them on in their future work. Mr. Moody's address for the next two months will be Northfield, Massachusetts, U.S.A., and Mr. Sankey's, for the same period, Newcastle, Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, U.S.A.]

CHICAGO.—Mr. Wm. Clark, of Bristol, who is well known as an earnest servant of Christ in the district of Cheddar, Somerset, where he has taken a great interest in twelve village churches for over thirty years, writes from Chicago, saying that on Sunday, July 18, he preached in Mr. Moody's church and was enabled to cheer the hearts of those who have been deprived of Mr. Moody's ministry, in order that he may carry on the work the Lord gave him to do in this country, by bearing testimony to the great and blessed results of that work as witnessed by him in Dublin and other places, and also of the lasting character of the blessing. In the afternoon of the same day he addressed about 1000 children belonging to Mr. Moody's Sunday-school. It was a time of refreshing.

MAJOR COLE AT LIVERPOOL.

AFTER a very brief season of rest, caused by the closing of the Victoria Theatre services, our dear brother Major Cole, with his devoted fellow-helpers Mrs. and Miss Cole, have, in the providence of God, been led to labour in Liverpool. They held services in the now well-known Circus in Whitechapel for a week previous to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's farewell visit, recorded elsewhere. The leading of God's gracious hand has been very manifest in connexion with their labours, though they have been conducted without much publicity, and under the disadvantage of not having been previously announced.

The opening services were in connexion with the young men's meetings, still carried on at the Circus with vigour and success. Our readers know that the young men's meetings have been one of the most distinguishing features of the Liverpool movement, and the almost endless ramifications which they have now assumed are just so many causes for thankfulness and gratitude to Him who worketh according to the counsel of his own will.

At these gatherings of young men it is a matter now of nightly occurrence to hear them asking prayer for their relatives who are still outside the Saviour's fold. The thought suggested itself to Major Cole that his opportunities of usefulness would be extended if the meetings were of a general evangelistic character, open to all, so that those fathers and mothers, so earnestly prayed for, might be induced to attend, and thus be in the way of receiving the blessings sought for them. This arrangement was carried out and adhered to during the remainder of Major Cole's stay, and with the happiest results. Not being largely advertised beforehand, the meetings were permitted to advertise themselves, which they effectually did—a leading factor in this being the really exquisite singing of the Major, his wife, and daughter. We cannot help expressing our infinite thankfulness that the easy-going, comfortable conventionalities of the time have not prevented Mrs. and Miss Cole from laying their rich gifts of sweet song at the Master's feet. He has given them ample and enviable reward, and we would that many more of our mothers and sisters on whom this precious and powerful talent has been lavishly bestowed had sufficient constraining zeal to make them employ their leisure hours in singing for Jesus. The experience of the past two years has proved that there is no bait more successful in bringing sinners into the Gospel net than that of sweet and sacred song.

A few details of some of Major Cole's services will be interesting and cheering to our readers. On Saturday, the 31st ult., he held a meeting at noon in one of the chapels close by the docks for the labourers there, and we have the most gratifying assurance that every unconverted person in this considerable gathering of these sons of toil openly confessed their desire and determination to take Christ as their Saviour. At the evening meeting in the Circus the Major's theme was the sublime story of the Cross, pictured by the uplifted serpent in the wilderness. The effect produced was intensified by the singing of the appropriate hymn "Look and live," as a trio. Many expressed their willingness to follow this invitation so sweetly offered, and the week closed with a time of real and earnest ingathering of souls.

On Sunday week an afternoon service took place in the Circus, attended chiefly by carters and their wives, when Major Cole had the opportunity of confirming the faith of many he had met at the docks the day before. The meeting of Sunday evening was signalized by a circumstance so remarkable that it deserves a somewhat detailed recital. Major Cole had spoken of the Prodigal Son, his picture of whom is about as realistic and striking as Mr. Moody's never-to-be-forgotten story of the Crucifixion. Then he, with Mrs. and Miss Cole, sang that most tenderly touching invitation to "Come home," that used to send a thrill through our whole frame when sung by Mr. Sankey at the close of some of Mr. Moody's searching addresses. Then arose a man, whose story, as told by himself, was a real and actual translation of the Major's address. The narrative produced an effect on the audience which cannot be conveyed by means of printer's ink; we can give but a bare outline of it, as a testimony to God's sovereign and wonder-working grace, though it will suffer much in the telling. He had been a prodigal son, he said, and every word almost of Major Cole's description was true of him. When quite young, he gathered together all he could, left his wealthy father, and ran away to America, where he plunged into all manner of sin. When the Civil War broke out, he enlisted, went through the war, and nearly lost his life. One day he went into a prayer-meeting in New York, where some one spoke kindly to him, and prayed with him. He was enabled to arise and return to his heavenly Father, like the prodigal in the parable, and now he was on his way back to his earthly father. This father had paid lots of men to seek him out in America, but the first communication from home that had reached him for twenty-four years, was a letter from his sister, inviting him home; that he received before leaving America. He had only been landed in Liverpool seven hours when he attended the meeting in the Circus, and Major Cole's address had come home to him so much, that he could not help telling his story. As may well be supposed, this eventful history, coming after the graphic address of the speaker, and the loving invitation so sweetly sung, had a great effect on the audience that crowded every corner of the Circus, and the meeting showed more substantial results than any that had gone before.

On the following evening (Monday), Major Cole gave a Bible-reading on "Christ the Rock," and, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Cole, sang the grand old hymn, "Rock of Ages," to a new and beautiful melody written by the wife of the well-known American singer and composer, Mr. P. P. Bliss. About fifty rose for prayer at the close of the first meeting; and a second meeting elicited some very striking testimony. Among those who spoke was a sailor, who said he was once the vilest of wretches, but Christ had forgiven him his sins. He was now on the Spain, the steamer by which Messrs. Moody and Sankey were going to sail to America, and he stated his belief that all on the vessel would be converted, in answer to the many prayers that had gone up on high. He said there was no back-door on board ship by which one could escape; he must either be out-and-out for Christ or for the devil. The value of the testimony-meetings can scarcely be realized. They give an opportunity to the young converts of confessing Christ before others, and by thus hearing their own voices they are able to shake off the timidity which often prevents young Christians from engaging in any service for the Saviour.

Major Cole will continue to hold services in the Circus for some time longer, and we bespeak the believing prayers of our readers that his earnest labours and those of his wife and daughter may be a source of spiritual blessing to many.

MR. MÜLLER'S ORPHAN HOUSES.

We are glad to be able to state, from a communication direct from the New Orphan Houses, that the outbreak of typhoid fever with which they have been visited is apparently on the decline. The cases have been severe, and as many as 500 attacked; out of this number only twelve have died. The statement published in some of the London papers, as to the non-use of preventive and remedial measures, is altogether false. All that the medical chief, Dr. Eubulus Williams, judged desirable in the way of disinfectants and isolation has been carried out with scrupulous care from the first, and the patients visited twice, and even three times a day. The majority are convalescent, and "for some days past," a local paper says, "they have had no fresh cases." Thus we may trust that this heavy affliction will soon be one of those in the past, of which Mr. Müller is so able to say—"The Lord delivered me out of them all." We are sure that our readers will continue to plead with God on behalf of the institution; and for all-needed faith and patience for its directors during this time of added responsibility and anxiety.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.—The official report will shortly be published, and will contain verbatim reports of the addresses. Intending purchasers should order it at once, as the number issued is limited to the number ordered. (See adv.)

ASSAM AND CACHAR MISSION.—It is not perhaps generally known that in these two provinces there are some hundreds of our countrymen scattered abroad in groups of two or three, engaged in tea-cultivation. The gardens are too far removed from stations where chaplains are located to permit of their benefiting by their ministrations; and cases have been reported to this Society where individuals have been for several years without seeing a minister of the Gospel. Many parents whose sons are thus situated have appealed to us, expressing their deepest anxiety, and entreating us, if possible, to meet this case of spiritual destitution. Cut off from all the means of grace, and breathing the pestilential atmosphere of heathen influences, and that not only for months, but for years, no one surely will deny that there exists a loud call for this attempt to send "the water of life" to those young men who are spending their best days "in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is."

INCIDENTS IN THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

As one of the workers in the inquiry-room at Camberwell during the time of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent visit to the South of London, I met with some incidents of go interesting a character that they may be acceptable to your readers, and form another quota to the increasing testimony of the fruitfulness of the labours of our beloved brethren.

At the close of one of the afternoon Bible-readings I took up a position at the door of the inquiry-room, when, shortly, a little girl of some nine years of age, looking in at the door, asked me whether she might go in. I asked her if she was in search of any friends.

Her reply was—"I want to love Jesus."

I told her Jesus already loved her, and, taking her by the hand, I led her to a chair, and asked her what inclined her to seek Jesus?

She looked up, and said—"I like to sing the hymn 'Jesus loves me,' but every time I sing it I think that Jesus cannot love me because I know I am a very naughty girl." With tears in her eyes, and with an earnestness that drew out all my sympathy, she, after a pause, continued, "A little girl I know was converted here last week, and she is so happy, and I want to be converted."

We sat, read portions of God's Word, and prayed together, and, as we knelt, she turned to me, her face lit up with the sweet smile of experienced happiness, and said, "Jesus is my Saviour now." I gave her a little book, told her to speak to Jesus in prayer, promised to remember her at the throne of grace, and we parted, but not without my obtaining her address. I have seen her since, rejoicing in and telling others of the love of Jesus.

One afternoon I met with a man whom I had known as a frequenter of a Mission Hall in the neighbourhood; one who was only led to attend this meeting as a means of passing away the time, having met with an accident resulting in the loss of two of his fingers, which made him unable to work. I felt this was the time to get to close quarters with him. I asked the Master to give me the word suitable for the occasion; and then, fortified by this preparation, I led him into conversation. He had not been able to hear much of Mr. Moody's address, consequent on the distance he sat from the platform, and he being hard of hearing. I induced him to enter the inquiry-room, and as we sat down a minister of the Gospel sat down with us. We spoke to him of sin, its consequences, and yet how those consequences may be removed by the work of Christ. But he said, "I have always lived a good life; I say my prayers, and I know what is right." We showed how that his best works were only as filthy rags in the eyes of a perfectly holy God. But yet he stood upon his self-righteousness, and we parted with no visible result. I lost sight of him, as he ceased attending the Mission Hall where I had met with him. I continued in prayer that that man should see his position as a condemned Pharisee, and be able to put on the righteousness of Christ. Passing through the street I met him, and as we came up to each other, I felt that he had a tale to unfold. He told me how that he had been led to think of the words spoken in the inquiry-room; that he felt he was a sinner before God, but he could not trust Christ for his Saviour. I talked with him for some time, and left him with the hope that he is now earnestly seeking that Saviour, the only righteous One.

I have in my note-book other incidents of an interesting nature, which I may relate in your pages at a future time.

MR. H. VARLEY IN EDINBURGH.—Mr. Henry Varley, of London, has been holding services in the Music Hall in Edinburgh. These have consisted each day of a prayer-meeting at 7 a.m., a Bible reading at 3 p.m., and a Gospel address at 8 p.m. These meetings have been well attended, and yesterday afternoon a very large gathering assembled, while at 6.30 the hall was crowded in every corner, and hundreds turned away unable to gain admittance, so great being the crowd that the outer doors had to be shut. At this meeting a deep impression rested upon the immense audience, and Mr. Varley spoke with great power. An after meeting was held, to which the bulk of the audience remained, and after Mr. Varley's address and earnest appeals very large numbers rose to their feet to testify that they had received blessing, while many rose to state that they were in anxiety. Mr. Varley also addressed the free breakfast meeting in the Forrest-road Hall yesterday morning. Many of these poor people assembled here were melted to tears. He also addressed a crowded meeting in Bristo-place Church in the forenoon. Mr. Varley goes on to-day to Glasgow, where he is to conduct services for some days.—Daily Review, August 2.

EVERY DAY.

EVERY day look unto Jesu's face,
Every day fresh beauty seek to trace,
Waiting to catch the beamings of his grace,
Every day.

Every day from fever and from toll,
Where unbelief and pride for ever moil,
And dirt and dust the pilgrim raiment soil,
Every day.

Every day to pastures fresh and green,
Where peacefully doth flow that tranquil stream,
In which the Shepherd's face is ever seen,
Every day.

Every day from men and books to God,
Thy heart submissive to his loving rod,
Thy feet afresh with pilgrim sandals shod,
Every day.

Every day to silence calm and sweet,
Where peace awaits the lowly heart to greet,
And Patience stoops to bathe the weary feet,
Every day.

Every day from wounds and cries and tears,
The mystery and sorrow of the years,
To his sweet feet whose love faith's vision clears,
Every day.

Every day some act of kindness done,
Some little vict'ry for the Master won,
Some lesson learnt, or word in patience sown,
Every day.

Every day a fresh launch from the shore,
Towards that sweet land faith loveth to explore,
Where parted friends shall meet and part no more,
Every day.

SHELTERING HOME, LIVERPOOL.

ALLOW me to mention that another party of fifty of the waifs and strays of our streets has been gathered in by Mrs. Birt, of the Byrom-street Home, who sails with her little band in the (ss) Hibernian for Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Tuesday next, August 11. If such efforts as Mrs. Birt is engaged upon be needed anywhere, they are surely needed in this degraded, neglected town, where drunkenness so prevails, and where, in consequence, so many helpless children are drifting about.

The Hibernian takes our second party for this year, each of them with its sorrowful little history of misery and want. How cheering to think there are happy homes of plenty awaiting them in Nova Scotia. Thanks to the many Christian ladies here who have helped, each child is provided with its own outfit, and carries with it to its new relatives every article of dress it requires.

The kind and able friend to the Institution, Colonel Lawrie, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, is expending his best efforts to secure the likeliest homes for these children, where their training, begun here, will be continued. Colonel Lawrie's supervision of the whole enterprise is unceasing.

Mrs. Birt proposes to visit every child she has taken out to Nova Scotia before she returns, and she expects to have a very cheering account to bring home. May I ask the prayers of your readers, that Mrs. Birt and her coadjutors may get heavenly guidance and help, and that she and her party may have a safe passage.

ALEXANDER BALFOUR.

BEDFORD.—A new building to accommodate 350 people, called "Bedford Hall," has recently been built in a very populous and hitherto neglected part of the town. It was opened on the 18th ult. by a service, at which Mr. W. Holmes preached to a large congregation, and meetings for Gospel addresses have since been held. Will the Lord's people pray that many souls may be won to Christ by this new effort?

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Since Messrs. Moody and Sankey concluded their London services, crowds have attended the open-air services held on Weston-super-Mare sands by the Rev. W. Bradbury. The children and adult services alternate. After each service an inquiry meeting is announced at the house of the preacher, where many seek the way of life, or "life more abundant." Christian visitors who can sing would do good service by vocal assistance.

BEGGARS IN ROME.

SOME time ago I wrote through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN asking the prayers of Christians in England, in behalf of the Roman beggars: will you allow me now to give a short account of the last meetings—the heat obliging us to discontinue them for a few months; our friends will then see that their prayers have already in some measure been answered.

The first closing meeting was that of the women. The rooms were so closely packed we could not admit all who came. Knowing as I did it would be the last, we gave more time than usual to the texts of Scripture learnt, trying to explain them in the most simple way, and also endeavouring to find out those who really knew them. We found very few unable to repeat the following text: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

At the close of Mr. Wall's address, he told them it was impossible to continue these meetings longer on account of the great heat. The poor women, many of whom were in tears, would hardly leave us, and begged us to tell them when they could return.

A few days after this, walking with a friend some distance from home, a poor blind woman, led by another, came up to us asking alms. We did not know her, but when she heard my voice she burst into tears, and taking my hand began repeating the verse she had learnt, "This is a faithful saying," &c. She said, "I shall never forget coming to the meetings; when can we come again?"

One who for some time attended with us is now servant in a family, and doing well; she is anxious to be a Christian. Another who had suffered very much with rheumatism comes every Monday to our "Mother's Meeting" and she, too, is desirous of finding a place of service. We hope she is a believer in Jesus.

On Friday the "Men's Meeting" was held. After singing that beautiful hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," which they like exceedingly, and prayer, Mr. Wall spoke, and asked those who felt they had received blessing since they had attended these services, to tell what Christ had done for them.

The first who rose was a very old man: he said, "Since I came to these meetings, the Lord has provided for my daily wants and given me friends." The second was a man of fifty, who had been a sacristano for the priests, that is, he had served at the mass, swept the church, rung the bells, &c.; he said, "Since I came here, peace has entered my heart and a change has taken place. Before I used to blaspheme, now I never do. I am convinced of the truth of the Gospel. When I was in the Roman Catholic Church and saw the immoral life of the priests, and was told that to be saved I must go to them, I fell into disbelief of all religion, and felt despair in my soul." Another aged man said, "Since I came here, I have felt happy and secure in the love of Christ."

A very interesting case is that of a young man, who, two or three weeks previously, had, at a similar meeting, testified before all that he had found Christ, and was not ashamed to confess Him. He said he was a short time before in a dreadful state of despondency, without work, food, home, friends, and had no means of doing anything to better his condition. He was so exasperated that he cursed and swore, and taking the little picture of Jesus on the cross from his bosom, threw it down and stamped on it, feeling such a hatred to One who could be so unjust, as he thought, to allow the rich so much and give the poor nothing. In this state hungry, wretched, and hoping to get a piece of bread, he came to the meeting. The first thing he heard were these words:—

"Una voce qui nel cuore,
A me parla con amore," &c.

They touched his heart, repeating them with the others. He learnt the first verse of the hymn, and determined to go to the meetings at night to learn more of "this same Jesus." He came, and for some time subsequently hardly ever was the door open, but this man came among the first. He has since then found work and comes when at liberty.

The testimony of another was as follows:—"When I was a boy at school, a companion gave me a Bible, but being seen by the master reading it, he snatched it angrily from me. He at once ordered all to their seats, and calling me to the desk, asked me who had given me the book? I said, I found it in the road. He would not believe me, and tried with threats and deception, to make me confess, but I would not; at last he put me at the bottom of the school-room, prohibiting any one to speak to me. The next day he tried again, but to no purpose. He then ordered me to go to confess to a certain priest that he knew. I feared to tell the truth, and determined to remain silent, to prevent bringing my friend into trouble. After this, I was obliged, for a punishment, to remain fifteen days on my knees during the hours of school. This leniency towards me was out of respect to my parents; my penance would have been otherwise much more severe, as I should have been taken before the authorities, who at that time were all under priestly dominion. From that time, I hated the priests, who thus tyrannized over the conscience and made lying a necessity. In my heart, although so unworthy, I turned to Christ, asked pardon for my sins, and now I confide in Him."

We find it will be quite impossible to hold the meetings in our own room, as these poor people are in such a very neglected and diseased state, that it is desirable to procure a separate room in which to hold them; therefore, a much larger sum will be required to meet expenses the coming winter; I hope to re-open in October next, provided a suitable room can be found. Will our Christian friends, who have so kindly helped me in the past, assist in providing a place where these poor Roman beggars, otherwise so neglected and little cared for, can learn of the love of Jesus?

I have received for the past winter about £30, most of which was distributed every week in bread. With many thanks for your past kindness.

Yours very sincerely,
EMILY J. WALL.

TIDINGS FROM CHINA.

THE following interesting intelligence from Ho-nan, the first of the nine unoccupied provinces, has just reached us. It will be remembered that Ho-nan has a population of twenty-five and a-half millions, and had no mission before Mr. M. Henry Taylor went there in April. How ready the people are for the Gospel will be seen from the following letter from him, written to Mr. Judd, from one of the large prefectural cities of the province:—

"As there is a possibility of a letter reaching you from this place, I send a line or two to assure you of our welfare. I would have written on arriving here twelve days ago, but it did not strike me that there were persons daily leaving for Han-kow.

"We returned to-day from our visit to all the surrounding county cities. We were well received in each, as well as in the towns and villages through which we passed. I have not seen people anywhere so readily disposed to hear the Gospel; and as for buying books, we might have sold any number, but we had to limit the sale in each place. The Lord has given us encouragement from individuals who came to ask the way to Zion. I could not rest if hindered from visiting these places again.

"I should have gone on to another prefecture, and to the capital, but I have neither enough money nor books to go as far as the latter place; at least I will try and visit the former, and go from thence to a third prefecture when homeward bound. We hope to spend five or six days preaching in this city, dating from to-morrow. You may expect us back about the middle of June. We know you are praying for us. We are enjoying so much of God's smile. We have prayed often for you. Mr. Chang desires to be remembered in love, and asks your prayers.

"I do not know whether this will ever reach you. I give the bearer one hundred cash."—China's Millions for August.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Under the auspices of this Mission much good service for the Master was effected on the Bank Holiday. On Hampstead-heath a band of more than a hundred singers and preachers gathered at the flag-staff at 3 p.m. They soon attracted a large concourse of people around, and the greatest interest was manifested, as Mr. Sankey's melodies were sung and impressive addresses were delivered by Messrs. Kirkham, Whitmore, Woffendale, Harman, Hughes, and others. Two bands were formed after tea, and prominent sites occupied by each for the evening, while the same receptiveness of ear (and we trust also of heart) gladdened these sowers by the wayside, as they spoke and sang of Jesus and his love. On Clapham Common a tent was pitched near the long pond, and preaching commenced at three o'clock, with a full gathering of people, inside and out, to listen to the earnest addresses of Messrs. Rigley, Simmonds, Thomas, Waller, and others. It was ten o'clock before the doxology was sung, but all felt it had been a happy time. Peckham-rye, Blackheath, the Parks, &c., all witnessed some testimony for the truth; and, save a ribald remark or a sneering laugh, nothing occurred to mar the regularity and quietude of the efforts. Results we must leave until "that day."

SINGING THE GOSPEL.

HAVING been recently staying, on account of my health, at a fashionable Italian watering-place, which is much frequented by members of Parliament and of the aristocracy, I deeply felt the great difficulty, as the only Evangelical Christian of the party in the hotel, of introducing the subject of religion and saying a word for Jesus. It struck me most forcibly how much good might be done in such circumstances by those who can "sing the Gospel." Music is always attractive, but especially in hotels and pensions, where people meet who are strangers to each other, and have nothing particular to do. I feel persuaded that the Gospel might be brought to many of the upper classes on the Continent, who would be reached by no other means, if English Christians in going abroad for their summer holiday would sing Mr. Sankey's hymns of an evening in the public salon of the hotel, where there is generally a piano, as an opportunity would thus be opened for speaking of the gospel truths contained in the hymns, and interest might be awakened in some hearts.

That the difficulty of gaining the attention of Italians to religion is very great, is acknowledged even by the daily political papers, as, for instance, only a few weeks ago, the Gazzetta d'Italia of Florence, gave the following terrible picture of the existing religious indifference:—

"The Prime Minister announced in Parliament, almost with triumph, that in Italy the most complete indifference to religion exists. . . . Those who extinguished, those who suffocated religious feeling in the minds of the Italians, were the Jesuits; . . . they took advantage of the ignorance of the masses to uproot every religious feeling, and to replace it with the principle of subjection to the representative of the Church. And thus Italy, from being a nation of Catholics, was converted into a nation of servants to Rome. Italy is now divided between fanatics of every class, and the indifferent—alias atheists. What will be the consequences of this state of things we have not the courage to examine. Let the Prime Minister reflect that while he and the Italians are indifferent, hundreds of bishops, thousands of priests, and hundreds of thousands of men and women belonging to every kind of Roman Catholic association are not indifferent, nor standing idle; but are weaving a perfidious and terrible plot, which God grant may not surprise and involve us all!"

Will not this description move Christians to be instant in prayer for Italy, and for the few scattered workers for Christ in this country, of whom we may truly say: What are they among so many?

Should any Christians going abroad feel able to work for Christ in the way I have suggested, it would be well to take with them a good supply of the hymn-books and of the song leaflets to give away, as many foreigners can read a little English, even when not able to speak it.

"LITTLE CHILDREN OF THE LOST."

DEAR READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN,—The cottage for which you gave me money is not yet built. It cannot be proceeded with, nor can the children's infirmary nor school buildings be completed until sundry operations connected with the drainage and levelling of the ground be done. The great importance of these preparations for carrying out our system of village work is shown daily in our experience. We must not tempt the Lord our God by neglecting any of his sanitary laws. Ours is but a small piece of land, and the needful arrangements for the sewage, &c., require the application of much skilled labour. So far as they have been employed, success has been achieved. If we finish them before the autumn much trouble and cost will be spared. The cause of our delay in so doing is want of money. I have £300 promised towards £1000 that we are raising for this purpose. The whole amount should be in hand this month, in order to set us going efficiently. There are fourteen households at work in the village. Their number cannot be added to, nor can they continue in existence unless we accomplish the parts of the scheme now standing undone.

The organization of the "family system" is not done when "homes" are built and occupied. Residences must be provided for the different functionaries, whose presence on the spot is indispensable. A general superintendent, school mistresses, and, above all, the minister of the Gospel, must have suitable accommodation within our border. The buildings we have in hand will do this. Their completion depends on the response to our appeal. We make it to Him, who is the Giver, through your hands, of all our supply. Besides these material things, I ask you, friends, to pray for me, that I may have special gifts for work to which I am called at this time. During the next few weeks it will be in Germany, where the Lord graciously permits me to see some fruit of his Spirit's work.

I have also a call to help in some work in the United States, and desire to see my way clear to go there. The present hindrance to my doing so is the delay of the village operations. Unsolicited promises of cottages indicate to me that the Lord wills our colony to increase; and applications on behalf of the little helpless babes of mothers suffering the penalty of their crimes, prove that it is to go on and multiply. No doubt can be entertained that all requisites for the work will be given us. We wait on Jehovah Jireh!

At the dying bed of a woman in prison, a few days ago, I was made deeply sensible of the need of immediate action in this service of the Lord. Every day we delay the rescue, Satan tightens his grasp on the souls of the little children of the "lost." Through the agency of their babes many of these are "found." Such preachers of "wondrous love" are waiting for your ministering care.

AT HOME WITH JESUS.—Our dear sister, Mrs. Harrison Ord, fell peacefully asleep in Jesus on Friday, July 30. Mr. John Connor writes us that having been called to Bath in the Master's service, his heart was gladdened by her testimony to the love and faithfulness of her God and Father. He also asks that our beloved friend and brother, Mr. Ord, and his children, may be remembered in our readers' prayers. He is in weak health, and has been obliged to cease from work for the present.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN THE EAST END OF GLASGOW.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a small space in your paper to call attention to special evangelistic work in the east end of Glasgow? This work is undertaken outside the regular ministry. For a considerable time I have felt that, outlying our ordinary work, there is a vast field untouched, producing little else but weeds. I imagine this is felt everywhere by earnest Christian people, but it is peculiarly felt in the east end of Glasgow at this season of the year, when shows and showmen abound. In some quarters nothing is seen but public representations of drunkenness and vice, of almost every conceivable kind and degree. A large theatre stands in the heart of the district. After prayerful consideration, we have engaged it on Sunday evenings for the purpose of bringing under the sound of the Gospel the class of people who never attend any place of worship. Large numbers "press to hear the word." The service is conducted at seven o'clock, so as not to interfere with the ordinary congregations at the churches. Outdoor meetings are held through the district an hour before we assemble inside. At the appointed time we gather together; all enter heartily into the service. The blessed truths proclaimed, and the sweet hymns sung by an earnest choir, seem to captivate and charm the people. Men and women come to spend an hour, and, in several cases, go away anxious about their eternal welfare. At the close of the service we hold an inquiry meeting, and the looks of some who remain to be spoken with tell how the words have touched the secret springs of their life. Some of them told us they had not attended a religious service for years. The good done at these and similar meetings cannot be estimated. What is the lesson for the Church to learn? Surely it is that her regular work is but part of God's great plan; and, though some good people may have little sympathy with this kind of effort, there are many friends who, having received the blessing, will pray for us, and be glad to have the opportunity of assisting with their alms in this needful work. May we do as Nehemiah of old did, "eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared."

Yours faithfully, ALEX. CHAIR.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

THE growing interest in medical mission work was evidenced by the attendance at a gathering of friends of the cause at the late Mildmay Conference. Dr. Saunders, of the London Medical Mission, dwelt especially in his opening remarks on the ready access a medical missionary has to classes from which the clergyman and other evangelistic labourers are ordinarily excluded—to the careless and hardened of our own back streets, to the high-caste heathen abroad, to the priest-ridden Roman Catholics,—and adduced telling illustrative incidents from his own experience. He spoke of an urgent call for medical missionaries from Birmingham, Liverpool, Paris, Madrid, and Eastern Africa, and touched on the various agencies which a fully-developed medical mission includes,—not only professional and heart-to-heart work in the consulting-room, and in the homes of the sick, but Sunday and week day Bible and prayer-meetings, Sunday and night schools, and singing and sewing classes.

Mr. Meacham, Superintendent of the Medical Mission, Redbank, Manchester, spoke of the way in which a medical missionary is able to go down into deeper depths of sin and misery than another man can, his professional knowledge giving him a key often to the spiritual state of his patient, and putting him into a better position, therefore, than another, first to win confidence and awaken conviction, and then to lead the burdened soul to the foot of the cross.

Rev. J. Lowe, Superintendent of the Medical Mission Training Institute, Edinburgh, mentioned that which is the best argument for and strength of medical mission work—the example and command of our Lord Himself; and gave very interesting details of the labours and successes of those who, in Travancore, have followed the footsteps of the Great Physician. When in India himself, he would see as many as 200 at a time in the verandah of his bungalow, waiting for advice for themselves and their friends; blind and lame were there, children in their parents' arms, sick people in their coats. In the waiting room of the Mission Medical Dispensary, caste—the great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel in India—is broken down; there the Brahman, Sudra, and Pariah, the worshipper of Brahma, Siva, and Vishnu, the Protestant and the Roman Catholic, all stand together, side by side, listening to the sweet story of the Saviour. A wonderful sight in that land! So greatly was Mr. Lowe's predecessor, Dr. Leitch, beloved, that when he was accidentally drowned, his body was sought by the natives with a view to its being embalmed and worshipped. Happily it was not found; and, more happily still, hundreds of the heathen around Travancore have been called by the teaching of the medical missionaries from the darkness of superstition into the light and liberty of God's dear Son.

In Edinburgh fifty young men have been trained for medical mission work, and have been sent out by our various missionary societies. Applications for medical missionaries are multiplying; and it is proposed that a Livingstone Medical Mission Memorial should be erected in Edinburgh, in the form of a training institute, which shall be large enough to meet the growing need for men, and where ladies too shall be trained for medical and nursing work in the Zenanas abroad.

Dr. Hewan, formerly medical missionary in Old Calabar, said, "If I were required to choose my course of life over again, I certainly should choose a life in connection with medical mission work; and if any young man were to ask me what he should choose, I would say, 'First be a Christian, and then devote the first years of your life to medical missionary work.'" Dr. Hewan spoke of the importance of a medical missionary devoting himself wholly to his work, since the all-absorbing interests of private practice must necessarily prevent regular and sustained work in the mission-field.

Mr. Arthur Jones, of Guy's Hospital, Secretary of the Medical Students' Prayer Union, gave a brief account of work among the medical students of London, which was begun many years ago by Dr. Gladstone and others, and was revived lately in connection with the various hospitals; and offered to communicate with students, or friends of students, who may desire information as to the Union. Mr. Jones spoke of the large, well-conducted Medical Students' Prayer Union in Edinburgh, and of the need of prayer for Paris, where a similar union is struggling into existence.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Dr. Saunders.—Times of Blessing.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

STAYING a few days in the country last week, I was urged to stay over the Sunday; but as I felt there was not much prospect of service, I resolved to return home. The Lord's hand is in the comparatively little things as well as in the great. He was with me that Sunday. He seemed to be telling me all the day that, by his grace, I had been enabled to decide the right way.

I went into a fever hospital where no one else has visited for years (excepting a Catholic priest). I spent an hour with two young men, who both evidently found peace in believing. Two deathless spirits ushered into the new creation! The whole course, we may say, of two eternities reversed.

The first one that I spoke to, when he got the light, immediately became my helper in leading the one in the bed beside him to Christ. He began adding his word most seasonably to mine. He seemed to know, as well as I could, when I had told him enough of his state and danger; and just at the same time that I felt it was time to present Christ, he said, "Tell him of Jesus."

A little incident this in the world's eye; but when we look onward through the haze its littleness is gone. Oh! how we do allow the finite power of the senses to cramp the feelings of the mind! The Lord gave me the opportunity to sow much more seed than that on that day, and I have good reason to believe that that was not all the fruit he permitted me to gather. It is the best to be weak, and to act upon the knowledge of our weakness.

Oh! how the Lord has been blessing this land: surely our present duty is to keep it.

It seems as if prayer had spread its breath all over our land, and the Spirit of God, like another atmosphere, hovered over us all!

May the Word of God on the ministers' lips be like the breath of the Lord, going forth to kill and to make alive. Surely we can hear the rattle and speed of passing time as the world can't! It is rapping in its speed at every Christian's door, telling him to hasten his work.

Sometimes we are tempted to look on at the destruction and the havoc in despair, but amidst the darkness around there are gleams of heavenly light, and amidst the confusion there is a connecting thread to be found that has never been broken; an evidence that the "Lord reigns." When we look at the power of enemies, may we ever remember also the years of the right hand of the Most High. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LITERATURE. By JAMES COMPER GRAY. Bible Stock.—We have before us nine fourpenny volumes, on every branch of Sunday-school work. All are remembered who put their hand to this plough—superintendents, secretaries, teachers, scholars, infants, outside agents, &c.; and for each and all there is such appropriate and helpful counsel, that the books should form part of the libraries of all engaged in Sunday-school labour. The importance of the field cannot be over-estimated, so that we rejoice in such aids as these, and hope they may be extensively known and used.

STILLNESS AND SERVICE. By the Author of "Chimes of Consecration." Soleys.—We cannot better commend this little book (which contains half a dozen papers in prose and poetry) than by quoting the following beautiful verse from the preface:—

"'Laid aside by illness,' thus we say on earth;
'Set apart for stillness,' thus they sing in heaven;
Here they speak of suffering, pain, and vanish'd mirth,
There of God's promotions to his chosen given."

We hope to make further drafts on this small but pregnant volume, and warmly bid it good speed on its mission of consolation.

HARRY HOLMES: A TRUE STORY OF A SAILOR BOY. Partridge.—A faithful and touching record of a boy's trippings and stumblings, after his feet were set in the heavenward road; very much calculated to strengthen the faith of those labouring for boy's souls, as well as to encourage the young believer; but, especially, it exalts the long-suffering and patience of Him who "knows all, yet loves us better than He knows."

A POPULAR COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. By D. D. WHERDON, D.D. Hodder and Stoughton.—We have already noticed the earlier volumes of this useful work. The present one contains the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles to the Romans. The notes and comments, though not lengthy or elaborate, are helpful and suggestive, and the explanations are more than merely verbal. The good type and paper, with occasional diagrams and illustrations, make it a most useful and acceptable book, worthy of a wide circulation among Bible-lovers.

THE NEW YORK LETTER, ENTITLED, "HAPPINESS AND PROSPERITY, INDIVIDUAL AND NATIONAL, IN CONNECTION WITH THE WORD OF GOD." Sampson Low and Co. 1d.—A pamphlet specially intended for Roman Catholics, abundantly proving from the Bible itself (Douay version) and from the writings of early Fathers, later Saints, Popes, Councils, and other Church authorities, that the Scriptures are to be read by the people, and that "it is man's bounden duty, as it is his highest interest, to honour and prayerfully search the Word of God." Mr. T. B. Smithies says, "Dr. McCarthy writes me, 'One of the best things ever printed for Ireland.'" And another friend in Dublin writes, "It is seldom you meet a publication so well suited to the Roman Catholic mind. It should be circulated far and wide."

ANOTHER AMERICAN EVANGELIST.—Mr. Coe, of Newark City, who has laboured with Mr. Hammond in America, has lately arrived in England, and held very successful meetings at the Reformatory Schools and Homes for Fallen Women, &c., in Liverpool. The effect of his labours is described as being truly wonderful. He will be in London in a few days, and would be glad of an opportunity of addressing similar institutions here. His address will be either at the Cathedral Hotel, St. Paul's, or Queen's Hotel, opposite the Post Office.

THE LORD'S WORK IN BASINGSTOKE.—From an account sent to us of successful services held here by Mr. Somerset Gardiner, we give the following:—"On Tuesday last a most interesting meeting was held for young men only, when many rose and gave their testimony. It is now intended to carry on a meeting of this sort weekly, and also one of the same character for young women only. On Thursday afternoon our brother and some friends visited the workhouse, and spoke a few words of the love of Christ in most of the wards, and gave short addresses to the aged men and children; and in the evening the meetings were brought to a close by a united communion service in the London-street Church, conducted by the Rev. W. Hines, several other ministers being present. We are thankful to say that the people of God of every name have taken a deep interest in the work, and therefore ask all those who have had Basingstoke on their hearts to praise the Lord for what He has done, and to pray that He will continue to bless and prosper us. We raise our Ebenezer, and trustfully look forward to 'more to follow.'"

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRaise.—For the partial recovery and amendment in the mental health of a young man now in a lunatic asylum who was prayed for in THE CHRISTIAN.—That I am now converted.—For blessings received at the children's meetings in Appleford Rooms, Kenal New Town.—For the conversion of my sister, lately prayed for in THE CHRISTIAN.

PRayer.—For myself, that I may be fully persuaded of the truth of the Bible, and may be enabled to surrender myself entirely to God.—A servant of the Lord Jesus, whose way seems to be opening up to go into the mission-field abroad, earnestly requests prayer that he may be guided by the Lord in this matter.—For my Sunday-school class, that they may all be saved.—For a Christian brother that he may overcome a besetting sin.—For a Christian lady suffering from mental derangement that she may be healed and restored to her family.—For a young man, the son of godly parents, who has lately caused much trouble to his friends.—For a devoted clergyman entering upon an arduous sphere of labour, that he may be filled with the spirit of power, and that his bodily strength may increase.—For a child of God suffering from mental derangement of a most distressing character that God may be with him in the darkness.—For a working man, recently converted, that he may be recovered from very serious illness, and spared for much usefulness in the class to which he belongs, and with whom he has great influence.—For a young lady who would gladly devote herself entirely to the Lord's work, that a door may be opened to her, and the way made very plain.—For a labourer in the vineyard that, if it be the Master's will, his voice may be speedily restored, so that he may resume work.—A Christian minister that he may be guided as to, and fully prepared for, his future duties.

PLACES.—For the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the town of Ilminster.—For Glasgow that special services, conducted by Henry Varley, may be owed of God to the conversion of many sinners.—For the awakening of souls in a dead country parish in the county of Surrey, and for a blessing upon ministerial efforts there.—For an outpouring of the Spirit on the village of Serren, in Cornwall.—That the Gospel-seed sown in the parish of Annaduff, Ireland, during the last week may bring forth fruit an hundredfold.—For Bromsgrove that the Church of Christ may be quickened and purified.—For a week's special services at New Tupton, Derbyshire, commencing August 15.—For the outer Hebrides, that the various and widely scattered stations there connected with the West Coast Mission, in some of which a good work has been already begun, may receive yet more abundant blessing.—For Banbury and Heyford in Oxfordshire, and for Chipping-Campden and Mitcheldean in Gloucestershire.—For much blessing on the International Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s to be held at Hamburg from the 14th to the 18th inst., especially that it may be the means of stirring up religious life in Germany.

CONVERSIONS.—For a young man who is destroying himself by a life of sin. Many are praying for his conversion.—For my husband and children—Two aged poor children of God ask for their son-in-law, a drunkard, who is a great trouble to his wife and to them.—For my dear father, mother, and brother.—For a gentleman of wealth and wide-spread influence in a country place, that he may be turned to the Lord.—For a brother, and his six grown-up sons and four daughters.—For a boy who seems possessed with a spirit of dishonesty and deception, the son of a Christian father.—For a very reckless son, that he may be delivered from the power of the enemy.—For a brother living an extravagant life.—For a French gentleman, convinced of the errors of the Romish Church, but a freethinker.—For a father, who is completely enslaved by selfishness and idleness, that he may be speedily converted.—For a family of seven, long prayed for but apparently hopeless.—For the father of a family.

THE WORK AT WOOLWICH.—The meetings last week at St. Andrew's Church addressed by Nqd Wright have been even more numerously attended than those in the previous week. They had become better known; many of the converts had become workers, and brought others; the evangelist, too, was no stranger to the town, having been here both in evil report and good report. The early morning prayer-meetings were attended by ministers and other workers from all the churches. The afternoon gathering was equally successful; while the evening addresses were listened to with breathless interest by hundreds of the class whom these services are chiefly designed to benefit. A large proportion of the evening audiences were men, chiefly working-men; many of them with their families. There was also a perceptible increase in the "after meetings," where many professed to have found salvation in Christ. Dr. Edmond comes to address the recent converts on Monday; and the rest of the week will be given to children's services. Will Christians remember Woolwich in prayer?

THE WILTSHIRE VILLAGES.—The paragraph with reference to this in our last number should have stated that the worker referred to was Mr. Richards, not Mr. Snell, whose signature appears at the end. This latter gentleman simply forwarded the account to us.

The Farewell Hymn.

Sung by Mr. SANKEY before leaving England.

1. Fare-well, faith-ful friends, we must now bid a-dieu To those joys and stay; Cleave close . . . to your Sa - viour let Him lead the way.

CHORUS. After last verse only.
Home ! home ! sweet, sweet home ! Prepare us, dear Saviour, for yon - der blest home.

3. You've help all-sufficient ; on Jesus depend ;
Let not this revival with this meeting end ;
Let each ask the other, why should the work cease
Till all these poor sinners have yielded in peace ?
4. Farewell, dear young converts, we leave you likewise,
And hope we shall meet you with Christ in the skies ;
Oh, who will turn back, and his Saviour deny ?—
Like Judas, the traitor, betray Him and die ?
5. Farewell, trembling sinner, sad time now with you,
Our hearts sink within us to bid you adieu ;
One step back or forward may settle your doom,
'Mid the glories of heaven, or eternity's gloom.
6. Farewell, every hearer : we now turn away,
No more shall we meet till the great judgment-day ;
Though absent in body, we're with you in prayer,
And we'll meet you in heaven—there is no parting there.

"MORE TO FOLLOW."—It is certainly our duty to tell what the Lord has done for us here. Last winter many precious souls were led to the Saviour in this place ; and about four months ago the work was commenced with increased energy. The Lord has indeed been with us, confirming the word with signs following. Large numbers have been translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. In some cases, whole households have been blessed. The dear children of God have been much refreshed. Some of those who have been foremost in the service of Satan are now bearing the standard of Jesus to the front. On the last two Sundays, special services were held : that on Sunday week in the parish church, where upwards of 500 were present ; a large number remained for the after meeting, and many left rejoicing in Christ Jesus. On Sunday last, the meeting was in the open air ; about 800 were present. The parochial school was opened for an after meeting. About 250 availed themselves of the opportunity, and a large number were enabled to trust Christ as a present Saviour. We are looking forward to still greater things, relying on our precious Saviour's own promise: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." Asking the prayers of your readers on our behalf, I am, yours faithfully in Christ,
F. W. KING, Rector and Vicar of Fintona.

FRENCH PROTESTANT CHURCH IN LOWER CANADA.

—The Rev. Mr. Langel, formerly a missionary of the Basel Society in India, has been sent to plead the cause of the Gospel in Canada among us. A sympathetic meeting was held a few days ago at the National Club, Whitehall (the Earl of Cavan in the chair), and a committee formed to raise a sum for building a church and schools at Quebec (the site is already bought), and to form the basis of a sustentation fund for the pastors. This Church is based on the confession of faith of the French Evangelical Churches. She is Protestant, Huguenot, Evangelical, and essentially missionary. She is also exclusively French Canadian. Strong as the claims of every mission is upon every one who knows the preciousness of the Gospel, yet a union like this to our own follow-subjects unites the claims of home and heathen missions in one. The people sit in darkness as much as if they were in Africa, yet the contest between light and darkness is on our own soil. Our own kindred, the future of many of our sons and brothers, depends upon its issue. If the Gospel does not gain the upper hand, Popery will do so. It therefore behoves us all to lend a helping hand to an effort which concerns alike the welfare of the empire and the salvation of souls. Mr. Langel's present address is 7, Burton-street, Chester-square, S.W. (See Advt.)

The Christian.

"NO MORE CONSCIENCE OF SINS."

It was lately urged in these pages that where controversy is called for amongst Christians, it should be conducted in a Christian spirit; and that where faithfulness to the truth compels one to protest against error in a brother, it should be done in accordance with the tenor of the words "forbearing one another in love."

A melancholy instance of the need of such counsel has lately presented itself in the publication of a little tract, entitled, "Reply to Dr. Bonar's book, 'The Rent Veil,' by J. N. Darby." Those who are familiar with Mr. Darby's writings could hardly expect much forbearance or love in his dealing with those who differ from him, but we own we were not prepared for such an opening sentence as this:—

"If it were only Dr. Bonar returning to his vile and miserable thought of Christ being banished, or the persevering insolence of mind with which he changes Scripture to suit his own purpose, I should take no notice of his book 'The Rent Veil.' Christ has directed us what to do with the blind leaders of the blind—to let them alone."

Now, without imitating Mr. Darby's unseemly language, let us remark that the very evil he attributes to Dr. Bonar—that of changing Scripture to suit his own purpose—is that into which he has himself fallen. Scripture presents to us our blessed Lord speaking of self-righteous, unbelieving Pharisees—his unceasing enemies—as "blind leaders of the blind." Mr. Darby, "to suit his own purpose," applies this language to an aged minister of Christ, who has spent a long and consistent life in His service, and who by his public ministry, no less than by his gospel writings and sweet hymns, has won a character in the Church of God which Mr. Darby's invectives are not likely to sully. Such an ebullition of temper (for it really comes to this) recoils upon itself, and only brings discredit upon him who indulges it. "The fruit of the Spirit," we read in Gal. v. 22, "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance"; and just before we find amongst the works of the flesh "hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife." There can be but little doubt as to which category language such as this belongs; and let the gifts of the writer be what they may—and we are not disposed to underrate them—such a spirit is surely not of God.

But we turn from this painful subject to a point of real interest in this discussion, and one in which we shall welcome truth, whether it be from the pen of Mr. Darby or of Dr. Bonar. The main question at issue is this: Is the continual application of the blood of Christ to the believer's conscience a Scripture truth or is it not? Dr. Bonar affirms it; Mr. Darby denies it. The Epistle to the Hebrews is the portion of Scripture on which they each rest their opposite views. What, then, does it say? Let us hear Mr. Darby:—

"The conscience, in direct contradiction of Dr. Bonar's statement, is always perfect. For him the blood-shedding is in constant requisition. 'There is no day nor hour in which . . . the great blood-shedding is not needed to wash its evil away.' The Epistle is just to show that, in contrast with Judaism, where such repetition went on, it is not the case."

Again—

tion of the great blood-shedding; that it is in constant requisition to cleanse him, being needed to wash evil away, and this in order to the worshippers drawing nigh. I read that the old Jewish sacrifices could not make the comers thereunto perfect. The repetition was a remembrance that sin was there; but if it had made them perfect, the purging and offering would cease, as Christ's sacrifice did, because the worshippers, once purged, would have no more conscience of sins. Does this look like admitting a perpetual cleansing with blood?—once purged have no more conscience of sins."

Mr. Darby evidently confounds two things which are different—the repetition of the sacrifice, and the repetition of the application of its results. The text he so relies on—"The worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins"—(which, by the way, is not a description of a Christian's conscience at all, but of what a Jewish conscience would have been under certain hypothetical circumstances) must be fairly interpreted by the context to refer to the worshipper's conscience as to the objective efficacy of the sacrifice, not the subjective condition of his own soul. The Jew could never say as Dr. Bonar sings—

"Done is the work that saves, Once and for ever done;"

and so far had a conscience of sins—that is, a consciousness of the inefficacy of the sacrifices so repeatedly offered to put away his sins. In this sense a Christian—whether Jew or Gentile—has no more conscience of sins, as affecting his standing judicially before God; but let him not on that account neglect to make a conscience of every sin as an offence against loving God and Father, nor let him scruple to say, as David did, and that after he had received the message, "The Lord also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die." "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow."

Mr. Darby's teaching on this point has a tendency—we will not say intentionally, but through misunderstanding the passage on which he so relies—to promote practical antinomianism. A Christian sins. According to Mr. Darby, his conscience may be as clear after sinning as before. According to Dr. Bonar, and most Christian teachers, and (what is of more importance) according to the Word of God, his conscience should not be clear till he has confessed his sin to God and received forgiveness through the cleansing blood. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

But what (it will be said) of Hebrews x. 2, "Once purged, no more conscience of sins"? We reply that throughout the whole exercise of conscience before God which we have described—sense of sin, confession, forgiveness—there may be, and should be, "no more conscience of sins," as involving judicial penalties, as hereafter to rise up against the believer in judgment, and as calling for a fresh sacrifice; and this is plainly the sense of Hebrews x. 2; but to confound this objective sense of "no more conscience of sins" with the subjective state of a believer's heart (as Mr. Darby does), is likely to produce consciences lacking in sensitiveness to sin and unexercised before God.

To make this distinction as clear as possible, let us look at Psalm xxxii. Where can there be found a more striking picture of the "no more conscience of sins" than that contained in the opening verses, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered; blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity"? And this, be it remembered, is the very passage used by the Spirit of God in

Rom. iv. 6, to teach us the privilege of every believer in Jesus in virtue of righteousness having been imputed to him also.

But notwithstanding this, how equally clear is the teaching of the rest of the Psalm as to a believer's exercise of conscience before God, in relation to sin subsequently committed. "I acknowledged my sin unto Thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid: I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." And with this exactly agrees the teaching of 1 John i. 7-9, where, after describing the cleansing efficacy of the blood, there follows the exercise of a believer's conscience before God, and that, in order to forgiveness, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," &c.

What, then, does Mr. Darby make of 1 John i. 7, 8? In this tract he says very little about it, but in another, entitled "Cleansing by Water," he labours hard to prove that it does not mean what it is commonly supposed to teach. His words are—

"But it is alleged that 'cleanseth' is 'going on cleansing'; it is not 'has cleansed' or 'will.' If people will take a continuous present, for which there is no ground, it must be continuous, not repeated, as I am writing. But this has no sense. Particular failure, as I have said, is in chap. ii. 1, where we have no application of blood, but the contrary. It is perpetual righteousness in Christ, and propitiation which was once for all. But a continuous cleansing is absurd and unchristian; it is self-contradictory. Of repeated application of blood Scripture knows nothing. I must be redeemed over and over again, justified over and over again."

In place of the continuous or repeated cleansing with the blood, Mr. Darby would substitute cleansing with water. To quote again from his "Reply to 'The Rent Veil'":—

"Besides this, there is a washing of the feet with water, a kind of cleansing which all who do not see the perfectness of conscience taught in the Hebrews always leave out, not apprehending it. The apprehension of what is taught in Hebrews takes the cleansing out of the domain of righteousness, as to which we are perfect, and places it in that of holiness and communion with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Water is the remedy for that: the Word, that is, in the power of the Spirit, as blood is for expiation and remission."

Here, we think, is the root of Mr. Darby's mistake—for such we must call it—arising from his notion that, in John xiii., the water used by our Lord in washing his disciples' feet means the Word. If water means the Word in Eph. v. 26 (and this is very doubtful), it by no means follows that it has this meaning everywhere; and in John xiii., as well as in the somewhat parallel passage, Numbers xix., the meaning is too plainly conveyed to admit of much doubt. Want of space, however, forbids our going further into the subject now, but next week we shall hope to show that the washing of water spoken of in John xiii., as well as that in Numbers xix., as

* The attentive reader will not fail to observe that Mr. Darby's view obliges him here to change the language of Scripture. He says of the propitiation, "which was once for all"; but it is "He is the propitiation for our sins." The Greek verb is in the present tense, not the past.

(†) All critics admit that we must not, in Eph. v. 26, join "by the Word" to "the washing of water." It depends upon either of the two verbs "sanctify" or "cleanse"; if the latter, then the cleansing by the Word points to the first cleansing of the soul—the lesson taught in baptism—rather than to any subsequent cleansing, such as Mr. Darby's view requires. This is generally admitted to be the meaning of "clean by the Word," in John xv. 6. Greatly to be preferred, however, is the construction advocated by Winer, who reads it thus,—"That he might sanctify it (having cleansed it with the washing of water) by the Word."

explained in Hebrews ix., points to a secondary aspect of the blood of Christ in its application to the conscience of the believer after conversion; and moreover, that, while admitting fully the value of all that Mr. Darby says as to the "no more conscience of sins," considered in reference to the efficacy once for all of the never to be repeated Sacrifice, we shall endeavour to show that his view fails to give the Scripture meaning of the washing of water, as the continuous and repeated application of the value of the blood once shed to the believer's conscience.

HOLIDAY WORK FOR JESUS.

MY DEAR SIR,—The members of my family have just returned from one of the happiest holidays they ever spent. Our party consisted of nine persons—myself and wife, five children (three sons and two daughters between the ages of eleven and eighteen, all trusting in Jesus), and a niece and her husband, who both love the Lord. All singers except myself, they had practised some few days beforehand in solo and in choir singing, and we and other friends had prayed much and earnestly for blessing.

T—, my dear native village in Lincolnshire, was our destination. In this charmingly picturesque, well-wooded, but poverty-stricken little village of about 500 or 600 inhabitants, about half a century ago I was born, and in the same village about thirty-six years ago was born again. Two sisters, a brother, and our precious old mother, all trusting in Jesus, met us during some portion of our twelve days' visit. All told, we were really thirteen in number, and though we met at meal-times and family worship, we were dispersed amongst about half-a-dozen cottages for the night.

Besides the parish church, in which a kind and venerable Evangelical clergyman officiates, there are three Nonconformist chapels—Methodist, Free Methodist, and Primitive Methodist—all sparsely attended. When I was a lad the village was a prosperous one of about 900 inhabitants, and only one chapel, which was well attended, and had an earnest church. There is also a sort of neutral and spacious building, called the "D'Eyncourt Schools," built by the late lord of the manor. During our stay we held services in the three chapels and in these schools.

On Tuesday, the day after our arrival, we held a service of song, with Scripture exposition and a brief Gospel address, for about an hour. The congregation was large, and seemed deeply impressed. We had previously distributed about 1000 slips of printed notices of the services proposed to be held, and had taken the village by house-row after our arrival, in distributing Gospel pictures, tracts, and CHRISTIANS. It would have delighted you to have seen how eagerly they were taken, and how much they were valued. On Friday we had another service of song, Scripture exposition, and a short Gospel address. We had a crowded audience. Believers seemed revived and united, and some unconverted ones seemed much moved as my youngest boy sang, "Prodigal child, come home."

[Here follows an interesting sketch of the numerous engagements of the succeeding five days, somewhat similar to the foregoing; we regret that want of space obliges us to omit it.]

On Friday, our last day, we met a few dear friends at tea at "Castle Farm." Tea was set out in the new granary, beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers. After tea we had a most happy Bible-reading and conversation on the Lord's second advent. Besides the tracts and CHRISTIANS above referred to, we took down about 100 of Sankey's penny hymn-books, and a few of the shilling copies with music. These we presented to applicants after the services had come to a close. And now we are thankful to record, to the glory of our faithful God and loving Saviour, that the immediate results of his blessing on these holiday services are very cheering, and we are praying and hoping that much more may follow.

In our personal contact with individuals we had good opportunity of following up impressions, and also of ascertaining whether the truth as preached had been understood. One old man about eighty years of age said to me, as I sat with him in his tumble-down cottage, "I don't understand much, and I can't remember much, but I know I'm a sinner, and I remember you said, 'The debt's paid,' and that God does not want payment twice, and that He'll love every poor sinner that trusts in Jesus, and that God can't lie. I remember all this, but nothing more, and I'm just trusting as a poor sinner in Jesus. Won't He save me, think you?" Of course we told the old man, "Trusting in Jesus as a poor sinner, you are already saved."

On our last day I walked over to a neighbouring village, W—, and gave a lot of picture tracts to eager and grateful children just leaving school. An old man driving through the village pulled up and looked on. I got into earnest conversation with him, pointing him directly to Jesus, and urging his immediate acceptance of Christ. The old man exclaimed, "I have talked with parsons and Methodist preachers for many years, but this is the straightest cut to salvation I ever heard. Can it be true?" I urged him to trust now. He said, "I will." The old man drove on a little, and then pulled up again, calling out, "Would you just tell it to me all over again?" And again I told "the old, old story," and the poor old man continued his journey, saying, "I'll trust Him."

Another man I fell in with here, who a few days ago had told me he read his Bible, but that it had no effect on him, and, indeed, he cared little or nothing about religious things, and I had better leave him alone,—seemed now as though the Holy Spirit had been at work with him, and he listened most attentively to the message of salvation. We trust to hear more of these.

A young gentleman, studying for the legal profession, came to have a conversation with me. He told me he was weary of the world and its hollow professions, and wished to live a life of devotedness to the will of God. I set before him God's estimate of the work of Christ on his account.

But the most satisfactory and cheering instance of blessing was probably the case of the husband at the house where we had our head-quarters. Here the wife, already a Christian for some years, was anxious about her husband, and much prayer had been offered on his behalf. After the Sunday it was very clear that he entered with unusual pleasure and joy into all the meetings. On passing through his parlour and taking leave on our last night, we had a touching scene. His wife was present. I remarked to him, "My wife and I cannot help thinking that you have already trusted in Jesus, your face has recently been so unusually bright; is it so?" Tears filled his eyes immediately as he replied, "It is so; I found Jesus while you were preaching on Sunday morning; and have had Jesus in my eye ever since."

I ought to have mentioned a happy little incident that occurred on one of our morning walks. Three of our party were returning from K—, and when within a mile and a half of T— we fell in with a party of field-workers—men and women—taking their midday meal by the roadside. They recognized us, and asked us to sing them one of Sankey's songs. I had just given them some gospel tracts. Our party sang "Hold the fort," and I gave a short gospel address. This helped to increase the pleasure of our morning's walk.

We retired to bed that last night praising our God for His goodness, and on our happy journey home the next day, we were all agreed that this was one of the happiest twelve days' holidays we had ever enjoyed. Should any Christians doubt, let them "go and do likewise," and they will find by experience that holiday work for Jesus refines all earthly joys and gives heavenly joys into the bargain.

Yours in Jesus, JOHN WILKINSON.

MR. MOODY'S FAREWELL ADDRESS AT LIVERPOOL.

THERE are so many things I want to say that I do not know just where to commence. I want to say a few words about the importance of unity amongst God's people. The last prayer Christ offered whilst He was upon earth was that his disciples might be one. I do not know of anything that will promote this unity better than having buildings where all denominations could meet on neutral ground. I believe that the Young Men's Christian Associations of this country have not yet had their right place. I am glad to say, however, that in some towns they are now beginning to take their place. I believe that if I come back to Liverpool a year hence I shall then find that the Young Men's Christian Association is one of the most important institutions in this town. I believe that the hall which the Liverpool Young Men's Christian Association is erecting will be one in which all denominations can meet and work for the Lord. Wherever there is union there is power. When we have gone into a town where we got ten ministers to unite, the meetings have been successful; where twenty have united they have been better; and where forty united, better still. I believe about the best four weeks I have spent in the Lord's work was in Liverpool, and it was because there were so many ministers united in this movement. All through our meetings in this town the ministers stood right by us, and the result was that the work went on successfully. I do not think it would take many years to revolutionize Liverpool if God's people were quite united; and nothing would unite them better than having buildings where all could meet on one common platform. Of course this building will not be kept up for a great many years, but when it is moved away there is the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, where all can meet. And I am not only speaking of Liverpool, but of the United Kingdom. There is not a town with 10,000 inhabitants but needs a building like the one that is being erected here. In this building, you can have

UNION PRAYER-MEETINGS.

A great many people have asked the secret of the success of this movement. If we could look into God's record, I think we would find it has been the noon prayer-meeting. I could not believe that this work was counterfeit when there was so much prayer. Sometimes, when the work has been hard, and it looked dark and discouraging, we have come together to pray, and the very next meeting a great blessing has come in answer to prayer. People have been amazed to think that God could use such weak instruments, but it has been prayer. I believe these union prayer-meetings ought to be kept up, and I hope to live to see the day when there won't be a town but will have a daily prayer-meeting. I mean a good, healthy, thriving meeting; not one where five or six men come and pray it to death, but where we shall have a sort of religious exchange.

We should also have Bible-classes during the week, where Sabbath-school teachers could meet together. And let me say, right here, that you make a great mistake by electing a man for president because he has got some high-sounding name, but who never cares for the association. Give me a good live man of business to be at the head of the movement. A good deal of our work goes for nought; many people seem to be patronizing religion. God abominates that; He wants fellowship or nothing. When we come to God with a single desire for his honour and glory, we are in a position to be blessed.

Some have complained about the expense of this building for these young men. They say it is going to cost £20,000 before it is finished. I find a great many Christian people have spent more than that on their private residences. Why, I think it is a trifling sum with which to put up a good home for the young men of Liverpool. At New York the land and the building cost £100,000; the Association building at Philadelphia cost as much; and the one in Chicago cost £50,000 or £60,000. Liverpool is one of the most important places on the face of the earth, and if the young men of Liverpool are moved by the power of God, they will carry the glad tidings to every corner of the globe.

My friends wanted me to go to Switzerland, but I thought they would be making me work. I thought I would be hid in Wales, so I went to Bala. I thought we should get into the town after dark, about nine o'clock, but there was a young man from Liverpool there, who saw me get off the train. Mr. Moody humorously described the persistent and successful efforts made by this young man to get him to give an address, and gave the incident as an illustration of the kind of workers these associations produced. A good healthy, thriving association, he continued, is worth more than a city missionary society. Instead of having thirty or forty city missionaries, you would have 800 missionaries going forth with the Gospel in their hearts, to take the tidings of grace to a perishing world. That is what Liverpool wants; it would not be long before these walls of Jericho came tumbling down if our young men's associations were what they ought to be. I got a letter the other day from Melbourne, and the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association there is a young man who was converted at the Young Men's Christian Association at Providence, Rhode Island. That would be the result all over Christendom if these associations were supported as they ought to be, and the young men encouraged.

To show you what a hold this work is taking, let me relate a little incident. I was coming out of the office of THE CHRISTIAN, in London, the other day, when a young lad stepped up to me and wanted to know if I was going to preach in South Wales. I said I was not. It was raining very hard, and I turned to go away, when the thought occurred to me that perhaps he was not a Christian. So I said, "My friend, are you a Christian?" The tears began to come down as he answered that he was not. He said he had heard that people were being converted in London; his mother had read it in THE CHRISTIAN. She gave him £2 and sent him up to London to be converted. "My mother," he said, "is not a Christian, but she thought if I was converted I should be able to tell them the way." He got up to London on the Tuesday, and found that the meetings had closed,—the last was on the Monday; and I met him on the Thursday. He had a little bundle in his handkerchief, and had nothing to wipe away his tears. I tried to tell him the way of salvation in the rain, and asked him when he got back to Wales to write to me. A few days ago I got a letter from this Welsh young man of seventeen, saying, "I have not found Christ yet; I am afraid the impression will pass away." I asked him to come down to Liverpool; and I had been praying that God would meet him there. The first one to open the door of my room at the Compton Hotel and come in was this lad. "I have found Christ now," he said. I asked him when. "I found Him last night in the Circus." Thank God for the Young Men's Christian Association of Liverpool; it has a warm place in my heart.

Some friends may say that these young men will be drawn away from the Church. I have said before, but I want to say again to all the young men, if you take my advice you will unite yourselves with some church at once. I have had twenty years' experience, and I have learned that young men or any young converts who do not unite with some church or chapel fall away. If you want to serve God, get in among God's people. The church may be cold, and a good many more things that you do not like, but we shall never have anything on earth just as we would like it. If we had a church that was perfect, we would make an idol of it, and worship it instead of Christ. But the Church has done more for this sin-cursed world than any other institution on the face of the earth. Young convert! identify yourself with the Church of God. Get in among God's people, and go to work there. If the church is cold, carry some fire into it, but do not go to find fault and murmur and complain. There are many people who find fault, but never accomplish anything. If you are happy in the Lord, you will be welcomed, and God may use you to wake up a cold church.

I want now to speak

TO THE YOUNG CONVERTS

from a few texts of Scripture. We have not referred to the Word to-night. The first one is Heb. xii. 2: "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, &c." Not looking unto yourself; to this minister or that. The writer of this Epistle takes up one man after another in the 11th chapter, and in this chapter he says, "Looking unto Jesus." Get your eyes off yourself, and fix them on the Master. Look to Him for guidance, and strength, and direction. It takes the same power to keep as to convert. I believe some Christians have stumbled right here by looking to this man and that man. The question for us to consider is, What would Christ do? He is our example. I once read of a man who got lost in the wilderness. Night came on, and the only way he could get along was to fix his eye on a star that he knew was in the direction he wished to go. It was very dark, and he could not look down; so he kept his eye on the star, and it guided him near his home. This world may appear dark, but let us look to the star of Bethlehem. Would to God I could say something that would burn into the hearts of the young converts, and make them look away from themselves and straight to the Master. If we are in trouble, and do not know whether this or that is the best thing to do, let us ask what Christ would do. That is the way to settle these questions. A good many young converts have written to me during the past few weeks, asking if it is right to do this or that. I cannot carry the consciences of other people, but I do not think it is best to be asking these questions. Take the Word of God, and read there what the Master says. There is no difficulty that anyone can get into but they will find some passage of Scripture to throw light into the darkness. God will guide us with his eye if we will let Him; but we must keep looking to Him and no one else.

Look, also, at the first verse of this chapter, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." There is another truth,—we are running a race. Our watchword this afternoon was "Advance"; if you do not advance you will become cold, and get back into the world again and into darkness. But if you keep your eye on the Master, pressing on and running the race, then you will grow in grace. If you are going to serve God you must advance. You cannot live on your past experience; you must have fresh manna from heaven every day. Dr. Bonar, of Glasgow, some time ago was speaking about growing in grace, and he said those seventy disciples whom Christ sent out were a good deal nearer the Master than the multitude; if not, He would not have sent them out. But the seventy were not so near as the twelve; and the twelve were not so near as the three; and the three were not so near as the one who had his head on the bosom of the loving Master, and heard the beating of his heart. Let us seek to be like the beloved disciple who knew so much of the mind of Christ. We want holiness written on our foreheads. May God make us wholly consecrated to Him, that we may

"GROW IN GRACE."

I often think the Church and the world expect more of young converts than the Master does himself. They expect young converts to be perfect, full-grown Christians at once. When I was first converted I did many things I would not do now, because I have got more light, and understand the Word of God better than at that time. Perhaps a good many who knew me eighteen years ago might say I was not a Christian, because I did things that were not Christ-like; I did not know the mind of Jesus. You want to study your Bible to know what God's will is, to know the mind of Christ; then you will become more and more like Him every day you live. Have you ever read the 5th chapter of Galatians since you were converted? I advise you to do it, especially at the 22nd verse, where it speaks of the fruits of the Spirit—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness," &c. It seems to me every one of the young converts ought to read that chapter every day, and see if they are advancing—growing in grace. You may not be able to see, from day to day, that you are advancing, but if you go back and see where God found you, you will know how you have advanced and grown. Mr. Moody illustrated this point by the following anecdote:—He said he was at Mr. Spurgeon's house a few days ago, and Mr. Spurgeon showed him the photographs of his two sons who were twins, and whose photographs had been taken every year since they were twelve months old until they were seventeen years old. For the first two years they did not seem to have grown much, but when they compared the first year with the age of seventeen, they seemed to have grown amazingly. So it is with the children of God, he proceeded. Others will say, "That is not the same man or woman they used to be. They have more peace and love and joy and gentleness." We want to be sound in love as well as sound in faith. I believe that is one of the graces we want—more love for the Master, for one another, and for the perishing world. It does not take long to get at a man's heart when we love him. If we honestly seek to cultivate this grace, and seek to be like the Master, who was full of love, we shall be growing Christians.

There are two lives every Christian should live: one is alone with God, that the world knows nothing of—that inner life that holds communion with God, and draws strength from Him. Then you can live the outer life, before the world, and adorn the doctrine of Jesus Christ.

Phil. iii. 13—"This one thing I do." That was the apostle's watchword, "pressing towards the mark." Instead of sitting down and making everything comfortable around us, let us run the race with patience; there is the prize before us. We are told that there is a crown in store for us. Paul says, "See that no man take your crown." And now let me sound

A NOTE OF WARNING.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor. x. 12). One of the greatest snares that can come to us is spiritual pride. A good deal better men and women than are here have fallen. Look through the Bible, and see how men of God have fallen. There was Abraham, the friend of God; he went down to Egypt and there he lied. He lost all his influence over the monarch of that country. God had to keep Moses out of the Promised Land because he fell. There was Noah, who walked with God; and Peter and David. Look at poor David, how he has caused men to blaspheme all these long years. You will find men to-day blaspheming on account of David's fall that took place 3000 years ago. May God keep the young converts from falling, is the prayer of my heart. It seems to me it would break my heart if I should come back and find these young converts fallen away. May God keep you from falling. I used to think that when I got older I would be safe, and there would be no danger; but the longer I live, the less confidence I have in myself. There never was a day in my life when I feared Satan so much as I do to-day. Not but God can keep me, but I see how holy men, a great deal better than any of us, have fallen because they got their eye off the Master. Let us press towards the mark, and do not forget the words, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It is a terrible thing for a man to fall on the racecourse. It is better to fall dead than to fall into sin. I find it was not in their youth that many of those men in Scripture fell. David was in advancing years, with his family all about him, and everything comfortable. It was not when Moses was a young man that he fell. Samson judged Israel twenty years and then fell. Let it be a warning; do not boast and say you are able to stand. Do not be independent of God and think you can do without Him. May God keep you humble. Not only that, but there is of his falling. I used to think that when I was advanced in Christian experience, like those who had long laboured for Christ, there would be no danger, but experience has taught me a different lesson. A man said to me lately, Did you ever notice that Satan always aims high? When Jesus was down here, it was Caiaphas the Chief Priest, the highest ecclesiastical man on the face of the earth, who called the Sanhedrim together and found the Saviour guilty. The devil took Judas, one of His own disciples, to betray Him, and another of them to deny Him. My prayer has been that God would smite me with death rather than let me fall into sin, and lose my testimony. If there is any class of men on the face of the earth to be pitied, they are those men who have been used of God, have been unfaithful, and whom God has had to lay aside as vessels no longer meet for the Master's use. Look at poor David! He could not teach transgressors God's way. Do you think Lot had any influence in Sodom? He was twenty years in that town and never got a convert outside his family. I have told you before of the three wiles of the devil. He moves all hell to keep you from accepting Christ; then he tries to keep you from opening your mouth; and if he does not succeed in that, he does all he can to blacken your character. A man said to me the other day that no sooner did God declare that He was pleased with all that He had made, than Satan came and tempted Adam, and pulled him down. I believe he has taken many a soul to a high pinnacle and then pushed them down. He likes them to be lifted up and become dizzy, so that they come down tumbling and bring the cause of Christ into disrepute. May God keep you looking to Jesus, and pressing towards Him.

THE TWO NATURES.

There is another thing I want to speak about. Quite a number have told me since I have been here, and have written to me, that they find sin is still in them in a way which they did not expect when they were converted. Gal. 5th chap. will help you out of that difficulty: "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh." There is one thing that every young convert ought to understand,—that he has got two natures; and not only so, but he will have them to the end of his pilgrimage here. You will never get rid of this old Adam nature here,—bear that in mind. But because there is a conflict between yourself and sin, that is no sign that you are not converted. The most important truth you young converts can learn in your early Christian experience, is this doctrine of the two natures. If an angel from heaven should tell you that the old man is dead, do not believe him; your experience will tell you he is not dead. You are to make no provision for the flesh; you are to crucify the old man; but if he were dead what would you want to crucify him for? A man said to me the other day, and it helped me wonderfully, that you may be dead to sin, but sin is not dead to you. Let me advise you to keep straight on this doctrine of the two natures. If you should ever get discouraged, if you will just carry your difficulty to the Word of God and study it carefully, you will find it will help you out of all your difficulties.

ABSTAIN!

Now, before I leave your shores, would you let me give you a little more advice? I have been blamed by some and abused by a good many for speaking on this subject; but if the young converts of Great Britain take my advice they will all become teetotalers. All the young converts who have fallen, of whom I have heard, have fallen through strong drink. People say they need it for medicine; if so, use it as medicine, but do not urge it on everyone else. I have been in your homes, and you have been very kind to me. God forbid I should say anything that would wound your feelings; but I want to be faithful to-night, and I cannot tell you how deep this subject lies buried in my heart, when I have seen what a blight strong drink has thrown over this fair land. I have seen how it has come in and destroyed the happiness of so many homes—a loved boy banished to America or Australia because he has become addicted to strong drink. And not only that, but a short time ago a beautiful woman came into the inquiry-room quite drunk—so drunk that I could not talk to her. It was not the public-house that had wrought this with her—it was the social custom of the land. Many people think they cannot be social without having it. Let me beg of you, if you love the Lord Jesus Christ and love souls, do not urge anyone to take strong drink. If you drink it yourself, do not try and lead others astray. Some say they cannot get on without it—that they need it in order to do a day's work. It will be a good deal better for you to do half a day's work without it. If it becomes such a temptation to so many, why not, in the name of the Master, give it up?

Let me say to you, young men, never enter a public-house—unless it is to get some one out. Do not go to the bar to drink. I believe a great many young men who might be, I might say, reformers—the very best of our young men—are being led away by strong drink. If we could get young men to take a right stand on this subject, we would soon see reformation. You talk about closing the public-houses; the quickest way to do that is for none to go into them. Let your companions be found in the Church of God, and not in the public-house; let them be among God's own people. If you get into company with those who go into public-houses, it will not be long before your testimony and your influence will be lost; your friends will have less confidence in you; you will perhaps lose your place among God's people. If you want to be a happy, useful, rejoicing Christian, let me advise you to keep out of the world; have as little to do with it as you can. Let everyone know you are on the Lord's side. Never be ashamed to confess Christ. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."

If there is a poor publican here to-night, let me say, I love you; I pity you, and yet I cannot help but condemn your business, because I believe it is a hellish traffic, and is taking many men down to an untimely grave. I pity the poor publican, who will by-and-by have to stand in judgment before God. I say it out of love to every man who is engaged in this hellish traffic. Get out of it, as Lot got out of Sodom. You may say, "What is to become of my family?" Trust God for your family; do not do wrong in order to support your family. It is better to go down to your grave from some poor-house, or asylum—it is better a thousand times, like poor Lazarus, to be borne away to Abraham's bosom—than to roll down to hell in a golden chariot. I do not believe that a man who is ruining his fellow-men can inherit the kingdom of God. Do let me plead with you, and exhort you to take a firm stand; to come out, and be whole-hearted for Christ.

Another thought: Try to show your Christianity in your life. A Christian ought to be more upright than those who are not Christians. He ought to be gentle and kind, humble and Christ-like.

STUDY THE WORD.

Before I close, let me read to you Paul's farewell to the Ephesians. (Mr. Moody then read the latter part of the twentieth chapter of Acts.) The thirty-second verse (he continued) is the one I want to call your attention to: "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Dear young convert, love this blessed Bible; study it every day. I commend it to you. I urge you to study it, and seek, in every way you can, to make the tidings of Christ and his love known to others. When you have got hold of a truth that lifts you up heavenward, give it to some one else. Do not keep this hidden treasure to yourself. This world is perishing for want of Christ. When our war was going on, and our armies were being repulsed, President Lincoln called for 600,000 men. In a few days this number sprang into the ranks, simply because he wanted them. The Lord Jesus wants workers, not only 600,000, but millions of them. The world is perishing; the nations are living in darkness; the heathen are waiting for the light; the kingdoms of the earth are struggling to be free. Shall not England and America rise as one man, and carry the tidings of the Gospel around the globe? As I said this afternoon, my faith has grown, and I believe it would not be much to carry the Gospel to every nation under heaven. Why should there not, out of this movement, go forth a band of men whose hearts have been touched by God's finger, and who shall be a blessing to the world? Let us expect it, and pray for it. If men are willing to defend their homes, to lay down their lives for patriotism, how much more should we be willing to carry the good news to perishing men? As a noble instance of patriotic devotion, Mr. Moody cited a story from Scottish history, of a father who ungrudgingly gave up his seven sons to fight and die for his country. If this father gave up all his sons to defend Scotland, shall not the fathers and mothers of Great Britain give up theirs for Christ? Is it not time that the Church of God should rise and spread the glorious Gospel over mountain and desert? Our Chieftain's voice comes ringing down from the throne—"Be of good cheer, it is the Father's pleasure to give you the kingdom." May that voice cheer every heart, and may the cry go up from Victoria Hall—"Here am I, send me!" May God send forth a band of missionaries from this hall. May the Holy Ghost fall upon us! May there be a baptism that shall fill England and America and make us one! There is a story told of a chief who was mortally wounded in battle. They were carrying him away, when he ordered his servants to take him in sight of his men. "When my men see my wounds," said he, "it will cheer them up." When they saw him being brought back, it fired up their hearts so that they moved on and routed the enemy, driving everything before them. Look to-night on those bleeding wounds at Calvary, and let us move forward. May God bless you and keep you. May each of us do our work and stand in our place, and finish our course with joy.

PRAY FOR US.

Well, my friends, I must close. There is one thing I want to ask of you. During the past two years nothing has cheered us so much as your prayers. I shall go back to America with a strong heart, for I know that you are still praying for us. It will help my brother, Mr. Sankey, to sing, and me to preach, in that land. There is one thing that weighs heavily on my heart, as my face is turned towards my native land, and that is that we may see a blessing there like what we have seen here.

Then there is another thing I want you to pray for—that England and America may be one. We speak the same language; we are redeemed by the same blood; we have the same Bible and the same God. You have given the Bible to the nations of the earth. We want England and America united to send men to preach the Gospel. One thing we shall carry away with us, and that is the names of many who are very dear to us.

We hate to bid you Good-bye—to say

FAREWELL!

I know I am speaking to a goodmany to-night who will never hear our voices again. If we are permitted to return, many of you will be gone. May you die with your eyes on the Master, and with your feet in the racecourse! I pray that you may not fall out by the way; that there may be no strife among the herdsmen; that the watchmen may see eye to eye, and be of one mind and one spirit. It is not necessary for me to say that we thank you for all your love, for your kindness, and your prayers. You have been very good to us. A little more than two years ago we passed through this town, strangers to nearly everyone here. We leave it with a great many friends; and every night, as I fall on my knees, I thank God for our friends in this country. We appreciate your love and your kindness, and in the months and years to come, as we hear from this country that you are holding on and working for the Master, it will cheer us up in our own land. And we hope ere long you will hear the news that your prayers are answered, and that God is blessing us.

We would like very much if the young converts would write us letters, telling us their experience. For the next two months I am going away among the mountains of New England, and I will have time to read your letters; we have not had time for two years past. Perhaps your letters, telling how you have found Christ, may help us to preach and sing the Gospel in our own country. Every day I shall pray for the young converts of Europe, that God may keep you and watch over you, and that you may abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

[In our report last week we gave Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey's addresses for the next two months.]

THE LIVERPOOL WATCHWORD— "ADVANCE!"

In accordance with the watchword left us by Mr. Moody, the young men engaged in the work at the Circus have been endeavouring to "advance," and are rejoiced to see that the Lord is recognizing their efforts, and is using them in a truly wonderful manner to the conversion of many souls.

Our dear brother Major Cole, of Chicago, is at present conducting two services each night, the first (at 7.30) being a mixed meeting, in which the preaching of the Gospel is materially aided by the sweet hymns sung by Mrs. and Miss Cole; and the second, at a later hour, being the meeting for young men only, which has now run for nearly six months, and, under the blessing of God, is as useful as ever it was.

The large and attentive audiences which attend every meeting must testify to every thoughtful mind that this is not merely a passing excitement, but that the Holy Spirit of God is working in the hearts of the people, and creating a desire after better things; and I may mention, in passing, what will, I am sure, gratify all Christian people—that such are the crowds that come on Sundays to hear the Gospel, that we have been compelled to hold the meetings on that day in the Victoria Hall, as the Circus is utterly inadequate to contain the people.

Looking, however, at the results as shown in the after-meeting, we have far greater cause for rejoicing, as the work going on now among the young men is apparently greater than it has been since Mr. Moody left us in March—last evening at least forty remaining behind for conversation and prayer, and many of them, we trust, going home rejoicing in the finished work of Jesus.

Your readers will, I know, be glad to hear of the continued success of the meetings conducted by the Carters on Sunday afternoon. Major Cole has addressed them the last two Sundays, and they are preparing to hold the next meeting in Victoria Hall, in consequence of the greatly increased attendance.

The effect of the Gospel upon this large body of men has been most wonderful; indeed, we hear from all sides of the great change that has taken place among them,—how that from being the most godless men in the town, many of them have become bright and shining lights for the Master's glory.

I would ask the prayers of every Christian reader for our work. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are (comparatively) few."

INCIDENTS OF MAJOR COLE'S MEETINGS.

One evening a young man said, "I start for Calcutta to-morrow. I thank God that I ever found these meetings and that Christ found me. I shan't forget these meetings. Pray that, whether on sea or land, I may be firm for Christ."

At one meeting there was a scoffer present, noticed by one of the workers, who mentioned the fact to the audience. Major Cole gave a most solemn account of the death of a young scoffer, and then asked them to engage in silent prayer for the scoffer present. The perfect silence was death-like. A young man broke out in prayer for the scoffer. The cry from all Christians seemed to be, "Stay, thou insulted Spirit, stay." God heard the prayer at the close of the meeting.

A man, about thirty years of age, confessed that he was the scoffer; said that he had attended all the meetings in Birmingham, some in London, had been to several here, but merely to scoff. His brother had been with him; they were avowed infidels. His father died when he was so young that he had no remembrance of him; his mother was one of the best of women, and a Christian. He was urged, and finally dropped on his knees. Special prayer was asked for the Holy Spirit to reveal to him his condition. All at once he cried, "Let me out; let me get up. O, I'm lost! Where is my brother? Let me find him! What shall we do?"

The Word, which alone can help in a moment like that, was shown him—"He came to seek and to save that which was lost." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." The Bible was given him, so that he might read it for himself.

He believed, and his first cry was, "Where is my brother. O how I wish he was here!" Then he said, "Pray for my wife and two children. I have not seen them for many months. O what a miracle that I am saved! How glad that I came here! Wonderful, that Jesus should save me!"

On Thursday evening Major Cole said—"There are a number of young men who are ready to take Christ; now, before we go any further, we will ask the friends that are on the left of us to vacate their chairs (between twenty-five and thirty), and let the young men who want Christ now come and occupy them. We won't sing so as to make it easy for you, but will simply pray that God may give you strength to do what his Holy Spirit is telling you. The audience will remain quiet as these young men enlist under the banner of King Emmanuel, the Captain of our salvation." The chairs were filled immediately. The first one spoken to said that he found peace the first step he took. Others, at the second meeting, who did not come forward, were brought into light by Christian workers speaking to them as they were going out, and urging them to stay.

The requests that come in for prayer from many young men asking prayers for their parents—poor drunken parents, drunken mothers, mothers that have left home, left their children, plunging into the blackest sins—are terrible to contemplate. Thank God their prayers are being answered.

We have received further accounts of the remarkable work in Liverpool in connexion with Major Cole's meetings, but they are crowded out this week.

"REDEEMING THE TIME."

A LITTLE company of seven started last Tuesday evening from Cannon-street Station for Hastings, taking with them a small portable harmonium and a stock of "Sankey's Hymns." Soon after leaving the station we asked the people in the carriage if they objected to a little music and singing, and no objection being raised, we opened the harmonium and commenced singing "Tell me the old, old story." This brought to the front two or three who had evidently tasted of "Jesus and his love," and thus we went on our journey, alternately singing and having sweet fellowship with those who were like-minded, until Hastings was reached, which seemed to us to be in a remarkably short space of time.

The next morning, after commending the work to the Lord, we sallied forth to the beach, and at the first sound of the harmonium the people gathered round in goodly numbers, and, in spite of the counter-attractions of various kinds, about two or three hundred persons remained while we alternately sung and spoke a few simple words about "Jesus and his love." We remained at Hastings two days, and held four meetings of this kind on the beach, and, thanks be unto Him who is our strength, we have good reason to know that souls were brought to Christ, and many dear children of God were refreshed and quickened as the result of these simple meetings. To God be all the glory.

In the earnest hope that many others may be led to go and do likewise, I send you these few notes. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." B. B.

SPECIAL EVANGELISTIC SERVICES, GREENWICH.—

A series of services will be held at the Baptist Chapel, South-street, Greenwich, from Monday, August 23, to Friday, August 27, every evening at eight o'clock p.m. It is expected that they will be conducted by the following ministers:—Monday, Rev. Mr. Charlesworth; Tuesday, Rev. E. H. Brown; Wednesday, Rev. Charles Graham; Thursday, Rev. Wm. Harrison; Friday, Rev. Dr. Mahan. The Greenwich Branch of the Tonic Sol-fa Association and a portion of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Camberwell Choir are expected to join in these services, assisted by Mr. J. M. Smith, whose vocal services at the recent meetings at Victoria Theatre will doubtless be remembered with pleasure by many.

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

ON the principle of the proverb that "Charity begins at home," we have, within recent weeks, endeavoured to acquaint our readers with the progress of some of the missionary and charitable societies at work in the metropolis. We thought we had almost exhausted the home-reports sent to us, but we again find a long and daily increasing list on our table. Meantime, however, we must fulfil our promise to devote a little space (and we are sorry it can be but little) to the operations of some of those societies which extend their efforts beyond the narrow boundaries of our little island.

Let us first notice the reports of missions to our fellow-subjects in the sister isle. Of these we have before us The Dublin Visiting Mission, The Island and Coast Society for Ireland, and The Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics. The first-mentioned Mission has been in the field for twenty-six years, visiting the homes of the Roman Catholic population, and it has certainly not failed, if we are to believe the testimony of a friend who writes to us that "it is the real work for Ireland, and has told more upon the masses, who are chiefly Romanists, than any other work." We are convinced, at any rate, that it follows the right method—reading the Bible from house to house; there is a very old precedent for that: therefore we say, "Go on and prosper, and may the God of the Book prompt many of his redeemed ones to hold up your hands, and supply you with means and men according to your necessities." This Mission also makes special efforts among the sailors and the cabinmen, and, according to the report, the results are most encouraging. Friends will please write to Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

The Island and Coast Society is more venerable than the last (dating from 1833), and covers a wider field. It has thirty-three stations along the coast and islands. The opening pages of the report before us set forth the heavy loss sustained by the Society through the death of Mrs. Fendleton, who has acted as its honorary secretary for forty years, and this event threatens to cripple the work by which "Scriptural schools have been established and supported at many points round the coast and islands of Ireland; while the candle of the Gospel has been kept burning in some of the darkest spots, and souls have been comforted and cheered by the message of a free salvation in Christ." Let our Irish friends have faith that the Lord of the harvest will raise up labourers to sustain and multiply these schools. Almost every page of this unusually long report tells of the sunshine that Mr. Sankey's hymns have created in the hearts of the children. The secretary is Mrs. Lett, 25, Waterloo-place, Dublin.

The Irish Church Mission seeks to uphold "the Banner of the Truth in Ireland," and the report specifies a great many cases wherein the darkness of Popish error and superstition has fled before the glorious light of the pure and unnumbered Gospel of the grace of God. May such cases be multiplied a thousandfold. The office of this Mission is 11, Buckingham-street, Adelphi, W.C.

Passing from one fair land to another fairer still, we come to the fourth evangelization report of the Free Christian Church in Italy. And here we pause to wonder how it comes to pass that the sunniest spots on the earth's surface seem to show the grossest moral and spiritual darkness. And yet not so very long ago the existence of a Free Christian Church in Italy would have been impossible; we trust, therefore, that brighter days are in store for Italy and this young group of churches. There is much to cheer us and to strengthen this hope in the printed report, though, like other societies, this one has its ups and downs. "The great sorrow of the year is the withdrawal of the American Board, on account of the financial crisis in the United States, their missions having enlarged, while their constituency and funds were diminished." Per contra, we give another extract:—"Certainly, anyone who knew this country before 1857, and is acquainted with the wondrously altered condition of things now, will acknowledge what a mighty blessing to this land and people, directly and indirectly, has been the preaching of the everlasting Gospel. We are far from having realized our aims, but we should be wholly ungrateful to the God of providence and grace did we not make mention of the mighty blessing he has showered down on Italy." It is only necessary to add that the eloquent Alessandro Gavazzi is President of the Committee, and the Secretary is Rev. John R. McDougall, Scotch Church, 11, Lung'Arno, Guicciardini, Florence.

Leppers in India: Occasional Paper, No. 1.—A little pamphlet (Shaw, Paternoster-row, 1d.) bearing the same title accompanies [599]

this Occasional Paper, and in it we read—"Many people are quite startled when we first broach the subject of leprosy. 'Why,' they say, 'I thought no such thing existed nowadays. You don't mean to say that you have lepers in India like what we read of in the Bible?' But it is even so; and not only in India, but all over Asia, I believe, and in Africa too. However, we must now confine ourselves to India, where leprosy is a terrible scourge. The country is overrun with it, particularly in the Himalayas, where there is more in proportion to the population. In a return compiled from the latest census returns, there are said to be no less than 93,231 lepers in India." Then follows such a heartrending description of this dreadful disease that we cease to wonder at Naaman's anxiety to get cured. Mr. Moody used to tell us that "Major-General Naaman was terribly in earnest," and we can well believe it. But the Naamans of the present day, alas! have no Hebrew maid to advise them, and no prophet to prescribe for them; it devolves, therefore, upon those who have been cured of the worse spiritual leprosy to alleviate the sufferings of those who are stricken with this loathsome evil. Among those who will gladly give information and receive aid we find the name of our esteemed contributor Mrs. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow-road, E., and also that of Miss C. E. Pim, Alma, Monkstown, Dublin.

Jewish Mission Committee (Secretary, John Tawse, Esq., W.S., 23, York-place, Edinburgh); Evangelical Continental Society (office, 13, Blomfield-street, London Wall, E.C.); Foreign Evangelization Society (Honorary Secretary, Rev. Horace Noel, White Rose Grange, Working Station); Pilgrim Mission, Basle Suisse.—These Societies are doing, we believe, their very utmost to further the great object of all Christian Missions. We beg of our readers to procure reports and give them studious and prayerful consideration.

The Gospel of Christ at Penang, Straits Settlements.—Mr. William Macdonald, Missionary at Penang, gives us, within the limits of a four-paged sheet, a perfect array of facts which prove that the good old "Gospel of Christ" is as much "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" in China in the nineteenth century as it was in Rome in St. Paul's day. He winds up his brief account thus:—"I dare not close this short statement without again referring to the dearth of Gospel labourers in these Straits. There are hundreds of thousands under British protection unevangelized. 'Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest.'"

Bombay Medical Mission.—This institution, as is generally known, was established in 1864 on the model of the one originated in Edinburgh by Dr. Burns Thomson. It holds quietly on its way, a blessing to many in soul and body. It is greatly desired to establish a hospital in connexion with the Mission. A fund for this object was started some time since, and the Committee bring forward this branch of the work as one calling for the sympathy and help of friends in England. Qualified Christian helpers are needed, to devote themselves to this work of faith and love. The financial year closes with a balance of £24 in England, and 27 rupees in Bombay. A report and any information desired may be obtained from Alexander Brown, Esq., 10, Dale-street, Liverpool.

GRAY'S-YARD RAGGED CHURCH AND SCHOOLS.—The Secretary begs to thank some kind donor for a parcel containing invalid's pillow, writing-case, a purse containing 2d., together with several books, &c., for the Mission.

MISSION TO THE HOP-PICKERS.—Thousands of the poorest and most wretched from London and our great towns are now gathering together for the hop-picking, and our hearts yearn to labour among them and to win them to Jesus. To do this, we are seeking the help of loving, earnest evangelists, to go out day by day into the hop-gardens, visiting them from bin to bin, speaking of Jesus, and preaching in the open air. We also desire to gather the poor hop-pickers together in a series of free teas, that we may in this way try to do them good. Many readers of THE CHRISTIAN have very kindly helped us in former years to carry on this work. May I ask again, in Jesus' name, for the earnest prayers and loving contributions of the Lord's children to aid us in the important and blessed work of "reaching the masses" and trying to raise them by a living union with the Lord Jesus. We expect the hop-picking to last five or six weeks, and that many of the hop-pickers will be here about eight or nine weeks, giving us an opportunity, if the Lord will, of carrying the Gospel to some thousands of the very vilest and most sunken of our population. Many of these poor creatures come in rags and tatters, and plead with us for a little clothing to cover their nakedness. Should any of your readers desire to help us, please address J. J. Kendon, Bethany House, Goudhurst, Kent.

YOUNG MEN'S COLUMN.

At the recent annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Richmond, U.S.A., Mr. Morris K. Jesup, of New York, speaking on "How to Reach the Commercial and Artizan Classes," made the following remarks, the bulk of which, we suppose, are as applicable to this side of the Atlantic as the other:—

"I am asked to-night to say a few words as to how we may best reach the commercial and artizan classes. This would seem to imply that there is a way to reach this class different from that followed in seeking the welfare of other classes of young men engaged in other callings of business. Dear brethren, there is only one way to reach all classes, and the best way. Seek them with the love of Christ in your hearts, and strive to carry that love to the hearts of others.

"These commercial and artizan classes comprise probably the largest number of young men in our land, and therefore perhaps they are the most important class. The first thing we need, in my judgment, is a sanctified life on the part of the employers, and capital consecrated to the service of Christ. I want, as a business man and an employer, to take my share of responsibility in this matter. It is through us, fellow-business men, under God, that these young men are to be influenced either for good or evil; it is by our example, influence, and Christian life that these men in our employ are to be benefited. If we have this love of Christ in our hearts, this desire to consecrate all for Jesus, then we shall 'do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with our God,' and those who come from day to day under the influence of our example will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

"Of course, it is not to be supposed that all our business men are Christian men. But the first thing the young men connected with these associations are to do is, to find out whether the leaders in business in their neighbourhood employing labour of any kind, the superintendents of our railroads, and those managing the great interests of this country, are Christian men. If they are, go to them with your warm appeals, and enlist them in your various schemes of benevolence and love. If you find out that they are not Christians (and you will have many cases of that kind), then tell them of the love of Christ, and show them where their responsibility to others as well as to themselves lies. Urge in every way next to this the observance of the Christian Sabbath. The keynote was struck here this afternoon with reference to what shall be done for railroad employes, when it was observed that they should have rest on the Sabbath. As the railroads of this country are controlled by a combination of capital, it is not easy to affect the management; but then in the case of private enterprises and private individuals, you can more successfully urge the keeping of the Sabbath day, and the stopping of work in the house, manufactory, or store, so as to give the young man of this land time for rest and thought.

"Finally, how much we Christians need tact! I cannot give a better illustration of what I mean than by telling you what has come under my own observation in the city of New York, and how by a little tact a great work has been wrought for Christ down on the docks and wharves of the city. A good Christian brother, living in the upper part of the city, whose custom it was to go Sabbath after Sabbath to visit these wharves, saw those who were idling away their time there, and sought to do some good for Christ's sake to them. One day he met one of the roughs of New York, a man notorious for his wickedness, who went under a number of aliases, well known to the police as a river thief, who had served many months in the penitentiary. This good Christian brother went up to that man, and, putting his hand on his shoulder, said, 'My brother, do you love Christ? Are you in the ark of safety?' This man turned upon him with all the boldness of sin, and replied—'You are a pretty man to talk to me in this way; it is the way you Christians do. I want to see you put your religion in practice.' It was a cold day, the man was shivering and hungry, and my friend had on two coats. 'Show me some of your religion by giving me one of your coats.' 'I will do it, brother,' was the reply; and he took off his coat quick as I can say it, and put it on the shoulders of this poor man. The astonished fellow took the coat off, and said, 'I was only joking. I wanted to see how far you would carry the love of Christ. I see you are a Christian man. What do you want me to do?' 'Ah!' says my brother, 'I want you to come to Christ and to the prayer-meeting this afternoon. Will you?' 'Yes, I will!' and that man became a Christian. He was so notorious in the past for living such a wicked life, that when he applied for admission into the church in that neighbourhood they would not receive him at once, and he was put on probation. He led an humble, consistent life for nearly a year. This good brother clung to him, prayed and talked with him, till at the end of eight months he gave such real evidence of his conversion that he was received into the church. God has since made use of that man in accomplishing a glorious work in our city.

"Jerry Macaulay is to-day living in Water-street, one of the worst places in the city, carrying on, together with his good wife, a work for Christ; and their influence over their old companions, over sailors, bad men and bad women, is something wonderful. I never attended in my life such meetings as I see when I go there.

"Now, my dear friends, that is an illustration of tact, and that is what we want. We want also the influence of the Christian home, of the mothers and sisters, in our work for young men. We want the young women and the old women too; their sympathies and tact—women's tact. Now, how are we to come by this? There is only one way—by going to the blessed Saviour and asking Him what He will have us to do; consecrating all that we have to Him—our thoughts, our souls, our lives, and our money. Won't you do it?"

Mr. Wm. Taylor, of New York, said: "I have been three years on the road. I confess the worst thing I find is what to do with my evenings, and had it not been for the grace of God, it would have been my ruin. For such men I want to plead. These men now go to the billiard-saloons, theatres, and to places far worse. If there is a hard class in the United States, it is these young men. I ask your prayers and sympathies for them. Nothing rejoices the heart of a Christian man among them so much as to see on the walls of the depôts and the hotels a placard with 'Y.M.C.A.—Welcome!'"

"THE JOY IN HARVEST."

On Sunday, August 1, at the commencement of the afternoon service in our Sunday-school, we all felt a consciousness of the presence of the Holy Spirit. It was our monthly prayer-meeting, and we opened the meeting with singing one of Mr. Sankey's hymns, "Come to the Saviour, make no delay," which was sung with much feeling by the scholars. Then one of the teachers prayed with touching simplicity that God would open the eyes of the scholars that they might see the danger of living in sin. The Holy Spirit strove mightily with them, and soon we heard the sigh escaping, and saw with joy the tear start from the eyes of several of them. It spread through all the school, and I think there was not one who was not in tears.

We invited all who were anxious to be saved to come forward; as many as could kneel conveniently came, and the others retained their places. We pointed them to the Saviour as their only hope, and, glory be to God, many looked and were saved. It was a grand sight; one of the class leaders of the society was present part of the time, and he said he never saw such a sight, although he has been in the Lord's service forty-six years. At the close of the meeting a gentleman from another school, who happened to step in, asked those who felt their sins pardoned to stand up, and no fewer than twenty-two boys and twenty girls, who have never professed to love Christ before, stood up to testify that they had found the Lord.

We start a class for them on Tuesday night, when we hope to have the whole number of them there. Our hearts are so full that we know not what to do; surely the Lord has smiled upon us. What will He not do? He has said that according to our faith it shall be done unto us, and we have proved it to be true in this instance. We trust that this good work will not be confined to Pleck, but that other schools will in a like manner be visited, and that King Jesus shall have a large army of young volunteers.

Yours faithfully, H. WILKES, Superintendent.

THE NETHERLANDS.—The Rev. H. E. Faure, D.D., Minister, Dutch Reformed Church, Doesborgh, Netherlands, writing to us of proposed Conferences at Nymegen and Noerboesch in the Netherlands, on the 18th, 19th, and 20th inst., for prayer and study of God's Word, says:—"There are many hopeful signs of coming blessing; the fields in these lowlands are indeed white unto the harvest, and we feel convinced that nothing is needed but earnest prayer and the clear teaching of God's Holy Word, unencumbered by the doctrines and definitions of men. Our brethren are assiduously girding themselves for this work—or, rather, the Lord is girding them."

SPIALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

ВЪЗЛОЖЕ ВЪЗГЛЯДЪ.—Kindly allow me space to greet all dear friends and helpers in the name of Jesus.

For some time past I have been very low bodily, chiefly arising from bronchitis, nervous exhaustion, and weakness. Some time ago, too, my afflicted side suddenly gave way while speaking in the open air, and still causes me much pain. I am constrained, therefore, to go into the country for a season of quiet and rest, in the hope that with our Father's blessing I may recruit ere the winter comes.

In one matter I earnestly entreat the sympathy and help of the Lord's people. Funds for the Mission have been very short indeed, and I do feel concerned that there should be no lack during my absence, but that the work should still go on with its present vigour. Will dear friends relieve me of this burden? I take this opportunity of saying I shall not be able to send out a "Promises Proved" this year.

The Lord has been doing great things for us, whereof we are glad. Praise be to Him for all, and praise be to Him for every loving friend who has cheered me on during the last seventeen years' labour amongst the lowest. To Him be all the glory. I am yours very faithfully,

WILLIAM JOSEPH LEWIS.

14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

[If we could, how gladly would we add a word which should induce our readers to avail themselves of the privilege of strengthening the hands of this dear strong-hearted brother, whose feeble tenement, seemingly quite unequal to the strain put upon it by his eager spirit, has yet been wondrously sustained by God in labouring for seventeen years amongst his poor degraded and neglected ones. But he and other such are wisely working with a crown of righteousness in view, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give them in that day. May all his stewards also have cause to love his appearing, who shall judge every man's work of what sort it is.—ED.]

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION Excursion to Gravesend, on Tuesday, the 10th inst., was, if possible, even more delightful than the one to Loughton a fortnight earlier. It was a sad disappointment to learn that Mr. and Mrs. Booth were still too ill to be present, and fervent prayer went up to God on their behalf. The procession of several hundred men and women singing of salvation through the town of Gravesend naturally awakened much curiosity; and many who evidently had had little faith in religion hitherto, followed to the Windmill Hill, and listened in astonishment as one after another told out of a full heart how great things the Lord had done for them. In the field, and on the boats, both above and below deck, the souls of God's people were greatly refreshed in the various prayer and experience meetings held; and sinners sought and, we believe, found mercy. THE CHATHAM BRANCH of the Mission had had an excursion to Southend the day before. On the return journey, after a glorious day of heavenly sunlight, an accident to one of the paddle-wheels seemed to threaten the party with sudden death; but the occurrence proved a great blessing to nearly all on board. One big man, who used to be notorious for his gross wickedness, closed his eyes and shouted aloud for joy, in the hope that he should immediately see the King in his beauty. Said the missionary's little boy, "We shall all go to heaven, father, shan't we?" "Praise God," was the reply, "if we go to the bottom, we are going to the top." Amid the general panic, several who had all day refused to yield to Christ, were induced to seek Him in earnest. One woman, a Roman Catholic, fell upon her knees, and, after crying to the Great High Priest for abolition, soon rose up rejoicing, and said, "Now I don't mind dying."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN NORFOLK.—During the past ten weeks successful evangelistic work has been carried on in many of the villages in North Norfolk. Following apostolic precedent, students from the College in London of which Mr. H. Grattan Guinness is president, have gone out in twos and threes, visiting various towns and villages, and preaching wherever and whenever opportunity offered. Messrs. Nelson and Parker, Mr. Spencer, Mr. Cameron, with others from the same College, have made visits and delivered addresses which will not soon be forgotten by the multitudes who were attracted by them. Fakenham, Walsingham, Wells-next-the-Sea, Burnham, Creaks, Holkham, Wighton, Warham, Cley, Blakeney, Weybourne, and many other places within a short radius of Wells and Fakenham, were all visited in succession, the preachers, in most cases, returning upon their footsteps, and extending the work they had previously begun. The addresses were listened to on all occasions with marked attention; indeed, there was a force, an energy, a power and freedom pervading them, that commanded the attention of the hearers. The inquiry-meetings, held mostly in chapels belonging to the Primitives, Independents, or Wesleyans, were very largely attended. The number of those who manifested anxiety for a change of life, and who made credible profession of having found peace, is believed to have been large.

YOUNG WOMEN'S COLUMN.

COURTESY VISITING.

Will you kindly permit me a little space in your "Young Women's Column," to thank our dear sister at Thrapstone for her pleasing account of lodging-house work, and to say how much encouragement it gives me to know I am not walking alone in this path of service, into which I believe the Good Shepherd has called me? It has not been without much heart-aching (of which our sister speaks) that I have for the last two years tried to sow the "seed of the Kingdom" among these "way-side" heathens, though in a very desultory manner, which is, I think, characteristic of this class of "house visitation." Sometimes a few verses or a chapter of Scripture has been read, or one of Mr. Sankey's hymns; or a thrilling anecdote related, which has generally been listened to with attention and thanks. In some cases, thoughtful faces and tearful eyes have proved that—

"Touched by a loving heart, awakened by kindness, Chords that were broken will vibrate once more."

Only last Sunday, I stepped into one of our lodging-houses, and asked permission to read one of the hymns I had heard Mr. Sankey sing, "Whiter than Snow,"—(I, too, am no singer),—for which they thanked me very much. An interesting young man, shabbily dressed, stood at the door, to whom I spoke personally, when, with sorrowful voice, he told the old tale of how drink and bad company had reduced him to his present position. He had once served in the shop of an eminent West-end firm. His artistic talent enables him to earn a little money by selling pencil sketches of the various towns through which he passes; but, being penniless, his parents dead, and diseased in body as well as soul, he is now in our Union Infirmary, where I trust his extremity will be "God's opportunity" of leading him to the Great Physician, "the sympathizing Jesus." I have written this much to express my earnest sympathy with our dear sister in her work, and to strengthen her appeal to others to "go and do likewise"; and if at times the kind word and tract should meet with a cold or even no response, may we each think of the Saviour's loving testimony, "She hath done what she could," and thus continue to—

"Remove the perishing, duty demands it,
Strength for thy labour the Lord will provide;
Back to the narrow way patiently win them;
Till the poor wanderer a Saviour has died."

ICELAND DISTRESS.

SIN.—Many of your readers, as your columns evince every week, are accustomed to follow the Divine precept given through the Apostle James, of showing their Christian faith by their works. Perhaps it may not be untimely to invite their sympathy on behalf of the afflicted inhabitants of Iceland, who are suffering grievously in consequence of a tremendous volcanic eruption, which last Easter Monday devastated hundreds of square miles of the already small portion of the island capable of cultivation.

So cold is the climate of Iceland that in general neither corn, fruit, nor vegetables can be grown there. The people are mainly dependent upon summer pasturage and fishing. But the prospect now before them is that a large proportion of their cattle and horses must perish. And the destruction of so many of the cows will deprive the households of milk, which is an essential of life to the young children especially. Hence, even as the best, many of the children will die.

An effort is being made to send out some relief, in the form of a cargo of food, to these poor people, and the prompt co-operation of any of your readers will be most welcome. The Icelanders are a worthy people. They have maintained for centuries the light of the Gospel in their cold Arctic regions. They are a simple, Bible-cherishing nation, and deserve the aid of their more prosperous fellow-Christians in Europe.

Contributions may be forwarded to Mr. Vine, Private Secretary to the Lord Mayor, Mansion House, London, E.C.

A READER.

BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE.—A Conference of Christians will (n.v.) be held here on Wednesday to Friday, October 27 to 29 inclusive. Lord Cavan, Dr. D. Fraser and Mackay, Rev. T. Richardson, Mr. H. Denning, of Bath, and others are expected to be present. "Brethren, pray for us." Fuller information will appear in due time; and, meantime, friends may apply to the Rev. H. G. Thwaites, St. Mark's, Birmingham.

MR. MOODY'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL AT CHICAGO.

Miss Cotton will be glad to receive contributions towards a parcel of presents she is making up for the classes in Mr. Moody's Sunday-school. Six hundred articles, with short letters attached, are now ready, and six hundred more are wanted to make the parcel complete. The letters should consist of a simple gospel appeal, including two or three texts of Scripture, and perhaps relating some incident or instance of God's converting power, known by the writer.

All contributions must be sent in before the first week in September, directed to Miss Cotton, Tower-hill, Dorking.

The gifts should be specially suited for the elder classes.

TENT WORK IN SOMERSET.

WELLINGTON

Was the first town visited. The members of the various congregations, with their ministers, all united in a week of special prayer, preparatory to our coming, and during our sojourn sustained, with much freshness and power, a noon-day meeting, and otherwise manifested their interest in this special effort to advance the Kingdom of our risen and coming Christ. From the first the tent was well filled, often crowded with 500 inside and nearly as many out. We held, in addition to the ordinary services, three Sunday morning meetings at seven o'clock for Christian workers, the last being attended by over 400; also afternoon meetings for the aged and the young. The prayer of faith prevailed, and seasons of great refreshing from the presence of the Lord were experienced. The Word was with power both to saint and sinner, and day after day for three weeks we were busily engaged in gathering in sheaves for the heavenly garner. During the time my tent was removing, I held a most interesting service at

CLAYHIDON.

It was very cheering to see the eagerness with which the people flocked from all parts of the Blackdown Hills, filling the chapel where our brother George Brealey and his son labour. Whilst looking upon the happy faces of so many, and remembering what they were, I could not refrain from exclaiming "What hath God wrought!" On July 3 we commenced work at by holding a united prayer-meeting in the tent. We had a busy time during the week of the Royal Agricultural Show. Our tent was pitched in an orchard directly in the route to the show-field, and, in addition to the four flags with four texts of Scripture flying on our four poles, we erected two large posting-stations by the roadside, and covered them with striking large-type scriptures. Taking our stand close by, we distributed many thousands of tracts to the crowds flocking day by day to the exhibition. Whilst thus engaged sowing precious seed, the question often occurred to my mind, "What will the harvest be?" Amongst the many pressing invitations to come here and there, I could only visit North Curry, Creech, Wivillcombe, Stolford, and Coultings, where I held meetings between my tent services, which were all of them crowded to excess, and many won for the Saviour, the spirit of hearing being most encouraging.

NETHER STOWEY

came next in order. A gentleman farmer sent his waggon and two horses and conveyed the tent and fittings eleven miles to this village. There we had a most fruitful week. Not only was the tent well filled every evening, and sometimes three services in the day, but great was the power and blessing attending the Word in the conversion of many, some of whom came five, six, and seven miles. Our visit was most opportune, it being the season between the hay and barley harvest, all the farmers and their labourers being free to attend.

T. A. VICARY.

PARKGATE, CHESHIRE.—An appeal comes to us for aid towards the erection of a Mission-room in this little watering-place. Our correspondent says:—"With the exception of a small Presbyterian Church and a private school-room licensed for a church service, there is no other place of worship in the village. The parish church is one mile distant, and the fishing population as a body literally go nowhere to worship on the Sunday." Information will be supplied by Mr. F. Pain, Dove House, Parkgate, Cheshire.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SUNDAY EVENINGS IN THE SUBURBS.

DURING the summer evenings, the pleasant suburbs of London are the resort of many hundreds of people: young and old, parents and children, are found wandering along the portions where the foliage of trees and the grassy lanes are still left, having as yet been untouched by the builder in his search for house-room, to supply the demand of the great metropolis.

Residing in such a locality, I have had my attention directed to the great number of children who have been sent by their parents on Sunday evening for what is called "a quiet walk." I have found opportunities of speaking to them, by the introduction of presenting them with a small book. I have found that they invariably had been to some Sunday-school in the afternoon, but, from the indifference of their parents, were left to their own will in the evening. I felt as if an open-air service for the little ones could be of some service; so a few Sundays back, having gathered a few around me, I asked them if we could not have a hymn together, and one little girl started "Safe in the arms of Jesus." This attracted attention, and soon I had about sixty to seventy children around, besides adults. I told them of Jesus, the children's Friend, and thus passed a happy hour. At the close I asked if we should have another meeting on the following Sunday. "Yes," "Yes," was the reply, and on the next Sunday I had a still larger gathering, among whom I noticed many who were present on the previous Sunday. Now, by the aid of Christian friends, who like myself feel an interest in the conversion of the little ones, we mean to establish these open-air services. May not the same opportunities be available in all our suburbs?

AN INCIDENT IN THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

The happiest evening I ever spent was in the inquiry-room of the Opera-house. Coming out into the corridors of the building one evening, I saw a girl about thirteen years of age weeping bitterly. Taking her by the hand, I asked her what troubled her. For a few moments she could not answer. When at last she did speak, it was to say, "Oh! I want to love Jesus so much, but I am so wicked."

We went together into the inquiry-room, and I had just begun to speak with her, when five more children were brought to me. I spoke to them of the love of Jesus, all listening with eager attention, when suddenly the youngest of the six said, "Oh! how I want to be a little Christian and love Jesus."

We all knelt in prayer. It was a sight which must have made the angels in heaven rejoice when one after the other gave herself wholly up to Jesus. It seemed to me more than I could expect that all these should be genuine conversions, but from letters I have received since, each is rejoicing in and working for Jesus. One writes thus:—"I have been enabled to confess my Saviour before my sisters and parents, and they are now rejoicing in Jesus." Just one extract more from another letter. "When I got home that night I told mother about the love of Jesus. She seemed so glad to see me so happy, and she asked me how I knew I was saved. I answered, 'Jesus said, "Whosoever believeth on me shall not perish, but have everlasting life."' I told her salvation was a gift free as the air we breathe, and that she had but to take it as such. Mother said she would try and be saved on Sunday when she went to church. But I told her that it might be too late then, so we knelt down and I asked Jesus to save mother. She then broke out into tears, exclaiming, 'Oh, God, be merciful to me a sinner!' That night she received Him as her own dear Saviour."

I have had many such letters, but fear to take up more of your most valuable space.

A LOVER OF THE YOUNG.

MR. VAN METER'S WORK IN ROME.—In our list of donations last week there was a sum of £71 7s. received by us for this Mission, and there acknowledged as from "E. L." The correct form of acknowledgment should have been "From friends in Newcastle-on-Tyne," a collection having been made there for this object.

BASEL EVANGELICAL MISSION.—The annual report of the Society says:—"The Bungalow on the Kudremukh, near Mangalore, of which we said in our last report that it was being built as a sanitarium for the missionaries in South Canara, the funds for which have been kindly collected by Miss Anstey, is now nearly finished, and by the time that this report reaches our friends it will, we trust, be ready for use."—"Since the above was written, the Bungalow has become ready for use, and is felt a very great boon by those who use it."

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

DURING the month of July some young men's meetings have been held in a tent pitched near the centre of a southern town. They were held nightly for a fortnight, commencing at nine o'clock and lasting three-quarters of an hour. The scheme, when proposed, was received doubtfully by not a few Christian friends, but very prayerfully by all who were willing to co-operate. In the result God has graciously far exceeded all that was asked or contemplated. The most sanguine expectations of the most hopeful have been surpassed. The average nightly attendance was about three hundred men, and consisted chiefly of the class most difficult to reach and most earnestly sought after.

During the first week at each of the meetings a simple Gospel address was delivered, accompanied by brief, earnest prayers, and the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns. When this meeting was dismissed, at a quarter to ten, inquirers were invited to remain to an after-meeting, and very many each night accepted the invitation.

Amongst a great many other instances of blessing received, the following, spontaneously delivered at the meetings for testimony held during the second week, may help to encourage those contemplating similar efforts.

One young man rose, and stated that during his former life the Lord had often called him to decide by means of accidents and incidents, which at the time he felt to be the strivings of the Holy Spirit. The influence on each occasion passed away, leaving him absorbed in business. Very recently his horse ran away with him when he was driving down a steep hill, at the bottom of which were a rough road and a sharp turn. His utmost exertions failed to arrest the headlong pace; he believed his time was come; all his past life, with its neglected opportunities, rushed into his memory, and he vividly saw the bell he deserved open at the foot of the hill. As he approached the bottom, he jumped for his life, and rolled over and over. At last he regained his feet, and threw himself on his horse's head, shouting out continuously, "Thank God! thank God!" so impressed was he at his merciful deliverance. Time passed on, and, incredible as it may appear, the effect was lost, and he became once more wholly absorbed in business, and quite unconcerned about salvation. He received an order in connexion with the tent meetings, and having executed it on the first evening, was about to leave, when he thought he would wait and see what sort of meetings they were going to be. The words "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God," and the earnest, clear way in which they were pressed home, were blessed to him there and then, and he determined, God helping him, this one thing he would do. And on an early opportunity, in the series of open meetings, he rose and testified that he had found Christ to be his personal Saviour; and he now knew a peace and a joy words could not express.

Another young man stated that he had felt great anxiety during the tent meetings. He had long known the theory of salvation, but he longed to possess the joy and peace that he saw in others resulting from an assurance of their personal salvation. He expressed his deep and anxious longing to a friend who talked with him of the precious promises of Christ, amongst others, "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." When they parted, it was agreed that he would read the following passages in the Word—John iii., Is. liii., and Rom. x., and that they both would pray that the Holy Spirit would reveal the truth to him. The words, blessed by God, to give him the sense of joy and liberty were—"For whoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Rom. x. 13). His testimony was accompanied with great power, and moved the meeting mightily.

A middle-aged man also testified during this week that he had been a great sinner. He related many incidents in his past life. He had seen service in India, China, the Crimea, &c.; he had lain badly wounded in the hospital at Scutari, and had seen men dying on all sides; he had been visited and pleaded with by missionaries and scripture-readers, but all without effect. So hard was his heart, that he sold a little Testament his mother sent him, and spent the proceeds in drink; but, he added, "I thank God that this tent was ever erected. I came in here a lost sinner, and here I have found Christ to be my Saviour, and my heart is full of joy and thankfulness."

The last instance we will give is that of a young man, well known in the town as living a "gay" life. Towards the middle of the first week he accepted the invitation of a friend to accompany him to the tent. He was immediately impressed by the earnestness and reality of what he heard and witnessed, and attended the meetings regularly, foregoing parties and theatre engagements. He was led to decide for Christ; and, in the midst of great hindrances and temptations, he came to the front towards the end of the second week and testified to a change of heart, and to the possession of a "peace which passeth all understanding." He was rallied by his former companions, and sorely tempted. On a recent occasion, a party of his former associates met him in the street; one of them, especially, strove to break his decision, telling him that his new-found faith and joy were a delusion, that in five minutes he could prove to him, from the Bible, that there was no God, no heaven and no hell. He offered to bet him twenty to one that he would not stand, and urged him to give it up and leave it to old wives and to go and "have a glass" with them. None of these things moved him; by God's grace he was enabled to withstand the temptations and the cruel mockings. At this juncture he received unexpected assistance. A good woman, before whose shop the conversation took place, ran out, and said to the tempter, "You're a devil to tempt that young man to his ruin;" and, turning to the young man, she said, "I'm proud of you; I've heard what you've done, and I love you as my own son. Go on trusting in the Lord, and He'll keep you."

One word in conclusion. These blessed results have been given us by the Father in answer to united, believing prayer. The work has but begun. We are praying that those who have found peace may keep their trust fixed on Christ, and that the blessed work may go on and prosper.

SOWING THE SEED.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing of the work of distributing small book-tracts at the large fairs and races of Lancashire and Cheshire, says:—

"We find that the British Workman, Band of Hope, Herald of Mercy, and little book-tracts, especially those with a striking illustration, are well received. I have often heard men, when engaged even striking a bargain over a cow or horse, say, 'Well, that will be nice for my little girl at home; I cannot read, but she will tell me what it is about,'—then, with the same care he would bestow upon his treasured bank-notes, place it carefully in his pocket-book.

"Let me give one illustration which will convey a good impression of our labours. I was returning from R—Fair, thoroughly weary with my work, for I had taken very little refreshment during the day, when I was thrust into a first-class carriage by the station-master, for the third-class were filled with travellers of all kinds. In a corner of the compartment, next the window, sat a well-to-do farmer, reading apparently with great care and thought a small book, which I at once recognized as one of our distribution during the day. After reading for some time, he turned to a lady sitting next to him and said, 'I would not sell this little thing for £20.' 'Why,' replied the lady, 'it seems not to be worth more than twopence.' 'May be not,' said he again, 'but it has showed me the way to Jesus. Oh! I cannot tell you how happy I feel. I have been long seeking for pardoning mercy, but in vain. This morning, in the Fair, a gentleman, not like the rough fellows who sometimes go about on such errands, asked me in a kind gentlemanly manner, at the same time touching his hat, if I would accept a little book, with a few other words, which I do not now recollect, but I could not resist or refuse to take it, and I thank God I did receive it. At dinner, I took it out of my pocket and glanced over it, and as I read on it took me to the Cross, where I am now resting, filled with joy unutterable.'

"This book was called 'A Saviour for you.' Will not some of our readers, out of their abundance, help us in spreading the glad news? They will be well repaid, for our Master smiles upon these efforts to do good." Books or tracts may be sent to James F. Robinson, Frodsham, Cheshire.

RAMSGATE.—Services have been held on the sands here nightly for the past month. There have been large and attentive congregations, and the Lord's power has accompanied the Word.

DR. MORTON BROWN, of Cheltenham, preaching last Lord's-day in the Congregational Chapel at Weymouth, spoke with thankfulness to God of the quickening recently experienced in many places and in many churches, and hoped his short visit would be made a blessing to souls. It is a sure sign of spiritual life when we expect blessing from God, and such expectation shall never be disappointed. This town really needs evangelistic visitation.

ON THE BORDER-LAND.

'Tis over! life's pilgrimage story,
The burden and heat of the day.
Before me lies nought but the glory;
Behind, all the toil of the way.

O, weariness, farewell for ever!
Now "the lame one shall leap as a hart," Disappointment and sorrow shall never Again fling their anguishing dart.

For tears shall be wiped from all faces,
And joy be the portion of each;
Of sickness and pain are no traces,
For death shall be far out of reach.

Set free from the grasp of temptation,
From the sin which dominion hath sought,
I conquer, through much tribulation,
For Jesus my triumph hath bought.

The gates of the City are nearing,
The glory has dazzled my sight,
And voices are now within hearing,
Last heard in earth's shadowy night.

My loved ones, my children, are waiting,
Sweet fruit of my toil, "gone before,"
And they stand in the gate with a greeting,
A welcome for evermore.

And yet there is melody higher
Than their out-gushing language of love,
A song of which saints never tire,
To be sung in the mansions above.

The rapture! Oh, how shall I tell it?
Unspeakable, glorious, divine!
A rapture with nought to dispel it,
A bliss through eternity mine!

I shall kiss the dear feet of the Master,
Behold the fair face of the King.
O chariot-wheels, speed me faster!
O angels, be fleetest of wing!

Press on, till in deep adoration
I mingle my voice with the strain,
"Praise, honour, thanksgiving, salvation,
Be unto the Lamb that was slain!"

PASS IT ROUND.

THE following is one of the numerous and encouraging testimonies we receive:—

"I must tell you what a blessing your CHRISTIAN has been to a young man in this village, who had been very wild. The death of his young wife sobered him, but it was only outward morality.

"He became very much interested in Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and I lent him a CHRISTIAN, that he might read more about them. He says no one can tell how he enjoyed that paper; he took it in, and, from that time, he began to think about his soul. After a while he became deeply anxious, and asked me to visit him; it was the reading and explaining to him the 53rd of Isaiah that, by God's grace, led him to lay his sins on Jesus.

"He is now such a bright, happy Christian, thirsting for God's word. The way he drinks it in is beautiful to see; I meet him once a week for a little Bible-reading, as he needs so much teaching." M. B.

NURSERY OF THE "GOOD SHEPHERD," PORTSEA.—The object of this institution is to furnish a safe place where little children can be left during the day, whilst their mothers, whose occupations as house-cleaners or washerwomen, &c., necessitate their absence from home in order to gain a livelihood, are at work; and here for the small sum of one penny each per day they are washed, fed, and taken good care of, whilst those above three years old pay twopence and are taken to school. It is pleasant to go over the Nursery and to see the children in such good keeping during the whole day from 7 a.m. till 7 p.m., when they are called for, and the Nursery closes, instead of being left in their wretched homes to their own devices and with the almost inevitable consequence of accidents happening to them. During the past year the expenditure has exceeded the receipts by nearly £30. The Treasurer is Mr. S. F. Allnutt, Queen-street, Portsea, Hampshire, from whom orders of admission to see the Nursery can at all times be procured. L. E. D.

WOOLWICH SOLDIERS' HOME & MISSION.

THE great success which has attended the working of the Aldershot Mission Hall, in its moral and spiritual benefits to soldiers, led many officers of the Royal Artillery and others to desire that a Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall should exist at Woolwich, which station is to the Royal Artillery what the camp at Aldershot is to the army at large, every brigade being stationed there for a time, either on its return from, or prior to its proceeding on, foreign service. As the head-quarters of the Royal Artillery, Woolwich is also the chief recruiting station for that branch of the army, and thousands of young men thus commence their career there. The garrison does not, however, consist exclusively of Artillery, for it is composed also of Cavalry, Royal Engineers, Infantry, and Army Service Corps—in all about 7000 men; and as the troops in garrison are frequently changing, any effort made there will in a measure affect the whole army.

The soldier lives an unnatural life in barracks, where he has no privacy, and is obliged to live in close contact with others very dissimilar in character; and how great that dissimilarity must be in some cases may be understood by considering from what classes some of our soldiers are taken. Out of barracks, too, he has no place but the public-house, or worse than that, for unfortunately, with very rare exceptions, the unmarried soldier has very little intercourse with the residents of the town where he is stationed except for evil. Only those who have sought the spiritual good of soldiers know how many among them desire to lead a better life, and how they are hindered by the many temptations to which they are exposed—their want of privacy, and their need of Christian countenance and support when under serious convictions.

An evangelistic meeting was held for a time weekly by the principal military chaplain, in connexion with the Evangelization Society, but it has long been given up, though the attendance was good; and no special effort is now made to win souls to Christ except by those whose influence is comparatively very limited.

The Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall will meet all their wants, containing, as it will, quiet rooms for retirement, reading, and writing, in which light refreshments (such as tea and coffee) will be provided; also amusements, such as chess and draughts. It will be presided over by a Christian lady willing to devote her time and influence to this especial work; and it will also be a rallying-point for the Christian soldiers of the garrison, who will themselves be strengthened, and thus made more useful to others. In the Mission Hall adjoining, Bible-classes will be held, and on certain evenings Gospel addresses given for the benefit of all who can be induced to attend—denominational differences being in no way touched upon. When the proposed institution is opened it may become the centre of much Christian effort in the surrounding district, for many discharged soldiers, soldiers' widows, the wives of soldiers whose husbands are on foreign service, reside at Woolwich; and what may not be done among them and many others connected in various ways with the garrison and the town by those who have the time and inclination to work among them in connexion with the Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall?

It was hoped that the Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall would have been opened last September; this expectation has not been fulfilled through an insufficiency of funds, but the contractor, having undertaken to finish his work by August 16, has been permitted to proceed with it in the expectation that the needful funds will be forthcoming as payment is required.

As great results are looked for, under the blessing of God, from the opening of the Mission Hall, an earnest appeal is made for the money needed to complete it: £800 will suffice for the internal fittings and furnishing of the building. All are invited to help, so that the work for the Lord may commence quickly. Contributions can be forwarded on this account to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN; or to Col. Travers, Shooter's-hill, Woolwich; or to the Honorary Secretary and Treasurer, Lt.-Col. W. D. Forster, Herbert-road, Woolwich.

PORTSMOUTH.—Large and hopeful evangelistic meetings have been held here, and on Southsea Common, for some weeks past.

THE SURPLUS FUND in the hands of the "Cotton Districts Relief Committee" and of the "Central Executive Committee for the Relief of Distress in the Manufacturing Districts," is to be united, and form one fund, which is to be applied to the establishment and maintenance of one or more convalescent hospitals or homes for the cotton districts.

"WITHHOLD NOT THINE HAND."

SIR,—At the present season, when many of those who have been engaged in works of usefulness at home are being scattered over the Continent in search of well-earned relaxation, it may not be out of place to remind them that there is a field of usefulness open to them which is as easy and pleasant as it is important.

If all our English travellers on the Continent were to avail themselves of the frequent opportunities that arise for distributing portions of the Scripture in the language of the country where they are travelling, how many hearts would be reached that may never hear of the Gospel by other means; and who can tell what harvests would, by God's blessing, arise from seed thus sown?

It does not involve much trouble or expense to take, in the corner of a portmanteau, a few dozen copies of the separate Gospels, and a few Testaments in French, German, or Italian, such as can be obtained from the British and Foreign Bible Society; and such little books, if given as presents to attendants at hotels, drivers, guides, porters, &c., or distributed as opportunity may arise, among strangers, are almost invariably received with gratitude; and if offered with tact and delicacy, the offer can never be resented, though bigotry may in very rare cases cause the present to be declined. If ignorance of the language or timidity stands in the way of thus offering the books, a copy may sometimes be left in a hotel bedroom or similar place, where it will be found and valued by a servant.

In this, as in all other works undertaken in our Master's name, discretion and due consideration are of course needed. If the distribution is limited to the manner described above, there is no probability of any official objection being raised; but it is well to bear in mind that, for fear of the dissemination of seditious pamphlets, the laws of some foreign countries are very strict about the distribution of printed matter which has not been authorised by the police. In France, therefore, if anyone intends to distribute tracts or gospels largely, the simple precaution should be taken of sending them all together to the proper office (the Préfecture, I believe), and having each one stamped; no objection can then be raised to their being distributed. It is probable that similar laws exist in Italy and Germany.

Although there is greater satisfaction in distributing the "pure milk of the Word" than any human works—and for nothing else can we claim the promise "My word shall not return to me void."—yet there are many cases where it is pleasant to have some attractive illustrated paper for children, &c., and for this purpose I can heartily recommend the various papers published at the British Workman office, in almost all modern languages, being translations of the British Workman, Children's Friend, &c. These are worth taking with one, if only for the unmixed pleasure which they give to the recipients.

If English travellers who have not made the experiment only knew what pleasure such little presents give, and how much they add to the interest of a journey, they would not need to be reminded of the subject. Yours obediently,

E. H.

[We most strongly recommend the foregoing paper to the notice and hearty acceptance of our travelling friends. We have been wishing, for weeks past, to say something to the same effect, and to give some interesting and encouraging facts related to us by a friend who has had much experience in this work, but pressure on our time and space has prevented hitherto.—Ed.]

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.

On Sunday, the 1st inst., Dr. Ziemann gave farewell addresses at the Circus and the Tent previous to his Continental tour. The day's services commenced with a meeting for Christians in the Tent at eight o'clock. Dr. Ziemann gave an earnest and faithful address, in which he discriminated between the true child of God and the nominal Christian. In the afternoon he addressed a numerous congregation in the Circus, and in the evening he preached to a large crowd in the Tent. Mr. John Hambleton also gave addresses at the Tent and the Circus in the afternoon and evening of the same day. The services at both places were marked by much spiritual power, and, while the young converts were encouraged and stimulated, the Lord added to their number several who had anxiously sought Him.

"Fruits meet for repentance" have been seen in the changed habits of several of that portion of the criminal population who were present at the breakfast given on Sunday morning, July 11. Honest employment has been obtained by some of them, and they may often be seen at the Tent or Circus meetings. A second breakfast was given at the Tent, on Sunday morning, the 25th ult. The destitute and wayfarers were the class who were invited on the present occasion. Upwards of three hundred were thus relieved, and, after they had partaken of the liberal repast provided for them, an address, full of sympathy and abounding with the charity that "never faileth," was delivered by Dr. Ziemann. His theme was "The Marriage Feast," and many were moved to tears, while the majority seemed deeply impressed, as he drew from his subject its most practical lessons. A large number of inquirers remained at the conclusion of the meeting. A third breakfast was given on Sunday morning, the 8th inst., in the Circus, Peter-street. This also was for the destitute. Many infirm and aged people from the courts and alleys of Deansgate, who could not easily walk so far as the Tent in Ardwick, were thus reached, and were enabled to satisfy their physical wants, after which they were told "the old, old story" of John iii. 16 by Messrs. Boon and Goldsmith, appropriate selections from Mr. Sankey's "Sacred Songs and Solos" being sung at intervals by the ladies who had prepared the breakfast. Kindly words were aptly spoken, and individual cases dealt with, and "the word in season" had its due effect on several present.

At the noon prayer-meeting, on Monday, the 9th inst., Mr. W. Hind Smith presided. An interesting account was given of the conversion of a sceptic, who, passing the Circus one evening, was impelled to enter. He was attracted at first by the singing, and he came night after night. At first he repelled every attempt at serious conversation, and objected to any prayer on his behalf, as he did not believe in God. After awhile he confessed that he was unhappy, and a few nights later he asked the speaker to pray for him. An interval of two or three weeks elapsed, during which he was absent; but on his reappearance he called the speaker in a cheery voice, and told him that he had "put his scepticism and his infidel books away, and gone to Christ," and now he was rejoicing in the Saviour.

On Sunday, the 8th inst., and during the greater part of the following week, Mr. John Hambleton conducted the services in the Tent, which was densely crowded every night.

CHRISTIAN WORK FOR WOMEN.

Srs.—At this time of awakening to Christian responsibility, when thousands are asking with renewed earnestness, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" the following brief sketch of a tried and most valuable charity may turn the thoughts of some into a practical channel. The institution of which I speak—a truly preventive mission, in a large manufacturing town—is entirely supported and superintended by a single family; it has but one paid helper. And yet, during the twelve years of its existence it has lent a helping hand to more than five thousand girls at the most critical period of their lives.

No flourish of trumpets heralded the opening of the work, and the building is as unpretentious as the quiet Christian matron who is the mainspring of its busy life. It is a small, common, eight-roomed house, only distinguished from others in the row by a small notice-board, headed "Free Registry for Friendless Girls." District visitors were simply asked to direct fitting cases to it; and such cases are, alas! not few in any of our large towns. Young girls just passing out of childhood, motherless or fatherless, or worse than orphaned, inmates of miserable homes or low lodging-houses, but as yet unstained by actual vice, and wishing to earn a decent livelihood—what visitor's heart has not ached at the impossibility of adequately helping such? Just to these the little Home opened its doors. Any young girl so circumstanced may enter there, and remain for a few weeks, or longer, under the matron's eye, learning the elements of household work and household property, of washing and sewing, and then be drafted into some little place of service. Or if, from any cause, an urgent case cannot be received into the Home, she may be boarded out with some respectable woman, till she can be taken in, or passed on to service. A small outfit is lent, if necessary, to become her own after time enough has passed to test her wish to do well; and stipulation is always made with the mistress that she shall attend a place of worship, and receive a monthly call from a visitor attached to the institution. This periodical visit has a strong influence for good on both sides; a hearty warning is often withdrawn, and penitence expressed after a few words of quiet advice, reproof, or prayer.

When girls leave their places, the Mission is again their home, and the matron ready to advise them as to the best use of their scanty wages, and to help in removing their outfit. An annual tea-meeting, when prizes are bestowed on those who have kept their places for a certain time, brings together all who are within reach, and strengthens the influence of the Home.

Now is it only at the first step in life that young servants are helped by the "Free Registry." Sad cases are only too common where girls, brought from a distance by distresses, are turned adrift at a moment's warning for some comparatively trifling fault, and thus exposed defenceless to the worst perils of great towns. Many such have been sheltered for a time, and helped, and indeed no one can estimate the wide-spread blessing of which this modest charity has been the centre. Hundreds owe to it, under God, the respectability and happiness of their lives; and many have borne thankful testimony to its benefits, on death-beds lighted up by Christian hope.

I must apologize for this long intrusion on your space, but I trust that the importance of the subject may be sufficient excuse. God grant that this simple statement may be the means of originating similar centres of light and help amid the well-nigh hopeless gloom of many of our great towns.

Yours faithfully, A. U.

P.S.—Mrs. H., Poplar-terrace, Wolverhampton, will gladly answer definite inquiries from anyone anxious to commence a similar work.

AMERICA: NEED OF EVANGELISTS.

WHILE this land has been enjoying such showers of blessing through the instrumentality of the honoured servants of God who have just left us, there are "fields white unto the harvest" across the water. Having just returned from a few weeks in the States and Canada, I have seen the blessed results of the recent visits of Mr. Varley and Mr. Moorhouse there. There are comparatively few evangelists in America. Mr. George Needham has been labouring in various parts; his head-quarters are at Philadelphia. In the summer he pitches a tent in the city, which is largely attended. In the winter he preaches the Gospel in the various towns to which he is invited. Many spoke of the wonderful openings in that country, and of the extreme need that exists for evangelists, and particularly for some who could permanently remain in the country and devote themselves to the work. The same cry met us wherever we went in Canada. In Toronto, where Mr. Varley was much appreciated, there seemed to be a great thirst for more teaching in the Word. Some earnest Christians there, as elsewhere, besought us that on our return home we would use every means to urge some of the Lord's servants to go over. I therefore send this short notice, trusting that some who read it may be led by God to say, "Here am I, Lord send me."

Bible-readings for Christians are as much needed as evangelistic meetings. We were told, "The Bible is read, but not studied here;" and we found it but too true. Nothing would prove so powerful a remedy for the worldliness which is sapping the spiritual life of professing Christians as getting them to their Bibles.

I should be very happy to communicate to any interested in this subject the names and addresses of those who, either in the States or Canada, would no doubt be willing to co-operate with evangelists from this country.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

PROBLEMS OF FAITH: A Contribution to present Controversies. Hodder and Stoughton.—Every year the unbelief of the age shapes itself into new and specific forms; and the Presbyterian College in London has had, for the last three years, a special course of lectures to young men—of which the volume before us contains the third series—dealing with each new phase as it has arisen. The "present controversies" referred to in the title-page are, of course, scientific, and as might have been expected, the memorable meeting of the British Association at Belfast has to answer for bringing to the front the greater part of the "Problems" which are dealt with in the successive lectures this year. The book opens with a preface by Dr. Dykes, which is advertised in gilt letters on the back, but which, it must honestly be confessed, is more intended to benefit the publisher than the reader. The first lecture is by the Duke of Argyll upon a congenial theme, "Anthropomorphism in Theology." The paper is written with discrimination, and is well worthy of preservation. It is followed by what is certainly the most able and valuable paper of the book, "On the Hypothesis that Animals are Automata," by Professor Watts, of Belfast, whose recent contributions in this department have been so timely. This paper is marked by the same thoroughness and balance which have commanded for its predecessors so much influence and respect, and we should be surprised if, one day, its power be not acknowledged in circles where few men not themselves professed scientists have ventured to trespass. Dr. Fraser's paper on "Superstition in Christendom," which follows, is a little out of the line of the others, but not less useful in its way; while Dr. Carruthers, who comes last, cannot be too warmly thanked for another of his manly, and, coming from him, weighty attacks upon "Scientific Unbelief."

THE LATE C. F. PERRIN.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST.—It has pleased the Lord to take to Himself another of his faithful servants, whose delight had been for many years to declare his salvation to perishing souls.

Charles Frederick Perrin fell asleep in Jesus on May 7 at Hamilton-on-Farth, North-West Coast, Tasmania. The illness which was the immediate cause of his departure was brought on by exposure to rain and cold for several hours during a journey overland, taken in the Lord's service by my husband and self, my youngest child accompanying us. We were on our way from Table Cape to Barrington and Kentishbury, expecting to spend a month among the young converts in those places, where God has been manifestly working of late. The people were eagerly looking forward to a visit from my husband for their "furtherance and joy of faith." Hamilton was to be our halting-place for two nights. We reached it after a most trying journey of sixteen hours, during which we met with an accident that might have cost myself and little one our lives. On reaching our temporary destination some of God's dear people received us kindly for his sake, and with them we tarried. Two days after, symptoms of rheumatic fever showed themselves in my husband, which rapidly increased. Much fervent prayer was made in many parts of Victoria and Tasmania for his recovery. On Sunday, May 2 (his thirty-third birthday), those who tended him were cheered by seeing a change for the better in the dear invalid; but next day a relapse took place, the disease reached the heart and lungs, and on Friday night, the 7th, the message went forth, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee," and peacefully he went to meet Him. For some days he had been unconscious at intervals, but the name of Jesus would always recall him. He loved to hear portions of Scripture read, and hymns sung and repeated for him, and would often ask for the hymn, "There is a name I love to hear," &c. He said he had learnt such precious lessons of God's love during those last days that no words could express them. It was given him to have one sweet glimpse of Jesus ere he departed to be with Him for ever. Those among whom he laboured, both in the home countries, and more abundantly of late years in Victoria and Tasmania, best know what a loss the Church of Christ has sustained in his removal. None but the Great Shepherd himself knows what that loss is to your sorrowing sister,

SARAH PERRIN.

NO MORE CONSCIENCE OF SINS.—II.

In considering the question whether it is Scriptural to speak of the blood of Christ as being continuously or repeatedly applied to a believer's conscience, we must bear in mind that there can be no real opposition between the truth of "no more conscience of sins" set forth in the Epistle to the Hebrews, and another truth, equally taught in the same Epistle, of the continuous cleansing of the conscience from defilement engendered by daily contact with an evil nature and an evil world. We find both these truths set forth together in perfect harmony in Heb. ix. 13, 14—"If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God."

Here are combined together two distinct types. One the sacrifice of the day of Atonement, "the blood of bulls and of goats"; the other, the sacrifice of the red heifer (Numb. xix.), whose ashes, mixed with water, were kept to be applied, as occasion might require, to the unclean. Now, mark that both types have but one antitype, and that the blood of Christ. Both shadows point to the one substance. It is not "how much more shall the blood of Christ and the Word" (or anything else), but how much more shall the blood of Christ effect for the purifying of the conscience than what these two types in their respective spheres effected for the purifying of the flesh.

Each type, therefore, may be regarded as presenting us with a different aspect of the value of "the precious blood of Christ." The first, plainly pointing to Lev. xvi, shows the value of the blood in opening up access to God, and putting away sin once and for ever judicially as before Him. The second, as plainly pointing to the repeated application of "the water of separation—a purification for sin" (Numb. xix. 9)—shows forth that aspect of the blood of Christ which meets our constant defilement from contact with death. We live in a world of spiritual death. We inhabit bodies of death. Even if Christ be in us, "the body is dead because of sin" (Rom. viii. 10). No wonder, therefore, that the very language in which we often express our feelings to one another bears testimony to this fact. We speak of deadness, coldness, and of lifeless prayers; and our separation from communion with God would be, in consequence, as real as the Jewish worshipper's exclusion from the tabernacle, were it not for the blood which, applied by faith, "purges the conscience from dead works, to serve [or maintain the worship of] the Living God."

Before leaving the subject of this type, it is interesting to observe that the blood itself, in what might be called a concentrated form, was found in this water of purification. It will be seen in Numb. xix. 5 that when the heifer was put to death, and some of its blood sprinkled seven times before the tabernacle of the congregation, the body containing the blood was burned in the fire; for the blood was not, as in the case of the ordinary sin-offering, poured out at the altar. It is expressly said (v. 5), "One shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood."* We claim, therefore, the testimony of this interesting passage as a distinct and unequivocal authority for teaching the constant and repeated application of the blood, in a secondary aspect, to the believer's conscience, for the express purpose of maintaining that communion with God and spiritual worship into which the blood, viewed in its primary aspect, at first admitted him.

Let us now briefly consider the same lesson as taught in the symbolical action of our Lord in washing his disciples' feet (John xiii.).

The Lord Jesus rises from supper and washes his disciples' feet. Peter, supposing it to be only an act of humility, resents it. Jesus, however, intimates that a deeper meaning lies beneath the surface—"If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." Peter, at once seeing the spiritual truth intended, replies, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." But this entire washing, corresponding to that which the soul receives at conversion ("the washing of regeneration," Titus iii. 5), is not that which Christ intended to set forth in figure on this occasion. He therefore replies, "He that is washed—bathed—needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit, and ye are clean."

Can there be any doubt as to the meaning of all this? The bather, as he leaves the water, contracts fresh defilement in every step he takes along the sandy beach or dusty road, and therefore needs to wash his feet though he be "clean every whit." And so the Christian, though he has washed away his sins, "calling upon the name of the Lord" (Acts xxii. 16), and though he be in the sphere of justification "perfected for ever," yet he needs to wash off the daily contracted defilements arising from contact with a sinful world whilst encompassed with a sinful nature. Or, to express it more in accordance with our Lord's action, the same gracious Saviour who washed him at the first continues to wash him as to his walk to the end. Well may the scene of the feet-washing be introduced with the words, "Having loved his own that were in the world, He loved them unto the end."

But in what element does this after-washing take place? Surely in the same in which the first washing was received. What bather ever washed his feet in a different element from that in which he had already washed his body? If "clean every whit" be in virtue of the blood, then the still-needed washing of the feet must be the secondary and supplemental application of the virtue of the same blood to the necessities of the daily walk.

Much light is thus thrown upon our Lord's practical application of the subject to his disciples, as to their own conduct to one another, "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet." If I your Lord and Master have assured you by this act of the forgiveness you may expect at my hands for the sins of your daily walk, ye ought also to forgive one another.

But, it may be objected, how can believers forgive one another in the same sense that Christ forgives them? We answer, that though God alone forgives sins in their relation to Himself, yet Christians are called upon to forgive one another in that sphere in which their sins are offences against one another. The best answer to the objection, and indeed the best Scripture explanation of our Lord's words, is to be found in Eph. iv. 32—"Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God in Christ [so in Greek] hath forgiven you; be ye therefore imitators of God as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us." Compare also the parallel passage in Col. iii. 13—"Forbearing one another and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

* Delitzsch observes that "the burning of the blood may easily be explained, on the ground that the ashes of the animal were to furnish the quintessence of a means of purification, in which the blood, already endowed with atoning power through the sprinkling of one portion towards the holy tent, formed the most important ingredient."

We remember once having heard an excellent Christian brother (now with the Lord) endeavour to expound this passage on the supposition that water here means "the Word." "If Christ (he said) washed our feet by bringing his Word to bear upon our walk, we ought to act similarly to our brethren." But then he seemed to feel that this was a delicate and difficult task, requiring much prayer and much wisdom; and so the greater part of his discourse was occupied with cautions and safeguards and wise counsels as to the almost insuperable difficulty of one Christian endeavouring to set another right by the Word.† How beautifully simple, as compared with so cumbersome an explanation, is that which Scripture itself affords.

Moreover, let us observe that the point of the argument conveyed in the words, "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet," is altogether lost in this interpretation; for a "Lord and Master" is surely entitled to set his servants right by his Word in a way in which they cannot be expected, by any logical sequence, to act towards one another. But let the washing of the feet be viewed as forgiveness, and all is clear; the reasoning then is unanswerable. Nor is it the first time that the Lord Jesus speaks in this strain (see Matt. xviii. 32, 33), "I forgave thee all that debt because thou desiredst me; shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee?"

Direction of the walk by the Word is a very important subject, and one that has a sphere of its own in the teaching of Scripture. But the cleansing of the way (Ps. cxix. 9) is a different thing from the cleansing of the conscience. If the Word convicts me of wrong-doing on any point, I may (through grace) avoid the evil for the future; but that does not cleanse my conscience from the stain arising from failure in the past. If I wish to know what alone does remove guilt from the conscience, as it has already judicially removed guilt from before the Throne, I must give heed to what the Word of God says, and that with a distinctness which seems to set this controversy at rest: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse† us from all unrighteousness."

† Mr. Darby, in his "Synopsis," while devoting about three pages to the subject of the feet-washing in John xiii., passes by this practical application of it with only one short sentence. "It is after the pattern of this service of Christ in grace that we are to act with regard to our brethren." But how we are to act he does not say. It may be prudent on his part to avoid a difficulty, but it certainly betrays the weakness of his interpretation.

‡ Our translators are fairly censured for a habit of translating differently the same word in the same passage. They have avoided this fault here (as we have marked above by italics), and so have preserved an important connexion. Mr. Darby, in the preface to

MISSION TO THE GALEKA KAFFIRS;

NEAR THE RIVER BASHEE, S. AFRICA.

BY MAJOR MALAN.

I HAVE been waiting until I had put up the walls of a house, at whatever spot the Lord would choose, in the Galeka tribe, before I wrote to thank the friends in Great Britain who have sent me help for this work. I do thank them from my heart, and I ask them to accept these words as sufficient thanks. The Lord reward them according to his word.

This mission has been founded in prayer—prayers of men who have laboured among the Kaffirs in years past; prayers of Tio Soga the Kaffir missionary, whose body rests among his own people; prayers of Kaffir Christians; prayers of missionaries now labouring; my own prayers for many years.

Very briefly must I write. In January, 1872, before leaving the army, I knelt by the grave of Tio Soga; in Galeka-land, and prayed that the Lord would raise up men to carry on his work in this tribe. He has now used me to answer my own prayer.

In January, 1874, he sent me back to this country a witness for his name. The Mission of the United Presbyterian Church at Mbulu, of which He gave me charge, was under the ministerial supervision of the Rev. B. S. Leslie, missionary to Krelu and the Galeka tribe. He told me of the dark state of the Galekas near the Bashee, and I was asked by this Mission to open up this country in the name of the Lord. These things led me to pray.

In August, 1874, Mr. Leslie asked me to go with him to visit these parts.

August 19.—I was awaked while sleeping in a Kaffir hut at a chief's kraal, by the laughter of the heathen, who were cooking a feast for a witch-doctor. It was my birthday, and it sounded like a defiance from Satan to all the earnest prayers I had offered that this journey should be for the spread of the knowledge of the name of the Lord Jesus among the Kaffirs near the Bashee. I rose to my knees in prayer, and continued long during the night. Next day we went to the chief Uhindinxowa, Krelu's brother, near the Bashee, and after another season of prayer during the night, I gave myself to the Lord for this work, for as long as He should need me. I must confess it cost me some tears, for I knew it meant a more lengthened separation from my wife and child.

On my return from a visit to the French Missions in Basuto-land, and the American Missions in Natal, in April, 1875, I visited the chief Krelu, and obtained his leave to choose a place for my mission. Meanwhile, two brethren, Clarke and Noble, had arrived from England with their wives, and were, by Mr. Leslie's kindness, at Tutura, his station in Krelu's country. Thus everything was arranged by the Lord for this work.

After a wonderful week of answered prayer in the completion of these arrangements, the Lord led me to commence work.

May 9, 1875: Lord's-day.—Having been for years firmly convinced that our Lord's words, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting," have a deep spiritual signification for his people individually and collectively in connexion with the preaching of the Gospel—that neglect of these things has led to deadness and defeat,—I from the first determined that three days' fast and prayer should be the opening of my mission. I preached on these words to the Church in the afternoon, and invited my brethren to join me in attending to this admonition of the Lord. Prayer and fasting are the most powerful weapons against the powers of darkness amongst the heathen nations of Africa and Asia.

May 10.—Prayer for sanctification of spirit, soul, and his new translation, says of this tendency of theirs: "It is a very great and serious mistake . . . in some cases the effect is very serious, and in all the connexion is lost." And yet Mr. Darby, in his translation of this very passage (1 John i. 7-9), renders the same Greek verb, first "cleanse," then "purify." Has he not been betrayed into this inconsistency by a fear of giving Scripture sanction to the thought of repeated cleansing?

body to the Lord for his work, and for grace to labour faithfully.

May 11.—Prayer that the Lord would go before, and choose our place for us; that He would provide for us, and direct our mission.

May 12.—Prayer that the Lord would break the power of witchcraft in the Galeka tribe, and that He would convert Krelí and thousands of his people by the preaching of his name.

May 13.—Is it too great a thing to write that at once, in remarkable ways, the Lord began to answer? I was very tired from months of riding and hard work, and especially the spiritual efforts of these three days. But the Lord led me to go forth at once to find a place for his name near the Bashee. I told Solomon—my Gaika servant—to get ready, purposing to go alone, but two elders of the Church asked to come. Glad of their guidance, we rode to the huts of Lot, a native Christian, who has settled among the Galekas to preach Christ to them. That night I had faith to pray that signs and wonders might be done in the name of the Lord Jesus. Oh, the delight of praying as the Lord Jesus prayed, alone with God, away from the abodes of man! (Mark i. 35, Luke vi. 12).

May 14.—Among some heathens who came to hear God's Word was the brother of a chief living in a kraal across the valley. He said his brother had been spitting much blood during the night. I felt this was of the Lord—that my prayers might be answered. I told him the Lord Jesus, the Son of God, alone can stay or heal disease. I will pray to Him. No sooner was the prayer finished, than a messenger came to say he had just fainted. I knew it was well. I prayed again in my own hut. When I went over an hour afterwards, he sat up and talked. I prayed and preached Jesus, reading the story of Jairus' daughter.

Answers to Prayer.—When (June 18, 19, 20)—(1) I was again there with Mr. Leslie, the chief walked each day across the steep valley to hear the Gospel. (2) He sent away the witch-doctor whom his heathen friends had called, saying, "I believe what the missionary read" (about the Lord Jesus). He refused to allow sacrifice, and this was only done by order of Krelí against his will. (3) His mother returned from the preaching of the Gospel by Lot, on Sunday, June 27, saying, "I will wash away this filth from my head. I will take Christ." When her heathen friends said, "You, a chief, you turn Christian?" "Yes," she replied, "my being a chief won't save me from death; Christ alone can save me." She was much impressed when Mr. Leslie preached on June 19, and said to her son, after my visits, "Believe what he has said about Christ."

The same day (May 14) rode on towards the Bashee, and slept at Ulindinxowa's kraal. I heard on my way that Krelí was there, and that there was to be a large heathen dance next day. But I knew that He who glorified Himself through the golden image on the plains of Babylon was with me, and would glorify Himself again.

May 15.—"Wonderful Counsellor, the mighty God!" Before the dance I went to Krelí, and told him that I had come to look for the place he had promised to give me. He asked me where I wished to go. "In the midst of your people, between Kwaga's river and the Bashee." After further converse he said, "There is a very good place where four chiefs meet. They are all here to-day. I will send for them, and tell them to speak the thing now. If you will wait, I will send them to you with my word." In the afternoon his brother came to me, saying, "The chiefs have spoken. Tubo is not here, but we will send him word. We give you the place of which the chief Krelí has spoken. I will take you there on Monday. If you like it, it is yours." He then added, "The chief Krelí bids me tell you that he is ashamed that a great man like you should come and live among his people, because they are all bad. If he had any good people he would be glad; but they are all bad." My answer was of Him who came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Crowds of men and women came to the dance. Well did I understand why the Good Shepherd had sent his servants after these lost sheep. Thus the Lord gave me, without any trouble, the best site in the country, and made Krelí and his chiefs find it for me! Prayer answered.

May 16.—Preached at the chief's kraal. Rested, being weary.

May 17.—Krelí's brother took me to the place, which I found to be what Krelí had said it was. The native Christians were delighted with the ground and with the situation. He then gave it to me. There was a trading store there, which was the only objection, as it might become a brandy shop; but I had faith that the Lord would make it a blessing to the praise of his grace. Rode to the hut of the chief Si Tchaka, one of the four, to thank him for the grounds.

May 18.—Preached to him and his people. He said he was very glad we were coming; so also says Krelí's brother. Rode to Lot's.

May 19.—Returned to Tutura, calling on Krelí and thanking him for the ground.

Next day I started to visit the churches of the Mbulu Mission and other churches in Fingo-land, and returned to Tutura on May 31.

Things cannot be done in Africa as in England. Our preparations were made, and the waggons loaded June 17.

June 18.—Twenty years, to a day, after the Lord preserved my life at the assault on Sebastopol, I started with my brethren Clarke and Noble and my old comrade Mr. Radley, to begin the Lord's work among the Galeka heathen near the Bashee. We first went to Krelí's kraal. Mr. Leslie introduced my brethren to Krelí, as he is "Krelí's missionary." He remarked in conversation, "You have a beautiful band of soldiers; I hope they will do well." The Lord often sends messages to his servants by the lips of the heathen. We slept at Lot's that night. Next day we went out to invite the people to come and hear the Word on the Lord's-day.

June 20: Lord's-day.—I was following my Lord's example, "a great while before it was day," when I heard the singing of women. A heathen dance was about to commence. Lot was getting up as I returned to his hut, and I asked him to go with me to the kraal. I told the chief there "I was early in prayer to God. I heard the women singing. I said, This is a sin against God. The people do not know. I must tell them this is God's day, and they must not dance, but come and hear God's Word." I spoke to the women and to the dancers. The dance was stopped. Mr. Leslie and Lot both remarked that the most attentive man that day was this chief! Mr. Leslie preached a full gospel from the healing of the nobleman's son; others took part. We commemorated the Lord's death, after which I spoke on the words, "Who instead of the joy set before Him [his Father's glory] endured the cross."

June 21.—After prayer together, my brethren went on with the waggons. Mr. Leslie returned to Tutura, and I rode to the Idutywa, having to make arrangements about post and sheep, and wishing to see Mr. Gosse, the trader who owned the store on my mission ground. I am always welcome at the house of Mr. Garner, the officiating magistrate, where I slept.

June 22.—Rode on. Visited Mr. Robertson, Missionary Free Church of Scotland, on Qabaga, and then went to Mr. Gosse's house. Had the happiness of finding his wife a Christian and of learning that he is one. Reached the place which the Lord had chosen for me after sunset. The waggons had been delayed seven hours at one drift, three at another. Mr. Gosse's sons gave me food and offered me a bed in their Kaffir store; but wishing to enjoy much prayer, and the lovely night, I spent that night on the "felt," and found the grass soft as down.

June 23.—Before the sun rose I was on a hill opposite the ground to see where the first rays touched, as an eastern aspect is the best for house and garden. As I walked back I passed a kraal. "I must begin now to preach the Lord Jesus." Thus saying, I entered a hut full of men and women and told them of the Son of God, the Saviour in heaven. Before leaving I asked if the owner of a hut near to which I purposed to put my house was there. He was. When I told him where I purposed to build, he said, "Hai, hai; no, no; you will be too near me. I am Tubo's man. This is his ground. Until I hear from him you must not build." I spoke peacefully and went my way. The waggons had arrived. We pitched our tent and breakfasted. The "No" of the heathen guardian of Tubo's ground sent me off to Kreli's brother, on whose "head" Kreli had put me, and gave me a delightful opportunity of preaching the Gospel. I found him at a Galeka dinner-party of fifty men, to whom I preached for half an hour before dinner on the parable of the feast. I then dined with them, and the most interesting dinner-party it was. The dear dark-red Kaffirs cut their meat capitably with assegais, and it was carved and helped with far less noise than there would be at such a party in England. On my return to camp I found Mr. Gosse. I told him my difficulty about a site for the mission-house. He told me, "I wish to help missions to the best of my power." The Lord inclined his heart freely to give me the site of his shop and the four buildings. These are in a shaky condition, but they are very useful for kitchen, stables, and natives' huts for the present necessity. I gave him, as only just and honest, the value of two new Kaffir huts for his sons, who will open a store at some little distance from the mission-houses. Thus again the Lord provided for us wonderfully, and rewarded my faith by making the store a blessing.

June 24.—Rode to visit Tubo, whose pride had been touched by Kreli not sending word about me. I spoke peacefully. Preached at many kraals on my way back to camp, which we had pitched near the store, where the houses are to be built.

June 25.—Laid the foundation of our first wood-hut with sneezewood stumps. Next day put up frame. I rode out in the evening to invite the heathen to come and hear the Word.

June 27th: Lord's-day.—Leaving our only interpreter with my brethren Clarke and Noble to preach in camp and visit kraals near, I rode to Ulindinxowa's kraal alone, and trusting in the Lord, who is with me, I prayed, preached, and gave out the hymns in Kaffir. The chief and his people assembled in one of his huts, and I never had a more attentive congregation. They did not laugh at any mistakes I made, and when, at the close, I asked if they understood what I had said, they replied, "Yes, very well; 'Asnazwi ammandis'—sweet words." I praised the Lord for this, for I had only preached his own sweet name—"Jesus, the Son of God," the Saviour from sin and death. I visited many kraals on my way back. The people understood me. Found my brethren were out engaged in the same work when I returned.

June 28.—With my brethren and Radley went on building our house, being desirous to put up shelter for my brethren and their wives as soon as possible. I purpose to live in a Kaffir hut.

June 29.—The walls of our house were set up. Chose four corner-stones for the wood foundation to rest on, which we laid with prayer.

June 30.—Rode with Mr. Noble to Tutura, that he might escort the wives to our home at Uxolo. Found that Solomon had bought me two good horses among his people, for which I had prayed. I was therefore able to send back the other two that Mr. Clarke might come in to accompany his wife in her journey by waggon. The wives are to leave Tutura on July 7 for Uxolo, which name I have given to my station, as it means Peace or Salem.

Thus this Mission has been opened. The hand of the Lord has been most markedly with me in it, and I praise Him. The expenses have been very great, and the money which has been given to me has been expended in the outfits, passages, material for building, food, waggon, and other necessities of the Mission.

My brethren and their wives are much encouraged by the Lord's many blessings towards them. We know it is "not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord." Our prayer and effort is the winning of this part of the Galeka tribe to the faith of Christ. "I will work, and who shall let it?" (Isa. xliii. 13).

"VICTORY! JOY! REST!"*

THERE are so many misapprehensions abroad regarding the views held by those Christians who are earnestly urging their brethren to follow the Lord wholly, to yield themselves entirely to God, and to believe the teaching of the Holy Ghost in the Word of God relative to sin not having dominion over them, that I have thought it well to show what Christians of proved worth have said on the subject, and then to give extracts from letters recently received from Christians, who, having been freed from legalism through the power of God, are rejoicing in a rest, joy, and victory, in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, hitherto unknown to them, into which they have been guided by the Holy Spirit; whose hearts are filled with abundant praise and thanksgivings; and who fully realize that the Lord Jesus Christ "is able even to subdue all things unto Himself."

About 1860, Dr. Robert S. Candlish, Minister of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, uttered the following words, whilst giving lectures on 1 John ii.: "Why am I troubled? What is it that distresses and vexes me? Alas! it is no mere vague consciousness of imperfection. It is some specific 'thorn in the flesh' buffetting me. When I would pray, my soul cleaves to the dust; when I am in my closet, with my door shut against all the world, all sorts of worldly thoughts intrude. I seek to control my temper, and some slight provocation oversets me. Try as I may, I am sure to fail. Is there never to be an end of this weary, heartless, fruitless struggle? Is it to be always thus—sinning and repenting, repenting and going back to sin?"

"Nay, let me hear John's loving words: 'My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not.' Believe these things, realize them, act them out, act upon them. They are such things as, if believed, realized, acted upon, and acted out, will make it possible for you, 'not to sin'; for they are such things as, if thus apprehended, change the character of the whole struggle. They transfer it to a new and higher platform. We are brought into a position in relation to God, in which holiness is no longer a desperate negative strife, but a blessed positive achievement. Evil is overcome with good."

Dean Alford has made the following remarks on 1 John iii. 22: "Whatsoever we ask we receive from Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." "Out of Christ there are no good works at all. Entrance into Christ is not won nor merited by them. In Christ every work done by faith is good, and is pleasing to God. The doing of such works is the working of the life of Christ in us; they are its signs; they are its fruits; they are not of us, but of it and of Him."

From A.—January 21, 1875.—"My heart is full of gratitude to our heavenly Father for bringing—amongst us. I have been so slow to go up to possess the land! but at last the desert is passed, and I see before me the length and the breadth of the land—the treasures that Jesus has for me in himself. I quite understand now the entering into rest. I cannot express to you how happy I am, how every morning I wake rejoicing at the prospect of serving Jesus, and doing nothing but his will during the day.

"I had been for some months in a curious frame of mind, growing in grace, on the one hand, sometimes, and at others sinking deeper and deeper in doubt. I went through terrible temptations in this form. Now I feel so sure, all doubt is gone, I believe. . . . I trace so clearly the loving Fatherly hand that has been educating me, which I was always so afraid would leave me to myself. The Epistle to the Hebrews was revealed to me in quite a new light during the Week of Prayer."

HOLIDAY JOTTINGS.

BY GAWIN KIRKHAM.

DURING three weeks' absence from town I have travelled about 300 miles, and taken part in thirty-four meetings, nineteen of which were in the open air, and three in barns.

THE GOSPEL AT THE GALA.

At Bury St. Edmunds there is an annual gala established by the Friendly Societies. This year the rain fell in torrents, so that the actual enjoyment of the pleasure-seekers must have been reduced to the lowest ebb. However, the drenching rain did not sour the people's tempers, for they took our tracts cheerfully. My fellow-labourer was George Pledger, of the Kilburn Home for Little Boys. He and I gave away 3000 tracts in three hours. In the afternoon a tea-meeting was held in the Baptist Chapel in Garland-street, followed by a public meeting. Both were well attended. I never see this chapel without thinking of Cornelius Elven, who entered into rest on August 10, 1873, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. A marble tablet on the wall states that "he was pastor of this church and people for fifty years; to whom, not only by his lips, but by an eminently consistent life, he faithfully and successfully preached the Gospel of Christ. He was a native of this town, from the inhabitants of which he received, on more than one occasion, substantial tokens of esteem. And during this long ministry it was his happiness to gather to himself the communion and love of all good men of every church." How well I remember his portly form and cheerful voice in my first visit to this town ten years ago, and on several subsequent occasions!

The meeting above alluded to is chiefly designed as a safeguard to the young, and a means of rational enjoyment to those who do not care for the trifles of the gala. Might not each town and village establish similar harbours of refuge when questionable gatherings are being held? The finale in the Botanical Gardens, where the gala is held, consists of a grand display of fireworks. People flock to the Angel-hill to see them. So we adjourn from the chapel to sing and preach to this crowd, and to those coming out of the gardens. The whole scene is as vividly written on my memory as anything I have ever witnessed.

Nor is this preaching without its fruit. On leaving the chapel, an old man grasped my hand and saluted me. Whether he thought my response was not sufficiently hearty I cannot say, but he exclaimed, with great animation, "Don't you know this is my birthday?" "All right," I said, "I remember." So I do; for he was brought to the Lord through the preaching on the Angel-hill on the gala-day some years ago, and has since been a happy, consistent member of the Garland-street Chapel. So we need not mind a few grumbling letters in the local papers, the writers of which misquote Scripture and charge us with marring the innocent pleasures of the people.

BARN SERVICES

are very popular in Suffolk and Essex, and, as a farmer's son, I feel thoroughly at home in them. My kind host at Bury has a farm at Hargrave, seven miles off. Thither we repaired one Sunday evening and had a congregation of more than 300. As the village is but small, some of the people must have walked considerable distances. Sacks full of wheat served both for platform and seats. I told my friend that it ought to fetch more for being thus consecrated. And so it did, but not for the reason I gave. The other two services were at Great Oakley and Tendring, in Essex. The first, though held at the close of a busy working-day, was almost as well attended as the one at Hargrave. We are accustomed here to hold a second meeting on the high-road. This year it was remarkable for an address from Thomas Cole, a young man brought up in the village, and now on a visit to his aged parents. He has been seven years in Canada, and is Secretary of the Coburg Young Men's Christian Association. He appealed to the people as knowing him, many of them having been his school-fellows. The effect was good. We then sang from the Red Barn to the centre of the village called the "Plain," and ended a deeply interesting evening with a brief address and prayer. I shall remember the Tendring barn service as being the means of teaching me what a bat is. In my address I had alluded to it as a "bird." Next morning, a child seven years old said—"Mr. Kirkham made a mistake in his sermon last night: a bat is not a bird." Hearing of this, I looked into the matter, and found what the bat is. I have since asked many persons, old and young, what a bat is, and not one has given me a correct answer.

ON A VILLAGE GREEN.

I accepted an invitation to a lovely retreat near Framlingham, in Suffolk, purposing to have entire rest; but I found that the state of the people on Saxtead-green, close by, weighed heavily on the mind of my kind hostess, so I consented to address them in the open-air. We had a Bible-reading under the trees on the lawn each afternoon, and for three successive evenings we proclaimed the Gospel out of doors, growing more in love with our work each day. Imagine the preacher on a stool by the road-side, in front of some cottages. By his side are the friends who have come out to help in singing Sankey's "Songs and Solos." To the right are the boys on a heap of stones; immediately in front are the girls in a group. To the left are the working-men laid on the ground or leaning against the hedge. The occupiers of the cottages sit by the garden-gates, and invariably bring out chairs for the visitors. The geese sometimes come too near, as their cackling does not blend very harmoniously with the service. Some of the passing vehicles are drawn up for a few minutes; this is specially the case with the postman's cart, as he calls for the letters left at the rural post-office close by. Each night the number of hearers increases, and at last the parting is reluctant on their part and on ours. Doubtless in years to come the associations of this village green will give us more pleasure than the massive and crumbling walls of Framlingham Castle, though their reputation is world-wide.

AWAY TO THE NORTH.

Once a year, for upwards of fifteen years, I have spent a Sunday in the good old town of Lancaster. Seven services a day would be too much to be continued regularly, but hitherto for this one day strength has always been given. Besides, there are so many cheerful, willing helpers, both in speaking and singing. My fellow-labourer this year was Robert Craig, who accompanied me in 1863 and 1869 to Holland, where we preached to the Dutch by interpreters. The most noteworthy feature of the open-air meetings in Lancaster is the readiness of the people to listen. They are always on the spot in considerable numbers before the time appointed. Who that has seen it can readily forget the solid mass of people in Dalton-square or the market place? and yet God knows how intensely I long to see more fruit. What are large or attentive audiences if souls are not saved? In appealing to the people whether I should meet any in heaven who had been won to Christ by these meetings, I was told of a young man, now a local preacher, who dates his conversion to them two years ago. He afterwards gave his experience very satisfactorily at a meeting indoors. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not."

ON THE BEACH.

How easy it is to collect a crowd on the beach, and how glad many of the people are to have their thoughts thus occupied! We visited Morecambe on the Monday afternoon, and though our voices were the worse for Sunday's wear, we managed to say a few words, and the people helped us to sing the hymns. It was my birthday (August 9), and I was within ten miles of Greasingham, where I was born. I trust this fact enabled me more fully to fix upon the mind the necessity of the new birth. My natural and spiritual birth both occurred in the same village.

AMONG THE NAVVIES

At Milnthorpe, in Westmoreland, we found a considerable number of navvies engaged in constructing a new line, many of whom gathered round as we proclaimed the Gospel for two successive nights at the Market Cross. The Rev. F. Raikes, the Vicar, very kindly lent us the girls' school-room, in which to hold a prayer-meeting at the close of the open-air service, but very few of these men would enter. It is clear if they are to be reached it must be in the open air. More than twenty years ago I was all but drowned while bathing in the sea here. I therefore again for the thousandth time call upon my soul and all that is within me to bless the Lord for his sparing mercy.

ON HAMPSTEAD HEATH.

I was very much struck while on Hampstead Heath on Bank Holiday (August 2) with the altered tone of the people towards the preachers. There is a marked improvement in this respect. Not only do they listen more attentively, but they gather round us in larger numbers. I believe it is chiefly owing to our improved singing. Our old plan was to go out almost alone; now, for these special occasions, we form large companies. I am aware that this is only the human side; but is it not a good thing to attract the people, and so bring them under the sound of the Gospel? Let us become all things to all men, if by any means we may save some.

A WORD TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

I REMEMBER well being on a visit to some friends at —, when that old city was unusually gay on account of the Autumn Manœuvres being held in the neighbourhood, and the presence of Royalty lent additional excuse for merry-making.

In company with worldly companions, I had been engaged for some days in a giddy whirl of excitement, misnamed pleasure, till one evening, the events of which are indelibly fixed on my memory.

I was, if anything, gayer than usual, and pleased those with me by my high spirits and foolish jests. We had been for some time walking up and down the market-place listening to a band which was playing there. Suddenly a voice seemed to whisper in the depth of my heart, "Is it for this that I have chosen you out of the world?" In an instant all around me appeared changed; the music waxed louder and louder, but it failed to still that voice of sorrowful reproach. The spell was broken.

Confused, ashamed of the wickedness of my conduct, I lifted up my heart in prayer that the Lord would induce those with me to return home, instead of seeking fresh scenes of amusement. My petition was granted; humbled and saddened, I retraced my steps.

We hear much now of "innocent amusements"; and often it would be difficult to answer the ever-recurring question, "What is the harm?" It is needless to do so. Before entering into any of them, let us try them by this test—Is it for this that our precious Master has chosen us out of the world?

Why did He choose us? To be his witnesses; to glorify Him, even in the minute details of everyday life; to help those around us by labours of love; to tell them of joys, higher and purer than those of earth, which He has purchased for us. But will they believe us if they see us intent on securing for ourselves the paltry pleasures of the world?

Let us go to our loving Father, confess our failures in the past, and ask for strength to serve Him alone, remembering his command—"Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God" (Romans xii. 2). C. S.

ARRIVAL OF MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN NEW YORK.—The steamship Spain, of the National Line, which left Queenstown on the 5th inst., with Mr. Moody on board, arrived at New York on Saturday morning (14th), after a trip of nine days. A telegram received at the American Exchange and Reading-rooms of London stated that Mr. Moody suffered from sickness during the voyage, that he preached a sermon which created deep interest, that he had a splendid passage, and that on his arrival at New York he was received by a "delegation."

The Rev. JOHN HALL, of New York, has written a letter to the American papers, which we find in the Philadelphia Inquirer, in which he dwells upon the features and results of the labours of our beloved brothers in Great Britain, and makes some general suggestions as to their prospective labours in America; but the letter does not contain anything that would be new to our readers.

"LORD WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME TO DO?"—Having been interested in the work of the Lord among policemen, postmen, fire brigade, cab, omnibus, and tramway-car-men for some time, I am constrained to cry to God day by day, Who is sufficient for these things? knowing, as I do, the vast number of these men in London—numbering about 40,000,—and but few Christians are working among them. After much prayer for guidance, I am led to believe there are many who would devote a portion of their spare time in distributing small books, tracts, copies of THE CHRISTIAN, and other religious papers, if they knew where to get them free of expense, which they can do by applying to me (for this purpose only). I would at the same time thank the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have been and are now sending me, back and present numbers of that paper, Herald of Mercy, Good News, &c.; they are indeed very acceptable to us. The men receive them with many thanks, and I have good reason to believe many have received blessing through this means. Religious books, papers, and tracts will be thankfully received, also any pecuniary help for this needy work. Donations can be sent to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, marked "Mission to Police and Cabmen," or to myself.

GOOD TIDINGS FROM LIVERPOOL.

God is certainly showing us here that He is not confined to time or place. In Midsummer, Major Cole, with his wife and daughter, dropped in upon us—no advertising, no notices in newspapers, for his arrival was not known. He began meetings in a quiet way. Souls were won for the Saviour at the first meeting, and the numbers have gone on increasing. By-and-by printed notices appeared; the crowds still increasing; and before we were aware of it, on last Sabbath evening the doors of the Victoria Hall were thrown open again for that night, and thousands were again in the building where "God has so honoured his word before."

Not a general movement of all Christians, for hundreds are away at the seaside, but just a little band of young men trying to "hold the fort" during the hot weather, with Major Cole to lead the workers, and yet part of the time the numbers are so great that the Circus is crowded.

Surely God is saying by this to England, Ireland, and Scotland, "Your time to rest is when I call you home."

One of our leading business men was so stirred up the other night at one of the meetings that he afterwards took a "worker" with him and canvassed the public-houses until a late hour, trying to save young men.

Major Cole's ways are peculiar. He measures the congregation with his eye, frequently asking all who are Christians to stand up. He at once discovers what proportion before him are believers, and what proportion are unbelievers; and if prepared to speak to sinners, and the majority take their place on the "Lord's" side, he directs his remarks to them, but at the close of the meeting gives a short exhortation to "sinners," and "casts the net." Sure to find a lot of "backsliders" or people that want feeling.

Part of the time he simply takes a text and directs his attention to the sinners at once. At other times he will confine most of the time "direct" to the Word. Then, again, instead of reading the lesson alone, he reads alternately with the congregation, which gives a sort of "home feeling" to the meeting. Sometimes, instead of reading the lesson he throws the meeting open to anyone to give a verse, and if blest, as it generally is (for every meeting has been good), allows this to continue for some time; and if a text is given which seems to take hold of the congregation, he begins at once to speak upon it, and, as Mr. Moody says, "then casts the net,"—his one aim evidently being to "win souls for Christ."

The meetings talked most about are those at which his addresses are given, and yet there is wisdom in all the others. We believe God's guiding hand is in it, and Christians who never worked before are working now.

Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN with us thank God for this unexpected blessing? There are numbers being led to Christ by the trio-singing of Major Cole and his family.

Oh! may God enable more families to consecrate their lives to Christ; and may He lead this little family, in our prayer, and we hope will be the prayers of all who believe. M. M.

During the past week the meetings conducted by Major Cole in this town have increased both in number and interest; and as we are now within a few days of the closing service, there is a deep feeling of sorrow that one so blessed in his work as Major Cole should be leaving us.

The Carters' Service last Sunday afternoon in Victoria Hall was attended by a very large number of people, there being some 200 or 300 more carters present than had ever been known to come together in a meeting before; and some of them, we trust, began the new life under the preaching of the Gospel.

The Sunday Evening Service in Victoria Hall was also a great success, and was, both in point of attendance and results, as shown in the after-meeting, a marked advance on the previous Sunday evening—the inquiry-room being very fairly filled by those who remained behind for conversation and prayer.

There is one most hopeful sign in the meetings at present; it is the deep and earnest desire which is evidenced by Christians for the conversion of their friends and relatives. One very touching incident bearing upon this I cannot refrain from giving. A youth came up to Major Cole after the Sunday evening service, bringing with him his mother, who, he said, was still unsaved, and begged him to speak to her. He then went off to the Young Men's Meeting, and when that was nearly over Major Cole came in, and after publicly telling the story, added—"I am rejoiced to be able to tell that young man that his mother is now, like himself, resting in the finished work of Jesus."

Many of the meetings lately have been devoted to "praise and promise," and these have been certainly among the most interesting and useful. We hope they may be continued, as in them the audience get to understand that God does not confine his work to one leader in the meeting, but that each may, by a few simple words, give glory to God, and perhaps be instrumental in leading some one to serious consideration of his eternal welfare.

I ask a continued interest in the prayers of your readers for the work in the Circus, not forgetting to praise the Lord for his goodness.

Major Cole gave his farewell address on Sunday night in Victoria Hall to a crowded audience. He desires praise offered by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for wonderful blessing. He goes to Scotland for rest. W. C.

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER AT MILDMAV.

THE venerable George Müller has commenced another evangelistic tour, which will (D.V.) include Scotland before its conclusion. On Sunday, the 15th, he began a series of meetings in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, which will extend to the 29th. On Tuesday evening he addressed young converts. His remarks may be thus summarized:—1. Let there be uprightness and sincerity. "To him that hath shall be given." 2. Whatsoever is hateful to God must be given up. You must be out-and-out Christians, not half for God and half for the world. 3. When the conscience is defiled by sin, make instant confession, and so restore communion. 4. In the very outset of the divine life make a clear and open confession of Christ. 5. Don't be discouraged if you don't make the progress you wish for. 6. Seek at once to unite yourself with the children of God. At the noon prayer-meetings on Thursday and Friday Mr. Müller gave some valuable counsel on the subject of prayer.

Mr. Müller will deliver addresses at the Mildmay Conference Hall, N., on Wednesday, August 25, and Thursday, August 26, at noon; also, on Friday, August 27, at 7.30; also, on Sunday, August 29, at 3.30 and 7 p.m.

CHRISTIAN WORK AT COATBRIDGE.

MESSRS. SCROGGIE AND DUNN have during the last eight days been labouring here under the auspices of the Coatbridge Young Men's Christian Association. The effort is the most successful one put forth in this town. The Temperance Hall, where the meetings are held, has been filled nightly with most appreciative audiences. On several occasions numbers have been unable to gain admission. The Lord is working mightily amongst us. Last Sabbath-day the powers of the evangelists were taxed to the utmost. At half-past nine they addressed a meeting of Christian workers, and at eleven the Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society. At five o'clock they held an open-air evangelistic service at the Cross. All these meetings were interesting and profitable in the extreme; but the labours of the day reached a climax at the special meeting held in the large United Presbyterian Church at half-past six, which was filled with an "eager, anxious throng." The audience were held spell-bound, and many eyes were bedimmed with tears at the pathetic and touching manner in which the old Gospel truths were proclaimed. At the close of one of the most solemn services we have witnessed many went into the inquiry-room, crying, "What must I do?" and we rejoice to say many went away leaning on the arm of the Beloved, with the song of the believer in their mouth: "My Beloved is mine; I am his." One feature of the work is, that the utmost harmony prevails amongst the different sects, all working with the one grand aim of bringing lost ones into the fold of the Great Shepherd. It is expected Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn will continue to labour here for several weeks. The Lord's people are requested to pray for Coatbridge. J. WRIGHT.

MEETINGS FOR MEN are held every Wednesday evening at Stepney—meeting for one hour, commencing at 8.45. Short addresses with singing and prayers fill up the evening, each engagement being limited to about five minutes. The promoters are very thankful for the way in which the Master has smiled on the effort, and look for greater blessings still. The aim is especially to reach those men, both young and old, who attend no place of worship, and bills have been circulated in the surrounding streets inviting them. May the Lord continue to meet with us and us for his glory.

MR. AARON COE AT LIVERPOOL.

SIR.—Our friend arrived here about a month ago from America, accompanied by another dear Christian, the Rev. Mr. Porter, of Canada, both of whom, alone and together, visited with me nearly all the "Homes" and "Reformatory Schools" in our town, and friend Coe has been most indefatigable in his visitation, and made for himself troops of friends, particularly amongst the younger folks.

Until he left here for London, a week ago, he was unsparing of himself, and we have, by the blessing of God, had in the visits a most gracious and happy time. His fatherly and tenderly-put addresses, culled chiefly from his personal experiences in travelling in the Holy Land, and particularly that descriptive of our Blessed Lord's last earthly hours, dwelt upon in a most touching manner, evoked extraordinarily sympathetic feeling from the listeners, telling with great effect upon the human intelligence, so that whether the audience were the stout-hearted boys of the reformatory ship Akbar, in the river here, or women and girls of the land institutions, the hand of God was graciously manifested, and all were affected by the recital of our Redeemer's ineffable love in dying for poor sinners, and, scarcely with any exception, every soul, in response to our venerable brother's pathetic entreaties, willingly gave themselves, with upraised hands, to the Lord's service, fully and freely, for time and eternity. Indeed, I may say there has been quite a revival everywhere. I can assure you that I myself, labouring now some years at several of the institutions, have been greatly cheered and stimulated wonderfully by our aged friend's loving counsel and advice; and I have not the slightest doubt but that much blessing will ultimately follow the good seed so lovingly sown amongst these "lost ones," and he shall on his return homewards witness the good fruit, to the praise and glory of our covenant Lord. May the Lord reward him a hundred-fold.

Permit me to explain that I believe the secret of his success lies in his "object lessons." Through means of a "magnet and nails," impressing his audience, he always fastens their attention to his subject. The fact is undeniable that all the young folks who have heard him and seen him use the above are in raptures, and want him to come again to tell of "Jesus only." I do hope many doors will be opened to him in your mighty metropolis, and that our dear friend's usefulness there will be great. The Lord is with him of a truth, and abundantly blesses his efforts, especially amongst children. He once, seven years ago, visited our town, and one or two "homes," and then we had a blessing. He tells me he has a Sunday-school numbering 3000 or more. I pray God to continue his servant's spiritual prosperity by leading many to the feet of Jesus. Pray for him. Yours in Christ,
4, India-buildings, Liverpool,
August 18, 1875. EDWARD JONES.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Guildford Church Association was recently held in the Town Hall. Denzil Onslow, Esq., M.P., presided, and, after the reading of a short statement, spoke at some length of the work that lay before missionaries in India and other places. He stated that there were at the present time 128,000 native Christians in India, and the number of native pastors eighty. Colonel Huxley and others addressed the meeting.

BIBLES FOR SWITZERLAND.—Dear Sir,—A friend of mine, father of several children, and without fortune, but moved with the greatest compassion for the poor perishing souls of the Italians working as masons or employed at different railway lines in Switzerland, has of late felt himself called to give to as many of them as he could reach, Bibles and Testaments in their own language. For several weeks he has been going about speaking to them about their best interests, and diffusing among them the precious Bread of Life. Many think him ridiculous, and few do anything either to help or encourage him. He has already spent a good deal of his own money in buying Bibles to give away, and although very few give him anything towards this blessed work, he says he cannot refuse to poor dying souls the Word that alone can make them wise unto salvation, and he goes on in his distribution, praying in faith to Him who is the Hearer and Answerer of prayer. My reason in addressing you these lines is to ask all God's dear children, who value the precious Word of their Father, to remember their benighted Italian brethren: many, many of them are hungry to hear about the Saviour, and my friend's house is every day visited by several asking for Testaments; some even come a long distance for that purpose, but they are poor and cannot afford to pay for them. Any Christian friends willing to contribute to this good work, the smallest sum being thankfully received, may send it to Miss Thompson, 163, Union-street, Aberdeen, who will be kind enough to forward it to me.

SANKEY'S LONDON MISSION.

They earnestly desire an abiding blessing upon the labours of the honoured servants of God who have just left our shores ; and they ask the Christians of London to continue to remember these brethren before the Lord, that He may still use them in leading many out of darkness into light, and that He may richly bless their labours in America.

On behalf of the Committee,

MR. TOYE'S ORPHAN HOME,

LEWISHAM-ROAD, GREENWICH.

Our beloved friend and brother Mr. Toye writes:—"We held our sixth annual meeting on Tuesday, August 3, to praise the Lord for all his kindness to us through another year. He has not only allowed us to go on, but the work has increased, so that, at the close of the sixth year, we had seventy children under our care. How kindly and graciously He has dealt with us."

We warmly commend the unpretending but most blessed work of our brother Toye to our readers' sympathy and prayer. He well deserves ample support, for he does a good work, and does it well, and gives God all the glory.

We are requested to state that Miss Cotton, 2, Sea View-villas, Margate, is devoting the proceeds of her little book, "Assurance of Salvation," to the object of aiding Mr. Toye's Orphanage for fatherless and destitute children. Three dozen copies will be forwarded, post free, on receipt of 1s. 6d. in stamps, on application either to Mr. Caswell, 200, Broad-street, Birmingham, or to Miss Cotton, as above.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

FRIENDS will rejoice to learn that there has been no lack of any good thing since the above Mission has been wholly cast upon the Lord, now over a year and a half, notwithstanding our greatly increased responsibilities, consequent upon the extension of the work. The God, in whom we have trusted, has proved the reality of his words, "I will not fail thee nor forsake thee."

When a sheet was wanted for a poor girl in fever, the Lord sent one in at the very moment. When furniture was recently required to fit up rooms for the accommodation of two additional nurses, a lady wrote, "Would a French bedstead be of any use to you?" Another wrote, "I have a lot of odds and ends in the way of furniture; would they be of use to your Mission?" A third, "I have a sofa; do you require one?"

Two servants at Croydon send regularly every month one shilling out of their wages towards the Beef-tea Fund for the purpose of supplying nourishment to the destitute sick. One day the usual dispenser telegraphed at the eleventh hour that he could not attend, owing to some family circumstance. We were at the time holding a service with the patients in the new hall, and in prayer told our difficulty to the Lord. Immediately after the door-bell was rung, announcing the arrival of a friend, saying, "I have come to help you, if you want me." I replied, "We have been just praying for help; the regular dispenser has failed to come." This friend had acquired the knowledge of compounding medicines at the Mission; is a pastor of a church, and is studying for the medical profession, in order to use it in service to the Lord. Again and again we have had cause to bless God for timely assistance when it was impossible to seek human aid. Letters to admit patients into hospitals, and convalescents into homes, have also been supplied, and one lady lately has fitted-up two rooms for the reception of special cases to enjoy country air and rest, while she hopes also to be a benefit to their spiritual welfare.

I can only say to those who are in any perplexity, who know God as their Father, and Jesus as their Saviour, to trust in God, and wait patiently upon Him, remembering that wonderful verse, Romans viii. 32, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

One Sunday evening during the Gospel address an old patient, who was then present, suddenly cried out, "O God, have mercy upon my soul!" and there and then she was "born again," and ever since has manifested a good confession of her being saved through Christ Jesus. Many others we could mention who have received like blessing from the Lord; even Romanists, despite of cruel superstition and error, have in their dying moments joyfully embraced the fulness of God's salvation. The priests, of course, do not like the mission, and are endeavouring to prevent their people from coming to the dispensary, or receiving professional aid when sick and helpless in their homes.

The brother of a man dying of consumption followed me downstairs on one occasion, and whispered to me, "The priest wants us to change the doctor; but he won't give us anything. Though there is a difference in our religion, will you go on attending him?"—to which I readily consented. God give us grace in these latter days to "speak the word without fear."

I am now in Switzerland to recruit strength before another winter's campaign in St. Giles's. What a contrast between this charming country—not only to the sight, but to all the other senses—and the wretched lanes, alleys, houses, and air of London's west centre!

En route to Dijon I met a French Catholic lady, who was travelling in the same carriage, to whom I presented the Gospel by Luke, written in her own tongue. After reading several columns, she observed, "These words are the same as my own." "Then," I replied, "you know the Saviour!" "Yes, I have eternal life; my sins are all pardoned, and I have peace with God." "Have you also eternal life?" "Yes, through Jesus Christ." "Do you believe in the infallibility of the Pope?" "No, I do not." "Nor do I. He is only a man like other men. God alone is infallible."

Pray, beloved friends, that this Medical Mission movement may be yet more abundantly blessed of God to the suffering and destitute sick of our land, and that a mighty cry may go up to God for its further extension at home and abroad.

SEASIDE SERVICES FOR CHILDREN.

THE old man who conducts these meetings is the proprietor of some ten or twelve bathing-vans at New Brighton, near Liverpool, one of which serves him as a pulpit, office, &c. As the time draws nigh he hoists on a long pole a white flag with a red cross on it, which signal is seen at a good distance. Planks, poles, and an old boat serve for seats, and at one end of his van he has a piece of music, something like an harmonium, only very small, on which he is glad for any friend who will to play. Moody and Sankey's hymn-books are used, and he told me he sold a great many. All round on these planks, poles, &c., are seated many ladies with their sewing, knitting, &c.; nurses and children, from sixty to one hundred oftentimes; and some five or six children (little ones) stand in front of the old man with triangles of different sizes, which they play while the chorus of each hymn is being sung.

The first hymn over, he asks, "Are there any despatches?" when some little child runs up to him with a little ticket, on which is a text of Scripture. He then says, "Here is a little aide-de-camp, with a despatch from head-quarters; let us hear what it says." He then tells the people it is not only for him, but for all. He comments upon the text; gives the child another; asks her (or him) what hymn they will choose to sing, and so carries on his meeting for about two hours. He will sometimes ask any Christian he knows that may be there to say a few words to the children and friends present. He then asks for another despatch, and some child chooses another hymn, when, to close, the old man asks for his hymn—"Even me,"—and most earnestly asks God's blessing on what has been said and sung, and the meeting closes. Thus is this servant of Christ daily sowing the seed, and the Day only will declare what precious fruit will spring up.

The old man has laboured many years amongst children, especially among lads without parents. He showed me a little hut, where was written over the door the "Sinner's Refuge." Here he would take a poor lad in, find him bed and board and work, if he wished to reform, and, as he said, so keep soul and body together.

THE BIBLE FLOWER-MISSION.—The lady workers would be grateful for bags of sweet-scented lavender, bunches of wheat for growing in water, of dried grasses, parcels of flowering bulbs, and pots of flowers, for distribution during the autumn months. Pots of blackberry and other jams would also be very welcome for the sick in the districts, and for the little children who know nothing in the gloomy courts of the joys 'mid country fields and gardens, bright flowers, and luscious fruits. Depôts:—Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields; Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

BRITISH WORKMAN & MISSION HALL, WORTHING.—Our esteemed friend Miss Curtis writes:—"The Lord has been so blessing the work here spiritually. Several young men have been lately called out of darkness into his marvellous light, and are giving precious testimony to the glory of his grace; also some older men and women—those we should have thought the most unlikely—are rejoicing in the Lord." We are sorry to find her adding, "Yet the pecuniary part is a heavy weight; our building and repairing fund still needs fully £300 to complete all and execute trust-deeds. Oh, what a burden would, indeed, be removed could I see the needs of this work, so dear to my heart, removed." We are well assured that this is a work of God. Our sister has already given liberally of her means, time, strength, and prayers; we trust others will come forward to supply the needs of God's work, and so relieve this willing worker of an undue share of its burden.

REV. SHOLTO DOUGLAS IN CHINA.

HAVING seen in your number of April 8 last an account of Mr. Douglas's Mission in Madras, we have thought it might be of interest to some of your readers to hear of his visit here. He arrived from India by the mail on the morning of May 22, intending to proceed by the same steamer to Shanghai after the usual detention of some twenty-four hours. We were, however, agreeably surprised on the same evening to hear from him at the usual Saturday prayer-meeting, held at St. Paul's College, that he had been invited by the Bishop and had arranged to remain for a short time in Hong-Kong and hold a series of prayer-meetings and special services. These meetings commenced at the Chapel of St. Paul's College on the following Monday, and were continued daily throughout the week. They were well attended, and were indeed a time of refreshing to those who have found peace; while we have reason to know that to others Mr. Douglas's evangelistic addresses were, with God's blessing, the means of bringing home the gospel of Christ. After the address, prayer was offered by some of those present, and we cannot doubt that a rich blessing was received. Several Chinese converts were present as well as Europeans.

During the following week a series of special services were held daily at 5:30 p.m., in the chancel of the Cathedral. A circular letter was sent round, signed by the Bishop, the Colonial Chaplain, the minister of Union Church, and the English and German missionaries stationed here, asking attendance at these services.

The circular is headed, "Increase in us True Religion," and states, "The words at the head of this page are familiar to us all. We have often used them in prayer together. Have we ever thought what they mean? Have we received the answer? 'True religion' means having God in all our thoughts and plans and ways; it means the recognizing of God and Christ in our most ordinary transactions; it means not merely morality or general uprightness, but it means the principle of all morality—the love and fear of God in Christ in the heart. In one word, it means life in the soul. 'He that hath the Son of God hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.' Is this the character of our religion? If not, ought it not to be so? You have your own temptations and difficulties and dangers in this place. 'True religion' can alone help you in all. Is it not worth an effort to obtain possession of such a blessing? Called by different names in the Church of Christ, we yet unite in entreating you all to attend these services. Let those come who are already trying to live to God—perhaps greater earnestness will be infused into their religion. Let those come who are honestly conscious that they are living without God, while yet belief in Him is not cast off—perhaps they may find life to their souls. Let those come who are disposed to entertain doubts about the Bible and the way of salvation—perhaps a light may surprise them as they join in such services that will clear up much that is now dark. Come all, and join in asking that God may visit us in truth. We are living among the heathen. We profess to have a better religion than they. They themselves doubt it, as they see the lives of many of those who 'profess and call themselves Christians.' For the honour of our Saviour, for the sake of our immortal souls, for the sake of the heathen, let us 'arise and go unto our Father, and let us say to Him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before Thee.'"

On the first evening, May 31, a typhoon was commencing, and it was hardly possible to get a chair to venture out; still there were a few persons present, and Mr. Douglas called our attention to the undoubted fact that God must have had some special object in thus ordering the winds and the waves at this especial time. The other services were well attended, and many remained to the after-meetings.

On the 5th inst., as a result of Mr. Douglas's efforts, under God's blessing, a well-attended meeting was held at St. Paul's College by those interested, and an association was formed, to be called "The Hong-Kong Christian Association," with the Bishop as president, and the Colonial Chaplain and the minister of Union Church as vice-presidents, and a lay committee. The Association now holds weekly meetings for prayer and the study of God's holy Word, and a general meeting once a month. Further means for usefulness amongst the soldiers and sailors here are also contemplated. Wednesday evening services have also been commenced at the Cathedral.

On the following Sunday, June 6, Mr. Douglas preached an impressive sermon in the morning at the Cathedral, and afterwards administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; in the evening he preached at Union Church to a fair congregation.

On the Monday he left for Canton, where he has held a series of services; and on the 24th inst. he left Hong-Kong for Amoy, en route for England via America.

Hong-Kong, June 30.

UNITED SERVICES IN DUBLIN.

SIR,—Will you kindly give us space to say that, in conformity with a unanimous resolution of the Convention held last November in the Exhibition Palace, the Committee in charge of the United Services are making arrangements for the holding of another Convention during the last week of October.

There will be a convention of ministers of the Gospel held on Tuesday, the 26th, and a General Christian Conference on Wednesday, the 27th. Full particulars will appear in due time; but we are desirous it should be understood early that this matter is in progress.

Christian friends throughout the country will be happy to learn that the Daily Noon Prayer-meeting in the Metropolitan Hall continues to be the centre of much interest, and that the Sunday Evangelistic Meeting in the Exhibition Palace is still well attended. Important agencies are being wrought by the Committee in charge of Women's Work, and by the Young Men's Committee. It has been our privilege to give help in the carrying on of evangelistic services in different and distant parts of the country. Some of our meetings in the city have been given up during the summer; but, altogether, we consider the prospects of the united work to be most encouraging.

The necessary expenses (rent of halls, advertising, &c.) are somewhat heavy. These have been generously met, up to the present time, by the spontaneous offerings of sympathising friends. We have incurred no debts whatever, but our Finance Committee, as will be seen from advertisement in another page, finds it necessary to issue a new application for help.

In connexion with the proposed Convention, arrangements will, if possible, be made respecting railway tickets, hospitality, &c., same as last year.

We are, Sir, your obliged servants,

E. SYNGE HUTCHINSON, Bart., Chairman.

JOHN LYNCH,

WILLIAM GORMAN,

HAMILTON MAGEE,

D. DRUMMOND, Treasurer.

LITTLE SODBURY.—The yearly special united meetings at Little Sodbury will (D.V.) be held on Monday, August 30, at the ancient Roman encampment. The services will be held afternoon and evening, commencing at 2 p.m. We are requested to ask prayer for the conversion of souls on this occasion, as the last annual meeting was blessed to several, who are now testifying for their Master and living to his glory.

WHO WILL GO?—If any well-qualified person would come here for a time it would be a real blessing. No place calls more loudly for some spiritual teaching. St. Servan contains 400 English families, and Dinard (a short distance off) contains many more. This is a very pretty country—good bathing, charming strand, and living moderate,—so that anyone who wished to combine usefulness with a pleasant change for two months or so, could not employ the time more agreeably or usefully. There could be open-air preachings, if no other, in the place at St. Servan where the band plays; probably, if a clergyman came, he could get the use of the church. The best route from England is via Southampton to St. Malo, a transit of thirteen hours. St. Malo is one mile from here. From London, second-class rail, first-class steamer, 25s.

St. Servan, Ile-et-Vilaine, France.

IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT, Services have been, and are still being, held in Ryde, Shanklin, Cowes, &c., by Mr. and Mrs. Croxford, of Hastings, which have in many cases been owned and blessed of God in the conversion of precious souls. One held every Sunday evening at the Town Hall, Ryde, for the last five weeks, has been of an exceedingly interesting character. It commences at a quarter-past eight o'clock, and the people flock in from the various churches and chapels. Mrs. Croxford accompanies the hymns with an American organ, and the Nelson-street Wesleyan Choir assist in the singing. Mr. Sankey's hymns are always used. Every Sunday some have remained behind, anxious to have their questions answered and their doubts dispelled by passages from the Word of God. I may add that, finding from a letter this week in THE CHRISTIAN that volunteer missionaries are needed in America, they would, I know, willingly avail themselves of the opportunity of preaching the Gospel in that vast Continent should they hear of a suitable opening.

GOD'S WORK IN SPA.

MORE than once the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have received communications about God's work at Spa from Frederica Perceval, with whom it began two years ago. Belgium was perpetually on her heart before God. On Tuesday, the 3rd inst., she entered the company of the "saints made perfect," her frail life having been terminated by an attack of fever at Bruges. From July, 1874, until the May of this year, I had the privilege of being with her in Belgium, the first three and a half months being spent at Spa, the remainder at Brussels. I cannot now record all the wonderful ways by which the Lord made the "crooked" straight "and the rough places plain," but I am bound to lay before Christians in England the great need that exists for a gospel hall in Spa.

Since the days of 'Alva—300 years ago—when the woods around Spa served as an asylum for the persecuted followers of the Gospel, down to the year 1843, nothing effective was done for the spread of the truth among the native inhabitants. That year, a Polish count, two English ladies (one of whom was dear Frederica Perceval), and a Belgian laundress, met in prayer at Spa; the two last, unknown to each other, having prayed all the previous winter for the same blessing. As is known to those who have watched the work, services in the French language were begun in the summer of 1873, and have been kept up, with more or less success, every Sunday and Wednesday since. The great difficulty from the first has been the place of meeting, and during the past two years the services have been moved no less than eight times, owing, in a great degree, to the Jesuit and priestly influence which is brought to bear on anyone letting his rooms for the purpose. The feeling of being unwelcome everywhere is a very great drawback to the Nicodemus type of inquirer.

Last summer, during the Spa season, drawing-rooms were engaged at great expense, though in an obscure street, and services were conducted by Pasteur Anet, of Brussels, and were attended by many important visitors to Spa—Germans, Dutch, Belgians, &c.—of the reformed faith, but being held in a private house the working-class people felt very shy of coming, the Walloon race (of which the Spadois are composed) being most sensitive, and deeply intelligent and inquiring.

We were able to hire a room in a restaurant for the six winter months ending in April this year, in the most public part of the town, its very publicity giving courage to the followers of the Gospel, and inspiring respect among the lookers-on. During the winter, Pasteur Jean Nicolet came to Spa from Chênée, near Liège, and preached on Sunday and Wednesday evenings to a congregation averaging fifty auditors, entirely composed of the Spadois, the large majority being Roman Catholics. A touching fact must be stated: that on last Easter Sunday the Lord's Supper was commemorated, for the first time since Alva's persecutions, in the French language, and after the Gospel model. It was administered to twelve persons by Pasteur Nicolet. Many Roman Catholics remained during the service, and appeared struck by its reality.

Two questions that are asked by earnest Catholics in Belgium are: (1) "Do Protestants believe in Jesus Christ? for they confound us with Jews in faith, and call us 'Jews';" and (2) "Do you celebrate Holy Communion?" This separates us from mere freethinkers in their minds. Pasteur Nicolet says in a letter to me about Spa, "If the number of Catholics converted to the Saviour is still small, a most important preparatory work is going on; for during the winter several hundred Catholics have heard the Gospel with great respect, and visible signs of sympathy for the Word of God. Many prejudices are broken down."

It is scarcely needful to say that controversy has been entirely avoided; and we have a distinct evidence as to the place the meetings have gained in public opinion, from the fact that since the beginning of this Spa season, when we were naturally obliged to vacate the restaurant, the Town Council have lent us a room in one of the old gambling-houses for the worship of God, thus recognizing our existence as a body. This room is so very far out of the town, at the old Vauxhall, that the regular attendance of the tradespeople and working-classes has diminished, and the German girls at a private school no longer come; it is too far for any visitors to walk, except people very much in earnest.

Another most serious drawback at the Salle Vauxhall arises from the fact that flower-shows, dinners, and other fêtes are held here, often on Sundays, during the season, when the room is required. For this reason, no service could be held on Sunday, July 4. Pasteur Nicolet says, with reason,

"As long as we have not a place of our own we shall never be quiet." Let it be a fishing-ground, and not only a sheep-fold. Spa is the key to the whole district of the Ardennes; it is near enough to Verviers to exercise an influence on that manufacturing centre: it is frequented yearly by nearly 10,000 visitors from all parts of the Continent, and from England and America. Thousands of pounds of English money have been lost at its gaming-tables, and have helped to demoralize the people. Let a few English and American Christians build a Gospel-hall. It will not be without its advantages for them also, as, vested as it will be in the hands of Englishmen, Gospel addresses in English will be given there every season, God willing. The Church of England at Spa is represented by ritualistic teaching, and we met very many last year who were longing for simple Gospel truth.

Three needs would be met by the building of a Gospel-hall—(1) Services in French all the year round for the inhabitants, which would (2) serve for all visitors of the reformed faith from the Continent; and (3) a place for Gospel addresses in English. There is a piece of freehold ground in an excellent situation to be bought for £400, and the value of land rises yearly at Spa. A plain building, to hold between 200 and 300, will cost about £550 more, everything included, and will serve as a Sunday-school, which, as a farmer (one of the converts) told me, is "la mère de la chose." Adult Bible-classes would be held in the winter months.

Contributions for the "Spa Gospel Hall Fund" will be received by Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., 1, Pall-mall East, and at the office of THE CHRISTIAN. I have, so far, only £152 paid in or promised for this object.

Will some Christian woman fill Miss Perceval's place, in constantly praying for Belgium? I am hoping to work in that country all the coming winter.

FRANCE.

THE HOME MISSION AND REVIVAL MEETINGS.

OUR cry is still, "O for more witnesses for Jesus, to preach by word and pen throughout France while yet she will hear them!" We are looking hopefully to the present commencement of religious awakening to see evangelistic energy do more than recover its youthful zeal. The intensifying of spiritual life in Christians must intensify their power of action over the people at large.

The special meetings, for awakening of slumberers and promotion of holiness, called by the Mission Intérieure, are continuing from town to town. Pastor Théodore Monod, now so well known in England, is their itinerant preacher and promoter. Three days were set apart at the beginning of July for this purpose by the Protestants of the town of Le Vigan, in the Cevennes, seated in its "Little Switzerland," surrounded by mountains and luxuriating in its vines, olives, and mulberry-trees. For years the faithful had prayed for reviving and converting grace; and notwithstanding great drawbacks on man's part, the power of the Spirit of God was felt, and the extreme thirst of the "men of desire" drew down the blessing. As usual, "the hungry" were filled with good things. Each day there were three general meetings in the National Church, a pastoral meeting in the Free Church, a meeting for laymen in the Hall of the Evangelical Alliance, and in the Methodist Chapel a morning prayer-meeting, and ladies' meetings every afternoon, with after and inquiry meetings. The attendance was about 2000 in the general meetings, and from 400 to 500 ladies in the afternoon. The Lord's Supper concluded the series. Similar meetings had been held at Dieu-le-Fit (Drôme) previously, and at Hérimoncourt (Doubs) subsequently.—Evangelical Christendom.

PARKGATE, CHESHIRE.—Referring to a previous communication, another correspondent says that there are a mission-hall and schools already existing in the neighbourhood of Parkgate and Neston. Regular services are held and systematic visitation carried on. The superintendent of the work is J. R. Grylls, who will thankfully welcome any Christian co-operation in his labours. His address is The People's Mission-Hall, Neston, Cheshire.

THE YOUNG MEN of Abbey-road Chapel (Pastor, Rev. W. Stott) have resolved to hold a weakly meeting for prayer and praise, open to all young men, and quite unsectarian. It is held in the Young Men's Room, Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's-wood, on Friday evenings from nine till ten, and will, it is hoped, be a means of much blessing to the young men of our neighbourhood.

BIBLE-READINGS AT WIESBADEN.

It will be doubtless most interesting for readers of THE CHRISTIAN to hear what the Lord has done on the banks of the Rhine. There are many Russians coming to Wiesbaden for the sake of its celebrated waters and baths, to spend all summer, every year, just as regularly as swallows visiting England,—some of them, contrary to those birds, remaining for the whole winter.

Having met there a young Russian friend, the Count Korff, who was awakened through the preaching of Lord Radstock at Petersburg, we resolved to have Bible-reading every morning at the hotel. To this the Lord added others daily, and soon after Russian ladies were desirous to join us. A Christian English lady, Mrs. C. Campbell, kindly consented to come from Homburg in order to receive them in her drawing-room on a Sunday. The meeting took place at 3 p.m., and the Lord has given us far exceeding above what we asked or thought.

The high-titled ladies and the notable gentlemen belonging to German and Russian aristocracy were present, among whom was the accomplished young German Princess Sovereign Lippe-Schoumburg, and some titled Russians coming from Schwabach, Soden, and Schlangenbad—distant watering-places. They declared to have been much edified, the greater portion of them remaining for inquiries and conversation. It was unanimously decided to repeat the meeting the next day. Mr. Gerard, pastor from Frankfort, who was also at the Brighton Convention, has cheerfully joined us. Both meetings were well attended, and spiritual blessings and benefits were acknowledged by many publicly, and confirmed by letters or cards.

Thousands of copies of Scriptures, French and German, sent by the Crystal Palace Bible Stand, and many tracts and little books, written by Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, were taken by the ladies, to be distributed in different watering-places of the Duchy of Nassau, but principally at Wiesbaden. The German Pfarrer-Pastor Herr Köhler took half of them for his extensive flock.

Many touching stories might be written about their distribution among Jews and Gentiles of different nationalities, which took place principally in the public gardens, and which will be duly testified at some other opportunity, for I fear this is already a long letter. In conclusion, I wish to add that since the departure of Mrs. C.—the Bible-reading is continued at the drawing-room of Russian ladies, where some found peace and joy in believing.

I cannot express how deeply I was touched by the true sorrow manifested at the last meeting, when I came to take leave before my departure. After prayer everyone wanted special benediction, and great was the emotion of all, even to the servants. After my departure the young Count Korff continued the meetings with blessing until Messrs. Rachmenoff and Zukowsky left Wiesbaden; all expressing the wish that those meetings, manifestly blessed to many, might be continued next year.

C. WENZIGER.

West Malvern, August 15.

THERE IS A QUIET WORK going on in Dublin. In Belfast the work has never ceased from the time of Mr. Moody's visit. Especially has there been blessing among the police in that town.

AN INTERRUPTED SERVICE.—Dear Friend,—You have been present at, and have kindly noticed, one or two of our gatherings at the Railway Arch, Royal Mint-street. The unemployed dock labourers, to the number of 160 on an average, have attended the meetings in it during the last four winters, to partake as well of the meat that "endureth" as to hear of, and some to receive, that which "endureth" unto everlasting life. Mothers' meetings, Sunday free-breakfasts, day and Sunday schools, and a home for orphans have been carried on at the same place. "But whosoever will live godly, &c., shall suffer persecution;" and this has been "the proof" of this ministry of love. Last Sunday two of the converts from Rome coming, after a short absence, to see their spiritual birth-place, a mob of the lowest of that communion entered the Arch, and caused such a disturbance and made so many threats that the service had to be brought to a close. The two men escaped in the crowd, but the devoted Missionary, to whom the mob threatened personal violence, had to escape through a window and over the roofs of adjoining houses. The next day these people came again, and also on Tuesday broke into the Arch and carried away all they could lay their hands on. The police caught one of the number, and will deal with the offender. Will you let the readers of THE CHRISTIAN know how great a strait we are in, that they may pray for us and help us?—Yours affectionately in the Lord,

CHAS. DOBBIN.

NEWS FROM NEW ZEALAND.

AMONG Christians in this city there is but one desire—that the wave of blessing may reach our shores, and a real, soul-saving revival of religion take place in our midst. As the means under God to this end, preliminary meetings are now being held, at which the most approved modus operandi is freely discussed, with a view to the inauguration of some organised effort.

At the first of these meetings, held recently in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, a considerable number of Christians were present, and ministers of all denominations freely mingled together and made common cause in this effort to bring about the much needed and wished for spiritual awakening. Several addresses were given by leading ministers and friends, but the most interesting speech of the evening was by the Rev. Mr. Cathcart, a Presbyterian minister recently arrived from England, who related what he had heard and witnessed at some of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Scotland. Arrangements have also been made to hold frequent meetings for prayer, at which the special subject for supplication will be the revival of God's work; and those who feel an interest in this important matter will thus be afforded opportunity to unitedly supplicate the throne of grace for an abundant outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Auckland and its neighbourhood.

Should our American brethren be led to accept the invitation to cross over to Australia, it is hoped that they will also visit New Zealand, where they would meet with an equal welcome, and doubtless find their efforts crowned with similar success, "the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following."

MISSION TO POLES AND JEWS.

POLAND has long been less favourably circumstanced than other lands. Being under the domination of Roman Catholic priests, no efforts were permitted to be made for enlightenment of the people. Darkness was settling down upon the land, and the last glimmer of the light kindled by the early Polish Reformers was in danger of being extinguished.

The Jews are, for the most part, of the old Rabbinic school, orthodox and bigoted, with no sympathy for modern infidelity, yet enslaved by superstition and under Talmudic bondage. Eager, zealous, learned, with intellectual talents of a high order, they are a people worthy of being set free and enlisted as champions for Divine truth in its fulness.

The laws of the empire made it impossible for any foreign mission to work in this vast field; but about seven years ago, Mr. Janasz, a wealthy landowner at Plochocin, near Warsaw, devised a plan for carrying on mission work in Poland, in conformity with the laws of the empire, by native agency. Being himself a native, as well as a sincere Christian Israelite, he resolved to commence a mission on his own estates, and as the first step he received two fatherless children into his own house, and then began to build an orphanage for destitute children, both Poles and Jews. Mr. Janasz gave the site for this institution, and £250 towards the building fund. Since then he has contributed at least £100 a year towards the expenses of the mission, which has gradually been brought into the shape which he had at first sketched out for it. Surely the liberality and disinterested efforts of this gentleman give him a claim upon the assistance of English Protestants in carrying out the great work so courageously begun in reliance upon the help of God.

It should be remembered that by strengthening, supporting, and extending this mission, Englishmen may be enabled to carry on a work by means of a lawful native agency. Moreover, those sought to be benefited are not confined to any particular class; Jews and Poles, Roman Catholics and Protestants, children, and women, and men, all are sought out and cared for as far as the means will allow. And we may add, that rarely, if ever, has any mission been more economically conducted. Rarely have so many different agencies been maintained with so small an outlay of money.

Besides the Orphanage, where twelve children have been regularly housed and clothed and educated, M. Janasz engaged the services of a missionary to the Jews in Warsaw and the provinces, also of a Bible-reader and of colporteurs who sold and distributed Bibles and useful tracts and books, including a Polish translation of a number of the British Workman, of which 16,000 copies were sold. More than 50,000 Bibles, Gospels, tracts, and books have been circulated in eight different languages. Two Bible-women have also been employed among the women and children in Warsaw, by whom above four hundred families have been regularly visited. Moreover, the Plochocin Mission has been the means of obtaining permission and freedom once more for missionary work to be recommenced among the Jews.

Surely this is a great work. In every other Roman Catholic country—France, Italy, Spain,—Protestant missions on a large scale are at work; but in Poland, that most important country, central in Europe, peopled by a fine and generous nation, once foremost in doing battle for civil and religious freedom, our little Mission has stood alone, and must from the nature of the case continue to stand alone. We ask for aid, that the work thus begun by Mr. Janasz, and carried on for seven years, be supported and strengthened. He is now placing the various labourers under charge of a Protestant pastor of experience, and is endeavouring to extend the operations of the various branches of the Mission, if only the means are given. We ask that help be afforded in some degree proportionate to the liberal contributions yearly made by Mr. Janasz himself. Let us also seek to abound in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as we know that our "labour is not in vain in the Lord." Mrs. Finn, The Elms, Brook-green, Hammer-smith, W., is Secretary to the Mission.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.

THE reports at the Union Prayer-meeting in the Religious Institute, on Monday, the 16th inst., were of the most encouraging nature; and, while revealing an amount of degradation that is truly shocking, showed that the vigorous efforts that have been in operation have not only prepared the ground for the good seed of the Word, but have been fruitful in their results. Mr. Milner, one of the treasurers of the Evangelization Committee, presided, and, in order to give an opportunity to those who had reports to give, dispensed with the usual address, and read the Parable of the Talents. The Rev. Francis Standfast narrated two or three incidents that had come under his observation. One of these related to an aged woman who had been a wanderer for many years, but who was led, by the memories awakened by a hymn sung at one of the services in the Charter-street district, to think of her old Sabbath-school days, and to give herself again to Christ, in whom she was enabled to rejoice as her Saviour. Very shortly after this she saw her sister, a Christian woman, and told her the joyful news. An hour afterwards she expired. At another service a company of secularists endeavoured to disturb the meeting. One of the leaders, however, was so powerfully affected by a hymn, that he not only ceased his opposition, but acknowledged his error, and asked to be prayed for.

Messrs. Goldsmith and Gosling gave reports of the Circus and Tent work. Another glorious Sabbath's services had cheered the hearts of the young men who had the charge of the meetings at the Circus. The meeting in the afternoon was well attended, but in the evening the service was crowded more than ever, and the Divine presence was powerfully felt. The Wednesday night Bible-meeting increases numerically, and is made a blessing to those who attend. The week-night services generally are equally cheering.

Mr. John Hambleton, in the absence of Dr. Ziemann, still conducts the services at the Tent, and fruit is seen in the conversion of souls and the changed demeanour of many who have sat "in the seat of the scornful." At a quarter to seven o'clock each evening the Tent is opened for the Scriptural instruction of those who have been brought to Christ or are inquiring the way. These are formed into classes, which are conducted principally by young ladies, who display considerable aptitude in teaching those allotted to them. The classes are re-formed after the evening service. Many are unable to read, and these are taught separately. There is a keen relish of the spiritual food thus supplied; and a strong desire to know the mind and will of God, as revealed in his Word, is manifested by all.

Mr. Hambleton's presence and assistance at the noon prayer-meetings deserve a passing recognition. His addresses, which bear upon the topic for the day, are full of fire and laden with Scripture illustration; and the power of the Spirit attends his prayers. His address on Wednesday noon, the 18th inst., on the words "Looking to Jesus," and his subsequent prayer, were powerfully impressive. At the same meeting, Mr. Coates, who presided, related the case of a young man to whom he had been directed at one of the inquiry-meetings, and whom he found in tears. While the latter unfolded his experience and was directed to the Saviour, another young man, who was sitting alone on a chair in front of them, on being spoken to, stated, with tears of joy, that he had listened to the conversation and found that the experience of the other young man was his experience too; and as Mr. Coates spoke of Christ to the former, the latter had gathered hope and comfort from his words, and there and then embraced Christ.

HENRY VARLEY IN GLASGOW.

ABOUT a fortnight ago our brother Henry Varley, who has been so much used of the Lord in various places, made a short visit to our city, and with such results as will cause many souls to rejoice throughout all eternity. It was rather an unfavourable time for him to come, so many being out of town during this month, but in answer to prayer we had well-attended meetings, and a deeply solemn feeling pervaded them all. During the week that Mr. Varley was with us he held a Bible-reading each afternoon in Hope-street Baptist Chapel at 3 p.m. These meetings were deeply interesting and productive of much good; many Christians were strengthened, and led to seek the enjoyment of deeper communion and fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ.

For three evenings Mr. Varley preached the Gospel in the City Hall. Although the building was not filled, yet there was a large attendance, and the attention and interest manifested were very encouraging. His addresses are marked with great power, and the clear and earnest way in which he tells out the old, old story of the Cross makes a deep impression on all who hear.

In the large tent on the Green a most successful meeting was held; every foot of space was occupied (there would be about 3000 present), and for nearly an hour Mr. Varley kept the attention of all rivetted on his subject. At the close of the first service an "after-meeting" was held, to which a large number waited, anxious about their souls. Many entered into rest and peace through believing, and it was with difficulty that the tent could be closed at a very late hour, so anxious were the people to hear more.

On Sunday Mr. Varley spoke four times to large audiences, and with blessed results. He has now left us, but we follow him with our prayers, and trust that soon he will be able to come back among us, when we shall welcome him in the name of our common Master.

Yours in Gospel bonds,

THE WAIFS AND STRAYS OF DUBLIN.

DEAR FRIENDS,—As I read from time to time in THE CHRISTIAN the touching appeals for help for the many objects of interest in the Lord's great harvest-field, I long to bring before you the claims of poor Ireland, and to call your attention to our special work in Dublin amongst the waifs and strays of all ages and both sexes with whom our lanes and alleys abound, in a state of poverty and darkness unknown, I believe, in England. For years we have carried on a quiet, silent work, little known beyond ourselves, marvellously owned of our God, in rescuing multitudes of these young people, who are at this moment filling useful positions in life; but what are they compared to the numbers left outside? We have had for years our Ragged Boys' Homes in Grand Canal-street, and also in the "Coombe"; our Ragged Girls' Home in Luke-street, and others, making altogether about 550 boys, girls, and little ones in our Homes, besides those who come daily to our schools. Still, numbers have to hear the constant reply to appeals for admission—No more room! We must get lodgings for the most pressing cases. Alas! when the vacancy occurs, it is sometimes too late. Not long since, a dear little girl, the only child of a widow, was supposed to be a case that could wait; when sought for subsequently she was found lying in hospital, the cause, hardship and hunger. This is only one of many cases. We determined to add another house (a large double house), and to fit it up to receive on one side the wild street-boys, and on the other the little ones of both sexes in connexion with Miss MacPherson's Emigration Home. Forty of these little ones have already gone to Canada with Miss MacPherson's band. The Lord put it into the heart of a kind friend to give £700 towards the purchase of the Old Mill House, with offices and ground adjoining; it needs £900 more to make it fit for the work. If eighteen individuals, to whom the Lord has given the silver and the gold, would give £50 each for this branch of the Lord's great work amongst the destitute little ones of poor Ireland, remembering that He to whom you lend it has promised to bless your basket and your store, and He has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me"—this would be accomplished. The teeming multitudes of hungry ones that fill our streets seem a witness against us, and cry out in the ears of the Lord of Hosts, who is ever saying to his people—"Gather in the little ones; feed my lambs."

All we have done hitherto seems but a drop in the ocean. May the Lord incline the hearts of his people to realize this golden opportunity of coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and to Him shall be the praise. If any desire further information about this great work, I shall be happy to give it.

Your servant for Christ's sake,

35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin. ELLEN SULLY.

PRAYER FOR OUR CHILDREN.

We are very hopeful that the first Sunday in September will be observed as a day of special prayer by many Christian parents, both in this country and America. Will all our readers unite in this all-important supplication? If we seek the temporal and everlasting welfare of our beloved children, the only Way is Christ, the Wisdom of God. "Get wisdom: Exalt her, and she shall promote thee; she shall bring thee to honour when thou dost embrace her. Let her not go, for she is thy life." Such was the instruction of the Father in the Proverbs. Oh that it may be fulfilled in the children who are rising up to take the places of us who are one by one swiftly passing off the scene. In praying for our own, it will be scarcely possible to neglect prayer for those unhappy children who have no parents to pray for them; or who have parents who do not pray.

FOR THE YOUNG.—WONDROUS LOVE.

BY CHEYNE BRADY.

DURING the recent terrible inundations at Toulouse, in the South of France, a mother and her two helpless babes were suddenly surrounded with the rushing waters. She at once realized her imminent danger, and sought in vain for means of safety. For herself, she speedily perceived there was little or no hope; so she devoted all her energies to the safety of her little ones.

The only chance of escape she could see for the helpless infants was to tie them carefully in a wooden kneading-trough, and commit them to the flowing waves, trusting in the Lord Jesus to save them. She placed them side by side in the little ark, and, offering up a prayer, she cast them adrift, resigning herself to inevitable death.

The rapid current carried away the frail bark, but only to precipitate it against the trunk of a tree. The ark was broken. With superhuman energy the mother reached the tree, and, leaning over on an arm of it, she succeeded in grasping her darling babes, and indulged a faint hope of safety for all, if only the tree now surrounded by the flood would support them. But, lo! the tree trembled, the branch creaked; it could not bear the weight of all. Quick as thought, the mother's love hesitated not. She secured the babes to the trembling branch, and committed them to the care of Him who died for them, and plunged into the flood, where she was speedily drowned.

The babes were found quite safe. The mother's body never was recovered.

A mother's love! O how great! Does not our heart warm at its recital? Are we not ready to exclaim, "Was ever love like this?"

Yes, there is a story of greater love than even that of a mother for her babes. A mother may give her life for her children. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." But One has so loved his enemies as to lay down his life for them.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God, willingly gave his life for ungodly sinners, who hated Him and put Him to an ignominious death.

"Herein is love. Not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."

"God commendeth his love towards us; in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

OPEN-AIR SERVICES have been carried on at Blackpool, with great success, by the rector of Christ Church.

GOD WORKING IN AUSTRALIA.

When you last heard, I had just left home for the parish of Dapte, situate on the coast, about sixty miles south of Sydney. It is in the coast district of Illawarra. The parish contains a scattered population of dairy-farmers, and the little church made to seat 250 people. I left here with the assurance that a large blessing would rest upon the mission, for we had had many meetings for prayer here, and put the mission altogether into the dear Master's hands. We had received such gracious answers to prayer here, that we could not doubt for an instant our Lord's promises, which we pleaded with boldness through the blood of Jesus. On the Saturday we had a prayer-meeting in the church—some sixty present,—and we went away assured that the Master had begun his work. On the Sunday good congregations assembled, but afterwards the church became packed, and night after night many had to remain outside. Many came from distances of ten, twelve, fourteen, and even eighteen miles, getting home at midnight; and yet back again the next night. More than 350 were packed in the church. Every night the Master was with us in a special manner, but towards the latter end of the week the meetings became more earnest and more solemn. The times of silent prayer were awfully solemn. Each evening anxious ones were seeking Jesus and being made glad. Whole families came to Christ, and are now rejoicing in his love.

Amongst the anxious-seekers men predominated, and many found peace in the after-meetings without any personal consultation: At the thanksgiving service about two-thirds of the congregation of 350 stood up before the rest, declaring that they had found the Lord Jesus as their Saviour during the mission. Oh, do join me in praise, praise, praise to our adorable Lord for this refreshing shower. The accounts which I have since received are most cheering. Praise God for what He has done, what He is doing, and what He is going to do; and pray much for me and my dear people, and this colony at large. "Still there's more to follow."

From Dapte we went on eighteen miles along the coast to the township of Keim, where a mission was that week being held. I could only stay two days, but the Lord blessed this short visit to the good of souls: "Praise ye the Lord!" Before the mission closed the Lord had done a glorious work. Oh, what power there is in God's Word! In dealing with anxious souls how often have I seen that "the entrance of Thy Word giveth light"—a glorious light radiated from the heart to the countenance. R— said, "My congregation look different." The light of Jesus shows itself upon the face. Oh, may all "lay hold on eternal life," and, as you hold it, proclaim it, speak of it, tell it to others. Believe and rest in Jesus, and you have power. Trust Jesus for the fulness of the Holy Ghost, and oh, what rest, what glory awaits us in the presence of the King!

Fri. 27.	Redemption (Rev. vii. 9)	Mr. W. M. Hitchcock

REV. FRANK H. WHITE will shortly spend a few weeks in Scotland, and friends desirous to avail themselves of his finely illustrated Lectures on the Tabernacle in the Wilderness may address him until September 10 at Harley House, Bow, London, E., and after that to the care of Rev. R. Howie, 3, Bruce-road, Pollokshields, Glasgow, or of Editor of Times of Blessing, 17, Princes-street, Edinburgh. The late Dr. Arnot said—"I have heard and seen Mr. White's lecture, and I am confident that the old as well as the young will greatly enjoy it, and be edified by it. It helps one mightily to get the marrow out of portions of the Scriptures that are apt to be treated as dry bones." Dr. Moffat writes—"I had heard of the excellency of Mr. White's lectures; but the help was not told me. They are exquisitely impressive and solemn."

YOUNG WOMEN'S COLUMN.

Extract from "The Draytons and the Davenants." By Mrs. Charles.

"I WOULD that Christian women understood the beautiful work they might do if they would take their true part in the Church," said Dr. Anthony.

"What would that be?"

"To see that morals and theology, charity and truth, are never divorced," he replied. "To win us back to the beatitudes when we are straying into the curses. To lead us back to persons when we are groping into abstractions. For books full of dogma—orthodox, Arminian, supra-lapsarian, or otherwise—to give us a home, a living world, full of the Father, the Son, and the Comforter; of angels, and of brothers. To see that we never petrify the thought of the living God into a metaphysical formula, still less into a numerical term. Never to let us forget that the great purpose of redemption is to bring us to God; that the great purpose of the Church is to make us good. When we have clipped, and stretched, and stiffened the living truth into the narrow immutability of our theological or philosophical definitions, to breathe it back again into the unfathomable simplicity of the wisdom that brings heavenly awe over the faces of little children, and heavenly peace into the eyes of dying men. To keep the windows open through our definitions into God's infinity. To translate our ingenious, definite, unchangeable, scholastic terms into the simple, infinite, ever-changing—because ever-living—words of daily and eternal life: so that holiness shall never come to mean a stern or mystic quality quite different from goodness; or righteousness a mere legal qualification quite different from justice; or humility a supernatural attainment quite different from being humble; or charity something very far from simply being gentle, and generous, and forbearing; and 'brethren' an ecclesiastical noun of multitude, totally unconnected with 'brother.' When women rise to their true work in the Church, it seems to me the Church will soon rise to her true work in the world."

STILLNESS.*

"Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." Literally, in the Hebrew, "Be silent to God, and let Him mould thee."—Luther.

Thy lesson art thou learning, O tried and weary soul?
His ways art thou discerning, who works to make thee whole?
In the haven of submission art thou satisfied and still?
Art thou clinging to the Father 'neath the shadow of his will?
Now, while his arms enfold thee, think well, He loveth best.
Be still, and He shall mould thee for his heritage of rest.

The vessel must be shapen for the joys of Paradise,
The soul must have her training for the service of the skies.
And if the great Refiner, in furnaces of pain
Would do his work more truly, count all his dealings gain.
For He himself hath told thee of tribulation here;
Be still, and let Him mould thee for the changeless glory there.

From vintages of sorrow are deepest joys distilled,
And the cup outstretched for healing is oft at Marah filled.
God leads to joy through weeping, to quietness through strife,
Through yielding into conquest, through death to endless life.
Be still, He hath enrolled thee for the Kingdom and the crown;
Be silent, let Him mould thee who calleth thee his own.

Such silence is communion, such stillness is a shrine,
The "fellowship of suffering" an ordinance divine.
And the secrets of "abiding" most fully are declared
To those who, with the Master, Gethsemane have shared.
Then trust Him to uphold thee 'mid the shadows and the gloom;
Be still, and He shall mould thee for his presence and for home.

For resurrection-stillness there is resurrection-power,
And the prayer and praise of trusting may glorify each hour,
And common days are holy, and years an Eastertide,
For those who, with the Risen One, in risen life abide.
Then let his true love fold thee, keep silence at his word;
Be still, and He shall mould thee! Oh, rest thee in the Lord!

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For prayer answered in blessing at Harrow.

PRAYER.—For a Romanist, who, seeing corruption in his own Church, is now studying the Bible with a view of discovering God's truth; that he may not only be intellectually convinced of the truth as it is in Jesus, but savingly converted.—For a sister fatherless and motherless.—For a younger sister, threatened with blindness through overwork, that it may be averted.—For an unconverted Sunday-school teacher.—For a prayer-meeting held at a brother's home every Thursday evening, for building up young Christians.—For one tried and distressed by a peculiar and subtle temptation.—For a rich blessing on communion services, to be held in a church where they were wont to be held for many years, but now for the last time.—For a young believer recovering from illness, that her mental powers may in no way be impaired.—For one who has sought the Lord for years, but has now given up in hopeless despair.—Mrs. Leadbeater writes:—My husband (S. Leadbeater) has now been for some weeks laid aside from his loved labour for the Lord, and would like to ask the prayers of your readers for his restoration. He is now in the Mission Home at Saltcoats, Ayrshire, undergoing treatment which is very severe, but encouraged to hope that, with God's blessing, it will eradicate the disease of heart and brain.—That God's blessing may attend a young ladies' Bible-reading on Friday afternoons, and that a large increase of spiritual life and power for service may be the result to each of the members.

PLACES.—For the success of the preached Gospel in a chapel at Woolwich.—For the Lord's work at Galashiels, Scotland.—For the Lord's blessing on the circulation of tracts, &c., at (1) Tonbury Flower Show.—For a week's special services at Pilsley, Derbyshire, commencing August 30.—For an open-air service at Milltown, Derbyshire, August 29.—For Clay Cross Circuit, that very many souls may be led to Jesus.—For a revival of God's work in Blackwood, and the conversion of infidels.—For three weeks' Gospel work in the town of Birmingham, from the 15th to the 29th.—For one month's labour in the town of Kingston.—For an awakening in a Sabbath-school class during next two Sundays, that many may see their need of Jesus and find Him as their Saviour.—For services in Wiltshire in September.—That 2000 copies of the Gospel by John, given to the guests at the tent breakfast meeting on Glasgow-green, may be owned of God to the salvation of many.—For Littlemore.

CONVERSIONS.—For a brother who is seriously ill, and seems ignorant both of his spiritual and bodily state.—For my dear son, who is a husband and father, amiable and affectionate, but destroying himself with drink.—For one who has been anxious for many years.—For one who has left home and gone on the stage.—On behalf of a professing Christian, who for years has been struggling against a hard, unbelieving heart.—For four unconverted sons, that they may be soon brought to the Lord.—For one very sick and near to die, who refuses to hear anyone speak to him of Christ or eternal things. He has lived a very godless life.—For an only brother in bad health, much tempted with strong drink.—For all my shopmates and myself, and also for my brother and sisters.

BOW-ROAD HALL CHOIR.—It having been felt that the services of this choir, who did such efficient work at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in the East-end of London, would be a great acquisition to mission and evangelistic work, the members have met in the large room at the "Edinburgh Castle," kindly lent by Dr. Barnardo, and unanimously resolved to form themselves into a permanent choir, under the title of "The East London Evangelistic Choir (late of Bow-road Hall)." Applications for their services may be made to the Choir secretary, Mr. A. E. Smith, 423, Mile End-road, E.

Donations received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Saturday Morning, August 21st, 1875.

ZOAR COTTAGE, PONTYPRIDD, GLAMORGAN.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS. July 21st, 1875. The Lord has, we believe, laid it on our hearts to build a "Zoar House" in the City of Glamorgan, for the spouse of Sunday-school and preaching the Gospel. The building will cost about £200: should the Lord lead you to help us, we shall feel thankful. The neighbourhood greatly requires evangelistic effort, there being no English place of worship within a mile; nothing is doing for the spiritual welfare of the people who reside there besides a Sunday-school and a night-meeting for preaching, which we are holding in cottages. About eighty children attend the Sunday-school. The people are willing to hear. The proprietors of the quarrits in the neighbourhood, feeling the need of such a place, have promised to supply stones for the building. Suitable ground has been secured at a yearly rental of £1; and £80 has been subscribed in the district. J. W. THOMAS, O. D. THOMAS.

GEORGE-YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.—GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges receiving from O. O. Edinburgh, £5; from W., a parcel of clothing.

The Day Infant Nursery. The Shelter for Houseless Girls, lately commenced at the Cagers' Hotel, and other Mission works, in full operation. Names are invited.

D.V., the school children will be taken to Petersham-park on Thursday, August 26th. Post-office Orders should be made payable at St. High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, the Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

LIVING ONLY TO SUFFER.—HOPELESSLY INCURABLE.—The Paralyzed and Epileptic.—The Rejected Candidates.—Most earnestly do I thank all kind friends who have already responded to my appeal. Contributions still needed. I am anxious before leaving town to send £2 or £3 to each of them. Many of the cases are urgent and distressing. A friend has promised £5 if it can complete the rent order of the "Living Only to Suffer." May He "whose are the silver and the gold" incline the hearts of his faithful servants to pity those who have the burden of hopeless suffering added to the bitter privations of poverty. H. W. J. GARRARD, Treasurer to the Ladies' Samaritan Society, 6, Abingdon-street, Great St. Mark.

APPEAL FOR FUNDS.—Princess Mary's Village Homes, and the Prison Mission are in great need of money to meet their expenses. Donations may be sent to Mrs. MARRIOTT, at either Institution.

THE CLOSE OF THE SEASON.—Occasional supply of the "Zones and Prisoner Series," by Miss MARRIOTT, price 1d., giving account of the Lord's work among women and children of the criminal class, can be had at Miss BIRCH'S House, Wandsworth-road, Vauxhall.

MR. GEO. MÜLLER AND HIS PREACHING.

BY GAWIN KIRKHAM.

THIS venerable servant of the Lord brought a fortnight's preaching at the Mildmay Conference Hall to a close on Lord's-day evening. The Sunday services have been crowded, but the attendance during the week has not been so large as might have been expected, though each of these had a larger number than its predecessor. These addresses and those delivered during the Mildmay Conference enable us to form an estimate of his preaching, which may be interesting and useful to others.

Mr. Müller's personal appearance is striking, being tall and commanding. He is in his seventieth year. He has a strong German accent, though he is easily understood by any English hearer.

In his public ministry he is emphatically a teacher. It has been represented that he has undertaken this journey as an evangelist, but this we venture to think is a mistake. Judging from the last fortnight at Mildmay, the line of truth he dwelt upon was far more calculated to build up Christians than to bring in the unsaved. Yet he frequently brought in the way of salvation in a clear, sweet, persuasive, and striking manner. It has frequently been observed how well suited he is to follow the evangelistic efforts of our beloved brethren Moody and Sankey.

Other preachers may learn much from him as to the method of preaching. He first of all gets a message from the Lord—i.e., he waits upon the Lord by reading the Scriptures, meditation, and prayer, till he realizes that he has the mind of the Spirit as to what he should say. He has been sometimes in doubt till almost the last minute, but never once has the Lord failed him. He strongly advocates and practises expository preaching. Instead of a solitary text detached from its context, he selects a passage, it may be of several verses, and goes over them consecutively, clause by clause. His first care is to give the meaning of the word, then to illustrate it by other scriptures, and afterwards apply it. This is done sentence by sentence, so that it is definition, illustration, and application, all the way through. Yet there is no uncertainty to his hearers as to when he is coming to a close, as he intimates at the outset how many verses he purposes to consider. His illustrations are occasionally taken from history, biography, or nature, but chiefly from the Scriptures or his own personal experience.

One of the most striking things about Mr. Müller's preaching is the way in which he induces his hearers to reconsider what has been already said. He frequently says, "Let us ask ourselves, Have I understood this? How does it apply to me? Is this my experience?" &c.

He makes much of the Word of God. Take the following outline of his address to young converts at Mildmay on Friday, the 20th ult. :—

"Let me press upon you the deep importance of reading the Word with meditation and prayer (1 Peter ii. 2, 3)—'As newborn babes desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby.' As neglected babes never become healthy men and women, so young converts who neglect God's appointed food, 'the Word,' never become bright Christians.

"1. Read the Word of God regularly through. Begin with Genesis in the morning and Matthew in the evening, making a mark where you left off. When you have finished the Old and New Testaments, begin again. As an earthly will is always read through with great care, so God's will ought to be read entirely through with reverence and godly fear. Consider the advantages of this plan—

(a.) We are kept from making a system of divinity of our own, and confining ourselves to a few favourite doctrines and truths. We also become lovers of the whole Word.

(b.) Variety is pleasing.

(c.) When we have finished reading it through, we shall be glad to begin it again. In forty-six years I have read my Bible through a hundred times; yet it is always fresh and new when I begin it again.

"2. Read in a prayerful spirit.

"3. Read with meditation. Ponder over what you are reading.

"4. Read with reference to your own heart. So many preachers read for their hearers; parents read for their children; and school-teachers for their scholars. Ask yourselves—

How does this suit me?

How does this warn me?

How does this rebuke me?

How does this comfort me?

If you do this, God uses the Word by you for others.

"5. Always seek to mix 'faith' with your reading.

"6. Practise what you read. We must carry out what God tells us. He expects us to be obedient children—'If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.' Come in child-like simplicity to the Word of God. Give heed to it with all earnestness, and let it settle all questions."

Another of Mr. Müller's strong points is prayer. It is here that most of us feel by comparison how little we know of real prayer. It is intensely humbling to sit at his feet, and listen to his experience on this subject. During the four noonday addresses at Mildmay he expounded the teaching of the Bible on prayer, and illustrated it from his own experience. He put it in this way—1. Prayer must be according to the will of God. 2. It must be offered in the name of Jesus. 3. It must be mixed with faith. 4. It must be persevered in till the answer comes. And he declared most emphatically that when these conditions were complied with he had never known a single instance of failure. He had had not only hundreds and thousands, but literally tens of thousands of answers to prayer.

When Mr. Müller began to pray about his Orphan Home, forty years ago, he asked for a house, and for £1000. He never doubted the £1000 would come, yet he had to wait eighteen months before the last of it was received. Since then he has received more than £650,000 in answer to prayer. One day, what is called "the higher Christian life" was touched upon. In speaking on Phil. iv. 6, 7—"Be careful, for nothing, &c."—Mr. Müller insisted, with unusual emphasis, that the child of God ought not to have a single care about anything. Not even the poor woman who has a drunken husband ought to have a single anxiety about him. Everything should be taken to the Lord, and left there. If we began to carry our own burdens, the Lord would add to them. If we had a pound-weight of care, and carried it ourselves, the Lord would make it ten pounds, and go on increasing the weight till it crushed us, and, overwhelmed by our trouble, we should be obliged at last to cast it upon Him.

Surely if any man has a right to be burdened he has. The care of 2000 orphan children is in itself a marvellous thing; but, in addition to these, he has responsibilities connected with 10,000 children in forty or fifty schools which he sustains. Then he circulates over three millions of tracts a year, besides a very large number of Bibles and Testaments. Nor does his care end with home missions, but there are numerous missionaries abroad who are partially or entirely maintained through his instrumentality. Yet, amid all this, he comes on the platform with a countenance full of peace and joy; and declares he is so happy in the Lord that he has been constrained to leave home in his old age, to declare this happiness to his "beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord Jesus Christ, wherever the Lord shall open the way."

Coupled with all this, there is deep humbleness of mind. In his public prayers he frequently asks the Lord to bless his word spoken by these sinful mortal lips; and in his preaching he calls himself again and again "a poor miserable sinner." This is a paradox, but one full of deep meaning to those of us who are younger in the Divine life. Whether it be right to use such a prayer or no, there rises to our lips spontaneously, after hearing such a man of God, "Lord increase our faith."

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will be glad to learn that the International Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations, held last week at Hamburg, was a time of happy Christian fellowship; drawing together in the close ties of Gospel brotherhood young men (as well as some who are still young in heart if not in years) from Germany and France, England and America, Holland, Scotland, and Switzerland. Our president was an earnest Hamburg nobleman in the prime of life (Baron von Oertzen), and one of the vice-presidents was the honoured founder of the London Association (Mr. George Williams), whom God has spared to see so wonderful a development of the idea it was given him to originate some thirty years since.

The statistics given by the American delegate (Mr. Moore, secretary of the New York Central Committee) are already familiar to many of your readers, nor is it needful to speak of the work in our own islands. In Germany and Holland also, the associations are very numerous, and though it is to be feared that in many places in these countries they fall short of the character of distinctly Christian and aggressive unions of young men, yet we had many interesting anecdotes showing that they are often rallying-points of evangelical life, sometimes in places where there is little or nothing else. The German associations do a valuable work in providing homes for young workmen travelling from place to place, as is the custom in Germany, and thus preventing, in many cases, their falling into evil associations.

Three interesting excursions were arranged in connexion with the Conference, one to the celebrated Rauhe Haus, another to a missionary festival in a village some distance up the Elbe, and a third (after the conference was over) to the British island of Heligoland. To those of your readers who have not read the deeply interesting history of the Rauhe Haus contained in "Praying and Working," by the Rev. J. B. Stevenson, I may just explain that it is a reformatory for outcast children, as well as for those who, though belonging to good families, have proved unmanageable at home. The principle of the institution is that of training in families, which has been adopted in so many English orphanages; and in these families young men are trained for evangelistic work, whilst they work side by side with the boys and exert over them a Christian influence. These young men afterwards go out as missionaries, evangelists, &c., and the Rauhe Haus has thus become the centre of a great work, with many ramifications, bound together under the name of the Inner Mission. The founder, Dr. Wichern, prematurely worn out by hard work, was not able to greet us in person. His son, on whom now devolves much of the responsibility of the work, is not strong, and might need to be supported by the prayers of Christians. The sweet influence of singing has from the beginning been a principal means employed by Dr. Wichern in reforming intractable lads, and as the evening closed in the children mustered in choir and gave a delightful specimen of German singing.

The trip to Heligoland on Thursday, returning on Friday, was a delightful time of relaxation and Christian fellowship. Would it not be well if English Christians more frequently intermitted their conventions and conferences in this way, so as to allow time for personal intercourse and for the digesting of the spiritual food with which one seems sometimes almost overfed on such occasions? Some of the German brethren inquired about the religious state of this island, for which we English must hold ourselves to a considerable extent responsible; and I received the impression that, whilst the standard of morality is high, there is need for the proclamation of the truth that "by the deeds of the law shall no flesh living be justified." An invalid acquainted with German who should feel led to hold cottage meetings, and visit from house to house upon this rock of the German Ocean, might find at the same time invigorating sea-breezes and a blessed field of work amongst the 2000 inhabitants.

In travelling through Germany, I heard several times of the abiding blessing which has resulted from the meetings held by our dear brother Mr. R. P. Smith, in Southern Germany, at Elberfeld, and at Berlin. May the Lord put it into the hearts of others to follow in his footsteps. I would ask your readers' prayers for two young Englishmen who are about to study for a year in an important German university, and who are very desirous to be used of the Lord amongst the students. A young German remarked to me at Hamburg that it might be hard to get the young men of Germany on the Lord's side, but if once they were won over they would go into the work with their whole hearts. Let us pray that it may be so.

I must not conclude without mentioning that the Conference agreed to take up the week of prayer for young men which was so much blessed in many places last year; and a recommendation is to go down to all the allied Associations that, until the next Conference in 1878, the week beginning with the second Sunday in November (which has been the day specially observed for years past by the American Associations) be set apart for united prayer on behalf of young men. May we not confidently expect that these prayers will be as richly rewarded by a revival of religion amongst young men, as the prayers offered in the first week of the year have already been with regard to the Church at large?

Those who are interested in Christian work in Belgium will be glad to hear that the Conference of 1876 is to be held at Brussels if the Association there finds itself able two years hence to undertake the needful arrangements.

Rotterdam, August 24.

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

CADNAMY HANTS.—A first series of services having been very successful, and evident tokens of the Lord's blessing resting on the work, it was thought advisable to continue them. The Evangelization Society (whose new address is 57, Charing-cross) kindly allowed their agent, George Hafford, to return. The services were resumed on August 9, and on the 11th a free tea was given. About 600 partook of tea in a malt-house kindly lent, after which a public meeting was held in the open-air, when about 500 listened to addresses by the Hon. W. Clewton Temple, G. Hafford, Mrs. Evans, and others. Services have been held each evening in the Tent, and, considering the busy season, have been well attended, many, on Sunday evenings, coming miles to listen to the Gospel message. Others, unaccustomed to attend any place of worship, have come regularly, and listened with marked attention. Several Christians exclaimed, "Oh! why did you not come amongst us before; we have been spiritually dead, we need rousing up." One experienced Christian man said, "I have learned more the last five nights than in the last five years." Next Sunday (26th) will be the last of these special services; the Tent will then be removed to West Winklow, about four miles off; where George Hafford will labour for a fortnight. Will Christians who are anxious for souls pray that this effort may redound to the glory of Christ's Kingdom?

ESTHER.*

THE Book of Esther is the only book in the Bible which makes no mention of the name of Almighty God. This must have been intentional, because it was by no means an easy omission to make. Not very long after the Book of Esther was written it was translated into Greek, and the translators, besides adding to it many things of the truth of which we have no evidence, were unable to resist the temptation to put the name of God in four places in that part of the narrative which they translated faithfully in other respects. From this it seems clear that the omission of the holy Name was intentional, for an ordinary person could not bring himself to omit it in translating the story, so convinced was he that the hand of God was there.

The principal characters in the Book of Esther are Jews in captivity in Persia (Esther ii. 5-7). The King of Persia had occasion to choose a queen; Esther was brought under his notice, and he chose her, not knowing of what nation or family she was. Her cousin Mordecai,† who had brought her up, came to the court, and happened while there to become acquainted with a certain conspiracy against the king's life, of which he gave information. The conspirators were hanged, and the name of the informer, with the whole transaction, written in the public records. We are next told that the king promoted to great dignity a certain person named Haman, an Agagite (which means a descendant of Agag). Why this Haman was promoted, history does not state; but when was an Eastern monarch without a favourite? Haman's position procured him outward marks of respect from "all the king's servants, that were in the king's gate." These marks of reverence Mordecai thought fit to withhold. The king's servants observed the omission, and, like true courtiers, called Haman's attention to the fact. Haman was enraged, not only with Mordecai, but, for some cause not mentioned, with Mordecai's whole race, i.e., with all the Jews. He thought scorn to lay hands upon Mordecai alone, but deliberately petitioned for a decree, which the king granted, ordering the extermination of every Jew in the king's provinces on a certain day appointed in the order. This decree probably extended to Judea and to the returned captives, for Judea was at that time a province of the Persian empire. The decrees were issued in every province, to the great consternation and perplexity of the Jews.

Mordecai lost no time in manifesting his grief in the most open and public manner, even before the king's gate; so that the Queen Esther, who had constant notice of his movements, soon heard of it and sent to inquire the reason. Mordecai sent her full information, and required her to use her influence with the king. This Esther could only do at the peril of her own life. No one could approach the king uninvited under penalty of death, and she had not been called for thirty days. However, after three days' fasting, in which Mordecai and all the Jews in the city were required to join, she entered the king's presence and was favourably received. She did not at once present her petition, but invited the king and Haman to a banquet on two consecutive days.

Haman, on leaving the presence of the king and queen the first day, had been incensed by meeting Mordecai, who, as usual, took no notice of him whatever. Haman went home and had a tree prepared of the height of fifty cubits, at the top of which he intended, after the Persian custom, to impale his enemy. (This is what hanging meant in Persia.) He was confident that he would be permitted to do so if he asked the king. But on the night after his preparations—the night between the two banquets—the king could not sleep. The book of public records was read to him. The whole story of the conspiracy discovered by Mordecai was rehearsed. What reward had been given to the successful discoverer? None whatever. It was now morning, and some one was already seeking an interview with the king. Who should it be but Haman, his feet swift to shed the blood of Mordecai, come to ask that the execution might take place at once. The king's business, however, comes before Haman's. "What shall be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour?" Haman gives the best possible answer, describing what he would wish done to himself, and is forthwith ordered to do it. He performs a perfect action of charity to his neighbour, with the bitterest hatred in his heart. He then retires to his house, and is comforted by a prophecy that this is an omen of his downfall.

There is no time to think, however. The queen's banquet is ready, and Haman is summoned to attend. He is not long kept in suspense. Esther's petition is presented. She asks for her life and the life of her people, doomed to die by the malice of an enemy. "Who is he, where is he, that durst presume in his heart to do so?" The king is all on the alert. Esther says it is Haman, and the monarch is furious. Haman's appeal to Esther is the signal for his removal. What is to be done with him? The tree prepared for Mordecai occurs to one of the attendants. Just what was wanted. "Hang him thereon." Haman had already given Mordecai what he had chosen for himself, and now what he had chosen for Mordecai is given to him.

The rest of the story is soon told. The Jews are still under sentence of death. The queen with tears entreats that it may be reversed. Mordecai's relation to her is disclosed of necessity, and he and she are permitted to issue in the king's name any decree they please, to effect their purpose. The former decree was irrevocable. It still held good in law that the Jews were to be destroyed. But now it is enacted that the Jews may resist, and that the king's officers everywhere are to help them. One would think that of the two decrees in question the rulers of the provinces might have kept either, and been within the law; but they saw fit to keep the second, and thus, instead of a massacre of Jews, there was a massacre of their enemies on the appointed day, followed by great rejoicings on the part of the favoured nation. The days of rejoicing are ordered to be kept by the Jews for ever. Mordecai is promoted to great honour and advancement, and the story closes.

But why is this book in the Bible? What is the object of it? This is not a word of religion in it anywhere, except a three days' fast, which is not likely to be imitated by many, and a two days' feast, which is nothing to anyone except the Jews. The book says as little of idols as it does of the God of Israel. For all we know from the Book of Esther, the religion of Haman, Mordecai, and the king might have been the same. There is not a word about the matter. Yet the Jews had a saying that the Book of Esther would last as long as the book of the law. Historically and prophetically it is so closely connected with the whole thread of Scripture history that the loss of it would be a calamity which nothing could repair.

The historical coincidences it contains are most curious. We read in chap. ii. that Mordecai was of those Jews who had been carried away captive with Jeconiah, King of Judah, though if we are meant to understand that Mordecai himself was living at that time, he must have been very young. In Jer. xxiv. 5-7 we find a prophecy respecting these very people. The captives that went with Jeconiah are likened to a basket of good fruit—they should be “built and not pulled down; planted and not plucked up.” Further, in the second chapter of Esther we read that Mordecai and Esther were Benjamites, descendants of Kish, of the same family with Saul, the first King of Israel. Haman, on the other hand, was a descendant of the family of Agag, the royal house of Amalek. So the word Agagite has been understood by the Jews themselves. A strange coincidence, that Saul should be brought to the throne of Israel to destroy Amalek, and fail, but that a descendant of his family should come to the throne of Persia 500 years later, and accomplish the task. The remnant of the people of Amalek had been cut off in the time of Hezekiah. With Haman perished the family of their kings. Long ago it had been said by Moses, “When the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from thine enemies, thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven: thou shalt not forget it” (Deut. xxv. 19). Here is a coincidence of words as well as fact. On what account were the days of Purim kept, except as the days when the Jews “rested from their enemies”?

Other things in the story of Esther are accounted for by this connexion. How was it that Haman thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but planned to destroy the whole Jewish race? It is understood at once, if we remember that this was the very thing that the Jews had been doing with the race of Haman. The prophecy and the history of the Exodus explain why Mordecai and not Haman was successful. Does not this also explain why Mordecai would not do reverence to Haman? “His King shall be higher than Agag” was Balaam’s prophecy concerning Israel. Had it been a mere personal quarrel between them, we must have blamed Mordecai; but not when it was a war of extermination, expressly commanded by Almighty God. The memory of Saul’s disaster was enough to warn any of his descendants against sparing the sons of Agag. For sparing the King of Amalek, Saul had lost his throne.

Again, is it not somewhat remarkable that we read three times over in the 9th chapter of Esther that the Jews who slew their enemies throughout the Persian empire on the day of the decree took no plunder from the slain? “They laid not their hands on the prey.” Why mention this so repeatedly, if it were not intended to remind us that the war was a sacred one, that the plunder was accursed? In the war with Amalek, in the reign of Saul, the people “slew upon the spoil.” It is clear that the Jews had not forgotten the lesson they had then learned. Thus the Book of Esther confirms the narrative in Samuel, and shows that it was well known to the Jews.

The foresight and confidence of Mordecai are very remarkable. He bids Esther not to disclose the fact that she was a Jewess until the appointed time; then it saved the whole race. He says also to her, “Deliverance shall arise to the Jews.” If we look at the Book of Esther only, his confidence seems to amount to rashness. But if we compare the earlier Scriptures, “I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee”; and again, “When thou art in tribulation, . . . if thou turn to the Lord thy God, He will not forsake thee nor destroy thee,” we can understand his faith. Here is the exact promise which justifies the confidence of Mordecai: They were in tribulation, captives in a strange land; but “the Lord would not destroy them.” Then how could Haman’s plan succeed? There must be deliverance to the Jews, if not from Esther, then “from another place”; and the question, “Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?” is the very formula of Jewish faith in all ages. “It may be that the Lord will work for us.” “Who can tell if God will be gracious unto me?” “Who knoweth if He will return, and repent, and leave a blessing behind Him?” There never was a better form of expressing confidence, nor one that has been more often honoured by the blessing of God. The promise must be fulfilled, that is certain, and “Who knoweth whether” it might not happen thus and thus?

We must notice one thing in the book which seems plainly prophetic, like so many similar things in other portions of Scripture. The turning-point in the deliverance of God’s people is that their enemy is hanged upon a tree—the tree which he had prepared for their deliverer. The decree for their destruction is turned into a sentence upon their enemies. Do not these circumstances illustrate that verse in the Epistle to the Colossians which speaks of God’s “blotting out the handwriting of ordinances (the very word used to describe the king’s decree in Esther) that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross”? and it is added, “Having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it.”

There are many verbal coincidences between the Book of Esther and the New Testament—e.g., the one just mentioned about the decrees. Again, the very word used for the devil in the New Testament is here applied to Haman; the expression, “Let him be crucified,” and others.

Perhaps the unalterable decrees of Media and Persia, never revoked, but met by the operation of other decrees if it was necessary to alter the result, may represent the reign of law under which we all live. The law of Almighty God “altereth not”; and yet, under this unalterable law, Infinite Wisdom will contrive to open a way through every difficulty, and work out every gracious purpose of love.

And is not the view of religion presented by the Book of Esther one which is sometimes very necessary and very comforting for us to take? Here are a number of circumstances, all under God’s control, working out his most gracious purposes, and yet his hand is hidden all the time. And, again, here are two persons at least acting strictly and steadily under his guidance, fulfilling his will with the utmost confidence, and yet you cannot discover on what principle they work, except by the result. That result, however, is “That the people of God have joy and gladness, feasting, and a good day”; for, “Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.”

A NESTORIAN DEPUTATION IN LONDON.

THE cry of the man of Macedonia, "Come over and help us!" often reaches us through the pens of missionary labourers in other lands, but it is not often that it is uttered in our very ears by a deputation from a nation longing for Christian help. There are, however, now in London staying at the Asiatic Home in the West India-road, four Nestorians who have left their homes, and spent their little all, to come over to England as a deputation from their people, to beg their Christian brethren here to send back with them some teachers and preachers willing to reside among them, and lift them from the low estate into which they have fallen. We wish we could present our readers with a picture of these men in their varied national costumes; very patriarchal they look with their marked Jewish physiognomy and Oriental attire, and very interesting and touching is their simple statement of the needs of their people, and of their confiding hope in the generous sympathy of England. One of the number is a priest of the Nestorian Church, two are deacons, and the fourth is a layman. Priest Khamis comes from the mountains of Khoordistan; Deacon Khanaan Marcus comes from Khrooma, and wears the dress of a mountaineer; Deacon Khanaan Yeshoo comes from Ooroomiah, and dresses as a Persian, wearing the tall, brimless, Astrachan hat. Their credentials are signed by the patriarchs and bishops of their Church.

Their language is Syriac, but they also speak Arabic and Turkish, and are anxious to improve in English as much as possible during their brief stay. They took four months in travelling from Ooroomiah to Jerusalem, where they received much kindness from Bishop Gobat, Mr. Hoffman, of the Temple Colonies in Palestine, and Mr. Mott, of the British Syrian Schools, Beyrout. They brought with them letters of introduction to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dean Stanley, Dr. Bullock, S.P.G., &c. His Grace, however, is unable to help them, and the S.P.G. have merely expressed an intention of sending out a clergyman to report on the state of their Church. This is not what they want, and they fear that nothing will come of it. As they are intensely anxious not to lose their labour and return without the helpers they seek, they cast themselves on the sympathy of Christians everywhere, and wish to let their voice be heard through our columns and those of our contemporaries.

As is known to most of our readers, the Nestorian is one of the most ancient Christian Churches in existence, one which has never been enslaved to Popery, but has maintained its independence and comparative purity of doctrine from the first.

For many centuries it was a bright and shining light in the eastern world. Nestorian missionaries evangelized Tartary, Persia, Arabia, India, and China. As many as seventy Nestorian missionaries had been sent to the latter country alone as early as the seventh century, and it is said that two emperors were not only converted themselves, but greatly helped in the propagation of the faith.

The Mohammedan conquests in Asia greatly enfeebled the Nestorian Church, which suffered severe persecution in the ninth century. It was by the means of Nestorian missionaries that the celebrated though half mythical king of Persia, Prester John, was converted. Our visitor Yeshoo says that eight millions of Asiatic Christians, fruits of the labours of Nestorian missionaries, perished under the sword of Tamerlane, but the zealous love of the Church survived even this terrible persecution, and up to about the time of our own Reformation it continued an earnest, evangelical, and aggressive Church. "In those times we had schools, and science, and literature, and much beautiful poetry, but all is changed in this nineteenth century; our Mohammedan enemies have so cruelly oppressed us so long that almost everything good has disappeared. Ignorance and darkness have come over our nation. In 1831-38 Messrs. Smith and White visited our people, and brought the Bible to us in Syriac; three years after the pious Dr. Perkins came to us from America, and we who had sent missionaries to other nations were glad to have them come to ourselves. Our nation received them with joy and love; we were ready for every good work, and great revivals were the results of the labours of Dr. Perkins and his friends. It was like life from the dead; the leading men of our nation were converted. But that sunny day passed, and the night of darkness has overtaken us. We have no Englishman living among us in Khoordistan now, and the Mohammedans can oppress us at their pleasure. An arrow pierces the heart of everyone who sees our oppressions. All around us are allowed to trample on us—the Persians, the Aphars, the Khoords, and the wild Khoords. Within my own remembrance 10,000 of my own nation have disappeared from Khoordistan either by sword or flight. In Ooroomiah we are burdened by heavy taxes which we cannot pay, and are compelled to labour like slaves for the Persian knights and nobles. Our bishop, who helped Dr. Perkins, has been tied to a cart, fined, and imprisoned; our chiefs are beaten in the court before our Persian enemies; we have no protection; we are weak because we are ignorant, and we have no means of education. Our girls by force and bribery are compelled to become Moslems; to escape oppression many join the Roman Catholic Church, and others go over to the Greek Church. Last year even one of our bishops did this. Others, sick and weary of their lives, because of their hopeless bondage to the Persians, leave their wives and families, and are lost in other countries; and so our pure and ancient Church is in danger of being extinguished."

The deputation seems to be of opinion that the mere residence in their midst of one or two English missionaries would be a kind of protection against the political oppression under which they groan, and that a revival of true religion similar to that which has recently taken place in the Syrian Church at Malabar (planted originally by the Nestorians) would be the result of their evangelistic labours. They say: "We are Protestants; we have the truth, but most of our people have it in the head, not in the heart. We want to be revived, and to have our faith in God strengthened, that we may be able to endure our persecutions. The eyes of our nation are turned to England. Our enemies have had help and sustenance from Queen Victoria; we hope all true Christians will turn with love to us."

We are in communication with some Christian friends as to what practical steps ought to be taken in response to this appeal, and will give further information on the subject in our next. Men and means are both required, for our Nestorian brethren have spent their all in coming hither, and have no funds for their return journey, nor for their sustenance while in England. Under these circumstances we have afforded them temporary hospitality at the East-end Training Institute, our intercourse with them having led us to believe them to be earnest and spiritual men. We feel that it would ill befit our country, so recently refreshed with the tide of revival blessing, to refuse to send the Water of Life to their dry and thirsty land. We shall be glad to receive helpful communications on this subject, and we invite contributions towards the support of these Nestorian Christians while in England.

Mr. Salter, Missionary to the Asiatics in London, will gladly answer any inquiries respecting the deputation. His address is, Asiatic House, West India-road, E.

CHELTENHAM.—The Rev. H. M. Barnett writes:—A good Christian agency has during the past few months been carried on in a populous and needy part of High-street, Cheltenham, in a room lately turned into an undenominational Gospel Hall. The Lord's favour and blessing have been manifested most graciously there in the ingathering of many souls during the whole time of its I returned to Southampton to find that the work of the Evangelization Society at the Gospel Tent, Oxford-street, is being prosecuted with much vigour and success, the interest being remarkably well sustained and wide-spread.

ON THE OTHER SIDE.

From a long communication addressed us by a fellow-passenger in the Spain, we gather that God heard prayer and granted our beloved brethren Moody and Sankey a most quick and prosperous voyage of eight days and nineteen hours. On Friday, the 13th, Mr. Moody was well enough to let his voice be heard on deck, and after the singing of the hymn, "Shall we gather at the river?" his old stirring tones were discernible amid the splash of the rising and falling wave, lifting up the cross of Christ.

At the close of the voyage a gloom was thrown over the ship by the sudden death of a young naval officer returning home. "Praise God" was sung on deck before reaching the shore, and then came greetings from well-known brethren, who, glad at heart at what God has done by their countrymen in our land, are more than ever ready to bid them welcome in the name of the Lord, and invite them on to still further exploits. They enter now, we trust, on two months' rest, and during that time will be glad to hear from fellow-workers and young converts of the dealings of God with them.

THE NORTH-WEST AFRICAN EXPEDITION.

AFRICA has been the field of missionary labours for many years, but the climate and other difficulties have considerably retarded the progress of these missions. Perhaps the most successful pioneer of Christianity on the West Coast is Bishop Crowther, who penetrated these regions further than any other. The great drawback to the introduction of Christianity in Africa is the want of a highway into the interior. Dr. Livingstone was well aware of this, and his idea was to establish some line into the centre of the continent; and until this is accomplished in some satisfactory form, we cannot look for much change for the better. The cruelties which are committed with impunity in these regions are such as to pain every Christian. Slavery with all its horrors is still carried on with vigour, notwithstanding the endeavours to suppress it; and the evils of the slave trade are, we think, even less terrible than the sacrifice of life through superstition and for the cupidity of the native princes. Every effort should be used vigorously to put an end for ever to this sad state of things in Africa, and every practical attempt should surely receive the co-operation of every Christian.

The most practical and feasible plan that has yet been proposed for opening up Africa to the introduction of Christianity and every other good influence is that proposed by Mr. Mackenzie, and energetically supported by General Sir Arthur Cotton and other distinguished personages. This plan was lately discussed at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, and supported by a number of influential men. The Lord Mayor expressed himself in favour of the project, and intimated his willingness to receive subscriptions towards carrying it out.

The proposal is to open up North Central Africa from the north-west coast directly opposite the Canary Islands. The geological structure of the portion of the western desert of Sahara, which would have to be crossed, favours the scheme, since a great tract of these regions, known as El Juff, or the great hollow, is considerably below the sea level, and was at a comparatively modern epoch covered by the Atlantic and formed a portion of that ocean. It appears that depressions of this nature are not uncommon in the Great Desert of North Africa. There is one of similar character situated behind the Gulf of Cobes, which is 170 feet below the level of the Mediterranean sea. This basin was surveyed by the French. Extending from the basin called El Juff there is a dry channel called the Belta Valley, which it is supposed formed the channel between El Juff and the Atlantic. The ocean is prevented from flowing into this depression by a sand-bar across the entrance of the Belta. This bar of sand has been accumulated by the current which sets in direct on the coast. If this were removed, the waters of the ocean would fill their former bed, establishing a direct water communication with Timbuctoo in the interior of Africa.

Engineers say that it would be easy to accomplish this, and it is now proposed that an expedition should be sent out to survey these districts and get levels and other information necessary to give the scheme a practical form. There are important points in favour of the plan: e.g., the people inhabiting these regions are peaceful, and anxious to hold communication with Europeans, while the climate is very healthy, and the distance from England is only about 1500 miles to the mouth of the Belta, and from that point to Timbuctoo is only about 800 miles, thus making the distance from England to Central Africa 2300 miles. If once an opening were made into these regions, the blessings would be immeasurable. It seems as if the prayers of good people and cries of the oppressed sons of Africa had reached God's ears, and that His appointed time for delivering the dark children of Ham from the yoke of slavery has come, and that our generation will see the redemption of that continent.

A fund is now being raised at the Mansion House towards the expense of the North-West African Expedition, and we hope that everyone will contribute to such a laudable object, which, if accomplished, will open the doors of Africa to the glad tidings of the Gospel of our Lord. Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has sent instructions to Her Majesty's representatives at Morocco and Teneriffe to give every proper assistance to this expedition.

We shall be happy to forward any contributions entrusted to us for this important object. The office of Mr. Archer, the hon. secretary, is Norgrove-buildings, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

MISS CORTIS'S WORK AT WORTHING.

(SPECIAL.)

DEAR FRIEND,—Will you permit us to plead with the Lord's people for the speedy completion of the Worthing Mission Hall and British Workman? We find that the amount you named last week is not enough, as it will require £400. Our esteemed friend Miss Cortis has laboured there quietly and unostentatiously, in season and out of season, for years. We, in common with others, have seen and taken part in the work, and most gladly bear testimony that it is of the Lord. Your own columns have borne witness from time to time to the same truth.

As Miss Cortis is about to be married, will not the readers of THE CHRISTIAN combine, and hand over to her the buildings free of debt as a wedding present? This matter can easily be accomplished if there be first a willing mind. We cannot, like Artaxerxes of old, "make a decree" that "it be done speedily" (Ezra vii. 21), but we trust we may be allowed to use the exhortation of St. Paul, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. vi. 2).

We will only add that we shall be happy to receive contributions, and you have already expressed your willingness to do the same.

Yours in Gospel bonds,

REYNOLDS MORROW,

GAWIN KIRKHAM.

PORTSMOUTH.—A tent, lent by Mr. Russell Hurditch, has been doing good service at Portsmouth. There has been a large and regular attendance, and some souls saved. Mr. Dowkott will be glad to have the help of any labourer going in that direction; and also of tracts and books for the troop-ships, which begin their voyages next month. Address, Mr. George D. Dowkott, Her Majesty's Dockyard, Portsmouth.

TRACT-DISTRIBUTION IN GERMANY.—Mrs. Princep writes:—My Bible-carriage at Creuznach is going a pilgrimage to Mainz, Frankfurt, &c., and I need any amount of tracts—a million at the very least. The colporteur has distributed some 30,000 already this season, and by next week will have cleared out many more thousands at the Creuznach Fair; and it is such a needful work, for never did I see people more hungering and thirsting after food for their souls than they are. I have just returned from Germany, so can testify what it is. Pray help me if you can, and ask the Lord to bless the Bible-carriage. I have four decks painted on it in German. M. R. PRINCEP.

TEMPERANCE CAMP MEETING IN AMERICA.

SEA CLIFF is a delightful summer resort on Long Island Sound, twenty-seven miles below New York city. Here a company of Christian gentlemen have erected a fine hotel, a very extensive tabernacle for religious services, and provided everything for the comfort and enjoyment of those who desire to get away from the noise and confusion of city life; but whose consciences will not permit them to go to the fashionable watering-places where rum-drinking, horse-racing, card-playing, gambling, and dancing, are the order of the day. Here, on July 13, a National Temperance Camp Meeting assembled. To this meeting every kind and character of temperance organization was invited; we are glad to be able to say that all were represented, and that throughout the six days' convention, harmony and Christian forbearance prevailed.

It was the united testimony of all the speakers that prohibition and prayer must go together; that while it is the proper business of men to vote and see that the laws are not only enacted but enforced, it is the duty of the women to pray to God, and in the name of Jesus persuade rum-sellers to cease from dealing out the deadly poison, and rum-drinkers to desist from imbibing that which ruins soul and body.

Rev. Dr. Boardman and wife, who had only just returned from England, where they have been sojourning for two years, were on the ground, and added much to the interest by holding two meetings each day for the promotion of holiness. These meetings were the centre of attraction throughout the week, and were greatly blessed and owned of God. Many persons gave testimony to the strengthening and teaching power of these meetings.

One day of the Convention was set apart for reformed men. This was regarded as the best of the proceedings. The stories of these men were indeed marvellously thrilling, and show truly that the days of miracles have not passed. From the speeches of these men we make a few extracts, but the heart of what they said, no man can put on paper.

Mr. Murphy, of Maine, who in his boyhood home in Ireland became a drunkard at the early age of thirteen, was the first to speak. His history is most thrilling, and, at times, heartrending. He was converted while in gaol, and pardoned by the governor of the State; his wife soon after died of a broken heart, and left him with six small children to take care of. He is a most earnest Christian, with a warm, noble heart. During the past ten months he has been lecturing in the State of Illinois, where he has organized thirty-five reformed clubs, and 35,000 have signed the pledge under his pleadings. He is the President of the Reformed Men's Clubs of the New England States, which number over 60,000 men on their roll.

Mr. Jerry McCauly, who now has charge of the Water-street Mission, said: The John Allen meeting was called an excitement, but it was a glorious kind of excitement, and one that caught me. There was not a bigger drunkard in the world than I was. I had no hat; no coat. A good Samaritan came and found me. He followed me until God converted me, and then my good Samaritan brother gave me over to God to be kept, and He has kept me ever since.

Mr. Clark said: I was born in England. I led a bad life there. I came to this country at twenty years of age, and after drinking and gambling for a long time, I fell into the hands of the blessed women in Newark, N.J., and through them I was saved from drink.

Mr. Suits said: I was a drunkard, out and out. I was thrown aside as being of no use. Many times I have been carried to gaol on a cart. My own brethren had cast me off. No one cared for me. When the sisters heard of me, they sent a messenger for me. I went to their prayer-meeting, and oh! how they prayed for me. They called me brother, and that broke my heart. I offered to sign the pledge, but a lady said, "Sign yourself a way to Jesus." I did as she told me, and oh! what blessed results. I stand here a free man.

Col. Hay was then called for. He said: I am by profession a lawyer. I am also a reformed man; but I will not send your hearts by telling you of the awful depths to which I had fallen. Everything was done for me that devoted friends could do, but of no avail. Horace Greeley did all that he could do to induce me to be a man. Finally, as I told you last night, I was picked up in the streets, and sent to the hospital. God bless those noble, devoted, consecrated women, for the grand work they are engaged in!

The Sabbath-day's services were enhanced in by what the Methodists call a love-feast. Here Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalian, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Quakers, in two-minute speeches all united in telling what the Lord had done for them. This meeting began at 8.30 o'clock, and so great was the interest, that frequently half-a-dozen or more men and women were on their feet at one time, and when the hour for the ten o'clock meeting arrived, there were scores still anxious to tell of the loving-kindness of their Master.

Mrs. Anna Wittenmyer, editor and proprietor of the Christian Woman, and President of the Women's National Temperance Union, was introduced as the first speaker for the morning service. She began by saying: There is only one remedy for sin, and that is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Yesterday, looking upon the reformed men as they stood upon this platform, telling of what God had done for them, we said, "Surely the days of miracles are not passed; Christ is still picking up the leprous souls and making them heirs of God." There was a time when we did not look to God to deliver us from this evil, but by ridicule and sarcasm we tried to shame men into a better life. Oh, how utterly we failed in that effort, and men staggered by us, led on by their passions, tramp, tramp, to a drunkard's grave! To-day, while these services will go on, there will be dug in this country 200 pits, into which will fall as many besotted men. The thought of these facts has caused the women of this land to appeal from the courts of earth, where we have been defeated so many times, to the high court of heaven, where we have an Advocate who has never yet lost a case. This divine inspiration came down upon the women of America like a pentecostal baptism. This very day there is going up a column of prayer as broad as the Continent of America. I love to follow that column as it is borne on angel wings to the ear of Him who said, "O woman, great is thy faith."

While our brothers are talking (for you know we have nothing to do with politics), we are praying. This is all our army. We are praying, they are voting. Prohibition and praying go together. The people of this nation must stand up for the Bible in our schools and against the desecration of our Sabbath. Already there is an effort being made for a free Sabbath in Philadelphia during the six months of the Centennial. Already the Centennial Committee are negotiating with a beer company in New York who are to pay $50,000 for the privilege of selling beer on the grounds during the Centennial.

Now I wish to talk to the mothers. Some of you are holding in your arms the pure child whose feet have not yet gone astray, but very soon they will go out, and they must go right by these saloons. How do I know but my boy may fall, and go down into the slums? The 60,000 who go down every year were once just as pure as your babe, and the prayer of their mothers would not stop them. You do not know but that you are nursing a murderer. You may not be personally interested in this movement now, but the time may come when you will pray some woman to go down among the denge of creation, and there, lifting up your son, call him brother. What do you say to those women who stay at home until they have no homes? What do you think of those wealthy women who remain in their elegant houses, encased in their fine dresses and costly silks, and who are dying of broken hearts? Far better that they should go out and try to save somebody.

She then related a most thrilling account of a family who in Cincinnati were saved and converted through the efforts of one lady in an hour and a half, and closed by saying: I beseech you, do not say anything against this women's movement. If you cannot say anything better than that, keep still, and see the salvation of our God.

Mr. Francis Murphy, of Maine, a reformed man, was the next speaker, who occupied a little over an hour in telling the story of his own life. During the recital of this wonderful story, almost everyone in the great audience was in tears.

The afternoon meeting was addressed by Miss Francis E. Willard, formerly Dean of the Women's College at Evanston, Illinois, and who gave up a salary of $2500 per year to enter this work, without money and without price. But we have only space for a few extracts from the closing speech of the evening service by the President of the Convention (Rev. W. H. Beale), who spoke for one hour and forty minutes, and then closed the Convention with a half-hour devoted to short prayers.

Mr. Beale took for his text these words: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they forward." This women's movement can count the CONVERSION OF OVER 8000 RUM-SMELERS.

It is now only eighteen months since this inspiration came to our women, and twenty States have their temperance unions. Here, at Sea Cliff, we see the result of this baptism, where for six days we have held these glorious meetings. Mr. Boole next considered the objections that are made to this temperance movement, and closed by saying: There is not a single foundation-stone in our Government upon which you can build a thing that is sinful. A new dispensation has been given to the churches, because this liquor traffic has become a consolidated evil. It has planted itself as a Gibraltar in the midst of our republic. God says, Go forward. The Church says, Give us a bridge. But God never shows any bridges. He says, Go forward. His way is a marvellous way. His people are to walk by faith, not by sight, and through faith we are to obtain a victory. God is always between his people and the enemy. The enemy said, We will gather great spoil; but God speaks, and they all go down together. E. J.

TWELVE MONTHS' WORK IN SOHO.

Your readers who kindly assisted us a year ago in transforming the Home Rule Hall in Grafton-street into a Mission Hall, will doubtless be interested in the results of a year's work in that fearfully wretched and drunken neighbourhood.

We have had congregations. The streets are teeming with poor degraded people at all times, so that in the open air it is always easy to get a crowd; but in the hall, as well, we have had many thousands of these needy souls. I wish the congregation could be photographed some evening, for surely the array of faces marked so distinctly with sin and sin-begotten sorrow would appeal more loudly for help than any words one can use. The service has never been held without the presence of some partially intoxicated persons, and yet the attention of the congregations is all but perfect, and there has never been a serious interruption, with one exception.

And the word, thank God, has been with power. At most of the services anxious inquirers have been pointed to Christ. Commencing with two or three helpers, who walked miles night after night to be there, we have now got a force of about forty on the spot, who delight to do all they can for the salvation of their neighbours, some twenty of them having spoken in public already for Christ.

Eight services are now held weekly in the open air, and eight indoors, the poor not only doing their utmost in their leisure time to make these meetings effective, but raising more than £25 per annum towards the expense of the place, which costs in all some £150. The poverty of the people and the fearful spiritual need of the district constitute, we think, a special claim upon all who care for the "devil's castaways."

Mr. Booth still continues lame, though much better. Mrs. Booth still needs our prayers for recovery of strength.

G. S. RALTON,

Secretary Christian Mission (Rev. W. Booth's).

CHRISTIAN VISITORS TO WESTON-SUPER-MARE may be interested to know that there is a weekly meeting every Tuesday afternoon at 3.30 on the "Christian Life," at Mildmay Lodge, conducted by the Rev. W. and Mrs. Bradbury.

HOUSE OF FAITH.—We omitted to mention in our last issue that a Home for the cure of disease and sickness of all kinds by Scriptural means was opened recently at 6, Tower-street, Hackney, London, E. The Home is under the superintendence of Baron Karl Andreas. Prayer and anointing with oil are the only means employed. During the few weeks that have elapsed since its commencement, Baron Andreas writes that several sick ones have been restored to perfect health, and much blessed in soul. We understand that the accommodation afforded by these premises is due to the liberality of the Hon. Cowper-Temple.

A correspondent writes:—"I have just been over to the Faith House on London Fields, which was opened about three weeks ago with a meeting for special prayer and a short address from Lord Radstock. The house is a large airy one, and conveniently situated close to the London Fields Station. There are at present only few patients in the house, but the Lord is working. One man who was suffering so severely from rheumatism that he could hardly sleep at all for many months, is now free from pain, and daily gaining strength. Baron Andreas is glad to see anyone for prayer on Tuesday or Friday mornings from 10 to 12.30. He has no doubt of the Lord's power and willingness to heal all who come to Him in faith, and has given himself up to this work, resting on the assurance 'These signs shall follow them that believe—they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.' And the Lord is blessing him and honouring his faith, and, doubtless, will do so still more when our faith is stirred up to ask and expect great things, for 'if two of you shall agree as touching anything that ye shall ask, it shall be done for you of my Father which is in Heaven.'"

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

DEAR SIR,—In making an appeal for tracts, books, and hymn-papers for hop-pickers, I desire to thank those of your readers who so kindly responded to my appeal for the same purpose last year. It may be interesting to them to state that we visited upwards of fifty different hop-gardens, with an aggregate of at least 1800 bins. This would represent, I should say, several thousand souls, to all of whom we gave books, &c., which very few refused or tore up.

We were privileged to have a meeting during their dinner-time, in many of the gardens, on the week-day; sometimes having three or four hymns in succession, and a very few words at the close. At other times the way was open to sing and speak for nearly three-quarters of an hour, and even then the people were loth to move.

On more than one occasion we have seen the dinner covered over as soon as we began singing, and not touched till we left. One man, the foreman of a garden, where we had a meeting of about 200 men, women, and children, told us, only a week or two since, that the effect of our one visit to that garden was felt all through the season. "The Great Physician," "Gates ajar," "Jesus of Nazareth," and "Safe in the arms of Jesus," seemed to make great impression on the people; and we doubt not the harvest-day will reveal the result. We should like to be able to give all the people we come in contact with this hop-season the hymns we sing; and we should like to be able to have a tea in three or four different districts before the season closes." As the time is short, and labourers few, and as we desire to reach out and scatter freely the good seed, I trust we shall have a liberal supply of tracts, &c. I am, dear Sir, yours, Sticks-green, Hildenborough, Kent.

G. GILLINGHAM.

(Prov. x. 4; xi. 25, 26; xxiv. 11, 12; Colossians iii. 23.)

N.B.—The gardens we visited last year were in the neighbourhoods of Hadlow, Tunbridge, Chiddingstone, Plaxtol, Edenbridge, and Penhurst.

[We have communications from Mr. J. J. Kendon, of Goudhurst, in Kent; and also from Mr. Bransby and Mr. Chinn, of Alton, Hants, who from year to year do good service among the hop-pickers. These are chiefly the poorest of the poor, and as much in need of Christian kindness and the good tidings of the Kingdom of God as any class in our land; and we shall be delighted to help their helpers.—Ed.]

THE ORGAN-GRINDERS.—A Sunday-school teacher desires to stir up other Christians to interest themselves in the poor Italian organ-players, amongst whom he finds a ready ear for the Gospel. Italian tracts, which they greatly prize, may be obtained at Messrs. Groombridge and Sons, Paternoster-row.

SWANSEA TENT.—Special services were commenced at Swansea on Wednesday, the 18th inst., in a large Gospel Tent formerly used in connexion with the Bow-road Hall meetings, and lent to the Young Men's Christian Association by the Tent Mission. It is at present situated in one of the poorest localities in the centre of a dense population, and will be removed after a while to other parts of the town equally in need of the Gospel. The meetings are being conducted by Mr. T. E. Cleworth, an evangelist from the Evangelization Society, of 67, Charing-cross, London, and the Lord is very greatly blessing the work. There was an attendance of no less than 800 people on the opening night; and on Sunday, August 22, at both the afternoon and evening services, such large numbers assembled that it was found necessary to raise the side curtains of the tent, in order that the crowd outside might hear the good tidings. In the afternoon there were present about 1200 people, and in the evening about 1500. Large numbers have remained behind each night to the after-meetings, and many have found Christ. On Saturday, the 21st, a man who had come into the town from a village about nine miles distant, happened to be passing near a band of workers, who were singing in the streets and inviting people to the tent. This was the first notice he had received of the meetings; and, as he had an hour to spare before the departure of his train, he turned in, and was met there by God. He remained behind with the other inquirers in great anxiety about his soul, although he knew that his train had gone. A Christian worker spoke to him, and was enabled to lead him to the Saviour; and he started to walk home at a late hour, rejoicing in Christ. This is just one instance of the blessing that has attended the work.

Since the above was written the work has been continually growing, and the number of inquirers who remain to the after-meetings steadily increasing. One of the most important and interesting features is the large number of petitions for prayer and praise which are continually pouring in. Will all Christian people kindly remember these meetings and unite with us in praise for what God has already done, at the same time praying that the work may go on increasing abundantly!

THINE THE BEAUTY AND THE GLORY.

[GEN. XXIV.]

THINE the beauty and the glory—
 Heir of all things, Son of God,
 Shining round me and before me,
 Lighting all the desert road.

Camels girded for the journey,
 Kneeling, laden, set for home;
 Ah! my heart is gone already,
 Centered there, no more to roam.

Roll afar, thou proud Euphrates!
 Nought can hold me from my hour,
 Where my mighty Guardian came from,
 There, with me, will He return.

Buried in Chaldea's city,
 I had perished with my race;
 But the Steward, sent to save me,
 Met me in his Master's grace;

Asked me for "a little water,"
 Let me quench his camels' thirst,
 Saw in me Bethuel's daughter,
 Her He prayed for at the first.

Oh the errand that He told me,
 Of the Living One who died,
 Of the Father's love and counsel,
 Taking unto Him a Bride!

Nothing, I remember nothing,
 But that Sacrifice and choicé;
 Never music filled my spirit
 Like that penetrating voice!

Could I hear him, "Eliëzer,"
 And for Isaac not be won?
 Oh the Father loved and sought me,
 Sent and claimed me for his Son.

Let the token on my forehead,
 Let the bracelets on my hands,
 Prove me now the chosen daughter
 Of the Lord of all the lands.

I will go—I would not tarry,
 Object of that heart's delight!
 He was unto death obedient,
 I would walk with Him in white.

Jewels, raiment, gifts, the Servant
 Brought for me from Isaac's hand,
 Precious things that else had never Shone in any foreign land.

I shall see Him in his beauty!
 He Himself his Bride will meet;
 I shall be with Him for ever,
 In companionship complete.

Thoughts of Him are strength and gladness
 What man comes there forth our way?
 "'Tis my Master." 'Tis the Bridegroom—
 Vailed—the Bride is caught away.

And the Servant telleth Isaac
 All the things that He hath done!
 And Rebekah reigns in Hebron:
 Wife of the once-offered One!

CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSION.—To keep alive the interest of many young ones who already love medical mission work, and to direct the sympathy of such into practical channels, a Children's Medical Missionary Society has been formed, to which both girls and boys are invited to join themselves. There is work for all. All information, collecting-cards, boxes, &c., may be obtained by applying to the Secretary, Miss Annie R. Butler, 26, Brompton-square, London.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—This town, like others in this part of Germany, is a hotbed of Ultramontaniam. Passing along one of the streets to-day, I read a placard, posted on the door of a chapel in which service was going on, to the effect that all who would join in the prayers now being offered for the rooting out of heretics and other evils would obtain a remittance of a certain portion (I forget how long) of their stay in Purgatory! The chapel seemed pretty well filled, in the middle of a busy day, with the poor blinded victims of the terrible system of Popery.

MORE HOLIDAY WORK IN LINCOLNSHIRE.

A SERIES of consecration and evangelistic services have recently been held in a large tent (sent expressly for the purpose from Ipswich) at Middle Rasen, Lincolnshire, extending from the Monday to the Sunday evening following. A printed circular containing an invitation to come and hear of a present, full, and complete salvation was freely distributed. About twenty-four services were held. A women's meeting (conducted by a lady), a Bible-reading, a consecration and evangelistic service, occupied each day. In addition to this, there were two children's services, a praise meeting, meetings for prayer, and after-meetings for inquirers.

The services originated instrumentally in the mind of a dear Christian lady, in whose grounds the tent (capable of holding a thousand people) was erected. At the home of this lady, the brethren and sister (severally from Brandon, Ipswich, and Bury St. Edmunds) who conducted the meetings stayed. The results were such as to afford the greatest joy. Not only were there cases of saving conversion, but many dear Christian people were led to see that, to the "willing and obedient" there is a present and glorious possession, which had been looked upon from some self-erected Pisgah with the cherished notion of perhaps being enjoyed on the other side of the grave. The possibilities of faith were clearly pointed out from God's Word, which to many upon their own joyful confession has become a new book.

At the closing meeting the tent was packed. To see the people wending their way from all quarters, reminded one of the Psalmist's words—"Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord" (Ps. cxxxii. 4). The uniform testimony of the brethren, and their wives who accompanied them, was that "This is the best and happiest holiday we ever spent."

SAILORS' INSTITUTE, ANTWERP.

THE readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have sympathized with, prayed for, and helped towards the erection of our Sailors' Mission Hall and Institute will be glad to hear of the great success which has attended our labours.

Sometimes having to do with bricks and mortar injures the spiritual building; but not necessarily, for I am proving that the secular might become sacred, and the things of earth be transfigured by the light from heaven.

We asked for friends to sympathize with the Gospel Mission in this foreign seaport, to pray for us, to help us in the erection of suitable premises for our work. The following will show if the Lord has heard and answered. In December last enough money had been given to enable the Committee to secure a suitable plot of ground by a part payment. In July we were enabled to begin the building with a fair prospect of covering the first two payments, and completely liberating the land, and what has been received and promised we accept as pledges from God that all that will be required shall be forthcoming. People that we knew not have heard and come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Ladies who knew nothing about our Mission have interested themselves in a bazaar for the benefit of the brave sailors. Gentlemen irrespective of creed and nationality have bid God-speed to the project. Pastors of some of our continental churches, though some of these churches are very poor, are doing something to help forward this glorious work of evangelization. King Leopold sent us last week, through our Ambassador (J. Savile Lumley, C.B.), a valuable present for the ladies' bazaar, with his best wishes for the many sailors visiting this large port of Antwerp.

The public ceremony of stone-laying will take place on the 20th of this month (September), when our Ambassador has promised to lay one of the stones, and we hope the representative of the American nation will lay the other. These two nations are associated with our Mission, and we wish in every way to foster the spirit of union. We are expecting pastors and other friends from London, Rotterdam, Ghent, Malines, Liège, Brussels, and other places, to take part at our public gatherings on the 20th.

I shall be glad to receive communications from any who might be passing about that time. Many will, doubtless, be present who never listened to a Gospel address. I beg of all who read this letter to pray especially for that day, and our work in this city. And if, after believing prayer for great blessings from God, any hearts should be prompted to give out of their substance towards any sphere of Christian work in this city, I trust they will not grieve the Spirit by not joining themselves to our charity.

The building is progressing most favourably. By December we expect the roof to be put on, and the whole furnished as soon as the Lord enables us. Thanks for the £1 just received.

THE CHOLERA IN SYRIA.

A MEMBER of the British Syrian Schools has sent us a copy of a letter dated August 10, Mount Lebanon, from their valued native teacher Selim Kessel, who is also President of the Young Men's Christian Association founded some years ago by parties connected with the British Syrian Schools at Beyrout. It has since been affiliated with the Young Men's Christian Association in Aldersgate-street, who lately sent their Syrian fellow-associates a valuable gift of a copying press.

We are glad to find that similar associations have been founded at Damascus and Nazareth, in correspondence with the Beyrout Committee. At this moment, when the fearful scourge of cholera has appeared in Syria, we would earnestly press the urgent entreaty sent from Syria—that we would beseech the Lord to overrule this visitation to the serious awakening of the dead or slumbering churches of the East, and the followers of the False Prophet to seek for a Saviour higher than Mary or Mohammed. Our correspondent says:—

“Our Young Men's Christian Association is just now broken up for the summer holidays. The town-people are now surprisingly dispersed in the mountains because of the cholera which is raging in Damascus, Beyrout, Latakia, Hamath, Antioch, and other places. It has done a fearful work at Damascus and its vicinity, but as yet is not so strong at Beyrout, yet most of its population have fled to the country. They have suffered such trouble and loss of money that the effects will be felt even after some years. The trade is almost stopped. The desolation and emptiness of Beyrout is so striking that you walk from one end of the bazaar to the other and scarcely you find a shop opened or a person or vehicle passing. There are more than forty families of different religious denominations in our little village. The Lebanon Government has made in this and the neighbouring villages a strict quarantine for six days, and in consequence of the death of the young man from cholera close to us, the Paaha has made it to-day yet stricter, so that no one can in any way go in and out of it, and thus we are as in a prison. The poor people in the towns being left out of work, they are suffering very sad distress. It is a solemn chastisement from the Lord. May He open the eyes and touch the hearts of the people to see and feel their yet more grievous sickness, and flee as well from the wrath to come to the loving Physician, even Jesus Christ, who is able to cure their souls as well as their bodies.

“I am glad to tell you that our Young Men's Association was keeping its scriptural and devotional meetings to the last. It was permitted this year, through the help of God, to do some little service to the cause of the great Master in printing and distributing some tracts, holding prayer-meetings in the different houses, visiting among the sick and afflicted, and bearing witness to the truth in the circle of their daily calling. The number is still encouraging. Some of us have suggested to start a monthly religious paper. We find it useful to make the cause of the Society known in Syria, and give the young men of Syria an opportunity to use their pens in a religious direction. Kindly give us your advice. If you are in favour, we shall need your kind help in sending us some English religious papers.

“Our members, who are now scattered far and near, are carrying with them their solemn impressions of the Lord's work and their duties to their fellow-countrymen. They have taken with them tracts for distribution. We have no facilities of despatch, especially during this strict quarantine. We are holding divine service on the Sabbath, which is attended by some Christians and Druzes. May the Lord give his blessing, for it is a good opportunity now, while his hand is stretched out upon the land. Indeed we fully trust that the many Christian members and pupils of our Syrian schools who are dispersed over the country will be made a rich blessing. We have much cause to thank God that our British-Syrian schools are doing a great and blessed work. There are above 1800 pupils of all religious denominations—Jews and Moslems,

Greeks, Maconites, and Druzes—under thorough Christian training. There are 150 Moslem girls in one school who are learning the Bible and being educated in Christian principles, so that not one of the girls brought up there has been divorced,—so common among Moslems. Then there are the blind schools at Damascus and Beyrout, night schools, mothers' meetings, while the Bible-women—some of the widows once in dear Mrs. Bowen Thompson's schools, and maintained by Mrs. Ranyard and the friends of the Missing Link—are among the most useful branches of the Mission.

“There is a quiet but flourishing work going on among the Moslem harems. There are several houses, and, we trust, hearts too, even among the higher classes, opened to hear the Gospel message. We hope and pray ere long to see a great religious revolution in this land. It seems that the Lord is preparing the way. May He pour his holy Spirit in such abundance as to give a real life to these means and work out a great harvest for his glory; and let me add, ‘Pray ye to the Lord of the harvest’ to send us true, earnest, pious labourers, for the labourers are so few, and yet the fields are white, promising a glorious gathering. We are too few. Will not some true-hearted English men and women come over and help us? Those who have the responsible direction of the work here are sadly over-taxed, bearing almost single-headed the burden and heat of the day.

“Again I say, Come over and help us!”

GOD'S WORK IN NORTH WALES.

FOR the last two months there has been a course of evangelistic work on the Quay at Conway, North Wales, on Sunday nights, and on Thursday nights for children, at which the congregation has increased from 300 to 1000 and 1500, and is increasing. All the Nonconformist ministers have kindly and happily, by their presence, prayers, and sympathy, taken part in these meetings, and contributed much to the success of this outdoor work in obedience to the Gospel—“Go ye out into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature,” &c. Much good has visibly been done, and several have been savingly brought to a knowledge of the Lord by the instrumentality of these means, which are intended to reach the non-churchgoers, and to bring together all sections of the Church and their flocks into a closer bond of unity of spirit, the meetings being on neutral ground and on totally unsectarian principles, the glory of Christ in the salvation of sinners being the object in view. The services are conducted in English by one from Warrington, Lancashire, and who is there connected with a similar work. It is intended to close all the Nonconformist places of worship here on Sunday night, September 6, all adjourning to the Quay, in return for adjournments from the Quay. “Brethren, pray for us.” A public meeting is about to be called to take steps for the building of a public hall or room for these English services, for a library, reading-room, &c., where THE CHRISTIAN and other such papers may be found on the table, thus affording a greater sphere of attraction to this most delightful, healthy, and romantic town of Conway. Moody and Sankey's hymns are used, and an excellent choir is led kindly by Mr. Hughes, of this town.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a few lines to thank the friends who have so kindly responded to my letter of last month? The whole sum collected up to this day amounts to something over £280. This includes the subscriptions through your columns and gifts from other sources. As $600 altogether is needed, we have reached, as you see, the “half-way house.” It is understood that I will find two-thirds and my former church one-third of what is still wanting. Meanwhile the masons and carpenters are at work, in view of the pastor whose name, alas! we do not yet know. Yours gratefully,
Savigny-sur-Orge (Seine-et-Oise), Aug. 26. T. MASON.

P.S.—Allow me to improve the opportunity for reminding our friends in England that the rate of postage to France is threepence for every one-third of an ounce (one-third less than the weight allowed throughout Great Britain). A letter exceeding one-third of an ounce, and bearing but one threepenny stamp, is considered as a double letter not prepaid, and taxed accordingly one shilling, from which the stamp being deducted, there remains ninepence for the French correspondent to pay. As this is occurring constantly, I take the liberty of calling attention to it.

STARVED TO DEATH.

By the good help of the readers of The Christian it was recently my lot to intervene between starvation and a young English girl. Just now, within a few yards of our Mission House in Drury-lane, a woman has perished from starvation and exposure, in a fashion that probes our civilization and Christianity to the very core.

Filthy and drunken, ruined and lost from a wealthy family years ago, dragging out a miserable existence, dropping at last in the public street, conveyed by those who loathed even to touch her to the workhouse, where there was just time to let her die under a roof. Ragged, wretched, hopeless, homeless, desperate, starved,—dead!

Without God, having no hope, yet begging in his holy name for a few last crumbs from one almost as miserable as herself, so she passed to his judgment-seat—to hear only, or to bear witness also?

Meanwhile, scarcely a stone's cast from where she sank down to perish, stands our Mission House in Drury-lane, where we have beds, rooms, and many of the things needed to have saved this poor lost woman. Close at hand are public baths. In thousands of Christian homes, cast-aside garments such as she needed to live and hope again. Our beds are untenanted; the baths unused; garments remain in closets; the poor, broken, naked, starved sister, dead and gone to judgment.

Why did we not receive her? Simply because we had no means to provide what she required. We have the shelter and the furniture, but we have no money, and dare not contract debts.

There are, doubtless, others to-day who are sinking into the same condition, but we have not even one penny to buy bread for hungry girl or woman. Our Home is empty, our beds untenanted, simply for lack of means to feed and clothe the tenants, while hundreds of thousands of pounds are being spent in recreation and enjoyment by professed followers of Him who knew well what it was to be hungry and homeless.

It is hard to be always begging; but harder still to have women starved to death at our feet. Surely readers of THE CHRISTIAN will not forget, during their holidays, weak, weary, and depressed missions among the ruined and the lost.

C. J. WHITMORE.

AN ANTIDOTE TO INFIDELITY.

MR. C. BRADLAUGH, the Infidel, paid a visit to Deptford last week, and delivered his lecture on "The Limits of Human Thought" in the Lecture Hall. This afforded Mr. Fegan an opportunity he would not let slip; so, after securing the Lecture Hall, he announced a counter-meeting for Monday, August 23, his subject to be "The Limits of Divine Power."

When the time arrived the hall was filled, a large number of those present being men. After singing and prayer, Mr. Fegan said that he felt that, having for the last three years carried on Gospel work in Deptford, and having during that time sought to spread as widely as possible the knowledge of the truth of God, Mr. Bradlaugh's visit ought not to be allowed to pass without a special effort being made to bring before those who had attended his lecture the simple Gospel of the grace of God. He then contrasted the work that Christians were doing with that of the Secularists, and said:—

"I have been out often between the hours of midnight and daybreak, searching for poor friendless lads, with a view to rescue and bring them to our Boys' Home at Deptford; and in my search I have visited some of the lowest lodging-houses in London, and there I have seen the Scripture-reader engaged in his work for God; and as I have walked through the streets, I have seen the female missionary dealing with those of her own sex who had fallen, and seeking to save them from a life of misery. But never," said he, "have I met an infidel out at these hours, ready and willing to afford even temporal help to those who were in need."

After these remarks another hymn was sung, and Mr. Fegan proceeded with his subject, which he divided into three parts: (1) What God has done; (2) What God could do; and (3) What God could not do. He called upon two friends present to help him with the first part of the subject by stating briefly how the Lord had shown his power in saving them. One of three was a blacksmith, who was brought to Christ some two years ago at the meetings in Deptford, and who had previously been most notorious as a drunkard; so that he was known to many present. Following this, Mr.

Fegan read the passage, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. i. 16). "Let those who are not ashamed of the Gospel stand up," was the request he then made, and this met with a ready response, scores instantly springing to their feet, as if eager to declare thus their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Amongst this number we could recognize many who were saved in the Tent last year, and others at more recent date; those who have been brought to Christ during the past few months in the Lecture Hall, Greenwich; and others, the result of preaching at Deptford. It was a joyful sight for us to see the young converts thus boldly acknowledging Jesus as their Lord and Master, Mr. Fegan then spoke as to "What God could do"—namely, save souls, on the ground of the accomplished work of the Lord Jesus, dwelling with much fervour on the Gospel as "the power of God unto salvation." "What God could not do," he proceeded to show, was to save souls apart from the work of Christ. A few solemn words of warning, founded upon the unanswerable question of Heb. ii. 3, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" followed. A hymn was then sung, and the meeting closed with prayer.

Although many well-known infidels were present, no attempt was made to ask any questions at the close of the meeting, and the marked attention and the stillness, showed how God was speaking in power through his word.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF AFRICA.

The Freedmen's Missions Aid Society in Great Britain is auxiliary to the American Missions Association of America. These two societies are associated in the great and noble work of educating, in the chartered institutions and other schools of the American Missions Association, about 10,000 of the best of the 4,000,000 of the recently emancipated slaves; and 60,000 more are being taught by those already educated, and sent out from these higher schools.

The Jubilee Singers, now in England, under the care of our two Societies, have done nobly for the cause. By those of like spirit we expect to accomplish great things, to redeem Africa from degradation, war, and the accursed slave trade. With other agencies we must send out large numbers of educated Christian Africans. They are adapted to the climate and fitted for the work.

For this and the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society, of which the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury is president, was established in 1878. It has done a noble service, and the officers of the Society now earnestly appeal to the thousands of Christ's faithful stewards in this great kingdom to remember in their manifold giving the more than 120,000,000 of the poor, lost, plundered people of Africa, by sending their donations directly to the Treasurer, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., 2, Pall-mall; or to the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Dr. O. H. White, at 18, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Y.M.C.A. WORTHING.—Some eight weeks ago a consultation was held by two or three young men in this town to consider the advisability of forming an Association. The matter was laid before the Lord, a room kindly lent at the "British Workmen," and the meetings commenced with seven of its members. Young men were anxiously invited to attend, to study the Word of God, and unconverted ones to seek for salvation. At the second meeting there were six Christian persons present as members, and one young man unconverted. Before the close, God saw fit to convict the unsaved one, and at the meeting the following week, through the instrumentality of an earnest servant of God, a missionary connected with the British Workmen and evangelistic work carried on in Worthing, that young man was enabled to "grasp the Way of Salvation," and now lives to thank and praise the Lord and to write these lines. Since then a second young man has had cause to be thankful for the salvation of his soul through the humble means of the Association. The meetings are all un denominational, recognizing no head or chief, save Christ. Three experience meetings have been held for young converts, in a spacious mission hall; and God be praised! with good results. On Bank Holiday, August 2, an "outing" was organized under the auspices of the Association, when about 250 persons sat down to tea after a pleasant afternoon's enjoyment, the day being concluded by an open-air meeting for Gospel addresses and singing Sankey's hymns. I would request, on behalf of the remainder of the members of our Association—now increased to about twenty—constant prayer for a continued and still greater blessing on our work in this town. To the Lord be all the praise. G. A.

MAJOR MALAN'S SOUTH-AFRICAN MISSION.

PRAY THE LORD TO OPEN ANOTHER DOOR IN AFRICA.

I wish to ask the earnest prayers of the Church that the Lord will be pleased to open the way into the Bomvana tribe, for the preaching of his name and salvation. This tribe inhabits a very wild and rocky country between the Bashee and the Umtata rivers, and is allied with the Galekas. No missionary has ever lived among them. The Mission Station of Morley, on the borders of the tribe, has been abandoned for many years. The Lord has laid it upon my heart to take to this neglected people "the unsearchable riches" of his Gospel. If a mission can be established in this tribe, it may then be said that there is a Gospel lighthouse in every tribe along the south-eastern shores of Africa from the Cape of Good Hope to the Tugela, the northern boundary of Natal. Hitherto there has been a gap in this chain caused by half the Galeka tribe and all the Bomvanas being without any light of the Gospel, although surrounded by churches. May the Lord permit me to fill up this gap, for the glory of his name.

He has given me the labourers. Three years ago I read in the Missionary Echo of a young Englishman in this land who earnestly desired to preach the Gospel of Christ to the heathen. Unable to do so for want of means, he took employment as schoolmaster, and then catechist, in preference to entering Government service. I tried then, but without success, to get him work for the Lord such as he desired. On my return to this land he was "hidden" from me until now, when I thank the Lord for bringing us together. The spiritual darkness of the Bomvana tribe has been pressed upon me much of late. As it was with the Galekas, so it has been with the Bomvanas. "Can I return to my home in England and leave a whole tribe before my eyes dead without Christ?" (Prov. xxiv. 11, 12).

A MOST CRUEL MURDER THROUGH WITCHCRAFT

took place there a few months ago. A father was seized, tortured, and beaten to death in open day because he was industrious and wealthy, and the Chief wanted his property. This seemed to call aloud for the Gospel of Christ. "They say there is a God." "If there be a God." These were some of the words of that poor man when under torture. Does not his innocent blood cry from the ground, not for vengeance from God, but for mercy from Christians on his heathen fellow-countrymen?

The Bomvanas have this claim on British Christians, and especially on the Scotch. They have Scotch blood in them. Two sisters named Campbell were wrecked there, married to chiefs, and their great-great-grandchildren are now in darkness and death! Who will help them? "Ye also helping together by prayer" (2 Cor. i. 11).

My heart was filled with concern for these poor heathens as I was going to King William's Town to the Conference of Missionaries on the 7th inst. At the house of a Christian gentleman I heard the name of the young brother in whom I had before been interested. "A good report" accompanied the mention of his name. He was earnest, humble, and patient: the best qualifications for a missionary. Although educated for three years at Bristol, he was born and brought up among the Kaffirs, and can speak the language like a native, and is well acquainted with their ways and habits of thought. When I asked him if he were willing to carry the name of Jesus to the Bomvana tribe, he replied, that in giving him this work the Lord had fulfilled the lifelong desire of his heart, and answered his prayers for years. We cannot doubt that this is the instrument the Lord has prepared to bear his name to this heathen tribe. His age is thirty; his name is Charles S. Lundall; his wife willingly goes with him. These are the labourers. I commend them and this work to the prayers of the Church everywhere, wherever this paper is read. I shall wait on the Lord in prayer for guidance, asking Him to prepare the way and open the door for us. I shall not go to see the Chief for at least six weeks, as I wish to go forward in this difficult work with the prayers of the Christians of the churches at home. Let us remember the Lord's words, and believe that He will keep his promises. John xiv. 12-14. Your brother in Him, South Africa, July 16, 1875. S. H. MALAN.

"ENOUGH!"

I am so weak, dear Lord! I cannot stand
One moment without Thee;
But, oh, the tenderness of thine enfolding,
And, oh, the faithfulness of thine upholding,
And, oh, the strength of Thy right hand!
That strength is enough for me.

I am so needy, Lord! and yet I know
All fulness dwells in Thee;
And hour by hour that never-failing treasure
Supplies and fills in overflowing measure,
My least, my greatest need. And so
Thy grace is enough for me.

It is so sweet to trust thy Word alone.
I do not ask to see
The unveiling of thy purpose, or the shining
Of future light on mysteries untwining;
Thy promise-roll is all my own—
Thy Word is enough for me.

The human heart asks love. But now I know
That my heart hath from Thee
All real, and full, and marvellous affection;
So near, so human! Yet Divine perfection
Thrills gloriously the mighty glow!
Thy love is enough for me.

There were strange soul-depths, restless, vast and Unfathomed as the sea, [broad,
An infinite craving for some infinite stilling;
But now thy perfect love is perfect filling!
Lord Jesus Christ, my Lord, my God,
Thou, Thou art enough for me!

"SONGS AND SOLOS" IN NORWAY.—A correspondent writes that in visiting Norway it has been a great cheer to him to find a "Mr. Sankey's Choir," where the hymns were sung with taste to an appreciative audience.

SPECIAL SERVICES, DOVER.—It is intended to hold special evangelistic services for a fortnight in the Town Hall and in Wellington Hall, Dover, commencing Sept. 6. Addresses by Rev. W. Haslam, M.A., Mr. Henry Moorhouse, and Mr. Henry Varley. Services in both places at 3.30 and 7.30, and noon prayer-meetings daily at Wellington Hall. A children's service in Wellington Hall, Wednesday, Sept. 8, at 6.30 p.m.

EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW.—After an absence of several years, I am pleased to find that the nightly meetings, commenced at the Carrubbers-close Mission, Edinburgh, about fifteen years ago, are still continued. Earnest workers go out to the High-street, speak and sing, and invite people to come and hear the glad tidings. The daily meeting at twelve in the Assembly Hall is still well attended. On Saturday the meeting was specially for the young; about a thousand persons were present, old and young. The daily meeting in Glasgow is also, upon the whole, well attended. Pray for the good work carried on there.

NORTHAMPTON.—UNION SERVICES.

A VERY gracious work of God has been going on here during the last three weeks, and is still continuing. A committee of laymen, belonging to the different Nonconformist churches in the town, took the Circus, and arranged for a week of special services. Much preparatory prayer was offered in private and at the weekly services in the different chapels. The services commenced on Saturday evening, August 8, with a united prayer-meeting in Commercial-street Chapel, conducted by Mr. A. J. Round and Mr. J. M. Smith, and about 500 persons were present. Early the following morning (Sunday) a large meeting was held for Christian workers in the Circus, and in the afternoon a children's service, when the building was crowded to suffocation. A subsequent meeting was held in Portland-street, opposite the Union Schools, to avoid disappointment to those who could not obtain admission to the Circus, and in order to allow the Union children an opportunity of listening to the services. In the evening the Circus was again packed in every corner, the dressing-rooms being prepared as inquiry-rooms. The following four days the meetings were held at 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. in Commercial-street, Princess-street, Gold-street, and Doddridge Chapels, and each night at eight in the Circus. These services were all conducted by Rev. Archibald Brown, of the East-end Tabernacle, assisted by Mr. Smith (who sang solos from Mr. Sankey's hymns), and an efficient choir of young people. The congregations were very large at all the daily services, increasing from about 500 to 900; but at the Circus each night numbers could not gain admission, and on Wednesday an overflow meeting filling the Iron Church was addressed by Mr. Brown after he had conducted the meeting in the Circus. The services of this week will not soon be forgotten; the ministers who surrounded and helped Mr. Brown, and their people, were greatly quickened and blessed. Large numbers of requests for prayer were sent in at each service, and some of these have been answered, and requests for praise have been made for blessings received.

Many entered the inquiry-rooms in a state of anxious distress, and were directed to a loving Saviour, and "a great number believed and turned unto the Lord."

In compliance with a very widely expressed desire, the Committee decided to continue the services. The services of Mr. Round and "Ned Weeks" were secured for the Sabbath. The latter was kindly spared by his employer to have a holiday for a week, and by the same kind permission we have been favoured with his services for three Sabbaths. A second week of early prayer-meetings, and the Circus at night, brought no abatement to the attendance and interest of these blessed meetings, or to the number of those who have sought and found the dear Saviour of sinners. Brother Weeks is a hard-working man, having strong faith in God, and a remarkable adaptation in reaching the working-classes, whom he has been engaged in visiting at their houses during his visit. His personal contact with the rough infidel class of this town has been attended with the power and blessing of God's Holy Spirit. Many trophies have been won to "My Jesus," as he speaks of the Saviour; and it has been very delightful to see numbers of this class follow him to the services, out of whom the evil spirit has been cast, and who come "clothed and in their right minds." The young seem equally attracted to him, and his visit has been made a blessing to all who have entered into this gracious work of God. Many interesting things might be told of Brother Ned's interviews with infidels, and of the effective way he has of dealing with them.

At the first service conducted by Rev. A. Brown, a young gentleman who had come from Leeds was led to accept Jesus as his Saviour. His mother wrote to him saying, she had been impressed that his visit to Northampton would be a crisis in his history, and so it proved. The following day he wrote to her, informing her of the happy circumstance of his conversion, and inviting her to come over, and it has been a great pleasure to us to see that mother in our midst for some time, rejoicing with her son in the "great things which the Lord has done for them."

The results of this glorious work were brought more fully into view on Thursday evening last, when a "praise meeting" was held in College-street Baptist Chapel. About 1400 people were present, the new converts being principally accommodated in the front central pews. The meeting was presided over by Rev. W. Allen, Wesleyan minister, aided by Revs. Messrs. Spanswick and Stent, and Messrs. Singleton, Darby, Mason, Starmar, and others. Mr. Sankey's hymns were sung with a heartiness and power which reminded us of Camberwell Hall.

Many notes of praise were sent in, acknowledging God's mercy in answering prayer.

"Ned Weeks" led the testimonies of the new converts by telling the remarkable story of his own conversion, and a large number followed in brief, decided, and grateful words, in which they stated the fact of having found Jesus, and of receiving the Holy Spirit's witness to their adoption into the family of God.

Two cases might be particularly referred to. A man, having a Christian wife, attended a crowded meeting, after which he could not sleep, and rose early to have a quiet walk on the racecourse. "Ned" felt in the early morning a similar disquiet, and rose and went for a walk, and was led also to the racecourse. The man hailed him, saying—"I have been longing to see you. I could not rest, and felt I must go out for a walk on the racecourse." "Ah!" said Ned, "I see why my Father has sent me here. Come, let us have a quiet walk and talk about it." He found the man anxious about his soul, but trying to save himself. "Now," said he, "you are trying to spell hard words, and have not learned your alphabet. See, you have first to learn your alphabet—'Seek first the King-dom of God and his right-eous-ness,' &c. Now, you have to learn this first." He led him to see himself a lost sinner needing only Jesus, and then called upon him to accept Him. The man hesitated. "Ned" said, "Once in your life, when you were married, you had to say 'I will,' and until you said that you could get no further. Now you must say 'I will' to Jesus, and you cannot get any further until you do. Now, if you will have Christ as yours, say 'I will.'" "I —," said the man. "I will," said "Ned." "I WILL!" said the man, and burst into tears. "Oh!" said he, "I see it now. I do trust in Jesus, and He is mine." "Yes," said "Ned," "you are married to Christ now;" and he went home rejoicing. And at the meeting he showed how delightful the peace and joy of God's Kingdom were in his soul.

The other was the case of one of Bradlaugh's disciples, who drew a striking contrast between infidelity and Christianity. He said, "I have heard many orators, but no man ever drew a tear from my eyes until I heard Archibald Brown at the Iron Church. I went up the middle of the street, that my 'pals' should not see my swollen eyes. Now I have found the Saviour, and He saves even me, and I mean to stick to Him. My workmates have heard of it, and I am glad they have. I am not ashamed they should hear of it. They will watch and try me, but He will keep me to the end."

The work is still going on. Many young people have found the Saviour. To God be all the glory. WILLIAM ALLEN.

[It would tend to their greatly increased usefulness, if those ministers who at present confine themselves to pastoral work would adopt some such plan as Mr. Archibald Brown, who for years has devoted Tuesday and Wednesday of each week to evangelistic work in the provinces, while his people pray for him at home.]

GOOD NEWS FROM CALCUTTA.

THOSE who followed the Rev. A. N. Somerville with their prayers during his Indian tour will read with joy the following extracts from private letters just received. I may explain that the breakfast which is given every Sabbath morning to degraded Europeans, was commenced by the young men in Calcutta after hearing from Mr. Somerville of the good accomplished by this means among the poor of Glasgow; the account of the meeting is by a Scotch lady who has taken a great interest in the work since it started. Mr. J. H. Hubbard, the writer of the second letter, is in business, and acted as secretary of the Young Men's Christian Union formed in Calcutta at the suggestion of Mr. Somerville; the meeting referred to by him was one of educated natives. Let us thank the Master for what He has done, and continue prayer for yet greater things.

Calcutta, July 27, 1875.

On Sunday we had a splendid breakfast in the hall of Bow Bazaar; seventy-nine fed, not counting children. Mr. B— was quite overcome at the increase since he last addressed. The men listen for life. There was my poor man of the previous Sabbath's conversion drinking in every word. He brings his children to every meeting. At the evening evangelistic meeting we had a wonderful time. There were 125 in the small place. General Leitchfield gave the most simple of addresses, just telling two stories within the range of his own experience. He held an after-meeting; while silent prayer was made, the anxious who wished to leave sin for Christ were invited to the front chairs. When I raised my head; three strong men had come forward and taken their places beside other three who had remained in the front row, anxious. 'It is a great testimony when they confess by rising and coming to the front. General Leitchfield and others dealt with these men. I went to the back, where there were still a number hovering about, including some Baboo, i.e., educated natives. A Scotch Church poor man, who knew many things, was enabled to accept Christ and return thanks. Then I found the man who had been in darkness for days, and whom Mr. B— and I had failed to help. He was willing to be talked to by another poor man, so I brought my rejoicing friend to him to tell his simple story, and turned to a young Catholic sighing for Christ. He needed a lot of reading, to and teaching, but clearly and with all his soul accepted Christ as his sufficient Saviour and returned thanks. "When he had got two Gospels in large print, and a hymn-book (by request, on account of the hymn, "Wash all my sins away"), I turned to my "rejoicing friend," and asked him what had become of the man he was to talk to. Brimming with joy, he said, "The man is away, so happy; he got light in no time." This convert of one week had accomplished what we failed to do. Jesus of Nazareth is more than passing by, He is standing still and saying "What wouldst thou?" On hearing of Mr. Hubbard's really wonderful Sunday night with the Baboos, the words of Elijah to Ahab (1 Kings xviii. 44, 45) rushed into my mind. The "rain" is already remarkable. Last week there was quite a harvest of souls at the special services. A Baboo choir is being trained to sing Mr. Sankey's hymns.

From J. H. Hubbard, Esq. —

Calcutta, July 26, 1875.

I could not help thinking last evening of the deep joy that would have filled dear Mr. Somerville's heart if he could have seen the perfect sea of faces assembled in the "Great National" to hear of Jesus of Nazareth passing by. The place was filled upstairs and downstairs, and scores must have been standing in the doorways and passages. I have no correct idea myself of the attendance, but several told me that there must have been upwards of a thousand present (educated natives). As I spoke to them of Jesus my inmost soul yearned over them, and God helped me to give the message of salvation. At first we were impeded, as the key of the gasometer broke, and we were unable to turn the gas on. While waiting we sang "Sowing the seed" and "Whoever heareth." The service then went on. At the close, as the men walked away, we sang that stirring hymn "Hold the fort." We had a small harmonium, at which Mrs. McDonald kindly presided. That so many hundreds should come—many, I am told, from Serampore and other distant places—and listen most attentively to all that is sung, read, and spoken about the Christ, is surely a token for good.

THE EXPLOSION AT BARCELONA.—Mr. G. Lawrence writes:—Among the victims of the terrible explosion of the Express, which took place at Barcelona, are some of the parents of boys in our schools. Some are left orphans; the father of one is in our hospital. Brethren at Barcelona ask for special help for these poor children.

OXFORD.—A representative meeting of evangelical Christians has been held here, and a committee formed, consisting of the ministers of the city and a considerable number of other believers, to arrange for evangelistic services during the winter months. You will also be glad to hear that we are just about to commence a daily noon prayer-meeting. The Lord is just now greatly blessing the ordinary work of our churches here, and in that to which the writer belongs we are constantly having fresh cases of conversion. Thus the Lord is preparing his people for a great and, I believe, a glorious revival. Will you pray for Oxford, so unbelieving and so superstitious?

MAJOR COLE'S SERVICES AT LIVERPOOL.

THE Committee of young men who superintend the meetings at the Circus desire to express, through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN, their gratitude to God for the visit of Major Cole and his family. The blessing of God on the services held by these friends has been most manifest. The interest increased as they progressed, and after they became known the audiences were always large. For the Sunday evening meetings the Circus latterly proved too small. The use of Victoria Hall was consequently obtained, and at the farewell service on Sunday, Aug. 22, the congregation numbered fully 7000.

The meetings have been largely attended by the working classes of all grades, including many of those who, unaccustomed to enter any regular place of worship, yet feel themselves quite at home in such a building as the Circus. Major Cole has been most successful amongst this class. It is not philosophy or logical argument they require; they need to be won rather than convinced, and Major Cole has the simple, loving earnestness which draws such hearts.

To Mrs. and Miss Cole the Committee also feel under a debt of gratitude. The assistance they rendered in the singing was a great gain, and they also took charge of the inquiry-meetings for women, held in the committee-room at the close of each service.

Major Cole's work among the young men, a special meeting for whom was held each evening at 8.30 p.m., has been very marked. His manner was calculated to gain their confidence, and he eminently succeeded in doing so. He conducted the meetings in an easy, informal way, varying his style according to circumstances, usually closing with an earnest appeal for decision. As many as fifty have sometimes remained for conversation, and several cases of great interest have been dealt with, including more than one of young men who were returning prodigals in the literal sense of the word.

Major Cole has now gone to Scotland for rest, but will probably resume evangelistic work in a few weeks; and his friends in Liverpool commend him and his family to the sympathy and prayers of the Christians, in whatever places they may labour.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

'THY WILLINGNESS OF GOD: AN ENCOURAGEMENT TO FAITH. By Rev. J. G. RAINSFORD. Partridge.—We believe this is the work of a relative of the well-known minister of London, whose name he bears, and whom he succeeded in the ministry of the Gospel at Dundalk in Ireland; and the same vein of sterling, sober, honest truth, which characterises the ministry of Halkeinstreet Chapel meets us in every page of this book. The author's object is to show Christ's willingness to save; and as he unfolds the Word of God in a way that betokens no mean scholarship, he has produced a book which, though small in size, is large in worth. We wish it an extensive circulation.

FOUNDATION STONES. By the Rev. HELY H. A. SMITH. Hunt.—This book has a great advantage over most of the religious books of the day, in that it is full of Scripture; and with no small ability does the gifted writer exhibit some of the deep things of God as set forth in the Word of God. Truth is mingled with experience in a way that attests the author's knowledge of "the School of God."

LECTURES ON THE BOOK OF REVELATION. By WILLIAM LINCOLN. Yepp and Hawkins.—In all labour there is profit, and we are thoroughly assured that this is emphatically true of all labour bestowed upon the prophecy which sums up and closes the Scriptures of truth, for God has affirmed the special blessedness of him who reads and of them who hear. We confess that neither the Historical nor the Futurist interpretation satisfies us, though we believe that there are elements of truth in each; and we have never read any prayerful and thoughtful attempt to expound the Revelation without finding some precious truth which the Holy Spirit had given to the student as a reward for his labour. We cannot say that the scheme of future events compiled by Mr. Lincoln will not come to pass; but no one without direct inspiration can authoritatively say that it will. For ourselves, we would rather be without any schemes of fulfilment, for they generally necessitate some apparently forced interpretation of the Apocalyptic symbols. For example: there is far more edification and self-evident truth in Bunyan's rendering of Apollyon, the angel of the bottomless pit (Rev. ix. 1, 11), than in the identification of this fallen angel with the Bishop of Rome or other apostate ecclesiastic. While the Revelation is supposed by the historical interpreters to have been in large measure exhaustively fulfilled, and while schemes of future fulfilment are imagined, which may or may not be true, there is a present fulfilment of a practical character to the individual soul which is often overlooked.

CHRIST THE TREE ALIVE; and other Sermons. By the late SAMUEL WALDEGRAVE, D.D., Bishop of Carlisle. Hunt.—Canon Ryle, who writes an introduction to this interesting volume of sermons, says,—"I trust the volume may receive the attention it deserves. It contains plain speech about subjects of great and grave importance; subjects which are much discussed in the present day. Here, I am bold to say, the reader will find Scriptural truth about Christ, the Church, the ministry, and the sacraments, in its real proportion, no part unduly magnified, and no part unduly diminished." Canon Ryle speaks from the stand-point of an evangelical clergyman. From the wider point of view of Christianity we can cordially endorse what he says, in praise of this excellent volume of sermons. Much of it is occupied with vigorous protest against ritualistic errors; but such protest seldom is conducted as it is here, on Scripture ground, nor from the point of view of one jealous for the honour of Christ. The late Bishop Waldegrave was a true man of God; he loved "the truth" and walked in it. He has left in this interesting volume a testimony as to the truth which we pray may yet speak, though its author is no more amongst us.

THE CHILDREN'S SERVICE BOOK FOR CHURCH AND HOME. By the Rev. H. M. HART. Daily, Sabbath, and Co.—To those who think it desirable to train children to the use of liturgical and liturgical forms of prayer, this book presents a careful compilation, mostly from the Book of Common Prayer, with hymns suited for children, arranged to appropriate tunes, concluding with fifteen sermons adapted for children's minds. The tone of these sermons is, we are happy to testify, evangelical; but there seems a want of consistency between such teaching and some of the language of the hymns. For example (p. 196)—

"By thy blessed mother's woes, Hear us, Holy Jesu."

There is also an evening prayer for very young children, where they are taught to pray, "Send thy holy angel to guard me while I am asleep"; and there is a very objectionable hymn, where the sad delusion of baptismal regeneration appears in most unblushing prominence. At least, what else can be the meaning of putting into the mouths of children generally such language as—

"Born again and made thy members, Little Christian children we?"

especially when the next stanza begins with—

"By thy sign upon our forehead
When thy people bowed the knee."

Surely any good that the preaching of the Gospel in the sermons might effect would be marred by such accompanying hymns. We hope in future editions such plots may be expunged, and that the tone of the sermons and the hymns may be made to harmonize.

EVANGELIZATION AT HOME AND ABROAD

ADDRESS BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE AT THE PERTH CONFERENCE.

OUR subject is "Evangelization," and I speak with great timidity, in one sense, before aged and learned ministers in this meeting, but I believe, nevertheless, that the Lord has a word for me to say, and I want it to go right home into your hearts and souls.

I want you to think for a moment, not on texts, but on countries, especially Protestant countries; to look back for awhile over the last century or so on the Protestant parts of Europe, and on this Protestant Scotland and England. A hundred years ago, what a moderate Scotland it was. What a dead moderate England, and flagrantly wicked too. And if we go back to the Protestantism of France, as a general rule how very moderate and cold we find it. Go to Norway or Iceland, or to Germany, among the Protestants scattered about, and we see very much the same thing. We are apt to think that in England and Scotland we are revived; and I want, without giving offence, to say that though I believe this country has received immense blessing lately, yet that we are not revived by any means. We are in a very moderate case indeed.

We have gone to India and taught the Indians that an English professing Christian is too often, if not generally, a lover of strong drink. We are not teaching them so now to the same extent, but in years past this has been the case. We have taught them that he is a man careless about the spread of the Gospel, living in ease, luxury, and often in vice; though there have been glorious and blessed exceptions to this.

Let us look at China. What have we taught them there? Missionaries are wanted for this vast field, but an Englishman is not a man that is beloved by the Chinese. They are conscious that he is a victor, and that we English Christians forced the opium trade upon them. I am not speaking ignorantly, for I am acquainted with one who for twenty years lived in the heart of China, and who has assured me that such is the case. These things exist, and God is calling us, in Britain and abroad, for a mighty evangelization; and what we want is to go into the closet and prove Him. Remember William Burns; how he strove with God in the hayloft, and got a blessing for Kilsyth before he left the spot. He has gone and laid his bones in China. At this day China is open to us, saying, "Come over and help us." There are Scotch fathers and mothers here who can send their sons into the army in India or Canada, into the Civil Service abroad, into mercantile offices all over the world—in fact, into every country of the globe,—but missionaries are wanted, and shall they not be given?

But we must begin at home. During these last few months the visitation of every house in Manchester, in Liverpool, and in London, has been taken up, and many hundreds of men and women have been led to Christ in their own homes. In some of the houses of the "upper ten thousand," when the visitors were speaking to the master or mistress in the drawing-room, it was very striking to hear some of those in high positions in life saying, "No one has spoken to me about these things for twenty years"; and again, "No one has spoken to me of these things for eight years." [Mr. Radcliffe gave some interesting details of the visitation, with which our readers are already pretty familiar.]

Your population in Scotland is only three or four millions, or something less than that of the three towns I have mentioned. We went from door to door of more than the entire population of Scotland, and with a far less proportion of Christians in these populations to help us than you have. What a blessed thing it would be if you at this Conference would take up every town, every shire, every village, every house in Scotland—yea, every ship that sails from a Scottish port. I believe that what I am saying is well pleasing to the Lord at this instant. What a small thing it would be for us to ask our God to give us strength enough and gifts enough to carry the Gospel to every door in Scotland: to the dukes and the noblemen, to the shepherds on the mountains, and, above all, to the lost ones of our wynds and closes in Glasgow and Edinburgh. It would be a very little thing in the Lord's hands. We have no strength; we are as water spilt on the ground, but oh, the power of the Almighty God! He can do this as easily as when on the hillside He said, "Bid them to lie down; they need not depart." He bids us come in the name of Jesus, in full assurance of faith, and we shall come down from the granaries of heaven burdened and teeming over with the old corn of the Land. If we will rely on his grace and receive his blessing, we shall have but to break the bread—and break the bread—and break the bread—and we shall be richer after we have given to all Scotland than we were before.

You cannot keep Scotchmen at home. There is a vast field for them abroad. Look at that poor Nestorian priest who has come over to London with his deacons. Oppressed for a long time by heathens and Roman Catholics alike, they have come over to Christian England to pray that preachers of the Gospel may be sent to their country. Then, Africa was never opened as it has been now. There is another field for you. Think of your countryman David Livingstone; he has opened up a way. Whether I can get labourers out of this meeting I know not, but if not I shall get them elsewhere. Though my health is broken down, and I am not able to go with the Gospel myself, I can yet go and plead with other men and women to go out to our mission fields. Yes, women; for men cannot go to the Zenanas of India, but our women would be welcomed, and the Chinese women will receive you as sisters.

Oh, go to the secret chamber and cry for a blessing—a white-hot blessing; and when the blessing comes, selfishness will be knocked on one side.

In London and Glasgow there are many impertunate beggars, getting money from Christians and benevolent people, and they ought to be stopped. But, to the scandal of our Christianity, there are a number of others—widows indeed, some of them,—who, with the true Scottish spirit, are concealing their poverty, and barely keeping themselves alive on bread and tea, and tea and bread—destitute of the common necessities of life. When the Spirit of God comes down there will be hounds with good scent, and the hungry and needy shall be hunted out and fed.

I entreat you, not as one who can teach anything, but as an ignorant one who would willingly wash the feet of anyone here—Are you willing to be filled with the Spirit of God—made white-hot? I remember, when at a meeting, Mr. Moody asked those who were wishing to be filled with the Holy Ghost to stand up, and men and women responded to his invitation. Oh! what a dispersion out of Perth if the ministers and men and women were filled with the Holy Ghost.

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

THE return of autumn has seen the coming together of a great company of Christians, from most parts of our own land, and from other lands too, in this northern city, to take counsel together about the things concerning the Kingdom, and to consider how that Kingdom may be advanced in individual hearts, and among the nations of the earth. For years past, when Christian conferences were not so common as they are now, Perth has been the scene of many happy and fruitful seasons of communion and refreshing, and this year's assembly, we believe, will take no mean place in the annals of such gatherings.

The reproach that has been brought against them, of "religious dissipation" and unpracticalness—truthfully it may be in some instances—cannot justly be applied to the Perth meetings of this year. We have, it is true, been fed with the finest of the wheat, but the great end set before us has not been the enjoyment of the good things of the Kingdom, so much as the duty and privilege of receiving strength for service to come, and refurbishing our weapons for the warfare that is still raging all around us.

Our reports will give some idea of the rich provision set before the gathered multitude of believers, but it cannot convey any conception of the gracious union and communion that characterised the meetings, or the manifest presence and working of the Spirit by the spoken word or the fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ through the prayer and thanksgiving. One of the speakers besought the Lord that the Conference might be as "the Feast of Tabernacles," and it seemed to us that the answer came before the petition ascended.

Last year's conference took place while the great movement of revival, under the instrumentality, chiefly, of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, was in full progress in our land, and this year it was cheering and interesting to notice how almost every speaker had something to tell of the Lord's wonderful working in connexion with the movement, both in the deepened zeal and consecration of individual Christians and the ingathering of many into the common fold. Mr. Sankey's voice was missed, but the lack in this matter was supplied by Major Cole, who, with his wife and daughter, sang with indescribable sweetness of Jesus and his love.

As will be seen by our detailed report, the subjects chosen for consideration were of the most practical and important character, and all the addresses were well fitted to strengthen and animate, and to send us home with our souls filled to overflowing. In connexion with the evening evangelistic meetings we venture a suggestion. It seemed to us that in having three addresses on the first two evenings too much was attempted: before the closing address was reached, the lassitude inevitably produced by sitting or standing for two hours in a crowded and heated room showed itself, and we think limited, to a large extent, the possibilities for good at the after-meeting. In our judgment it would have been preferable to have opened several of the churches, and only had one good address at each meeting.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 31.

The morning meeting commenced at eleven o'clock; Mr. Brownlow North in the chair. The meeting opened with the 100th Psalm. The chairman then read John's Gospel, chap. i. Prayer followed from the Rev. C. C. Stewart, of Scone.

Mr. NORTH then gave the opening address—

"THE BIBLE: WHAT IT IS, AND HOW TO USE IT."

When God put our first parents into Paradise, He gave them a Bible—"Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This was the word of God to man; but man believed a lying spirit; did eat, and in that moment died. Then man had no Bible; there was nothing before him but a fearful looking-for of judgment and fiery indignation. Neither angel nor devil believed there was any hope for man; his everlasting destruction seemed sealed. But, oh! the depths of the wisdom, as well as the mercy of God! His wisdom devised, and his love determined to execute a plan by which He might open a door of escape, and give another Bible to man. We read that these self-destructed ones again heard the voice of the Lord, walking in the garden in the cool of the day—"Where art thou?" God had come down "to seek, and to save that which was lost"; and in the promise that the Seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, a door of escape was opened, and man once more had a Bible—the Word of God.

There are only two teachers on the earth. These two are the same who taught our first parents in Paradise—namely, God and the devil. The means by which they teach have many names, and as the one is called in my text the Bible, I will call the other the feelings, and wisdom, and reason, and natural senses of man. We cannot believe both, for they are diametrically contradict each other now as they did when God said to Adam, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," and the devil said, "Thou shalt not surely die."

The Bible is the only truth, the only teacher of spiritual knowledge extant. The Lord Jesus Christ, when He ascended into heaven, and commanded his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, adding, "He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned,"—only repeated what God said when He put our first parents into Paradise. And he that believes the teaching of his senses in opposition to the teaching of the Bible is under the power of the same spirit who induced Eve to eat of the forbidden tree because she saw it was "pleasant to the eyes, and good for food, and a tree to be desired to make one wise." The Bible, and the Bible only, is the word of God which is able to make man wise unto salvation.

A few words on how to use it. A man, when he goes to his Bible, goes as much into the presence of God as when he goes to Him in prayer. And unless, when we read it, we believe that God is speaking to us, it cannot profit us; for "without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he that cometh to God must believe that He is." When we read our Bible we must believe—observe I do not say feel, but believe—that God is, and that in his Word He tells us what is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness"; all things, in short, necessary for life and salvation. Then, having grasped by faith this fact—God is,—you must, before you read it, pray Him to bless it to you, for He has distinctly taught us that as no man can know the things of his fellow-man unless he tells him, so no man can know the things of God unless God tells him.

Then, again, in reading the Bible let us never forget the plain statement of our Lord, that "except ye receive the kingdom of God as a little child you shall in no case enter therein." It is said again and again, both of the disciples and the enemies of our Lord Jesus Christ, that "they reasoned"; but never once did they reason rightly, and Jesus always rebuked it with "Why reason ye?" It was never reason, but faith, that our Lord commended, saying again and again, "Thy faith hath saved thee." "Thus saith the Lord" is a text that occurs oftener than any other in the Bible, but there is no such expression in Scripture as "I feel."

Lastly, the proof of our using the Bible profitably is that we practise what we learn from it. There are two questions we should always ask ourselves—What does that which I have read tell me to believe? and, What does it teach me to do? Unless we try and practise the teaching of the Bible, as well as believe the doctrine, our faith will profit us nothing; for the same Jesus that said "He that believeth shall be saved," said also, "Not every one that saith unto Me 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

After the singing of the 19th Psalm, commencing at verse 7, several requests for prayer were read.

Rev. Mr. Sharpe, of Hampstead, having engaged in prayer, Rev. Dr. MOODY STUART spoke. In considering "The Bible: What it is, and How to Use it," I wish to note—

1. What it contains for us.—As my dear brother Mr. North said, it contains God for us in his whole truth and wisdom, and power. The whole heart of God, the whole mind of God, the whole of God, is in this Word, which you and I have in our hands

—the whole of God to us. Just one note concerning the greatness of the Word. It is this: that in the greatest crisis of the universe, in that dark hour of deepest darkness on the cross, Jesus magnified the Word of God in a very special way, and made it a cord, as it were, between the heart of God and the heart of man; it seemed as if, in that darkest hour, no other cord but that remained. In that darkest hour, when God hid his face, and He cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Ps. xxii. 1) He spoke in God's own words, given by the Spirit of old. And in the little darkness of ours—so little when compared with that sorrow of his—it is enough for us, and it would be far better for us, if we would express our sorrows and emotions in the words given by God Himself.

2. What it is in us.—It regenerates us; it justifies us; it sanctifies us; that is, God, through it, regenerates, justifies, and sanctifies us. It regenerates us: thus we pray, "Quicken me, O Lord, according to thy Word." It justifies us: thus Jesus says, "Now ye are clean, through the Word which I have spoken unto you." The Word sanctifies us: thus we have, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth."

3. What it is to us.—It is light, riches, and sweetness to us. It is light to us: thus, "Thy Word is a light unto my feet, and a lamp unto my path." It is riches to us: thus we read, "I have found thy Word as one that findeth great spoil." We came on a great treasure when we got the Word of God; and when we found one golden nugget in that Word we were constrained to say, "It will take my whole life to count over my riches." Yet we sometimes think we are poor. But when you have God's Word you can't be poor. "Thy Word is better to me than thousands of gold and silver." Then it is sweetness. It is sweeter than honey from the comb. Sometimes it is our riches and yet not our sweetness. "Give me understanding." The Hebrew is, "Give me taste, or relish," to receive the Word, that it may be sweet unto me. What a shame to you and me that that sweet honey of the Word, sweeter than the honeycomb, has often been so tasteless to us. Oh, how unworthy we are to taste it again. Yet it retains all its sweetness for ever in every drop of the honey there, and we shall say of it for the hundredth time, "It is sweeter than I ever tasted it before."

4. How it works in us, and how it is to be received.—It breaks us like a hammer, pierces us like a sword, and melts us like fire. "Is not my Word a hammer, that breaketh the rock in pieces?" I don't know a misery so great as cold-hard-headedness. It cuts us like a sword. Moreover, it cuts clean. Men cut you oftentimes as with a rusty nail, and the wound rankles and festers in you; but the Word of God is a sharp sword, and how clean it cuts! Then, it melts like the fire. Bring it near your heart, and see how it will melt, like wax. Blessed fire! may this Word melt our hearts in this hour!

This Word is to be received with trembling and with faith. How often we try to bring something to the Word and don't receive the Word with trust. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and it was the joy and rejoicing of my heart." But when? "When I ate it,"—not till then. The Word, perhaps, seemed dry at the first; but the prophet took it, ate it, and then it was sweet in his mouth. Take the whole Word with simplicity. "Therefore, I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right, and I hate every false way." Like David, take the whole Word with impartiality and simplicity.

5. How the Word is to be retained.—Our heart should be like a casket filled with the treasure of the Word; and as a field sown with the seed of the Word; and as a bride adorned with the Word. "I will write my law in their heart." Lord, take my heart, and write it all over, as with the pen of a diamond, in this hour. "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I sin not against Thee." "When thou goest it will lead thee, when thou sleepest it will keep thee, when thou awakest it will talk with thee."

Mr. Mudie then read a number of requests for prayer which were presented by Mr. Larkins, of London.

Dr. W. P. MACKAY, of Hull, gave the next address. It is of great importance, he said, for us to bear in mind what the Bible is. Men have got into confusion by reducing the Bible to the level of other books. Finding, as they do, that natural history, astronomy, geology, &c., are contained in it, they look on it as a treatise on astronomy, natural history, geology, &c. But, as it has been well put, it is important to bear in mind that the Bible is a revelation from God to sinful man. Since it is so, that revelation can only be received by man as his conscience is in the right before God. His intellect comes to the Word of God with the unawakened conscience or a conscience not in the right in the presence of God, and hence he finds nothing in the Book but what stumbles him. He finds truths stated that seem to go against his scientific attainments. He finds truths stated that seem to contradict his studies in geology, in astronomy, in science, in philosophy; but let him come as a poor helpless sinner, saying, "I have sinned, I am worthy to be condemned; O God! I need a revelation from Thee. I have found myself out to be a sinner, and I require a Saviour." And then he turns over the sacred pages, and finds that there is neither geology nor astronomy taught, but that right away through he comes face to face with God. "Come see a Book which tells me all that ever I did. Is not this divine?" Many young men in our midst are often troubled with sceptical difficulties. Let them bring a little conscience in. Men can pick holes in the Bible and critically sit over little difficulties that they find in it. Let them but bring conscience into the study of it. There are different ways of destroying the effects of a snowstorm. You might set all the men and women in the place to clear it away, and they might take weeks over it. But let the sun shine, and in two hours the work is done.

The Word of God is a revelation and a history; not a history of the march of empires or emperors, not a history of the rise and fall of earth's great ones. It may incidentally touch on these subjects, but the history in the Bible is a history of sin—strange statement, but a true one. Rationalists say, "Leave a man to his conscience." But the rationalists are three millenniums too late. Before the law was given, man was left to his conscience, as you find in the case of Noah's sons, who recognized the principle of the fifth commandment, or of Joseph, who understood the teaching of the seventh commandment. Notwithstanding, when left to his conscience, man went so wrong that every imagination was evil. God tried man under the Law, and next under a great external Ritual, yet man strayed just as far from the Lord. Let the ritualist take this to heart, for he is two millenniums too late. When man goes religiously wrong, he goes most wrong of all. Man was thoroughly tested by God, and He tried him and found him wanting. But while the Word of God is a revelation of God to be received by means of the conscience, and while the Word of God is a history of man's sin, tried by conscience and law, we find that there is a doctrine running through the Bible. We find that doctrine from Eden's gates to the great white throne—namely, the doctrine of sin put away. When Adam fell, God at once began his redemption work. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." And all along, those bleeding victims, those smoking altars, those numbers of slain, those seas of blood, told that God was determined to put away sin. In the fulness of time, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, comes and takes upon Himself the fashion of man, and accomplishes the work of redemption. There we have sin put away for ever, and sinners saved by sovereign grace. Thus we have from the beginning to the end of the revelation that doctrine which eclipses all other doctrines. Let us come to the Bible as poor ignorant ones needing a revelation from God, and we have it; let us come as poor sinners needing a Saviour from sin, and we have one. That is how to use the Bible as God would have us.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

At two o'clock Mr. James Balfour took the chair. The subject of conference was "The Family." Various requests for prayer and praise were presented by parents and others.

After reading from Mark ix., the Chairman spoke:—I suppose there are no instincts in our nature so strong as those of a parent for his own offspring; and God who made our race implanted these instincts for some good purpose; and the two leading objects of these instincts it is not difficult to see. The government of the world is one, and the training of a people for Himself is the other. You may be sure that we have the sympathy of God very deeply in this matter. I don't suppose there is anything that will happen in our Conference that will touch the fatherly heart of God more keenly than the hour and a half we are to have just now. We are too apt to think, "I am in earnest about my children: if I could only persuade God to be so too!" It is all the other way. God has caused us to meet together for a great purpose. His eye is set on our children. His heart is yearning over them. How wonderfully God has respect to this relationship of the family, and down the ages He has not only given these instincts, but He has condescended to enter into covenant about it.

Parents have a great deal which they can do. It is difficult to enumerate all the things they can do, and still more difficult to say what they cannot do. If you were to ask me for any good rule which parents are to adopt in bringing up children, I could not give it. God has purposely laid down no specific rule. There are so many varieties that it is impossible—varieties of disposition in the children, and in the parents, and in the circumstances of the age. It needs a constant holy watchfulness, and ingenuity, and thoughtfulness, and prayerfulness, on our part. It is not only action, it is prayer largely; and I suppose there are those in this meeting that could keep us for a week telling us of the wonderful answers God has given to the prayers of fathers, and especially of mothers. And it is not only the prayer of earnestness, it is the prayer of faith. It is natural to pray for our children earnestly, but it may be difficult to pray in faith. The speaker concluded a valuable address by illustrating his remarks from the story of the man who came to Jesus beseeching Him to heal his son, and complaining that his disciples were unable to do so.

Lord Kintore then offered a number of requests collectively before the throne of grace.

The meeting being declared opened, Mr. Larkins said that at Bristol there had been for some years an annual meeting of parents who traced many of the conversions that have occurred there within the last two years to answers to prayers offered up by parents at prayer-meetings. We need to realize that God is more interested in the matter than the most affectionate parent here. The speaker then related an incident which had occurred to him in the Agricultural Hall inquiry-room, in London. He had there been used by God in bringing a young woman out of darkness into the light. After the change, her first act was then and there to lift up her voice and say, "Lord, Thou hast this night heard my mother's prayers."

Mr. Burnett, of Kemnay, made some remarks about suitable companionships for the young.

Rev. Mr. Scott Moncrieff related the history of the infidel Hone, who was afterwards converted and confessed that while he had believed that he was able to answer any argument brought forward in favour of Christianity, there was one which fairly baffled him, namely his father's holy life. "Your child," said the speaker, "may be too young to read books, but he is reading you."

The Rev. J. Robertson, of Newington, said—"There is the power of life and death in the kind of conversation that takes place at the family table, the company kept, the character of the newspapers and periodicals admitted to the house, the likings expressed, the criticisms on sermons, on a Sabbath afternoon. These are the things that silently but potentially educate children. It is an education that is always going on, and there are no holidays." The speaker was reminded of two children who were questioning one another as to whether Christian or Christiana, in "The Pilgrim's Progress," was to be more admired. One preferred Christian, but the other Christiana, because she took the children with her. He also related how that a young man had gone to a city from a country home, and when he was ultimately brought to the Saviour, in answer to his mother's prayer, he said he could never spend his mother's money on theatre-tickets, for it was sacred. The speaker suggested that in every sermon a few ears should be dropped for the children to pick up. Mr. Robertson concluded his interesting address by quoting the remark, "If parents were what they ought to be, children would be all converted at the home hearth."

Mr. Soltan closed the meeting by a remarkable personal testimony to the influence of his parents' conduct and training on all the members of the family.

[The remainder of our report will appear next week, with the exception of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's stirring address, which forms the first article of the present number.]

MALDON, ESSEX.—For a few days I have been down in this corner of the country, and from the interesting condition of the Gospel-meetings, I am led to expect great things from the Lord. Pray for us. GEO. R. GEDDES.

SAVED.—Last night a poor drunken woman of the casual wards brought to me in our church a nice-looking, bright young girl who had been for some time sleeping on stairs and in doorways, through her grandmother going to the workhouse. She had not fallen, though exposed to such awful temptation. This morning I sent her to an elder of our Church, at Hampstead, and his wife at once gladly engaged her at £10 per annum. She had not been able to go to service, having pawned her clothing to get bread and to keep her off the streets. I have two others of like circumstances caught up within a week from the streets. C. J. WHITMORE.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

BY HENRY VARLEY.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Ere these lines reach the eye of your readers, our brethren W. Haslam, H. Moorhouse, and myself will be in "the thick of the fight" at Dover. We are expecting great blessing, for there is a deep spirit of prayer pervading many hearts. I have been resting for a fortnight in this southern town, and though I have not been present at any meeting, I hear that the month's preparation has been a most blessed one.

I am in receipt of invitations from nearly every large city and town in the kingdom; scores of these it is quite impossible to accept, but it is to me remarkable evidence of the deep interest existing in the country. Through your columns I would impress upon many loved brethren the importance of this condition of the public mind. Is there anything to hinder the coming autumn and winter being the most successful yet known? I think not. On our part, let hearty surrender to the Lord be made; He will surely use us. The quietness of commercial interests and probable depression during the coming months make this season one of peculiar value.

Personally, I am very thankful for the check received in work and wages—not for satisfaction in the poverty of the poor, but at present such is the ignorance, ungodliness, and drunkenness of our working people, that they cannot bear prosperity. The past five years have been a clear gain to drunkenness, lawlessness, and crime. The present reaction, though a loss financially, is a great gain morally. Let us make the coming season one of testimony in every possible way. "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."

One suggestion that I would make is,—let two brethren, after much earnest prayer and exercise of faith in the power of the Word of God, go out either into street, seaside, or well-frequented resort, and in a clear musical voice read two, or at most three, passages of Scripture, occasionally repeating, or singing if it can be well sung, a verse of a hymn, the service lasting two minutes; then pass on for fifty yards or to another street, leaving out address and public prayer, simply using the Word. In this way you might easily bring God's Word before a thousand minds—may I not say into a thousand hearts?—in one brief hour. It is not the quantity of truth preached or heard that saves, but that which is received. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it!" "Behold a sower went forth to sow. . . . The seed is the Word." The simplicity of this ministry is only equalled by its power, and no police regulation troubles you, for the service is over before the crowd is assembled.

I said "two or three passages." Let me give a brief picture of one of these evenings.

Scene 1: A little company waiting upon God in prayer after tea (I believe in the social aid of the evening meal).

Scene 2: The street, or court, or highway; two brethren side by side; an open Bible. One reads, "Behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy, for unto you is born in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."

Then pass on; no discussion; a quiet, unobtrusive, but most effectual service lasting two minutes. Your readers must bear with me in saying "a clear musical voice," for I know some loud, harsh, cracked, screeching voices that would be far better as quiet vessels of the sanctuary; they are not adapted for this service. The Scriptures quoted are simply specimen ones. Hundreds of passages will occur as suitable, and they should comprehend the three R's—ruin, redemption, and regeneration. I have no doubt in some cases this course has been followed; I do not state it as something new, but as being persuaded of its value.

Could not a meeting be held near the end of this month at Mildmay Hall for prayer and power in the experience of many of us who intend to give our strength to special work for the coming months? Such a gathering would increase our fellowship, and send us forth "anointed with fresh oil." I have no doubt our valued brother Hon. Captain Moreton would carry out the details.

Clarendon-road, Notting-hill, W., Sept. 2, 1875.

WHAT HAS THE REVIVAL LEFT US?

THIS question was considered at the monthly meeting of the Open-Air Mission, held in Providence Chapel, Hackney-road, on Monday, the 30th ult. There was a large attendance of members and friends. After tea in the school-room, an adjournment was made to the Chapel, which was soon filled. Mr. T. B. Smithies presided. Prayer was offered by Mr. G. Kirkham, after which the Rev. William Cuff, minister of the Chapel, opened the subject. He took it for granted that they all agreed there had been revivals. Their history was remarkable, but their philosophy was not clear. Henry Ward Beecher said they were as simple as any other phenomena; but Albert Barnes more correctly said they were beyond human power to produce or control. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth: so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." Their philosophy was not human, but divine. Their history was written in the Bible in connexion with Moses, the Israelites, Solomon, Elijah, Nehemiah, Ezra, the Prophets, John the Baptist, and Christ and his Apostles. Since apostolic times they have been connected with Augustine, Chrysostom, Calvin, Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, Jonathan Edwards, and others; and now with the name of Moody. They were as much a matter of history as the Battles of Hastings, Waterloo, or Inkermann.

Mr. Cuff then considered what the Revival had left us. And first, a large expectation. This expectation was shared by all parties in the Church: they expected more work, more prayer, more faith. It was also shared by the world. Men of the world looked on with keen eyes, and said, "What will they do now?" Hence a solemn responsibility rested on open-air preachers. As the people would not come inside to hear pastors, the street preachers must be out-and-out Christians, and preach Christ more fully and more earnestly than ever they had yet done.

Again, the Revival had left an intensified conviction. The conviction in the power of prayer was deepened both in the Church and in the world. Also in the reality of the descent of the Holy Ghost; and, not least, in human instruments. Men had seen the kind of instrumentality God was pleased to use. Moody was a man more than a minister. He spoke as a father, and he could weep. This element of human sympathy had done a mighty work.

He could not help saying, however, that the Revival had left a great disappointment. He believed the masses had not been reached; nor were there the number of conversions equal to what had been expected. Only five had applied to him for church membership, and three of these had been in the habit of hearing him at the Shoreditch Town Hall. And, as far as he could gather, there were actually fewer members of the North London churches than before.

But, withal, the Revival had left an equally great encouragement. Moody and Sankey themselves were an encouragement—they were so simple, so free, so truthful, so earnest. Their gospel was the old Gospel; and to see how this grand old Gospel was capable of drawing and holding such crowds of people, was in itself a great encouragement.

The Chairman said the evangelists had spoken almost as loudly by what they had left undone, as by what they had done. He asked if anyone had ever known Mr. Moody to travel on Sunday, or smoke a cigar, or touch intoxicating drinks. He considered their example in those respects were worthy of imitation by those who would win souls for Christ. He specially pleaded for the tram and omnibus men, who were robbed of their Sabbath in a great measure by professing Christians.

In the course of the meeting a large number of brethren, at the suggestion of the Chairman, offered prayer in single passages of Scripture. When such praying is really in the Holy Ghost, it is surely effectual and fervent, and availeth much.

When the meeting was thrown open for conversation, the brethren differed as to whether the masses had been reached. Mr. A. O. Charles said that, as Secretary to the North London Committee, he considered that all classes were fairly represented at the Agricultural Hall services; and Mr. G. Kirkham quoted the testimony of the Rev. Thomas Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, as given at the Thanksgiving Meeting of Ministers at the Mildmay Conference Hall. He found that out of 1008 houses in his parish the occupants of 672 had sent representatives to the Bow-road Hall. Mr. Kirk, Secretary of the Open-Air Mission, and others, also spoke; and the impression produced by the meeting was that the Revival had left a more lively and effective style of preaching, a precious legacy of hearty hymns, a quickened Church and ministry, numerous conversions, and above all the heavy responsibility of doing more to carry the Gospel to the masses yet unreached throughout the length and breadth of the land.

HOME OF INDUSTRY, SPITALFIELDS.

ANNIE MACPHERSON TO HER HELPERS.

EMIGRATION.

BELoved FELLOW-HELPERS,—Another year of emigration work has closed, and the half-year's balance-sheet will shortly be issued as usual. It is with a grateful heart the following is submitted to you who have sent to our necessities. The past has been a year of deep trial, one in which our faith has been tested in many ways, but our God has been the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He doeth all things well. It has just been my joy to see the sixth (since April) little band started for Canada under the care of three wearied-out ministers of the Gospel, who go for a brief season of change and rest.

The band consisted of 50 boys, 11 of them entirely orphans, 33 motherless or fatherless, 6 worse than orphans. This would be a type of the total number (335) we have, in co-operation with other missions, been enabled to aid during the past year. Including those placed out by Mrs. Birt in the province of Nova Scotia, we ask you to follow with much prayer about 2500. It is interesting to watch the onward progress of the work. Six hundred are now over eighteen years of age. One of the first we were privileged to influence in the East of London, after four years' residence in Canada, has yielded to the call to foreign missionary work, and is now, in connexion with the China Inland Mission, gone forth to be proved as a labourer.

Do join me, dear invalid-workers, in prayer that from our 600 sons many more empty vessels may be found worthy of this call, with sympathies attuned to sorrow, and a Christ-like unselfishness drawn forth by having borne "the yoke in their youth."

SEWING CIRCLES.

To your nimble fingers and kind hearts we have been deeply indebted during the past year for our store-room supplied bountifully, enough for each and all, and the residue we shall share with the toiling home-heathen missionaries around us, such as Messrs. Holland, Heath, and others.

And now may my present longing desire to aid 1000 children during the coming winter and summer be shared in by you all. We serve a loving Lord who can and will supply all our need out of his riches in glory by Christ Jesus. The wave of blessing that has passed over our land will be proved by the purse-strings it will unloose for the works of love and mercy among the fatherless and the widows. In the name of the compassionate Saviour we entreat you all, dear fellow-workers, to watch for the little ones, and let us have the poor wee destitute lambs to train for Him whose heart of love yearns over them far more than ever we can do.

The staff of lady-helpers increases, holding up our hands on every side, making our hearts glad by their denial of self and sweet devotion to Him who has done all things for them; whilst Mr. and Mrs. Merry have undertaken in Canada for the coming year details that have hitherto fallen to our share.

FLOWER MISSION.

Words fail to express the untold joys of these lovely messengers from our Father's own hand. Over 200,000 bunches of flowers, each with its sweet text, have been taken forth since March to the hospitals and workhouses around us. After the ladies have received your hampers, and attached the life-giving Scripture seed to each bouquet, sweet has been the moment of prayer ere starting forth as the messengers of o' cheer to the sick and sorrowful. Yes, even the most depraved in the streets around us are softened by a little flower.

Many an opportunity have these bouquets opened, and in these various hospitals we hope during the coming winter, when the flowers are few, to find opportunity for those who feel it a privilege to use the gift of song, and thus cheer whole wards.

Also, we hope to decorate fifty Christmas-trees with useful little gifts, where such trees never were planted before. All know that these are means for softening hearts and giving special openings for many voices to tell the Story of the Cross.

Will the dear children in their spare hours make presents for the Children's Hospital, widows for the widows' trees, invalids for the sick wards? and we shall be your happy almoners when Christmastide comes.

DAYS OF COUNTRY CHEER.

These happy days are described in the following Letter from one of our Canadian helpers; and would those who contributed their mites accept our united and grateful thanks? These occasions prove often the first time many of our little match-box makers ever saw the country, and often it is the last time that the aged widow breathes the pure fresh air. Hundreds had never seen the sea before, and it was a great pleasure to us all to share in their delight.

"Can you imagine the joy we have been having in giving a glimpse of green trees and fresh fields and a breath of pure country air to the poor destitute people in this East of London? Miss Macpherson has been giving 1250 of them a day in the country, making three parties. Those who gather every Sunday in the Refuge classes were first taken out to a place offered by Christian friends, who had everything arranged so nicely for them—a marquee put up in the middle of the field, a water-cart brought on to the ground, and such a quantity of milk for the dear children, besides opening their house for the friends who had charge of the children, and providing both dinner and tea under the spreading trees. Then there were swings, and races for prizes, and a general distribution of toys, which made their hearts glad. Then scrambles for 'sweeties.' But it was so sad, at first, to see them try to play the games. Poor things! they have never learned to play, for it has been all toil—no sunshine in their lives, but work early and late for a scanty supply of 'the bread that perisheth.'

"The widows were taken to the seaside, and their joy was very great as they sniffed in the salt air, and gathered up the little stones and shells to carry home with them. Arrangements were made for those who wished to take a bath or have a sail. I came upon a little group of the older ones who had got wearied out, and were sitting quietly upon the sand, having a 'good cry' together, and recounting the blessings and the mercies of the Lord, which, they said, had been 'new every morning, and fresh every evening.'

"I could only praise God for showing me how He could use the weak things of this world, and fill with trust and light and joy empty hearts and lives; for, dear friends, these poor widows know what it means to pray 'Give us this day our daily bread,' for earthly means have failed, and their eyes are lifted up unto Him from whence cometh their help.

"The third day was spent with match-box makers in Epping Forest. Just picture to yourselves hundreds of those poor creatures, many of whom work from early dawn until far into the night. Some of them seemed so weary and sad, and told us they had not gone to bed at all the night before, but had had to work all night that they might be able to accept the free gift of a day in the country, with a good meal—a thing which some of them had not had for many a long day. I looked upon many little fingers worn quite thin from the constant pressure of putting the papers and sand upon the boxes. They gathered even the weeds to take back with them, to make bright the place called home; and one little girl came to Miss Macpherson with her mouth all bleeding, where she had cut the corners of it in her attempt to bite off some treasure (a sprig of bramble) which she could not break. We came upon a group absolutely jumping upon and feeling lovingly over the soft green leaves of a clump of nettles, knowing nothing of the sting; and when, half an hour after, they held up before me their, poor wee hands and feet, it gave me an opportunity to tell them of another thing, which, however soft to the touch and fair to look upon, stings like an adder, and can only be healed by the blood of Jesus Christ.

"The money required to give this day's joy was collected by an invalid lady who could not get beyond her own garden, but upon whom the Lord had poured his own spirit of love and compassion. She could not be there to see the joy, but she knew the day we were going, and, I doubt not, entered into his joy as his loving eye and his beautiful sunshine rested upon his poor ones. During each gathering, hymns were sung, and short addresses given; and we know, for He has, said 'his word shall not return unto Him void.'

"Miss Macpherson is asking the Lord to give her the means to rescue 1000 children next year. The marginal reading of Isa. vii. 11 is, 'Make thy petition deep,' and who that realizes that each one of those bodies held an immortal soul to be gathered in and won for Jesus, or just left as they are to go down to eternal death, can stand quietly by and, in deed if not in word, say, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' How dare we keep time, talents, or money from his service when we remember his answer—'The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground?' We are but his stewards. The time is short; but beyond, an eternity, stretching like an endless chain, to be spent by us and them either with Him in glory or banished from his presence. In view of this, should we not look up to Him with the question, 'What wilt Thou have me to do?'"

Our funds are entirely expended, our hearts are full for the perishing masses around us, soon all our homes will be full again as the Lord's stewards supply us with the means.

CHRISTIANS AND TOBACCO.

The following are the symptoms which I experienced on smoking a pipe of tobacco:—Violent beating in chest; head got excited, commencing in crown; knees shaking, nerves vibrating, tongue pained and irritable, eyes got dim, hands trembling, body got cold; disgusted with myself, sick feeling in stomach, would like to lie down, miserable; had to lie down; irritable, swimming in head, could scarcely refrain from weeping.

When smoking is persevered in, these symptoms are not experienced so violently, but the tobacco saturates the body, keeps up a constant craving, degrades the person to go into corners and hidden places to avoid being seen, and gives a bad smell to him, and to his house or office. When a trial or a cross comes, he takes to the sensual remedy of smoking, instead of to his knees, and wastes from one to three hours a day dreamily smoking away.

Physiologically it does great harm to stomach, brain, and nervous system, especially in depressing the upper part of the brain, the physical instrument of the mind, through which faith, hope, trust, &c., act spiritually; it deadens the power which relies on God alone; rather takes refuge in a mean, sensual indulgence.

Some snuff as well as smoke, and waste as much money as would keep an orphan in George Müller's Home. Is it right to waste God's money like that? I was once a smoker, but suffered much degradation of mind from it, as every smoker does, and it took much prayer from me before I could give it up. Let the smoking reader, if he is a believer, cry to God for help and power to give up tobacco for ever. Will one do so? "Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Pet. ii. 11.)

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT AMONG WOMEN.—Sir, I am anxious to commence a temperance movement among the women attending classes and meetings in connexion with the Mission to Women carried on in my husband's parish. I should be truly grateful to any of your readers who have had practical experience in the working of such a movement amongst women, if they could give me any hints as to what they have found the best way of commencing and carrying it on. Should all members be total abstainers? I fear that the vice of intemperance is greatly on the increase among women in our large manufacturing towns. It is high time that we, who are interested in work among them, should endeavour, with God's help and guidance, to do what lies in our power to check the growing evil.—I remain, Sir yours truly,

WEST MIDLAND CONFEDERATION OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

A CONFERENCE in connexion with the West Midland Confederation of Young Men's Christian Associations was held on Thursday in Liverpool. The Conference was called together mainly for the purpose of meeting Mr. Richard C. Morse, Secretary of the Executive of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada, who is returning to New York. The arrangements were somewhat hurriedly made, in consequence of which the attendance of delegates was not so large as it might otherwise have been. Delegates were present from Liverpool, Birkenhead, Tranmere, New Brighton, Bootle, Chester, Manchester, Oldham, Bury, Southport, and Dublin. Dr. Grimké, of the Manchester Young Men's Christian Association, presided during the early part of the first meeting of the Conference.

After devotional exercises, the Chairman remarked that he thought these associations should be not only young men's Christian associations, but associations of Christian young men. The great trouble of the present day was that the religion they had to deal with was a very great sham; it had got very little real life in it, and the result was that there was very little work, very little comfort, very little hope, and very little glory. The daily life of every Christian young man ought to be such that he could always be spotted. Every one ought to be known to his companions as a Christ-man—a man who represented Jesus Christ. And if the ungodly asked what Jesus Christ was like, they might be told to look at one of these young men. There should be in every young man a picture of the principles as well as the life of Jesus Christ. What was the great principle which actuated Jesus Christ? He came into this world to do his Father's will, and the moment we put ourselves into the hands of God we ought to relinquish all claim to self, and be ready heart and soul to do his will. If all their young men could do this, they would soon see a change in the world. Men often would not listen to what they had to say, but men could not help seeing their Christianity such as this.

Reports of the position of the various Associations represented were then given. They were generally of a very encouraging character. Most of the Associations were in a prosperous condition, and were busily engaged in many kinds of evangelistic work.

The following delegates spoke:—Mr. Horne, Birkenhead; Mr. Turton, Bury; Mr. Leftwich, Chester; Mr. Hudson, Bootle; Mr. W. Hind Smith, Manchester; Mr. Green, New Brighton; Mr. Taylor, Oldham; Mr. Houghton, Southport; Mr. Coward, Tranmere; and Mr. Samuel Nash, Liverpool.

Mr. W. HIND SMITH, of the Manchester Association, read a paper on

"THE DISTINCTIVE WORK OF A YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION."

He said that it was not the distinctive work of these Associations to provide a mere place of resort for young men, or a reading-room or a library, though these were valuable auxiliaries; nor was it their primary work to provide educational classes, which, however, might be profitably held where the supply was not equal to the demand. The distinctive work he thought was settled as soon as they had arrived at the essential object of the Associations, which they were all agreed was the conversion to God of young men, and their building up in the faith of the Gospel. If this object were constantly before the mind, every agency which led to this result might be regarded as legitimate. And yet their work was many-sided. They had first to unite all Christian young men upon the Paris basis: not upon any denominational creed or code of doctrines, but upon the simple fact that they had received and were resting upon the Lord Jesus as their only Saviour, and taking the Scriptures as their only and sufficient rule of life. Secondly, they had to instruct in the Word such as they might succeed in uniting, thereby qualifying them for becoming successful Christian workers. As an agency in this work, week-evening Bible and devotional meetings, well conducted, were indispensable. He said "week-evening meetings," because the attendance on week evenings would be, or ought to be, larger than on Sundays. They need not trouble themselves if the young men did not largely attend on Sunday, because they all ought on Sunday to be engaged in some distinctive Christian work, in connexion with their own churches.

As to the conducting of devotional meetings, he could not recommend the adoption of an open time. In a devotional meeting of an hour he would devote the first twenty minutes to praise and brief prayers, and the next twenty to carefully, thoughtfully, and prayerfully going over some passage of Scripture. The conductor should give a brief skeleton exposition, and then the speakers should be expected to keep to that line of thought, instead of going into rambling and discursive remarks. In the last twenty minutes he would return to prayer and praise.

In the third place, the Associations were to go as missionaries before and outside the ordinary means employed by churches. He thought they had a special mission to commercial young men. He held that they might with advantage confine their efforts to young men, and mainly to commercial young men. This was a field of labour larger, he feared, than they would ever compass. The Associations, he considered, formed the missing link between the Sunday-school and the Church, and they must always be faithful allies of the Sunday-school. So far as they were faithful in the discharge of the duties of their relationship to Sunday-schools, would they commend themselves to a large number of Christian workers whose esteem was worth having.

Mr. SHURTON, of London, then took the chair.

Mr. McCrossan, of Southport, urged that the shops and other places where young men were should be visited, and the young men spoken to as they were at work.

Dr. Grimké commented upon the importance of a careful and systematic study of the Bible by the members. Without this they might, by the power of speaking, touch the feelings of an audience and make a sensation, but they would never secure any real progress in the saving of souls.

Mr. McDonald, Birkenhead, said that one means they had of getting at the men in the great shipbuilding and other yards in Birkenhead was by holding prayer-meetings and short services in the yards during the dinner-hour, and at other convenient periods.

After some remarks from Mr. Leftwich, Chester; and Mr. Green, New Brighton,

The Chairman said he quite concurred with Mr. Smith that the great and leading work of their Associations ought to be the salvation of souls. One thing which ought to be kept steadily in view was to get live young men to work, because they had work to do, and a consciousness of the necessity of the work being done. He urged the importance of devotion as part of these meetings, but said he did not much believe in having part of the meeting open, as that had a tendency to give an opportunity to many persons to speak upon subjects which were not calculated to benefit themselves or others.

This concluded the discussion, and the Conference, after prayer, adjourned for luncheon.

AFTERNOON CONFERENCE.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Samuel Smith, treasurer of the Liverpool Association.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY TO OTHER ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. RICHARD C. MORSE (New York) gave an address on this subject, and in opening expressed the great pleasure it gave him to be present at the interesting gathering that day. The idea of mutual help, he said, was so interwoven with the structure of Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-American institutions as to render it unnecessary to prove their duty to each other in this respect, but how to discharge these responsibilities seemed to be the vital and practical question of the age. The American Young Men's Christian Associations had endeavoured to discharge their responsibilities to each other by two means—by international conferences, and also by provincial conventions or conferences throughout the States. No fewer than eighteen provincial Associations had been formed in different parts of the American Continent, which generally held their meetings in the autumn, and these societies were in all stages of development. The interchange of ideas in connexion with these conferences was of great help, and tended much to the growth of true Christian principles. He thought he could not employ his opportunity more profitably than by giving an outline of the position of Young Men's Christian Associations in the State of Pennsylvania, where the Associations had, in the providence of God, discharged their responsibilities to one another during the last six years. The State was about 400 miles in length and 200 in breadth, with a population of between three and four millions. In the year 1869 there existed over the surface of the State about twenty Associations, many of which were in a very feeble condition. They held a convention that year, and appointed a committee to look after the general work. In time the Associations increased to sixty or seventy, many souls being won to Christ through their instrumentality; and the increase continued until they could now boast of 125 in vigorous working—Associations which had done more good than any other group on the American continent. The example of Pennsylvania as to its mode of working had been followed by other States, and the efforts in other directions had been crowned with the greatest success. During the past year something like the sum of £30,000 had been expended by between 500 and 600 of their Young Men's Christian Associations. The affiliated societies—the International State and Provincial—had spent about £6000; so that for every £13 the Associations spent in their home work, they expended £1 for keeping up the intercommunications between the Associations and promoting the work of the societies throughout the States. This statement, Mr. Morse said, was a pretty good proportion to represent the healthful and proper discharge of "our-responsibilities to other societies."

Mr. Newett (Southport), in moving a resolution conveying the thanks of the Conference to Mr. Morse for his interesting paper, said that there should be a greater bond of association among the members of their societies. He had had the opportunity of attending an International Convention in the United States, and there saw the influence which was exerted in bringing them as brethren together.

Mr. Leftwich (Chester) seconded the vote of thanks, which was carried by acclamation.

A long and somewhat animated discussion ensued on the work of the Associations, in the course of which various opinions were expressed.

It was agreed to change the name of the Confederation to that of "Manchester and Liverpool Confederation of Young Men's Christian Associations," and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for the next district meeting.

The proceedings closed with the doxology and benediction.

PUBLIC MEETING.

In the evening a public meeting in connexion with the Conference was held in the Circus, Whitechapel, and was very largely attended. From 700 to 800 persons were present, the majority of whom were young men of the middle and working classes. Mr. W. H. Newett, Chairman of the Southport Young Men's Christian Association, presided, and he was supported by the Revs. Dr. Harrison, R. H. Lundie, P. G. Scarry, and C. M. Birrell. Evangelistic addresses of a telling character were delivered by Mr. Shipton, Mr. Morse, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

Mr. Smith, in the course of his remarks, urged young converts not to be too much in public, for it was possible to be very busy for Christ, and not enough with Christ; to read God's Word thoughtfully, and prayerfully, and constantly; and to be much in prayerful fellowship with God.

Mr. Walker, of Liverpool, spoke of the great success of the Young Men's Meetings which had been held for the last six months in that circus.

Mr. Leftwich (Chester) and Mr. Green (New Brighton) added a few words on the work of Young Men's Christian Associations; and the proceedings, which had been partly of a devotional character, terminated.

ROTHERHITHE.—An interesting meeting was held last week at the main gate of Southwark Park, where nearly 1100 people were drawn together by the announcement that Mr. S. Trevor Francis would sing, and Mr. Golding preach. From 7.30 until 9 this large assembly remained, and the utmost interest and attention were evinced. An effort is being made to erect an Iron Mission Hall in Rotherhithe; a second-hand one has been purchased, and a site secured near the Surrey Commercial Dock gates, where hundreds of working men are employed. It is in process of erection, but those interested in the work write that they shall be compelled to stop unless funds are supplied—£150 is still lacking. Shall the builders cease?

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE NOON PRAYER-MEETING.—This meeting was established by Mr. D. L. Moody in the autumn of 1873, and although the attendance, except on Saturdays, has been much reduced, the interest in it is unabated. Much sweet communion has been enjoyed here by the Lord's people, and it is surprising to see how steadily many ministers both in and out of the Established Church manage to be present day by day. On Wednesdays the Committee meet regularly to appoint preachers for special services in and around Newcastle, including dinner-hour services at several of the engineering, railway, and other workshops. Last Wednesday, Mr. J. B. Alexander, the president for the day, expressed the deep sympathy of the meeting for two much-loved friends, Rev. Joseph Dush and Rev. R. Haworth, who have shown the warmest interest in the meeting from its commencement, and have been removed, the former to Edinburgh, and the latter to Hartlepool.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES ON THE CONTINENT.

A FEW weeks ago you were kind enough to insert some letters from me respecting a proposed visit to Germany during my holidays, with a view of doing something to make known to pastors and Sunday School friends there the blessing which God has given during the last few years to the work of children's services in England. Your readers may now like to hear what has been done.

I received several very kind invitations, not only from friends in Germany, but also from Amsterdam and from Basel. It was impossible, in the short time at my disposal, to accept all of them, and some were from towns or villages lying too far from the route I had sketched out.

I was very thankful to find that Mr. Samuel Tyler, who has so long and with so much blessing conducted the Surrey Chapel Children's Services, was able to be with me for the first part of the tour. We arrived on Saturday, 31st July, in where we were very kindly entertained by Mr. W. Hovy, the superintendent of one of the Sunday schools. In the evening a teachers' meeting was held, and very great interest was aroused by Mr. Tyler's account of the "Children's Christian Band." During Sunday morning we visited three different "children's churches," and at two of them spoke to the children, Mr. Hovy interpreting. In the afternoon we went to Mr. Hovy's Sunday school, and invited the children to a special service in his largest room in the evening. At six o'clock more than 300 came together, including a few parents; and notwithstanding the tediousness of translation, they listened with deep interest to accounts of English children who love the Saviour, and to one or two letters written by some of these dear children. I venture to think that, though this was probably the first Sunday evening service for the young held in Amsterdam, it will not be the last, for teachers and children both seemed to enjoy it thoroughly. As we were leaving nearly all came up to shake hands with us. I was very much delighted with the Dutch children, and felt sorry indeed that I could not speak a word to them in their own language.

Before we left we had an opportunity of talking over the work with Rev. Adama von Scheltema, President of the Sunday School Union, and several other friends.

We went on quickly, via Cologne, to and there met Mr. Brückelmann, the able representative of the Sunday School Union in Germany, from whom we received the greatest kindness. Mr. Brückelmann has for many years laboured with much success, in spreading Sunday-school work in the country, and I found that his name was known and respected everywhere. He has an infant school at Neuenheim, close to Heidelberg, and we there said a few words to the little ones. These infant schools, or "Klein Kinder Schulen," are an important institution in many places. In too many towns in Germany nearly all the religious teaching, both in church and school, is decidedly rationalistic, and in some places nothing can be done for the children except to gather the infants under six—the age at which compulsory school attendance comes into force—and to teach them simple hymns and texts of scripture. The Evangelical Training Institution at Nonnenweiler supplies Christian teachers for many of these schools.

Mr. Brückelmann kindly went with us to in Württemberg, and acted as interpreter at a large meeting which was held in the Nikolai Kirche on Thursday, 5th Aug., at which more than 1,000 children were present. Stadtpfarrer Weitbrecht arranged and conducted this meeting, and Pastor Mann and other ministers were present, and brought their teachers and scholars. The children sang some of their chorales, and also "Safe in the arms of Jesus," from the sheet of German hymns which we had had specially printed for this work.

After calling on one or two friends of Sunday-school work in Stuttgart, we went on to

to spend Sunday, and were very kindly received by Herr Pfeilsticker, Kanzleirath of the University. Instead of the usual Sunday-school, a service was held, and about 150 or 200 children came. In the afternoon we walked over to the little village of Hagelloch, where Pastor Elpper had gathered the children in the church, and also a few old people. Mr. Tyler taught them one or two of the hymns, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," "Jesus loves me," "The great Physician," &c. On Monday we paid a hurried visit to Calw, accompanied by Mr. Elpper, and had a gathering of about 100 children in the house of Dr. Gundert, formerly a missionary in India, and now editor of several Christian periodicals.

On Tuesday we came to

where the Baroness von Rüdft gathered her two schools together in the afternoon, and in the evening we had a meeting of teachers, and gave an account of the work in England amongst the young. We also visited the Bettingshaus, an asylum for neglected children, at Hardthaus. The Revs. G. Stern, — Irion, and J. M. Flad (a missionary four years imprisoned in Abyssinia), kindly interpreted.

The next day we went on to

in the Black Forest, where we had the most remarkable meeting of all, the Baroness von Rüdft having gathered all the children of the village in her garden, on the slope of a hill in the Forest. Nearly 600 came together, and they were grouped most picturesquely at various points in the zig-zag paths of the garden, some far above the place where we had to stand, and some down beneath us. A choir of young people led the singing, and the children were all supplied with the "Glaubens Lieder" (Faith Hymns), which, since Mr. Pearsall Smith's visit, are now becoming widely known in Germany. At the close of the service there was a liberal distribution of good things. In the evening we had a very nice teachers' meeting in the house of the Baron von Gemmingen, where we were kindly entertained.

Mr. Tyler now having to leave me, I spent a day in giving away tracts, etc., before going on to Basel. My greatest difficulty was to carry about from place to place the books and papers I needed, and as Heidelberg is a Protestant town with six clergymen, who are all decided rationalists, I thought it would not be amiss to give nearly all my tracts there. The people took them very willingly indeed, especially the working men, and the children crowded after the little books. It was a thorough hard day's work. In the evening I went to a teachers' meeting held by Mr. Bröckelmann. At

BASEL

I found Mr. Henry Hill, jun., who had come on to meet me from Paris, where he had been also speaking to the children. We found that the largest Sunday schools in Basel were taking a holiday, but Mr. Kober-Gobat kindly took us to two of those that were open, and we were able to address the children, and special meetings for children and teachers were arranged for the Tuesday evening, August 17th. On this occasion the large hall of the Vereinsshaus was used for the children's service, and about 800 were present. They sang from our hymn sheets, "The Great Physician," "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," "Safe in the arms of Jesus," &c. The children in this large meeting, as in all the others we held, were remarkably quiet and under control, and they had been gathered with hardly any advertising at very short notice. The teachers' meeting afterwards was a very encouraging one, about 200 being present. Pastors Riggenbach and Rappard (of St. Christophers) kindly translated for us. We had invitations from Kornthal, Speyer, and Strasburg, but were unable to comply with them, and I am sure that many other fields of work would have opened up if we had been able to stay longer.

Mr. Hill, after leaving me, went on to Zürich, and afterwards to Berne, and called on several friends of Sunday-school work, and at the latter town he had a meeting of nearly 1000 children.

On my way northwards from Basel, I called on some pastors and other Christian friends in Frankfurt and Cologne, but was unable to stop to hold any meetings, as I was anxious to spend my last Sunday in Barmen.

ELBERFELD AND BARMEN have grown together, and now form one large town which is a centre of Christian work for Rhenish Prussia, and has probably more evangelical life and activity than any other place in Germany. The "Festwoche," a series of gatherings answering to our May Meetings, came off in the second week of August, the anniversaries of several leading religious societies being held in the Barmen Vereinsshaus, or in the churches. A very important and well-ordered Sunday-school is held in the large hall of the Vereinsshaus by Mr. A. Kaldenbach, and here on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20, I had an opportunity of addressing about 600 children. Afterwards, Mr. Kaldenbach took me to a gathering of old people in the Armenshaus, and in the evening there was a special meeting of Sunday-school teachers, when I was able to give an account of the work of Children's Services in England, and to speak on the necessity of seeking the early conversion of the young. At these meetings I managed to make myself understood in German.

On my way back I did a little more tract distribution in giving chiefly the hymn sheets, and telling the children they were "the hymns sung by the children in England." Notwithstanding that this was amongst a Catholic population, I found no papers refused, but many young people, and adults also, came after me to ask for one—in one instance only I saw a boy tear up the hymn sheet I had given him, on his discovering it was a Protestant book.

With all this work I found it still possible to combine a very fair amount of recreation. Though less than a month away, I visited the Lake of Lucerne and went up the Righi; saw the Schloss at Heidelberg, went up the Wartburg at Heilbronn, saw Schloss Eberstein at Gernsbach, and spent some time in Coblenz, Düsseldorf, the Hague, and Antwerp. For the German places I had always a few books with me, but if it had been possible to carry them about I might easily have given thousands. Nearly all German children can read well, and I fancy they do not get much to read; I feel sure that through the circulation of Gospel books amongst them a great work of evangelization might be done. I always noticed that grown-up people stopped to look at the books I had given to the children, and very often they showed a desire to have one for themselves. I distributed a good many of "A Saviour for you" in German.

I feel that I cannot speak too warmly of the

that I met with everywhere on my tour. There are many earnest Christians in Germany, amidst all the rationalism that has spread so fearfully in the State Church, and they are praying and longing for a revival of God's work in the land. The visit of Mr. Pearsall Smith really seems to have been an event in the religious history of the country. Almost every Christian that I met had been to his meetings; in giving tracts in the train at Basel, and again in the north at Barmen, I was asked directly if I knew "Mr. Schmias." His meetings on the Continent were to a great extent evangelistic meetings, and his name seems to be associated as much with the doctrine of a present salvation for sinners as that of a full salvation for saints, and it is remarkable that the accusations brought against him by his German critics are much the same as those that were lately urged against Mr. Moody—viz., that his teachings made salvation too easy, and ignored repentance and the sacraments.

Of course, in holding Children's Services in a foreign land, with only a small acquaintance with the language, one had to contend with great and the meetings could hardly be quite the same as those we hold in England; there could be no Conversational Meetings, and the conducting of the service—a matter really of more importance than the address—was of necessity out of one's hands. Then the fact of going to so many places rendered it impossible to have more than a single meeting anywhere, while in our work in England we always insist on the importance of a series of services, all in the same room, and never hold merely one service if we can help it. But with all these drawbacks we had some very happy gatherings, and some that I think will not readily be forgotten.

The primary object of my visit was really not so much to do work myself as to undertake a work similar to that which has been so much blessed in this country. The pastors and Sunday-school friends who arranged the meetings and interpreted have, I think, all become deeply interested in the subject of Children's Services, and I believe that many of them are now anxious to have in addition to the ordinary Sunday-school instruction (which, in most places, only reaches a small proportion of the children) special gatherings of the young, with the view of leading them to decision for Christ. Our experience in England shows us that these evangelistic services are nearly always made the means of the conversion of young people, who are very soon ready to work for Christ in the Sunday-school. We find, too, that special services very often indeed bring out workers who are able to carry on permanent services, and thus the work grows.

I quite hope that some of our children's books and pamphlets for teachers will soon be and published in German, and perhaps also in French and Dutch. It would have been an immense help to me if I had had our own tracts and pamphlets in German, and if I am able to go another year they will be quite necessary. I have just received a letter from Rotterdam saying that Mr. Spiers's "Value of a Child's Soul," and some of our children's books, are being translated into Dutch, and will probably shortly be printed by the Rotterdam branch of the Religious Tract Society.

I earnestly ask the prayers of your readers for the children of Germany and of the Continent generally; and especially that God would raise up many more earnest workers amongst them, both in the Sunday-school and as children's evangelists. I must not forget to mention that, both at Mr. Tyler's services and my own, many dear Christian children have been praying daily for us and for the German children since we left.

MR. WILKINSON'S WORK AMONG THE JEWS.

MY DEAR SIR,—I see by the last two issues of THE CHRISTIAN that some friends have kindly sent to you donations for "Mr. Wilkinson's work among the Jews."

Now, I would like to put before your readers my exact position in relation to the Jewish cause, that all future gifts in this direction may be devoted in full knowledge of our work.

As you are well aware, I am now, and have been for about twenty-five years, connected with the "British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews." Under this Society's auspices I am a minister for the Jews, and a missionary to the Jews.

In the former capacity my work is to expound God's revealed purpose in the Jew, and endeavour to stir the Church's sympathies on behalf of Jewish conversion. In this capacity the Lord has permitted me to do a great amount of work—very imperfectly it is true, but still with many tokens of the Divine approval—whilst travelling about 10,000 miles a year for twenty years, giving addresses amongst Christians of various denominations all over the United Kingdom.

In the latter capacity—as a missionary to the Jews—it has been my privilege to preach Jesus from the Hebrew Scriptures to the children of Israel residing in the various cities and towns of Great Britain, and also to some residing in Egypt, Jerusalem, Tiberias, and Damascus. The Lord has permitted me to lead several to Jesus, whom I have baptized in his name, and who are now in various spheres adorning their Christian profession, and witnessing for Jesus,—two in the ministry; one an assistant-missionary; and several in honourable secular employment who are now dispersed in America, Australia, Germany, and England. One whom I baptized in the Midland counties has passed away in the triumph of the faith of Jesus. More recently a very learned Jew has confessed, in my study, his faith in Jesus, though not yet baptized.

Now, as far as I am personally concerned, will the Lord's people who take interest in his brethren according to the flesh bear in mind that all gifts in money for the purpose of sending missionaries to the Jews, or the Scriptures through missionaries, should be sent either direct to the Society's house, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C., or if through me it should be stated thus—To be used for general missionary purposes.

Beyond this general work two special objects might be mentioned to the Lord's stewards. The first is the case of numbers of poor Jews who come to my house, who need help and must be helped for the Lord's sake. We have about a thousand glaziers about the streets of London, who have fled other countries to escape the military conscription. Many of these have had a good Jewish education, and when converted make ministers and missionaries. Some distinguished converted Jews of to-day were once in these ranks.

Now, a little timely help given in the name of Jesus to these and other poor Jews is frequently the means of removing prejudice and of awakening the first favourable impression of the Christian religion. Help in this direction through me might be designated—For the Jewish poor.

This help would include cases of believing Israelites who are struggling with deep poverty, and of these very many come under my notice during the year.

The second object of a special kind is the case of the "Home for Aged Christian Israelites," called "Ebenzer," and situated in Ferntower-road, near the Conference Hall, Mildmay. The Lord has graciously permitted me the great honour of erecting that Cottage Home. We do not collect money for this Home. The Lord sent the money needed for its erection, and we look to Him to supply all our need for carrying it on.

The property is held in trust by the "British Jews' Society," and I am the honorary superintendent of the Home.

The rooms are now all occupied but one, and the gratitude of the dear old folks is truly refreshing. I have voluntarily made myself responsible for the money needed in carrying on this Home, and am rendering to the British Society a quarterly account of receipts and expenditure on its account. Gifts in this direction should be distinctly stated as for the "Home for Aged Christian Israelites."

A report of the Home, or any further details of the Lord's work among the Jews, I will gladly send to anyone applying to me at my residence, 79, Mildmay-road, N. The three objects named, then, are—

1st. Missions to the Jews.

2nd. Jewish poor, converted and unconverted.

3rd. "Home for Aged Christian Israelites."

It may be observed, in closing this letter, that four donations were sent to me by the Lord's people to pay the expenses of the 16,000 leaflets I got out, and had distributed among the Jews in connexion with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work. The total amount of those donations paid the printer's bill exactly to a penny. I cannot regard this as an accident. To our faithful God be all the praise.

Yours in Jesus, JOHN WILKINSON.

COLPORTAGE AT SHOEBURYNNESS.

DURING the fortnight spent at this place by the Volunteer Artillery, the Colporteur employed by the Christian Colportage Association has been busily at work in the camp; and, although he has experienced some opposition, his reception, on the whole, has been most encouraging. He has sold a large number of Bibles and other good books, and from day to day has had several opportunities of addressing the men, either individually or in groups. One of the persons thus spoken to was so much impressed that he could not refrain from shedding tears, lamenting that he was the only one of ten brothers and sisters unsaved. He resolved to give the Lord no rest till he had found peace in believing. Let us hope that ere now he is rejoicing in the Saviour's love. The Committee of the Religious Tract Society having very liberally voted a free grant of suitable tracts, several thousands have been distributed by the Colporteur and others. Several meetings have been held in camp by the Rev. J. Speirs, the Presbyterian Chaplain of the garrison, whose pointed and faithful addresses were listened to with great attention. A number of the officers have taken an interest in the work, and have, evening after evening, encouraged the effort by their presence and sympathy. One especially has shown his interest by becoming a subscriber to the colportage work carried on in the district.

The singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns has been greatly enjoyed by the Volunteers, and not a few have, with beaming eyes, rejoiced to tell of the blessing they have had through the labours of our beloved American brethren, whose work in this country has been so singularly honoured of God.

It is a source of deep thankfulness to our heavenly Father to know that, apart from this special effort, colportage work has been largely blessed to the troops permanently stationed here. Several of the men are earnestly inquiring the way heavenward, who but a few months since were utterly careless; some have begun to do something for the honour of their newly found Master and the good of their comrades; and others, who a short time ago found their chief enjoyment in drink, have now become sober and steady.

The Colporteur traverses a wide district, but his work in a small island in the neighbourhood has latterly been specially encouraging to him; one, if not more, having been brought to the Saviour through his Sunday evening meetings. Another instance of good resulting from his visits here, is that in one house he has sold no less than eight Bibles of the total value of £2 4s., besides many Christian books. May we ask for the prayers of the Lord's people, that this barren corner of Essex may richly share the blessing which, we rejoice to think, is being so abundantly enjoyed elsewhere? May the Lord hasten it in his time!

A ROYAL SERVICE.

DEDICATED TO "THE WAITING ONES" IN THE KINGDOM AND PATIENCE OF JESUS CHRIST.

Among the Master's callings of high honour,
One oftentimes we miss,
Because our hearts, in their impatient yearning,
Fail to perceive its bliss;
Fail to perceive the grandeur of its service,
The deep sweet joy it brings,
And deem some other easier or nobler,
With richer harvestings.
And so we may not choose, but Christ appoints us
The work of sitting still,
And saith, "My child, in quietness and patience
This service now fulfil."
Since all these hours of weariness and waiting
Are precious unto me,
Each one must needs be freighted with some blessing,
Love's perfect choice for me.
Then think not thou art kept within the shadow
Of long inactive years,
Without some purpose infinitely glorious,
Some harvest sown in tears.
And so there comes a glory and a gladness
Into the weary days,
And in our hearts there shines a solemn radiance,
Inwrought with quiet praise.
We learn that we are given this sweet service
Because the Master sees
That thus his delegates must oft be fitted
For higher embassies.
We praise Him for these lonely hours of waiting,
And, trusting, look above,
Till all the hush and silence of their service
Grows luminous with love.
We muse upon that ministry at Nazareth,
Until it seems to be
A fellowship most sweet, a royal honour,
To wait, O Christ, with Thee.
And ever as we stand within the shadow
Of those long years of thine,
Our waiting days grow better, holier, grander,
Their service more sublime;
Until at last we hear thy dear voice saying,
"Child, I have need of thee
To fill this vacant place of trust and honour,
To do this work for Me."
And then, as fellow-workers with the Master,
We shall arise and go
Forth to the harvest-fields of earth, it may be,
The reaper's joy to know.
Or to some perfect, wondrous service yonder,
Within that Holy Place,
Where, veiled, in its full transfigured glory,
His servants see his face. J. S. PIGOTT.

"WHO WILL GO?"—A paragraph under the above title appeared in our issue of August 26. The name and address of the lady interested in the work is Miss E. Dickson, Rue Danyean, St. Servan, Ile-et-Vilaine, France.

CREUZNACH, GERMANY.—I am here for a little. The Lord is blessing, I trust, on a large scale. We have here one of the most devoted witnesses for the truth; I had him in Switzerland, and Mrs. Prinsop got me to send him here. He is a simple colporteur, but worth ten ordinary labourers. He preaches daily, besides selling lots of Bibles, and is welcomed in twenty-two gatherings in this locality and surroundings. We shall have theatre-preaching shortly. The last few days have been wonderfully blest in a large tract-distribution at the fair here, where people come from a hundred miles distance. Probably 25,000 tracts have been given; and, better still, have been abundantly watered by the prayers of many saints. W. G.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A SERMON IN A BARN.

THIS morning I received a letter which made me very sad, and brought tears to my eyes. It was written by a mother, and told me of the death of one of her children—Augustus, a dear boy of five years of age,—who was led to Jesus at a barn service which I conducted five weeks ago yesterday. How well I remember that evening! It was Tuesday, July 26. The barn is at Tendring, in Essex. It is near a farmhouse, but away from the road and away from all other houses. As we drove up I wondered where the people were to come from. Presently I saw them coming across the fields in different directions. Here was the old man leaning on his stick; there was the neatly dressed, working man's wife; here was the working man himself, fresh from his work; then came the boys and girls. The farmyard was dirty, but the farmer had spread a good quantity of clean straw to form a pathway. When the meeting commenced, I noticed some boys scoffed on one of the half-opened doors who seemed disposed to play, but a kind-hearted policeman was near, and kept them in order. Close by the little platform on which I stood were mere children, most of whom paid great attention. So we sang, and prayed, and preached, till I could hardly see my audience—for it is soon dark in a barn without loopholes or windows. I remember I said a few words to the children. Why should not we who preach always do this? Then we said to each other, "Good night!"

Now for the letter. I think, instead of my telling you what it was about, you would like to read it for yourselves.

"I know not," says the farmer's wife, "whether you will remember my two little children. They were in the barn with their nurse the evening you preached here. They have never forgotten you, especially that bright bonny boy of mine, the elder of the two. He died on Saturday night last, after four days' illness. He was a great sufferer, but remarkably patient. My doctor, the nurse, and a woman I had to assist assured me they never saw such happiness and joy displayed by so young a child before. In the midst of all his extreme suffering he was truly rejoicing in his dear Saviour. From the time he was taken ill to the time of his death his constant theme was Jesus and heaven, and his dear little brother Eddie. The night you preached here he was so bright and joyous. He never closed his eyes in sleep till a quarter past twelve. He kept repeating to his nurse what you had said in the barn about Zaccheus climbing up a tree to see dear Jesus. Ah! how his little eyes would brighten up when repeating what you had said. You have indeed been the means, in God's hands, of leading my darling boy to his dear Saviour. There has never been a day since you were here but that sweet darling has spoken of you. He loved to call you 'dear Uncle Kirkham.' Last Thursday evening, though so full of pain, he said, 'Mamma dear, dear Uncle Kirkham told us in the barn that Jesus said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.' On Saturday afternoon he was very ill. 'Oh! mamma dear, I do want to go home and be with my dear Jesus and little Eddie.' On Saturday evening, two hours before his death, he sang the first verse of that well-known hymn—

"Safe in the arms of Jesus."

It was always a special favourite of the darling child's. When he was dying, he said in a low whisper, 'I can see my dear Jesus now; I shall soon be home. Ma dear, come soon, and bring dear little Katie.'"

As I look at a photograph which his broken-hearted mother enclosed in her letter, representing him seated on a chair, with little Katie standing by his side, I seem to see him again so distinctly. But the Good Shepherd has taken this lamb in his bosom, and he has now got his wish—he is safe at home. "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." May each of you, my dear young readers, love the same Saviour, and at last reach the same home!

RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN THEATRES.—The Committee of these services completed their sixteenth course at the close of April. At present the funds are not sufficient to meet the expenses of last winter, and the Committee will be obliged to reduce the number of their buildings for the next course unless the lacking £450 be sent in. We hope they will soon be encouraged by the help of Christians to continue the blessed work of preaching the Gospel, free of charge, to the masses of our poor population.

TEXTS MISUNDERSTOOD.—I.

"MY SON, GIVE ME THINE HEART."—Proverbs xxiii. 26.

A TEXT frequently misunderstood and misapplied, especially by evangelists. How common is it to hear these words quoted as if they represented the message of God to a sinner, as if, in fact, they were a summary of the Gospel.

Now, it may be owned that if the heart be taken as the seat of trust or confidence, the words may fairly be explained in a Gospel sense. We find "heart" so used in Rom. x. 10, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness," not to speak of another text in Proverbs iii. 6, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart."

But unless this be distinctly explained—and it seldom is—the probability is that most hearers will take the word "heart" in its popular sense as denoting the seat of the affections; and if so, "My son, give me thine heart," as addressed to a sinner, is law, not gospel. It is, so understood, but a shorter form of "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might"—a demand which no sinner ever did, nor ever can meet.

The words as they stand in Proverbs are evidently not God's message to sinners, but to his own children, and of this we have clear proof from Heb. xii. 5, where a similar expression, "my son," in Prov. iii. 11 is quoted as showing that God's children are addressed. "Ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children"; "God dealeth with you as with sons."

"My son, give me thine heart" may, then, be fairly treated as God's voice to his children after conversion, but should never be used as if it were his message to sinners. Indeed, such expressions as "Give your heart to Jesus," which are more or less founded on this text so misunderstood, are more likely to mislead souls to the foot of Sinai than to direct them to "the blood of sprinkling," which is the first step of the ascent of Mount Zion.

The Gospel is not a demand upon the sinner to give anything to God, but to receive something from Him. The self-righteousness of nature is only too eager to give, and readily welcomes the thought that Christ wants us to give him our hearts. But Christ acts upon his own principle—"It is more blessed to give than to receive," and his Gospel in its last-recorded form from his own lips is, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (i.e., gratuitously).

It is more scriptural to affirm that the Gospel is God giving us his heart rather than demanding ours. It is true He has a claim upon ours by giving his, and this follows in due time; but it is of the utmost importance that God's order be observed. "We love Him because He first loved us." We are viewed in the Gospel as beggars who have nothing to give, but who are invited to receive, and it is the first step towards salvation to be brought to take this place: "Blessed are the beggars [it is the same word used of Lazarus, Luke xvi. 20] in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven." TENT WORK IN SOMERSET.

is a large village situated in the centre of many hamlets thickly populated, and within three miles distance of Bridgwater. A suitable field being kindly lent by Mr. Williams, we pitched our tent thereon, and after a week of most successful work, we had to rejoice over wanderers restored, sinners saved, and saints revived. The services were greatly appreciated by the farmers and their workpeople, who more than filled the tent on every occasion. On Aug. 7 we commenced work in under favourable circumstances, there being about 400 present at the first meeting for prayer on the Saturday evening. Noon-day services were also held for exposition of the Word and prayer during the three weeks of our sojourn there, which were well sustained. We erected our tent for the first eleven days in a field in the north, and the latter part of the time in the east end of the town, by the railway station. At every service the tent was crowded, frequently as many outside as in, and never a meeting without souls being blessed. After the address a large sheet of canvas would be drawn across the tent, enclosing a space 30 feet by 30, where inquirers were dealt with; the remainder, comprising 15 feet by 30, being occupied by believers for prayer,—the two meetings going on at the same time. The following is an extract from the Bridgwater Mercury, giving a short account of our closing service in the town:—

[654]

"EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

"The evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. J. A. Vicary of Bristol, came to a conclusion on Wednesday. After tea a crowded meeting was held for the encouragement of young Christians, and this was followed by Mr. Vicary's closing address, on the unanswerable question, 'How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?' In the course of the evening, the Rev. B. Glazebrook moved 'That this meeting devoutly thanks God for the successful evangelistic labours of Mr. Vicary in Bridgwater, and trusts that in God's providence he may be able to visit the town again, and, in parting, wishes him every blessing in his future course.' Mr. Glazebrook said he was thankful for any evangelistic efforts to break up the old routine, and that God had raised up their friend Mr. Vicary for the work. The Rev. E. S. Prout referred to the circumstances under which Mr. Vicary had been first invited to visit the town by a meeting of Nonconformist pastors and officers, and expressed his conviction that the hand of God had been seen in the matter from first to last. As a resident pastor he rejoiced in the successful labours of their friend, which he regarded as a valuable auxiliary to his own work. He knew by his own observation the genuine results of Mr. Vicary's services through God's blessing in answer to frequent and united prayer."

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

Through the good hand of our God upon us we were brought here in safety, and began work on the 28th inst. Our tent is pitched in an excellent position, in a field adjoining the esplanade. In addition to the four flags flying from our roof, with the texts on them, "God is Light," "God is Love," "Christ is all," and "Jesus only," we have erected a large hoarding and covered it with the words of God in large type, so that the thousands who promenade the beach and esplanade might read them. At this time the town is crowded with visitors from all parts, and several have already found salvation in the tent, and returned to their homes in Birmingham and elsewhere rejoicing in the forgiveness of sin. We have meetings every day at noon for the convenience of invalids and others who cannot venture out in the evening. Also Sunday morning services, at seven, for Christian workers; and afternoon at three, and evening at half-past six, for preaching the Gospel.

We have been much encouraged hitherto. We praise God and sing, "Still there's more to follow." J. A. VICARY.

WOOLWICH.—I trust that the appeal made in your columns on behalf of the Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall in Woolwich will not be in vain. I have been stationed here now for the last two years, and have felt from the commencement of my work the need of a place similar to that in the course of completion. I purposed some time ago taking a house near the barracks, and opening it as a "Soldiers' Home," but was persuaded to let the matter rest in abeyance until the Mission Hall was opened. There is one remark, however, made by your correspondent which I feel it my duty to correct—"that no special effort is now made to win souls to Christ except by those whose influence is comparatively very limited." Special effort is being made and has been made for some time past to bring the men here to a knowledge of Christ, by those who have ample facilities for carrying on their work in the barracks and married quarters in the garrison; and those efforts have not been futile. Owing to the short time we have the men with us, the good done is not always apparent to those who are outside the work, but I have letters in my possession, received from the men, speaking of the blessings they have received during their sojourn amongst us, and longing for the opportunities which they found here of mingling with God's people. I have three classes for Christian communion, which I hold weekly for soldiers and their wives; and there is not a brigade or regiment arriving at the station but whose every barrack-room is visited, and the men are invited personally to the means of grace with which the place abounds. Desiring that the work may be remembered in the prayers of your readers, and trusting that the £300 required to complete the new Soldiers' Home and Mission Hall will be soon forthcoming, believe me to remain yours faithfully,

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

BY ONE OF THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

We had been spending a few days at the "Isle of Wight," that beautiful island where so many of the gentry spend their summers because of the splendid yachting facilities about there. However, this was not the mission of my friends and self: we had been there working for God and humanity, and were on our way to the pleasant old town of Guildford. We were seated in a train dashing along at a rapid speed, when my eye caught sight of the words "Prepare to meet thy God," on a white board in large black letters. In an instant I asked myself the question, "Am I prepared to meet my God?" My answer was, "Yes, He has made me white in the blood of his dear Son; I have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb." Before this my mind was far across the sea on a dear mother and other friends, but how soon these precious words called in my wandering thoughts, and caused me to examine myself, and think of the time when I gave my young heart back to Jesus. How much good those words at Portsmouth have done other souls I know not; I only know they brought me face to face with my God again, and henceforth "'Tis another Peniel" (Gen. xxxii. and xxx.) for me. As the train dashed along, we soon passed large hop-fields, and I asked myself the question, "What are those men preparing for—are they preparing to meet their God?" True, hops are sometimes used in yeast for bread, but those hops seemed to say, "Beer, not bread, we are to be used for"; which is rather to take bread from children and mothers, and prepare men and women for ruin. Yes, to deprive them of all that is holy and good, of love for God and their fellow-man. Oh! if I could have felt sure they were being raised to feed the poor, or in their stead I could have seen "Touch not, taste not the unclean thing," how thankful to God I should have been. I wrote to your younger readers a year or two ago about little Maggie, and as I have thought constantly of those words since seeing them, I thought I would like to write you again, and tell you, if possible, their effect upon me. All of us cannot put up boards with gospel on them, but we can drop a word by the wayside or present it in some way, perhaps by a song.

MAGGIE PORTER.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A SHORT METHOD OF PRAYER AND SPIRITUAL TORRENTS. By J. M. B. DE LA MORNE GUYON. Translated by A. W. MARSTON. Sampson Low.—Madame Guyon was one of the most remarkable and one of the most devoted women that ever lived. She passed through a living martyrdom more difficult to bear with patience than the shorter and sharper method of the stake. The English translations of some of her hymns by Cowper form some of the most beautiful sacred poems in our language. The imprisoned lady, who wrote—

"A little bird I am,
Shut from the fields of air;
And all day long I sit and sing
To Him who placed me there," has left a memorial of endurance to the glory of God, which has comforted and encouraged a multitude of sufferers since she entered her rest. Madame Guyon lived in a night of darkness as compared with the Gospel light which we enjoy; but she made far better use of her starlight than many of us of our noonday. Her writings, however, are very introspective; they may be said to be written from the text, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," but almost entirely without reference to "Looking off unto Jesus." They are subjective, and not objective; and, if read without the antidote of the other side of truth, would certainly lead to a discouraging and damaging introspection. The volume before us is exceedingly well translated, and its original thoughts and experimental counsels will be of value to those who are established in grace. The book is very tastily produced.

HOLINESS FROM THE LORD. HOLINESS TO THE LORD. By WM. SLOAN. Glass, Glasgow.—An exhortation to a more trustful and more victorious Christian life, of which "the ground of peace and acceptance must ever be the precious blood and spotless righteousness of an ever-blessed Lord Jesus."

THE LORD'S WORK IN GUERNSEY.—During the last week a series of open-air services have been held at St. Peter Port, Guernsey, by Messrs. Goodchild and Clark, of the London Open-Air Mission. Large and attentive audiences have listened to the earnest Gospel addresses which have been delivered; and inquiry-meetings have been held after most of them, the Lord's people being encouraged by seeing several cases of hopeful conversion. The earnest prayers of readers of THE CHRISTIAN are requested, that a much more abundant blessing may be vouchsafed during the present week.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

THREE NEW BAPTIST CHAPELS are in course of erection in Glasgow.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the North Wales Baptist College, Llangollen, was held on Tuesday evening and Wednesday, Aug. 24 and 25.

THE Daily News speaks of that great readjustment of the affairs of South-Eastern Europe for which the world is waiting, and which every statesman, while he dreads it, knows to be inevitable.

THE REV. CHARLES PREST, an ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, died on Wednesday, at the age of sixty-nine. He was the founder of the modern Wesleyan Home Missions. Mr. Prest was President of the Conference in 1862.

CAMBERWELL.—At a meeting in connexion with Ned Wright's Tent, forty persons were baptized last week, of whom twelve said that they had been led to Christ through Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings.

THE REV. DR. STOUGHTON, who retired from the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Kensington a few months ago, is to be succeeded by the Rev. Dr. Raleigh, who has resigned his office as minister of Hare-court Chapel, Canonbury.

THE REV. DR. CAIRNS, of Berwick, has decided to devote his whole time and attention to his students. He has been led to take this course chiefly because of the present state of the denomination. The number of students, he said, was not what it had been or what it ought to be.

AN INTERESTING LECTURE on "The Two Royal Volumes" (The Bible and Nature) is announced to members of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission and friends, by J. Crowther, Esq., on Wednesday, the 8th inst., at Melior-street Schoolroom, Weston-street, Bermondsey.

HAWICK.—A correspondent from Hawick writes:—We have two brethren here just now—Messrs. Smith and Macnab—and are having glorious meetings, souls being born again, and many anxious. After they leave, we expect Mr. Steel, a wealthy farmer, to come and preach Jesus for a month or so.

RE-OPENING OF MISS BROUGHTON'S HOME.—Owing to illness in Miss Broughton's London Home, it has been under repairs and cleansing since the spring. She hopes to re-open it in October, and would be very glad to receive gifts in the way of bedding and blankets.—Home for Mothers and Infants, 3, Cumberland-street, Pimlico.

SPA GOSPEL-HALL FUND.—A friend of the late Miss Percival writes:—After reading the interesting account of "God's work at Spa," conducted the last two years by my dear friend the late Miss Percival, I write to say that, to prevent the effect of her self-denying labour being lost for want of a place to meet in, I will subscribe £100 towards purchasing the ground for a Gospel Hall if the other £300 is made up by the end of October.

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.—The noon meeting increases in interest to those who regularly or frequently attend. Friends from the provinces visiting London are cordially invited to unite with us in prayer, and to give information of God's work in their own localities. Ladies who can assist at the harmonium and in singing are requested to address Mr. Thos. Brown, at the Hall, as above.

MISSION SERVICES.—Prayer was asked in THE CHRISTIAN last April for a Mission in Norfolk, and in May for special services in Bath, conducted by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy. The Lord graciously answered these prayers, and much blessing was vouchsafed. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are asked now for earnest prayer for a great blessing on special mission services conducted by Mr. D'Arcy at Acle, in Norfolk, arranged to commence (if the Lord will) on Sept. 19.

ARTISANS' DWELLINGS.—Dr. Rygate, medical officer of health for St. George's-in-the-East, has reported to the Vestry 291 houses in that parish, which, owing to want of light, air, ventilation, sanitary conveniences, and other causes, are unfit for human habitation, and require rearrangement or reconstruction. They are chiefly situated in Bowyer's-buildings, London-terrace, Anchor and Hope-alley, Green-bank, Bird-street, Palmer's-folly, and neighbourhood. These, he points out, are only the worst localities. The report has been referred to the Sanitary Committee.

AN ENGLISH NEWSPAPER DISSECTED BY THE LUCKNOW WITNESS.—"A column is devoted to Dr. Kenealy, two columns to 'Criminal Occurrences,' including such choice items of news as a case of cat-stealing, a cock-fight, an elopement, &c. Then the reports of the divorce courts, the sickness of a racehorse, the death of a jockey, the stupendous fact that a drunken Irishman had been arrested in Plymouth, or a German detected in a small fraud in Liverpool. All these things are carefully printed and sent out to India by publishers who cannot find room for the most brief account of Mr. Moody's movements. It will, of course, be said that many readers do not wish to see religious news in the papers, but it is sufficient to reply that there are other readers who are not interested in stolen cats or cock-fights. The insertion of all these trashy items is anything but a high tribute of respect for the taste of the readers of these papers."

THE NESTORIANS.—The article on the Nestorian Deputation now in England, which appeared in our last issue, was by Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, and was reprinted from the Missionary News. These brethren are now with Mr. Guinness in Scotland. Any friends kindly willing to arrange a meeting in their own locality, in which these much-tried Syrian Christians may make their own appeal for sympathy and help, are requested to write Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, care of J. Mudie, Esq., Montrose, A.B. Contributions to the Nestorian Mission Fund may be addressed to Mrs. Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The arrangements for the Conference of Christians from various lands, to be held in Belfast, Oct. 13, and following days, are proceeding satisfactorily. With a view to secure the co-operation and an efficient representation of the continental branches of the Alliance, the Secretary has visited several places on the Continent, and met some of the Foreign Committee of the Evangelical Alliance. Delegates from Belgium, Holland, France, Italy, Germany, the United States of America, and other lands, are expected to take part in the proceedings.

SHANGHAI.—A correspondent writes:—The tidal wave of Revivalism is actually rippling on this distant shore. Just now there is a clergyman of the Established Church (Vicar of St. Peter's, Derby), a Mr. Sholto Douglas, stopping in Shanghai for a few days in the course of his travels. He is quite waking people up; holds services in the Cathedral in the morning, and services in our theatre in the afternoon. I heard him last Sunday in the Cathedral, and judge him to be a very earnest and thoroughly good man. He seems to have stirred the foreigners up at all the Eastern ports as he has passed through.

A GOOD END.—The Reading race meetings are brought to a perpetual termination. They were fixed to be held at the end of this week, but the subscriptions to the racing fund were so paltry, and the number of entries of horses so small, that the managing committee deemed it better to give up all responsibility in the matter. The subscriptions have been returned, and the lease of the racing ground has been disposed of to Messrs. Huntley and Palmer, of the biscuit factory. The grand stand was erected, and other preparations were being made, but all work is stopped, and the races will be a thing of the past. —Times.

INDIA.—A correspondent at Secunderabad has sent us (Bombay Guardian) a cheering account of the Lord's work there. The visit of a brother from Bombay, one of the Methodist local preachers, was very opportune, and it is hoped that the Lord is about to revive his work.—The meetings of the Young Men's Christian Association in Bombay (Friday, 8 p.m., General Assembly's Institution, Calbadovi) continue to be very well attended, and are animated and interesting. We hope and trust that this band of young men will be a "Daniel's band," and become a power for good in this place. The daily prayer-meeting (St. Andrew's Vestry) is also well sustained. The weekly Union Prayer-meeting is still held at the Free Church, Esplanade, every Wednesday, 7 a.m.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION made a final excursion on Tuesday, Aug. 31, to Southend by rail. Towards the close of the afternoon a mountebank, who was encouraged with money and drink for the purpose, commenced his performances close to the open-air service. By this means he gathered some hundreds of people, who were immediately attracted to our meeting. His ring was soon broken up, and even he himself came to look and listen while we spoke and sang of Jesus. Ere the day closed, several who had commenced it in darkness professed to be "made light in the Lord," and we all returned rejoicing to have been used to point so many to Christ. Help is much needed fully to cover the expense of these days in the country.

POOR JEWS IN LONDON.—At the latter end of 1874 I was led to visit many of the lost sheep of the house of Israel in their sorrowful and miserable dwellings in Whitechapel, calling the attention of Christians to their extreme destitution. The result has been that since that time sums of money have been sent to THE CHRISTIAN amounting to no less than $116 13s., which have been distributed by Mrs. Ronyard, Mrs. Way, Mr. Cohen, Mr. Erlich, Mr. Joseph, and myself. I feel deeply grateful to God for this help, and now I send you these few lines to remind Christian friends of the importance of continuing to let our light so shine before Christ's brethren that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. "Surely, I come quickly."—W. G.

THE QUEEN ON TEMPERANCE.—The following letter addressed to the Rev. Canon Ellison, M.A. (Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church of England Temperance Society), has been received from Sir Thomas Biddulph:—"Balmoral, Aug. 23, 1875. Sir.—I have had the honour of submitting to the Queen the memorial signed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York from the Executive Committee of the Church of England Temperance Society, of which you are Chairman. I am commanded by Her Majesty, in reply to the prayer of it that Her Majesty should become the Patron of the Society, to say that Her Majesty has already expressed her opinion in favour of the objects which the Society desires to promote, and consents to become Patron of it, organized as it appears to be on a basis which includes all who advocate temperance without insisting necessarily on total abstinence. The Queen trusts that education and the enlightenment of the people, together with the improvement of their moral and physical condition, will gradually do much to induce temperance, and to diminish the evils complained of."

FRANCE.—At present seven-eighths of the convictions in France are accompanied by a verdict of extenuating circumstances. The consciences of jurymen and the moral sentiments of society are depraved, disorder and caprice are introduced into the administration of justice, and criminals are enabled to reckon on escape from the last and most dreaded penalty of the law as almost an absolute certainty. Probably the introduction, recommended in 1866 by a Royal Commission on Capital Punishment, of a distinction between murder in the first degree, and murder of a less culpable kind, the former only to be punished by death, would bring upon us all the evils of the French system of extenuating circumstances. —Daily News.

"MR. AND MRS. BROWN."—A correspondent writes to the Baptist, "May I ask whether any of your readers can give us information respecting two persons who call themselves evangelists, and who go by the name of Mr. and Mrs. Brown? They came to the village of Ashdown, in the county of Essex, on Lord's-days Aug. 22 and 29. They held open-air services, and at the close of each service asked the people present to contribute towards their support. This being so unusual a method of procedure in connexion with evangelistic services, I was led to suspect they were impostors, and cautioned the people against giving them anything. Directly after the service on the 29th, they began to sell a quantity of newspapers to the people. I have since found that on one Sabbath they visited no less than four different villages, held a short service in each, and in each asked for and received money at the close of the service. Does anyone know anything of them? and can anything be done to stop such conduct?"

SCOTLAND.—Sunday week was spent in Glasgow as follows. —8 a.m.: Free breakfast in tent on the green to upwards of 2000 poor people, addressed by our dear sister Miss Macpherson and others. Eleven o'clock, about 1000 children in City Hall; two o'clock, about 800 children in Grove-street Hall, where a great work is carried on by Mr. MacGill; at seven o'clock preached in Calton United Presbyterian Church (Rev. Robert Campbell, late of Albion Church, London). On Monday evening addressed the converts and the anxious who meet every Monday in Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh; about 600 present; one of the most deeply interesting meetings that I ever attended. Then left for Perth. At the united communion in a United Presbyterian Church, the opening address was given by Rev. Jas. Robertson, of Edinburgh, and the closing address, from the pulpit, by Rev. Mr. Sharpe, Church of England clergyman, of Hampstead, London; we live in strange times. I held services for the little ones in Tract Society's Hall and in Free West Church. W. FORBES.

THE OCTOBER CHURCH CONGRESS AT STOKE-UPON-TRENT.—For this important Congress, which commences on Tuesday, October 6, the greatest preparations are being made at Stoke. No expense is being spared by the leading laity and clergy of the place and neighbourhood to render the Congress a success. A new temporary hall of ample dimensions, situated at the side of the Town-hall, and close to the parish church, has been erected, with section and refreshment rooms, and all other necessary offices. The fifteenth Congress will be full, in some sort, of more than usual interest, from the expected presence of some eminent members of the American and Colonial Churches to take part in debate. There will be two opening sermons—one by the Bishop of Rochester, and the other by the Bishop of Ontario,—and instead of one workmen's meeting, it is proposed to hold some free sectional meetings in the evening for the working classes especially. Stoke is the central station of the North Staffordshire Railway, connected with Stafford and Crewe by the London and North-Western, with Derby by the Midland, and Market Drayton by the Great Western.

EVANGELIZING SERVICES AT RACES.—The Rev. W. J. Holder, of Hornsey-rose, and other preachers in connexion with the Open-Air Mission, have recently conducted services at Goodwood, Brighton, Lewes, Alexandra Park, and Oxford. At the latter place the Rev. C. H. Bargely, in collegiate attire, attended both days, and took part in the meetings between the races. On the whole, the speakers and their tracts (of which nearly 20,000 were distributed at these races) were well received. Several instances of usefulness occurred; many encouraging conversations with book-makers, hawkers, and musicians, one of whom, having decided for Christ, has left this, and is in a better way seeking to support his family. His wife told Mr. Holder that she hoped soon to follow her husband's example. Gipsies, card-sellers, tramps, fallen sisters, and the outcasts of society—numbers met with on the racecourse, never attend a place of worship, and are not reached by any other agency; while not unfrequently the presence of a witness for the truth has a deterrent effect upon those who profess to be religious, but who attend races and such-like meetings. In simple obedience to our Lord's injunction to preach the Gospel to every creature, we endeavour to publish his name wherever the people assemble. Seventy-seven of these racecourses in different parts of the country have been visited during the year by the agents of the Mission. All racecourses ought to have a distinct claim upon Christians who desire to proclaim the Gospel. The visitation is more effectively done when undertaken or helped by local Christian friends. On application an agent will be sent to any part of the country.—Mr. Kirk, Secretary, 11 Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

APPROACHING CONFERENCE AT NEUFCHATEL.—Some earnest Christians at Neufchâtel, in Switzerland, have formed a committee on the basis of the Evangelical Alliance, and have prepared the way for a Conference on the model of that recently held in Brighton, to wait on God in prayer and in the study of his Word. M. Theodore Monod is expected to take part, together with many workers in God's Kingdom from various parts of France and Switzerland. When in Neufchâtel on Tuesday last I was requested by the secretary, Monsieur F. de Perregaux, to make this known through your valuable publication, and to say how heartily the Swiss will welcome the presence and help of any English Christians who may be able to attend. The Conference will commence at Neufchâtel (p.v.) on Monday, Sept. 20, and will continue till Thursday, 23rd. The circular containing information as to the order of proceedings may be obtained of Pasteur Perregaux, Neufchâtel. Bespeaking the prayers of your readers on behalf of this effort of our Swiss brethren, I am, with brotherly affection, Wanstead, Sept. 2, 1875. NICHOLAS HUBBY.

THE LUCKNOW WITNESS has gleaned from the reports of eighteen different missionary societies the following table of adult baptisms in India in 1874:—

Indian Home Mission to the Santhals	1650
S. P. G. Mission in Chota Nagpore	1500
Church Mission in South India	739
American Methodists in North India	250
London Mission in South India	206
American Madura Mission	182
American Marathi Mission	128
Orissa Baptist Mission	93
Basel Evangelical Mission	84
Delhi Baptist Mission	62
Eight other Missions	143

Total from eighteen Missions .. 5029

To obtain the net numerical increase it would be necessary to deduct from these figures the losses sustained by the churches in 1874. The Witness believes that not far from 10,000 were brought into the Christian fold in India (including Burmah and Ceylon) last year.

MESSERS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S RETURN TO AMERICA.—The New York papers contain long accounts of Messrs. Moody and Sankey on their arrival in New York on the 14th ult. The Tribune says:—"The news of the arrival of the Spain steamer in the lower bay was telegraphed to this city at 6.30 a.m., and those who had made preparations to receive the great revivalists at once started to meet them. As the barge carrying the welcoming party approached the steamer, greetings were exchanged between the evangelists and their friends. As soon as the deck was reached and hand-shakings were over, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow' was sung, Mr. Sankey leading. Mr. Needham then offered prayer, giving thanks to God for the safe return of the evangelists after their great and successful work abroad. The party was landed by a Government boat, which had been engaged for the purpose. Mr. Moody proceeded at once to the Grand Union Hotel, where he took dinner, and then, to the disappointment of many of his friends, took the three o'clock train for his home in Northfield, Mass. He said, in reference to his future plans, that he and Mr. Sankey would hold revival meetings in this country similar to those held in England, some time next fall. The details had not yet been arranged. He wanted first to visit his new church in Chicago. In England they had been treated with great kindness, and a great work had been done, which he hoped would have permanent effect. Mr. Sankey and himself needed rest for a few weeks, as they had taken no holiday while abroad for two years. During the voyage from England a spirit of religious fervour sprang up on board the Spain. Mr. Sankey sang at the request of the passengers, and prayer-meetings, at which addresses were made by Mr. Moody, were held on the quarter-deck."

ONE DAY during the past week a lady got into a Brompton omnibus which was full, and gave each of the passengers a tract out of her bag. But she did not offer one to a very haughty-looking, stylishly-dressed person who sat at one end of the omnibus. After the lady who had given the tracts got out, the person to whom she did not offer a tract said to a companion, "I wish that lady had not passed me by: I wonder why she did not give me one;" and her eyes filled with tears, and she sighed deeply. I felt in my own mind how many there are to whom one feels almost afraid to speak, who are longing for a word of help and sympathy.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN "ESTHER."—I.

NOTES OF A BIBLE LECTURE BY R. C. MORGAN.

LET me say, that because the Lord gave me light, as I believe, on this book years ago, that is no reason that you should receive it. It is a reason why you should listen to what I have to say, but none why you should at once respond, "Oh yes, that's quite true," without studying it yourself, and making it your own. No scripture, whether doctrine or prophecy, will ever do anybody any good until they have eaten it. Your food does not nourish you until you have eaten it; then it becomes flesh and blood, bone and muscle, and builds up the body. So you should not go away saying the book of Esther means so and so. You must feed upon it, then it will be strength to you.

Last time we considered the book historically; now we are going to look at it typically. When we say we speak of scripture being typical we mean that one thing stands for another, and one person for another. David was a type of Christ in his warlike character, and Solomon in his reign of peace. And we are all familiar with the paschal lamb as being a type of Christ, because Paul tells us that "Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us."

Just in the same way we have certain persons mentioned in this book—Ahasuerus, Vashti, Esther, Mordecai, and Haman. These are the five principal, leading characters.

First of all, we have Ahasuerus; he is a type of the Great King. Who is the Great King? Psalm xlvii. 2, "For the Lord most high is terrible; He is a Great King over all the earth." Well, but somebody says, "Ahasuerus a type of Jehovah!" Yes: just as Pharaoh was. Indeed, every king is a type of the Great King. Every father, just because he is a father, is a type of the Heavenly Father—not in his character, but in the relation which he sustains. So every king, because he is a king, is a type of the Great King. But some of the kings of Scripture are in a very special way types of "the King eternal, immortal, invisible," just as Abraham, in laying Isaac, his son, his only son, upon the altar, was a type of the Heavenly Father giving his only begotten Son to die for us.

Ahasuerus makes a feast, and gives the people "drink in vessels of gold, the vessels being diverse one from another, and royal wine in abundance according to the state of the king." That is what God is always doing. He gives us the wine of the kingdom in vessels of all manner of shapes and kinds—gold, silver, earthen, wooden. He is a great Giver, a great Feast-maker, and all his creatures are day by day feasting at his table. Sometimes He gives his royal wine in something that is like a golden vessel, something that we think very precious, that we rejoice over; and perhaps to-morrow He gives it in something quite different, some earthen vessel apparently less valuable. So God is always feasting his creatures, and especially his own people.

The second person in the book is Vashti; she is the queen, the king's wife. "Well, what do you make of that? If Ahasuerus is a type of the Great King, what of her being the wife of the king?" Suppose we turn to Isaiah liv. 5, "For thy Maker is thy husband; the Lord of Hosts is his name." God's people are continually represented as bearing towards Him, and He towards them, the marriage relationship. "Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement?" The whole 16th chapter of Ezekiel is based upon the idea of Jehovah being married to his people. So if Ahasuerus is a type of the Great King, then Vashti is a type of Israel, because Israel is the one of whom the prophet speaks, "Thy Maker is thy husband."

* See the paper on "Esther," by Rev. C. H. Waller, in No. 292, which formed the basis of our previous lecture.

But you say, "How do you know that Vashti is Israel more than the Churoh?" I will tell you why. First of all, the word Vashti signifies "Beauty." Psalm l. 2: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." Ezek. xvi. 14: "And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty; for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God." If you take the Concordance and look up the word "beauty" in connection with Israel, you will see how frequently it occurs. And so I think there is strong presumptive evidence that Vashti, as the bride of the Great King, stands for and represents Israel.

But another proof of it. Jer. xiii. 11: "For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah, saith the Lord; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear." The king, when his heart was merry, sent for Vashti that he might show the princes and people her beauty. In Jeremiah we read that the Lord wanted to do the very same thing with Israel, but "they would not hear," and "the queen Vashti refused to come."

My great desire is to give you some outline of God's great purpose throughout the past 6000 years. God has an "eternal purpose" which He is working out from the beginning, and here, in the leading characters and actors in this kingdom, we have in type an historical and prophetic picture of the kingdom of God.

Deut. xxvi. 18, 19: "And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people as He hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made in praise, and in name, and in honour"—God wanted to show the nations and people the beauty and comeliness of his people Israel which He had put upon them—"and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the Lord thy God as He hath spoken."

A little word of warning here. If you take up some commentaries you will find a disquisition on the impropriety of Ahasuerus's conduct. But the Book is what God has given to us. Commentators have no right to judge of this transaction, at all events in its typical meaning, outside the Bible. And not a word is there said which gives the idea of anything wrong in sending for Vashti to show the people and princes her beauty. We must take it as it is in the Book, and explain it by the Book. I think that is the right way to deal with the Word of God.

The king sends for Vashti and she does not come; he wants to show them her beauty and she does not obey. The Lord wanted to do that with Israel, but they would not hear. They were disobedient as she was, and the consequence was they were put away.

"The king was wroth." Deut. xxxii. 21: "I will move them to jealousy with stripes which are not to a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation. For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell." "The king was wroth;" he called his people and counsellors together, and asked them what should be done to Vashti, "according to the law." Notice particularly that the standing of Vashti was according to law, and she was dealt with according to law. Just as Israel's standing was according to law when they were called out of Egypt, made a great nation, given the law from Sinai, and dealt with according to law throughout their history. "What shall be done to her according to law?" "That she come no more before the king Ahasuerus; let the king give her royal estate unto another that is better than she." So it reads, but see the margin "with her companions." There is no idea suggested in the text of the new queen being better than the old. The Gentile Church is no better than the Jewish Church; but her standing is according to grace, and not according to law—and that is a great deal better. Vashti stood according to law; and she lost her position according to law.

The last word we hear about Vashti is in chap. ii. 1, "After these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and what was decreed against her." The purposes of God towards his rejected people are purposes of mercy and grace. You remember how He speaks about Ephraim and Israel; how all the prophets speak one continual promise that God will bless his ancient people, and that He has not forgotten them. Vashti is left in this position—"he remembered Vashti" and that is exactly where the Jew is left to-day. Through all these ages God has remembered Israel. If this great king remembered Vashti, it was to do her good; and if our blessed God remembers Israel, it is to do them good. I would on no account give up my belief that God will bless and restore his people, for then I should have no confidence that He would save my soul. If God could forget his people—could forget Israel, the people of Abraham, his friend, to whom He made his covenant promise—then I have no standing ground for my soul's salvation. And whenever I see a Jew selling his wares in Houndsditch, or going along the street with his traditional cry, I think how God has his eye on Israel, and is keeping them a distinct people for the land, and keeping the land for them. So I know that the same faithful God who preserves this scattered nation a distinct people, by the greatest and most long-continued of all his miracles; will be faithful to me.

The next thing is, that another queen is brought in. There is a gathering of all the fair young virgins—and the crown is given to a stranger and an alien. There is nothing here about law. First of all let us look at Esther's name. Vashti signifies "beauty," and we have seen that that answers to Israel. Esther had two names. She was first called Hadassah (that means a "myrtle tree"), who was brought up by her kinsman and her redeemer—Mordecai. It puts me in mind of the first of those seven blessednesses—"Blessed are the poor in spirit," &c.; and of Jesus, when He said, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart;" and it reminds me of "the man who stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom." (Zech. i. 8). I do not know of any name that is so well suited to the people of God, the redeemed ones of this dispensation; after the putting away of Israel, as that lowly shrub, the "myrtle tree," growing out of the earth, and yet so beautiful, so fragrant, and so pleasant.

By-and-by Esther is brought to the king; she is chosen, and the king calls her by another name—Esther. That means "a star." The Church is called with a heavenly calling. As we read so often that we belong to the heavens; are raised up and set together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; made partakers of the heavenly calling; our inheritance is in heaven; our names are enrolled there. And therefore, because Hadassah is to be a type of the Church, she gets a heavenly name—Esther, a star.

Read chap. ii. 15. "Now, when the turn of Esther . . . was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hogaï, the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed." One reason why a great many Christian people never have any joy or comfort of their religion is because they are always choosing for themselves. These other virgins wanted this, that, and the other thing, to make them pleasant and agreeable to the king; but Esther said, "Surely thy king's chamberlain must know more about it than I do." So she committed herself to the one appointed by the king, and she did not ask for anything. She would receive what he gave her. If we want to be happy we must be satisfied with what it pleases the blessed God to give us—what it pleases his Holy Spirit to impart. If we want to be made comely and beautiful, all the Lord asks of us is, that we should not bring anything of our own to Him. "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people and thy father's house. So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty, for He is thy Lord; and worship thou Him." Make a clean forget of all that belongs to nature. We worship Him by receiving from Him. "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" and this, the highest blessedness, belongs to Him, who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

THE PARSON'S GREEN HOMES.—I am sure it will be a source of pleasurable satisfaction to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN to know that there is a good prospect now of the above Asylums being secured to the Institution. The difficulties which have hung over the transaction like dark and threatening clouds are gradually dispersing, and, with respect to finances, only £1050 is now required, and it is most important that this sum should be raised before Oct. 12. Messrs. Morgan and Sooty's office of THE CHRISTIAN, will receive donations; and promises to contribute will be thankfully received by Edward W. Thomas, 260, Euston-road, N.W. Reader, your co-operation in prayer for a blessing is earnestly desired.

COATBRIDGE.—The two faithful servants—Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn—who have been labouring here for some weeks past, have departed for England. There has been a great awakening among all classes, and a very blessed work amongst the young men. Numbers have been brought to Jesus from amongst the careless and ungodly. The revival among God's professing people has been great; they have been quickened and revived; they have been aroused from their lethargy, and are pressing on in the cause of Christ, redeeming the time. These services are a fresh proof to us that the Gospel has the same drawing powers as ever, if only be preached with earnestness and simplicity. The crowds that have attended were wonderful. A special farewell service was held in the large United Presbyterian Church, on Sabbath night, Sept. 5, and a farewell service for believers in the same place on Tuesday night. It was a memorable meeting. Inside the communion rails were seated the members of the Coatbridge Young Men's Christian Association, under whose auspices the evangelists were labouring; young men of all denominations—Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, &c.; and the sight recalled the words of the Psalmist, "Behold how good and how pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The work is still going on: the efforts of the Y.M.C.A. have incited the various denominations to work with more diligence and to display more zeal in this branch of Christian work than heretofore, and if that alone was the result of their labours, they would feel amply repaid.

NOTES OF A VISIT TO ROME.

I ARRIVED in Rome on April 29 last, and the next day I went to see Mr. and Mrs. Wall at their new Mission-house in San Lorenzo in Lucina. I found Mr. Wall alone, as his family was in the country, and being the day for

THE BEGGARS' MEETING,

he asked me to stay for it. At the appointed hour he and I with some difficulty made our way through the crowd of men to the table at the end of the inner room; and the oppressiveness of the atmosphere from the heat and smells made it, indeed, a work of self-denying love for those who conducted the meeting, so that I was not surprised to read, in a recent letter from Mrs. Wall in THE CHRISTIAN, that she speaks of the absolute necessity of having a separate room in which to carry on this department of their work. A few rather respectably dressed men were evidently workmen out of employment, but the great majority of those present were of the very poorest class. I should say at least 120, perhaps more, were crowded into the two rooms, and all were very quiet, some really attentive, while Mr. Wall and a young Italian brother taught them out of the Scriptures the way of salvation, and also the first verse of an Italian version of the hymn

"Safe in the arms of Jesus."

It was a strange contrast to the last time I had heard it, a few weeks before, in the Agricultural Hall, to hear the well-known air sung by these poor Roman beggars! When the meeting was over, a small loaf was handed to each as he passed out; and who will not pray that many may be led through this work of faith to find in Jesus the true Bread of Life?

The following day I went to see the School in connexion with

THE CHIESA CRISTIANA LIBERA.

(Free Italian Church) in Via Corallo No. 9, which is divided into boys', girls', and infants' classes, with 156 on the rolls, but there being a fete near Rome on that day, many were absent. It was one of the three afternoons in the week when the evangelist Sig. Conti gives a Bible-lesson to the boys and girls in the adjoining hall of meeting; and it was indeed a pleasure to hear about sixty children—born in the city of the Pope—reply so well to the questions asked by Sig. Conti on the verses they had learnt by heart, one of which, being Luke iv. 19, afforded an opportunity for explaining what the jubilee year of the Jews meant, and of showing the difference between it and the present year of jubilee in the Roman Catholic Church, which benefits nobody but the Pope, and this the elder children seemed perfectly to understand.

The following day was Sunday. In the morning I attended the services of the English Wesleyans, but conducted by an Italian, in Via della Scrofa No. 62, and the congregation seemed entirely composed of Italians. In the evening I went to the communion service in the hall of the Free Italian Church. On the evening of May 3 the excellent Bible-woman M. Santi, whom I had met years ago in Milan, came to the hotel to accompany me to the which is held in turn in the various evangelical halls. It happened to be that evening in that of the Free Italian Church in Via Coralla, and as we walked there the Bible-woman gave me some details of her work, which is of a varied description, as, besides selling the Scriptures from house to house, she visits the sick in the hospitals, and even gets Testaments and tracts into the prisons.

To return, however, to the prayer-meeting. The hall was full, and that evening Mr. Wall presided. On his invitation, one woman rose to be prayed for. Several Italians prayed and spoke, and a young Jew, before praying, bore testimony to his faith in the Lord Jesus.

Another day I visited Mrs. Van Meter, and saw

when I heard them sing very well indeed in English the song, "Scatter seeds of kindness," as well as an Italian version of several others of Mr. Sankey's collection. Miss Van Meter accompanying them on the piano. I regretted that want of time and strength made it impossible for me to visit their other school near the Vatican, as well as other evangelical schools and meetings in Rome, as I had to leave on May 10.

What, perhaps, interested me most of all I was able to see, was in Via Botteghe Oscure No. 24. I attended the meeting there on Sunday, May 9, and though not numerous attended, owing to the various regiments not having leave to go out of barracks all at the same hour, still it was pleasant to see not a few young soldiers joining in the simple service during which the newly-elected deacons were recognized as such by the church. Their duty is to watch over the members scattered through the various regiments which were then shortly about to leave Rome, some for the camp, some for other cities; and they had been chosen by the soldiers themselves for their worth and Christian experience, without any regard to their military rank. The following Sunday twenty-five new members were to be admitted to the Communion. I was much pleased with the evangelist, Sig. Luigi Capellini, who seems to possess great tact, energy, and good sense; and having begun this work on his own responsibility while he was himself serving in the army, he seems peculiarly adapted to deal with soldiers. A small reading-room is open every evening for them, and Dr. Leroy Vernon, on behalf of the Episcopal Methodist Church in America, now supports this interesting work, as also an evangelist and work amongst civilians in Rome, Bologna, and Milan.

That same Sunday afternoon I went to the hall of the Waldensian Church in Via delle Vergini, which is large and attractive, and there was a good congregation to hear the address of Sig. Enrico Bosio.

I cannot help adding, in conclusion, that I never before so thoroughly understood the significance of as when I witnessed the grand high mass in San Giovanni in Laterano, performed by an aged cardinal in the Pope's stead, on Ascension-day. It was impossible to tell even whether he and his attendant priests received the consecrated elements or not, as one could see nothing of what they did while standing before the altar with their backs to the people. Nor was there, to my feelings, the slightest devotion in the singing and music. Exquisite though both were, one hymn sung by Mr. Sankey is worth it all for the effect on the heart and conscience. It made me sad on leaving the church to see many penitents laboriously toiling up the Scala Santa on their knees, just as in the days of Luther, and to feel how few as yet of the twenty-five millions who inhabit this beautiful land, notwithstanding the efforts of Christians, know the blessed truth he there learned: "The just shall live by faith." S. H. CARRUTHERS.

MAJOR COLE (assisted in singing Gospel hymns by Mrs. and Miss Cole) will (n.v.) conduct a series of services at Gloucester, commencing Sept. 19. Meeting for Christians at 8 a.m.; Gospel Addresses at 3.30 and 6.30 p.m., Sept. 19, in the theatre. United Prayer-meetings, Monday, Sept. 20, in the Corn Exchange, at 12 a.m. and 7.30 p.m.—Major Cole will preside in the evening. Each day in same week, Noon Prayer-meeting (12 to 1) and Gospel Addresses by Major Cole at 8 p.m., in Corn Exchange.

SWANSEA.—The blessing continues to increase. On Monday, Aug. 30, the tent was removed to another part of the town. There was a crowded meeting on the opening night, and the after-meetings have been very large throughout the week. In addition to the tent, two mission-halls are now open almost every evening, where the work is also carried on with remarkable success. Numbers of souls are being brought to Christ, not only through the evangelistic services, but by individual effort. Will Christian people kindly continue to remember this work specially in public and private devotion, that what the Lord has commenced may in no way be hindered by his own servants who are engaged in it?

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—We have come into this prosperous little country during the temporary cessation of our soldiers' meetings on account of the Autumn Manœuvres.

It is time for the people of God to bestir themselves on behalf of Belgium, for one seems to hear the sounds of going in the mulberry-trees. On account of the excitement caused by the Ultramontane processions, multitudes are crying out, "Is there nothing better than the old worn-out rags of the woman in scarlet?" Now is the time for open-air preaching, evangelization in all sorts of ways, and a wide-spread circulation of tracts.

I blessed God as I crossed the frontier that we were breathing the free air of a free country. In many respects this young kingdom of less than half-a-century, with its five millions of people, is a model country, enjoying a constitutional liberty and great material prosperity. The diversity between the flat north and the hilly manufacturing south is emblematic of the characters of the two races which inhabit them—the Flemish and the French. If a line were drawn from Gravelines, on the French coast, proceeding by Courtray and a little to the south of Brussels, to the eastern frontier between Liège and Maestricht, it would divide the Flemish (i.e., Dutch) speaking people of the north from the French-speaking people of the south. Another line from Courtray to Mons divides the Picardy French of the west from the Walloon French of the east.

It was to the latter people that we directed our way, in order to visit the interesting Walloon churches, as well as the Young Men's Christian Associations that have sprung from them. What joy it has given us to witness the progress and prosperity of so many small, but living and flourishing, French-speaking churches in this Roman Catholic country, and to visit some of their sixteen (mostly active and prosperous) Young Men's Associations along the line of railway from Mons to Verviers. But this happy result has been the fruit of long-continued toil, labour, and prayer for thirty-eight years. The British and Foreign Bible Society sowed the seed; their active, zealous, and enterprising agent, Mr. W. P. Tiddy, illustrated the value of an intelligent, timely, and prompt concurrence with the elements which, in the providence of God, were preparing for an evangelistic movement on behalf of Belgium. We must not omit to mention the large and generous aid of the Religious Tract Society of London, and its ready response to every demand made upon it.

As the result of the labours of the Belgian Evangelical Society (or Missionary Church), which during these many years has prosecuted this work amidst incoercible difficulties and opposition, owing to the fanatical character of the people, four Flemish churches and thirteen Walloon churches have been founded, having of course many annexes in connexion with them. It has nine colporteurs and Bible-readers. Sometimes a Bible-reader has held from one to two hundred meetings in the year. There is not so much Bible-burning now, but, on the contrary, in many places a better state of things, which permits of open-air preaching, and the young men of the Associations have afforded valuable aid in facilitating it by their courses of tract-distribution and singing of chants.

Belgium has given its quota of martyrs. The first two martyrs of the Reformation were burnt alive in front of the Town Hall of Brussels. This was followed by a host of others, till the life was stamped out, and it remained one of the most Papal of States.

The Walloons are amongst the most intelligent and industrious of the population. Their churches are mostly composed of working-people. Many of their pastors and evangelists have been foreigners. Switzerland has furnished a large contingent. The English have been the principal contributors of funds for the work. The British and Foreign Bible Society has about ten colporteurs supported by itself.

I have been enabled to visit several of these churches, and have received the warmest welcome. Some of them are in the habit of meeting together for the purpose of mutual edification and exhortation on one part of the Sunday. The young men have gathered around me with the most sympathetic interest. It is to these young Belgians that we must look for the future pastors, evangelists, and colporteurs of the country, and as a nucleus for the spread of Divine truth. This is the time for an aggressive work. How desirable it is for the revived Christians of our land to lend a helping hand in order to spread the flame of life and love! I bespeak a warm interest in their prayers. The names of Tiddy, Panchaud, and Anot will be long remembered as the great props of the work in Belgium. Having obtained the consent of the family of the late Cassar Malan, I have proposed to the Belgian Evangelical Society to reproduce many of his tracts—even, if necessary, in an abridged form. I shall be glad of any suggestions from your readers on this subject.

Yours affectionately in Christ,

GEORGE PEARSE.

TEXTS MISUNDERSTOOD.—II.

"AS THE TRUTH IS IN JESUS."—Eph. iv. 21.

The popular misunderstanding of these words has expressed itself in the well-known phrase "the truth as it is in Jesus," which is commonly supposed to mean gospel truth, as opposed to error of man's devising; and as a convenient mode of stating this no one can object to the expression.

But it is not the meaning of the text, to understand which we must go back to the verses preceding.

"But ye have not so learned Christ, if so be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus, that ye put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man," &c.

It is a practical exhortation to consistent Christian walk, and in stating what that walk should be the Apostle uses language which was probably better understood in those days when the first lesson in the school of Christ (baptism) conveyed it to the eye as well as to the ear. The putting off the old man and the putting on the new are therein set forth not merely as states to which it is desirable to attain, but as facts true of the believer in Christ, his dying having been judicially the death of the old man, and his rising the birth of the new.

This, the grand foundation-truth of all Christian practice, is what seems alluded to in these words, which could not be more literally rendered than by "as is truth in the Jesus,"—as is truth in the person of Jesus,—and though not as yet fully realized in the persons of believers, yet to be aimed at practically in their walk now, and to be fully perfected in the glory hereafter.

Thus we have a motive as well as a power. A motive to put off the old man, and put on the new: because Christ, by his substitutional death to sin, "brought to nought" the old man, and became Himself the life of the new. And his love should constrain us to "live not to ourselves, but to Him who died for us, and rose again."

A power to put off the old man and put on the new, for we are not originating a hopeless task beyond our strength, but following out a course already accomplished in the person of our Head. Well may we claim from Him the power to work in us that which He has already in his own person judicially effected for us.

"As the truth is in Jesus" is, then, a concise way of expressing that the believer's walk rests not upon the uncertain basis of possible attainments, but upon the sure ground of facts which the finished work of Jesus has already effected. We are to put off and put on that which has already been "put off" and "put on." The parallel passage in Colossians iii. 8-12 is very interesting and instructive; we read in verse 8, "put off," and in verse 12, "put on." But between the two come verses 9 and 10, "Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, . . . and have put on the new man." What is here more fully expressed is that which in our text is so concisely condensed in the words, "as the truth is in Jesus."

FOR THE YOUNG.

LEE GIM, THE CHINESE CONVERT OF SAN FRANCISCO.

It was but four years ago that he came to San Francisco from his native Canton, and but sixteen months since he became a convert to Christianity, and a member of the Presbyterian Mission Church of this city. It was only on the 18th of last April that he was seen in the Chinese Sunday-school of Trinity Church, bidding farewell to the superintendent and his wife. He was on the eve of starting to Philadelphia, full of energy, buoyant with enthusiasm, and avowing his purpose to do whatever his hands found to do in the service of the Master.

The following Friday Lee Gim was stricken suddenly and fatally in the very dawning of his young manhood's promise. The Chinese physicians had no sooner pronounced his case hopeless, than the poor heathen sought to aid his last struggle with the fearful noises and hideous jugglery peculiar to their Joss worship.

"I don't want to die here. Please take me to the Mission House," pleaded the dying youth. His wish was acceded to, and no sooner did he find himself within the familiar room, surrounded by loving faces, and the tenderest nurses, than he exclaimed, "Home—home—Jesus—home."

"Never," said Mrs. Condit, the missionary's wife, "did I witness a passing away so calm, so conscious, so triumphant. Around him were gathered the members of the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association, to whom his broken exhortations to cling to and follow Christ were continuous. As I stood rubbing his arm, which seemed full of pain, he laid his right hand upon his heart, saying, 'No pain here, full of Jesus. I die, but I am not afraid. I go to heaven.'

"As the last moments approached he bade each one a smiling 'Good-bye,' and, with the words 'Going home to heaven' upon his pale lips, passed into the higher life of the redeemed. It was not death, but transition."

At the funeral the small chapel was crowded with Chinese, while a few—how few—sympathizing friends and teachers were grouped to the one side. An odour of flowers was our first greeting. They wreathed the slender pillars, they drooped from brackets, they lay upon the pages of the Holy Book, while snowy lilies and pink daisies adorned the central front of the desk. Printed slips in Chinese characters, containing two verses of Lee Gim's favourite hymn,—

"There is a happy land," were distributed. There was a quiet in the little chapel peculiarly impressive to those who had almost daily witnessed in the streets of San Francisco the meaningless orgies of a heathen funeral.

At a signal from one of their number all arose, as the polished casket, covered with floral emblems, was borne in by four of Lee Gim's associates and set down, almost on the very spot where one week previously his head had bowed as he partook of the Lord's Supper.—Missionary News.

MISSION SERVICES AT CAPE TOWN.—We are favoured with an account of special services at Trinity Church, Cape Town, in July last, the mission preacher being Rev. Charles Hole, assistant minister (lately assistant to Rev. W. Haslam at Curzon Chapel, Mayfair). "Every afternoon, at three o'clock," says our correspondent, "Mr. Hole invited any who wished to speak to him to meet him in the vestry. The first afternoon, notwithstanding a pouring rain, six young persons came, five of whom had found the Saviour the previous day. They had been in an anxious state of mind for some time, but on Sunday they came to a decision to be on the Lord's side. The sixth came again on Wednesday, when her countenance was radiant with joy, she having, in the meantime, taken Jesus as her Saviour. The concluding service lasted four hours. The church was crowded, and at the evening communion the number of communicants was increased nearly four-fold. It was a most solemn and blessed season. Many interesting facts might be recorded, and as a fruit of the mission several have been led to offer themselves as Sunday-school teachers and district visitors. I have to request your earnest prayers on behalf of a similar mission to be held (D.V.) before the close of the year, in St. Peter's Church, Mowbray, when Mr. Hole has kindly consented to become the mission preacher."

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 1.

FIRST HOUR.—"THE CLOSET."

AFTER the singing of Paraphrase 65, commencing at the 6th verse, and a prayer, the Chairman, Dr. ANDREW BONAR, spoke as follows:—

In Mark i. verse 35, we have our Lord showing us in his life what He enjoined in his teaching. Christ was as real a Man as any one now here, but the Man without sin; and so, just as truly as He drank water out of our wells for his bodily thirst, He for his human soul drew water out of the wells of salvation, and that in our own way—by prayer, by meditation, looking up to the Father. So He went a great while before day out from the place where He was staying to be alone, and there continued in prayer.

How interesting it would be in our thoughts to follow Him. I think that night He must have spoken to the keeper of the gate of the town to let Him out early in the morning; and then, sleeping on the housetop, he could rise without disturbing anyone. It was quiet work with Him. He walks down that stair, and then out at the gate, and He goes through the fields; the stars were still shining, for it was "a great while before day." And so, dear friends, we have this lesson: we must be alone, alone with God, meditating, pleading with Him.

Notice the phraseology in the first of the texts indicated on the programme. When I read that verse carefully over, the "Shut thy door" sent me back to the Old Testament; and I think the Master had his eye on this passage, which I wish to bring before you. In 2 Kings iv. 3, 4, you will find my allusion—"Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; borrow not a few. And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee, and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full." And, as we know, it came to pass as the Lord had spoken. I think that Old Testament incident may beautifully teach us closet-dealing with God; and if you read on, you will have another incident of closet-dealing with God in Elisha raising the dead. May I not say that this should be the manner of our dealing with the Lord? and just as in this case the woman was to bring many vessels, all of them empty, so is it with us. We go into our closet, and there we spread before God our wants—our empty vessels; we hold up our empty souls, and the Lord begins to pour in the oil, and He pours on and on as long as we stay with Him, and it is only when there is no other vessel that He stays his hand. Shut to thy door, then, and see if it will not be with you in the same way.

She got all she needed—her debt paid; she got a deal more. "Live on the rest!" But that is not all; for the Lord says, "So do, and your Father which seeth in secret Himself shall reward you openly." There is a present result, and every believing soul here can tell this as his experience; but there is also this future acknowledgment, and we are led on to that passage in Malachi iii., where we are told that "a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name; and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." This will be the open reward.

But let me stand still for a moment, and put it to the consciences of all here—Have you had such a closet-meeting with God to-day? Did you shut to the door, and bring out the empty vessels? Have you such meetings every day? Why are we poor, if we are bringing our empty vessels, and taking away more than suffices to pay our debt? You may be a real Christian man or woman, but do you plead in the closet? You may come to all the prayer-meetings, but you cannot leave out this without irreparable injury. Some time ago, in preaching upon Moses being forty days and nights on the Mount, I said that of course we could not get forty days and nights to ourselves, but that we could get forty minutes. I asked how many communicants took forty minutes a day for communion with God? I found, at any rate, one conscience that was awfully stunned by that inquiry. It seemed to throw a searching light on a lifetime's neglect. Because of so many public meetings and so much Christian fellowship we neglect fellowship with the Father. Oh! come into the closet and shut the door, and speak with Him, and the answer will surely come.

Mr. MACLEOD WYLIE said he thought it was one of the innumerable illustrations of the wisdom of God in his Word, that while we read the exhortation to enter into the closet and shut the door, we read also of Christ going not to a closet, but into a solitary place. For there were some soldiers, for instance, and sailors, who had no closet to resort to. Perhaps the fact was related for the sake of such.

Dr. MACKAY, of Hull, remarked that sometimes we ask and receive not, because we ask amiss, and that we do that when we want to consume the blessing on ourselves. Let them ask, seek, or knock as hard as they pleased, but if they asked amiss or selfishly they would not receive. He admired the perfection and all-sidedness of Scripture, for while he was sure that the greatest blessing he ever got came before he even called, yet at other times it did not till he had knocked hard and repeatedly. The point was, not to ask amiss or selfishly. Observe the Lord's Prayer; after a succession of Thys we come just to one us—"Give us this day our daily bread." He had tried to index all the unanswered prayers of God's people in Scripture. Paul, the great praying one, was unanswered when he prayed for himself about the thorn in the flesh, but the Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends, not for himself. The motives of prayers prayed amiss were not only casual ones; they were motives which puffed up self. Prayers were often answered upside down, because presented wrong-side up.

The first hour concluded with the singing of Psalm v.

SECOND HOUR.—"OLD DISCIPLES."

Dr. ANDREW THOMSON, of Edinburgh, was Chairman, and gave the opening address, basing his remarks on Acts xxi. 16, and Ps. xcii.

He said he wished specially to speak not to old men merely, but to those who had chosen Jesus in early life, and who, therefore, had received the highest benefits of religion, had got the true sweetness out of human life, even in this present world. "My aged brethren," he said, "you have taken the wise part. You have not given the cheat to Satan, and reserved the bras for God. The consequence is, you have already received, as Jesus promised, a hundredfold."

Old disciples could speak with special authority on many points. They could give powerful testimony of the pleasantness of the Christians life; that in the keeping of God's commandments there is great reward. They could testify that the representations given in Scripture respecting the character of the world and of human nature corresponded with the experience of a long life. They could speak of deliverance from trouble and temptations. They could tell of the power of prayer, and bear witness to the fact that God was one who keeps his covenant word. They could corroborate the words of Joshua, "And ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof."

There were many signs in the case of old disciples that the end was approaching, but there was not a single saint who repented the choice he had made, or that he had made it in his early days. Theodore Beza, in his last will and testament, used these words:—"I thank God for early conversion, and next to early conversion I thank God for early communion." It was a remarkable circumstance that worldly men, when at the gate of death, never spoke well of the world they were leaving; while, on the other hand, no Christian, when he was dying, ever spoke ill of Christ or his service. Each dying saint seemed to vie with his brother in praising God's grace and love. The great Polycarp, when at the stake at Smyrna, said to one who asked him to recant, and thus save his life—"Eighty and six years have I served Christ, and He has never done me anything but good all my life; shall I renounce my Master in my old age?" When the holy Herbert was lying on his last bed, he called for his lute. He laid hold of it, and, with feeble hands, he struck its chords, saying that "Every string should have an attribute of Christ to sing." Most striking testimony, too, was given on this point by Philip Henry, the father of the well-known commentator.

Old disciples were sometimes tempted to think that their usefulness was almost gone. They could not make a greater mistake, especially if they were in vigorous possession of their faculties. How much good could old saints do? A vast amount, by simply telling the younger ones the facts of their ripe experience. With what holy ingenuity did Jacob weave spiritual truth into his answer to the simple question of Pharaoh—"How old art thou?" He gave an answer from which any minister might preach half-a-dozen sermons. Aged saints could do good in many ways. As the veteran soldier who has fought in many battles could teach the young soldier how to handle the sword, so the veteran soldier of Christ could teach the young ones how to use the sword of the Spirit. The aged Jacob, when on his dying bed, could look back on his past experience, and tell perhaps the young Benjamin how there was a time when he had said "All these things are against me"; but he could now say that these very things had been for him. How much an old Christian could do by simply being cheerful, showing that when his sun was setting it was shining the brightest! He can also glorify God by endurance. In the 9th chapter of Acts we find mention of two saints of God. One of them is Aeneas, an old saint who had kept his bed for eight years, sick of the palsy. Another was Doroas, who, by her nimble needle, made garments for the orphans of Joppa. Suppose an angel had looked down on these two disciples, would he have viewed with the greatest complacency the patient endurance of the palsied Aeneas, or the nimble activity of the lovely Doroas? Surely it would be impossible to say which. If a little child sending up its prayer from the closet may move the hand that moves the universe, may not the old and feeble saints be Aarons and Hurs holding up the hands of those who are fighting the battles of the Lord?

Sometimes when one looks at his advancing years and feels his infirmities he is tempted to say, like Barzillai, that he can get little enjoyment out of this world any longer. "Can I hear any more the voice of singing men and singing women?" (2 Sam. xix. 35): Let us look at the brighter side of it. Remember that these indications of failing and decaying strength are the harbingers of home. We are nearing heaven. "Now is your salvation nearer than when ye believed." When Columbus drew near to the new world he looked for some signs of its approach. By-and-by singing-birds began to show themselves and to alight on the ship, and flowers of an unknown kind began to float around the vessel; he interpreted these signs as telling him that he must be almost in sight of land. So these frailties of our bodies, when we advance in life, are just the singing-birds come from the heavenly world to tell us that home is near. They are the sounds of the chariot-wheels of the Great Master who is coming to take us to be with Himself.

Is there an old man here yet not a disciple of Christ? John Foster once said, "How dreary would old age be without the atonement of Christ!" How dreary must be the old age of that man who has never believed in Christ! Think of it! Very near the end, and yet no one to lead you through the dark river; no loving hand to welcome you when you have passed over! Hear the voice of this inviting Saviour, even at the eleventh hour, "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

After some remarks by Captain Hull,

Rev. Mr. MACGREGOR (Dundee) said he had been told that the palm-tree bears its finest fruit when it is a hundred years old. So there is a mellowness, a richness, a depth, and sweetness about the graces of old age. Caleb was forty years old when he went west with the others to spy out the land. This same Caleb could say, forty-five years after that, "I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; as my strength was then, so is my strength now for war, both to go out and to come in." Grace is like fine wine, the older the better. It is like a river—onward is its great characteristic, onward, onward to the ocean. Last year I was up in the bras of Glenlyon, and saw one of the little streamlets that swell into the Tay. How narrow it was! With the point of his stick the shepherd could almost divert its course, but it gets broader and broader, until at last it can bear navies on its bosom. The young disciple is apt to be narrow, and to think that if a man is of another sect he can hardly have the grace of God. But when he gets old he is like the Christian of whom I heard in the Highlands the other day. He used to keep open house for God's children at the communion season, and he said, "My house will accommodate only thirty-two, but I can embrace the whole brotherhood of faith in my arms."

Then, old grace is deeper, and, like the river, it is calmer too, and by-and-by becomes merged in the ocean. I do not know exactly where the sea, down at Dundee, begins, and where the river ends. So it is with the Christian who lives on the borderland; he is like that aged saint who, when dying, said, "Do not weep, although I am to change my place, I am not going to change my company."

Several "old disciples," at the invitation of the Chairman, gave their testimony to the blessedness of the Christian life, and the interesting and profitable hour was closed by Mr. Balfour, of Edinburgh, and Mr. McGill, of Glasgow, who respectively made some remarks on the temptations peculiar to—the old Christian, and the necessity of their cultivating the society of younger disciples, giving them the benefit of matured experience.

Before the commencement of the next hour's conference, Major Cole, with his wife and daughter, sang "Come away to Jesus" and "Rock of Ages," thrilling the hearts of all present.

THIRD HOUR.—"YOUNG BELIEVERS."

The Chairman was the Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the Tolbooth Church, Edinburgh, the subject being "Young Believers."

After prayer and some remarks of a preliminary nature, the Chairman introduced the following three points:—1. What we young converts are. 2. What we have to learn. 3. What we have to do.

I. What we are.—We are young believers. Let us not forget that. The saddest thing in social life to me is not when I see a childish-old man, but an old-man-ish child. I would not lose the happy days at my mother's knee, or the glad days at my parish school, or the memory of those days, so generous and free from the subtle ills of life. Young believers, let us rejoice in the fact that we are young believers, delighting in milk, delighting in the warm glow of a young love that only a young believer can know. And let us see that we don't go away up to the great white throne without bearing the blossoming as well as the fruit-bearing of the Christian life.

2. What have we to learn?—Take care that we learn well our standing in Jesus Christ. I would not have you lay again those elements which the Apostle speaks of in the Hebrews, but take care that your foundation is well laid, so that you may realize that you are not on the outside ledge of the Rock of Ages, but right in the centre, and that the surf of trials cannot touch you. For many a day you will study Bonar's "Way of Peace," and "Marshall on Sanctification," and those books that deal with the elements; but these are only the foundations. Then we have to learn—

I. To study self.—The man whose eye is ever on himself the poet says, "doth look on one the least of Nature's work," but the man whose eye is never on himself will never have it on his blessed Saviour.

II. To study the Saviour.—Just the old sinful man here and God there, deformity here and beauty there, folly here and wisdom there, nothing at all here and all in all there. But there is another thing—

III. The link between myself and my Saviour—namely, sanctification.

3. What we have to do.—I have no hard and fast rule for what you ought to do. Is it possible that you Christian ladies and gentlemen, you young men and women, can look on the life of Jesus of Nazareth and say, What have I to do in the world? Can you look at what Jesus has done, and say so? Is it possible that you can go out into the streets and see the need there, and say so? Oh! young believers, let us this day lay ourselves on the altar of consecration.

[At this point Mr. Mudie read the following telegram, just received from Captain Moreton, Noon Prayer-meeting, Mildmay Conference Hall, London: "May the Lord's presence be felt, and the power of the Holy Ghost. We are praying for a blessing on your gathering." At a subsequent stage of the day's proceedings it was stated that a message of fraternal thanks and encouragement had been despatched.]

Dr. Mackay, of Hull, then spoke: The great characteristic spoken of in John's First Epistle in connexion with the fathers is: "I write unto you fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning"; and then, going into detail to the young men and babes, he has nothing further to say to the fathers. I have studied that expression for several years now. What does it mean? It certainly speaks of something to which we younger believers must look forward. This is the crown of our Christianity. I have thought that the same difference exists between young and old believers as between cast-iron and wrought-iron. A wrought-iron Christian is more to be depended upon.

If you read Romans v. you will observe that we all start with peace through our Lord Jesus, and all rejoice in hope of the glory of God; but then we come to the foundry. "We glory in tribulations." It is often said "You must endure what you can't cure." Not so the Christian; he glories in tribulations. Tribulation—there goes one of the hammers—worketh patience; and patience—there is another hammer—worketh experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the Son of God is shed abroad in our hearts." At the end they are wrought-iron Christians.

Young believers are very anxious to rise higher, and higher, and the ambition is a good one if rightly directed; but I have been preaching lately on the lower Christian life: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and"—high & no, "lowly." Major Ross, Aberdeen, mentioned that he had met several young persons who, soon after conversion, expressed doubts as to whether they were really converted at all. To one making this complaint to him he had said: God's truth has come in, and it has brought light and has shown you that you are much more deserving hell than ever you thought you were. Be encouraged, for if you had not that opinion of yourself you would be on the wrong road.

Lord Kintore congratulated young believers on their great and newly-found possession. He directed the attention of the meeting to the fact that our Lord took his disciples straight from the desert to the marriage feast. So, he said, young converts are taken from the desert of conviction to the marriage feast of the Lamb, and of union with Christ. He thanked God that Major Ross alluded to the subject he did, and had pressed the necessity of a sense of sin, though not such a sense of sin as would lead to despair. He said that this was a great time for teaching. Everyone was teaching. The old had a right to teach, and the young thought it was their special mission. The young must learn to be silent, and that it is blessed for them to sit at the feet of Jesus to be taught by Him. They must cultivate the proprieties of the divine life. He counselled young men to go to young men of the same age, and exposed to the same dangers. He concluded by reminding them of Dr. Guthrie on his death-bed. Who was it that cheered and comforted him then? It was his little grandchild.

After a few remarks from Dr. Robertson, of Newington, Major Cole, assisted by Mrs. and Miss Cole, sang the hymn, "The Lord will provide."

FOURTH HOUR.—"PRAYER-MEETINGS."

Rev. W. GRANT, Baptist minister, Edinburgh, in the chair.

Among the requests for prayer read by Mr. Mudie was one for Dundee, in connexion with the strike of millworkers.

The Chairman, in the course of an excellent opening address, said this was an essentially practical subject, and suitably followed up those that had gone before. If it was true, as Dr. Bonar had said, that there was no substitute for the closest to the individual Christian, it was equally true that there was no substitute for the prayer-meeting to the Christian Church. It was the natural instinct of the new man to pray, and the prayer-meeting was the natural outcome of life in the Church. In the days of Malachi, no doubt there was united prayer, as well as the prayer of the closet, and the model prayer was one for the prayer-meeting—"Our Father"; "Give us this day our daily bread," &c. It was well to come together for preaching and the study of the Word, but the meeting for believing, earnest prayer must always have a foremost place. The soul or the family without prayer, and the Church without a prayer-meeting, had got into the condition of the Laodicean Church, which said, "We have need of nothing."

It must be confessed that the prayer-meeting was the least satisfactory part of public worship in the present day. It was comparatively easy to conduct the more public service, but somehow or other the tone of the prayer-meeting was not what it ought to be. He had no fear of the pulpit being superseded by the press and the platform, or of the Church losing its influence if the prayer-meetings could possibly be made what they might, and what they ought to be.

It was difficult (continued the speaker) to say anything fresh on this subject. Most of those present were familiar with the wise and powerful suggestions on this point made by Mr. Moody, but there had been little attention paid to them. Even where there were well-aired places of worship, the prayer-meeting was often relegated to some close, ill-ventilated room, forgetting that foul air was a deadly enemy to living Christianity. More attention, too, should be paid to the service of praise at the prayer-meeting, from which, too often, the precentor and the choir were absent, leaving the singing to anybody or nobody. There ought to be variety in the mode of conducting the meetings, and some definite object always kept before the minds of those who took part. He thought, too, that young or new members received into the churches should be impressed with the duty and privilege of attending the prayer-meetings, as well as the Sundry services. There were numbers of people in the churches whom their friends would be astonished to see at the prayer-meeting, so seldom did they attend. Nothing ought to be allowed to interfere with our weekly gathering together for prayer, but too often Christian people were found going to lecture or to a party at the very hour when the prayer-meeting was being held. Mr. Grant closed with an exhortation to his brethren in the ministry to be as well prepared for the exercises of the prayer-meeting as for the services of the Lord's-day.

During the observations that followed, Dr. Andrew Thompson, while agreeing with a previous speaker in his deprecation of "preaching to God" in prayer, maintained that it entered into the very essence of prayer, not only to ask but to plead, quoting God's own promises, and appealing to Him as the prayer-hearing God. A great improvement might be effected in prayer-meetings if the simple, common-sense advices of Mr. Moody were universally adopted. He thanked God for them. He gave the following recipe for destroying a prayer-meeting: Let the minister be unpunctual in opening and closing; let the prayers be very long and vague; let the president speak twenty minutes when he has intimated that he will only take five; let the whole character of the address and the prayers be of a sombre kind; let it seem as if they were still under the Old Testament dispensation. Let these rules be carried out, and the prayer-meeting would rapidly decline. Adopt the opposite plan, and a great improvement would at once take place. At the time Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited Edinburgh he was mourning over the failure of his congregational prayer-meeting. He adopted Mr. Moody's rules, and, as the result, the prayer-meeting had increased fourfold, the interest in it showing no signs of abatement.

Rev. D. E. McNAB spoke of the value of daily prayer-meetings, and gave the history of a successful one commenced in Saltcoats by half-a-dozen young men, and now carried on daily at seven o'clock in the evening for the last two years. It was a rallying-place for all the young Christians, and they had experienced many precious answers to prayer.

District prayer-meetings were advocated by a speaker, after which

Dr. MACKAY told of a meeting for prayer exclusively, which had been established in connexion with his congregation at Hull on Monday evenings, and which they called a "family meeting." For eight years past it had been sustained most successfully, and was the largest weekly meeting of the congregation. He did not believe in trying to make or keep up a meeting by any forced means. In Hull they had not succeeded in holding a daily noon meeting, but a weekly noon meeting had been held for two years. The people came, not to make a meeting, but to get a blessing.

Another speaker having expressed his opinion, formed from experience, that at every prayer-meeting there should be a powerful exposition of some portion of Scripture, the hour closed with the singing of part of the 35th Psalm.

FIFTH HOUR.—"EVANGELISTIC WORK."

The fifth and last hour was allotted to the consideration of EVANGELISTIC WORK. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided, and gave the address which formed our first article last week. We wish we could communicate to all our readers the deep impression that Mr. Radcliffe's earnest and eloquent words created in the meeting. Most of all, we fervently hope that his appeals for the visitation of Scotland, and also for help in the various foreign mission-fields, may be speedily and largely responded to. If this were to result, the Perth Conference of 1875 would stand out as the brightest and most beneficial of them all. With reference to this question, Mr. Radcliffe writes as follows. We trust our Scottish friends will do all in their power to co-operate with our large-hearted and self-denying brother, and that a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit may accompany their united efforts:—

"There were two points of aggressive effort I pressed at Perth and am urging in Aberdeen for Scotland—viz., (1) The visitation of every house; along with (2) the united preaching of earnest ministers of all denominations and laymen in every town of Scotland between now and Christmas.

"I am glad to say the Young Men's Christian Association of York write me that they are hoping to get this second thing done there, assisted by Mr. Varley, and they hope to do the first also, and write for information.

"Such united preaching would be greatly helped by the visitation. The visitation could scarcely go on without it. Either without the other is incomplete if not lame. Thanks very much for your prayers. I now need them more than ever."

Mr. Radcliffe's address was followed by remarks from various speakers, the most noteworthy being those of Mr. McGill, Glasgow, who graphically described the work carried on there among the masses by means of the "Gospel Lurry."

After earnest prayer from Professor Simpson, the five hours' Conference was brought to a close.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 2.

SUBJECT: "COMMUNION OF SAINTS."

Morning meeting; 11 o'clock. Chairman, LORD POLWARTH. A summary of requests for prayer sent in, amounting to upwards of 100, was read by Mr. Mudie, and afterwards presented before the Lord by Rev. Mr. Wilson, Perth.

LORD POLWARTH said: In far-away countries I have sometimes come to a beautiful valley, and at the head of it I have caught sight of a lake. Coming from the hill-top you look down, and as you see the waters below, your first thought is, "How beautiful, how lovely!" You go a little further, and you find that what you saw first was just one little tiny corner of a great expanse of water. I thank God that in my short Christian life I have known something of Christian communion with fellow-Christians at home and abroad, but when called to speak upon this great subject to-day, I feel just as if I had been looking at one little corner of it. When I opened my Bible last night, the more I dwelt on the subject the greater it seemed to be. Oh! what tongue is going to describe this Christian communion? What tongue can tell you all that it implies? I prayed the Lord for light on the subject, and I was directed to this passage—Rev. vii. 9-17.

In these verses God draws aside the veil, and lets us see the perfect communion of the saints. You see that great company gathered together out of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues. What diversity; what differences there! Yet we find perfect union and perfect communion. Behold them there, gathered around one great centre—the throne of God and of the Lamb. They have one upon whom their hearts are unitedly set, one upon whom they gaze; there is one theme upon every tongue, one whose love is in every heart, one with whom they are occupied every moment; there is one absorbing centre of interest—Christ!

Observe the harmony there; not one jarring note, nothing to distract. We should try and place ourselves yonder by faith, and through the telescope of faith look at that great company. Think how different they were once; now all drawn together to one focus.

But I was thinking not only of the things in which they differ; but the Word of God brought before me many things which they have in common. The apostle asked, Who are these? I don't wonder at the question. What was the answer? "These are they that came out of great tribulation." Yes, tribulation is one of the very chief things which are common to all God's people. Looking around this great company here, how little do I know what your trouble is, and how little you know mine; but how sweet and blessed it is, that with all the diversities of our tribulation, and with the differences of our trials, we can all look up and say, "It is one hand that is smiting, one heart that is loving, one Father's heart that is welding us all together in the furnace of affliction." I say "all together," for tribulation is not merely to purify us individually, and apart one from the other, but to bring us closer together, to bind us all together, happy in the communion of Christian fellowship and love.

But there is something else common to the redeemed above. We are told that they all wear white robes. When you read the parable of the wedding feast in the New Testament, we are apt to let our thoughts be all absorbed in the man who was without a wedding garment; let us think on this, that the rest were all clothed with the same garment. What a wonderful company that must have been! all with a wedding garment on them. There are no exceptions in heaven, no spotted robes there; not one robe yonder having a stain or rent. They are all clad in the perfect righteousness of Christ. And we who have believed have got it here to-day. We are all in the same furnace, and clad in the same unsullied righteousness of Jesus. Will you weigh this garment by its worth, or beauty? Nay, will you not rather weigh it by what it cost?

But we are told of something even more precious than these two last things—the sacrifice of God's Son. On all the houses of Israel, on the night of the Passover, there was the blood. The blood was on every door-post, and on every redeemed soul in glory there is the blood, and on every redeemed soul on earth there is the blood.

What is to be the practical outcome of this? There should be far more love and sympathy amongst Christians. I don't know if you have dwelt much on a passage which is very dear to me—Malachi iii. 16, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard." That passage brings to me an example in the New Testament—I refer to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus: two Christians in the common bond of tribulation, both sorrowing, talking together about Jesus. What happened? Jesus drew nigh. Fellow-Christians, when you are talking together about Jesus, God will draw nigh to listen.

The thought that we shall soon be in heaven in the communion of the saints should be an additional stimulus to Christian activity and zeal.

We sometimes speak to the unconverted, telling them they may soon be in hell. But let us Christians remember that we may be in heaven very soon, and could we but place ourselves there now, how ashamed we should be that we have lived as we have lived, and spoken as we have spoken—ay, and that we have thought as we have thought towards one another.

I have only touched the very shore of the great subject of the communion of saints.

Professor SIMMONS, of Edinburgh, said he had in his hand a number of requests for prayer relating to God's work in China. He spoke of the guilt of this country in introducing the opium trade into China, and the impending political difficulty, as special reasons why we should offer prayer on its behalf. He also referred to the labours of Dr. Maxwell in Formosa, whose work had been the very romance of missions, and other missionaries to the Chinese. Earnest prayer was offered up for these special objects.

Rev. Mr. SCOTT MONCRIEFF resumed the subject of Conference. After a brief but comprehensive exposition of the 133rd Psalm, he said that the subject of union and communion among Christians was at the present time exciting the deepest attention throughout the whole Christian world. What efforts were being made by the Papacy to bind together by new links that God-denying and Christ-dishonouring system! The Rationalists, too, were calling on men to relinquish this and that doctrine, and be content to unite themselves together in the most superficial manner. All this showed how necessary it was for Christ's people to be more united than ever, since superstition and infidelity are both against them. We could not be too thankful to God for the union among the various sections of the Christian Church that had accompanied the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. They had done more to unite Christians in this country than anything else. Forty or fifty years ago, the gathering of so many Christians from different churches at the Communion-table of the Lord as would take place that afternoon would not have been dreamed of. We were beginning to discover that it was the Lord's table, and not man's; and surely nothing could be more pernicious than the idea that an ordinance which should especially unite Christians together should be made the cause of discord among them. He was prepared to break bread with anyone with whom he could pray.

After singing "Let us scatter seeds of kindness," Lord Kintore offered fervent prayer, making special reference to the Queen, the Royal Family, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, &c.

The closing address was given by Rev. David Russell, of Glasgow, who pleaded for more communion among Christians as a means of spiritual encouragement and mutual growth in the divine life.

Rev. Dr. Hutton returned public thanksgiving to God for mercies vouchsafed in connexion with the Conference, and besought the Divine blessing to rest on its deliberations. After silent prayer he pronounced the benediction, and the regular sittings of the Conference were brought to a close.

The attendance throughout was very large, the City Hall being well filled at all the day meetings, while the evangelistic services in the evenings were crowded to overflowing. On the first two days the weather was beautifully fine, adding greatly to the comfort of the proceedings; rain fell copiously on the last day, but it did not seem to interfere materially with the attendance, which was sustained to the last. It was truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and we feel certain many will look back to the Perth meetings of this year not only as a season of happy fellowship with kindred spirits, but as a time when their faith in God and his Word was strengthened, their love to Him deepened and purified, and when they received an additional stimulus to "work while it is called to-day."

LADIES' MEETINGS.

The first meeting was held on Tuesday, Aug. 31, from three till five. After the requests for prayer had been presented, the subject considered was Jesus as the Finisher of our faith. The meeting was not so full as usual, as more than one meeting was going on during the time, but the Lord's presence was much realized, and Jesus was laid hold of as the Finisher of faith in our families, work, and districts. Has He begun faith in the souls whom He has laid on our hearts, then results lie with Himself as the Finisher thereof. The individual history will not only come out to the praise of his glorious grace, but also the family history and the history of the whole Church on earth. What a motive to our now taking a fresh start in faith, prayer, and labour for the continuance of his work in the United Kingdom! A lady who had been engaged in the London work read a thrilling little narrative of it, and two others followed on the same subject. A sister from Paris prayed, also one from Canada, and thanksgivings ascended.

The next meeting was on Thursday evening, after the united communion. That communion was like to the watch-night service in Edinburgh at the beginning of the work there. The door of heaven was not only opened upon us, but has remained so since. Not only the body of the church, but the galleries, were crowded with communicants. Several ministers took part. Rev. James Robertson, of Newington, gave the first address. The ladies met under a deep sense of that foretaste of heaven enjoyed at the table. Miss Maitland, of Edinburgh, presided. Two ladies from Paris spoke, with many others.

The last meeting was held on Friday, from 11 till 1.30. By that time many of the friends were scattering over the country, but the place was full, and Mrs. Brown Douglas took charge of the requests, and many passages were brought before us regarding the inheritance to come, and all the prepared goodness that is stored up for us in Christ during the pilgrimage here. Miss Sturrock, from South Africa, showed Scripture and other papers written by the young people who so lately were sunk in heathenism, and specimens of their needlework were handed round. A letter was read from Mrs. Gordon, of Park-hill, who had been with us in our former meetings, and her work on the Continent was remembered in prayer at our opening meeting.

AMERICA.—Our brother R. Pearsall Smith is spending the season quietly by the seaside in America. He is better, but is compelled, under medical orders, to refrain from much mental effort, which produces renewed congestion. The severity of the attack is not, it is hoped, so great as the former ones of a similar kind, twelve and five years since.

REMISSION OF PENALTIES ACT.—The Lord's-Day Observance Society have issued a circular letter, from which we extract the following:—"The passing of the 'Remission of Penalties Act' has been followed at once by the reopening on Sundays of the Brighton Aquarium for money payment, with the accompaniments of drinking-aloon and musical performances. It is to be feared that the directors of the Aquarium have not taken this step without some good reason for trusting that, under the new Act, they will be protected in their contempt of law by the Home Office remitting any and every penalty which may be imposed on them by the law courts in accordance with the statute 21 Geo. III., c. 49. Should the recent judicial decisions be set at nought, or should they be converted into a solemn farce, by all penalties under the Georgian statute being remitted to the offenders, a very severe blow will have been dealt at the supremacy of law, evil-doers will be encouraged to pour contempt both on the law of God and the law of the kingdom, and the floodgates will have been opened to very serious aggression on the sacredness of the Lord's-day. Under the circumstances of the case, and in view of the evils which are sure to follow on a free application of the 'Remission of Penalties Act' to offenders against the Statute 21 Geo. III., c. 49, it becomes necessary that very earnest entreaties should be addressed to the Right Hon. the Home Secretary, not in any way to countenance the directors of aquaria or of other places of amusement in their determination to turn the Sunday into a day for trading purposes, but to meet any such attempts on their part by limiting the application of the Remission Act to cases in which the law may have been broken in ignorance, or in which there is an evident attempt to enforce the law for selfish or vexatious ends. It should be remembered that the statute in question is the only one under which aquaria and all places of amusement are closed against admission for money payments on the Lord's-day, and also that the Lord Chamberlain's prohibition of theatrical performances on that day has no statutory or binding force, except by reason of this statute; so that any action of the Home Office which would tend to weaken it is calculated to expose the Lord's-day to be trampled on by every selfish and grasping person who may be ready to tread down obstacles which he regards as opposed to his personal advantage. Public opinion strongly expressed may suffice to avert the threatened danger. Letters on the subject should therefore be poured in at once from all parts of the country, and from all kinds of persons, to the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, the Home Secretary, and to the Right Hon. B. Disraeli, the Prime Minister; and prayer should be made without ceasing to the Lord of the Sabbath for the preservation among us of all existing defences of his holy day."

"LORD, HOW IS IT?"

(JOHN. XIV. 22.)

Not to the world, Thou blessed Lord,
Dost Thou thy wondrous beauty show;
The fragrant sweetness of thy Word,
Thy saints, and only they, can know.
To us thy love Thou hast revealed,
And raised our thoughts and hopes on high;
To us thy loveliness unveiled;—
Oh! blessed Jesus, tell us why!

What have we done that Thou shouldst thus Bring heavenly mysteries to our sight?
What hast Thou seen in worms like us,
That Thou shouldst e'er in us delight?
From yonder dazzling throne above
Thou camest down to bleed and die:
To show to us the Father's love!—
Oh! blessed Jesus, tell us why!

Oh! wondrous love, that Thou wilt greet
Us with thy presence here below,
Till, listening to thy converse sweet,
Our burning hearts with love o'erflow!
Yes, Thou our drooping souls dost bless,
And healing streams Thou bringest nigh;
Dost bind our wounds with tenderness;—
Oh! blessed Jesus, tell us why!

Mere wondrous still, that Thou shouldst come
In my poor heart, O Lord, to dwell;
To make with me the constant home,
And in me all thy love reveal!
Thou King of Heaven becomes my guest!
The God, whose glory fills the sky,
Makes his abode within my breast!—
Oh! blessed Jesus, tell me why!

Constrained by love, I love again;
Thy holy will desire to do:
Thine, only Thine, would I remain,
Till, pure in heart, thy face I view.
'Tis to thy love my all I owe—
My bliss on earth, my home on high.
Thy love has made me Thine, I know;—
Oh! blessed Jesus, this is why!

DR. CUMMING ON MR. MOODY'S
PREACHING.

SIR,—It may interest your readers to know that Dr. Cumming commenced this evening, in his chapel, from which I have just returned, a course of lectures to be continued on successive Friday evenings on the subject of Mr. Moody's preaching. He read aloud from the first sermon of the newly published collection numerous extracts, dilating, as he went along, upon some of the most striking passages. He (Dr. Cumming) spoke very highly of the character and work of the American evangelist. He had read (he said) with the deepest interest and attention the volume of his sermons which he held in his hand, and commended its style in terms of the very highest approbation, for energy, simplicity, and directness. He believed Mr. Moody to be a divinely-appointed and heaven-sent messenger, and his mission to have an important and intimate bearing on the fulfilment of our Saviour's memorable prediction, uttered from the Mount of Olives, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." The eager listening of the vast multitudes to hear the Gospel in this metropolis and elsewhere which has been seen of late, the Dr. holds to be one of the signs that we are near the close of this economy. He considers it as preparatory to the accomplishment of the prophecy already quoted, and the second and glorious appearing of the Son of Man, which, it is his opinion, is now imminent. This explicit testimony of Dr. Cumming to the genuineness of the work and mission of the now-world-famed evangelist is doubtless significant and is worth noticing.

I am, &c.,
GEORGE AUGUSTUS ALOOCK,
Curate of St. Paul's, Clerkenwell.

THE SCRIPTURE-READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

We publish the following extracts from a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Scripture-Readers' Society. It shows the deep need of such agency, as we know, in many localities, and it also shows how highly the services of a godly reader are appreciated by earnest Christians:—

"Sir,—At the request of some friends who, like myself, feel deeply the loss we are about to meet with in the removal of the readers who are about to be taken from us, I beg to acquaint you with the following facts:—

"For many years the readers have proved themselves in every way men worthy of their calling. They were with us at all seasons—in our sickness and our affliction—comforting in trouble and advising in difficulty, and at all times endeavouring to draw the soul into contact with the Saviour.

"They have ever met and confronted the enemies of truth in this country with a bold and unwavering yet humble front, and for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ have they hazarded their lives, and I have myself witnessed some of the mocking insult and danger which they have undergone in their efforts to win souls to Jesus, the only Saviour.

"No clergyman in this place can perform the services which they have performed. No clergyman, sir, ever seeks to do it. The majority of Protestants of all classes, even the clergy included, are indifferent; the Roman Catholics are opposed. We have our Bibles, thank God, but poor unlearned men need someone to help them: sometimes to read it, and I trust, sir, you will consider us in this matter; we shall not consider it a slight favour, and we shall be only too happy to minister carnal things to those who minister to us the spiritual. Cold indifference, or opposition, is everywhere almost, and the Scripture-readers are almost the only men of whom it might be said 'the love of God is shed abroad in their hearts.'

We may add, that the Secretary of the Scripture-Readers' Society, within the last month has received another communication from a clergyman in a large district where the knowledge of the Gospel has been spread to an almost unprecedented extent among the Roman Catholic population, attributing their enlightenment in a great measure to the patient labour of godly and earnest Scripture-readers.—Irish Church Advocate.

LIVERPOOL.—Our Park Services are held every Sabbath afternoon, at three o'clock; and I would ask the prayers of all God's praying Israel for a rich and abundant blessing upon our labours there, as we try humbly to scatter the good seed by the wayside. Thousands throng this park every fine Sabbath; nevertheless, many seem arrested and benefited under the preaching of the Word.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

CONFERENCE OF MEMBERS AT VICTORIA CHAPEL, BRISTOL.

A WELL-INFORMED correspondent sends us the following cutting from the Bristol Daily Press, and remarks "the present meetings has been throughout, as far as I am aware, in favour of Christianity."

According to the usual custom, a devotional meeting of the members and friends attending the British Association took place yesterday afternoon. The service was held in Victoria Wesleyan Chapel, Queen's-road, and there was a large attendance. Sir W. Elliott presided. Portions of Scripture were read by the Rev. H. Griffith, Professor Balfour, and Sir Henry Verney, and among a number of other scientific men and clergymen who were present and took part in the meeting were Professor Gladstone, Rev. Dr. Ginsburg, Rev. David Thomas, &c.

In the course of the service, Professor Gladstone said that infidel writers and infidel preachers have often maintained not only that science and revelation are opposed to each other, but that the majority of scientific men are unbelievers. So long as such a statement was confined to those he had named it could do no harm, for very little attention was paid to what they said. But when such a statement was repeated by Christian men and Christian women, and even by ministers from the pulpit, he thought it was likely to do much harm, more especially among thoughtful students. There were many indications that the fact was otherwise than many would have them believe; and as an instance he could refer to many of the leading men of the Association which at the present time was holding its meeting in this city. An able and thoughtful book had recently been published, bearing on the subject. It was of a statistical nature, and it gave the characteristics of a large number of the leading scientific men of the day. The author of it had addressed a sort of catechism to about two hundred gentlemen, and the results were given in the work to which he alluded. The answers with regard to what the writer termed "religious bias" were very satisfactory, and showed that scientific men stand as high, even probably higher, than those of most other professions. Their early religious teaching, it was shown, had very rarely impeded their scientific progress, but more generally had a beneficial effect. He wished, therefore, that those who made the statement that science and revelation were opposed to each other would remember this, and not continue to repeat that which had no foundation. Neither truth nor falsehood could be estimated by numbers, and he would have them bear in mind that it was not their profession but their consistent life and character that were most likely to influence those around them for good. The nearer they came to Christ, the sources of all good, the better would they be able to follow his example, and to make their own example a holy one.

Gen. Carrington, of the United States, was glad of the opportunity that had been afforded the members of meeting together that day. He felt it to be a great privilege. He made some remarks on prayer, and said that recently he had visited Westminster Abbey, and had also seen the tombs of Watts and Wesley, and he could not help thinking that the works of such men as these were grander monuments than any of those contained in that abbey, and that while that place would crumble away the works of such men as he had mentioned would live for ever.

"PROMISE MEETINGS."—Now that the days are shortening and the winter evenings are coming on apace, it may be of some interest to your readers to hear of how an evening was spent in Dublin lately in an enjoyable and profitable way. Each guest was asked to bring a written promise from God's Word; and a very agreeable time was passed in searching out the promises, and with the aid of our reference Bibles culling others from the inexhaustible store. As a friend said, it was like what it must be to overhaul the notes and gold at the Bank—treasure without end!—only these are ours, the gold could not be. We had some of the familiar "Sacred Songs" interspersed, and a couple of chapters read, with a prayer for God's blessing on our Promise Meeting; and I think all felt that our time had passed both pleasantly and profitably, and hope it is only the beginning of such gatherings amongst us. I am sure any who may be led by this account to try an evening spent in gleanings God's promises, will reap rich sheaves from "the handfuls of purpose" left for us by the Owner of the field, even Jesus, the true Boaz.

COMMERCIAL MORALITY.

At the last meeting of the Belfast Presbytery, the Rev. S. D. Burnside moved that the Presbytery request the Moderator of Assembly to issue a letter on his own authority to all the ministers of the Church, calling their attention to the great goodness of Almighty God in connexion with the present harvest, and asking them to set apart an early Sabbath as a day of thanks to God for this great mercy.

The Rev. William Johnston considered that, while it was perfectly right to acknowledge God for his goodness in giving them an abundant harvest, they should at the same time humble themselves under God's hand on account of the depressed state of trade and commerce. It was a time of great commercial depression, and he was sorry to say, a time when there was a fearful development of commercial immorality. In London, Manchester—in fact, wherever they looked, they saw the most gigantic frauds. The commercial world was getting into a state that was really alarming; and the way in which men of high position were trading in bills was equally alarming. Many honest and honourable traders were losers by the gambling transactions of others, with whom they were associated. Wherever they looked, whether on the Continent or America, they saw the same dishonourable dealing on the part of commercial men. It was a fearful fact that the only men who had kept themselves safe were those who had so little faith in commercial dealings that they did no business at all. The words that Christ used in characterizing the last days were realized in the present day—"When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Things had now come to such a pass that one hardly knew whom to trust in the community. Which they thought of the number of innocent and honourable men who had been compromised and humbled in relation to commercial transactions; they should humble themselves before God, and pray that in his providence He might revive the commerce of the country, and put it on a sounder footing. Therefore, while seconding the motion, he thought that the Moderator should be requested to ask their ministers and people to humble themselves in reference to the great commercial depression.

A correspondent of the Daily News is giving sketches of French preachers. In its issue of Friday last there is a column devoted to Cardinal Donnet, of Bordeaux, from which we make the following extract as appropriate to the subject of the foregoing:—

"He had also the talent of suiting his sermons to the comprehension of his hearers, so that he could address peasants almost in peasant language; and on one occasion he proved that he could reach the inner consciences of his congregation rather to searchingly. Being at Blais he announced that he would preach a course of sermons on the 'Dishonesties of Trade.' This promise having attracted all the tradespeople of the town, the Abbé Donnet proceeded to expose the tricks of grocers, and that with so much precision, and with the fullness of one so accurately informed, that all the retailers of colonial produce were dismayed. A hint from the Bishop stopped the sermons before M. Donnet could carry out his project of dealing with all the trades one by one; and, indeed, it was perhaps fortunate that the expenses were checked, for they might have had the effect of driving the victims to heresy."

A HAPPY HOLIDAY.—Having just returned from our holiday in Wales, I thought it might interest your readers to hear how such a time may be made much pleasanter and more profitable by working for the Master. Taking with me a good supply of Welsh "fly-leaves" which I had seen advertised in your invaluable paper, and also interesting ones in our own language, we used to carry them with us on all occasions. For instance, if during a drive the hill became steep and rendered walking necessary, often there was some stray man or woman on the road, miles from any large town, who was delighted to receive one, and often I have seen such stop on the road and commence reading. The best places of distribution we found to be small villages, where rarely any good reading could find its way; and thus, going from house to house, we thoroughly visited all the hamlets. We gave to many women who were washing in the open air. Several of these left off in the midst of their work, and stood with the soap-suds still on their arms to read the newly-given tract; others, again, read it aloud to some one else. I can never forget the pleasure which the gift of these little books seemed to give. I did not have one refusal during my month's holiday. If only all dear Christians would adopt this simple plan, I am sure that many weary, way-worn hearts in far-off hamlets would be made glad by the glorious light of the Gospel. The time of rest would be made doubly happy, and all the lovely scenes would look lovelier still if they were scattering the seed, and thus be doing something for our all-loving, all-tender Saviour, who has told us to go and teach all nations.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

On Tuesday, Rev. C. J. Whitmore spoke on "Work while it is Day," and related a case in which a young woman at an hotel had been led to Christ by his speaking to her within a few minutes of his arrival.

Mr. Hodder read the following extract of a letter from Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, who sailed in the Spain with Mr. Moody:—"We had a very pleasant and quick voyage. Mr. Moody was sick about half of the time, and only preached once, but had several Bible-readings in the cabin. One young man was converted by hearing the sermon, and was so happy he could not sleep all night, and had to get up and write Mr. Moody a note telling him of his new-found life and joy." Mr. Hodder also read from a letter from one of the stewards, detailing the steps which led to the conversion of a husband and wife, both hard drinkers, and which was but one of a series of instances which had come to his knowledge.

Mr. Paton, referring to some statements to the effect that the services of Messrs. Moody and Sankay had not reached the masses, said: "What is meant by 'the masses'?" If the work-house casuals and the frequenters of the low lodging-houses, then he granted that not many of them had been at the meetings; but of those who do not habitually attend any place of worship, from Belgravia to Ratcliff-highway, he could say from actual observation that the population of London had been fairly represented. He had caused one entire poor street at Camberwell to be visited, and it was found that only one person had not been to Camberwell Hall. He had also made a calculation of the number of meetings held in London, and of the attendance, and he found that if no person had been present more than once, not more than about 2,000,000 could have been accommodated, which would have been a little more than half the population of London. In daily contact with people in the trains and omnibuses, it was evident that a great impression had been made, and nearly every one had come to some conclusion, either for or against the movement.

On Thursday, Rev. H. J. Snell, of Hackney, gave an admirable address on the words "That I may know Him," and in the course of the meeting Mr. Hurditch said that one evidence of the reality of the recent work in London was the greatly increased attendance, as compared with the same period last year, at special evangelistic meetings in halls and tents. A few evenings previously, at a meeting of converts in the tent at Kilburn, many persons had risen to testify to their conversion there, amongst whom was one remarkable case of a father and several members of his family. The tent has now been removed to Gospel Oak Fields, where much good is being done.

Some attempts have been made to cry down this meeting, as well as the whole work with which it has been connected. A similar attack was made on Mr. Hammond, after he left England; but thousands of Christian children, the result of his work and of that of the Children's Special Service Mission, which grew out of it, are a sufficient answer.

DUBLIN.—Open-air evangelistic services have been held on the last three Sabbaths, at the rear of the Custom-house, by the Rev. William G. Campbell, M.A., the general missionary appointed by the Methodist Conference for the south and west of Ireland, with much encouragement and ground of hope. Hundreds of persons attended these services, and listened, apparently with respectful and reverent interest, to the things spoken. Happy day for Ireland when its inhabitants, like the Bereans of old, "search the Scriptures daily whether these things are so." Should not prayer, earnest, constant, believing, be made by the members of all evangelical churches that a great and effectual door of access may be "opened" to the general population of Ireland?

THE REV. W. E. BOARDMAN has been holding union conventions in America, similar to those at Oxford and Brighton in plan. The one at Framingham, near Boston, was held in the woods, in grounds purchased and specially prepared for such meetings. A large wooden tabernacle, open on the sides, in the centre seating two or three thousand persons, is surrounded by numerous small, cheaply-built houses, tents, and simple refectories, in which persons live with great advantage to health from the constant open-air life and lessening of their accustomed luxuries. It is very interesting to see persons gathering thus to a simple "Feast of Tabernacles" in the quiet scenes of nature. One of those present spoke of coming all the way from California, three thousand miles, to the meeting. Another spoke of the lasting blessing received through one of Morgan and Scott's little books, "The way to be holy," received in a meeting in San Francisco, and used with blessing in the Sandwich Islands. The meeting was calm and quiet, but deeply spiritual.

MAJOR COLE AT CHESTER.

The first meeting was held at 8 a.m. on Sunday, the 5th inst., in the Town Hall, when Major Cole gave an earnest and pathetic address that Christian workers should "that day consecrate themselves to the Lord." There was an afternoon meeting for the young men, and in the evening a Gospel address.

Every day through the week there was a noonday prayer-meeting, and an evangelistic meeting in the evening. The prayer-meetings were not well attended at first, and the evening meetings were crowded with Christians; this only stirred the Lord's servant who had come amongst us to greater earnestness and prayerfulness that the Christians should be spiritually quickened and revived to come to the noon prayer-meeting, and get the lapsed masses to come in the evening to hear of "Jesus and his love."

On Tuesday, the 7th inst., were the autumn sports, which brought many strangers to the city, and caused much drunkenness and iniquity. Like the races in May, they are deadening in their influence even on Christian workers, and most destructive to the morals and the well-being of the inhabitants. The soul of Major Cole was stirred within him when he saw the city given to sports. After this, out-door meetings were held, and many who seldom or never hear the Gospel were brought into the town hall.

The inquirers are but few yet, but we rejoice that Major Cole will stay another week. The first week we were only getting into the work, for the visit of our friend came upon us as an agreeable surprise, through the invitation of Mr. Arthur Potts, one of our city magistrates, who heartily throws his influence and energy into this good work. We hope that Christian ministers and workers will rally round him, and bear him up with their sympathy and prayers.

We are sorry that Mrs. Cole and Miss Cole were not well enough in health, though present in some of the meetings, to sing during the first days of their visit.

We are glad to see members of the Young Men's Christian Association aiding this movement with all their might, and coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Arrangements have been made to have the co-operation of the ministers and evangelists until the 18th inst., when Major Cole will be leaving to labour in Gloucester, where we pray "he shall go in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ," as he has come to Chester.

MILITIA MISSION, CANTERBURY.

In acknowledging the kindness of those who have responded to Col. Kirby's appeal on behalf of Mrs. Bainbridge's Canterbury and Militia Mission, it is thankfully stated that the Lord's work is going on most blessedly in that city. The missionary employed by her preaches occasionally three times on Sundays, and there is abundant proof that the word preached is with power. The open-air services gather from two to three hundred persons, and the Theatre fills well. Sometimes it is quite full. During the week, anxious inquirers of all classes call on the missionary at his house for spiritual conversation or instruction.

A band of Christian young men has been organized for house-to-house visitation in the worst localities of the city, and they enter on this important duty with earnest desire and humble dependence on God. Also a short moon-day prayer-meeting is now carried on three days in the week, at the room of the Young Men's Christian Association, in connexion with the mission work.

A great work is going on among the hop-pickers around Canterbury. Mrs. Bainbridge's missionary, accompanied by two gentlemen from Cambridge University, have gained permission to visit the hop-gardens belonging to the principal hop-growers round the city. Their mission work is greatly blessed. On some occasions men, women, and children, numbering from 300 to 400, gather round them and listen with deep interest to suitable and stirring addresses—many of them in tears; and at the close, after entreating them to come again, some are heard to say—"Bless God you ever came to Canterbury and preached in the theatre."

THE LONDON CORRESPONDENT of the Scotsman says that two expeditions from London to New Guinea are now being projected. One of them contemplates the establishment of a settlement on the eastern coast of the island, and it is said that many persons have expressed a desire to take part in the enterprise.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

THE Hon. G. H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, writes to us:—"You will have heard, ere this reaches you, of the safe arrival of our beloved brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey with their families, after a rapid and pleasant passage of nine days. It was my privilege, with some other brethren, to greet them on the deck of the Spain before she reached the dock. Our hearts were too full for utterance, and I simply exclaimed, 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' . . . They are both now resting in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, preparatory to their entering on their labours in October next, for the success of which much prayer is being offered up."

MR. SANKEY AT HOME.

The Newcastle (Pa.) papers of the 27th ult. contain long and interesting sketches of Mr. Sankey's welcome to his native town. The Opera House was filled to overflowing with an audience of nearly two thousand people. A pretty ode of welcome, composed for the occasion, was sung by Mr. C. C. Sankey (Mr. I. D. Sankey's cousin), and various addresses were given, the principal being one by Mr. Cyrus Clarke, a former Sunday-school teacher of Mr. Sankey's. Mr. Sankey briefly spoke in reply, giving some account of the work in which Mr. Moody and himself had been privileged to engage, and stated that he took the gathering as no expression of honour to himself, but as due to the Saviour. He sang several of his well-known hymns during the afternoon.

The Rev. Alexander Clark writes to us of the reception of Mr. Sankey. He says:—

"The people knew that Mr. Sankey, their neighbour and friend, was coming, and a large concourse met him at the Newcastle depot on Wednesday at twilight. His reception was hearty by all classes. His whole life up to his maturity and marriage had been spent in Newcastle and vicinity. Mr. Sankey is the same unassuming Christian gentleman that he was before his wonderful achievements in the Gospel. Always, from boyhood, an enthusiastic lover of music, a Sunday-school worker, and a sincere man, performing more than he professed, he wielded a gracious influence among all who knew him. We had a two hours' pleasant interview with Mr. Sankey, and heard from his own lips, in modest but very earnest words, the story of the great work in Britain. With tears, at the close of each narration of special incident or account of some marvellous meeting, his exclamation was simply this—'God was in it!' He seemed as much at a loss for explanations of what he had witnessed as any mere spectator, if a natural reason was attempted; but the conclusion, 'God was in it!' fully satisfied both reason and faith. Mr. Sankey is at home for rest."

THE ASSAM AND CACHAR MISSIONARY SOCIETY, which is a fellow-worker with the Anglo-Indian Christian Union, has appointed the Rev. R. T. Atkinson, of Glasgow, to itinerate among the English-speaking residents of the tea districts of North-Eastern India. He will leave for Calcutta about the end of this month.

THE SHROPSHIRE GOSPEL TENT was recently erected at Ludlow for fourteen days. Mr. George Heath, an evangelist from London, conducted the services, in which he was ably assisted by several local lay workers. Notwithstanding the wet weather, the nightly attendance was encouraging; and on the two Sunday evenings the tent was crowded to overflowing. A children's afternoon service was also given, and united prayer-meetings held early on the Sunday mornings and twice a week at noon. It is believed that great good has resulted.

COLCHESTER.—For some time past a number of Christian soldiers in the garrison here have held a prayer-meeting on three mornings of the week. These men, being desirous that many more of their comrades might be brought to the Saviour, invited a considerable number to a tea-meeting, on Friday evening, in the library room of the garrison. After an address by Mr. W. Forbes, several of the soldiers present rose, and urged their companions to come to Christ. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember, in prayer, Miss Daniell's work here, at Aldershot, and elsewhere?

TENT SERVICES AT WEST WELLOW, WILTS.—The Lord has already answered prayer on behalf of the effort put forth here in his name. Large gatherings attend those services nightly, and an evident awakening in several persons by the word spoken. Last evening the whole congregation, with the exception of two, stayed to the after-meeting, which was accompanied with the Lord's presence, the tent being full, many exclaiming, "It is good to be here." These meetings, following on those which were held in Cadnam, Hants, are most cheering to those Christians who have aided in this movement, and are an encouragement to those who would labour in a similar work. The Christians friends who were the promoters of these services take this opportunity of publicly acknowledging the kindness and liberality of the Evangelization Society, 57, Charing-cross, in supplying these dark villages with such men as G. Hefford and C. Edwards, who preach a full, free, and present salvation.

THE GOSPEL FOR "THE COMMON PEOPLE."

MY DEAR FRIEND,—It is a good sign when "the common people" are not only willing to hear the Gospel, but hear it gladly. In the South of London there are many faithful preachers of the Gospel, but none more suited to catch the ear of the people than Ned Wright. I have taken a deep interest in his work, and have been intimately acquainted with it now for some years. As one of his referees, I feel deeply concerned at the present moment with regard to his work in the future. During the summer he has been preaching in a large tent capable of holding about 1200 persons, which at times has not been sufficiently large to accommodate the people who have thronged to hear him. He has been instrumental in reaching multitudes who otherwise might never have been gathered together, and the work of conversion has been most remarkable, especially since the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to the neighbourhood. The cold weather will soon be approaching, and the only available building is one not capable of holding more than a third of his ordinary congregation. It is very desirable, therefore, that a simple structure should be erected that will accommodate about 1000 persons. I know that the liberality of Christians interested in evangelistic work has been severely tested of late; but, notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary, eternity alone will reveal the glorious work which has been accomplished. Among the many lessons which the recent revival has taught us is this—that a tremendous work yet remains to be done, and happy will they be who in any way can help it forward. I shall be exceedingly thankful if those whom God has blessed with the ability to give money should be led to assist liberally towards the erection of a "People's Mission Hall" for South London. I will gladly take charge of any contributions, and will see that great economy is observed in expenditure. Donations will also be thankfully received by my excellent co-referees—Mr. Eneas Dawson, Mr. Robert Paton, and Mr. F. K. Glover.

Yours very sincerely,

27, Paternoster-row, Sept. 11, 1875.

M. H. HONDER.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

INVITATIONS AND PROMISES: SHORT READINGS, WITH A SELECTION OF HYMNS. By G. S. Macintosh.—One advantage of these well-selected readings is the large-sized type, which renders them available for the sick and aged.

SAMUEL THORNE, PRINTER. By S. L. THORNE. Stock.—A second edition of a narrative of devoted life and labour of one of the early preachers of the Bible Christians in Cornwall.

PSALMS OF LIFE. By SARAH DOUDNEY. Houston.—Most of these life-poems have already appeared in various periodicals; and those who have been cheered and helped by them will be the first to welcome them in a more permanent form. They are worthy of being thus gathered up, and the book will be a welcome present to many a tried one, and useful to many an untried one.

FOUR YEARS' CAMPAIGN IN INDIA. By WILLIAM TAYLOR. Hodder and Stoughton.—Those who have read "Californian Life Illustrated," and "Christian Adventures in South Africa," will hail this new book not only with expectation of interesting and profitable reading, but with assured anticipation of wise counsel, the result of a most remarkable and wide-spread experience. We only notice at present the fact of publication; in our next we shall give some extracts.

SOME SERIALS.

DR. WYLIE'S HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM (Cassell), of which the tenth monthly part is before us, relates, in stirring language, a history never more important to be known than at the present day. We also note that CASSELL'S HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES is richly illustrated, and will form a handsome and cheap addition to our libraries. GOLDEN WORDS (Macintosh), with a superabundance of semi-religious novel, has, besides other useful papers, a good series of articles on Scripture characters, by Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton. WOMAN'S WORK (Partridge) is as replete as ever with matter in which precept and narrative, exhortation to work and narrative of work done, are wisely commingled.

THE COMING STRUGGLE.—In the struggle that looms dimly in the future, France appears to have made up her mind to side with Rome, and to share the fortunes of the doomed Apostasy. On every side Rome is gathering strength on the French soil. She already reigns absolutely over the rural populations; her prelates are beginning to exercise influence in the National Assembly; while, assisted by the newly-acquired power of conferring degrees, she is resolutely endeavouring to get also into her grasping hands the education of the upper classes. All this bodes no good for France; but it shows that the struggle has not yet reached its crisis, and that the forces are gathering on either side for a conflict more desperate in its character and more decisive in its results than any that has yet been known in the history of Europe.—Record.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

SIGNOR GAVAZZI has purchased, at his own expense, an old monastery, near Florence, Italy, for a Protestant mission.

THE LIVERPOOL MAGISTRATES at the licensing session have refused to grant any new spirit-licences, and also all but one of the applications for sanction to removals.

THE TOTAL NUMBER of adult baptisms in India by the different missions during last year was 5029. By far the largest numbers were amongst the Santhals and in Chota Nagpore.

OVER £2600 has been collected in London for the relief of the 4000 Lealenders who have suffered from the recent volcanic eruptions, and the committee have resolved to purchase a quantity of rye and oats to be despatched as soon as possible.

CANON CUNLIFFE has resigned the living of Wrexham, worth £700 a year, and in so doing has not only declined to take any portion of the income to which he is entitled, but has made over his own mansion at Lhwyais as a parsonage for the parish. — Bury Post.

THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY of the coming of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Belfast was celebrated on Monday week with great success. Large meetings were held. Why should not the coming winter be quite as workful and fruitful as last? Does not "the Lord God of Elijah" still live?

THE REV. J. B. GOOD, who for fifteen years has been a most successful missionary to the Indians of British Columbia, recently delivered an address at Lincoln, of which county he is a native; the Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham in the chair. The speaker gave a graphic account of the success of his mission at Lytton, where he had baptized 300 Indians, now left under the care of a native catechist, whom he hoped soon to see ordained deacon. Mr. Good had reduced their language to writing, and translated much of the Scriptures and of the Litany into it.

BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE.—The following is the programme of this Conference to be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, October 27 to 29:—

- Wed. 11 a.m.—"Union with Christ for life and liberty."
- Thurs. 11 a.m.—"Union with Christ for successful work."
- 7 p.m.—"Union with Christ for patient suffering."
- Fri. 11 a.m.—"Union with Christ for continuous growth."
- 7 p.m.—"Union with Christ for perfected glory."

Inquiries to be addressed to Rev. H. G. Thwaites, St. Mark's, Birmingham.

WOOLWICH.—With reference to an article that appeared in our issue of Aug. 19 respecting the need of a Soldiers' Mission Hall at Woolwich, in which it was stated that "no special effort is now made to win souls to Christ except by those whose influence is comparatively very limited," the Rev. E. L. Walsh, Principal Chaplain at the Woolwich-Garrison, writes in terms similar to the Wesleyan Army Chaplain whose letter we inserted last week. Mr. Walsh informs us that a special service is held by him every Sunday evening at eight o'clock, and also that Bible-classes are held during the week, all these services being well attended.

RELIGION AND TEMPERANCE IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—A correspondent of the Times says:—"There are now about 6000 totalists—men, women, and children—in the Indian army. There are other respects in which of late years there has been a singular change. Books, newspapers, and schoolmasters have long been within the reach of every soldier. Some of the men preach or hold prayer-meetings; and, as an impression has gradually grown up that they fight none the less resolutely on that account, any sensible man who has anything to say, and can say it without circumlocution, is sure of an audience. One case occurred some time ago in which a chaplain interposed to prevent a man from preaching, but he raised a nest of hornets about his ears, and, whether he was right or wrong in fact, the sense of the men was against him, and I think the preacher remained master of the position. I believe, too, it is a fact that there has grown up among the British troops in India a sense of religion without the outward demonstration of preaching or public prayers."

AFRICAN MISSIONS.—Bishop Steere has written to the Bishop of Lincoln, from Zanzibar, a letter, dated July 1 last, in which he says:—"We are full of hope, but we sadly want men. The Nyassa Mission cannot get on without another clergyman or two and several schoolmasters, nor can these be supported without considerably increased funds. Here at Mombasa we have the offer of a large piece of land for which our dear friend West offered £600, and now the owner will take £350. It adjoins our land, and I think we must have it. No one who has not been on the spot can judge of the value of our central situation. We are under the eye of the British Consul-General; we are open to the criticisms of everybody; and one chief can overlook several distinct establishments. The catechumens' classes and mission preachings among our released slaves are the most valuable training our European students can have. Only this last week sixteen slaves were taken by her Majesty's ship London, and Major Smith wished to send them to Mombasa, but could find no good means of sending, so that he was very glad to send them to us instead. The work grows, and must grow; pray for us that we may not fail, and that money and men may come to our need." — Watchman.

THE BIBLE is now printed in no fewer than two hundred and ten languages. In 1851 it was printed in only fifty.

ACCORDING to the School Board Chronicle there are 1455 school boards in England and Wales, covering a population of 12,000,000.

A RUSSIAN TRACT SOCIETY has been established this year. A gentleman of the name of Pahskoff, who had been converted under Lord Radstock, is distributing every month one thousand copies of the New Testament among the Monjinks.

MR. VARLEY AND HIS CHURCH.—Mr. Varley has treated the poor of his London congregation to a visit to Brighton. Arriving in the morning, the party dispersed in the town; and in the afternoon were provided with a substantial tea at the Town Hall.

AT CHARLESTON (U.S.A.), a Sunday-school Assembly has been held during a fortnight. Rev. Dr. Newton, of Philadelphia, spoke of a lady teacher in his city who had taught the infant-class for forty years, and in all that time had only been absent from the class on two Sundays. Certainly a remarkable record of faithful, uninterrupted service.

THE POPISH PRIESTS in America are strenuously at work to destroy the public school system in that country. But even a majority of their own flocks do not sympathize with this design, and we have never had any fear as to the result. The State Conventions are beginning to speak out, and most heartily do they denounce the scheme for diverting a portion of the moneys raised by general taxation to the support of sectarian schools.

"THE SMALLEST BIBLE IN THE WORLD" has just been issued by Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row. Upon taking up the book no one would suppose that it contained more than the New Testament. It is a beautiful little book. It is printed in a most minute though clear type, on tough, unbleached India paper of extreme thinness and opacity, measures 4½ in. by 2½ in. by ¼ in., and weighs, when bound in limp morocco leather, less than 3½ ounces, and can be sent through the post for a penny.

MR. VAN METER writes to The Baptist from Geneva, under date September 3:—"Excessive work the past year caused the return of the trouble in my injured spine. The baths here are greatly benefiting me. Next week I leave for the hot baths at Bagai di Lucca, near Pisa. By October 1, I hope to be able to resume my work in Rome. Two days ago my Roman schools were reopened. Our Union Christian Conferences (in English) will be reopened October 17, and continue every Sunday evening until May. 'Brethren pray for us,' and when in Rome come and see us."

ZENANA WORK.—The Friend of India thinks the system of house-to-house visitation not the best, perhaps, for Zenana work, so little instruction can be given in an occasional visit. It says,—"We believe it will soon be superseded, to a great degree, by a school system. There are schools already in existence attended by Hindu girls of the class that is reached by house-to-house visitation. One such school we know, conducted by an excellent lady belonging to one of our Zenana Missions, and we believe she has usually an attendance of about fifty." It is believed that no great difficulty would be experienced in getting a sufficient attendance at such schools, if care were taken to locate them in very retired situations."

THE REV. Dr. S. WELLS WILLIAMS, of Peking, has just finished his immense "Syllabic Dictionary of the Chinese Language," upon which he has been engaged nearly forty years. Some idea of the amount of labour he has bestowed, single-handed, upon this work, may be formed when it is stated that the Dictionary contains about 63,000 examples and phrases, comprised under 10,004 articles; the number of separate characters given being 12,977. And not only is the Peking pronunciation of this vast number of characters given, but also the methods of pronouncing them at Shanghai, Amoy, and Canton. This noble work will be of great value to our missionaries.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.—A month's successful evangelistic labours at the tent in Adwick were brought to a termination by Mr. John Hambleton on Sunday, Aug. 29. Every night during that period, with two exceptions, the tent was crowded by a multitude of eager listeners, several of whom sought and found the Saviour. The next meeting at the Religious Institute on Monday, the 30th ult., took a practical turn. The Rev. F. Stedfast presided, and the attendance was numerous. After the requests for prayer had been presented, and a short address by Mr. Stedfast, Mr. John Hambleton, who was present for the last time previous to his departure from Manchester, gave his report of the tent work, and in concluding urged the necessity of providing a substantial building in place of the tent, which, the equinoctial gales would speedily remove if we did not shortly take it down. At St. Helen's and other places wooden buildings had been erected, in the former town at the sole cost of one gentleman, whose example might well be followed in Manchester. A substantial building to accommodate 500 persons could be erected for £200, a trifling sum when placed in the balance against the value of perishing souls! Mr. W. Hand Smith spoke to the same effect. We wanted several such buildings in Manchester, and he had long urged the erection of such; and he commended the suggestion to the serious consideration of the meeting. Dr. Ziemann has at length returned from his continental tour, and has recommenced his labours.

DAILY READINGS.

"LORD AT ANO OTHER WE SHOULD LET THEM BLASPHEM"—HEB. 11, 7.
 "I remember thee, O Lord, thy mercies of thy youth, the loving of thine espousals, when thou wast after me in the wilderness in the land that was not seen? ... While I sought thee, O Lord, thou hast found me, and thou art gone far from Me?"—Rev. ii. 17; Ps. lxxviii. 1-6.
 "I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. ii. 10; Heb. xii. 7; Acts. xiv. 19.
 "They sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils."—Rev. ii. 14; 1 Cor. x. 20.
 "The carnal mind is enmity against God; ... If ye live after the flesh ye shall die."—Rom. vii. 5; 1 Cor. v. 5.
 "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. iv. 23.
 "I would that thou wert cold or hot; so thou because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth!"—Rev. iii. 16, 17; S. Song. viii. 6.
 "KEEP THY HEART WITH ALL DILIGENCE, FOR OUT OF IT ARE THE ISSUES OF LIFE."—Prov. iv. 23.

THE OLDEST, and in many respects the most illustrious, of the American revivalists is dead. Charles C. Finney will be remembered by many of our readers. In 1818 he visited England, and remained in this country three years, doing the work of an evangelist with great power and signal success. While here he was greatly aided by his wife. On his return to America he was elected President of Oberlin College, an office which he held for fourteen years. He was an able theologian, and delivered a series of lectures on Systematic Theology, which he published, with many other popular works. The most widely circulated of these was his "Lectures on Revivals." In the slavery agitation he was prominent, and the temperance cause also strongly took hold of his sympathies. He had reached the ripe age of eighty-three years. He died at heart disease.—Freeman.

MR. MOODY AND "THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES."
 I have been a Sabbath-school teacher for twenty years, and for some time past I have received weekly from Philadelphia the Sunday-School Times (which was favourably spoken of by our dear friend Mr. Moody), and I can confidently say that this is the best help to study and teach the Bible which I have ever had. It is invaluable to teachers. Its cost in all is 10s. 6d., viz. first cost 9s., post-office order 1s., and postage 2d. These are many devoted Christians who, though not taking an active part in Sabbath-schools, might promote the work greatly by their means, and that at very small cost. To such might I suggest that they procure copies of this useful paper, and place them in the hands of their local Sabbath-school teachers; or, many of the latter the cost would bear hardly. Let me add that I know neither the editor nor publisher, nor am I in any way interested in the Sunday-School Times further than having a desire that Sabbath-school teachers should have at their command a Sunday newspaper, so fitted as it is to help them both in and out of school.

He also professes to be an evangelist, but upon inquiry I find him to be an impostor. If you will kindly insert a few lines in your paper, it may prevent him imposing on others."

The Christian.

HARVEST.

THIS year's harvest calls for much thankfulness. It is a very good one. The crops are plentiful, and the weather has been favourable for gathering them in. Our bountiful God has opened out his hand, and bestowed rich blessings upon us.

And so, also, with our spiritual harvests. Thank God, these do not come only once a year, but are going on in the Lord's vineyard all the year round. But one can hardly help forming a comparison between this year's plentiful harvest of the fruits of the earth, and the rich harvest of precious souls which is going on at the same time. The Lord gives his labourers ploughing-time and sowing-time; but He also gives them a blessed reaping-time. And how much of the reaping there has been of late! "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." It is when we have our eyes down, and are occupied with self and self-interests, that we fail to see souls ready for harvest. Anxiety for others, too, may keep our eyes down when they ought to be looking up. We may be mistaken, but we cannot help thinking that the disciples were more anxious about the day's meal than about the precious souls coming out of Samaria, when they said to Jesus, "Master, eat." There was loving anxiety that He should partake of the food which He needed, and which they had been providing for Him. But when they saw the people coming towards Him, and knew that that meant more work for their Lord, they were too anxious to be able to enjoy the sight. Just as many dear Christians worry themselves so much about the health of the Lord's labourers. They are so sure that they are doing too much, and will shorten their days, that they forget the higher, all-sustaining food which there is in doing the will of God. They cannot see, or at all events enjoy, the blessed work of the harvest; and they lose sight of the greater importance and higher claims of that work.

Harvest is a busy time. Solomon says—"He that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame." It is no time for sleeping and being idle. People require to be up as soon as it is daylight, and when night is coming on they need the harvest-moon to enable them to prolong their labours.

There is so much to be done. Jesus said, "The harvest truly is plenteous"; and again, "The harvest truly is great." There are numbers of souls in Christian and in heathen countries waiting to be reaped. Think of the 400,000,000 of China alone, if you can; 150,000,000 of whom are said to be unevangelized as yet! Think of London with its thick masses of souls! Think of the numbers around you everywhere ready for the Gospel-scythe! The way in which multitudes flock to hear the Word of God seems to say in itself, "The harvest truly is plenteous." Yes, there is much work to be done. Fellow-Christians, let us be up, and do it. Away with selfishness; away with sloth; away with pride! Let us lift up our eyes, according to the Lord's bidding. There is no need for us to get excited over it. We need not get worried over the Lord's work, however busy we may be. There may be a deep rest of soul in the midst of the greatest activity. Only let our eyes and our hearts be up, fixed upon the Lord, and doing his blessed will will be our delight. We may get so anxious about the work and its vast extent, that we shall get paralyzed, and unable to do what we might do. Surely the Lord does not want us to make his service a worry, a torture, a drudgery. Has not much of our mental tension and pressure on the brain in the Lord's work been owing to thoughts of self—how we should get on, or to thoughts of unbelief, not leaving the care of the work to the Lord of the harvest? We may and should be busy; but we need not be flighty. We may and should be earnest, but we need not be restless. Hard-working labourers are steady, patient, peaceful, as well as business-like.

Harvest is a busy time, too, when we consider how few the labourers are to do this great work. Farmers cannot get enough men to cut down their corn in harvest-time. "The labourers are few." Oh, yes, how few! What a small number, even if all "the little flock" were earnest labourers! But, alas! we know only too well that there are numbers of Christians who are standing idle all the livelong day—looking at the fields, perhaps, but doing nothing; looking at the labourers, perhaps, and admiring them, but not joining them. Many are sick and invalid Christians who have to be nursed and looked after themselves. Some say that their health will not allow them to do anything. But we know that many of the Lord's best and most hard-working labourers are poor weak ones, bed-ridden all the year round. We know of one such, a frail woman who has often been to "the borderland," who holds meetings in her sick-room, and corresponds with people in almost all parts of the world. And yet she has a complication of diseases, and we have heard her doctor say that it was only her great peace of soul which has kept her alive so long. But others say they are not fit—it is their great unworthiness which is the hindrance. Who, then, is fit? Who, then, is worthy? "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves—our sufficiency is of God." Oh, Christians, will ye be sleeping in harvest? Will ye be praying to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest, and not go yourselves? The Lord answer your prayer by sending you forth yourself! Surely, when you ask for others to be sent, you must be ready to say yourself, "Here am I; send me."

And harvest is a busy time when we consider how short the time is. The Lord is soon coming. We may be called away by death at any moment. It does not take many minutes for the heart's action to stop, nor for the pulse to cease beating. How soon our little day's work for Jesus here may come to an end! And how short is the time, too, for the perishing souls all around! Christians, it is now or never. Miss your present opportunity, and you will never get another such. There will be no winning of souls in glory. There will be no plucking of brands from the burning in heaven. Oh, let us make the most of our short time. Let harvest be a busy time with us.

Again, harvest is a money-making time. "He that reapeth receiveth wages." But what wages do we need? Is not the Lord's work wages enough in itself? Is it not its own reward? Yes, indeed it is.

"Oh, blessed work for Jesus!
Oh, rest at Jesus' feet!
There toil seems pleasure,
My wants are treasure,
And pain for Him is sweet."

But yet the Lord is pleased to give his labourers wages. They are no ordinary wages, for they are not "of works," but "of grace." They are not deserved—they are not earned as a matter of right. It is only a free gift of his own bountiful love. It is rewarding the work which He himself has wrought through us. But He has a reward for us at his coming, and though we may be saved, yet it is possible for us to "suffer loss," and to lose the reward. "If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." There is not only life—there is "the crown of life." There is not only righteousness—there is "the crown of righteousness." There is not only glory—there is "the crown of glory." Are we not told to "lay up for ourselves treasure in heaven"? Yes, "he that reapeth receiveth wages."

We receive such wages even now. What a reward to have the smile of your Lord's approval! Boaz went to see the reapers, and said to them, "The Lord be with you." How pleased they would be! How it would encourage them, and make them work with the more energy and zeal! Would that farmers went into their harvest-fields now in the same way, and in the same spirit. But our "Lord of the harvest" is always with us, and He never fails to see the smallest service of love done for Him, and to give his gracious smile upon it. And what a reward, too, to have the love and gratitude of those to whom the Lord has made us channels of blessing—to know that they will be our "crown of rejoicing" in the day of Christ. And then think of that "Well done, good and faithful servant," which shall come by-and-by from the Lord's own lips. Yes; the Lord's labourers do receive blessed wages.

Harvest is, lastly, a joyous time. "Thy joy before thee according to the joy in harvest." It is evidently a special joy.

It is joyous because it is a reaping-time. The sowing is very blessed; but it is often done "weeping." But "they that sow in tears shall reap in joy." What joy to gather fruit unto eternal life—to know that precious souls are being saved for eternity, and for eternal felicity! It is great joy to see souls awakened. It is still greater joy to see them happy and resting in the Lord.

It is a joyous time, too, because it is a busy time. We are not made to be idle. We cannot be really happy if we are idle. And there is something very joyous in the busy way in which the corn is cut and the sheaves are bound up. A harvest-field is full of liveliness. God's work is the very joy of our hearts. The more we are permitted to do, the greater is our enjoyment; the busier we are, the happier we are.

Above all, it is a joyous time because it is being "workers together with God." It is to have Christ working through us. It is to be doing his will. And to lay our whole selves out for Christ; to "spend and be spent" for Him; to have his own purposes fulfilled in us; to know that we are his ambassadors, fulfilling his will—is indeed great joy. It is not the work—it is Christ in the work that is our joy.

And this joy is an unselfish joy. It is no boasting of self or of self efforts. It is no rejoicing over our own successes, and comparing them with those of others. Oh, no! "He that soweth and he that reapeth rejoice together." The one does not cry, "Ah! you only did the reaping"; the other does not say, "Yes, and you only did the sowing." There are no invidious comparisons as to which work was the hardest and which worked longest and best. Nothing of the kind. There is joy "together" amongst the labourers—loving, sympathizing, cordial, unselfish joy. They were glad to be permitted to work together, and now they rejoice that they rest together. They both ascribe all to their Lord, and cast their crowns before Him. The sower and the reaper both say, "Neither is he that soweth anything, nor he that watereth; but God, who giveth the increase." "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us; but to thy name give the praise."

TEXTS MISUNDERSTOOD.—III.

"DEAD TO SIN."—ROM. VI. 2.

THE meaning of the expression, "dead to sin," as it occurs in this verse, and also in the eleventh verse of the same chapter, "Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin," has of late been much misunderstood. It has been supposed to refer to a high attainment of Christian life, whereas the context treats of the first lesson in the school of Christ—that taught in baptism. It has been explained to mean an inward experience, or state of deadness towards sin, sometimes illustrated by the impassiveness of a corpse as to surrounding objects; whereas the whole language of Rom. vi. 1-11 points to the substitutional death of the Lord Jesus as that in which the death to sin took place; which death to sin, and consequent life to God, the believer is to reckon (or impute) to himself as judicially his own, as truly as if he himself had died upon the cross and had risen from the grave. "In that He died, He died unto sin once; in that He liveth, He liveth unto God: Likewise also reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through (or in) Jesus Christ our Lord."

We do not ask a person to reckon anything to be what it manifestly is. No one would say of five sovereigns "Reckon that to be five pounds," for it is that; but such language may be appropriately used of a bank-note, or of a cheque, or of anything which represents that amount. So is it with the death to sin spoken of here. The real value is the fact of Christ's substitutional death; the action of faith is to appropriate this, and to account or reckon self to be, what in itself it is not, "dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Christ Jesus our Lord."

One serious result of this misconception of what "dead to sin" means, is that the old nature is sometimes represented as being dead to sin. I once asked Mr. Moody what he thought of this view. His answer was characteristic. "If a man," he said, "be troublesome durin g his life, you must keep your eye upon him; but if he be dead, you need not trouble yourself any more about him; he cannot annoy you again. It would be very dangerous (he added) to think this of the old nature."

And in conformity with this sound view was the caution he gave in his parting address at Liverpool, especially intended for young Christians. "If an angel from heaven were to tell you that the old man is dead, don't believe him."

BRIGHTON.—Mr. John Wooldridge, evangelist from London, has been labouring with great acceptance and power in Carlton-hill Mission Hall, and in the neighbouring streets. Brighton being very much under the power of the drink interest, these special open-air meetings are watched with a jealous eye by the police, so that our brother has had frequently to curtail these meetings, after the excellent manner suggested in last week's CHRISTIAN by Mr. Varley—viz., "To repeat in a clear, musical voice, two or three passages of Scripture, occasionally singing a few verses of a well-known hymn, and so passing on." As the result of these special efforts, already many poor outcasts have been induced to hear the Word, and many drunkards of both sexes have appended their names to the pledge-book of the local town missionary, Mr. J. J. Jones, who assists Mr. Wooldridge in all these meetings. Frequently the whole audience stay behind to the after-meeting.

GOOD TIDINGS FROM BURMAH.

I THINK your readers will be much interested by the following tidings sent us from Burmah by Mr. Henry Soltau. Mr. Soltau writes on August 2:—

“The Lord by the Holy Spirit is working mightily in Burmah. We have been earnestly praying for a blessing on the country, and our prayers are being answered. At Henthada, a station on the Irrawaddy, and in the surrounding villages, the blessing has come at last. I have been favoured with extracts from a letter written by Mr. George, the American Baptist missionary there, to Mr. Colburn, a fellow-missionary at Rangoon. The letter is dated ‘Henthada, July 25, 1875.’ The tour which he has taken has been on the east side of the River Irrawaddy, at a place on or near the Prome Railroad. Mr. George writes:—

“‘I got home last night about nine o’clock. My wife tells me she forwarded to you the letter I sent from See Kong, so you will know about this trip up to that date.’ [He had baptized eight up to that date. He is a remarkably cautious man in receiving candidates. All whom he admits must have given clear and unmistakable proofs of a change of heart.]

“‘The disciples, real and apparent, came on Monday, and brought me and my goods over; a house had been made ready for me, and I put up for a week. The roads were impassable for me, but the people came in from all quarters to see me. On Wednesday I received a telegram from my wife that Frankie was sick, urging me to come home, but that was out of the question. The telegram had been nine days reaching me, and I had agreed to baptize fifteen on the following Saturday, and more were expected. I had been preaching that “He that loveth wife or child, or father or mother, more than Me is not worthy of Me,” and of course could not leave the work to go home. On Friday, eighteen more were received for baptism, and on Saturday at 10 a.m. thirty-three were baptized just below the railroad bridge, in the sight of an immense crowd of spectators. That evening more arrived, and were examined. Sunday morning ten more were baptized in the same place, making in all during the trip fifty-one, two of whom were women, the wives of the brethren. Those baptized were only two-thirds of the number that applied; over twenty were advised to wait, which, together with the wives of the forty-seven brethren (two of the number were single men), gives a large number of hopeful unconverted. I wish you could have seen what I have. It is a genuine revival; the people are singing, praying, or preaching nearly all the time. Christianity is the theme that all are discussing. No need to look for hearers; almost everyone wants to be taught. It has come, as we have prayed so many years; God has come with power, and the heathen are astonished at what He is doing. I expect to go back as soon as possible, and have no doubt that a good number more will be baptized.

“‘Now, in view of what God is doing, I have decided to move to this place. The path of duty is very plain, and I shall make no preparation for moving further up the river.’ Then follows a list of those baptized, giving their ages, occupations, &c., about whom he writes:— “‘I think you will enjoy seeing a list of those baptized, their ages, occupations, &c. It will give you a better idea of the nature of the work than pages of description would. You doubtless remember the Pleader, Ko Shive Mia; he has left off drinking for six months, and has been preaching the Gospol faithfully. I need tell you nothing of his history; he is an original. Ko At [the evangelist] had told me how he had formerly fought against the truth, and suggested that he, being now convinced after a careful examination of Christianity, would be able to give a good reason for his hope. Well, he came up for examination, and had not a word to say; he appeared to know nothing. He believed, he said, but he could not explain what or why he believed. I told him I would give him books, and he had better apply again the next time I came round. Three others were examined, and gave intelligent reasons for their faith, when

My At spoke up and said, “You are satisfied with these three men, and why not with their teacher!” “Who is their teacher?” I asked. “Why, Ho Shive Go!” he replied. The fact was, that he had taught these three men all they knew of Christ and salvation, and yet had not confidence to answer for himself. We called him up again, and after he gained a little confidence, he spoke very well indeed, and was received for baptism. There are two or three men of great promise among these converts. Two are very prominent men, and, if true Christians, will prove a power for good.

“In order to secure some kind of spiritual oversight for the disciples, we elected church elders, who will look after the weak and hold meetings—in fact, be a sort of pastors.”

Mr. Soltau continues—

“In another part of his letter Mr. George gives a summary of the list of those baptized—

	Years of age.	Men.	Of the men—
Between 21 and 30	18	2 are traders.
“ 30 “ 40	10	1 is a pleader.
“ 40 “ 60	19	1 “ carpenter.
Over 60	1	1 “ sawyer.
Under 21	2	1 “ gardener.
			2 are drovers.
		49	3 “ butchers.
Women	2	28 “ farmers.
Total	51	49

“I am sure this letter, written without formality, and not intended for print, will interest all who read it. Mr. George is a zealous, discreet, hard-working missionary. He is not over-strong in body; the little strength he has, he spends in his Master’s service.

“The missionaries here are greatly cheered at this news. The Burmese, among whom this work has broken out, are a most difficult set of people to reach. These are only droppings of the shower which is about to fall on Burmah and China. Pray much and fervently for this work in Burmah. These, the Lord’s servants here, greatly need encouragement and sympathy.”

I will only add to the above that Messrs. Stevenson and Soltau have been much used of God among the English-speaking residents, and now need our special prayers for guidance as to their movements, it having been announced that the trade route to China via Bhamo is being opened up.

TENT SERVICES.—A correspondent of the Brighton Visitor states that nearly 100 new converts have come forward to declare that they have found Jesus in the tent services held in the Tent, Park-street, Brighton. Mr. Wm. Nobbs, of Gloucester, who conducted these meetings for a month, writes to the same effect. Mr. Nobbs, who has also been labouring at Greenwich and Deptford, has now returned to Gloucester, where he is taking part in open-air and theatre services. He asks for the prayers of our readers, and also requests special prayer for the services held in Gloucester by Major Cole.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS’ MISSION.—This Mission, under the superintendence of Ned Wright, is being carried on in a tent erected in Southampton-street, Camberwell. After all the services, an inquiry-meeting is held, and rarely without some clear evidence of the power of the truth in the salvation of souls or the return of backsliders. Since the services of our brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey, there has been a marked increase in the attendance and in the number of the workers. A large number of the converts meeting in the tent having expressed their desire to make a public profession of their faith in Jesus before the world by baptism, it was arranged that they should have an opportunity of so doing. In the centre of the tent a baptistry of considerable proportions was ingeniously constructed by Ned Wright and assistants. It is composed of five separate pieces, which can be easily disconnected and removed away with the tent. Wednesday, Sept. 1, was the day appointed, and on that occasion tickets of admission were issued for 1800. The novelty of a baptizing taking place in a tent attracted a large assembly, the greater portion of the tickets being used. Forty men and youths submitted to the ordinance, and were baptized in the name of “The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost” by our brother Ned Wright. They were faithfully and affectionately addressed by Mr. Hodder. After dressing, and before the conclusion of the meeting, upon being requested so to do, twelve of the number stood up and so testified that they were the fruits of the preaching of Mr. Moody.

MR. SPURGEON AND HIS EVANGELISTS.

AMONG the many auxiliary forces at work in connexion with the great Metropolitan Tabernacle congregation is a flourishing Evangelistic Association. This Society had its annual meeting on Friday evening last, when a large company of friends assembled to hear the reports of the various evangelists, and otherwise to testify their sympathy with the good work. After tea in one of the rooms, an adjournment was made to another, where a number of addresses were given by members of the Association, detailing the various phases of the work, and making appeal for recruits to help them to extend their operations.

Mr. Spurgeon presided in his happy, genial fashion, and also gave a short opening address on the subject of Evangelization. After some preliminary remarks, he said:—I understand your main business is to try to preach the Gospel out of doors to such companies as you can get together. It is right good work, and God bless you in it. There have been hundreds of persons converted in the streets, who, if it had not been for street-preaching, humanly speaking, would never have known the Saviour. I remember a Jew, who came from Hamburg to this country, telling me that at first, when he was wishing to learn English, he went to a ragged-school on the Sunday. He was surprised to see the little groups of people along the streets, and, though he could not understand English, he was so interested that he would stand and listen. By-and-by, when he had picked up a little English, he still joined the little companies, and by that means he came to believe in Jesus of Nazareth. He was in my College for some time, and was a very useful minister of the Cross of Christ. He owed his conversion entirely to hearing street-preaching, for, as a Jew, he would never have gone into any Christian church.

But even if there were not a soul converted, that would not prevent our going on with it, because the preaching of the Gospel is for a testimony against them, even if they should reject it. We will have borne our testimony; and the Lord tells us that Jesus Christ preached in a sweet savour to Him, though in some men it is the savour of death unto death, and in others the savour of life unto life. You go on telling sinners the way to heaven, and, whether they reject it or not, you have done your part in the matter; at the same time God has been glorified by the testimony you have borne.

It is a great mercy that the Lord in condescension gives the use of instruments in his Church, not simply to those who lead the way, but to those who have to occupy the hindermost ranks. And it is a blessing that there should be little works to do for Christ, because through them we are qualified to do others. I was about sixteen years old when I was baptized, and the very night I was converted I prayed at the prayer-meeting. It was the first time I opened my mouth in any way for Christ. Then I sought out a district where I could go and distribute tracts. My time was very slender; I was teaching in a school and had only the Saturday afternoon. I went round with the tracts, and very soon I got quite a nice diocese. There was nobody looked after it except me, and I was about sixteen years old. They used to tell me all their troubles, and I very soon found my hands full. I had to do all sorts of things. As soon as you begin to work, you have to work more. Things grow, and one work brings another and another. I was asked to go and teach in the Sunday-school; then I had to address the children. Then they arranged that I should constantly address them every Sunday. By-and-by the adults came in, and I had more people to hear me in the afternoon than the minister had in the morning. So it kept on growing, and on and on and on from one thing to another.

There are some of our young fellows who want to put their legs on the top of the ladder all at once. But, believe me, step by step is the only way to climb. Keep on, day after day, and if you do a little good, then do a little more, and after that a little more and a little more. And then you never know, when once you begin, what God means to do with you; how He may qualify you for something else. And even when you are doing a little you probably never know the amount of good resting on the little you do.

Let me tell you a story. It happened to me, some twenty-four or twenty-five years ago, that I walked to a village from Cambridge to preach. It was rather a long distance—nine or ten miles—and nobody gave me anything to eat or drink. I don't suppose it entered into their heads that I ate anything. Then I walked home again. I did think somebody might have asked me to have something, but nobody did. When I got home, nevertheless, I was thankful to have preached the Gospel. In a day or two I got a note from a poor woman saying that if I came back there again, and came a little sooner, she was very poor, but she would be glad to give me a cup of tea. I was glad to know that somebody had thought of me and had noticed me. In a fortnight's time I went back and called on the woman. It was a very little cottage indeed; for I recollect sitting in the chair, and, when she went out, swinging myself back and touching both sides of the room with my hands. There was an old chimney and a long chain with a pot hanging on it, and the kettle standing on some bricks by the side of the wood fire. I had some tea, and very curious tea it was. I was not very luxurious, but it was hardly up to my standard; however, I was very grateful. And I never saw the woman any more. But the other day my good friend Miss Macpherson said, "I wish you would come up to Whitechapel, and see our work there." It was just before some of the children were leaving for Canada. I said I would, and when I went she introduced to me a nice little woman, who said she knew me very well, and that I had been the means of her conversion. "And you know me very well," she said. Well, I said I did not recollect her. "You once had a cup of tea with me." "No," I said, "you must be mistaken, for she was an old woman,"—if a woman can be old. "But it was me; and it is a very curious thing," she said, "everybody says I am looking younger to-day than I was twenty years ago." Then she told what I had said as we sat in the cottage, and how I had tried to lead her to the Saviour. I cannot tell you the joy it brought to my heart to think that there was some of the seed scattered all those years ago, of which I had heard nothing, and that there stood before me the woman, first led to Christ, and afterwards into a sphere of great usefulness under our sister Miss Macpherson. There she was rejoicing in the Saviour, and so I made her young again. She had been for many years in despondency of mind, and the joy brought to her by finding Christ actually seemed to transform her appearance. You will never know, if you do good, all the good that will come of it. Young women, talk about Jesus everywhere; young men, spread abroad the savour of his name; but you must not expect to see everything. There are some things you see quickly—mushrooms, for instance,—but they don't last long. The things that last longest are the longest in coming. Perhaps you will see the result of your work in heaven. You will look down and bless the Lord as you see some soul who heard some words you spoke years before, and that were blessed after you were dead and gone.

Do all you can for Christ, all of you, in all sorts of ways. If you cannot do it in one way try another. If you have got to kill a bear, and if you cannot hit him on the head, hit him anywhere. They say the best way is to shoot him through the centre of the brain, but if the ball misses, hit him on the head with the butt-end of the gun; and if the gun breaks, you can belabour him with the half of it. So in fighting the devil, you must fight with him anyhow—there is nothing unfair in that warfare,—and hit him under the belt if you can. If a sermon won't do it, give him half a sermon, or sing him a hymn. Or if that won't do, give him a tract, or say a word, and then begone.

"But," you say, "I do not know what they may do with the tract if I give it to them." Sometimes things thrown away do more good than if they were kept. There was a man down in Bermondsey who sent out for his tobacco, and he got it wrapped in a leaf of the Bible. I was very glad he did, for the man read part of a chapter that exactly suited his case, and led him to go to the house of God. Years ago I remember reading the story of a man who picked up a piece of paper burnt all round about. A gunner had a tract given him, and he rammed it into his gun for wadding. It flew away, and fell down there in a circle, but there was enough of it left to lead the man who picked it up to find the Saviour. You scatter them about, and perhaps those that are rejected will do more good than those that are accepted. Go out and scatter the truth, and God will bless you.

MIDLAND BAPTIST UNION.—The annual meetings were held at Nottingham on Tuesday week. In the morning there was a conference of the members of the churches in Broad-street Chapel, under the presidency of the Rev. J. C. Pike, of Leicester. The chairman delivered an address on "Earnestness and Christian Work," and a discussion followed. The "Report of the Churches," presented by the Rev. Watson Dyson, secretary, stated that there had been a slight increase in the number of members during the year, and that the general condition of the churches was satisfactory. A lengthy discussion then took place on "The Deficiencies and Wants of the Present Sunday-school System."

BAREILLY.

A JOURNEY of fifty miles brought us to this place. Preached to a poor leper on the way while changing horses. His fingers and toes had all dropped off.

I said to him, "Where will your spirit go when it shall leave the body?"

He reflected a moment, and replied, "It will go back where it came from."

We tried to lead him to the cleansing Fountain, that his spirit might be prepared to return to God who gave it.

We found a good and welcome home in the house of Rev. T. J. Scott, the presiding elder of Bareilly district. His residence is a large bungalow built by Dr. Butler, the pioneer of the Mission, but who, some years before, had returned to America.

Bareilly is a large native city, and military station. On the evening of my arrival, at the request of our missionaries, I went with them to a temperance tea-meeting for her Majesty's 25th Regiment, and heard some good temperance talk, and preached a little to the soldiers.

Wednesday, 8th.—I visited a native Christian village under the pastoral care of the chaplain and a native pastor. The chaplain and our own missionaries united in a request that I should try and do something to reform the so-called Christians who live in it, and who scandalize the name of Christ by their gross immorality. I found that they were engaged in a lawsuit with the chaplain about the title to their village lands; and while I was there they severely beat their native pastor; so I could not see my way open, in the midst of such confusion, to do them any good.

Preached in the Orphanage Chapel at noon to the 140 orphans—all old enough to sin, and hence old enough to be saved from sin—and to a few visitors; Bailey interpreted.

Preached in the bungalow used for regular native services at 6 p.m.; Brother Scott interpreted, and did it well. Brother Bailey heard to-day that Justice Walker, whom he knew in Lucknow during the Mutiny, was residing in Bareilly, and was a justice of the peace and treasurer of the city.

"I will take brother Taylor to see Walker," said Bailey; "and we will get him converted to God."

The missionaries laughed at Bailey's new-born zeal, and said, "You can do nothing with Walker. His wife is a Musulmān, and he has a lot of her Mohammedan kindred in his house: he never comes to preaching."

"Oh, I am sure we can get him saved," replied Bailey; and left abruptly, and went to call on his old friend. After reviewing their memories of the Mutiny, he said, "Mr. Walker, I want to introduce Mr. Taylor to you."

"No, Mr. Bailey; if you please, don't bring Mr. Taylor here. He'll be pitching into me about something or other; and I don't want to see him."

"Nay, nay, Mr. Walker; Mr. Taylor is a world-wide traveller, and a kind gentleman. He will interest you on many subjects, and not pitch into you at all."

So Mr. Walker consented, and Bailey came in haste for me to go and get his friend saved.

We went to his office, and, after a long talk on various topics, as I was about to leave, I said, "Mr. Walker, as I am stopping at Mr. Scott's, near by, and have but a few days to spend in your city, if agreeable to you I shall be glad to come some morning and conduct family worship for you."

"Thank you, Mr. Taylor; but I am a man of business, and have to go early to office daily, and cannot possibly command the time."

"How about Sabbath morning?"

"Well, I have no particular engagement Sabbath morning."

"Suppose, then, you invite a few of your friends, and allow me to come to your house, and we will have family worship together?"

"Very well, Mr. Taylor; come next Sabbath, at 8 a.m."

Thursday, 9th.—Preached in the Orphanage Chapel at noon, from Luke vii. 50. Illustrated the narrative by my map, nine feet by twelve. Great seriousness.

A Mohammedan giant who lives with Mr. Walker, whom we called "Goliath of Gath," was present at our meeting in the bungalow. Bailey recognized him as an old friend whom he knew in the Mutiny. He seemed much pleased to see Bailey, and said to him, "You have found God. I wish I could find Him too!" We had about one hundred hearers, and good attention.

Friday, 10th.—At the Orphanage Chapel, Bailey interpreted well, as usual. The missionaries in different places often expressed surprise at his clear, terse translation of my Scripture quotations—so original and so forcible. Before his conversion to God he had never read but two chapters in the Bible in his life. His wife was ill, and some one told him that if he would read to her out of the Bible she would get better. So he read two chapters to her, and she got better; and he read no more till our meeting at Lucknow.

A grand meeting to-day among the orphans. Sixty-seven of the elder girls came up as seekers, and twenty-six professed; sixteen of them had been professors before, but now got a clearer experience.

At 7 p.m., in the bungalow, twenty-five men and fifteen women, native nominal Christians, came out as seekers, and professed to find Jesus. "Goliath" seems under deep concern.

Saturday, 11th.—Witnessed the distribution of prizes in our native mission school in the city (of one hundred Mohammedan and Hindū boys). I gave them an address; Brother Scott interpreted.

In the evening we had a meeting in Brother Scott's house for his native helpers; and I gave them a talk on personal holiness.

Sabbath, 12th.—Had a service at Mr. Walker's at 8 a.m. Eighteen persons present, including his family. At the close, seeing that a good impression was made, I said, "Now, Mr. Walker, if you like I will come again to-morrow morning at seven o'clock, and conduct your family worship. We can have a family service from seven to eight, and then you can have from eight to nine for breakfast, and get to office in due time—at 10 a.m."

"All right, Mr. Taylor; we shall be glad to see you again to-morrow morning."

At the Orphanage Chapel at noon we had about seventy seekers, and nineteen professed to find Jesus.

Many of these witnesses for Jesus had been picked up in the huts of dead and dying Hindūs during the great famine of 1861. Preached in the bungalow at 6.30 p.m. A dozen seekers, and five professed to find peace.

Monday, 13th.—Preached in Orphanage Chapel on the "babes and sucklings"; and the truth took hold on the smaller orphans. Some of them came forward; but more of the larger ones: thirty-eight professed to find forgiveness of sins. At 6 p.m. I preached in the City Schoolhouse to the English-speaking Hindūs, Mohammedans, and Brāhmos. About one hundred present, crowding the room. I discoursed to them an hour. The Spirit of God was manifestly present to apply the truth. At the close, Judge Bakhtāwar Singh, a Hindū judge receiving a Government salary of 800 rupees per month, arose and tendered his thanks, and the thanks of the hearers, for what they had heard.

Tuesday, 14th.—Preached at Walker's at 7 a.m. About thirty present, and deep awakening. At the close Mr. Walker said, "Mr. Taylor, I hope you will come to-morrow morning, and every morning while you remain in the city."

"Thank you, Mr. Walker; I shall (d.v.) do so with much pleasure."

Preached at the Orphanage Chapel at twelve noon. Fifty seekers, and twenty-seven professed to find Jesus. Many of them, this time, were little girls. The large ones were saved first, and now the little children are coming to Jesus.

Brother Thoburn writes that the work in Lucknow is progressing well: three or four saved each week.

Wednesday, 15th.—At Justice Walker's again at 7 a.m. Great awakening. All of them—about twenty souls—went down on their knees as avowed seekers of salvation.

Good service at twelve o'clock in the Orphanage Chapel. During preaching in the evening in the bungalow, a cry of fire broke up our meeting for half an hour. We soon returned to the bungalow, and about a dozen of the Walker family came out as seekers, and professed to receive Jesus.

Thursday, 16th.—At Justice Walker's at 7 a.m. I preached, through Brother Scott, on the two baptisms—but one, in fact,—the water baptism being but the seal of the soul's indenture to the service of God, and sacrament of initiation into his visible Church, and sign of the inward baptism "by the one Spirit into the body of Christ."

Mrs. Walker, the Musulmān, came forward for Christian baptism. Brother Scott read the baptismal service in Hindūstānī, and we prayed for her and for Mr. Walker till they were filled with the Holy Spirit; and then I baptized her with water.

* Extracted from "Four Years' Campaign in India"—a volume of engrossing interest, by Rev. W. Taylor, just published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton. Price 4s.

I then read our "General Rules," and gave them an address on church organization, and organized "a church in the house" of Brother Walker; and appointed him to conduct a public service in his own house every Sabbath morning, assisted by the missionaries when they could command time.

At the noon meeting that day, in the Orphanage Chapel, Mrs. Walker publicly related her experience in her own language: she could not speak English. At the close of the meeting Brother Scott said, "She has great command of the Hindustani language, and is most clear and emphatic in her testimony to the saving power of Christ." I may simply add that Justice Walker kept up the meetings at his own house, and sometimes took meetings at the bungalow. Mrs. Walker was a large, fine-looking woman, apparently in the vigour of life and health; but a few months after her conversion to God she took ill and died. Brother Scott wrote me that she remained true to Jesus, and died in the Lord.

After a year or two Brother Walker also died in the Lord, and the family has moved away I know not whither. The giant passed through all this, deeply awakened, and came to spend the evening with me at Brother Scott's the night of my departure: admitted everything; anxious to be saved, but hesitated. I know not what has become of him.

Four years after I spent one night in Bareilly, and in the afternoon visited the Orphanage. Many of the grown-up girls had married and gone away, and many younger ones had come in; but the majority of them knew me, and jumped for joy when they saw their old friend who helped to lead them to Jesus four years before. A very large proportion of them remained steadfast in Jesus—so said Sister Sparks, who had been with them all the time.

PRAYER-MEETINGS ON THE SANDS.

[We have been greatly gladdened by reading the following brief notice, and could wish that such an excellent example were imitated at all our seaside summer resorts.—Ed.]

I THINK many Christians now enjoying a season of rest will like to hear of a simple plan by which numbers have had an opportunity of hearing the Gospel. A young gentleman from London proposed a daily prayer-meeting upon the sands here, and engaged a few like-minded to join him. Some who had been in Mr. Moody's choir gladly gave their services. Prayers were offered, addresses given, and now our little service is often attended by from sixty to eighty persons. This lasts from eleven to twelve. Any Christians present are then invited to remain for a Bible-reading, and about thirty accept this invitation. The hillock of sand for our seaside church is dug by the willing hands of dear children, who sit in a group in the midst. Aged people and invalids bring camp-stools and chairs, and one veteran lady walks two miles daily to and from the adjoining village of Pakefield, declaring that nothing has been so great a spiritual comfort as these gatherings. Many have been the testimonies given to their value, and it is believed that at least in one case a poor wanderer has been brought back to God. Addresses have been given, or prayers offered, by various Christians, and a spirit of love and union greatly promoted.

HOW TO SPEND AN EVENING—"This," says a correspondent, "is a difficult problem to many Christian hearts; but, like many other difficulties in the Christian life, it arises from indecision." The writer goes on to describe a social evening in a friend's house at Brighton on the occasion of two girls, daughters of different families, leaving home for school for a year:—"The friends were asked to be present at a religious service, and to take tea. It was not a tea-party to be concluded with worship, but a religious service with tea as an adjunct, and those were asked who might be expected to sympathize with the arrangements. The host began by stating briefly the objects of the meeting; and, after 'The Lord will provide,' and 'O God of Bethel' had been sung, and suitable Scriptures read, short and appropriate prayers were offered by two friends continuously. These were followed by 'Safe in the arms of Jesus' and 'Consider the lilies' being sung as solos. Tea was then served, and social conversation enjoyed for an hour, after which a service similar to the foregoing, and lasting about forty minutes, was engaged in, the solos sung being 'The Ninety-and-nine,' and 'Nazareth,' the company singing, 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' and 'Sweet by-and-bye' as a concluding hymn. It can be said with truth that all present felt that the evening was not only well spent, but spent most enjoyably, and many wishes were expressed that it might be followed by similar gatherings in other Christian homes."

FOR THE YOUNG.

A GLIMPSE OF THE LITTLE WILD FLOWERS.

Picture to yourselves a wet day in the East-end of London! Splash-splash sounds the rain, cold and chill as it trickles down the umbrellas on our necks; splash-splash go our feet into pools of muddy water. Not a pleasant experience, is it? And as we turn up this narrow passage out of Whitechapel High-street, and elbow our way through a little knot of ill-favoured women outside the door of a gin-shop bearing the misnomer of the "Angel," into a dark close alley, whose high houses on either side, with their tumble-down roofs and rickety windows, present an anything-but inviting appearance, still less so when we look into the faces of their inhabitants. There does not seem to be an outlet, only the passage appears to narrow, and we feel inclined to turn back and get out of the queer-looking place as fast as possible.

But stay! On the left hand is a house better than the rest, and over the door we notice a board with the words—"Flowers of the Forest—Day-nursery for twenty little ones. 'Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name receiveth Me,' Mark ix. 36. 'Thou, O God, of thy goodness hast prepared for the poor,' Ps. lxxviii. 10." Shall we knock and ask admission? This gloomy day there is nothing outside to inspire, everything to depress; but this looks more hopeful.

While waiting, we have time to observe that the windows have each a white blind, and a Scripture text in large blue letters upon it. Presently a young girl opens the door, and begs us to come upstairs and see the nursery. Climbing the steep stair, at the very top of the house we find two rooms; and the sun is shining very brightly now. No, the rain still beats against the windows, and without all is dull as ever. What could make us think of the sun? Not so far wrong though; the rooms seem illumined with sunshine. Brightest pictures of birds, flowers, and children in gilded frames adorn the walls; brilliant scarlet geraniums and yellow crocuses are in the windows; twenty of the snuggest little cribs ranged round, above each the name of some sweet flower; and then all kinds of pretty toys; but, best of all, some of the dearest little real flowers. Yes, sweet buds that can talk and laugh, and twine themselves very lovingly round your heart, and within those tiny buds such a precious treasure is enwrapped,—the rich jewel of a never-dying soul, which it cost the blood of Jesus to redeem.

Peep into this cot. Tucked in the soft blankets lies little Jamie, wan and pinched, and with an old man's face. He is an orphan, his only friend a poor old "granny." The name of the cot, "Heather Bell," meaning solitude, and the beautiful promise, "I will not forsake thee" (Isa. xlii. 16), seems just to fit into his sad case.

Another, of fifteen months old, lying in nurse's arms, is a living skeleton, and though the good care and food have done much to prolong its life, yet we feel the little "Star of Bethlehem" will soon be taken from all her suffering to live above the stars. Still, it is sweet to minister to the needs of the little one while on earth for his sake, who lay in poverty and want among the beasts of the stall that we, through his poverty, might be made rich.

Little "Violet" toddles up to us, bringing all the dolls she can find, and holding out her arms to be nursed. She has a good mother, but her father is in penal servitude for fifteen years. When a few months old, "Violet" was stolen from her mother, and after many weeks restored.

And now what is this nursery? Little more than a year ago it was like the surrounding houses—an abode of thieves and desperate characters. Now it has been transformed by Mr. George Holland into a shelter where poor mothers may leave their little ones during the day while they are out at work. The children are washed, dressed in nice clean clothes, and fed with good nourishing food for a few pence a day. Their homes are generally very cold and miserable, and the babies sometimes cry very much when taken back. A coster's baby, after leaving the nursery, used to be out many hours in the night, sleeping in a basket under her mother's stall in the street. What wonder that the exposure killed the little "Primrose," as the chill frosts nip many a flower!

But is it not delightful to hear of such cases as these? "May-blossom," though only two years old, used to scur when first brought in; the young nurse checked her by putting her hand over her lips; gradually the habit was broken, and little "May" would place her tiny hand over father's mouth when he used bad words. If asked, "Who loves you?" she would say, "Father and mother." "But who loves you most?" "Jesus," was her reply. After a very short time she was called away to bloom in the Eden above. So just in time the little swearer was taught to lip the Name which is above every name. Another being asked, "Why do you love Jesus?" answered, "Because He first loved me." Thus baby lips are being taught to tell of Jesus and his love, and infant voices sing of the "little children who are the precious jewels, his loved and his own." Mothers, too, are learning to bring their infants cleaner, and the texts often speak to them.

Many dear children have helped by their gathered pennies to furnish the soft, warm beds where the tired little heads now rest so snugly, and made the pretty clothes to cover the tiny limbs which own little else but dirty rags, and sent the toys which make the children's voices fill the house with their merry laughter. The rocking-horse was given by forty little girls, and "Ragged Robin" has been entirely paid for by the little readers of THE CHRISTIAN.

We wish we could give you a glimpse into the sad homes where these little wild flowers grow, in the great forest of wretched houses, and let you know some of the sorrowful tales about them. It would make you so happy that for a few hours at least you have the privilege of letting some sunbeams into the dreary lives of these little ones, whose "angels do always behold the face of our Father in heaven."

In addition to the twenty cots there is one waiting to shelter a little homeless child when the Lord shall send it. A play-room is now being added for the younger children in George-yard Ragged School, who are too old for the day nursery in Angel-alley.

YOUNG MEN.

LIVERPOOL YOUNG MEN'S THANKSGIVING MEETING.

A young men's meeting for united praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for the wonderful measure of success and blessing with which the work amongst the young men of Liverpool and neighbourhood has been attended was held in the Circus, Whitechapel, on Monday evening, the 6th inst., and was very largely attended by young men. Mr. Alexander Pitt, jun. (one of the young men), presided. The meeting, which was much enlivened by singing, was addressed by the Chairman, by the Revs. Dr. Harrison (St. Silas's), Patrick White, R. H. Lundie, M.A.; Messrs. B. Radcliffe, Bigland, A. West-Watson, Walker, and others. Many ministers and other well-known friends of young men were also present. The work amongst the young men and boys of Liverpool still goes on, meetings being held every night from 8.30 to 9.30 in the Circus, besides very many others all over the town. The churches are beginning more than ever to see the importance of having for themselves good young men's meetings; many have had these for some time past, while others are springing up into existence. Prayer is again desired that this work may not only be sustained, but that it may increase, extending itself on every side for the dear Master's sake.

FORMATION OF Y.M.C.A. AT RUNCORN.

A Young Men's Christian Association has been successfully started here. On Thursday evening last a meeting was held, attended by considerably over 200 young men. Mr. Robert Shaw occupied the chair. Mr. Samuel Nash (Secretary of the Liverpool Association) attended, and having fully explained the objects and work of Young Men's Christian Associations, it was unanimously resolved to forthwith form one for Runcorn. Rules were adopted which embrace what is termed the "Paris basis," and "conversion to God" the test of active membership; also the officers for the year were elected. The Chairman (who was also elected President) announced his intention to contribute £10 towards their yearly expenses; also to give £100 towards new premises for the Association. The prayers of God's people are desired that this new Association may prove a means of much blessing to the young men of this populous town and district.

Mr. T. SHULDHAM HENRY has removed to La Basse Floride, St. Servan, France.

A LADY CORRESPONDENT appeals to us on behalf of a small congregation of evangelical Christians in the town of Clermont Ferrand, Puy-de-Dôme, France. "With the exception of one family it is entirely composed of converts from Romanism. The people are so poor they are unable to provide a Protestant instructor for their children, and have to send them for education to the Roman Catholic schools, running the risk of having them drawn back into that church." MAJOR COLE ON INTEMPERANCE.

ON the evening of the last day of the Perth Conference addresses were given to a crowded audience in the City Hall by Mr. R. Radcliffe and Major Cole. Mr. Radcliffe's address was mainly an amplification of the one he delivered at the Conference the day before, and the substance of it has already appeared in our columns. He pleaded most eloquently for a vigorous prosecution of renewed and extensive evangelistic effort, not only in Scotland, but in many parts of the world where God seems to be opening the way in a very marvellous and unmistakable manner, as, for instance, in China, India, Africa, and the land of the Nestorians. Would that all the Lord's servants had the same burning zeal and unquestioning faith as Mr. Radcliffe; there would be multitudes laying themselves on the altar for service in all the lands, and the Lord would visit us of a truth.

Major Cole's memorable address was, if less palatable perhaps to many Christians, all the more needful, and fitted in well with Mr. Radcliffe's appeal. It came, too, with singular force from Major Cole, seeing that he could speak from sad experience; his graphic, though painful recital of personal deliverance from the power of strong drink produced a deep impression on the audience. From the facts stated by Major Cole, and those within our own cognizance, we are strongly convinced of the necessity of very plain speaking on this question, and we believe our brother's address was productive of good effect in more cases than one. But we must let him speak for himself.

He said:—While our dear friend Mr. Radcliffe has been speaking, my heart has been drawn very much towards a subject that is sinking thousands and tens of thousands of souls every year. I have never dared to speak upon it before to so many men of God, and were it not that God saw me in my sins, reached down and lifted me up, I probably would not be here to-night to tell of his love. What I want to say will not be very popular with some of you. I know I could say pleasant things to you, but I must meet you before God; and this sin is one that is sweeping many of our friends away. I pray God that I may say nothing that will not be for the honour and glory of his name.

Jesus said (John ii. 39), "Take ye away the stone." There is a stone in the way, and the moment you mention it, it brings a wet blanket on the meeting. It takes Daniel's God to make a man talk about intemperance now-a-days; you want grace from on high to say anything against this sin. But I thank God for the privilege to-night of telling dying souls in Perth, who are slaves to this sin, that God is ready to save every drunkard in the land, whether he be a Christian or not. Every time I think of it a cold sweat comes over me. A very dear friend of mine was once in a railway collision in America, and the moment he hears of a disaster or any accident on a railway, he nearly faints away, and sometimes is thrown into spasms. And when this demon of intemperance comes before me, I shiver all over. I know what it is, I have been through it, but thank God I am safe to-night.

Major Cole proceeded to set forth an appalling array of facts within his own knowledge, showing the ravages of strong drink. We cannot quote them all in detail, but give the purport of some of them. He had that day, he said, received a letter from a friend in America, making mention of two cases. One was that of a young man of good position, who had fallen through drink, and was ultimately lodged in the United States Prison. He had heard the Major speak to about 1500 prisoners there, and now he was endeavouring to undo the past and serve Christ. Another instance was that of a minister of the Gospel, who was seized with delirium tremens while reading God's Word, and had to be taken out of the pulpit. These were samples, he said, among many others, of what drink was doing in America. Major Cole described a statue he had seen in the Crystal Palace—that of a man with two serpents coiled about his body, and holding him fast. "I tell you, my friends, I would rather have 10,000 snakes round me, crushing this body, than to have the snake I once had in my body—the snake of intemperance."

A British soldier in India was, for some misdemeanour, put into a hole in the ground. There is there a very poisonous snake, from whose bite thousands die every year. During the night that this poor man spent in his underground prison, he heard a hissing noise, and he recognized it as coming from one of these poisonous reptiles. It came and crawled into his bosom, and lay against his heart all night. When he was released in the morning they found that the terror of that night had made every hair on his head white. Many men and women were passing through more terrible scenes than that.

A friend in Liverpool lately called on a man who was an invalid, and pointed him to Christ; he believed he accepted the Saviour. One day shortly afterwards he went upstairs into the room, and found the man dying. His wife's arms were about his neck; and as she was in this position, while the death-rattle was in her husband's throat, the visitor discovered that she was dead drunk on his breast.

That is what drink is doing, said the Major; it is carrying away not only those of the lower classes, but some of the very gems of society. He did not know whether it was so here, but in America it was taking some of the best men in the country. He had been told only that day, on good authority, that very recently a minister had died in the North of Scotland of delirium tremens, and had required several men to hold him. He believed, too, that spirit-flasks had been brought into that Convention. They might talk hardly of him for saying these things, but if they had suffered what he had done, they could not help saying them. He could not be silent. A dear friend of his had told him the other day of a certain evangelist going to a place. He asked for, and insisted upon having, some stimulants before he could do God's work. People said it was necessary to health. He did not know how it was here, but in America none of the prisoners were allowed intoxicating drinks, and he had never heard a single instance of a man dying because he was deprived of it.

To show the hold the drinking customs of society have on many, Major Cole told how, the other day, he had said to a friend—"Won't you, for Christ's sake, throw aside the drink? You are in a position to influence others for good if you will give it up, and yet you go on." His friend replied—"You stick to your text, and I'll stick to my drink."

After some further testimony of a similar character as to the social and spiritual devastation caused by intoxicating drinks, Major Cole gave his personal experiences in a way that very sensibly thrilled the meeting. He told how he had been induced to take intoxicants at first by medical advice; how by-and-by they gained the mastery over him, until he was a hopeless slave to the power of the cup; how he struggled in his own strength time after time to give it up, but invariably failed; and, last of all, of the dreadful struggle through which he passed, lasting for long hours, before he was able, through God's grace, to dash the deadly thing away for ever. He took the bottle that had been his master so long, and, breaking it in pieces, in the name of Jesus Christ, he was able to declare himself for ever free. From that day to this God had kept him; and the God who had saved him would save every drunkard in Scotland if they would only take Him at his word. In concluding, he said he hoped the statement of what God had done for him would be sufficient apology for having said so much on this subject to so many of his fellow-Christians. Rather than set an evil example before one brother, he would ask the Lord to take him away to-night.

We do not think any apology was needed on Major Cole's part. It is patent to every thoughtful and observant Christian that this subject demands the plainest and most honest treatment, in view of the terrible havoc that drink is playing all about us, in the Church as well as outside it; and we hope Major Cole's earnest words, wherever he goes, will have a beneficial effect in arousing a strong Christian sentiment against the prevailing customs of the day. Before the close of the meeting, the Major, with Mr. and Miss Cole, most sweetly sang the hymn, "Yield not to temptation." We purpose giving this beautiful Gospel hymn in an early issue.

A SERMON TO SERVANTS.—On Sunday week Mr. Gawin Kirkham delivered the Annual Address to Servants in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on "The Servants of the Bible." The following characters were dwelt upon and illustrated by Scripture examples:—An honoured servant, Eliezer, Abraham's steward, Gen. xxiv.; a selfish servant, Jacob, Gen. xxix.; a faithful servant, Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, Gen. xxxv. 8; a God-fearing servant, Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 9; patient servants, Naaman's, 2 Kings v.; a dishonest and lying servant, Gehazi, 2 Kings 5; a sick servant, the Centurion's, Luke vii. 1; an active servant, Rhoda, Acts xii. 13, 14; a converted servant, Onesimus, Philemon; and the only model servant, the Lord Jesus Christ, Matt. xx. 28. The words servant, serve, &c., occurred 782 times in the Bible, while the word master occurred only 155 times. The number of female servants in London was computed at more than 100,000, of whom 15,000 were always in search of places. There was a large attendance, and very considerable interest was manifested in the meeting.

MAJOR COLE AT CHESTER.

THE meetings have grown in interest and number. On Friday evening, the 17th, there were two meetings—the first in the Town Hall, and an overflow meeting in the Music Hall. The best wine came last. It was evident that prayers were answered that evening, when a good number in both halls rose to be prayed for, and to express their willingness to receive the Saviour.

The testimonies of some were very precious. One who had been a prodigal had been convinced of sin on Sunday evening in listening to the discourse on the Prodigal Son, and was led to believe his Heavenly Father would give him a welcome home. He is a widower, and has five children. "My sin," said he, "has scattered them." He rejoices now that he has been led to Chester to hear of God's love towards him in Christ.

Another was induced to come to one of the meetings by a backslider who had been blessed. "I came to chaff; I am sorry now, sir, that I came for such a purpose. What will I do?" God's Word was read to him. Wondering at the simplicity of the way of salvation, he professed to accept Christ, to receive Christ's pure wheat instead of Satan's empty "chaff."

Two or three young men brought their companions to the meeting, and they were brought to take God at his word, and accept his great salvation, so that there are now seven of them in the same shop decided for Christ, and looking for Him. Major Cole mentioned another case of a lady in years who had not come to Christ because she was unworthy and felt herself unfit to come to the Saviour.

A soffer came to the meeting, and was impressed, and became so miserable that he had to seek pardon after going to his house. Many were blessed. God's people were greatly refreshed and revived. That this good work may be carried on is the desire of many in Chester.

The work was materially aided by the singing of Mrs. and Miss Cole, who are better in health.

The Christian workers have been amply rewarded in the joy that they have experienced and the good they have received during the meetings. The children were not forgotten. There was a special service for them on Friday afternoon.

KINGSLAND GOSPEL MISSION.—The tenth year of our labour for the Lord Jesus in this neighbourhood in the North-East of London is now completed, and we thankfully chronicle the goodness of the Lord towards us. How true have we proved his promise, "As thy day, so shall thy strength be." We have now taken for a term a large new school-building near, belonging to the London School Board, at a considerable rental, for earnest work on Lord's-days, and more especially on Lord's-day evenings. The neighbourhood enjoys quite a juvenile notoriety from the great numbers of its youthful population, and it is our purpose (p.v.) to take these poor waifs—which, unless saved therefrom, will rise up to swell our records of crime and pollute our streets—and bring them under the sound of good words and Christian example and influence during the hours of ordinary church service, providing for them a "special children's service" in the largest room of this noble building, the first of which was held last Lord's-day evening with much success. The services of Christian workers suitable for the young would be very acceptable. Our annual report sent free on application.

LINCOLN.—A correspondent writes:—In the City of Lincoln during the last fortnight special religious services have been conducted by Mr. Taylor, of the East-end Training Institute, London, in a large hall kindly granted by Mr. Maltby, Mayor of the city. Very large and attentive congregations, especially of the young and of the working-classes, have been gathered together night after night in increased numbers until the large hall has been crowded, and many have been compelled to go away not able to gain sitting or standing room. Each evening there have been many earnest inquirers, and numbers have publicly professed that the glorious Gospel of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ has proved the wisdom and power of God unto their personal salvation. Mr. Taylor introduced quite a new feature in the city of Lincoln in connexion with these services by gathering together the Christian workers at eight o'clock in the morning. At an experience-meeting on Sunday afternoon many rose to bear testimony to the saving power of the Gospel of Christ; but as there was not time for all to speak, Mr. Taylor, at the close of the meeting, requested those present who had got good during the week to stand up, and many, both male and female, rose to their feet. By the kind permission of the Mayor, Mr. Taylor will continue his labours during this week, and while we thank God for the mighty work of grace already accomplished, we earnestly trust that all hearts will be opened to the work of grace which is to follow.

COMMERCIAL MORALITY.

IN THE CHRISTIAN of Sept. 16, the Rev. Wm. Johnston is reported to have said, at a meeting of the Belfast Presbytery,—

"It was a time of great commercial depression, and, he was sorry to say, a time when there was a fearful development of commercial immorality. In London, Manchester—in fact, wherever they looked—they saw the most gigantic frauds. The commercial world was getting into a state that was really alarming. Wherever they looked, whether on the Continent or America, they saw the same dishonourable dealing on the part of commercial men. It was a fearful fact that the only men who had kept themselves safe were those who had so little faith in commercial dealings that they did no business at all. Things had now come to such a pass that one hardly knew whom to trust in the community," &c.

As a business man of thirty-five years' standing, I protest most indignantly against the above sweeping assertions as to the integrity of the commercial community at large. Because a few dishonourable men have concocted huge frauds, and involved many honest men in the consequences of their evil deeds, that is no reason why the whole commercial world is to be slandered. Take the highest estimated amount of the liabilities of the firms who have failed (as summarized in the public prints), and look also at the immense sums in bills and cheques passing daily through the London Bankers' Clearing House alone, and it is quite evident that the fraudulent transactions recently exposed form a very small portion indeed of the ordinary business transactions of this country—not one-thousandth part of it.

Facts, on a smaller scale, within my own knowledge, also tend to disprove some of the assertions of the reverend gentleman. I am principal in three separate business concerns (different trades), employing 600 to 700 persons, and having transactions in buying or selling with 400 to 500 business firms in this country, in America, and on the Continent. For the past three years to the present time I have done my average amount of business, with the usual profit; and I have not made more than the average amount of bad debts. I have of course a somewhat wide circle of acquaintances amongst business men, and I am obliged emphatically to deny the assertion that "one hardly knows whom to trust in the community; and that the only men who have kept themselves safe are those who have done no business at all."

A READER OF "THE CHRISTIAN"
FROM ITS EARLIEST DAYS.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.—Having spent a recent Sabbath amongst the hop-pickers, I must urge Christian workers to consider the vast field of usefulness now open to them in the various hop-gardens. I was working in the neighbourhood of Goudhurst and Marden, accompanied by some of the boys of Mr. Kendon's school, who formed a most efficient choir. We were engaged all day, and in every case met with marked attention and gratitude. The field is a very large one, and the labourers very few comparatively. Will not those who have tasted of the River of Life go down to these districts and, with the aid of the Holy Spirit, become channels of life to these poor neglected creatures? Portions of Scripture, tracts, and Gospel leaflets are thankfully accepted by all who can read.

NEW MISSION HALL, NOTTINGHAM.—On Saturday, Aug. 14, a new Mission Hall was opened here by a meeting for praise and prayer. Although the busiest evening in the week, in a neighbourhood noted for its ungodliness, the ground floor of the hall was filled with a deeply interested and sympathetic congregation, who evidently felt that that building was their building, and that they were assembled to give expression to their gratitude to God for his goodness, and to dedicate their hall to his service and to the honour of his name. Mr. Hodgson and Mr. Cutts conducted the opening service; the Rev. Thomas Herbert, of Cheadle, gave an address; and the Revs. F. Smith, of Fainswick, and R. Dawson, of Nottingham, also took part. The opening services were continued throughout the following week. The building will hold about 600 people. It is a most valuable addition to the means of evangelistic operations in Nottingham, and we are sure that, under the charge of Messrs. Hodgson and Cutts, and with the co-operation of their church, numbering upwards of 130 members, a most successful work will, with the blessing of God, be accomplished from week to week, and from year to year, in the densely populated district of Sneinton Market. The whole undertaking has been from first to last a disinterested effort for the glory of God, and we hope that many will be glad to have a share in the work.

THE TWO ROYAL VOLUMES.

I WAS sitting in my little garden this evening, enjoying a cup of tea under my clematis-covered arbour, while glancing over the pages of the new CHRISTIAN, when I saw an announcement that a lecture on "The Two Royal Volumes" was to be given at the monthly meeting of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission at the School-room in Melior-street, near London-bridge. My curiosity was excited, and having no strong home-claims or office duties requiring attention, I immediately started for the old familiar spot, where, once a month for many years, open-air preachers have taken sweet counsel together, and stored up many lessons of wisdom and knowledge.

The lecturer, Mr. James Crowther, of Deptford, was a stranger to me, but, once heard, there is no fear of forgetting him soon. He first read from our Open-Air Mission Report some of the "qualifications for open-air preachers," and took for his text two—viz., "a knowledge of common things," and "good illustrative powers." Some of these common things he was going to talk about, and probably we might use them as illustrations. His two volumes were Revelation and Creation. Both had God for their author, and both contained difficulties. That men should reject the Bible because of its difficulties was absurd, when so common an object as the field daisy presented difficulties which no one could master. Volume 2 was full of illustrations for Volume 1.

In the 1st of Romans, Paul states that "the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." In the 1st of Genesis, Moses tells us that—"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Therefore matter was not eternal. There were six stages in connexion with creation which were beautifully illustrative of the new creation—1. Chaos or darkness. 2. The brooding of the Spirit. 3. Light. 4. Life. 5. Growth. 6. Fruit. Man did not see creation as to its process, but he saw it in its completion. So man did not see the process of conversion, but he saw it in its results. Thus the invisible things of God were clearly seen, being understood by the things that were made; and Moses' record threw light upon Paul's writings. Our lot was cast in a day of privilege and of peril. The writings of men like Darwin and Tyndal, if they meant anything, meant the utter subverting of the first principles of revelation. We were here warned against Clodd's "Childhood of our World," as being a dangerous book for children, on account of its fascinating style; and in another part of the lecture we were recommended to read Wood's "Common Objects of the Microscope," and the Sunday School Union's "Bible Illustrator," as helpful in studying these "Two Royal Volumes."

Touching on geology, the lecturer said it was clear we were living over the remains of another world. And it was a singular fact that the fossils discovered were in the exact order of the days of creation as described in Genesis. Man was there stated to be the last act of creation, and we were specially requested to notice that no fossil man had ever been found. Regarding the Book of Job as being over 3000 years old, it was remarkable how scientific discoveries had been anticipated therein. What did science know of the gravitation of the earth till the time of Sir Isaac Newton? yet Job had declared, 3000 years before, "He hangeth the earth upon nothing" (Job xxvi. 7). Again, it was a modern discovery that the centre of the earth was liquid fire, but Job said in his day, "As for the earth, out of it cometh bread, and under it is turned up as it were fire" (Job xxviii. 5), the Hebrew being a strong and more accurate expression.

I will not attempt to reproduce the astronomical illustrations; for when we are told that, though light travels at the rate of 192,000 miles in a second—i.e., eight times round the earth in the tick of a clock—yet it requires 330,000 years to travel from the Milky Way to the earth, the magnitude of the figures forbids the mind to grasp the stupendous fact. Yet the Book of Job speaks of "the sweet influences of the Pleiades," &c. (Job xxxviii. 31), as of things which were then well known.

Passing on to entomology—i.e., the natural history and description of insects—he maintained that the nucleus of all modern discovery was found in the Bible. But his first illustration was new, and probably failed to carry conviction of its accuracy to all minds. He asserted that the hornet mentioned in Deut. vii. 20 as threatened to drive the people out of Palestine, was the Roman General Vespasian, who commanded the Roman army when Jerusalem was taken, A.D. 70. He based this assertion on the fact that the Latin for hornet was

"vespa," a contraction of Vespasian. Coming more directly to the design-argument (by the way recommending Paley's "Natural Philosophy" very strongly), he gave a fine illustration in the spider, described in Prov. xxx. 28 as taking hold with her hands, and his diagrams—one showing a magnified spider's foot—enabled us to see its wonderful comb-like construction. We were again lost in wonder while considering that the house-fly has 4000 eyes in one, the yellow butterfly 17,000, and the cockchafer 300,820.

When speaking of light in connexion with the eye, some suggestive lessons were pointed out. Light was the prime element of Deity. "God is light"—light itself, not like it. Light ran in lines. How was David so accurately informed of this when he spake (Ps. xix. 4) of lines of light going out through all the earth? Light was composed of three royal colours—blue, red, and yellow, an illustration of the Trinity. Light could not be adulterated. Light and darkness could never dwell together. We could only see the sun by the light the sun gives, as we could only see Christ by the light Christ gives. What the sun was in the natural world, that Christ was in the spiritual world. Both Old and New Testaments began and ended with light. Genesis opens with "Let there be light," and Malachi closes with "the Sun of Righteousness." Matthew opens with Christ as the rising Day Star, and the Revelation closes with the Lamb as the Light of the New Jerusalem.

Design was still further seen in the vegetable kingdom. Instead of "a fortuitous concourse of atoms" and "development," theories of would-be philosophers, the language of the Mosaic record is that God made everything "after his kind." Imagine the marvellous power of the great Creator when one leaf, only the tenth of an inch long and the eighth of an inch broad, contains 6800 cells, and these cells contain 315,000 moving globular bodies! This was under the head of the circulation of plants, as the blood circulates in the human body. Facts like these were dwelt upon in rapid succession, and we felt in separating that we ought to set a higher estimate on these two "Royal Volumes," and by more diligent search and comparison be able to put the truth of God more intelligently before the people in our public ministry. Truly God "doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number" (Job v. 9).

BIBLE FLOWER-MISSION.—In consequence of the scarcity of flowers, during the autumn and winter months, the depôts of this Mission at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, and Home of Industry, Spitalfields, will only be opened once a week for the reception of flowers after Michaelmas—viz., Wednesday at Spitalfields, and Thursday at Mildmay,—when any gifts of flowers and fruits (fresh or preserved) will be thankfully received. The records of the Flower Mission will be ready about Michaelmas, and will be sent post-free for three ld. stamps, on application to the Secretary at either depot. A sale of useful and fancy work will be held shortly at Kew in aid of this Mission.

CONVERSION OF A BRAHMIN.—The following encouraging extract from a letter from the Rev. Mr. Cooper, dated Nagpore, Aug. 12, received by the Rev. A. N. Somerville, was read at the noonday prayer-meeting lately, in Ewing-place Church, Glasgow:—"Let me state one fact in connexion with a native gentleman who attended our meetings here, and to whom Mrs. Cooper introduced you. He had been very deeply impressed by your addresses, and was on the point of coming out there and then to confess Christ, but lacked the courage to do so. On Sabbath, July 18, he came to our house in a very weak and exhausted state of body, but imploring to be admitted into the Church of Christ. He was a Brahmin, and had suppressed the truth for thirty years. He would not leave us, but broke his caste in our verandah, and threw away his sacred string. Most earnestly and urgently did he entreat me to make him a child of God. I told him I could not do so; but if he believed with all his heart on Jesus as the Son of God and the Saviour, God himself would take him into His family. 'I believe with all my heart; I have perfect confidence in Him; Christian me at once, now, before I leave this pakki' (in which he had come carried by six men), were the words he cried out. After prayer and some more conversation, we unhesitatingly took him into our house. Then came his Brahmin friends entreating him to go home with them, but he very firmly refused—confessed he was now a Christian. He remained with us, nursed day and night by Mrs. Cooper and some of our native Christians, till the following Friday, when he died a most happy and peaceful death. Our friend, no doubt, was late in coming, but if ever a man was in earnest to be numbered among the children of God, he was. He often spoke of your visit and the impressions made upon his mind by the truth then. Let us hope that he is now in glory; indeed, we have every reason to believe that he is."

THE SOCIAL UPLIFTING OF CABMEN.

I HAD the pleasure last December of saying a few words in THE CHRISTIAN on the movement (then confined to the provinces) for providing cabmen with shelters on the ranks. I have some reasons for believing that my paper was of some use in promoting the movement. To-day, my desire is briefly to refer to its present state and future prospects, as also incidentally to touch upon the welfare of cab-drivers in general.

Since I last wrote, the London Cabmen's Shelter Fund, headed by Lord Shaftesbury, has commenced operations, and has done some noble work in a comparatively brief space of time. The result of the London operations will probably be to make the movement a national one, and to lay it on a solid and lasting foundation. As you are aware, there are now upwards of a dozen shelters in London, with more to follow doubtless. The Alexandra Palace Company are also assisting by offering (in addition to the exhibition they intend to open of cabs and cab-horses on the 1st prox.) various prizes in reference to cabs. Some of the prizes are as follows:—To the cab-driver who has retained his badge and has been exempt for the longest period from any charge of cruelty to animals, reckless driving, drunkenness, insolence, or other offence; also to the cab-driver who has been for the longest period a member of the Temperance League, or of a temperance association; also to the exhibitors of the best designs for a cabmen's shelter, to secure comfort both in summer and winter. Later, no doubt, THE CHRISTIAN will have something to say as to the merits of this case. Perhaps it may be enough to state now that Lord Shaftesbury, the Lord Mayor, Colonel Henderson, and other distinguished persons are patrons.

Up to the present, cabmen have been unfortunately held up (perhaps in most cases by those who have heartlessly left them to their fate) as examples of warning, and sneered at as extortioners; but I think that the class in general (especially its provincial members) has been grossly calumniated. However, I think, judging from the evidence now available, that cabmen's worst days are almost over, and that the various means employed for their restoration to a proper level in the social scale have already so satisfactorily succeeded as to give much hope of future moral and social development. At the same time I would not be supposed to hold out any extraordinary hopes. All that reasonably can be expected is a fair average of improvement.

I can sincerely repeat my former statement as to the encouragement—not without disappointments—to be expected from labours amongst them. My slight efforts for their temporal and spiritual good have been abundantly rewarded by the unvarying civility and gratitude which I have received from every one of them without an exception. Of course in no case have I gone in any other capacity than as a friend, well-wisher, and honorary missionary. It seems to me that if we went among such men more like fellow-pilgrims to the Eternal City, and less like incorruptible Pharisees, we should often come away refreshed, feeling satisfied that love is better than law, and that sympathy is the golden coin that will always fetch its proper value over more pretensions, but commoner metal. May I, in conclusion, ask promoters of good deeds among cabmen to be kind enough to forward me information? By so doing they will help forward the movement.

MR. SCROGGIE AT HARTLEPOOL.—By invitation on the part of the Hartlepool Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. J. M. Scroggie, the Scotch evangelist, has been engaged in conducting a series of religious services at Hartlepool, with results of the most pleasing description. He held two services on Sunday at the Theatre Royal, which were very largely attended, not only by the members and adherents of the various denominations in the town, but by the careless and unthinking portion of the community; and on every evening during this week he has preached and conducted revival meetings at the Temperance Hall, aided by several Christian ministers and most of the young men belonging to the Association. A cordial invitation was extended to all the Church clergy and Dissenting ministers, and thus far those who have sustained an important part in the meetings are the Rev. Robert Harworth, Wesleyan minister; the Rev. C. Rhodes, Independent minister; the Rev. M. Cotton, Methodist New Connexion minister; the Rev. J. B. Whyte, Presbyterian minister; and the Rev. Mr. Morey, of West Hartlepool. The results of these services are seen in a considerable accession to the different churches, and we are informed are fully equal to expectations.—South Durham Mercury.

THE LITTLE WHILE.

On for the peace which floweth as a river,
 Making life's desert places bloom and smile!
 Oh for the faith to grasp Heaven's bright "for ever,"
 Amid the shadows of earth's "little while"!

"A little while," for patient vigil-keeping,
 To face the stern, to wrestle with the strong;
 "A little while," to sow the seed with weeping,
 Then bind the sheaves, and sing the harvest song.

"A little while," to wear the weeds of sadness,
 To pace, with weary step, through miry ways;
 Then—to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
 And clasp the girdle round the robe of praise.

"A little while," midst shadow and illusion,
 To strive, by faith, love's mysteries to spell;
 Then—read each dark enigma's bright solution;
 Then—hail aught's verdict, "He doth all things well."

"A little while," the earthen pitcher taking
 To wayside brooks, from far-off fountains fed,
 Then the cool lip its thirst for ever slaking
 Beside the fulness of the Fountain-head.

"A little while," to keep the oil from failing;
 "A little while," faith's flickering lamp to trim;
 And then, the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
 To haste to meet Him with the bridal hymn.

And He, who is Himself the Gift and Giver,
 The future glory and the present smile,
 With the bright promise of the glad "for ever,"
 Will light the shadows of the "little while."

GREAT SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION IN AMERICA.

Recent American papers bring accounts of a monster gathering of those interested in Sunday-schools at Chautauqua Lake in the State of New York. The Convention lasted from the 3rd to the 16th ult., and was attended throughout by 4000 or 5000 persons. The proceedings were all carried on outside, and were very heartily entered into, despite a storm of rain. One of the incidents of the gathering was a visit from the President of the United States and party, when the attendance was more than trebled. An address of welcome was delivered, and the President was subsequently presented with two copies of the Bible for himself and his partner in life. The attractions of the Convention were almost unlimited, and of a more varied character than is customary with us at such meetings.

Dr. Cuyler, in writing to a New York paper, says—"My visit to the Chautauqua assembly impressed me with the fact that the teaching of Sunday-school teachers is one of the most essential steps in evangelizing the nation. Such a course of instruction as is afforded in two weeks at that assembly will be a valuable help for a life-time. In addition to the lectures and normal class exercises, there were large models of the Jewish tabernacle, the pyramids of Egypt, and the city of Jerusalem, &c. An oriental house, as large as life, stood in one part of the grounds. In another part was an extensive plan of Palestine, done in earth and stone, with a Mount Hermon ten feet high, and all the chief headlands, cities, and rivers in miniature. I observed that the storm had so swollen the 'Dead Sea' that a forcing-pump was drawing out the surplus water through a pipe spouting from a tree-trunk. The 'Jordan,' too, had overflowed its banks in time of harvest. This promises to become a permanent and powerful school of practical instruction. A germ has been planted on the Chautauqua Lake which will yet grow into a great and fruitful tree."

REV. W. HAY M. H. AITKEN writes:—"My address for the future will be Holmeside, Duffield, Derby. My plans of work, so far as they are yet fixed, are as follows:—Sept. 26 to Oct. 2, St. Philomena's, Liverpool; Oct. 3-10, Victoria Hall; Oct. 11-16, Burton-in-Lonsdale; Oct. 17-30, Huddersfield; Nov. 7-14, Ratcliffe, near Nottingham; Nov. 14-21, St. Mary's, Nottingham. During the remainder of the year I am a little uncertain as to which of two or three different places I shall finally decide to visit. Jan. 9 I go to All Saints, Brighton; and on the 16th I hope to commence work there at the Dome, and to continue for another fortnight. Feb. 5-11, Worcester Mission; Feb. 12 to March 3, Bradford; March 11-27, Sowerby-Bridge; April 2 to 9, Southgate."

UNITED EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT DOVER.

We have now come to the close of the fortnight of special services which commenced on Monday, Sept. 6, and have been held daily until Friday, the 17th. The services are closed, but not the quickened service that must result. Day by day at noon a goodly number have assembled in the Wellington Hall for prayer, and most invigorating have been these precious hours when the breath of the Lord has been felt. Day by day, again, in the afternoon, a much larger number—latterly a hall full of people—have met to hear the Bible-readings. And in the evening of each day the blessed words of the Gospel of the living Christ have been the "seed sown in good ground, which brought forth fruit," both in the Wellington and the Town Halls. And God only knows how much of the seed which did not yield its fruit at the hour of sowing is even now taking root, firm and lasting root, in the hearts of a multitude in this town.

The evangelists who have been helping us in this work are all well known to your readers. Mr. H. Varley has worked throughout the whole fortnight. During the first week, Mr. H. Moorhouse and Rev. W. Haslam were here also; and during the second week, Mr. Macnutt and Lord Radstock have added their labours.

Of the character of the addresses we have heard I need say very little. Your readers know something of the power with which the Holy Spirit clothes these evangelists for their work and calling, and words are but feeble to tell the stirring motions of the redeeming power of God. Mr. Varley's evening addresses in the Town Hall have drawn together crowded audiences, and at no time has the word been barren.

To many of us who have marked with gratefulness the growing interest evinced in the services, it is a matter of sorrow that they have ceased. Every day of this latter week there have been fresh tokens of increasing interest, coupled with daily increasing fruitfulness, and on the last evening of the services the acknowledged conversions were about threefold any previous evening.

Oh, how many a heart in this town has felt a hand it never felt before; how many an ear has heard a voice coming down from the infinite glories of the eternal Christ, like music touched with thunder; how many a lip that, long sealed in the simple cowardice of an unconfessing faith, never won a soul to tearful yearning by its utterance of Christ's saving grace, has broken the silence, and whilst breaking it has found a new sunshine come to its inmost soul, not only breaking the silence, but driving off the darkness of its needless night? Blessed be God, who has surrounded us with children of the second birth! Blessed be God, who has turned the wilderness into a fruitful field, and filled the solitary places with songs of salvation! Blessed be God, for there be many, very many, old and young, from all classes, of various trainings—many who a fortnight since were walking in unconcern after the world's poor shams alone, but are to-day treading, in the power of Christ, their first steps after the abiding riches in glory.

But whilst we know of much result, I am convinced, by constant and careful observation, that had there been double the number of Christians "watching for souls," we should have known of double the fruits. Those Christians who have so watched have gathered night after night; and, oh! my heart almost saddens as I think of the anxious faces I have seen rise from their seats by the side of Christians and leave the halls without one whispered word of encouragement or promise. I am more than ever convinced how largely the number of those who are gathered to the inquiry-meetings is dependent upon the fidelity of God's stewards. I could give you several instances of conversion brought about only in part by the addresses of the evangelists, in much greater part by the perseverance of Christians who would not let them go until the Lord had blessed them. The power truly is alone with God. But how strenuously He bids us be faithful and courageous! Never, never does he use his power to foster our supineness, our half-heartedness, our selfish unconcern for the souls of others. How should we tremble lest, through our faithlessness, the soul whose body pressed against ours in these meetings should be passing headlong to a frightful hell, whilst we lifted not so much as a finger to arrest its terrible damnation! May the Lord God have mercy towards us.

However, let me close in a thankful strain, for God has mightily visited us. Abundantly has he answered the prayers of his believing ones. "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground," He said, and it has come to pass. I believe the fruits of these meetings are already filling hundreds of souls: that Day shall reveal it. But this is certain, that many have been aroused, many enriched, many enlightened, many born again. This is certain, that God has been with us. This is certain, that the grand old Gospel of his love in Jesus has received fresh illustration of its saving power amongst us. And this also is certain, that we leave off, standing on a higher platform of power for service than we started from. And now we step forth to our ordinary methods of work, not to see this great shower of blessing cease, but to see greater things. Unto God be glory, for our sufficiency is of God. And let those who have been praying for our town not cease their prayers, but quicken them with joyful praise. A praise-meeting will be held on Friday evening next in the Wellington Hall.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.

AFTER a successful campaign of eleven weeks the tent has been removed from Ardwick to Gould-street, Pendleton. During the period above named, scores (we refrain from stating numbers) have been brought to the Saviour, and are now following Him in loving discipleship. Many who have never attended any place of worship have been attracted to the services, and have been the most regular in their attendance. Some who came for awhile out of curiosity, and openly scoffed at the preaching, the prayers, and the personal efforts of those who spoke to them, have left the "seat of the scornful," and have turned away from the "counsel of the ungodly," and are amongst the most eager listeners to the Word. The Bible and New Testament classes have been thronged by young people and some aged ones.

During the last week in Ardwick the tent was crowded—the entrances thronged. The want of Christian workers has often been felt. Opportunities for outside services have frequently been lost from this cause. Thursday night (16th) was the last night of the tent services. Dr. Ziemann spoke, with unusual power, on the Marriage Feast (Matt. xxii.). At the close there were numerous inquirers.

The classes will be continued in a large room adjacent, and as there is a probability of a more substantial structure being erected as a substitute for the tent, many who have been instructed in the first principles of the doctrine of Christ will be provided with a place wherein they may be built up in their most holy faith.

The Circus meetings are still crowded, and made a blessing to many who are led to attend. The Bible-classes are attended by an average of about 150 young men, and are a powerful auxiliary in strengthening their resolutions, and in supplying them with spiritual nourishment.

At the Noon Prayer-meeting in the Religious Institute, on Monday, the 13th inst., it was stated that tent services had been commenced by the Rev. Mr. West, of St. Philip's Church, which had been crowded every night, and it was believed that much good had been done. On Friday, the 17th inst., Mr. Henry Moorhouse attended, and gave a practical address.

J. R.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK, N.—The following are the subjects for prayer that have been fixed for the daily noon prayer-meetings here:—

Monday: "The Word of God."—2 Thess. iii. 1.

Tuesday: "Children and Relatives."—Ps. cii. 28.

Wednesday: "Foreign Missions."—Ps. lxxii. 17, 19.

Thursday: "Home Missions and the Jews."—Matt. ix. 36; Isa. lxii. 6, 7.

Friday: "Our Own Neighbourhood."—Ps. lxxxv. 6.

Saturday: "Ministers of the Gospel."—Acts iv. 29.

REV. SHOLTO DOUGLAS IN CHINA.—Mr. Edmund Wheatley, writing from Ningpo on July 23, states that Mr. Douglas had just paid a flying visit of three days to that port. The small foreign community mustered in the little church daily at nine o'clock to hear the earnest evangelist, who also addressed a union meeting of Chinese Christians, an assembly of native preachers, and a gathering of foreign Christian workers. It is believed that much good has been done by these meetings. Mr. Douglas spent over a week in Shanghai, preaching twice or thrice a day in the Cathedral, the Union Chapel, and the Theatre. The results have been most encouraging. Christians of every name have united in the work, souls have been converted, believers have been revived, and classes have been formed for Bible study and Christian fellowship. Mr. Douglas has been pressed to visit Peking and the North of China previous to his trip to Japan and return to Europe.

THE PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

WE had glorious meetings on the 9th inst., in the new Lecture-Hall connected with the above Institute, on the occasion of the opening of the hall, which has been accomplished notwithstanding the opposition which Miss Robinson and her co-workers have had to bear.

The great question as to the place being exclusive, and only opened for teetotalers and religious men, &c., was solved very completely at the evening meeting, when a smart, intelligent sergeant of one of the regiments quartered here asked to be allowed to speak, and said—"Since I have been at this part I have almost daily visited the Institute, and, as a Roman Catholic, I can say that I have not been in any way molested as to my religion, neither has anyone tried to get me to sign the pledge," &c. When we remember that the piece of ground which had been granted to Miss Robinson by the Government was taken away from her again upon the representation that it was to be a kind of conventional affair, and that the greater part of the soldiers, especially the Roman Catholics, would be excluded, this testimony was conclusive.

As the son of a veteran soldier, who has served three years in a large troopship, and altogether over ten years in a man-of-war, in addition to five years in the dockyard, and who has thus had ample opportunity of judging in these matters, all I can say is, "Thank God for such a place to which a soldier or sailor with their friends can go and find suitable accommodation."

I remember a few years since, when we brought home to this port a regiment from a trying campaign, and on going to the barracks the night after they landed I saw them lying in heaps dead drunk, while the low beershops were full of the poor fellows. During the first few days three died through drink, and no such place as this Institute was then in existence for them to go to. And, sir, those who thought fit to oppose the work when our dear friend Miss Robinson took it up have not attempted, as far as I can learn, to do anything to meet the wants of those they professed to be so much interested in. However, thank God, the building is open, and is a great success.

Yours sincerely,

G. D. D.

MR. MOODY'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL AT CHICAGO.—Miss Cotton having just returned, after an absence from home of some weeks, begs to acknowledge the receipt of a few presents for Mr. Moody's Sunday-school from different friends. As, however, very few contributions have as yet been forwarded, and 450 presents at least are needed to complete the whole, Miss Cotton will be very glad to receive further contributions from any who feel disposed to help in the work. Parcels may be forwarded to her, with name and address of giver marked outside, at Tower-hill, Dorking.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

Mrs. SPURGEON is giving copies of her husband's "Lectures to my Students" to poor Baptist ministers who apply.

IT IS ESTIMATED that 68 per cent. of the membership of American evangelical churches is the fruit of Sunday-school work.

GREAT INDIGNATION has been caused in Cardiff owing to the magistrates having instructed the police to prevent street-preaching.

Mr. GLADSTONE recently wrote to a German author that "Germany now holds the first place on behalf of the world in asserting the necessity of limiting spiritual powers to spiritual things."

THE REVIVAL of religion in Moonta, Australia, has continued. In about six weeks no less than 260 persons professed to be converted, and there is good reason to believe that the results will be permanently beneficial.

PROTESTANT THEOLOGICAL FACULTY IN PARIS.—Notwithstanding great difficulties, the organization of a Protestant Theological Faculty in Paris has been nearly completed, under the patronage of three members of the National Assembly.

A POWERFUL REVIVAL IN MINNEAPOLIS, in which the different Churches have shared, has given a decided check to the infidelity, spiritualism, and scientific scepticism that prevailed in that city. Between 600 and 600 have joined the different Churches.

A SMALL IRON STEAMER, specially built for the use of Mr. Saker, the apostle of Western Africa, has been despatched from the Clyde. By its aid, Mr. Saker will be able to proceed up the river to visit the inland tribes, instead of having to walk over the mountains. The steamer is mainly the gift of Mr. Thomas Coats, of Paisley, who has named her the Helen Saker, after the devoted wife of the missionary.

"UNION IS STRENGTH."—A large meeting of missionaries and evangelists from different parts of Scotland was held in Glasgow on the 13th inst., at which it was resolved to "form themselves into a Union, as a means of promoting mutual co-operation and spiritual stimulus." It is proposed to have annual Conferences, and the first is to be held in Glasgow in May next. The secretaries are Mr. J. Johnston, 23, Maxwell-street, Partick; and Mr. John Pollock, 125, Greenhead-street, Glasgow.

CONSUMPTION OF SPIRITS.—During the first half of the present year the quantity of homo-trade spirits on which duty was paid for consumption in England as beverage was 7,987,435 gallons, which is 155,115 gallons more than in the corresponding half of the preceding year; in Scotland the quantity was 3,118,029 gallons, a decrease of 13,568 gallons; in Ireland 2,908,438 gallons, a decrease of 15,568 gallons. The total for the United Kingdom, therefore, was 14,013,912 gallons, showing an increase of 125,979 over the corresponding half of the preceding year.

THE Baptist denomination has to mourn the loss of another great and good man—the late Rev. Dr. Prichard, Llangollen, one of the most familiar and revered throughout the Principality, as well as to many English congregations and families. His death is a loss to all but himself, but his influence will long remain to carry on the work he loved so well, and for which he did so much. He entered his rest after little more than a week's illness, in his seventy-ninth year, and his honoured remains lie in front of the building where he laboured so long and so successfully.

SIMLA ZENANA MISSION.—A good work in India requires help. From information received direct from the field of labour, progress is certainly being made in reaching the homes of the women of India through the efforts of Zenana teachers. The time has now come for establishing a resident missionary lady at Simla, and it is necessary to purchase a house for her, and to enable her to make it a sanitarium for other Zenana workers when incapacitated by sickness—particularly as the Mission is not attached to any society. Further information may be obtained from A. F., 7, Onalow-crescent, S.W.

THE London City Mission Magazine for the present month contains a very interesting report of work carried on by one of their missionaries amongst the East African liberated slaves in London, who number no less than 1440. The article contains much information, and affords a sad picture of the state in which the poor creatures are found, not only in London, but also in the various ports and countries at which they are delayed in transit from their native land to that of their bondage. Altogether, the sketch is well worthy of perusal. It also contains the first part of a deeply stirring article by a missionary, entitled, "Twenty-seven Years' Mission-work amongst Working Men."

MONTREAL.—We were favoured by a visit from Mr. Jos. Weatherley, of London, England, who has been prominently connected with the revival work in that city. The cheering words which he spoke to us about the mighty work which God has been doing in that great city through his humble servants—Messrs. Moody and Sankey—were very refreshing, and we are looking for the time when it will be said of those in this city that "multitudes are in the valley of decision." He spoke at our meeting on Sabbath evening, and also at a special one on Monday evening, and the most pleasing results followed both meetings.—Christian Worker, Montreal.

THE REV. G. WARNER has held successful revival services at Netherton, Dudley Circuit, and the good work is advancing.

IT APPEARS that the sales of Church lands in Italy have reached, in less than eight years, a total of 493,798,230 lire, or close upon twenty millions sterling.

THE PROTESTANT MISSIONARIES IN CANTON, sixteen in number, have sent a communication to the Anglo-Oriental Society for the suppression of the opium trade.

J. MORETON, of the Brickfields Mission Hall, Sutton, Surrey, has, until-Christmas next, taken a chapel at Carshalton, situate in the midst of a large and necessitous population.

LAUSANNE, SWITZERLAND.—Meetings for the promotion of holiness will be held at Lausanne on the 23rd, and three following days. M. Theodore Monod will attend. The impetus given to religious life on the Continent is spreading far and wide. Next month a similar conference will be held at Yverdon.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Glasgow Herald calls attention to the fact that Romish lottery tickets are again being showered through the Post Office, and that a lottery was to take place in Dublin, and asks what is the present Government about to allow this state of things, which Mr. Gladstone's Government put down.

BEASTON HILL, LEEDS.—A series of evangelistic services have recently been held at this place by the Rev. R. Stainton, of Sheffield, which have been prolific of much good. Three meetings were held daily, each being attended with manifest tokens of the Divine presence and blessing.

SIGNS FOLLOWING.—Some of the Bow-road Hall converts have transformed a public-house in the Burdett-road into a preaching-hall, and have, by their own desire, become a branch of the Tower Hamlets Mission. The name given to the meeting-place is "The Pioneer Gospel Hall," and a distinctive feature at present amongst them is their frequent and happy Bible-readings, which are held in addition to the Gospel and other meetings.

"RUSSIAN POWER," by Mr. Ashton Dilke, the new editor of the Weekly Dispatch, will supply authenticated information regarding the condition, progress, and probable aims of that great State which overshadows our Indian Empire, presses hard on Turkey, and imperils the peace of the world by its astute diplomacy, and its uneasy energy in seeking enlargement instead of development.

ONE OF THE MISSIONARIES of the London Society, while on a preaching tour in Eastern Bengal, came upon a community of people, who, all unknown to the outside world, have been under Christian teaching. It appears that some years ago a Brahmin pundit obtained a copy of the Bible and Church of England Prayer-book, which he studied in private. After some time he began to read and expound portions of the Bible to the people; and when the missionary visited the village he found that some forty people had for some years been in the habit of meeting for prayer and reading the Scriptures.

EVANGELIZATION OF ITALY.—The eloquent and energetic Signor Gavazzi is at present on a lecturing tour in the North of Scotland, advocating the claims of his favourite "Free Christian Church of Italy." Speaking lately at Aberdeen, he said that since 1860 forty or fifty colporteurs had been going about through Italy, and had disposed of over half-a-million copies of the Bible and New Testament. In referring to the progress made, he stated that they had in existence twelve Italian-speaking churches, with the prospect of opening four new places of worship at no distant date, and what must be considered as a triumph was their new Theological College, which would be made the centre and depot of the Evangelical Church, and which was situated in close proximity to the Vatican.

UNION HALL MISSION.—We have been holding special services in a tent at Kensal New Town during the past five weeks, and I rejoice to be able to speak of much blessing to many souls. We have not witnessed such an awakening amongst the people for the desire to hear the glad tidings since we had the privilege to labour in this locality. There are very evident and remarkable cases of real conversion to God, both of men, women, and children. We are now holding the meetings in the iron room, which is full of attentive listeners every night. We ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to give thanks to God, and to ask that it may yet further deepen and extend, both amongst the parents and children of the thousands around us. ROBERT BLAKE.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS AMONG THE INDIANS.—A little over seven years ago the Indians at Oka—the Lake of Two Mountains—were brought away from Popery and under the Gospel of the grace of God. They have been, and still are, severely tried by both persecutions and poverty; yet so sanctified have their trials been to them that they have not only held their ground, but have manifestly grown in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Besides the regular services of the Sabbath, when the Gospel is preached to them, they have the Sabbath-school, and the class and prayer-meeting services. These last are to them times of great spiritual abandon, if we may use such an expression; for they spend three, and even four, hours in them, not only without any show of weariness, but in the greatest zest and spiritual enjoyment and animation. They assuredly are "a city set on a hill," as they are "a light shining in a dark place."

PROFESSOR SCHIFF, of Florence, the notorious vivisectionist, has had voted to him by the Royal Academy of Turin the Riberti prize of 20,000 lire (£300) in reward for the excellence and originality of the investigations made by him and recorded in his "Contributions to the Pathological Physiology of the Spinal Cord."—Daily Review.

REV. WM. BOOTH has been, as our readers are aware, laid aside for many weeks by a serious injury to his knee. It is hoped that another week may find him again at work in London. Meanwhile the finances of his Mission are at a low ebb, and it will be a very opportune kindness if friends would at this juncture render needed assistance. Mrs. Booth is also in very feeble health.

IRELAND.—We have seen a private letter in which a very remarkable work by Mr. Stephen Burrows, of the Highland Evangelistic Association, and a fellow-labourer (Mr. H. M.) is spoken of as having taken place at Derry, Fentona, Omagh, and in several districts round Donaghmore. We shall be much obliged by information of this work from our readers in the localities named.

SUDRLEY, KENT.—We have been much encouraged lately by a visit from a lady evangelist, Miss Louisa Wales, of London, who has held a month's services in the chapel connected with the Wesleyans at this place. On the Sabbath evenings large numbers could not gain admission to the chapel, and the services had to be removed to an east-house in the locality, which was taxed to its utmost, some then standing outside for want of room. During the month about eighty came forward as seekers of the Lord. At the closing service, many stood up and spoke of the change wrought by grace in their hearts. T. E. W.

GARIOCH, ABERDEENSHIRE.—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are requested to pray for great blessing on the expected visit of Reginald Radcliffe, Esq., to this place from the 21st to 28th inst., and especially on the meetings proposed on Sabbath, 26th. Mr. Radcliffe was much honoured of God in the revival of religion in this district sixteen years ago, many of the fruits of which blessed work are now safe in the heavenly home, and many still serving the Lord faithfully here. But a fresh shower of blessing is very needful, and much desired. "Ask of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain."

SWANSEA.—The tent has been removed to one of the worst districts in our town, a very densely populated neighbourhood, and the meetings have been exceedingly well attended. On Sunday (12th) it is estimated that 2500 people assembled to hear the Gospel, and large numbers remained to the inquiry meeting. A very large number have professed their acceptance of the Saviour. In some of the large manufactories in the town there has been a most marked change for the better in the conduct of the men, and we trust that, with God's blessing, the influence of this glorious revival will manifest itself throughout the whole community. Mr. Cleworth still conducts the tent services, and John Waite (late a working man) has taken charge of the meetings at the Greenhill Mission Hall. All Christians who read this report are earnestly requested to pray for God's blessing on this great work.

Mr. HENRY HOLLOWAY.—This evangelist leaves Derby for Liverpool the first Lord's-day in October, and prayer is requested from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that the Lord may very specially bless his labours in that town. The congregations at the Derby Theatre Gospel Hall have been well maintained up to the present, and our great hope is that our brother's labours will yield permanent blessing in the addition of many faithful helpers to our mission work. The fact that this evangelist was for over five years a convict (and thus personally intimate with the details of convict life) has been a great help in his gathering crowds to hear him tell of the hardness of the ways of transgressors. It will also interest your readers to know that the Lord used Mr. Thomas Wright (the eminent prison philanthropist) to the conversion of our brother while under the sentence of penal servitude. A farewell tea-meeting on Monday next, the 27th, is being arranged, upon which occasion, it is hoped, some little testimonial may be presented to the departing evangelist. G. W.

SPECIAL PRAYER FOR OUR CHILDREN AND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union has sent out a circular calling on their Sunday-school officials to join with other Sunday-school organizations at home and abroad in the observance of Sunday, Oct. 17, 1875, and Monday, Oct. 18, as days for special prayer on behalf of our great work. They suggest that the following order should, as far as practicable, be observed:—That on Sunday and Monday mornings, Oct. 17 and 18, between seven and eight o'clock, all teachers should engage in private prayer for God's blessing on their labours, and for each of their scholars by name; that before the Sunday morning school, and after the evening service, special prayer-meetings should be held; that on Sunday afternoon, instead of the ordinary school exercises, the teachers, scholars, and parents should be assembled at a special service for singing, prayer, and address; that on Monday evening general Sunday-school meetings should be held for the purpose of uniting school workers and other members of the Church in sympathy and prayer, to be conducted in such a way as local circumstances may indicate to be best. They further hope that ministers will be good enough to assist in this important work by preaching at least once on the Sunday with particular reference to Sunday-school work and the conversion of children.

AMSTERDAM.—Since the visit of Messrs. Bishop and Tyler to Amsterdam a regular Sunday evening service for children has been commenced at one of the schools.

HANLEY.—The Hon. Secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission writes us that "Mr. H. S. Lidstone held special services for children in this town from Sept. 5 to 10, and was used of the Lord for a great and precious work among the children and adults present. No attempt was made to take any account of the numbers who received a blessing through this dear brother's ministrations, 'the Day' only will reveal how many found peace in believing. The large hall at the Mechanics' Institution was filled almost every night, sometimes densely packed. Much joy and thankfulness pervaded the hearts of the Christians, old and young, connected with this Mission for the confirmation and encouragement received to continue in the faith, and in this work for the Master among the little ones. The Service for Children continues to be held in the same hall every evening, and is well attended. Brethren, pray for us."

WE ARE VERY GLAD to hear that the good work commenced in Calcutta during the week of united services still goes forward. During last week the Free Church and Methodist congregations united in holding evening meetings, and the results were even more encouraging than during the large meetings of the preceding week. The last meeting was held in the Methodist Chapel, Dhurrantolla, on Saturday evening, and was an occasion of unusual interest. No less than eighteen persons rose to ask the prayers of the congregation, and many others appeared deeply impressed. Special services were also held during the week in the Wesleyan Chapel, but we have not heard what result. Similar meetings are in progress during the present week in the Circular-road Baptist Chapel, and we believe other churches intend to follow in like manner from week to week for some time to come. Truly a wonderful change for the better has come over the Calcutta Churches.—Lucknow Witness.

FRUITS OF THE REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND.—The Scotch correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"Though the revival had issued in nothing more than an increased attention to the spiritual welfare of the young, it would not have been in vain. We are now in a position to say with some confidence what the general effect of that remarkable movement has been. So far as I can judge, partly from observation, and partly from official reports presented to church courts, the effects of the movement have been almost exclusively confined to church-going people. No hold has been got over the masses, who must still be reached in the old way of persevering toil. At the same time the movement has left a greater earnestness in the hearts of true Christians, increased liberality, and a spirit of hopefulness for the future. It has also taught many to put greater faith in the power of a simple gospel, and the truth of the promises of God. These are effects which will have effect in their turn; and, on the whole, Scotland has reason to be grateful for the revival."

COCKERMOUTH, CUMBERLAND.—Special evangelistic services were held during five nights last week in this town by the Rev. R. Stainton, of Sheffield, with remarkable success. The meetings were so densely crowded during the first two evenings that on the third it was found necessary to remove to a larger building, which became likewise crowded, though pouring with rain, one evening. The presence of God was powerfully felt at all the meetings, but on the third it was almost overwhelming, and there is abundant reason to believe that many have been led to make a full decision for the Lord Jesus Christ, whilst numbers have been deeply impressed with their need of a Saviour. It might be interesting to mention that several racing men were observed to be present, although the meetings were held in a place of worship; some of these were led there by mere curiosity, but evidently became concerned about their condition. On Thursday afternoon a meeting was held for women only, and was attended with great blessing. Will Christian people pray that this gracious work may continue and increasingly abound?

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—On the 10th of June last, a meeting was held at 10, D'Olier-street, Dublin, which was well attended by officers and civilians who are interested in the present and eternal welfare of our soldiers. It was then decided that a Soldiers' Institute should be established in some central situation in Dublin, to be conducted on similar principles to those in Aldershot, &c., which were founded for the purpose of providing religious instruction, combined with moral and social recreation, and also for improving the condition of soldiers, their wives and families. Dublin is one of the largest garrison towns in the Queen's dominions. Besides having a large depot of the Royal Irish Constabulary (a semi-military force), its population in 1871 was 333,000; and, as may be imagined, it presents to the soldier as many temptations as most large towns. Though there has been much done of late years by the authorities in providing reading-rooms and amusements for the men in the barracks, and God has raised up outside many earnest Christians who are deeply concerned for the spiritual welfare of the men, yet there is a very great need for a general home, where the soldier may go on leaving barracks, feeling he is welcome, and spend his evening in at least a harmless way, but with the probability of hearing what may prove for his eternal good. Friends interested in this praiseworthy effort may communicate with the Hon. Secretary, Captain R. W. Thompson, 46, Dawson-street, Dublin.

DAILY TEXTS.

Fri., 24.—"Between the passages... there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side." "Troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair." "Without were fightings, within were fears." "But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead."—1 Sam. xiv. 4; 2 Cor. iv. 8; vii. 5; i. 9.

Sat., 25.—"Come and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised." "This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee: every man child among you shall be circumcised." "Uncircumcision... aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise." "Their rock is not as our rock."—1 Sam. xiv. 6; Gen. xvii. 10; Eph. ii. 11, 12; Deut. xxxii. 31.

Sun., 26.—"It may be that the LORD will work for us, for there is no restraint with the LORD to save by many or by few." "Very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun, and they said among themselves, 'Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre.' And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great."—1 Sam. xiv. 6; Mark xvi. 2-4.

Mon., 27.—"Do all that is in thine heart; turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart." "I will go also." "I will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you." "Only Luke is with me." "True yoke-fellow." "Our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Sam. xiv. 7; Zech. viii. 21; 23; 2 Tim. iv. 11; Phil. iv. 3; Acts xv. 25, 26.

Tues., 28.—"We will discover ourselves... And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines." "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." "Whosoever shall confess Me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God."—1 Sam. xiv. 8, 11; Matt. v. 16; Luke xii. 8.

Wed., 29.—"If they say, Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them. But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand; and this shall be a sign unto us." "The Jews require a sign... But we have the mind of Christ." "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over unto Macedonia, and help us. And after he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the LORD had called us to preach the Gospel unto them."—1 Sam. xiv. 9, 10; 1 Cor. i. 22—ii. 16; 1 Cor. ii. 12; Acts xvi. 9, 10.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN "ESTHER."—II.

NOTES OF A BIBLE LECTURE BY R. C. MORGAN.

"If any have not yet discovered all the things which they think are wanting, in Esther, to stamp this book with the impress of Divinity, that is a proof rather of their ignorance, than of the deficiency, much less of the apocryphasy, of the book itself. . . . The author, for one, not only does see, but has long seen, that in this very book, calumniated by some and little read by others, the Gospel of Christ is, if not in words, yet by events and facts, not only foreshadowed and foreshown, but made to stand out in bold relief; and the way of salvation is emblazoned, as it were, on these handposts in the road to Heaven, in characters so vivid, that 'he that runs may read.' And the Lord Jesus Christ,—his Person and work, his glory and grace—so far from not being even alluded to—is, in a figure, made its Sum and Substance, its End and Aim, its Alpha and Omega, its All in All. . . . In fact, the whole scheme of redemption—the whole economy of mercy, from the earliest revelation of God's will to his fallen creature, man, down to the final destruction, not only of the wicked but of the wicked One; and going on to that great consummation—of all others the 'most devoutly to be wished'—the everlasting happiness of all the people of God in the beatific vision of Christ and his Spirit, and in the bosom of God, are all, figuratively indeed, but yet most strikingly, displayed; extorting from the heretofore unobserving (if candid) reader, the confession, 'Surely the Lord is in this [book], and I knew it not.'—"Mordecai and Esther; or, The Saviour and His Church." By Rev. J. W. Niblock.—[We are sorry to find that this little book is now out of print.]

THE most obvious character in the book is Mordecai. Perhaps no name in Scripture suggests so many of the numerous relationships which our Lord Jesus bears to us. Mordecai foreshadows Christ as the Kinsman-Redeemer; as the Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; as the Faithful Witness; the First-begotten from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth; as the Man whom the King delighteth to honour; as the One who must increase, while the greatest prophet must decrease,—for this man Mordecai waxed greater and greater. He is the One for whose sake his people were hated, and who bore all the brunt of the oppressor's malice and delivered them; the One in whose name his redeemed ones ask for what they will, and it is done unto them; and, lastly, in that he is "accepted of the multitude of his brethren, seeking the wealth of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed," he is a forerunner of Him, of whom David prophesied—"Men shall be blessed in Him; all nations shall call Him blessed."

Considering the minuteness with which other details of the Lord's life and ministry are foretold in prophecy and foreshadowed in type, we should, perhaps, expect some indication in Old Testament Scripture of the conflict between the Holy One and him who is spoken of in the Psalms as "the enemy and the avenger." And certainly this Book of Esther contains the history of a conflict wondrously similar.

One of the mysteries of the government of God is the place which Satan, the adversary, holds in it. His access to God in the case of Job; his resistance of Joshua the high priest; and the delivery by the apostle of some who had acted wrongly, to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, may be adduced as instances of this. In the book before us we have a man remarkably elevated, who becomes the adversary, the accuser, the oppressor, the enemy of the people of Mordecai, and the avenger of the law which he alleged that they did not keep. He is of the seed of Agag, the royal family of Amalek—that accursed race who came and fought with Israel as soon as they had passed through the Red Sea of redemption, and concerning whom "Jehovah hath sworn that Jehovah will have war with Amalek, from generation to generation." "For I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven."

Haman is exalted to the highest place among the princes of the kingdom. We are taught in Scripture that angels have dominion over various portions of the earth. There is a prince of Græcia and one of Persia, whose names are not recorded. Michael is the prince of Israel (Dan. x. 13, 21), and Satan is the prince, the god, of this world* (John xiv. 30, xvi. 11; 2 Cor. iv. 4).

Mordecai refused to bow down and do Haman reverence. The first thing after the baptism of the Lord Jesus and his entrance upon his ministry was his refusal to do homage to the prince of this world. Satan left Him for a season, only to plot his destruction, and with Him that of all his people. "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me." "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you" (John xvi.).

Haman's charge against the people is that they do not keep the king's laws, and therefore it is not equal (or meet) (chap. iii. 8 mar.) for the king to suffer them. This is exactly Satan in the capacity of the accuser, and of the avenger of the broken law. When he accused men before God, prior to the atonement having been made by the blood of Christ, the accusation could not be met, and from the throne went forth the sentence, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The condemnation of the second death lies already upon every soul of man that doeth evil.

Haman, having planned the death of all the race of Mordecai, takes counsel and prepares a gallows whereon Mordecai shall be hanged. But it is discovered that this faithful servant is the man in whose honour the king delighteth. So it is said of Jesus in the Old Testament, "Behold my Servant whom I uphold; mine Elect in whom my soul delighteth," and in the New, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Haman, ambitious of still greater power, on being asked, "What shall be done to the man in whose honour the king delighteth?" covets for himself the royal robes and crown, and to be heralded through the city on the king's own horse. Is there no counterpart to this in those words of the prophet, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning. . . for thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north; I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High." But this glory is for God's Faithful Servant, just as the honour proposed by Haman for himself is awarded to Mordecai.

While the "decree" lies against the people of Mordecai, Esther is exhorted to go in and make supplication to the king. But she shrinks from this, upon the plea that this is not according to law. But, as we have shown before, Esther was called in grace, and (although no law is abrogated) she must walk according to the grace in which she stands. "Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." There is the Galatian folly, to which we are all too much addicted, in Esther thus thinking of herself as under law, instead of standing fast in the liberty where-with she had been made free.

* Whether this "estate" (Jude 6) dates from before the creation of Adam, and whether the pre-Adamite chaos was the disastrous result of his government, or whether he only gained the principedom of the world by fraud from Adam, Scripture does not tell us, and we do not speculate.

But Esther mortified herself by a three days' fast; for there are deliverances which come by nothing but by prayer and fasting; and when she went in, the golden sceptre was immediately held out to her, and she drew near and touched it. Does not the question come with great emphasis to every one of us—"How knowest thou whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Therefore, having boldness to enter into the Holiest by the blood of Jesus, . . . let us drew near with a true heart in full assurance of faith.

The king promises Esther her request to the half of the kingdom; and when the day of the second banquet arrives, and she tells her petition (which she might as well have told at first), the doom of Haman is fixed; and as soon as the tree is mentioned the edict is uttered, "Hang him thereon." Thus Haman perished on the tree he had prepared for Mordecai. Could any type more vividly foreshow that wondrous counsel of God—that through death the Mediator might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage? This was the wisdom of God in a mystery—the hidden wisdom, which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory.

Dr. Adam Clarke—who, however, sees no typical significance in this book, has the following note, which is full of interest:—"In former times the Jews were accustomed to burn Haman in effigy, and with him a wooden cross, which they pretended to be in memory of that which he had erected for the suspension of Mordecai; but which was, in fact, to deride the Christian religion." The Jews, at all events, were not so blind as not to discern the substance through the shadow, though their hatred of Christ made them see his death, but not the destruction, through his death, of him that had the power of death—that is, the devil.

WIGTON, CUMBERLAND.—Will your readers give praise to the Lord for what He has done here this past week or so, and ask for more blessings on Wigton and surrounding villages? Souls have been made happy in Jesus here lately during some special services, conducted by Mr. Finch, of 4, South-street, Northampton, whom the Lord is using to the saving of precious souls, as many as 140 staying to the after-meetings. Much interest has been manifest amongst the very class we wish to reach. We are visiting the villages with much blessing, and mean to carry the glad tidings to many of them. It is very encouraging to see the young converts testifying for their Master in giving out tracts and inviting others to the meetings.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—At Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, a mission hall has been open for several years, where every agency is employed likely to benefit the poor outcasts who swarm in the low lodging-houses so numerous in the locality. The children are gathered into the hall every Sabbath-day, and compose as true a ragged school as it is possible to get together. There is also a special evening service for them prior to the regular service in the hall. An evening school is also conducted three nights weekly for such as are employed during the day and those "Arabs" who escape the School Board on account of their rags and dirty condition. These are taught to read, write, &c., and great good has been done amongst them. The hall is open every night in the week, including Sunday, for religious services. The lodging-houses are also visited, and open-air services held all about the neighbourhood. The people are also visited in their houses, and much good has been done amongst them. Although the work is done unostentatiously, and the religious world hears little of it, yet its record is on high, and that is enough for the humble workers. The expense of rent and other things is considerable, whilst the poverty abounding is most appalling. Will the stewards of the Lord's bounty help the work by contributing, and thus save the workers responsible from a good deal of anxiety?

THE EXPECTED REVIVAL IN AMERICA.

THE EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

As we anticipated, our brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey, whose labours have been so abundant in this land during the past two years, have not been content to remain long idle, despite their need of rest. The American papers bring us advices of the commencement of the evangelistic services from which the Christians, and even the non-professing Christians, of the great Republic, expect such blessed results.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have opened their campaign at Northfield, Mr. Moody's native place. The New York Herald (like other leading papers, we presume) has sent a special reporter to chronicle the proceedings of the evangelists, and he sends long and entertaining accounts of the opening meetings. The reports seem to be written in a half-serious, half-sarcastic style which will at all events insure their being read. Seeing that full notes of Mr. Moody's address are given, the Gospel tidings as delivered by him will reach an almost countless congregation.

According to the Herald, the preliminary service was held by Mr. Moody alone in the little church of the village of Northfield on Sunday, the 5th inst.

"Nearly the whole community turned out, and many came from long distances in carriages and business vehicles to participate in the services. The crowd was so large, in fact, that it was necessary to abandon the church, and Mr. Moody was obliged to preach in the open air. He wore a stylish straw hat during the greater part of his exhortations, and his striking and general world-like appearance was not such as to indicate him to be the great champion of religion that he really is. He read a few passages from Holy Writ, and then announced as his text from Acts. xi. 14—'Who shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.'

"He commenced at once to encourage his hearers to realize their danger in living an indifferent life, and cited the example of Cornelius as a fitting one for them to consider. He talked in very plain language, and intimated that there were many people in Northfield and the surrounding towns who were very wicked and profane, and that, unlike God, they failed to keep their word, or to always pay 100 cents on the dollar. As the expounder of the great religious truth proceeded in his remarks he became strikingly eloquent, and his gestures and movements indicated that he had a genuine and enthusiastic interest in his choice work of rescuing mankind from sin and perdition. His hearers were involuntarily charmed and interested from the beginning, and on several occasions there were exclamations which indicated that his words were proving quite effectual. His anecdotes and illustrations were very pointed and at times amusing, and he all the time kept the idea prominent that he was talking to people who needed enlightening on the matter of salvation.

"Toward the close of his remarks Mr. Moody became very affecting and eloquent, and during the final prayer which he offered there was a reverent silence and attention which it is impossible to describe."

Mr. Sankey reached Northfield on Tuesday, the 7th inst., and on the following forenoon Mr. Moody and he were joined by Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, whose evangelistic labours in America have been owned of the Lord to the conversion of great numbers. After a description of "the evangelical quartet," which he sums up by saying that "it is doubtful if in the whole country four finer-looking men could be collected," the Herald representative proceeds to report the "first meeting of the series," which took place in the church already mentioned, on Friday evening, the 10th inst. The little building was crowded, many of the people coming fifteen and twenty miles from the adjacent country. "The four evangelists occupied seats on the platform in front of the pulpit, Mr. Sankey perching himself behind a little melodeon, which supplied the place of a pretentious organ."

Mr. Moody's opening prayer is given in full, and the perusal of it carries us back to the past months during which we so often heard him pray with such childlike simplicity and directness—as one that talketh with his friend. "May there be a revival of religion sweeping through this valley until hundreds and thousands shall have been brought to Christ Jesus."

During the meeting, Mr. Sankey sang four of the hymns in his well-known collection, and these are all printed in extenso in the pages of the Herald. With respect to "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," the writer says, "The clear and sweet tone, the charming melody, and the impressive words, held his hearers almost spell-bound."

Professor Bliss sang one of his own songs with fine effect. The first address was by Major Whittle, who, says the reporter, "urged prayer and faith as the chief means of salvation."

Then Mr. Moody spoke from John vii. 7, 8. It seems to have been in substance the address on "prayer" he used to give at the noon meetings, in which he described the asking, the seeking, the knocking Christians. "The best class of Christians is the knocking kind. We want more of those who, if the answer doesn't come at once, continue knocking until the blessing comes." We quote the concluding part of his earnest and stirring address:—

"If we ask God and don't expect an answer, don't let us turn round and say, 'God does not answer prayer.' We must expect and accept such a failure in the Church, if we don't believe. Now, there is a young man in Scotland that I would like to hold up here as a model man. He is a young man of high position, great wealth, liberal culture, and an only son. He and his young wife attended our meetings, and sat through, watching the people, and when anyone was brought under conviction they said they could tell it by their faces. They would go right to them and talk and plead with them, and in this way fifty or 100 people were converted through their influence. If we had fifty such people in the churches throughout this valley we would see a wonderful work for Christ.

"You have got as good preachers as you ever had in America. It is not sermons that you want, it is the power of God. Why should we not believe that a great work shall commence here to-night and sweep through the whole land?—and when we ask great things we must expect great things, and then we will not be disappointed. I learn a great deal from little children. A little orphan child who was taken into a strange family, when being put to bed the first night, after she was undressed, knelt down to say her evening prayer, and repeated the words which her mother had taught her. Then she added a prayer of her own:—'O God, make these people just as good to me as my dear father and mother were. Please do it, Jesus;' and then, after pausing a moment, she exclaimed, 'Of course you will!' That's the way—Of course you will! If we ask God to give us bread to-night, will He give us a stone? Let us have faith, and He will grant our request. Let that sink down deep into your hearts to-night.

"Have you any faith, my brother, to believe that God is willing to revive his work? (A voice, 'Yes.') Thank God for that; let us have faith to-night; let us have strong faith. Let us ask, let us seek, let us knock, until his blessing comes down upon us like the rain from heaven. I would rather pray like Daniel than preach like Gabriel. The great trouble is, we have got our eye on this man and that man instead of God. Let us lift up our eyes to the Master. Who has ever heard of God disappointing man? I have trusted in man and have been disappointed, but I never have waited on God and been disappointed. Let us learn the lesson from that woman that lost her child, and when she saw Elisha he sent his servant to meet her and see what was wanted. She swept by the servant and threw herself at his feet and told her story. He bade the servant take his staff and go and lay it on the dead child, but she would not be satisfied with any but the master himself. That is what we want—the Master Himself. Believe and ye shall be saved."

The writer proceeds to say that "the evidences of an early and general religious awakening throughout the land are very numerous, if one can judge from the multitude of applications which these evangelists are daily receiving from all quarters. Every mail brings a score of letters, and committees and individuals are constantly arriving, with the view of securing the early presence in their midst of Mr. Moody and his co-workers."

In a leading article of the same issue, the Herald says:—

"Messrs. Moody and Sankey have begun their great revival work in this country. We cannot doubt that the success which attended their efforts in England also awaits them here, and we are equally certain that Christian people of every denomination will wish them 'God-speed' in their undertaking. Strictly speaking, there is nothing sectarian in their endeavours, and if we considered only the moral advantages to be derived from their teachings we would be compelled to encourage them in their work.

"There never was a time when a higher sense of the value of moral and Christian obligations was so necessary as it is now. Our politics are sordid and corrupt, and even business principles are wanting in business men. The teachings of religion and the chidings of conscience seem to have lost their hold upon the hearts of the people. This downward tendency of public and private morality is not only to be deprecated, but, if possible, to be remedied. Only a great awakening can show the people the dangers of their situation or make them earnestly strive against the evils which surround and threaten to destroy them. A religious revival, come in whatever form it may, will prove a blessing.

"In a few weeks we may expect one or other of the great cities to become the chief field of their operations, and it is to be anticipated that their evangelizing influence will spread all over the country. In any event their labours will be watched with great interest by all classes, and become as much the theme of public and private comment here as they were in England."

"HOW TO SPEND AN EVENING."

Your paragraph with this heading suggested to me that it might be interesting to some of your readers if I were to tell of the way in which we spent many pleasant and profitable evenings during the last two winters. A number of the members of our church and congregation met by invitation at the house of one of our friends and had a social tea, after which we took our Bibles, and two or three hours passed with astonishing rapidity. A minister, to whom this work was a labour of love, and who was singularly fitted for it, presided, and always commenced by asking that the same Holy Spirit who inspired the Sacred Word would open to us its meaning. We never argued. Our first invitation stated our purpose to be "the devotional study of God's Word," and the purpose was well carried out. Exposition carefully prepared, illustrations from Church history, &c., application (practical and spiritual), and conversation free and open to all—these, with frequent singing of hymns bearing on our subject, were some of the chief features of our pleasant gatherings. We went through the First Epistle of St. John, and I can indeed say that the treasures of blessing opened to us in its chapters have often filled us with wonder and gratitude to our Father in heaven. Have your readers noticed the threefold purpose for which this epistle was written? "These things write we unto you, that your joy may be full" (chap. i. 4), "These things write I unto you that ye sin not" (chap. ii. 1), and "That ye may know that ye have eternal life" (chap. v. 13). Surely nobler purposes never moved a pen, and we, studying what was thus written with an earnest desire that all these purposes might be fulfilled in our experiences, have not been altogether disappointed. We have been brought nearer to each other, and this for members of Christ's Church is an incalculable blessing; and we have been brought nearer to Jesus, and in some humble measure we share in the confidence of the beloved apostle when he said, "We know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ." In conclusion, let me say that all ages were alike interested, many Christian homes gladly opened, and a kindly, social feeling greatly promoted. B.

Grimsby, Sept. 24, 1875.

THE Friend for September contains a lengthy and appreciative sketch of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London, written by Mr. John Taylor. It is a significant testimony to the worth of these labours, coming, as it does, from a member of that excellent, but conservative, body of Christians, the Society of Friends. Mr. Taylor says, in closing:—"It does not follow that the mode of conducting these meetings is to serve as a model for all religious meetings; but it must be admitted that the success attending them claims the serious attention of all Churches, especially as regards the working for and expecting results. I am not going to enter into any controversy as to the 'manner of Friends' in the ordering of religious meetings, or to propose a change; but it is well that, in the various points which are contrary to our traditions—in the arrangements made both for preaching and for vocal prayer, in the use of the Scriptures and the use of song—we should note that God has signally owned and blessed the means adopted by the conversion of many souls, and a widespread religious awakening."

PROGRESS OF POPERY.—Step by step Rome has pushed on her aggressions; she has got a million from the national exchequer one year, and a million another; she has made our national organization a channel for her own action; she has planted a little Rome in the bosom of our Parliament; she has set up a second Peter's chair at Westminster; she has her Legate-a-latere in Ireland, who decides causes in the Pope's name; she is blotting out the laws of our making, and writing in our statute-books the edicts of the canon law; she plants chaplains in our army and in our navy, in our galleys and our poor-houses. She sets down a convent here; a monastery there—prisons—of which the priest carries the key and administers the government, overrides the authority of British law and the protection of British justice. Steadily persisting, she is changing our laws, religion, and morals. Papists commit a third of our crime, but they form only a twelfth part of our population. What will our morals and taxes be when Papists shall form a third of our population?—Dr. Hylie, quoted in last Monthly Paper of the Protestant Alliance.

THE FREEDMEN AND THEIR WANTS.

WHILE making the tour preparatory to the work in the South, the following facts will be interesting to the friends of the Jubilee Singers, who go out under the guidance of the American Missionary Association. This Association has had to withdraw fifty of its agents for want of more pecuniary help to carry the Gospel and the spelling-book to the negro, the Indian (and American), and the Chinese. They say to fellow-Christians—

"We now submit the question: Must we begin to dismantle our fortifications, and withdraw our forces in the thickest of the fight, just when we are doing such effective service, and when the struggle most needs the filling up of our ranks and the extension of our works? This was not done in the war of arms in the South; shall it be done only in the warfare of light and love? The answer must come from those who control the base of supplies, and not from the officers of this Association. But we believe the Captain of Salvation is sending the word along the whole line, 'Go forward!' We are ready. Shall we be sustained?"

Concerning the work for the freedmen alone, the Association says truly:—

"It would be altogether a narrow view to lay before the friends of the coloured race that the interests of the country demand their enlightenment and elevation. The great point is to save their souls for their own sake and for Christ's sake. And in order to do this they must have more light and knowledge than they are getting by their own endeavours and through their ministers. The American Missionary Association comes before them with a title to entire trust. It is made up of friends to their highest welfare. It has no ends to secure which are not equally valuable to them. It is sustained and conducted by self-sacrificing exertions of religious men. If it can plant the Gospel among them—a gospel built on intelligent faith in the Lord Jesus,—it will be of little importance afterwards what sect of Christians they connect themselves with. On this point of intelligent Christianity everything turns—their temporal advantages, their deliverance from old sins that cleaved to them in their ignorance, their capacity to rise, their exercise of political rights, their friendly relations with the white race. To them, more than to almost any class of men, the Gospel brings the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

"But the conviction is a growing one, that the evangelization of Africa is to be chiefly hoped for through the agency of her own people. Indeed, it would almost seem as if through these long and weary years God had, in a manner, been holding back the work, in order that, through the emancipation and Christianization of the coloured people of the South, the children of Ethiopia might themselves become the apostles of her redemption. They best appreciate the prejudices, superstitions, and spiritual needs of their countrymen. They alone can brave with safety the perils which have lined the coast with the graves of devoted servants of Christ. Let us hope, therefore, that through this great work now being wrought in our own land God is solving this hard problem of the ages, and that the day draws on apace when the Gospel of Him who hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth, shall make this mighty empire of heathenism bud and blossom as the rose."

Let the readers of THE CHRISTIAN read the following item, clipped from the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, a leading democratic journal in that city:—

"The Catholic Church is making a determined effort, so it is stated, to extend the educational work in the South. The head-quarters of this effort are in Baltimore, where the priests, nuns, and sisters from abroad report, and are detailed to various parts of the South. New schools for coloured children are to be immediately opened as follows: Ten in Georgia, fifteen in Alabama, fifteen in Mississippi, and twenty-five in Louisiana. These schools will offer board and tuition free to coloured young men and women, so the statement before us says."

SAILOR'S MISSION, HAMBURG.—A correspondent puts in a strong plea for this institution, which, he says, has been formed not only for the mutual improvement of the British seamen visiting Hamburg, and as a place of safety against the many temptations with which they are brought into contact when visiting continental cities, but also for their instruction in those things which make for their eternal peace. The present premises are inadequate for the carrying on of so important a work, and efforts are being made for the erection of a suitable building. Friends may communicate with Mr. Fieldwick, Secretary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Mercer-street, Shadwell, E.

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Dr. Davis, of the Religious Tract Society, urged with good reason the other day at Charleroi, at the Synod of the Belgian Missionary Church, "that the time had come when Evangelical Christians should widely disseminate their tracts, and let their fellow-countrymen understand at this juncture what were their principles; and recommended every Christian to give away at least two every day." We have been into the four quarters of Brussels, and salted it well with tracts; and never in my life was I in a place where they were so well received. One breathes here the air of religious liberty; one never gets a refusal from men of any class; they all appear so thankful for the promise of something better than Popery. If we give to working-men, gentlemen will put in their claim; both old and young are anxious to get a tract. Old men on farms are the most grateful recipients; it is such a joy to see how they apply themselves to reading in the park.

We have had the Congress of Schoolmasters here—nearly 2000. They have been fêted by the town, and we thought it would be a good thing at the present moment to let them see our admirable tracts of the "Publications Populaires"; so on issuing from one of their meetings at the Philharmonic we encountered some 1000 of them, and distributed amongst them. We heard that those who were not present were much disappointed in not getting them; but their comrades would not give any up for love or money. One hunted through the town and found the tract dépôt, 7, Rue Duquesnoy, where he could buy them. On receiving the tract entitled "Le Salut ne s'achète pas," one exclaimed, "Is it possible that there is a religion like that in the world? that is a new thing!" One remarked to a friend of ours, "The Anglais little knew what a commotion it has made among us." All these men are nominally Roman Catholics, and teach the Roman Catechism. One made many inquiries about their contents, and begged for others. I speak of this, as one cannot overrate the importance of tract distribution under similar circumstances. I beg that your readers will pray for a blessing on tract circulation in Roman Catholic countries, and it can be done by those who do not speak the language.

The soldiers here have been remembered, also the market women and the women and girls coming out of their factories, as well as working-men. In like manner, coal and barge men, masons and carpenters, all put in their plea for a tract. It is a little fatiguing, as it is necessary to put in a word or give an explanation. Poor women come out of their doors or send their children, and we are in danger of being mobbed. We have had such interesting cases providentially put in our way, and have been able to give a word in season to many a weary one. In shops amongst the humbler classes they will listen for ten or fifteen minutes, sometimes with tears in their eyes, to this "old," yet to them "new," Gospel—most have never seen a Bible. Truly the fields are white to harvest in Belgium. Our chief object in coming was to see if we could get up some soldiers' meetings, but this is a work of time, and we have handed over the project to Christian brethren on the spot, trusting that God will enable them to bring it to pass.

We wished to go to Charleroi, but it is such a centre of Christian activity that we thought it better to leave it and go to Mons, where nothing is being done, and there is no public testimony for the Gospel. We scoured the streets, looked up the soldiers, entered four or five cafés, and never were our tracts better received by anybody, high and low, rich and poor. It is hoped that regular preaching may be commenced this autumn. Mr. J. G. Alexander and Mr. H. Kruger hired a music saloon recently, and held a service in Mons which was fairly attended. It was a sign that the people are prepared for hearing the Gospel.

Yours ever sincerely,

JANE B. PEARSE.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—I will add a few lines to my wife's letter. In 1862 a breath of the Spirit of God came upon Brussels, and some dozen Catholic families came under the power of the truth. Without concert or organization, they began to spread the Gospel around them by means of tract distribution and personal intercourse, till, unhappily, discord arose about the settling of pastors, and life and activity vanished amidst strife and discord. A great blessing was experienced by the pastors during the Consecration meetings in May, and subsequently at those in Brighton. I earnestly trust that it may be the means of a renewal of spiritual energy and zeal for Christ. There is much that is hopeful in Belgium, and though public preaching in the streets in Brussels is not pro-tacted by the police, and a few stones are sometimes thrown at the speaker, yet we have been accustomed to that in free England, and it is now an institution with us.

The truth of God progresses here (Paris), in spite of clerical opposition; but then the latter is of the most formidable kind, for they have under their power nobles and peasants, most of the establishments of education of first and second class, and the right of inspection of the communal schools, and nearly every young lady is brought up in a convent. During the last twenty years there has been an increase of conventual establishments to the number of 535. The clergy rule the elections in all rural districts, and for this purpose visit from house to house. By the confessional they exercise an enormous influence in families, and they even employ the confessional to compel judges to decide questions in their favour.

Are Protestant English people aware that the Encyclical and Syllabus, since the proclamation of the Pope's infallibility, have acquired intense significance? It is a drawn sword against all liberty, civil or religious. Toleration is impossible to Rome; it is not necessary that people should sanction it; it is quite enough that they charitably look on and submit to have the chain fastened upon their hands. If we tolerate its claims, we shall soon find ourselves to be slaves. These soldiers of the Pope mean to do something this jubilee year; but the safety of the Christian is to keep in his stronghold, which is Christ.

Paris, Sept. 14.

Yours in Christ,

GEO. PEARSE.

A "BRITISH WORKMAN" FOR DOVER.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—How greatly have we cause to thank God for the evangelistic work that is going on throughout the country. From every town—nay, from every village—we hear reports of souls being brought to a definite acceptance of salvation through Christ, and yet the experience of all who take a leading part in such services is, that those for whose benefit principally these special means of grace are set on foot are only brought into the meetings in small numbers. Thank God that some are brought in; but the great mass of those who never attend any place of public worship, and whose leisure hours are principally spent in the public-houses, are still not reached. These must, as it were, be educated up to a state of mind in which they will allow themselves to be brought within the sound of the Gospel.

Attractive working men's cafés, made as bright and cheerful as a public-house, will do something in this way, and we join with the well-known evangelists Mr. Varley, Mr. Haalam, and Mr. Moorhouse in recommending such a café and club, which it is intended to open in the important town of Dover. Local help has been forthcoming to some extent, but a further sum of £150 is urgently needed; and, when we consider that soldiers and sailors from different parts of England will largely participate in the benefits of such an establishment, we have no hesitation in recommending this effort to Christian friends everywhere.

BEAULIEU RAILS.—The harvest tea-meeting was held here on Sept. 15. Rev. J. B. Burt presided. This was the conclusion of a series of special Gospel-meetings held here by Rev. J. Hunt Cooke, of Richmond, at which several persons profess to have found Christ.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING.—Some cheering particulars were given at Moorgate-street Hall last week of the progress of the work of evangelization in Norway, and the steady increase of the distribution of the Scriptures. A letter was also read from Kikorai, Otago, N.Z., dated July 3, 1875, which gives the following facts:—"This being chiefly a Scotch colony, the tidings of a work of grace in Scotland a year ago aroused Christian people here, and a permanent feature of a revived state of religion is the work that goes on in the Queen's Theatre every Sunday night. It holds about 1200. Ministers and laymen take part; Sankey's hymns are sung; and an inquiry-meeting is conducted at the close in the Temperance Hall. In our little congregation here the Lord has been working. The results are: Seven joined our last quarterly communion for the first time; Bible-class increased; young people's prayer-meeting started on Sabbath morning, and also on Wednesday evening; Thursday prayer-meeting improved; Friday evening evangelistic meeting for young people; and special evangelistic service on Sunday evening. We have just had an encouraging case this week. A young lady attending the High School in Dunedin found her way to a meeting in the suburbs where I was speaking on Sunday night; she was awakened, and wished to speak; remained to an inquiry-meeting in my own church, to which she accompanied me. Her parents are much opposed. She came yesterday with a young friend of ours recently brought in, and was very thankful for guidance, instruction, and prayer.—ALEX. BLAKE."

SPECIAL SERVICES IN GUERNSEY.

THE services which have been conducted for the last month by Mr. James Goodchild, of the Open-Air Mission, London, were brought to a close on Monday evening by an overflowing meeting in the St. Peter Pont Parochial School-room. The blessing which has been vouchsafed to the efforts made, it is impossible to estimate. Great preparations had previously been made by holding services twice a week at the Albert status for several weeks previously, and by special prayer at the weekly prayer-meeting held in Eldad School-room, in addition to much private prayer for a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit. These prayers have been answered far beyond our expectations. From the first, souls have been won to Christ at every meeting, and the names of those who profess to have found peace amount to about 200. It must not, however, be supposed that this represents the whole number, for many have been heard of whose names are not recorded. Many are there also who are yet to be numbered among the anxious.

Important as this part of the work undoubtedly is, it is by no means all that has been accomplished. The work, so far as ability went, has been of the most searching character. Many who could scarcely give an answer if asked the reason of the hope within them, have found that they have long trusted in Jesus, but their faith was so weak that they were afraid to speak with confidence; while others who have long been "going about to establish their own righteousness, but had not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God," have been led to see their error. Many of both these classes have now, we trust, taken their right position as true believers in the one Saviour.

Much prayer was offered for the conversion of the many unconverted teachers in our Sabbath-schools; several have come forward and acknowledged their culpability in taking a position they were wholly unfit for, and are now enabled to rejoice that they are no longer blind leaders of the blind, but can tell from their own personal experience the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

The young men's meetings, which commenced with about forty, rapidly rose to about 200, and these have been signally blessed, the testimony of many being of the most interesting character. The average attendance at the open-air services has been estimated at about 500, while it is supposed there could not have been less than 2000 at each of the evening meetings the last two Sabbaths. The large school-room was densely packed on Monday, when, it is thought, about 1800 were present, many hundreds being unable to obtain admission, and many standing the whole time. The service was of the most impressive character, under the direction of that truly excellent Christian, General Huyths, who has defrayed the entire expenses. Many remained to be dealt with at the after-meeting.

Praise resounds on every side for God's signal blessing, and while all speak in the highest terms of the messenger sent, all acknowledge that it is the Lord's work, and to Him all praise is due. We ought not to omit that Mr. Sankey's hymns have been sung, led by a very efficient choir.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN.—In a review of the general progress of missions in Japan, the American Missionary Herald says:—"The year past has been one of great prosperity to all the Protestant missions in Japan. Three churches, and possibly more, have been organized, and the church membership must have reached nearly 400. There are not less than ten places in Yokohama, twenty-five in Yeddo, and others elsewhere, making in all fifty places in Japan where regular services are held as often as once a week, with audiences varying from twenty to two hundred. The people are rapidly losing all fear of Government interference in religious matters, while their interest in the truths of Christianity seems to be increasing."

THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND AND HIS TENANTS.—This place (Lairg, N.B.) is now well known in connexion with the works carried on by his Grace the Duke of Sutherland in reclaiming waste land, at which upwards of 500 men are employed. It is gratifying to find that the noble Duke, who is foremost in every good work, takes also a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of the working classes. He has provided a handsome and commodious church for the workmen, and has now given a dwelling-house for the missionary. This house has been comfortably furnished by the Rev. James Grant Mackintosh, Edinburgh, who was the originator of the mission, and who has been unremitting in his efforts in this good cause. Mr. Mackintosh has also provided a large library of valuable books for the benefit of the workmen. It is proper to mention that the men feel deeply indebted to his Grace for establishing the mission, and to Mr. Mackintosh for carrying it on.—Daily Review.

DUNDEE CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The annual Conference began on Tuesday, Sept. 21, at 11 a.m. Dr. Wilson (Dundee) opened the meeting by giving out Psalm lvi. 8.

After singing and prayer he briefly introduced the subjects of the three days' conference, "The Conflict," "The Armour," "The Victory," and said—"I do not mean to speak of the subject of this day's conference, as that will be better done by others, but you will bear with me while I refer to the enemies which we have to fight with, and these are classed in three hosts, 'the world,' 'the flesh,' and 'the devil'; or, in other words to the same effect, 'the lust of the flesh,' 'the lust of the eyes,' and 'the pride of life.' These were the great enemies that assailed our first parent—she saw the fruit of the tree that it was good for food, and she ate of it—that was the lust of the flesh; then she saw it was beautiful to look upon—that was the lust of the eyes; and the devil said if she ate of it she would know good and evil—that was the pride of life. The same three temptations were presented to our Lord Jesus Christ when He was led into the wilderness by the Spirit; when, after fasting forty days, the devil presented the temptation of 'the lust of the flesh'—'Command that this stone be made bread'; but Jesus answered, 'It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.' Again, Satan presented another temptation, 'the lust of the eyes,' when he carried Him up to an exceeding high mountain, and 'showed Him all the kingdoms of the world'—things very beautiful to look upon; but Jesus again resisted. The third temptation 'on the pinnacle of the Temple' was directed to the 'pride of life'—tempting God, and urging to act independently of his Father."

The meeting was addressed by Rev. George Wilson, of the Tolbooth Church, Edinburgh, who in the course of a very earnest address brought out some striking remarks. He said:—"The 'Conflict' is that of a believer, not that of the transgressor, whose way is hard; it is a consequence, not a cause, of the new birth. Many here will remember, as I do, a day when we knew no devil in the world. The Cross of Christ reveals not only the power of Him who obtained the victory, but also the malignity of the devil. Again, when we enjoy the moments of nearest fellowship, it is then we have the sense of a watchful adversary being near, and the centre force of evil meets us. Satan is too wise not to adapt himself to the varying moods of the mind; he is looking down now on us, and knows well the point of the harness where to make his attack." He then proceeded to refer to the loneliness of Christ in prayer, and said, "We delight in fellowship one with another, but the moment when we lay ourselves before God we are shut out from the world, and alone with God." In closing, he enumerated some of the sins and enemies we have to contend against—lusts of the flesh, attempting to make the best of both worlds, temper, &c., self-approving; and, lastly, the limitation of our nature to comprehend the dealings of God with us. "In a word, if you have no 'conflict,' you may have a delusion; but these conflicts are just as 'high' as I hope to be."

After an interval for prayer, when Mr. McLeod, of St. Mark's, Dundee, presented the request for prayer, Hymn 62 was sung. The Chairman then, in a few words, introduced and welcomed Mr. George Müller, who at once addressed himself to the subject for the day. He closed an excellent and practical address as follows:—

"We have but one brief life here on earth, and the great point is that that brief life be out and out given for God—spent for God. And if this is the one single aim of our hearts; if we have not six objects, nor five, nor four, but one, and that one object the business of life to live for God, to glorify God, to seek to spend and be spent for Him; then, when you and I are brought to the end of our course, we will be able to say, 'I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith.'

"Before I sit down I have a word of encouragement to give to the young. I remember distinctly, when as a young minister I began preaching in this country for the first time in January, 1835—though I had been a believer for five years—an aged minister of the church where I preached said,—'Let this young minister go on a few years, and he won't be as happy as he is now; he will be dull, and cold, and lifeless.' Many may have the same thought, and it is for this reason I refer to the circumstance. There is no reason whatever that this should be. But if it should be so, if we get cold and lifeless, don't ascribe it to our holy faith, but to our own carelessness, our worldly-mindedness, our own neglect of God's Word. Well nigh forty-five years have elapsed since I believed, and by the grace of God I am at least ten times happier than I was forty-five years ago. The happiness I have in God has driven me from home to preach here and there the truth as it is in Jesus. Though myself the pastor of a church with about 1100 communicants, and though the founder of an institution the expense of which is £44,000 a year, I can now manage to leave home, and I am delighted to go forth and tell how happy I am, if by any means I might lend a helping-hand to my younger brethren. Be encouraged by the elder brother you see before you, yet happy after forty-five years in the service of God. Seek to walk honestly and uprightly before God, and you will realize the fulfilment of the promise—'Whoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly.' Thus may it be with every one of you is the hearty desire of your friend speaking to you."

In the afternoon a conversational meeting took place, when the chair was occupied by Mr. Wilson, of Edinburgh, who, after prayer, opened the subject "Lessons from the Revival." In the course of his remarks he dwelt much on the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Edinburgh. "I cannot tell you all the lessons that I have learned during that wonderful work. I would rather go back to my own parish and seek to work them out there, but there are a few on the surface I might just touch on, and, first, we may learn to have faith in the Gospel, that it will save souls. Mr. Moody had such faith in the preaching of the simple truth that if he did not see 'fruit' he would say 'There is something wrong,' and go at once and lay himself before God. Secondly, we learn to value our Bibles more, and this can be proved by the booksellers, who tell us more Bibles have been sold these two years than for twenty years before. Thirdly, we may learn to have more faith in prayer."

Various others referred to many things that have already been pointed out in our pages from time to time.

In the evening the hall was packed by a very attentive audience, when the Gospel addresses were given by Mr. Stalker, Free Church Minister, Kirkcaldy, and Mr. Müller, from Bristol. The former took his text from Isaiah i.: "Come now and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as snow." Mr. Müller spoke from the first three verses of 1 John iii.

SECOND DAY.

The second day's Conference commenced at the same hour, when Mr. Cowan, of Breeland, presided.

After devotional exercises, the Chairman offered a few remarks as to the "Armour," and referred to the death-bed of Hewitson, who, in reply to a question put as to what portion of the Word of God he felt precious to him, or which supported him most, said after a pause, "I feel no verse of Scripture to be specially dear to me, but I feel Jesus is very precious, for during the last year I have studied his life very closely, and now I feel Him near."

Mr. Stalker, of Kirkcaldy, then spoke, and referred to the various pieces of armour as narrated in Ephes. vi. 13-17, specially referring to the girdle of truth as being distinct from aggressive truth, indicated by the sword of the Spirit. While all truth was the sword of the Spirit, yet it was "evangelistic truth" very specially that he was to employ in aggressive warfare.

Dr. Asa Mahan, from America, followed on the same subject. He referred to the sandals, as worn in eastern countries only when going out. So the idea was that we go forth fully shod with the Gospel of peace.

Mr. Müller closed with a few remarks, and said the armour was all provided by God, but we were to use it, noticing specially that, having done all, we were to stand, not to put off the armour, not to fancy we were to rest now, but not to be discouraged, for the victory would be ours.

The afternoon meeting was also presided over by Mr. Cowan, and the subject, "Children's Meetings and Sabbath Schools," was introduced by Mr. McGregor, of Free St. Peter's, Dundee, when several ministers took part in the conversational discussion; but this meeting had rather a local than a general interest.

Dr. Wilson threw out the suggestion that the regular hours for the churches meeting on the Lord's day might be changed to 10 a.m. and 3.30 p.m., so as to allow a longer interval for children's services, and permit ministers and elders to superintend them, and thus allow parents to have their families all gathered around the family hearth by 5.30 p.m. on the Lord's day.

Gospel addresses were given to a crowded audience in the evening by Mr. Chalmers of Arbroath, and Mr. McNab of Saltcoats.

THIRD DAY.

The third and closing Conference took place on the 23rd inst., when Mr. Ferguson occupied the chair, and shortly spoke on the three topics leading to "Victory."

The first speaker was Mr. Müller, who spoke most cheerfully of the victory at last, when the fight was finished. Then

Rev. A. N. Somerville, Glasgow, dwelt on victory as obtained in the moment of trial. Taking the illustration of the three Hebrew youths, he pointed out wherein the trial consisted. They had to yield up all their prospects in life, and life itself, at the time that life had most attractions, if they would not bow down to this image. Yet they were not required to bow their heads three times a day, nor to worship the idols in their heart; but all required of them might only occupy ten minutes; and all the time they bowed the head they might have said, "Thou art a devil," "Thou art a devil." When did they obtain the victory? Was it when they came out of the furnace without the smell of fire upon them? Was it when a fourth was seen with them like unto the Son of God? No, it was when they were thrown into the furnace by the strong men, bound and helpless; then they obtained the victory, before they had any sign that God would interfere on their behalf. The speaker also illustrated his subject by the history of Demosthenes, and closed a very brilliant peroration with the final song of triumph,—“when death shall be swallowed up in victory, which shall be echoed from one company of the redeemed to the other, and from host to host; when the victory will be proclaimed from every open grave, and from the swelling top of jubilant waves, as the desert yields up her prey, and the sea gives up her dead.”

Dr. Mahan closed with some very practical remarks as to victory in the individual, and said victory was not to be obtained in Babylon, nor in Jerusalem, but in your own selves, in the circumstances in which you are placed; at the same time he gave some homely illustrations from daily life.

The evening meetings were continued on Thursday and Friday, when the speakers were Mr. Somerville, Mr. Müller, Mr. Robertson, of Edinburgh, and Mr. Robert Wilson, also of Edinburgh.

Last Lord's-day evening the meeting in the same hall was to be addressed by Mr. Müller and Mr. Wilson.

MISSIONS IN MADEIRA.

SIR,—Until this spring there have been no Protestant services in the native tongue, since the persecution thirty years since, when so many of the Portuguese gave up their homes, their liberties, and, in some cases, even life itself, for the cause of Christ. This spring, through the instrumentality of a Scotch Presbyterian minister, who was spending the winter here—a missionary from Lisbon, a native of Madeira, but who had to leave twenty years since on account of his religious opinions—came here, and the services were resumed, and in the main were well attended.

There has again been a break in these services, owing to the missionary's presence being required again at Lisbon, but it is trusted that they will be recommenced ere long, and that they may be maintained constantly. It is thought that there is a real interest in the things of God being awakened in the island, though, of course, all is yet in its infancy, and there is much timidity yet to be shaken off by the inhabitants in a strength superior to their own, as there is still much of body and soul subjection to the priests here, and the work has in some respects been pronounced to be one of greater difficulty than if it were among savages. So long as it is confined to the town, and not carried into the mountains—where it is, if possible, more needed—the risk of persecution, both for hearers and workers, will be much less; but I trust that you and other Christians will kindly give your prayers, that all, even life itself, may be counted as nothing in comparison with following the Lord fully and striving to lead others to the true knowledge of Him.

Trusting that you may be induced to make this cause known amongst your readers, and that their hearts may be greatly opened to assist in it,

I remain, yours faithfully,
Quinta dos Saltoes, Funchal, Madeira. L. A. ROBERTS.

FROM JANUARY 1 the Egyptian Government will adopt the metric system, and will compel its universal use after Jan. 1, 1878.

MAJOR COLE AT GLOUCESTER.

LAST Saturday Major Cole came to us. At 8 a.m. on Sunday, the 19th, his first meeting for Christian workers was held in the Theatre. About 300 were present, and it was good to be there. Exhortation to personal effort, illustrated by examples of blessing attending such labour, was his theme, and the hearts of many felt the power and force of the words uttered. At the close, one who had been anxious for some time was spoken to by Major Cole, and was led by the word spoken to her to rest in Christ.

In the afternoon the Theatre was crowded before the time to commence. "Christ the Rock" was the subject of our brother, and sinners were led to trust in the Rock of Ages. A working-man, in his dirty working dress, was seen by a young Christian man sitting on the market steps, and asked to the meeting, where he was led to Christ. There was also an overflow meeting in the Wellington Hall. This hall was full; fifteen rose to be prayed for, and some, we hope, found rest in Christ. In the evening, although wet, the Theatre was crowded.

On the Monday there was our united monthly prayer-meeting, that has now been held, I think, over three years. A good number came out at noonday, but at night the Corn Exchange was very crowded. Major Cole presided, and the Holy Ghost very clearly led him in conducting the meeting. At the close, numbers of anxious souls remained to be conversed with, and again we trust there was faith given to many to rest in the Saviour. The meetings since then have been held in the large Shire Hall, and each night it has been full. Last night the place was very crowded, and numbers were standing. There has been blessing each night. Great blessing accompanies the singing by Major Cole, his wife, and daughter, of the sweet Gospel hymns. We expect Major Cole will stay with us for at least another week. We have been encouraged to hear of one getting peace in the street, and another at her own home. Our sowing-time has been long here, but the Lord is now, we believe, about to give in this city an abundant harvest. "Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing. Thou hast put off my sackcloth and girded me with gladness."

WM. NORRS.

Another correspondent writes:—Ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to praise God for the blessed work of his Holy Spirit in Gloucester. We do thank Him for the visit of Major, Mrs., and Miss Cole, for God is working mightily through them to the conversion of many precious souls. Gloucester has always been considered a very difficult city to move, but the happy experience of the past few days shows that "with God all things are possible," and "all things are possible to him that believeth."

Though the weather has been continuously wet, the largest hall in Gloucester has been filled night after night with eager and attentive audiences, and on Friday several hundreds could not gain admission. The powerful presence of God was manifest, and in the quiet hush of silent prayer many desired the prayers of Christians for themselves, and remained to accept Jesus as their loving Saviour. The ministers and Christian friends stayed also to direct them to Him. From the very first the Lord graciously set his seal of approval and blessing on the work in the conversion of sceptics, scoffers, drunkards, the careless, and moralists. There have been most touching instances which we have not time to mention now, but hope to give in some future issue of THE CHRISTIAN.

Prayer is still asked that the Lord will continue to save souls. It is much to be regretted that Major Cole is unable to remain longer in our midst, but he leaves for York on Saturday, Oct. 2, where we hope that the ministers and Christians will rally round God's dear and faithful servant as he lifts up Jesus, who will draw sinners to Himself.

This work is of far more than ordinary interest, or it would not occupy so much space in the columns of our secular press.

THE ATTENDANCE at the National Temperance Camp meeting at Old Orchard Beach, Maine, reached 10,000 on Sunday, Aug. 29.

TEMPERANCE IN IRELAND.—The progress of the cause of temperance in Ireland during the last few years has resulted in much good to all classes of the population. Statistical reports and the observations of careful travellers and of other writers show that intemperance has greatly diminished, and that far less whiskey is consumed in proportion to the number of people than in England and Scotland.

THE DANGERS OF THE DEEP.

THE Rev. W. H. Burton, who sailed for Canada last month, with fifty boys from the Home of Industry, on board the Moravian, writes to Miss Macpherson from Knowlton as follows respecting the voyage:—

"You will be pleased to know that we have arrived safely with our fifty Canadians. The dear little fellows were glad enough to reach their new home, and though it was dark and they were very tired, they did not fail to give a real long English cheer as they drove up to the house. It has been quite a pleasure to be with them. On board the ship they were quite an acquisition to the company. Steerage and cabin passengers, with the crew, alike seemed to take the deepest interest in them, and were full of inquiries about them and your good work in sending them out. They were also a great help to us in our work on board the ship. They were always pleased to be set singing, and their songs, of course, drew together the passengers and crew. This gave us daily, and sometimes more frequent, opportunities of speaking for the Master. On Sunday the boys formed the choir in the saloon, when we preached to nearly 300 people. The place was crowded from all parts of the ship.

"You will have heard of the awful accident which happened to us in the matter of the collision with the iceberg. It was indeed a solemn and critical time. For some time none of us expected to get any more to land, and not a few had deliberately made up their minds that in a very few moments they would be with their Lord. But our time was not yet come. In his wisdom and love the dear Lord has thought proper to spare us a little longer. But that night can never be forgotten by any who were there, and by not a few it will be remembered as the time when the Lord met them indeed!

"Little dreaming what was to happen in the interval, I had on Thursday evening announced a service in the steerage for Friday morning, at ten o'clock. What a gathering it was! How eagerly the people pressed to hear the Word of God. We were still in the midst of fogs and icebergs, and the sound of the pumping to keep the vessel free was plainly heard where we met; so that everybody knew our position was still critical. All this, however, under God, assisted our work. We felt that we were within a step of death—that at any moment, without giving us time to reach the deck, we might find a common sepulchre in that steerage, and we spoke and listened as for eternity; and the Lord was there. The sobs of the women, and the tears of the strong, stout men, told how intense the feeling in the meeting was, and subsequently received testimony proved to us that our narrow escape had been sanctified to the quickening of believers and the conversion of sinners. I cannot speak positively as to numbers, but the Great Day will show that the voyage of the Moravian was one rich in results for our blessed Master. The testimony received was of the most sincere and simple sort—a kind of testimony which carried with it its own best credentials."

The following, from the Toronto Globe, describes the accident referred to in the foregoing:—

"At midnight, on the 2nd inst., when one hundred miles east of the Straits of Belle Isle, the Moravian, in a fog, came in contact with a large iceberg, but was immediately got clear with the loss of her bowsprit and some damage to a few plates in her bows above the water line. The extent of injury could not at once be ascertained, and preparations were instantly made for every contingency. The crew quickly took their prescribed posts in moments of danger, the boats were cleared for launching, and the passengers summoned from their berths.

"In less than an hour the full extent of the damage was ascertained, and steps taken to repair it. Meanwhile perfect discipline and composure were maintained throughout the ship."

THE WORK AT WOOLWICH.—Meetings are still being held at St. Andrew's Church without any apparent abatement of interest. Mr. S. Golding has just concluded another week of special services, and again not a few have been brought to the Lord. One evening was devoted to the children. It is cheering to see the staff of Christian workers and the choir of young singers—all of them professedly the Lord's—weekly increasing. Classes for weekly instruction in Bible-reading for those converted have been formed, and are largely attended. Next week Dr. Thain Davidson preaches on Thursday; and on Monday, Oct. 4, Mr. Henry Varley, at the urgent request of many of his spiritual children here, comes to address young converts, and open another week of soul-winning. Will Christians remember us in prayer?

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE.

THIS earnest servant of God has issued the fourth yearly report of her work among the lambs at Stepney, and a most cheering little volume it is. Mrs. Hilton says:—

"We still have to report that the Crèche is progressing: we have over one hundred children daily, besides twenty-two in the Home, and nine or ten little lodgers who come by the week. The progress of the dear children is encouraging. They are often the means of doing much good in their homes, as I have before recorded, which, indeed, is the experience of all those who have had the privilege of working among the little ones. The benefit to the dear children directly cannot be estimated; the simple songs learned in childhood may come back to them in the strife of life, and breathe blessedness and peace.

"Some of the mothers are widows, others are deserted by their husbands, and some have husbands who are invalids. I think the saddest part of our labour is to receive the particulars of the cases, one or two of which I will give. A poor old woman came in with a very delicate baby in her arms; she shall state her own case. She said, 'This is my daughter's baby; she was one of the best girls that ever lived. I have had a large family of boys; three of them were lost at sea. I have had a good deal of trouble, and my daughter would not get married till she was thirty, because she would take care of me. She died fifteen months after she was married. Her husband was a good man, and would have taken care of me and the baby, but the first voyage he went after his wife died the ship went down, and all hands perished.' The poor old creature was so overwhelmed by the recital of her sorrows, that it was difficult to comfort her.

"A young widow comes in with a beautiful baby in her arms; her husband was lost at sea. Her face bears the grieved and bewildered look of one stricken by a mighty sorrow. We take baby in, and she is thus enabled to go to work.

"Then comes an old woman, who seems very poor, leading a little girl of between three and four years of age, named Lucy. She wears a little black hat trimmed with crape, and her face is very wistful. The old woman tells us that Lucy's mother died of consumption, and her father died quite recently, after three days' illness, and since that the aunt, who was going to take care of her, died also. The old woman said, 'I am a sort of aunt of her mother's, and I would not put little Lucy in the workhouse, but if I can leave her here I can do my work happier, and will take her home on my return from my day's work.' The poor old creature is not less than sixty-five or seventy years of age."

After a number of delightfully written sketches of the children who have been the objects of her care, Mrs. Hilton concludes:—

"Having given you some idea of the work which you by your liberality have enabled us to accomplish, we most earnestly plead for your continued interest and sympathy. This mission to babies has indeed opened a wide field of labour with the parents. Many a weary and desolate one has been enabled to realize that God is still the Husband of the widow and the Father of the fatherless, also that his children not only recognize the fatherhood of God, but the brotherhood of man; that their sorrows, which are so heavy, are shared by loving-hearted mothers and fathers in all parts of the kingdom; and that the children of the rich, whose homes are flooded with brightness, labour for and love those children on whose homes the shadows of poverty and sorrow rest; thus re-echoing the blessed song of 'Peace on earth and goodwill to men.' We have also, with the aid of our Heavenly Father, been enabled to gather some sweet blossoms of joy and hope, and by grace to bear all our discouragements, and found it blessed to labour and suffer for his name's sake; but our souls long for a larger share of the higher gifts of the Spirit, that we may bring many of those desolate ones into the Heavenly Fold."

The printed report contains, in addition, some well-written descriptions of the work that have appeared in various papers and periodicals. We advise friends to procure a copy, price 6d., from the Crèche, 12, Stepney-causeway, E.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE, 1875.—The official report of this year's Conference has now been issued, and will be welcomed by those who were present, as a profitable reminder of the many gracious words spoken on the subjects under consideration. Those who had not the privilege of attending the meetings will find in it much instructive teaching and exhortation, as well as interesting reports of the Lord's work in many of its departments. The volume may be had of Mr. Skinner, 88, Mildmay-park, N., and of Messrs. Shaw, Paternoster-row, price 2s.

SUNDAY MUSINGS.

'Tis happy Sunday evening—swiftly the time has sped.
The singing hour is at an end, the children must to bed.
A shadow of regret o'erclouds each little face so bright.
"Just one more hymn!" "No, darlings, no; 'tis bed-time now, good night."

And now the little ones are gone to childhood's sweet repose;
The autumn sun has long been set, the shades of evening close.
We will not have the lamp just yet, it is the day of rest,
There's light enough to talk about the things we all love best.

The hues of day may fade in gloom; earth's radiance may depart;

But a brighter than an earthly light is shining in our heart,
Gladdening our spirit's inmost depths with an eternal day,
Shining in brighter glory yet on the land that's far away.

"Far, far away!" the children's hymn still lingers on our tongue.

Is it indeed so far away, the land of which we sung?
As on the mountain-height we stand, above the mist and haze,
Faith's telescope brings very near its glories while we gaze.

And yet, full many a weary step our feet perchance must tread,

Before we reach the narrow stream (the stream we used to dread)

Which parts us from that happy land, where we shall see His face,

And know, as here we cannot know, the fulness of His grace.

Some of our friends have crossed the stream, and even now they stand

With Jesus, on the other side, within the happy land.

While full and sweet the harmony their tuneful voices raise,
We join, in feebler, fainter notes, the self-same hymn of praise,

To Him who shed his precious blood to wash away our sin,
Who opened wide the eternal gates that we might enter in;
Our ever-living, loving God, triumphant o'er the grave,
Who holds all power in heaven and earth, omnipotent to save.

The Son of Man, who once on earth did all our sorrows share,
The Son of God, who reigns on high and listens to our prayer:
With such a Friend to sympathize, with such a God to bless,
Can Satan and his hosts alarm, can earthly cares depress?

Had we to oppose the mighty foe, well might our courage shrink;

Had we to bear the heavy load, well might our spirits sink.

It is not so, thank God. Since He, the Almighty God, is ours;
Assured of victory, we defy Satan and all his powers.

What though we see not far ahead, nor know what shall befall,
We look to Jesus all the way, and simply trust for all.

Through this dark world our path lies bright in the sunshine of his love,

No other light makes glad the saints in his other world above.

The light He sheds we may reflect, and shine for Jesus here,
Some wandering soul to hasten back, some fainting heart to cheer,

Till, when the dear Lord calls, we go to join the ransomed band

Who serve our God, and see his face, in the sinless, happy land.

REST FOR THE WEARY.—Mr. Frederick Smith, of Leeston, Weston-super-Mare, writes to the Weston Mercury, proposing the adoption of a measure in that town for the benefit of female employés in shops, whereby recesses should be formed in the shops where they might be allowed occasionally to sit down. We add our sincerest wishes for the success of the proposed plan.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN MANCHESTER.—The removal of the tent from Ardwick to Pendleton, to which we alluded in last week's number of THE CHRISTIAN, has been owned by our Lord in the awakening of sinners. The first public service was held on Sunday afternoon, the 19th inst., when the tent was filled to overflowing. At the noon prayer-meeting at the Religious Institute on Monday, the 20th inst., Dr. Ziemann gave a short account of the tent services. Mr. W. Hind Smith spoke in grateful terms of the work in Ardwick, and urged the erection (by those on whom God had conferred the blessing of wealth) of more substantial structures—wooden buildings, which could be erected in the midst of the homes of those classes who would not attend other places of worship. At the Circus meetings conversions have been numerous, and the homes of those who have given themselves to the Lord have been visited, their names having been entered in a book kept for the purpose. Many mothers have blessed the day on which their sons were led to attend the services in the Circus.

AN INDIAN FEMALE CHIEF CONVERTED.

THE Rev. E. P. Hammond, writing to the New York Christian at Work says:—"I have just returned from an Indian Sunday-school here at Victoria, in British Columbia, and in it I found a noble chieftess who spoke in my meeting yesterday. I am sure you will be interested in learning something of her history.

"Her people live about 600 miles north of here. She was their born chief. About seven years ago she came here to live where she saw large churches in which she was told the people were taught how to love God and get fitted for a better world. For seven long years she went to an Episcopal church, all the time anxious about her soul; but no one ever invited her to come to Jesus. One day she was passing by a Sunday-school, and through the open door she saw the children at their lessons, and asked a child at the door if she could go in. She did so, and there heard of how Jesus had died on the cross for sinners. Her heart was touched; and before long she learned to trust Him.

"Her soul was then so filled with holy joy that she wanted all her friends to come to Jesus. She therefore went among them and urged them to attend the Sunday-school conducted by Mr. McKay. Little by little they came in, till scores of them also began to love the Saviour. At the same time she felt a great burden for the conversion of her son, who lived 600 miles north, at Fort Simpson, with his tribe of 1000 or 1500. Whole nights she spent in prayer that the Lord would send him down here, that he might hear Amos, the converted Indian, pray in the Sabbath-school, as she had, and so find his heart moved as hers had been. This son was no better than a cannibal,—a terror to all about when he was here twenty years ago. She had not seen him for years, and had lost all influence over him.

"But God could influence him in answer to her prayer; and He did so. And what do you think was the result? Just this: he took his wife and uncle and started in a little canoe on a journey of 600 miles; all in answer to prayer. He knew not what he was taking that long journey for; but the Lord did, and so did his mother, the chieftess. As soon as he reached here she began to tell him all about Jesus, and got him to go with her to the Indian Sunday-school. He went, but did not like it at first; but her faith failed not. Again he went, and heard the same converted Indian, Amos, pray. He then began to tremble with astonishment to hear a hated, flat-headed, degraded Indian pray. When a boy he had been taught to read, but his mother had not then learned to read. She said to him: 'You know how to read, and you must read for me the fourteenth chapter of John.' He did so. His heart melted; and as she explained to him about the way of salvation through the finished work of Christ, he could not resist such love; and so this wicked man, who had helped to eat other men, and had scalped many a one, came as a lost, guilty sinner to the Saviour's open arms. His sins were all forgiven, his heart changed, and his soul filled with a new love. He then begged some one to go back with him to his tribe. As soon as a missionary was promised him, he started back to tell his people of the sufferings of Christ on the cross for them. I am told that he led about 500 of those wild, bloodthirsty Indians to the foot of the Cross.

"When the missionary (Mr. Pollard) some time after went among them, they met him twelve miles below the landing, and took him off the steamboat on board their war canoe, and it was hours before he was through shaking hands with them, for every one of them would have a shake of his hand. This was more than a year ago. The good work is still going on, and many more are being led to Christ."

CRAYFORD.—We have had Tent services in this village, conducted by James Nech, one of the Evangelization Society's men, and assisted in the singing by a choir of about forty Christian men and women. The interest in the services has been very great, and the results most blessed. Many Christians have been cheered, and their love to the Master warmed, and many poor sinners have accepted Jesus as their own Saviour. The Christian workers in connexion with this movement most urgently plead for the prayers of your readers.

RICHARD WEAVER.—Dr. Cranage writes:—"Many hundreds, if not thousands, owe to Richard Weaver, as the instrument in God's hands, their life in Jesus. He was much blessed in Wellington many times. Are there not many of these and others who will gladly week by week add to your generosity column, to minister to him in his precarious health and real need of the things of this life? I am sorry I cannot afford more than the trifles I enclose."

A REQUEST FROM BASUTO-LAND.

THE CHRISTIAN, thanks to the kindness of a very dear friend, has found its way to our distant home. We hail with joy and deep emotion its refreshing tidings of the wonders which the Lord is working in England. Will a little voice from a remote and unknown corner of South Africa be heard in your midst? I trust you will give it room in your columns, and that it shall be heeded by every praying child of God who may read these lines.

The annual meeting of our Mission and the Synod of our native churches are to be held here, if God wills, early in March, 1876. Such gatherings are a source of great anxieties to us, and the object of earnest prayers. With these important meetings will probably coincide the departure of the first native missionaries whom our Basuto churches send beyond the Limpopo, in the regions of the Zambesi. Will you, beloved brethren, pray that those meetings in the darkest district of Basuto-land may be a season of great blessings? The Lord has already favoured us with a few large heavy drops, but we want more than that: we watch for the appearance of the "little cloud"; we expect the windows of heaven to be opened, and the outpouring of such torrents of blessings, that we shall have no room to receive them. Brethren, if you plead for us, when you remember our meetings in March, ask no less.

I request also your prayers in behalf of the chief of this tribe where we labour. Converted in his youth in the early days of our Mission, he walked consistently for many years. His zeal then made him the right hand of those who were first to break up the ground in this field. Alas! he fell away and became an apostate many years ago. His conscience is not asleep, and at times speaks loudly. Nevertheless, this apostate being a powerful and influential chief, is one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the Gospel here. Though doing Satan's work, he is, I have reason to believe, a child of God gone astray. I have prayed for him for many years. I beseech you, my brethren, remember him in your prayers also. When I so urgently request your prayers, it may be interesting for you to have some idea of our position in this tribe. Lately the census taken by Government shows in the district of Leribe (one of the four of Basuto-land) a population of over 31,000 souls scattered over an extensive mountainous district. With a few native helpers we labour alone, my dear wife and myself, in this wide field. We are overwhelmed. I need say no more to justify the request I send for the help of your prayers. May the Lord accompany these lines with his blessing, and dispose many hearts to pour out before the throne of grace their applications for the twofold object which I lay before you. "And he that watereth shall be watered also."

Yours in the Lord,
Leribe, British Basuto-land, South Africa. F. WILLEARD.

YORK.—Just as we are going to press a report reaches us of special services here, conducted by Mr. H. Varley, which have been a source of spiritual blessing to many. We regret it has come too late for insertion this week.

PROVIDENCE CHAPEL CHRISTIAN MISSION, HACKNEY-ROAD.—In the spring of this year a meeting was convened by our pastor, Mr. Cuff, to consider what we could do in the neighbourhood during the summer to bring the Gospel before the people. A society was forthwith commenced, under the above title (now numbering over eighty members, male and female), and a regular plan arranged for preaching in the courts and back streets around the chapel. Companies have gone out every evening but Saturday, and have held services of an hour in length, and at about twenty different stations. Nearly 100 services in all have been conducted, at which we have sung Mr. Sankey's hymns. By this plan (which we would commend to many brethren who find it difficult to secure the attention of a number of people in the public streets) we have had an audience prepared for us. Jesus and his salvation have been faithfully proclaimed to willing hearers, who often bring out their chairs during the services and beg us to come again. During an experience of fourteen years' open-air preaching I can testify to never having seen such eager and rapt attention as has, in almost every instance, been given to us. We are now making arrangements for indoor work, and hope to occupy three or four mission-rooms during the winter. Brethren, pray for us; for in this neighbourhood (behind Shoreditch Church) darkness still reigns supreme; and remember, as was stated at the open-air conference in Providence Chapel, that only about one in 100 people in Bethnal Green ever enters a chapel or church. We shall be happy to send preachers and helpers for occasional evangelistic services to any brethren who would wish to hold such in school-rooms where no adult services are now held, within a reasonable radius from Shoreditch.

"SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD."

SOME weeks ago I read in THE CHRISTIAN (Young Women's Number) a letter from a nurse. Being a nurse myself, I was naturally very much interested in it, and I thought I would see what work I could do for the Lord. Having been a Christian myself for nine years, and never tried to win a soul for Christ, I at once bought a shilling packet of tracts, and in my walks stuck them in hedges, and, when out alone, gave them away. I cannot say with what eagerness they were received. Each leaflet had been prayed over, and I believe there will be some souls won to Christ through them. I have, since that, spoken personally to the under-nurse, and God has richly blessed my efforts by making me the means of leading her to Christ. I go on giving away tracts and seeking in various other ways to win others to Jesus, and I can speak of the blessedness of living to serve Him. Let each one of us, in whatever position we are, be up and doing, for "the night cometh when no man can work." A FRIEND.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.

MANY of your readers will be glad to hear that a good work is being carried on by some earnest Christians in this populous town.

It was my privilege to preach Christ there last Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, in a large wooden tent, capable of holding 500 persons; being erected in an excellent position, it seems well adapted for getting under the sound of the Gospel those who attend no regular place of ministry.

At each of the three services held we have good reason to believe that souls were awakened or brought to peace through a believing reception of Christ as their Saviour. One dear woman, who stayed behind on Sunday night, who said, "she had been carrying a burden of sin for years, until the load had become intolerable," was on Tuesday set at liberty, by the Holy Spirit revealing Christ in the fulness of his love at the meeting; and she went away with a bright, beaming face, saying, "My burden is now gone, and I am quite happy."

One very solemn thing occurred during this brief visit. A man, who remained behind on Sunday night, died suddenly in the street the next day; but as he confessed to a simple trust in the Lord Jesus for salvation to the one who conversed with him, we have a humble hope that "he is not dead, but sleepeth."

Among the many eager, anxious faces one evening, was that of a young woman, scarcely out of her teens, who, by her exceedingly gay attire and jaunty smiling manner on entering, indicated the class to which she belonged. She had not been in long before the arrow of conviction appeared to enter her heart; her face during the whole evening wore an expression of the deepest anxiety, and she seemed to drink in the truth as for her very life. She left during the singing of the last hymn, so we had no opportunity of conversing with her.

We have no doubt that many such persons, attracted by the singing, attend the meetings; and who can tell how many a faithful vassal Satan loses through the simple, earnest services so frequently held under this unpretentious yet admirable structure? JAMES SHOWELL.

POSTAGE TO FRANCE.—Will your readers allow me to remind them of Mr. Theodore Monod's remark in THE CHRISTIAN of Aug. 26 last concerning postage to France, for as an almost daily occurrence we have to pay 9d. uselessly, for thick paper and envelopes; whereas a little thoughtfulness on the part of Christians would prevent this. It would be a general benefit to the several workers in France who have a large correspondence with England if the dear Christians would use thinner materials.

A PARIS WORKER.

[For the information of correspondents we may here state that the letter postage to France is 8d. for each one-third of an ounce.—ED.]

THE NETHERLANDS.—The Rev. Dr. Faure informs us of meetings for the promotion of Scriptural holiness at Neerbosch, on Aug. 18 to 20. Speaking of the result, he says:—"The great blessing to our country is that the partition-walls have been thrown down between the parties and sects and different branches of Christ's Church that have kept aloof from each other. This was also beautifully proved at the ancient university town of Leiden last week, where a similar conference was held, and all the believing ministers of the various Protestant churches in the town took part—in fact, convened the meetings. The last evening, one of the largest churches was literally crammed to overflowing. The tide of living waters is rising over our low lands."

CONGREGATIONAL CLASSES.

THE Leeds Congregationalist says:—"We doubt whether the study of the Bible is pursued in as interesting and thorough a way as it might be, and whether sufficient opportunity is afforded in our congregations for the friction of mind with mind in the realm of highest thought,—the nature and destiny of man as revealed in Scripture. On the Sunday, sermons are elaborated from special texts; in the week-night services, practical exhortations are given; but the breadth and scope of Scripture—the correlation of the Old and New Testaments; the system of types,—the mission of the prophets,—the doctrinal scheme of the apostles; the deep things of the Word,—when does all this come before our people with that width of vision, that rapid alteration of stand-point, that opportunity for question and answer and correction of erroneous views, that surely are needed?"

"We want Congregational Bible Classes and Congregational Letter-box Classes,—opportunities for perplexities of mind and heart to meet with the skilled and friendly hand that can unravel them. We Protestants make our boast of the Bible; what percentage of our congregations could give an intelligible account of the teaching of the 8th of Romans, or anything more than a meagre outline of the Christology of the Old Testament? Our suggestion is that some of our week-night services, and Monday evening 'literary' meetings should be vivified by the solemn purpose to dive more deeply this winter into God's Word. There is treasure hid in it, which yields itself to none but the diligent seeker. And it is disgraceful in anyone to shrink from the full and frank investigation of the whole message from God."

"WITHHOLD NOT THINE HAND."

SIR,—Your article under this heading in Aug. 19, by "E. H.," has much interested me, as distributing God's Word in portions has been the only little service which I have been able to render to my Master during an enforced two years' sojourn in Switzerland in search of health, and I hope in it I have had an earnest desire that those around me might be partakers of blessings of Gospel light, for they are very dark, and living without God and without hope in the world.

At each hotel where I stop I give a portion in either French or German to each servant with the usual gratuity, and the little book is always received with pleasure. It may be well to say that the portions are easily obtained abroad. There are dépôts at Baale, Geneva, Lucerne, and Lausanne. The man and his wife who keep the dépôt at Lucerne are Germans. He was converted from Romanism by reading the Bible, and he now devotes his life to sowing the Word everywhere through the Roman Catholic German cantons, visiting fairs and markets through the country. He tried to open a little Sunday-school for Protestant children at his house; but this was at once put a stop to by the priests, who reign supreme in Lucerne.

The dépôt at Lucerne is in connexion with the Bible Society of Baale, and not with the British and Foreign Bible Society of London, as is supposed by some who visit Lucerne. It is maintained here with much difficulty, and is a little light shining in a very dark priest-ridden canton. M. S.

BOARDING-OUT PAUPER CHILDREN.—Miss Prouser, the presiding spirit in this movement, has issued a report of its progress, which seems in every way encouraging. It is, no doubt, a more troublesome method than that generally adopted by the guardians of the poor, but the ascertained results are more than sufficient compensation. Miss Prouser well remarks: "As the want of good servants is so seriously felt, it would be well if the attention of ladies were directed more to the boarding-out of orphans, as a measure to attain, by-and-by, good and useful servants, in the most simple, natural, and inexpensive way."

HOPE HOUSE, IPSWICH, was opened in January last, with this one object in view—prevention from wrong-doing. The friends who originated this work continually meet with little children left without one or both parents, growing up under bad influences both at home as well as in their surroundings, who, but for timely assistance, are in danger of being brought up in ignorance and vice. The little ones thus rescued are received into Hope House, educated, and carefully trained under the motherly Christian influence of a qualified matron. At present only girls have been admitted. The House will accommodate about twenty-five children; sixteen have already entered, some of whom are supported by different ladies interested in them individually. For others a weekly payment is received from the relatives able to pay. Funds are greatly needed to sustain and extend this work, as applications for the admission of fresh children constantly occur. Gifts and donations will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Miss Grimwade, Norton House, Ipswich.

THOROUGHNESS IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

AT one of the ladies' meetings at the Perth Conference, Mrs. Gibson, of Abbotshall, Kirkoaldy, who carries on a successful work among the mill-girls in her neighbourhood, made some very practical remarks about the great importance of thoroughness in Christian work—thoroughness in our own consecration to the work, and in our dealing with souls. "If we would have success," she said, "we must be out-and-out for Christ; not doing work for Him one day, and mingling with the world the next. Young women are quick enough to notice any flaws in the daily walk of those of us who are working amongst them, and if we are not thoroughly consecrated to our work, our influence over them is greatly lessened. 'Whosoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men.' There is also great need of thoroughness in our dealing with souls. I fear there is much of what might be called slipshod work in these days, when it has become fashionable to work for Christ, if I may use such an expression.

"We cannot be too faithful in our dealing with souls, either when speaking to them in our classes, or in private. It is a terrible thing to say 'peace, peace, when there is no peace,' and thus to lull souls over to spiritual slumber. The two essential things to insure success in our teaching are, presenting the Word of God faithfully, and believing prayer. God will give unlimited blessing, if we only plead believingly the promises He has given us. The more we honour God's word in our teaching, the more blessing we will have; and those who read mere story-books in their meetings or classes need not expect to see many souls won to Jesus. I believe that much of the success of my class is owing to the prayers of my young women themselves, meeting as they do every Thursday evening half-an-hour before the class, for prayer.

"Another important thing is that we should deal with them tenderly and lovingly, seeking to win them by love, and making them feel that in their teacher they have a real friend. Many, in the upper walks of life, look upon our mill and factory young women as a low class of rude and rough beings. I can assure you that, as a class, it is not so. Just lately, a girl who was awakened, and brought to know Jesus as her Saviour, slipped her hand within my arm while I was speaking to her about her soul, and looking up into my face said, 'Mrs. Gibson, will you love me?' I replied 'I do love you, but you have got One better than me to love you now!' 'Oh yes, but I want you to love me too.'

"They yearn for the sympathy of those above them, and have many snares and temptations to face, and are too often led astray. The need is great for pure, earnest-hearted Christian ladies to deal plainly, lovingly, and patiently with them, and many may be won who shall shine as jewels in the Saviour's crown."

MORE HOLIDAY WORK.

A LONDON City missionary, who has been seeking rest and recreation at a kind Christian sister's house near Wickham Market, writes to us as follows:—

"The blessed Lord has made use of me since I have been here. I have visited the homes of some. One young man in the town near here, who was dying, I went to see; he had come down from London to die at home; and, what seemed strange, he had been living in the very house of business that was the first I entered on going to London, more than twenty years ago. He was in two days led into peace, and sent word to some of his friends in the town that he was so happy.

"On Sunday was my harvest; the week-days the people are all busy with their harvest, and they are making the most of the fine weather. On Sunday I was constrained to do the same. In the first place, I conducted an open-air meeting on Saxtead-green, at 10.30 in the morning, with the help of friends; about forty present. Then, in the afternoon, conducted one at Flemingham, in a meadow lent for the occasion; about 400 present, all most attentive. A man and his wife were anxious; I have seen them since. In the evening we held another meeting on Saxtead-green; nearly 200 present. We had a little disturbance from the devil in the person of two drunken men; but they were prayed for, and the Lord gave the victory. One went away; the other I got into a room, where he remained and wept like a child, and acknowledged his fault. We had an after-meeting, at which I trust souls were brought into peace. The two servants in this house were greatly broken down, and yesterday morning they both were enjoying peace to their souls. Will you praise the Lord for this?"

HOLIDAY SERVICE IN NORWAY.

It may interest the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to hear something of evangelistic work accomplished in Norway during a few weeks' holiday in July and August. I went with a dear brother in the Gospel, the Rev. James Watney, and it was our earnest wish and prayer to leave behind us a witness for Christ. I trust the Lord helped us in doing this; and the encouragement given to us may stimulate others to work in holiday seasons for the Master who is so ready to open a door for his servants.

Crossing by the Argo, we had an interesting open-air service on deck on a Friday afternoon, and this led to other work. The sailors and deck passengers were invited to the service; and before leaving the ship at Bergen, early on the Sunday morning, one of the sailors invited us to come and speak in his house in the evening, and promised to collect his neighbours and friends if we would do so. Not knowing anything of the language, we scarcely knew of what use it could be, but we went, and found some sixty Norwegians closely packed together in two rooms. By aid of one who knew both English and Norwegian, I spoke to them for half-an-hour on the brotherhood of Christ's people, and their dependence on Him. I think there were very plain tokens that the message was not in vain.

The following day we visited the two leper hospitals, and here, too, we had an opportunity of speaking of the Saviour and giving tracts to many of the inmates. By a very providential guidance, we met a Christian man by the wayside, who accompanied us, and, from his residence in England, had learnt the language, and was able to interpret the few words we spoke to one and another in passing through the various wards. The sad condition of many of these poor lepers, and the terrible havoc disease had made, led us to feel doubly grateful for the opportunity given to us of telling them of the Saviour's love.

On our journey, passing through some of the most remote parts of Thelemark, the Norwegian Gospels, tracts, and copies of the British Workman were everywhere most gratefully received. "Tousin tok" ("A thousand thanks") was not seldom heard, accompanied by a hearty shake of the hand, which we found to be one invariable way by which the little children as well as older persons expressed their thankfulness.

A most interesting service was held one Sunday afternoon amidst the wildest mountain scenes of this part of Norway. An excellent and devoted man, Pastor Storjohann, was with us, and he sent far and near to gather together the road makers and the few scattered herdsmen to be found in the neighbourhood. About fifty met in a spot where no service had ever before been held, and it was most interesting to see these strange, rough men seated on their snow-sledge and the mountain side. Pastor Storjohann first gave them papers with translations from some of Mr. Sankey's hymns, and then taught them the tunes for "There is a gate that stands ajar" and "Come to the Saviour; make no delay." After this he addressed them most earnestly, and then gave to myself and my dear brother, and also to a Presbyterian minister present, an opportunity of speaking to them, translating sentence by sentence as we spoke to them.

Never shall I forget that afternoon. In one heart at least a deep impression was left, which I trust may abide to life eternal.

At a little place called Ulefos I had an interesting Bible-class with a few poor women. I was heartily welcomed into a cottage where at the door I had read a verse out of a Norwegian Gospel of St. John (John iii. 16), which I had learnt to pronounce with tolerable accuracy. From the Bible which I found within I pointed out various texts in connexion. On the living water—Isa. lv. 1; John iv. 10, 13, 14; John vii. 37, 38; Rev. xxi. 6, xxii. 17. And similarly on the Saviour's blood and on loving Him. They entered into the subjects with the greatest interest, and loaded me as I left with some delicious currants, which I had not seen since leaving England.

In Christiania we had an opportunity of seeing and sharing Pastor Storjohann's evangelistic work in that city. We spoke in a crowded room in the Sailors' Home, and also in a Gospel Tent holding six hundred persons, which he has lately opened, and where he hopes to hold several services weekly during the summer months.

We also were able to say a few words in three of the factories near the city, and several hundred workmen were thus addressed. One of the workmen said to me in English, "Give my love to England; I found my Saviour there, and I have many Christian friends there, and I love England dearly." Another shook me by the hand, and said, "Thank you, minister." Another said in Norwegian, "I have been seeking the Lord lately, and your words have helped me."

I have not time to write of work in Sweden. My last evening, after not a few open doors, was spent at a Bible-reading with about twenty English-speaking Swedes, on the subject of letting our light shine. At the English service at Stockholm on the previous Sunday the American minister for Denmark was present, and also the sister of the President of the United States of America, and it seemed a great delight to them to hear a plain address on the Friend who is always near, always kind, and always able to help us.

On the homeward voyage from Gottenberg many Swedish emigrants to America flocked around, and here, too, a door was opened for telling of Christ. Thanks be to God for his gracious answers to the prayers of his children. May I ask the prayers of Christians for Norway, and especially for Pastor Storjohann and his work at Christiania? He is now building a large mission house, costing about £3000, and I should be most thankful to forward to him any contributions of English Christians towards his work.

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

MY DEAR SIR,—I was so pleased to read the account which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of the 9th inst., given by one of the Jubilee Singers, respecting the above, that I thought fit to see our brother (an aged blacksmith in the Dockyard) over whose house the text is affixed, and ascertained from him the following history connected with it:—

Some fifteen years or so ago, he and some more used to go about of an evening after work, and having furnished themselves with some large Scripture texts, would place them up in conspicuous positions on trees and walls, etc. Subsequently the thought occurred to have one over his own house, but being only a tenant, and that in a back street, he contrived to get the house where he now lives on mortgage, and, as he said, he was then able to do as he pleased. He first had a swing-board (like the sign-board of an inn), with a text on either side, but thinking the railway passengers in passing by would be better able to see one if placed right along the top of the house, he got the present one put up. Several cases of good resulting from the reading of the text have come to his notice during the past ten or twelve years it has been there. One came under my observation a few months ago, when visiting a lad belonging to the Dockyard who was dying. He told me that when passing in the train for a "change of air," he was seriously impressed by the text; and he died, trusting in Jesus.

I was so much struck by it myself some months ago that I got a large text, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin," placed on the side of my house, which is a corner one, at Kingston.

One cannot help thinking how often the text appears to us, if not in words, yet in things and events. As we go home at night the fire-escape meets our eye; what does it say but "Prepare to meet thy God"? We are going along the street, and we meet a funeral—the same text. We go on board ship, and there we see large, round rings hanging about—life-buoys—same text.

In how very many ways may it thus be seen, if people would but read it. I may say the Rev. F. Baldey, of Southsea, has over his door: "When I see the blood I will pass over you."

H.M.'s Dockyard. Yours sincerely, G. D. D.

P.S.—It occurs to my mind that perhaps some friends would like to see it on their way to or from Portsmouth. It is on the left-hand side on leaving here by rail, and is just midway between the first two arches under which the train passes.

HIGHER EDUCATION.—A scheme for extending to the best scholars in board schools the advantages of higher education has been adopted by the Manchester School Board. It is proposed to establish exhibitions tenable at public schools, and a voluntary fund is to be instituted for the purpose. A special grant in addition will be made to pupils willing to qualify for pupil teachers.

HARLINGTON.—At the recent anniversary of the Baptist chapel here, the Rev. J. P. Chown preached from Isa. lxvi. 13. He ventured an opinion that if each child of God obeyed the exhortation to invite all men to "Come," the world would be girdled with the Gospel in a fortnight, and he also thought the Church of Christ would never fulfil her mission until every member was, in some degree or form, a preacher.

RACE-CARD SELLERS AT DONCASTER.

FOLLOWING the good example set last year by the members of the Young Men's Christian Association, the ladies and gentlemen who contributed to the feast gave a supper of coffee, bread-and-butter, and pork-pies at the Ragged School on the evenings of Tuesday and Thursday in the race week to sixty-five card sellers on each evening. Though a rough-looking company, they were orderly, quiet, and attentive, and appeared to enter fully into the religious part of the proceedings, and to enjoy the provision liberally supplied to them. Prayers were offered, portions of Scripture read, and hymns (Sankey's) were sung by them from sheets supplied to all. Small Gospel books were given to all each evening.

On Friday evening Mrs. Brock, the wife of the Rev. H. F. Brock, Vicar of Christ Church, gave a similar supper to twenty-seven of these card-sellers, who could not be accommodated on the previous evening, though pleading for admission.

After an address by Mr. Yelland, Mrs. Brock read the pretty story in verse of Mrs. Sewell's, entitled, "Mother's Last Words," which was listened to with marked attention and thrilling interest—a proof that these wandering and neglected ones have better feelings which can be reached by Christian sympathy. At the conclusion of the evening each person had two meat-pies given.

Before they separated, each was presented with a copy of the Psalms, having the recipient's name and date written in. Six of them, after ten o'clock, set off for a moonlight walk to Sheffield.

A Manchester card-seller, who had, with six companions, attended race-meetings all over the country, became so impressed that he resolved to give up the calling and his old companions, and seek work in which the several friends who had spoken to him at the meetings are assisting him. The following day he attended prayer-meetings, and he was seen on Sunday both at the open-air preaching and at the Ragged School Service. W. S.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

DEPARTED FRIENDS. Hodder and Stoughton.—This is a book making provision for the entry of names and dates of decease of departed friends, in the same way as a birthday text-book, the passages of Scripture and verses of hymns being selected with special reference to life, death, and immortality.

SCRIPTURE HISTORY FOR FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS. Old Testament and New Testament. By ANDREW THOMSON. Edited by C. M. MONEY. Bagster.—Two elegant volumes, each complete in itself, which are highly valued by those who have used them. A mother writes:—"My children from seven to seventeen sit round me half-an-hour daily for instruction in Scripture through these books, and the time goes so fast that it is common for the younger boy, when we rise, to say, 'Oh, mamma, please, a little longer.'" We heartily commend them as books of reference as well as lesson-books. The notes are full of information and illustrative facts.

THE PSALMS. A New Version. By LORD CONGLETON. A new edition, revised, with notes suggestive of interpretation. London: J. E. Hawkins.—This is a new edition of a carefully prepared version of the Psalms which appeared some years ago. It has now appended to it notes suggestive of interpretation, but belonging to a school of interpretation with which we have little sympathy. Why should a portion of Scripture so eminently "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" as the Book of Psalms, be interpreted as if it were chiefly concerned with the experiences of "the godly remnant in Israel after the Church has been caught up"? That many of the Psalms are prophetic we cannot doubt; and that many such still await their fulfillment is clear. But a Psalm like the 32nd, describing, as the apostle Paul tells us, "the blessedness of the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteousness without works," has surely a far more direct personal bearing upon our times than Lord Congleton finds in it when he says, "By this Psalm we gather assuredly not only that the godly remnant of Israel of the last days are forgiven of Jehovah, and acknowledged as such, but also that they know themselves to be forgiven." It is difficult to see how we can "gather assuredly" an idea of which the Psalm itself does not contain the remotest hint, nor yet the passage in which it is quoted in the New Testament. We own we cannot sympathize with such a mode of treating, as if they were prophetic, Psalms that are eminently didactic and practical, and which we have the authority of the New Testament for considering applicable to the Church of God of the present dispensation.

A NEW TEMPERANCE HALL and Coffee Palace was opened last week in Dublin, and is likely to be successful.

BRIEF NOTES OF PASSING EVENTS.

THE JAPANESE GOVERNMENT has abolished torture as a means of extorting evidence, and of punishment.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS show, by latest statistics, 25 bishops, 1735 priests, 1,476,186 converts, 1134 schools, and 48,014 pupils in India.

THE EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE of the English Presbytery of London are arranging for a series of evangelistic services to be held in the churches throughout the metropolis, extending over a week in each case.

A REVIVAL under Young Men's Christian Association work at Aurora, Ill., has resulted in more than 100 hopeful conversions. Similar efforts were more than filling the largest church at Brownstown, so that resort had to be had to the Court-house.

DR. BLISS writes that the Turkish Government has at last granted the long-delayed permission to print the Turkish Bible in Arabic, "and also the insertion upon the title-page of a statement to the effect that this authorization has been given, so that nobody can stop its sale in the empire."

MR. GEORGE SMITH has been directed by the trustees of the British Museum to resume his excavations at Nineveh, and he expects to start for the East early next month. His new book on the "Chaldean Account of Genesis," which contains his recent discoveries, is now in the press, and will shortly be published.

JACOB HISHMEK, on behalf of the Friends, sold recently, within sixty days, 5036 copies of Russian, Bulgarian, Greek, Armenian, and Arabic tracts at Jerusalem. The Coptic pilgrims, who last year would not take one, have freely bought copies of the Sermon on the Mount, of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, &c.

REV. THEOPHILUS WOOLMER, the newly appointed secretary of the special fund for the extension of Methodism in Great Britain, has issued a stirring appeal in behalf of the scheme. It is proposed that a thousand chapels should be built in country villages and market towns, by the aid of this Fund, within the next ten years.

A WESLEYAN TEMPERANCE COMMITTEE has been formed, consisting of ministers and laymen, both abstainers and non-abstainers, to take such moral and legal action as may seem desirable and practicable in order to lessen the evils of intemperance; and the Conference also gives its sanction to the formation of Sunday-school Bands of Hope.

AT LLANELLY, a few days ago, the parochial clergyman, the Rev. R. Williams, baptized three men by immersion in the River Fferws; and in a sermon which he preached afterwards he pointed out that the Church left it optional whether baptism should be by immersion or by sprinkling, and remarked that it was not to be supposed that in using the former method the Church was imitating the Baptists, immersion having been used some 1500 years before the Baptists had been heard of.

MR. MOODY'S MEETINGS FOR YOUNG MEN in the West of London have, since his departure, been continued at the Young Men's Christian Association, 43, Great Marlborough-street. A series of special addresses, having for their subject "Christ in contact with Men," has been arranged for the following evenings:—Sunday, Oct. 3; Tuesdays, 5, 12, 19, 26; Thursdays, 7, 14, 21, 28. Some leading ministers and other gentlemen are among the lecturers. The meetings are to commence at 3.15 on Sunday, on other evenings at 8.30.

EGYPT IS OPENING in a most remarkable manner to the Gospel. Calls for missionary labour come from all directions, and the missionaries are greatly overworked. The Coptic converts are exceedingly active and successful. Eight candidates from the Theological Seminary were recently licensed, and one native pastor has been appointed. A new and more literal version of the Psalms is passing through the press. The schools are doing a great work. They have, in all, 1170 pupils, of whom 642 are males, and 528 females. It is expected that these successful labours among the Copts will produce a powerful effect on the Mohammedans, who are not altogether inaccessible, and some of whom are already feeling the influence of the Gospel. Egypt will be redeemed.

THE HOSPITAL AT BARCELONA.—Our last issue contained a sketch of the hospital which, in answer to prayer, God has given to George Lawrence at Barcelona. On Thursday morning, this brother, with Dr. Warren, a young man who goes out as a medical missionary, left London on his return to Spain, after a visit of a few months, rendered absolutely necessary to recruit his health. They were accompanied as far as Paris by the venerable Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, who has for half-a-century been deeply and practically interested in the evangelization of Spain. On Wednesday evening, the last of a series of valedictory meetings in various places was held at Paragon-road Chapel, Hackney, where a number of Christian friends met to commend these brethren to the care of God previously to their departure on the morrow. The addresses of Dr. Warren and Mr. Lawrence were of deep interest. Mr. Faithful, another evangelist, also purposes to return to Spain in a few weeks.

SINCE THE COMPULSORY BURNING OF BIBLES and religious books at Osiout, Upper Egypt, in 1867, 16,731 Bibles and religious and educational works have been sold in that territory.

THE REV. S. R. BUTLER and MISS BRODIE, labourers among the Esquimaux of Labrador, earnestly appeal for additional helpers—a lady, if not a gentleman; “or, better still, a gentleman and his wife.”

THEATRE SERVICES.—At the request of Mr. Samuel Morley, the Special Religious Services Committee, of which the Earl of Shaftesbury is chairman, has undertaken the responsibilities and arrangements of the afternoon and evening services at St. James's Hall. The opening services will be on Oct. 3, when the Rev. J. P. Clow will preach at 3.30, and the Rev. J. W. Bardley, M.A., at 7 o'clock. (See “Forthcoming Meetings.”)

THE ONLY SON of Mr. WILLIAM GRAHAM, ex-Member of Glasgow, has died very suddenly at the Perthshire home of his father. Deceased was the young Scotian who took an active part in the invitation given by some of the boys to Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Both in Glasgow and Manchester, as well as in the metropolis much sympathy will be felt for the bereaved father, whom many of our readers will remember as having frequently read the requests for prayer at the Noon Meetings at the Haymarket Opera-house.

LIBERTY IN SPAIN.—A decree of Don Carlos has been published, showing what might be expected if this tool of the Pope ever reached the throne of Spain. This document enacts that any attempt to abolish or change the Roman Catholic religion in Spain shall be punished by temporary imprisonment or perpetual banishment. “Any person celebrating public worship not of the Roman Catholic Apostolic religion shall be punished by temporary banishment.” Those who profane images would receive a long term of imprisonment.

COW-CROSS MISSION.—Last Sunday saw the closing of the open-air services for the season on Clorkenwell-green. The weather was tolerably fine, and the audiences were immense. God gave the word, and great was the company of the preachers. The services were under the direction of Mr. William Catlin. At ten at night a great crowd marched from the Green to the Mission Hall, where a prayer-meeting was held, which lasted till near midnight. There was quite a number of anxious inquirers, and some very remarkable cases among them. Mr. William Bradlaugh, brother of the secularist and Republican lecturer, is preaching in the Mission Hall every Sunday evening in September and October, and it does appear as if the work of God is indeed reviving in the actual centre of London.

WIDNES.—Last week we reported the formation of a Young Men's Christian Association at Runcorn; this week we have pleasure in announcing that another similar association has been started in Widnes. On Friday evening last a well-attended meeting of young men was held in the large room of Williams's Temperance Hotel, Victoria-road, Mr. B. Brown presiding. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, by Mr. Robert Shaw, President of the newly established Runcorn Association, also by Mr. Archd. Ferguson, chairman, and Mr. Samuel Nash, the Secretary of the Liverpool Association. The two latter gentlemen attended to explain the objects and work of such societies, and to aid in the formation of one for Widnes. The Society was formed, rules (the right sort) adopted, and officers elected. Mr. Brown was elected president, Mr. John Shuttleworth treasurer, and Messrs. W. B. Jones and J. Williamson hon. secs. Would Christians remember in their prayers this further effort for the extension of Christ's Kingdom amongst young men?

[NOTE.—One anonymous correspondent sends us this week no less than twenty-one separate Requests for Praise and Prayer, many of them being exceedingly general in their character, and unsuited for our columns. We take this opportunity of again specially requesting friends to send their name and address, not, of course, for publicity in any way, but for our own protection.]

THE CHINESE MISSION SCHOOL at Portland, Oregon, U.S.A., begins its second year prosperously. The Chinese preacher in charge has a night school numbering thirty-five, of whom fourteen are hopeful converts.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The Hull stipendiary magistrate, replying on Tuesday to a deputation from the Band of Hope League, announced his intention of refusing any extension of the hours of keeping open public-houses on the occasion of the Hull annual fair. He also said that he should refuse licences to any booths at the fair.

Look and Live.

P. P. BLISS

Tenderly.

1. Look to Je-sus, wea-ry one, Look and live, look and live; Look at what the Lord has done, Look and live; See Him lift-ed on the tree, Look and live, look and live, Hear Him say, "Look un-to Me," Look and live.

CHORUS.

Look! the Lord is lift-ed high, Look to Him, He's e-ver night, Look and live, why will ye die? Look and live.

2. Though unworthy, vile, unclean, Look and live, look and live; Look away from self and sin, Look and live; Long by Satan's power enslaved, Look and live, look and live; Look to Me, ye shall be saved, Look and live. Chorus.

3. Though you've wandered far away, Look and live, look and live; Harden not your heart to-day, Look and live; 'Tis thy Father calls thee home, Look and live, look and live; Whosoever will may come, Look and live. Chorus.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.—A most wonderful blessing has fallen on Le Moyné Institute in Memphis, one of the schools of the American Missionary Association. A letter says:—"Since last Monday over 120 conversions have taken place in our students' meetings. Full 100 of these are our own students; the remainder are those brought in by the pupils with the express hope of their conversion. After the meetings of the first four days of the week, not more than fifteen of our pupils of age to feel the need of a Saviour were unconverted. The question arose, What is there now to do? 'Go out into the highway,' was suggested. Our students did so, and, working earnestly, the entire city became interested. Our meetings, for a time two and three a day, were thronged with anxious inquirers; extra meetings were started in many of the churches, and the fire spread. You may be sure we have a happy school now: all our students are brought to Jesus. Our hearts have waited, and ached, and expected this time of blessing the whole year, yet we had hardly dared hope for such a wonderful baptism. The interest in the city is increasing. Last night, in one of the several churches where meetings are being held, over 130 arose for prayers. Our students are working nobly."

The Christian.

READ THE BIBLE—READ IT ALL.

DR. PARKER, the well-known pastor of the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, London, has recently returned from his annual vacation, which he spent this year on the Continent. Giving his impressions and the lessons he had derived from a temporary absence from home, he stated that he was more than ever convinced of the necessity for purely Biblical preaching,—the exposition of God's Word in all its scope and simplicity. The following Sunday morning, accordingly, his theme of discourse was the Bible. Having quoted the passages—"Search the Scriptures," "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly," "The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," and remarked on the unity, cohesion, and entirety conveyed by the phrasology of these texts, he proceeded:—

THE BIBLE ought to be read right through. It is only then you can know the music, the swell, the cadence, the rapture and sorrow, the triumph and the tears, of God's Word. What would you know of your boy's letter, if you were to read the superscription on Monday, to look at the signature on Friday, and read a little in the middle of it three months afterwards? I get tired towards the end of July and I go away to the mountains. I take the Bible with me; I read it through, and I feel as if I had never seen the book before. I have spent most of my life in reading and expounding it, yet it seems as if I had never seen it. It is so new, so rich, so varied, the truth flashing from a thousand unexpected and undiscovered points, with a light above the brightness of the sun. And that summer reading of the Bible is what I call tuning the instrument.

If anybody does not believe the Bible, he has never read it through; he may have read a little here and there, with general commentaries and criticisms between, but he has not read the whole. Once two men said, "We will disprove the conversion of Paul." They read it through—and wrote a book in proof of it. So will God deal with all destructive critics who really make themselves masters of the situation they intended to overthrow.

It is wonderful, if you read the whole, how it gets hold of you somewhere. I have tried it; and I appeal to you who know it best, whether you will willingly let it drop out of your fingers, when it has once got into the movement and necessity of your being.

Suppose you should ask a man to read this Book clean through at one sitting. What would his notions be? I do not ask him the memory of particular texts, but I would say, "What are your general notions?" I should not be surprised to hear him say:—"It is a very solemn Book. There were deep soundings in it that made me shudder with a chill the like of which I never felt before."

What more? "The infinite reluctance with which God gives up man; that struck me in reading the Book from end to end. The pain, the yearning of God, the moan of a mother, the cry of a broken heart—it was very wonderful. I felt in reading it as if God were putting out both his arms, straining his eyes after me, and crying out to me 'Come back!' I cried at some parts of it myself; I forget just now where they were, but I think you will find the tears on the pages here and there even yet. It seemed as if God was saying, 'Image of my countenance, upright like myself, susceptible of immortality, companion of my life, wrecked and shattered, wounded and dying, yet how can I give thee up? Ye were not made for death; Why will ye die?'"

What more? "I remember it was a righteous Book. There were pages in it when the wicked man had his own way; but presently God searched him out and brought him to judgment. It made me glad, and in the middle of my reading I thought—Would that the Book were at the basis of all political legislation, at the heart of all commercial enterprise; would that it were the secret of all civilization, and the inspiration of all domestic and national life.

"And I remember this about it, that it seems to be all other books. I have read a great many books, and I feel now that I need not have read them; they are all here. Novels—it is all there in the prodigal son. Two men, the runaway son, the scapegrace, the far country, the riotous living, the harlot, the evil companionships, the bad treatment, and the coming home again. Joy! I never heard such silver bells ringing in my life as the chimes in this Book. Sorrow! None like it. Its woes swallow up all other grief. Its cross, like the rod of Moses, swallows up all other crosses in its great tragic sorrow."

"But are there not some terrible things in that Book of yours?" "Yes, there are. There are stories in the Book that no minister dare read in the congregation. There are chapters that no publisher could take out separately and put in his shop window. Yes; but blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God even in that shame. These stories are in their right place in the Bible, surrounded by the lightnings and thunders of judgment in the Old Testament, and by the tears and tenderness, and touching death on the cross, in the New—all that is unfolded in the word Redemption."

Do not vindicate the Bible, if you please; let it alone. It needs no vindication; it is there. It has been assailed; still it is there. It has been assailed from points from which it does not start. It does not contemplate the things which have been turned into means of assault against it. Suppose a man should say, "An alkali neutralizes an acid, therefore the New Testament is not inspired." What would you think of it? Suppose a man should say, "Two and two are four, therefore there can be no resurrection from the dead." Why, there is no link of connexion—nothing to bring them together. So it is: the Bible has its own work; it starts from its own point; delivers its own message. It is not a book that comes within the region of logic, but of feeling, sorrow, want, imagination.

But does not the Apostle Paul reason? Not as if he wished to prove the existence of the thing, but in the sense that a man turns a diamond round and shows all its angles and sides and beautiful proportions—not as if he would prove that it is a diamond,—so Paul turns the truth round, that every phase of it may catch the sun; he never lays it down as a thesis or proposition, that there is a God. So with this Book. It does not say, "I am inspired, and I will prove it;" it simply says, "Read me, and read me all."

I want to remind you that it is possible to read a part as if it were the whole; to make too much of certain texts, and forget their bearing upon others, and so miss the proportion and analogy of faith. The man who takes out a solitary text and founds a denomination on it, is not Biblical, but only textual. He is not a statesman, only a politician. He takes out a single line, exaggerates it, and does not consider its relationship to the manifold infiniteness of the remaining revelation.

I can prove by geography that the world is not round—that is to say, by taking a partial and local view of the surface of the earth, I can defy any man to prove that it is round. There are great rocky points, great crags and rocks shooting up into the air, some ten thousand feet high, others fifteen thousand and more. Then there are great valleys, sinking as deeply into the ribs and heart of the earth. Looked at in this light, no proposition can be more monstrous than that the earth is round. But you must not look at the part, but at the whole. You must look at astronomy. The greater includes the less, and thus you proceed to establish the rotundity of the earth. So you must not look at one parable or text; “let the word of Christ dwell in you richly.”

“I have not time to read the Bible through.” I will not grant it in reality, but suppose I admit it argumentarily. Every man has time to read the Bible through, as a matter of fact. But take one book, and read it through. Let me tell you what I did the other night, and let me invite you to do the same. I took the Book of the Revelation of St. John the Divine, and read it through at once, right away. I never stopped from the first verse to the last. And it was a grand lesson. I used to look over the book, and pick out bits here and there, and I could make nothing of it. It is the story of to-day and to-morrow and the third day, written, in great, grim, wonderful types and symbols. And every now and then there was a great green place, with fountains and trees, and I lingered there, and said, “I know that bit.” When he was showing the locusts out of the smoke, “and the sound of their wings was like the sound of chariots,” I said, “I cannot follow him there.” But when I came to “Unto Him that loved us, and washed us in his own blood,” I said, “Wait there; I know that part.” When he spoke of the woman “clothed with the sun,” and “a time, and times, and half a time,” and six, and six, and six again, and all these figures piled up before me, I could not understand it; but when he said “I saw One, and on his vesture and on his thigh was written ‘King of kings and Lord of lords,’” I said, “Wait there; that is familiar.” When I read of the trumpets and the vials and the horns and the woes, I could make but little of them; but when the writer said, “I saw an angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel,” I looked with the eyes of my heart, and I hailed that messenger as a friend.

So, if you will read through this great Book, I do not promise you will understand it all, and give a clear logical statement and proposition about every part of it. Nothing of the kind. You will come out dazed, bewildered, stunned, as if the thunder of heaven had struck you. And yet when you have time to recover your breath, and cleanse your vision, you will say to your friend, “Do go! Be where I have been, and go at once. There is nothing like it.”

REDDITCH, WORCESTERSHIRE.—Special evangelistic services are being held here by John Waite, from the Evangelization Society, London, the invitation for his services having been given by the Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Much interest is being manifested in the town, and a spirit of union being fostered among the various denominations. One evening, thirty-three persons entered the anteroom for inquiry, whilst the large room was occupied by Christian friends holding a prayer-meeting. The wish of all interested is that this work may still go on, and many precious souls be saved through the instrumentality now put forth. E. A. H.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S EXPENSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR SIR,—I ask your permission to make a statement on the subject of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's expenses, and especially regarding the disposition which I have made of the amount produced by the royalty on the hymn-books sold from January 1 last to the close of the London mission.

When Mr. Moody was invited to come to England to engage in the evangelistic work which has been so signally blessed, his expenses and those of Mr. Sankey were guaranteed. But, in the providence of God, the honoured friends who had addressed to him the invitation had been removed by death before his arrival, and Mr. Moody unexpectedly found himself entirely without resources. As, however, it soon became necessary to print a volume of the solos and other hymns sung at the meetings, an arrangement was made with the publishers to allow him a royalty on the proceeds, as a fund to provide for the expenses of the evangelists and their families.

This arrangement continued all through the mission in Scotland and in Ireland, but when Mr. Moody came to London last January, and met the ministers of all denominations at Freemasons' Hall, to prepare the way for the mission here, he voluntarily announced in public that he did not mean to take another shilling of this royalty, as sufficient for the expenses of the whole visit had already been received. He added that the amount of royalty from the 1st January would be paid over by the publishers to me, to be disposed of afterwards for any object of Christian work that I might determine. This was just at the time when the sales were about to be enormously increased, and while this renunciation undoubtedly removed out of the way the only possible ground upon which any could have alleged that Mr. Moody had a pecuniary interest in the success of the work, I feel assured there can only be one opinion—that it was on his part an act of noble disinterestedness.

The royalty between 1st January and 30th June, the virtual close of the London work, has amounted, with a small sum of bank interest, to £5667 17s. 6d. In considering how to dispose of this money, it appeared to me and others that if it were possible to devote it to some object near to Mr. Moody's heart, it would not only be legitimate to do so, but that it would be a graceful recognition of the value of the eminent service he has rendered, for which, beyond the spontaneous offerings of grateful affection, he consistently declined to receive remuneration. I accordingly made inquiries of one or two friends from the United States, and having ascertained that a serious deficiency in the amount contributed for the rebuilding of Mr. Moody's church at Chicago had unexpectedly arisen while he was in Europe, owing to a decline in value of the securities which were subscribed, and that that deficiency might amount to $25,000 or $30,000, I decided to devote the royalty fund to its liquidation, and have just remitted to a well-known and greatly esteemed friend, Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, a bill on demand for $27,092, being the exact equivalent of the sterling amount at the exchange of the day, requesting him to appropriate it to the object I have indicated.

My apology for this long letter must be that the many friends of Mr. Moody will be glad to know the facts, which could not well be communicated earlier.

Yours faithfully,
HUGH M. MATHESON.

EVANGELISTIC CAR.—A great impetus to the Gospel, Peace, and Temperance enterprises is contemplated by the erection of an evangelizing car, or carriage, prettily decorated, and fitted up with seats and appurtenances, with movable stands, &c., for the use of friends united in the movement known as the “Fairlop Friday, Bank, and other Holiday Open-air Services.” We commend this to the notice and co-operation of our readers. Mr. Knight, whose address is Albion College, South Hackney, gives every information to inquirers. Three special services are now arranged for the friends in this movement for Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Oct. 8, 9, and 10 (p.v.). Tickets for tea, conference, &c., sent free to workers.

TEXTS MISUNDERSTOOD—IV.

"BY GRACE YE ARE SAVED."—EPH. II. 5.

THE great doctrine of salvation by grace is too clearly stated in this and similar passages of Scripture to admit of its being openly denied; but the great enemy of souls has long been busy sowing broadcast misconceptions of its meaning, whereby he has caused the truth, if it cannot be withstood, to be at least misunderstood.

First comes the misunderstanding of sacerdotalism—whether Roman, Greek, or Anglican, it matters not. They admit "salvation by grace" in words, but if asked what they mean by it, they say, sacramental grace—a kind of supposed spiritual power emanating from the sacraments when administered by episcopally ordained hands.

Some years ago an excellent Evangelical clergyman wrote to Archdeacon Manning, before his secession to Rome, and asked him whether the sacramental views which characterized his teaching did not virtually involve the thought that grace was a kind of physical substance or essence which distilled from the tips of the bishop's fingers in ordination and confirmation, and from the priest's hands in the administration of the sacraments. Dr. Manning's answer was to this effect:—"You have put the matter strongly, but I cannot deny that such is our view. We do believe that grace is a sort of spiritual essence flowing from or through the bishop's hands."

How many thousands upon thousands of professing Christians are misled by this gross delusion, and have no higher conception of salvation by grace than salvation by sacraments.

But it is not only sacerdotalists who misunderstand "By grace ye are saved." Many Protestants who reject with horror priestcraft of every kind, are no less misled by the notion that grace means infused goodness; and whilst they fully own that it must come from God, and whilst they seek it in prayer rather than expect it through sacraments, still are waiting for a salvation to be wrought within them by the Holy Spirit, rather than accept that which has already been wrought, and fully wrought, in the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The best antidote to both these errors is to be found in a careful examination of the Scripture usage of the word "grace." There it will be found that favour—the free, undeserved favour of God—is the primary and most frequent meaning of the word. Occasionally we find it used in the secondary sense of gifts and graces resulting from this favour (analogous to the distinction between favour and favours); but for the most part it means not the inward work of the Spirit, but the grace or free favour of God as seen in the gift of the person and work of the Lord Jesus.

No clearer proof of this could be afforded than that given by the text quoted above—"By grace ye are saved."

These words occur in the midst of a description of what God wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand. He then and there, we are taught, "quicken together," "raised together," and "seated together" with Him in heavenly places, all who are saved. It is in the midst of recounting what thus took place 1800 years ago, that this parenthetical exclamation is abruptly thrown in—"By grace ye are saved."

Now, how strikingly appropriate is its otherwise abrupt introduction, when the real meaning of "grace" is seen. If grace only meant the Spirit's work within, it would be out of place to refer to it here. But if it be the free and gratuitous favour which provided such a salvation, where could it be more pertinently spoken of? Here is a work in which believers could have had no hand, wrought out for them hundreds of years before most of them had any being, and so fully wrought out that the Spirit of God, in contemplating what was then done, sees in it the salvation of all that ever had been or ever should be saved. Truly we must come to God's Word to learn what "grace" means.

A few verses further on we have a repetition of this text—"By grace are ye saved,"—and now is added "through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God,"—for it is of importance to show, that in the appropriation by individual souls of this great salvation, wrought out for them so long ago, there is but one channel through which the blessing flows—viz., "faith." Sacraments, works, inward graces, &c., follow in their place, but none of them share the honour of being God's channel of salvation to the soul: that is reserved for "faith"; and lest this should lead vain man to overrate his power, it is added—"and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." As old George Herbert beautifully expresses it—

"O most gracious Lord,
If all the hope and comfort that I gather
Were from myself, I had not half a word,
Not half a letter, to oppose
What is objected by my foes.

"But Thou art my desert;
And in this league, which now my foes invade,
Thou art not only to perform thy part,
But also mine! as when the league was made
Thou didst at once thyself invite,
And hold my hand while I did write."

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, BELFAST, OCT. 19-22—

The attention of members of the Alliance, and other friends of Christian union not formally united with it, is earnestly called to the approaching assembly of the children of God, attracted from various evangelical denominations of the Christian Church, and from various lands. A cordial invitation is given by the members of the Belfast committee to their Christian brethren of the United Kingdom and other lands. As much valuable information will be supplied on the state and progress of evangelical religion in different countries, and subjects of great importance will be considered bearing on the spiritual life of the believer, the defence of religious liberty, and the welfare and increase of the Christian Church at large, it is hoped that many will assemble, and that a large blessing will follow the communion and deliberations of Christians, one, notwithstanding national and ecclesiastical diversities, in the faith and hope of the Gospel. The following is the programme at present arranged. [At present the names only of those who have signified their intention to be present and take part in the proceedings are inserted. A complete programme will shortly appear.]—Tuesday, Oct. 19.—At three, a public meeting for united prayer. FOR THE YOUNG.

GATHERED HOME.

MR. GEORGE LAWRENCE, of Barcelona, who has just returned to his labours there, sends the following touching story, communicated to him by a friend, relating the death of a youth in one of their schools:—

On the 30th of last July, whilst we were celebrating the examination in our college, the burial of my young disciple took place—Luis Francésch, who fell asleep in Jesus the day previous. This youth, who scarcely counted fifteen years, has died rejoicing in the Lord Jesus.

In the last visit that Luis paid me, the following conversation took place:—

- “Luis, do you find yourself better?”
 “No, sir, I am getting worse.”
 “And in case that death should surprise you, do you find yourself prepared to present yourself before God?”
 “Yes, sir.”
 “And how have you prepared yourself?”
 “By means of our Lord Jesus Christ.”
 “Do you believe that Jesus Christ is your Saviour?”
 “With all my heart.”
 “And have you no fear of death?”
 “No, sir, because to die in Christ is to live.”

A few days after this conversation Luis grew worse, and took to his bed, suffering for two months and a half the most intense pain. The reading of the sacred Scriptures was calming and consolatory to the poor sick one in the midst of his sufferings.

Though he suffered so much, often he might be heard calling to his mother in order that she might read to him some portions of the Bible, such as the Psalms (of which he recited several by heart) or the second chapter of Matthew and eighth of the Epistle to the Romans. He likewise asked his mother two or three times a day to sing to him some of the favourite hymns.

If at any time his mother wished to do something, he besought her to let his little sister do it, because he desired to have her as much as possible by his side. But when the hour of worship arrived, he besought her to leave him, so that she might be able on return to tell him what the preacher said about Jesus.

One day his mother asked him if she might send for the two gentlemen who came sometimes to read the Scriptures. He replied, “No, mother, I don’t think we should trouble them so much; you read so well, and I love so much to hear your voice.”

When he was almost choked by the strength of his cough, which at intervals attacked him, he indicated to his mother with his finger that she might take his Bible, which was never for a moment far from his pillow, and as soon as he recovered his strength, heard with gladness the portions of the Word.

But the most interesting part of this history of our faithful Luis was his last moments. He had lost his strength to speak. His mother going near to him said, “My little Luis, raise your arms and embrace our sweet Jesus.” Moved as by a spring, his face put on a peculiar brightness, and with a sweet smile he gave her to understand that his soul was rejoicing in the presence of his Saviour. This he repeated several times until his happy and joyful spirit separated itself from the mortal body, and was translated to the celestial dwelling-place prepared by Jesus for all those who, like the young Luis, die confessing his holy name.

Many things the good mother related to me about the departed, among which is the following:—“According as I see,” said Luis three months before the celebration of the examinations, “I shall not take part this year unless God restores my life, but I am sure that day will be the best prize in my life.” And truly on the eve of that day, at ten o’clock at night, my beloved disciple received the prize of glory from the hands of his Lord. Whilst the mother bestowed upon her son the utmost care, God gave her many occasions of announcing the Gospel to the persons who visited her.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN AMERICA.

WHILE the American religious papers are content with brief notices, the secular press continue to report fully the initial meetings of the evangelistic campaign on which Messrs. Moody and Sankey have entered, as announced by us last week. The correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Northfield, on Sept. 15, states that the minister of the Unitarian Church there had opened his pulpit to Mr. Moody. “Mr. Moody, however, could not reconcile himself to the belief that Unitarianism was anything akin to the religion of Christ which he preaches, and felt that he could not allow himself to stand in a pulpit from which its doctrines were promulgated. He is reported to have said—‘Those who believe in Unitarianism insult Christ, and whoever insults Christ, insults me.’ This attitude towards those of another belief has not conduced to his popularity among them. Yet all see in Mr. Moody a man of strong abilities as a preacher, and one possessed of a noble idea, which he urges always and everywhere with conscientiousness and power. He commands the respect of those who are the most displeased with his method.”

According to this writer, “the general report is that the evangelists are making no impression upon the substantial people of Northfield at all. As friends, they love and admire both of them, but they are not in the least excited by their preaching.” This opinion is not shared, however, by the reporter for the New York Herald, who, writing two days later, says—

“Mr. Moody is a whole Christian team in himself, and he still continues to preach salvation to crowds of hearers, who flock in from all the surrounding country. That his persistent and energetic efforts are turning the minds of many people from worldly to spiritual things is indicated in a most unmistakable manner by the increased interest and feeling which is manifested at each and every one of the meetings. This fact has not only been overlooked and ridiculed, but in some instances wilfully denied, by some journalists who were tardy in their arrival at the scene of the commencement of the evangelical meetings which it is proposed to hold throughout the country.”

After the above reference to Mr. Moody, the Tribune representative has something to say about Mr. Sankey and his singing; and in this case he makes no reservation:—

“Mr. Sankey is threatened with no such loss of popularity. His singing delights everybody. ‘Oh,’ said a good old deacon, putting his hand on my shoulder, the very first hour I arrived here, ‘you must stay over one day and hear Mr. Sankey sing; I never knew the meaning of the Scripture, “Sing with the spirit”—that is, the soul—and “with the understanding”—that is, good sense—until I heard Mr. Sankey. Why, he rises away up, and then sinks away low again, like a bird!’ It is not so much Mr. Sankey’s voice or his musical knowledge, or even the great flexibility of his tones, as the perfect expression which is given to every note, and to which his face keeps company, so that it is almost as much pleasure to watch his broad features light up with the glory in a Hallelujah, or grow sad and sympathetic under the influence of some gentle and plaintive melody, as it is to hear the music itself. In pathetic music, rather than in exultant song, is his manner most impressive.”

Further on, in his account of the meeting on Sept. 14, he speaks thus of the singing of “Jesus of Nazareth passeth by”:—

“Oh the sadness of that song! And when Mr. Sankey brought out, with an intensity one would think impossible, the agony of the lost soul’s cry, ‘Too late, too late; Jesus of Nazareth has passed by,’ there were those who did not force back the tears, lest they should overflow. There is an immense dramatic force in the way these songs are rendered, as, indeed, there is in the whole conduct of the meetings, and it struck me that the real object of the singing was obscured by the admiration and delight aroused. But Mr. Sankey says that this hymn, and ‘The Ninety-and-Nine,’ have done more good than all other songs in the collection. They are little sermons which go straight to the heart.”

This meeting was the last previous to the departure from Northfield of Messrs. Sankey, Whittle, and Bliss. The two latter evangelists, it appears, are to resume their labours together in the Western States. The well-known Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, who takes a very deep interest in the labours of our evangelist brethren, was present at this meeting, and the general attendance was so great that an adjournment was performed made from the church to the open air. “Out doors was big enough. The preacher stood on the church steps, whither the organ had been brought.” Mr. Sankey and Mr. Bliss sang, both singly and together. Major Whittle was called on by Mr. Moody to speak, “and responded in words of testimony for Christ.” Mr. G. H. Stuart also "made an eloquent appeal for the acceptance of Christ by those present, which was listened to with the closest attention."

Last of all came Mr. Moody, "whose presence," says the reporter, "is a great deal, but his words are more. The will of this man suddenly animates the whole congregation." He spoke from Isa. liii. 2-7. The address contains several of the illustrations with which we were made familiar. We give one extract, which most of our readers may have read before, but which they will be glad to read again. It used to strike us as being one of the most touching and effective paragraphs we heard Mr. Moody deliver; in this instance it suffers from condensation. Speaking of Christ's parting commission to his disciples to "preach the Gospel to every creature, beginning at Jerusalem," he said:—

"But I can fancy Peter saying, 'Lord, you don't mean to those murderous men in Jerusalem, who maltreated you all your life, and crucified you at last? You don't believe the power of this salvation is great enough for them?' 'Yes, Peter,' Christ answers, 'go to Jerusalem. Go hunt up that man that made the crown of thorns and pressed it into my brow, and tell him that a starry crown, which has not one thorn, awaits him if he will believe on me. Go hunt up that man that spat in my face, and tell him I freely forgive; go hunt up that Roman soldier who drove the spear into my side, and tell him there is a nearer way to my heart than that; go find the men who pierced my hands and feet with nails, and tell them that in the fountain of blood they opened they can wash away their sins.'"

The following evening Mr. Sankey, Mr. Whittle, and Mr. Bliss conducted a service at Holyoke, in the largest church of that city. Major Whittle presided, and, during his exposition, related the incident on which the hymn, "Hold the Fort," was founded. Then Mr. Bliss, the author of the hymn as well as the music, sang it. Says the reporter, "With new meaning we listened to that spirited hymn, sung as no one but Mr. Bliss sings it, and the whole congregation lent their strength to the chorus 'By thy grace we will.'" Mr. Sankey followed with "The Ninety-and-Nine." "I saw not a few weeping while he sang, but all was joy again when he came to the last, and pictured in ringing tones the joy of the angels over the restoration of the lost one to the fold." Before singing Mr. Sankey said:—

"I am glad to say that I have good news for you—news that God is already preparing for the work in the hearts of the people; and my hope and prayer is that you may not look to man, but may pray that all God's instrumentalities may be blessed. And we ask your prayers for us, and for brothers Whittle and Bliss, as they go to their work in the West; we hope Christian friends will pray God to use everybody to build up the Church of Christ."

After an effective address by Mr. Whittle, on "a crucified, risen, and coming Saviour," he "made an earnest appeal to any who wished Christians to pray for them, to rise, and set apart a few moments for silent prayer to give such applicants an opportunity. Three arose and sat down again, and after a few more songs and prayer the meeting slowly dispersed."

On Sept. 16, Mr. Moody favoured his fellow-townsmen, and many others who came from a distance of fifteen to twenty-five miles, with his lecture on "Heaven."

"Mr. Moody prayed that all the Christians in the town might be made of one mind, that there might be no division, and that the names of all might be written in the Lamb's book of life. Miss Field and Miss Mary Thurston—the latter a blind lady visiting in town from Boston—sang 'Shall we meet beyond the river, where the surges cease to roll?' Silent prayer followed; and the usual invitation to all to rise who wished to be prayed for was responded to by twenty-five or thirty persons, principally adults. Mr. Moody offered prayer again, and then the services were closed by the singing of 'In the Christian's home in glory.'"

The evangelists continue to receive pressing invitations from many parts of the States; but, according to the latest advices, no definite plan of work had been settled.

The New York Christian Union of 22nd ult. says:—"Mr. Moody continues his Northfield services, and will probably remain in that vicinity for a time. Committees from several places, among them George H. Stuart and L. P. Rowland, of Philadelphia; William E. Dodge, jun., and R. R. McBurney, of New York; and D. W. McWilliams, T. H. Mervin, and W. W. Wicks, of Brooklyn, have been consulting with him in regard to revival services in those and other cities, but no definite arrangements have yet been made. It is likely that, of the large places, he will begin with Philadelphia. Messrs. Whittle and Bliss are expecting to carry on their services next in Minnesota. At Northfield Mr. Moody meets large audiences nearly every evening in the Congregational Church, and speaks to them plainly and with great earnestness. Among his subjects so far have been, the necessity of conversion, 'Except a man be born again,' Heaven as a permanent home, and similar topics, all of which he invests with a new importance and reality."

The Springfield Daily Union has full reports of the services at Northfield; they are, however, substantially the same as those we have quoted from the New York papers.

NORTH-WEST AFRICAN EXPEDITION.

We have already referred to the importance of the objects which the North-West African Expedition seeks to accomplish—namely, the evangelization and the opening-up of a large tract of Africa hitherto unvisited by the missionary, and from a point within about seven days' journey of our own shores. Nothing can be more deplorable than the condition of these people, sunk in gross ignorance and darkness, and subject to the most cruel oppression.

The part of Africa which they inhabit is exceedingly healthy and well suited for Europeans, and the wonder is that such a place should be neglected so long when missionaries try to penetrate Africa from every unhealthy point. Here is a field of missionary labour within a short distance of England, the people intelligent and not hostile to Christianity, and the climate salubrious, many of the natives living to a great age.

It is now proposed to establish a missionary and commercial station on their coast at a convenient part, and from this point explore the interior regions for the purpose of establishing a highway into the heart of Africa. What may we not expect from such a plan? The evangelization of Africa will surely follow its accomplishment. We ask Christians to pray for its success, and help with their means so good a work. It has already received the sanction and support of great men, and a fund is now being raised at the Mansion-house for the work. Sir Arthur Cotton and Mr. Mackenzie are vigorously promoting it. We shall be happy to forward any contributions entrusted to us for this good cause.

A despatch has been received at the Foreign Office from Mr. Edwards, the Acting Consul at Teneriffe, stating that he will render every assistance to the proposed expedition, and that he has instructed the Vice-Consuls in his district to do the same. The Governor and other officials of the province have also testified their desire to help in every way. The preliminary expedition under the direction of Mr. Donald Mackenzie is expected to leave England for the coast of Africa early in November. General Sir Arthur Cotton has promised to accompany the expedition, and several other celebrated scientific gentlemen. Mr. Mackenzie expects to get the friendly support of the most powerful chief of the tribes on the north-west coast of Africa. Mr. Mackenzie receives large numbers of letters from all parts of the world expressing the greatest interest in this survey.

AUCKLAND, N.Z.—It will be interesting to Christian young men who purpose emigrating to New Zealand that at Auckland there is a Young Men's Christian Association, whose visiting agent regularly boards all ships on arrival, and offers advice and assistance to all who may desire it. According to a prospectus of the Association sent to us, it offers many advantages to strangers, and it may be a source of encouragement to those emigrating to know they will be sure of a hearty welcome and a helping hand on their arrival.

CONFERENCE OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.—A Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations, extending over several days, has been held at Greenock. About 100 delegates were present from the various associations in Scotland; and Mr. Shipton, of London, took a leading part in the proceedings, which were of a deeply interesting character. Mr. Henry Drummond read a paper, the subject being, "What can be done by Young Men's Christian Associations to conserve and extend the results of the recent evangelistic movement, in connexion with the present revival of religion in our land, especially in reference to the young men of the upper and lower classes of the community?" The paper and the discussion which subsequently followed created a most solemn impression upon all. Mr. Drummond recommended the young men's Bible-class and young men's meetings; and, to reach all classes, he mentioned theatre and circus, suburban, and drawing-room meetings. The paper contained many striking incidents which had come under Mr. Drummond's notice in Liverpool and other places. Many of the delegates took part in this discussion. Mr. Shipton thought the best thing to do was to say "Amen" to Mr. Drummond's paper, and to go and do it.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

As a valuable testimony to the visible results of the recent special evangelistic services in London, we give the following letter written by Rev. R. H. Lovell, of Victoria-park Congregational Church, and read by Mr. Paton at the noon prayer-meeting here:—

"I think we have received in all about fifty-three persons who testify to the good of Mr. Moody's service; several were bona fide artisans, who now work capitally amongst their fellows in fields we never could reach; two were ministers' sons; several young men—some very interesting cases of answer to prayer. The work is not over. Only on Sunday week a most intelligent young man sought me, and gave an account of his conversion, clear, decided, and most interesting. I mentioned to him a field of labour in a Sunday-school a mile and a half from us, which is finding great difficulty in getting teachers. 'Sir,' said he, 'I have gone there, and induced already one young man to join the church.' We had one case where a lad became converted at Bow-road, and joined the church, and then led his teacher to join. I could say much more.

"The hymns have a wonderful hold on the people. If no more had been done, these three great things have been, which are of immense value:—

"1. The great enemy of the Gospel, indifferentism, has been overcome, and all classes and papers were made to talk, and write, and think about the Gospel—a grand help to the preacher and visitor.

"2. In hundreds of factories and workshops Gospel hymns are sung instead of music-hall trash.

"3. We now have our hymns wedded to popular tunes, which have only hallowed associations. Formerly many revival hymns had to be wedded to tunes which had been first heard in association with some low and vulgar words, if not worse.

"These three permanent general results are to me of great value. If no more had been done, I should be quite satisfied. We know much more has been done, and I believe will be. We have been shown how to do it; with God's help we hope to try."

LOMBARD-STREET PRAYER-MEETING.

The third anniversary of the establishment of a daily prayer-meeting in Lombard-street was marked by a special thanksgiving meeting, held at the London Tavern on Monday week. Sir F. Lyoett presided, and the meeting was opened with prayer by Mr. G. A. Skinner, of Blackheath. An address was delivered by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, who said they were all thankful to Mr. Forbes, the originator of this movement, who rather more than three years ago spent several months in trying to find a suitable room in the heart of the City. For a long time he was without success, but, Scotchman like, he was not daunted by any difficulties he encountered, and, after a time, his perseverance was rewarded. The Rector of St. Edmund the King and Martyr was kind enough to grant the use of a small room behind his church in Lombard-street, and at this place a noon-day prayer-meeting had been held for three years. It was a ground for thanksgiving to Almighty God that in the heart of this busy, bustling metropolis there should be one little room in which Christian people might meet to join their prayers and praises to God for themselves, for that great City, and for the Church of Christ. This agency for good had, as he truly believed, been attended by a great amount of success—calculated from a Christian point of view. Such things were especially needed in that great metropolis. All there would know something of the hurry and bustle of London life. The clergy and ministers of the Gospel partook in this hurry in their degree as much as other people. They, too, had so many occupations on their hands that they found they had no leisure for quiet thought, for the study of God's Holy Word, and for that solitary, earnest communion with God which seemed to be the especial privilege of our forefathers. Our religion in these days was full of activity; the barriers which at one time divided Christians were now being broken down—thank God for it,—but our great difficulty now was that we found so little time and leisure for Christian communion, especially for quiet communion with God. They ought, therefore, to be exceedingly thankful to God that He had put it into the hearts of men to provide places for spiritual retirement. Much encouragement as to the power of prayer was to be drawn, Mr. Calthrop thought, from the marvellous movement connected with the visit of the two American evangelists to London.—Rock.

MR. FAITHFULL'S RETURN TO SPAIN.

DEAR FELLOW-HELPERS,—We have now been over eight months in England, and separated from all active service in poor Spain's behalf; and after six months of rest, rendered absolutely necessary by severe suffering in the head, we are again seeking to interest God's people in that land that calls loudly to us to go over and help them; anticipating a speedy return with our three children and a Christian nurse for whom we have been and are still looking to the Lord. We trust that during this long season of bodily separation from our work we have been learning some of those precious "desert" lessons that are to furnish us and gird up our loins afresh for more faithful and successful labours in Spain. Amongst these lessons we believe God has been teaching one above all of no little importance to God's people in these days of hurry, viz., that "the body is the Lord's," and that He has redeemed it as well as the soul and spirit, so that we would add the exhortation to us and you, "Ye are not your own, &c.," therefore "glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are his." And now, to conclude this brief note, we write to ask you three things: firstly, that it may please God speedily to send us the suitable person as nurse mentioned above, and should any of you know any such, I need scarcely add that you would be serving the Lord and us by communicating with us as soon as possible; secondly, that we may go forth in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace; and, lastly, that we may be kept, in an evil day indeed, very near to Jesus, and so free from the assaults from without, and victorious over those from within. Thus you will help us indeed; and, may we add, remember the Lord's word to the woman of old—"She hath done what she could," not would; so that, can you help in no other way,—Pray, pray, pray!—Epaphras' service, blessed, and blessing to the server as well as to the served. I ought perhaps to have added that the work formerly in our hands, but, in our absence, so lovingly and assiduously carried on by our dear brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Fenn, has been this year greatly extended, and much owned of God in every way; but of this more another time. With love in Christ, believe me yours in Gospel bonds,

CHAS. E. FAITHFULL.

Our address for letters, care of Mr. H. Clapton, 8, Horton-road, Hackney.

REV. THEO. MONOD.—Madam Monod writes as follows. We are sure our readers will sympathise with them in this trial. "Mr. Monod is now in Lausanne, and from there he will go to the Ban de la Roche (Oberlin's churches) in Alsace. I expect him next week. The whole two months of Mr. Monod's holiday have been devoted to letter-writing, and he finished the last on the morning of his departure. It is a great joy for us both. Now he will be able to do many things he was obliged to leave for want of time. You will be sorry to hear that his health is somewhat impaired by his constant speaking. His throat especially is bad, and his voice breaks down now and then. He has begun a medical treatment, which he will have to take up again when he comes home. The doctor speaks of 'long rest.' I know you will pray for us, and wish us, in this unexpected trial."

CURRAGH CAMP.—It is proposed to build a Wesleyan church at the Curragh Camp. The promoters say:—"This erection is most urgently required. The Iron Church, situated about a mile from the Camp, where our soldiers worshipped for several years, having become unsafe, was taken down and disposed of. Since then our services have been held in the Soldiers' Home. This temporary arrangement is, of course, quite inadequate, and the accommodation afforded is altogether insufficient for the increased number of soldiers on the Camp during several months of the year. It is now contemplated to erect a building in the centre of the Camp itself, which shall be available for church and reading-rooms, at an estimated cost of from £1200 to £1600. About £500 has been already promised, and the Committee now earnestly seek to obtain the balance required. The Treasurer is Mr. Wm. Brown, Dalkey, Dublin."

ABERGAVENTNY YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—On Sunday week this town was visited by Miss Nisbet, a lady-evangelist, who delivered two addresses to young women in the Corn Exchange. Both meetings were very well attended, and great attention and interest were manifested. At the afternoon service Miss Nisbet spoke with much earnestness and power for about three-quarters of an hour, and urged upon all present, who up to that moment had been closing their eyes against the light, to receive the light and love of Christ into their hearts. There is reason to believe that many of the audience were deeply impressed by the lady's earnest, loving words. At the evening meeting there were more than 200 persons present. After each service a short prayer-meeting was held. A Bible-class is held at the Association-rooms, 12, Neville-street, every Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon. At a quarter-past eight on Sunday evenings a prayer-meeting is held, and is generally well attended.

AARON'S BREASTPLATE.

(EX. XXVIII. 29; HEB. IX. 24.)

In the wondrous breastplate golden,
Safely on his bosom holden,

See the jewels from the mine!
Amethyst and onyx, wearing
Mystic marks, and each one bearing Traces of the Hand Divine.

Sapphires 'mid the gorgeous cluster
Sparkle with celestial lustre,

Like the crystal dome above;
Ruby rare and topaz blending
In that glory never-ending,
Safe upon the breast of Love.

Emerald and beryl throwing
Chaetened hues, the fairer growing

As the jasper blends the rays;
Chrysopras, like king's attire,
Glowing like a star of fire,
Or a soul that loves to praise.

Who the love and pain can measure
Ere revealed this hidden treasure?

One by one, in dazzling light,
On his breast our High Priest wears them,
On his shoulder, see, He bears them,
Ever in our Father's sight.

Can one jewel lack its station?
Nay, for through much tribulation
Christ hath won them for his own.
Veiled on earth, by sorrow faded,
Clouds of care their beauty shaded,—
But behold them near the Throne!

They in Christ. How fair! how glorious!
