

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. The Christian.

NOTES ON THE PAST YEAR.

BY DR. CULROSS.

IF any one will take up and examine a volume of THE CHRISTIAN, or any similar periodical, for 1874, it will seem to him that he is among rich materials for an uninspired sequel to the Acts of the Apostles. Every month of the twelve has been made memorable by blessing from the Lord. To look back over the year, and mark the grace with which it has been filled, is calculated both to awaken gratitude, and to inspire hope for the future.

It is impossible that any single journal should record the Christian work that goes on steadily and earnestly, and without intermission, from year to year, throughout our land. Let the reader think of individual Christian lives with all their manifold influences, of Christian homes, of Christian schools and colleges, of Christian churches and societies of various name, of colportage and home missions and Christian visitation, of Bible-classes and Bible-readings and fellowship-meetings, of the influence of Christian employers among their workmen, and Christian doctors among their patients, and Christian servants in the families in which God has placed them—and so on, in a list which, probably, no man could complete, and it will become evident that, of this steady work, pursued in the spirit of faith from year to year, it is absolutely impossible to form a just estimate.

But, beyond the ordinary, the columns of Christian journals during the past year have recorded a vast amount of extraordinary effort and blessing; so that perhaps no year within living memory stands out more markedly as a Year of Grace. The present number of THE CHRISTIAN could not contain even the baldest outline of the work that has been carried on by many workers in many places, and the blessing which the Lord has vouchsafed. If we single out the American brethren, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, it is in no spirit of man-worship, but as observers of the Divine power. Their marvellous usefulness has been in part because they have been of the same mind with Peter and John, "Why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had done these things? The year 1873 closed with in the North of England. Since then Scotland has received mercy in every county; lethargy has largely disappeared; Christian people have been quickened and refreshed; well-known truths have been vitalized; preaching has become in many cases more direct; and there has been a profound conviction that the Holy Ghost is at work. The accounts from Ireland correspond, with just such differences as might have been expected beforehand. And at this moment, it is no exaggeration to say, thousands are rejoicing in a present salvation in some of the large towns of England; while thousands in London work on in prayerful expectation. This expectation of blessing is a noticeable fact—expectation on the part of the preacher and the hearer both. No doubt some go to the "revival meetings" out of mere curiosity, and some even to gather matter of reproach and ridicule, and are reached by the word of the Lord and subdued; but it is also the case, very largely, that men go with hands open and held out, expecting blessing, and the Lord fills them as full as they can hold. It is the revelation of a great truth, worth laying to heart. Let a man go into the humblest barn or gospel-hall, where one who knows and loves the Saviour, tells of Him; if he will but hold out his hand, open instead of shut, he will carry away a blessing vaster and more precious than he can measure.

The past year has given fresh demonstration, if demonstration were needed, that the gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. Men who professed themselves to be wise, said that the power was gone; and even Christian people in some instances played into their hands by talking as if the advance of science had rendered a revision of the gospel necessary. Afresh it has been shown—by numerous conversions—what God has shown so fully in every age—that if we will lay aside our "excellency of speech" and our "wisdom of words," and be content to utter from the heart "the testimony of God," the power of God will still be with us. One great lesson to preachers has been that instead of preparing sermons, it is better still to prepare our hearts; and of all preparation of the heart, that is best which consists in personal study of the Word under the teaching of the Holy Spirit, with ear opened to hear what God the Lord will speak to ourselves.

STARTLING AND TERRIBLE EVENTS have again and again burst upon us in the course of the year—disasters by sea and by land—human beings hurried in hours or even moments through scenes of awful terror into the unseen, lending present emphasis to the charge, "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." If a gospel of terror could be constructed, there have been materials in abundance for the purpose in these recent months. But of nothing is the effect more slight and evanescent than terror; and nothing is sooner forgotten than the resolutions made, and the vows uttered, under its influence. "Preach the word" these disasters say, by their very unavailingness to change the current of men's lives: "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season."

Attention has been drawn to a subject of vital moment to the Christian Church, the subject of

PERSONAL HOLINESS.

No one can read Scripture without seeing what stress is laid on this subject there. Not only is its importance marked throughout Scripture; it has been felt by Christian men and women from the beginning. It would be impossible to count the books, great and small, and the chapters of books, which have holy living for their theme. There has been no breathing more universal among the true followers of Jesus than the breathing after holiness. The subject is not the private property of any particular church, or of any particular school of thought; it is not a new subject, but as old as the gospel; a holy life is the vision that dawns, in unutterable beauty, upon every soul that is truly converted to God. But preachers, in many cases, have come to see that they were one-sided in their preaching; that, in their eagerness to persuade men to accept pardon, they were forgetting, or keeping in the background, what God says about holiness; and many hearers have come to see that they have thought too much of a "ticket" to the celestial city, and too little of the gospel call to glory and virtue; and others, that they have been living far beneath what the Lord had called them to, and rendered possible.

The subject has its own dangers, owing to the tendencies that exist to become self-complacent, instead of sensitive to purity; and there is demand for solemn, calm, prayerful, discriminating study of the Word, that there be no falling into any of those practical mistakes that have been so disastrous in former ages.

Only one thing more is there space to note—

THE INCREASE OF UNITED PRAYER

during the past year. There was much of it before, but the Lord has greatly increased it. It is the Lord's will that He should be inquired of concerning his promises by his people unitedly. It is not to be done only by leaders, or by a few solitary suppliants here and there, who for Zion's sake will not hold their peace, and for Jerusalem's sake will not rest, but is to be a general thing. God has answers for single believers, praying almost solitary and alone. We cannot tell what we owe to these solitary wrestlers—many of them lowly men, kneeling on earthen floors, and poor bedridden sufferers, waking to pray in the watches of the night. God hears, really hears, the single, solitary cry that goes up to Him. But it is his will, clearly expressed, that, for the extension of his kingdom his people should be united, and offer up joint petitions. Where there is united desire, the oneness will naturally show itself in our coming together into one place. Of course we must not fancy that a hundred people have more power with God if gathered together in one house, than if they prayed for the same thing in a hundred separate closets. Our being side by side may be nothing to the Lord; but (like the shutting of the closet door, or the bowing of the knees) it is something to ourselves. It is something as a sign. And it is something, too, as means towards an end—even that brotherly unity, upon which "the Lord commandeth the blessing, even life for evermore." There is vast and mighty promise awaiting fulfilment; and the Lord's voice to his people is like that of old, "For this will I yet be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them."

EVANGELICAL SCHOOLS AT PISA AND CISANELLO.—It having been stated that the friends conducting Christian work at Pisa and Cisanello employ Roman Catholic teachers in their schools, and this statement having reached England, we are requested to state that the teachers are both members of the Evangelical Free Christian Church in Italy, the master having been often pointed at in the street as the "Protestant master," and children occasionally withdrawn on the expression of their being evangelical schools.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The second annual meeting of this Association was held at 165, Aldersgate-street, when the chair was taken by Mr. George Williams, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Henry Lea, of Reading. The report stated that the committee felt assured that the progress of the Association had been satisfactory in the increase of its members, and in the substantial nature of its results. 513 members had been enrolled since the formation of the Association, and 238 during the past year. The library fund had been greatly augmented. The president of the Association, Mr. Henry Lea, had already given 100 guineas, and had promised 150 guineas more in six instalments. Twenty-one libraries had already been sent out to the commercial rooms of hotels in different parts of the country. The chairman delivered an excellent address upon the work and prospects of the Association, in which he warmly commended it to the support of the employers, as being conducive to their interests.

A MODEL SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

BY REV. THEO. L. CUYLER, BROOKLYN, U.S.A.

I have just returned from a visit to the most remarkable Sunday-school in America—perhaps the most so on the globe. If you doubt my opinion, our friend, Mr. Moody, will confirm my estimate of "Bethany Sunday-school," in Philadelphia. It was founded about ten years ago by Mr. John Wanamaker, now the proprietor of the Sunday-school Times, and the best known worker among the younger class of our Christian laymen.

Brother Wanamaker began with a dozen poor children in a small out-of-the-way room, and in a portion of Philadelphia corresponding to the neighbourhood of Surrey Chapel, London. He called the new organization by the hallowed name of "Bethany," and it is well named, for Jesus oftentimes comes thither to be with his disciples. The school now numbers seventeen hundred scholars! And that whole army of children are controlled on the Sabbath with the precision, the promptness, and the perfect drill of a British regiment. But the glory of the school is not chiefly in its numbers, its beautiful order, or its thrilling music, but in its thorough Bible training, and the spiritual success that keeps it in a constant glow of Pentecost.

Yesterday was observed as the annual day of fasting and prayer by the teachers of Bethany school. From half-past seven to half-past eight in the morning there was a meeting for confession of sin. At noon there was another gathering, in which the foremost thought and aim was a "re-consecration to Jesus and his work." From three to four there was a "Bible-reading on the Holy Spirit," followed an hour later by a "praise and promise meeting." In the evening the annual reunion of the teachers came off at the beautiful residence of the superintendent, Mr. Wanamaker.

When I arrived, I found the parlours and hall of the mansion densely crowded with teachers. There were flowers, music, joyous faces; best of all, the dear Master was there, and the alabaster-box brought by more than one loving Mary, filled the air with "the odour of the ointment." The only guest from without whom I recognized among the crowd of teachers was our excellent friend B. Pearsall Smith.

The exercises began with singing some of the Moody and Sankey hymns; then came silent devotion, and a series of brief, earnest prayers. Each prayer had a point and a purpose; it was praying "at a mark." After an hour of devotion, the teachers all broke up into six divisions, and, going off into six different rooms, were drilled by a competent leader in the study of the Bible-lesson for next Sunday. By a happy coincidence, the lesson for study was, "The anointing of Jesus at Bethany." The ringing of a bell summoned the company of teachers back to the large drawing-room, where two minutes were allowed to each leader to give us the main points he had gathered from the lesson.

One of the pithiest addresses was made by Mrs. Needham, a lady who bears some resemblance in her style of speaking to our friend Sarah F. Smiley.

When the discussion of the Sabbath lesson ended, I delivered the annual address to the teachers, my theme being, "The life more abundantly."

A new joy was imparted to our meeting by the good tidings from brother Moody, and we remembered him and his work in London at the mercy-seat.

This morning brother Wanamaker took me to see the new Bethany Sunday-school building, which will be completed by Christmas. It is the grandest edifice of its kind in the world. Measuring 100 feet front by 140 feet width, it will accommodate comfortably three thousand children. And all will be within full view and hearing of the superintendent.

In front of the superintendent's desk is the main auditorium, filled with seats for classes. Beyond this are twenty-four class-rooms; and when their glass doors are lifted, these twenty-four rooms become a part of the great audience-room. The infant class-room is on one side, and on the other the adult Bible-classes. Behind the desk is a lecture-room, communicating with the main room by glass doors. In the basement are, a reading-room for young people, a parish library free to all, a dispensary of medicines for the poor, a kitchen for tea-parties, etc., and small rooms for class prayer-meetings. The whole number of rooms in this model edifice is forty-eight.

When the whole building begins to hum with busy Christian work, it will be worth a voyage across the Atlantic to see. The master-idea of its devoted leader is to bring souls to Jesus. There is nothing sensational in its method, but a certain sanctified common-sense has guided brother Wanamaker in all his planning and management of this wonderfully successful institution.

Will not some Christian philanthropist, of large heart and purse, construct such a Sunday-school building in great, crowded London? Perhaps there is another John Wanamaker waiting over among you, for the voice of his Lord—"Go, pasture my lambs."

It gives me more pleasure to send you this narrative of successful Christian work, because I have been reading my eloquent neighbour Dr. Talmage's powerful and scathing article in your columns on "The Need of Revivals." To his main idea I heartily subscribe, and thank him for his words of fire; but my own observation has not led me to take so discouraging a view of our American "Israel" as he does. In my own denomination, the Presbyterian, the actual increase by conversions during the year 1873 was 4020. This number is sadly small in comparison of what it might be—and would be, if every pastor were as earnest and faithful as my good brother Talmage. I rejoice in his burning appeal to the brethren of Britain, and pray that all London may be shaken this winter, as Jerusalem was shaken when the "power from on high" descended.

ANGLO-INDIAN CHRISTIAN UNION.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I know you will be glad to have a few notes regarding the visit of the Rev. A. N. Somerville to Calcutta, as many of your readers are deeply interested in the important work he has undertaken in coming to India.

We had been looking forward with much pleasure and hopefulness to our dear friend's expected visit, and had made such arrangements as we thought most likely to give him a good opportunity for beginning work on his arrival in Calcutta. The pastors of the evangelical churches had a meeting early in November, at which it was decided to have a Christian conference on the morning of the last day of November, and the first two days of December, by which time our friend Mr. Somerville was expected to arrive.

It was also arranged that there should be an evangelistic service on the evening of each of the above-mentioned days, and that this service should be left entirely in Mr. Somerville's hands.

The conference began on Monday morning last, November 30, and our friend arrived a few hours before the evening evangelistic meeting. Our arrangements and his were thus found to suit admirably.

The conference meetings were very successful. Being the first meetings of the kind held in the city, some curiosity was manifested as to what sort of meetings they might be; but even at the very first meeting the Christian friends present entered as promptly and heartily into the exercises as if they had been quite accustomed to such gatherings.

The first day's subject, "Life in Christ," was introduced by the Rev. Mr. Goldsmith, of the Church Missionary Society, and the spirit of his remarks at once gave a thoroughly spiritual and elevated tone to the remarks of the speakers who followed him.

The subject of the second morning's conference, "Life for Christ," was introduced by Dr. Coates, Sanitary Commissioner for Bengal.

On the third morning, papers were read by Messrs. E. A. Andrews and C. Longhurst, on "The Conversion and Christian Training of the Young," and "How to Make the Sunday-class Interesting."

On each occasion the greatest interest was shown in the subjects, and in the remarks of the several speakers. The conferences were held in Union Chapel, and the evangelistic services in the Free Church.

A few hours after his arrival on Monday, Mr. Somerville addressed the meeting in the Free Church, which was filled by a large audience. The Rev. J. Ross, of Union Chapel, conducted the introductory services, and Messrs. Richards (Wesleyan), and Thoburn (American Episcopal Methodist), spoke a few words of cordial welcome to Mr. Somerville.

Mr. Somerville then gave a short but stirring address, in which he referred to the object of his visit, and his earnest desire to be used and made as useful as possible during the short time he was to be in Calcutta. He said he had come as the agent of no denomination, and desired to work freely with the ministers and people of all the evangelical churches in the city. At his time of life, he said, he could have no ambition but to be useful in gaining souls to the kingdom of Christ. That was his great desire, and the end of his efforts; and for this great work he besought the prayers and earnest co-operation of the people of God in Calcutta. He had been told by his friend Mr. Moody to make a start in work by securing the prayers and sympathies of the Christian people. If he succeeded in that, the work was sure to go on to success; but if he failed in getting the believers around him, he feared failure might be the result. He spoke also of his delight at finding on his arrival that the Christian pastors and their people had been praying for him and the success of his work; and that they had so arranged matters, that he was able to begin work immediately on his arrival. Their cordial and prayerful co-operation, and their brotherly welcome, made him feel strong and hopeful in his work.

On Tuesday evening the church was again filled by a large congregation. Mr. Somerville spoke with great force and earnestness on the words, "Mighty to Save." The Rev. Mr. Williams, of the Old Church (Church Missionary Society), also addressed the meeting.

On Wednesday evening the meeting was larger than on either of the previous evenings. Mr. Somerville spoke from the words, "And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned to the Lord." The address was most impressive, and many of the people were in tears.

Yesterday a wonderful meeting was held in the Scotch kirk; and though the meeting was not large, it was good for a beginning, and the friends are hopeful that it will gradually increase.

We trust we are on the eve of a great revival, which will reach all the churches in the city. In several of them there has been a good work going on since our former united meetings in June; and we are earnestly hoping and praying that our dear friend's work may be so fully blessed, as to be remembered in after years with gratitude by many souls.

Continue to pray for us. There are many sons of praying mothers here who have yet to be gathered into the fold of Christ; and we hope that those who are thus pleading for their dear ones in this distant land will hear of their being won to the Saviour. M.

Calcutta, Dec. 4, 1874.

LETTER FROM MR. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. Lockhart-Gordon, the honorary secretary of the Winter Mission to India, has received a letter dated Calcutta, Dec. 4, from the Rev. A. N. Somerville, intimating his arrival there on Nov. 30. The ship in which he sailed caught fire, but, thanks to the goodness of God, it was speedily extinguished, and his much-honoured servant's life and those of all in the ship, were thus most providentially preserved.

In his letter to Mr. Lockhart-Gordon, Mr. Somerville says:—"I found that every preparation I could have wished for had been made by the ministers and friends here. My son had been very active, and had previously reprinted my original letter to THE CHRISTIAN regarding the Week of Prayer and Effort for Young Men, besides packets of the letter to several of these. A meeting had been advertised for the evening of the 30th, and I had my first service accordingly on that occasion. We had a full attendance. Stated services have been continued every evening, and the attendance alike as to number and character is quite such as I could have desired. We had our first daily prayer-meeting yesterday. My first inquiry-meeting took place yesterday evening, and I had the happiness of seeing one fine young man passing out of the gloom into the light of Jesus. The ministers and missionaries of all denominations have been most cordial, and have greatly assisted me. My work is already heavy. It will increase next week. On the Sabbath I shall have two assemblings of young men to address."

ANOTHER MISSIONARY TO INDIA.

Two weeks since, we stated that the Rev. Mr. Milne, of Auchterarder, had accepted a call to Calcutta. He is now on his way to India, and his many friends in this country will bid him God-speed. Previous to his departure, interesting farewell services were held at his church at Auchterarder, where he has laboured for the past sixteen years.

Mr. Milne addressed the converts in the Free Assembly Hall on Monday evening, and presided at the noon meeting of Tuesday, giving an appropriate address on "The Precious Things of God." Tidings were read of Mr. Somerville's first meetings in Calcutta, and Dr. Duff commended Mr. Milne in prayer. Those who have given themselves to God throughout Mr. Milne's private and public ministry in the North will not fail to remember both him and India before God.

AMONG THE ITALIAN PEASANTS.

I.—WHAT POPEERY HAS DONE.

The following graphic picture of the ignorance and moral degradation that still surrounds the peasantry of one of the fairest lands under heaven, comes to us from Mrs. WALL, wife of the well-known missionary in Rome. In these days, when strenuous efforts are being made to revive the Popish system in this country, it is well to be told, on such reliable testimony, what are the results of priestly domination, when it has the field entirely to itself. We pray that God may deliver this land from ever being exposed to its withering blight, and we are thankful that the pure and strong light of the gospel is revealing Romanism in all its naked enormity in many lands where it has long flourished. Next week we shall give the concluding portion of this deeply-interesting paper:—

In the spring, the work here (Frosinone), met with such resistance from the priests, that the meetings ceased to be frequented, and the life of the evangelist who labours here was threatened. Under his windows, a number of fanatics would assemble, tear up some copies of the Scriptures, and howl, "Death to the Protestant!"

On one occasion, while walking through the street, a man came behind him, and threatened to split his head if he cried out, or looked back to see who thus insulted him. Several persons were arrested, and judgment is still pending; but those who attended the meeting were so intimidated that they came no more.

I came to Frosinone with two Italians, in the hope that the work might be raised again. I found that the priests had done their work well. Every one seemed to shun us; even the liberals seemed to stand aloof, while those who some months since had received the word with joy now thought there was no hope of any success. Frosinone is the capital of a province, having a population of 12,000 souls. It has a railway-station three miles from the town, a strong police force, a court of justice, two or three hundred soldiers, a few friars, perhaps thirty priests, and no bishop. The last bishop resident at Frosinone, in a popular tumult, was thrown through the window of his palace, in consequence of which his successors feel themselves more secure at Veroli, eight miles away. The streets are so narrow or so steep that carriages only bring you to the gate of the city.

Domestic architecture is scarcely known. The generality of the houses are something between the kennel and the stable. The one in which I write is one of the best, as may be supposed from the fact that the secretary of the Sindaco resides on the first floor. The ground floor, dedicated to the live stock, consists of stables, sties, and cellars, opening into a court, where the brutes assemble on the dunghill—the ass, the pig, the goat, the sheep, the cock, the rat, the lizard, and occasionally a snake. The first and second flats, composed of four rooms and a kitchen, have common brick floors, while the ceiling shows rafter and beam. There is no drainage.

The street was formerly the common sewer, where the pig and the child played together; now the cloaca massema is the yard above referred to, in which, in July, a fermenting mass of pollution distils fevers and small-pox, and prepares the way for the cholera in autumn. If such be the state of things in this house, you can easily imagine what it must be in the houses of the poor!

Things are now changing, but slowly. After all the efforts of the Government and municipal authorities, not more than five per cent. are able to read. The poor wear no shoes, but a simple sole of hide bound to the foot. The ancient tunic of the Roman slave, the long, rough sack (saraga), is still in use; the belt round the waist, and the cone cap, complete the clothing of the ciottaro.

At two or three in the morning he rises, and descends from the city, to labour on the plain, where fever comes with the dew at morn and eve. When hunger is felt, a large stone is heated in the crackling wood, and flour of Indian corn, mixed with salt and water, is converted into something which has the appearance of oil-cake. Water from the brook, and unripe beans, make up at this season the cotter's meal. He measures distances by the time it takes to travel them, and the hour of the day by its nearness to dawn, noon, or eve, by the morning masses, or by the Ave Maria. The year has for its landmarks the great feasts of the Church. Some do not know how old they are, or how long they have been married; and often, when they think they do, they answer the question by saying they have "four or five tens." In fact, I have been told by a jailer that many cannot count more than ten.

Those who are raised above the level I refer to are the victims of their ignorance in a thousand ways. They sell when they ought to keep—sell the corn often when in the ear—borrow money at fabulous rates of interest, and sign contracts which reduce them to something like slavery.

The women are no better off. Brought up in houses which resemble kennels, in a circle which reeks with superstition, and rings with blasphemy, of which you have little idea, she is accustomed to labour, washing up to her knees in the valley brook, to carry the great comcha of water from the stream, the corn from the field, the sack to the mill. She is the dupe of the priest. At earliest dawn she is at church, often in the confessional. She brings the flowers for the altar, the oil for the lamps, the silver offerings to the shrine. Without her, the lamps would soon be quenched, the altar naked, the shrine deserted. And what has the Church done for her? Kept her in barbaric servitude, gilded the chains of her slavery, and consecrated her social ruin. Often in the winter these poor women live on the roots of grass, or the leaves of trees. Many never see bread in their houses for months together. Thousands have sold their children to the slave-owner of London and New York, who live on the blood and bones of the little organ-grinder.

One feels all the more interest in this people because of their latent power and dormant faculties. Instead of a population which is the condemnation of Vatican crime, this region, well cultivated, this people, educated and civilized, might have been the paradise of Italy. Physically, the type is the finest. The men sit for painters in Rome as models, not only for all the heroes of classical antiquity, but for the prophets and apostles, angels and archangels, of Papal churches. The women are worshipped in the Madonnas of the greatest painters, and, in their extraordinary strength, splendid forms, complexion alive with richest colouring, and eyes glowing with wild fire, one recognizes the justice of their selection.

Still, it is not in the adult, but in the child, that one sees the true nature of the cicciara. The boy of six, leaping and shouting from morn till eve, or standing in that rag of a shirt on the steps, against the darkness of the doorway, through which I see the timid foal of an ass, is equal to any mother's son on the face of the earth; and yet, in five-and-twenty years, when that ass is old and decrepit, you will find in its eyes a meekness which will awaken sympathy, and almost command a tear; but that little boy will have become the silent man, suspicious and suspected, repulsive and repelled—alone, with the Madonna round his neck, and social and moral perdition in his face, the brigand of the South!

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

My dear Brother,—We have recommenced our work amongst the military. They are so dispersed that it is beginning over again, and though up-hill work, they begin to understand us, and, with the blessing of God, we are winning their attention. They delight in friendly sympathy and words of love. It is interesting to see their progress from astonishment at the Anglais mode of address, and the simplicity of the way of salvation, to real interest in the familiar illustrations of the truth, and at length succumbing to home thrusts, and the influence of the hymns over them as they sing them. However, we have some old habitués, an old galoné and his young comrades, whom he watches over with fatherly care. These are the fruits of our labour at M—. Another, a poor invalided soldier, who brought us a card model of a fort, in token of gratitude. One dear man came from a distant fort to see us, making ten miles' walk for the purpose.

How well the mature sappers listen; so, too, the musicians, who are proud to assist the singing; and the marines are wonderfully docile and respectful. I hailed in about thirty out of the streets the other evening to form a meeting at A—, nearly all Protestants, perhaps not the better hearers for that, for there are Protestants and Protestants, but some very nice men among them.

We heard a busy hum as we entered one of our outlying stations last week. The room was filled—musicians, sappers, sergeants, corporals, privates, all calling out for books of our gratuitous lending library; then we had to resort to all sorts of expedients to seat others who came in afterwards. It is so pleasant to see how soon they make themselves at home, their shakos hung up, their swords unbuckled, and a pleasant look of recognition. One soldier going out said he wished the meetings were every night. Another young soldier, on whom the truth has been telling, says he sits up till one o'clock to read his New Testament, one we furnished him with from a small grant of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Our friend, D—, will be a little astonished to hear that as he entered our meeting at A—, to take part, he was taken for the curé of the adjoining barracks; but on looking more narrowly, they remarked, "No, it is not our curé, but it is very like him."

Oh how we long for the Spirit's power to work amongst these dear people!

REVIVAL IN FRANCE.

How wonderful are God's ways! For six years we have been seeking for a special blessing upon France. These prayers are being answered in his own time and way. It has pleased God to make use of an American to bring it about. Mr. R. Pearsall Smith on arriving in Paris in June last, found hearts prepared by the Lord, and the meetings he held there led to French brethren visiting England and obtaining great spiritual blessing at the meetings at Broadlands and Oxford. They on their return brought the fire with them, and meetings held at Paris, Montmeyran, and Geneva, have served to spread the flame of divine love and power all around.

It was sweet to see French and German hands clasped in brotherly love at Oxford, and to hear French and German hymns rising up to the throne of God, from the same platform. Now we have a Pathway of Power in English, French, and German. France is putting forth a new challenge to Germany by means of her Christian children—not, however, to a struggle on the field of battle, but to an entire and undivided consecration to God.

Christians are being quickened here in France, and are singing as in the days of their youth. Prayer-meetings fill the chapels, and the influence of the Spirit of God is felt in their midst. Fresh warmth and life are being realized. As the result, conversions are taking place in towns and villages. Old pastors lamenting over so much of life misspent, are girding on their armour anew. Old established Christians are finding a renewal of their first love, and opening their hearts with joy to the breath of life which is blowing on others. Other brethren are learning the secret of an effective ministry, and their voices are channels of a living power to their hearers. They go straight to the conscience. Many are waking up, and, in simple faith and childlike confidence, are looking for greater things from the Lord. Conversions are being looked for, and not only looked for, but obtained; and every one who knows what Protestantism in France is will understand the significance of this. Many are looking to be filled with the Spirit, yea, "with all the fulness of God."

The Mission Interieure, which was started for evangelistic work several years back, on the principle of "every Christian a missionary," has at length found what it so ardently desired—an agent for the whole of France, to go forth and stimulate Christians to a life of active service to Christ. Mons. le Pasteur Theodore Monod, whose ministry was so acceptable in Oxford, and who has taken the lead in the meetings in France above referred to, has accepted the invitation of his brethren, and was solemnly ordained to this special ministry by the imposition of hands at Montmeyran on November 27.

Oh, thank God for the tide of spiritual blessing which is rising in France! Let us not cease praying for it, but renew our entreaties for a large manifestation of the blessing which is being enjoyed in England.

Many of your readers are aware of the great facilities on the Continent for the circulation of books by post. My friend, Mons. Dardier (The Oratoire, Geneva), has 4500 New Testaments for distribution by post in France, but has no means in hand for posting them. They cost twenty-five cents each. If any friend can assist him towards this £45, he will be able to put them in the hands of persons who can only be reached by this means.—I am my dear brother, yours affectionately, GEO. PEARSE.

Paris, Dec., 1874.

BRISTOL NOON PRAYER-MEETING.—God is answering prayer in the revival of the spirit of prayer and unity. On the 11th of January, if the Lord will, the Noon-day Prayer-meeting will be recommenced, conducted by a committee of ministers and gentlemen, representing nearly every denomination of evangelical Christians.

MESSESS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN SHEFFIELD.
FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

On Thursday afternoon, our beloved brethren, whose visit has been looked forward to with much earnest desire by the Lord's people here, arrived from Manchester, and held their first meetings, the same evening, in the Temperance and Albert Halls.

Considerable excitement was manifested, a few days ago, when it was reported that the clergy of the Church of England had withdrawn from the executive committee, and that, in consequence, Messrs. Moody and Sankey had refused to pay their expected visit. It is, however, a matter of deep thankfulness to God that this difficulty has been overcome. The clergy have rejoined the committee, and everything is working smoothly. I am glad to be able to state that the difficulty was only one of a mere technical kind, arising from a proposed scheme of house-to-house visitation which interfered with parochial boundaries; and in their letter of withdrawal, the clergy stated that their only motive in doing so was to remove the hindrances to the visitation, and that their feelings and sympathies were unchanged as regards Messrs. Moody and Sankey's mission. When, however, it became known that, in consequence of their action, Mr. Moody had declined to come to Sheffield, the visitation scheme, which formed a part of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's personal work, was abandoned for the present, and the clergy, as I have said, rejoined the committee, and are now working most heartily with the ministers of other denominations, for the furtherance of the one blessed object of leading perishing souls to Christ.

The Temperance Hall, which seats about 1500 persons, was pretty fairly filled when the first service commenced at nine o'clock, the great proportion of the audience being men. Mr. Moody gave a very stirring address to Christian workers, which was listened to with the deepest interest throughout. His theme was courage and perseverance in the work of the Lord, and the address seemed to sound a key-note full of hopefulness of coming blessing in the meetings in this city.

At the conclusion of this first meeting, it was time to go over to the Albert Hall, which will probably hold about 3000 persons. The meeting here, which did not commence until eleven o'clock, and was continued until past midnight, was a most solemn and happy one. At the close of his address, Mr. Moody offered an earnest prayer, expressing a fervent hope that, as the old year was about to roll away, so their sins might leave them, that they might enter upon the new and blessed path of peace and holiness. At his suggestion, the vast assemblage here engaged in silent prayer. It was an impressive scene. Every knee was bent, and every face covered; and the silence was only broken by Mr. Moody, who requested that, if any person wished to be prayed for, he might stand up. A man rose; and then one by one, about six got up from their seats.

Almost immediately after twelve o'clock had struck, and whilst the bells were ringing in the new year, the Rev. R. Green offered prayer for a blessing on the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and Mr. Moody prayed briefly in a similar strain. During the whole of this time the large audience were engaged in silent prayer, and with the exception of an occasional sob, not a sound was to be heard. The heads of the vast assembly were reverentially bowed, and with the exception of those who had risen at Mr. Moody's invitation, not a face was to be seen. A more impressive scene it is impossible to conceive, and until the audience was asked to rise and sing the Doxology, scarcely a movement was made. The hymn of praise was sung enthusiastically, and the meeting was concluded by the Rev. P. Whyte pronouncing the benediction.

FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.

Sheffield, Jan. 1, 1875.—The work of the two American evangelists has opened here most auspiciously; the two meetings held on New Year's eve were crowded, and the impressions produced were most solemn.

The first meeting was held in the Temperance Hall at nine o'clock. Mr. Sankey sang a new hymn written by Dr. H. Bonar expressly for him, "Rejoice, and be glad! the Redeemer has come." The air, which has been set to these words, is peculiarly appropriate, a bright, joyous melody.

The impression produced by his singing was very striking; those who had been merely curious or altogether indifferent, seemed attracted, and earnest attention and even, in some cases, silent weeping, took the place of carelessness. Mr. Moody spoke on the subject of "Work," dwelling chiefly on Isaiah vi. 8: "Here am I; send me." His address was well fitted to stir the Christians of this town to be up and doing. In concluding he appealed to all to come forward heart and soul, "and let us have a fortnight of faithful, prayerful work for God." The watch night service was particularly solemn. The Albert Hall, where it was held, was crowded, many having stood before the doors an hour before they were opened, in order to make sure of admittance.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey were accompanied on to the platform by a large number of ministers of all denominations, amongst these were the following: the Vicar (the Rev. Rowley Hill), Rev. R. Stainton, Rev. J. Smith, Rev. B. Poole, Rev. R. Green, Rev. J. Flather, Rev. P. Whyte, Rev. J. Calvert, Rev. H. H. Wright, Rev. M. Washington, Rev. G. J. Watts, Rev. W. Cobby, Rev. B. Trotter, and many others. The Vicar offered up a fervent prayer for the Divine blessing on the work in Sheffield.

One most interesting feature in this service was Mr. Sankey's singing of "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." It might be the novelty of his style, or the associations naturally arising at the near approach of the new year, but I certainly have never seen such an effect produced. I have heard him in all the towns they have visited in Scotland, and also in Manchester; but I never heard him sing so pathetically, more especially in the last stanzas:

"Too late! too late! will be the cry, Jesus of Nazareth has passed by."

Mr. Moody spoke from Luke xix. 10, "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." As illustrating this verse, he graphically narrated the two stories immediately preceding his text, that of the opening of the eyes of blind Bartimeus, and the conversion of Zaccheus. It was only a retelling of the stories, but given in that way peculiarly Mr. Moody's own, making his listeners part and parcel of the story, as if the whole thing were enacted just in the Targate, and Jesus were just passing the hall-doors. He connected the two stories by throwing out the thought that as Bartimeus was on his way home to tell his wife, Zaccheus met him. "Why, isn't that the poor blind beggar—it's like him; but it can't be he, for his eyes are open."

"Yes, it is I."

"What has made your eyes open?"

"Jesus of Nazareth did it."

"Where is He? I must see Him."

"He's just on the road to Jericho."

Away Zaccheus runs; and because he is a little man, he gets up a tree, to see well. Jesus stops, looks up, calls him, "Zaccheus, come down." This was one instance of sudden conversion. Some don't believe in sudden conversion; but here Zaccheus was not converted when he went up the tree, yet he came down a converted man. We are told he received Jesus gladly. From these incidents, he proved how willing, how eager Christ is to save all. What have we to do? Nothing! blessed be God. If we had, we would never do it. Only accept. What had Zaccheus to do? Only come down, only obey.

He concluded by drawing the attention of the audience to the fact that the old year was fast dying—only a few minutes—and what if the new year should arise and find us where we were—lost! Oh, let each of us take it, the offer is here; will you have it? Salvation—ay, even before this year is closed you may be saved. As there are only a few minutes of this year remaining, let us finish the old and begin the new, on our knees.

The whole audience then sank on their knees, and the new year found them bent in silent prayer. Mr. Moody asked that those who were unsaved might stand up, that they might be prayed for. For a time none were willing to do so, but on Mr. Moody's asking a second time "if there were none in the hall wishing salvation," a few stood up, and the Christians were asked to pray for them.

Just then the bells began to ring in the new year, and the Rev. E. Green engaged in prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the town of Sheffield, and most particularly on the special meetings to be held. Mr. Moody also engaged in prayer. This was one of the most solemn scenes I have ever been privileged to witness. While the audience were bent in prayer, the most intense stillness prevailed, broken only by an occasional sob. After singing the Doxology, the meeting separated.

The streets were made lively after the meeting with vigorous singing of hymns, as bands of Christians wended their way home.

New Year's Day.—The noon-day meeting was held in the lower Cutlers' Hall. It is a great pity this hall is so dark and confined. The platform is nothing but a mere box. It is to be hoped the ensuing meetings will be held in some hall more suited for speaking. Mr. Moody chose as his subject, "Faith," as illustrated by the healing of the leper and that of the man sick of the palsy, in the fifth chapter of Luke. He concluded by calling on all, not only to believe and find Jesus themselves, but to ask, and ask in faith, for their friends. Mr. Sankey engaged in prayer, and also sang his beautiful solo, "Whosoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

FRIDAY EVENING MEETING

was also held in the Cutlers' Hall. After the opening hymn, "Free from the law, O happy condition!" had been sung, the Rev. F. Kellet engaged in prayer. Mr. Sankey sang "The ninety and nine;" before singing it, he asked that whilst he was singing Christian friends might pray for the salvation of those who were wanderers.

Mr. Moody's address was on the "Gospel" (Mark xvi. 15): "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." He said, although this command has been obeyed, although the gospel has been preached all over the world, yet he was sure that there was no word in the English language so little understood as this. People thought it was some dry, stupid sermon, or something of that sort. What does the word mean? Why it is just, good spell, or God's spell—i.e., good news—glad tidings, and yet people think it is sad. In illustration of this, Mr. Moody mentioned that one of the London papers had referred to his coming visit to that city as "The Coming Tribulation." "What!" he exclaimed, "a tribulation because the good news is to be proclaimed!"

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Moody said there would be a prayer-meeting for those who loved the Lord, and asked any who were in anxiety about their souls to go into the side room. He explained that an inquiry-meeting was simply to give an opportunity for a little private talk about salvation to any who wished it. He had found in all his experience that he could do more good in five minutes' private talk with a man, than in five hours' talk from the platform.

The noon-day meeting on Saturday was intended particularly for parents and children. It was held in the Temperance Hall. Mr. Moody spoke the truths of the glorious gospel in such a simple style that the youngest child could not fail to catch his meaning. He kept their attention fixed by judicious questions, such as, "What did Jesus come to this world for?" "To save us." "Who did He come to save?" "Sinners."

"Are there any sinners here to-day?" "Yes." "Are there many?" "Yes, we are all sinners." "What will take away our sins?" "The blood of Jesus."

In this way he interested the little ones, and at the same time his address must have been most impressive to all present, more especially to those who were parents, as he dwelt very strongly upon the duty of seeing that the children were led to Jesus in their youth.

Mr. Morgan made a few remarks, stating that one of the features of the present revival is the wonderful work going on amongst the children.

Rev. B. Stainton also made a few encouraging remarks, and engaged in prayer.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 3.

Truly this has been a day of blessing for Sheffield. The meetings have been attended with most blessed results.

The morning meeting for Christian workers was not perhaps so well attended in point of numbers as might have been expected, but the Christians who had come out at this early hour were right-down hearty workers. As Mr. Moody said, "He would rather have a moderately small meeting of such earnest Christians than have it packed with thousands of careless people." His address was on "Work" (Mark xiii. 14): "To every man his work." Faithfully and earnestly did he lay it before his audience, that there was for each one some appointed work, and if we neglect it we must answer for it. He also showed the joy of working for the Lord, and its reflex effect on our souls in building up and comforting our hearts.

At the afternoon meeting, the Albert Hall was densely packed half-an-hour before the time; the lower Albert Hall was thrown open for the overflow, but even then many had to go away disappointed.

Mr. Moody addressed this large gathering from Rom. ii. 23: "For there is no difference." Many must have been startled by the plain way in which he put this truth before them, that all are alike in God's sight. He does not divide by classes or ranks, rich and poor. The only division before God is saved and unsaved.

Many were evidently struck to the heart; some whom we heard scoffing at the commencement, were in tears at the conclusion of his address.

When Mr. Sankey followed by singing, "Free from the law, O happy condition!" it seemed to produce a deep impression.

The Sunday evening meeting was glorious. The hall was again densely packed. Mr. Sankey sang his solo, "There were ninety and nine." Mr. Moody then gave his address on "Regeneration," from the words "Ye must be born again" (John iii. 7.) His thrilling words must have gone to the heart of many grieved ones who had been awakened by the former address to a sense of their lost condition. He exposed the fallacy of those who will not believe regeneration because they cannot understand it, and made a moving appeal to make themselves sure of being born into the kingdom of God. The result of the whole proceedings in Sheffield since the coming of our dear brethren, must be considered highly satisfactory, and as affording great cause for thankfulness.

Sheffield has been cold and indifferent to religious matters, but we hope that now when it has been shaken the blessed result of this work will be a new zeal for the service of the Lord, and a desire to win souls for Christ.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

We had wonderful meetings here yesterday in the Albert Hall. The attendance at the early morning meeting for Christian workers was not large, but the power of the Lord was present, and the numbers of Sunday-school teachers, tract distributors, and other workers in the Lord's vineyard, who were there, seemed greatly stirred up and refreshed; many seemed to have difficulty in restraining the audible expression of their feelings, as Mr. Moody in his own graphic and forcible way pressed his exhortation to more zeal and faithfulness in the Lord's service home to the hearts and consciences of his hearers. In the afternoon and evening Messrs. Moody and Sankey held services in the same building, which although the largest hall in Sheffield, was only able to accommodate a small portion of the vast crowds who sought to gain admission. After the hall was crowded to excess, the street outside was literally choked with those who were unable to gain admission. The whole town seemed stirred, and I trust and believe there will be a great ingathering of souls to the kingdom of God this week. Mr. Sankey's singing was listened to with the deepest attention and evident delight by the audience. Mr. Moody's address seemed in more than usual power and earnestness, and I am sure a very deep impression was produced, although from the crowded state of the building it was not possible to get into conversation with those who might have wished for it.

THE WORK OF GOD IN MANCHESTER.

FROM REV. W. RIGBY MURRAY.

Our honoured friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, left us for the present at least, on the afternoon of Thursday, the last day of 1874. For four weeks, in the darkest, coldest, and dreariest season of the year, have these men of God toiled among us with an amount of diligence and zeal such as I never saw equalled, far less surpassed; and what has been the result? That is the question that shaped itself in my mind. A complete answer to it would cover page after page of this journal. Only eternity will disclose the amount of good that has been done through their instrumentality. To speak figuratively, we have had summer in the depth of winter. The Sun of Righteousness has shone forth most brightly and genially, even while the material sun has been hid from view amid fog and darkness. From the lips of hundreds the song might have been heard, "Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

In speaking of

so far as these can be ascertained, I may be forgiven if I begin with the ministers of Manchester. If one class has been blessed more than another during these four past weeks, it has been the regular Christian ministry. I am sure I speak the sentiments of all my brethren, who have thrown themselves heart and soul into the movement, when I say that we have received nothing less than a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost. Our own souls have been quickened. Our faith in the adaptation of the glorious gospel of the blessed God to the wants and longings of the human spirit has been deepened. Our sense of the magnitude and responsibility of our offices as heaven's ambassadors, charged with a message of reconciliation and love for the guiltiest of the guilty, and the vilest of the vile, has been greatly increased. We have had demonstrated to us, in a way that at once startled and delighted some of us, that after all, the grand levers for raising souls out of the fearful pit and the miry clay, are just the doctrines which our so-called advanced thinkers are trying to persuade the Christian world to discard as antiquated and impotent. These are—the doctrine of the atoning death of Jesus Christ; the doctrine of a living, loving, personal Saviour; and the doctrine of the new birth, by the Spirit and the Word of Almighty God. One of our ablest ministers, at the noon prayer-meeting, on the last day of the year, solemnly declared that, whereas the first of these cardinal verities had not been fully realized by him before these services commenced, he now felt it to be a spring of joy and satisfaction to his soul such as language could hardly express. And then how shall I speak of the gladness that has filled our hearts when we heard, as we did almost from day to day, of conversions in our congregations, of parents rejoicing over sons and daughters brought to Jesus, of young men consecrating their manhood and strength to God, and of converts offering themselves for any department of Christian service.

If our dear friend, Mr. Moody, had accomplished nothing more than the quickening of the ministers of this great centre of population, and stirring us up to greater devotion to our glorious vocation as "labourers together with God," his visit would not have been in vain. Give us a revived ministry, and we shall soon see a revived church.

Next to the Christian ministry, I believe the great army of Christian workers have shared most largely in the blessing. Perhaps the most remarkable, in every respect, of all the services held by the evangelists during their stay here were those on Sunday mornings, in the Free Trade Hall. With the exception of one of these mornings, the weather was as severe as any we have had in this exceptionally severe winter, and yet the vast building was densely packed, at the early hour of eight, with audiences presumably composed of Sunday-school teachers, tract distributors, district visitors, missionaries, evangelists, etc., drawn not only from the city and borough, but from the whole surrounding district. The fruits of these wonderful meetings are already apparent. I question if there be a single Christian agency in all Manchester that has not been the better for them. From that one meeting, as from a great fountain-head, streams of blessing have flowed, are flowing still, and, I believe, will continue to flow, that will spread life and beauty over the whole field of Christian work, such as we have not witnessed here before. Teachers went straight from the hall, in many instances, to their classes, with their souls fired with love for their scholars. Missionaries received fresh impetus and courage for their peculiarly difficult work of going from door to door, knocking for admittance in the name of Jesus. Visitors of tract districts felt stimulated to greater diligence in the discharge of their important duty, as the bearers of those silent monitors from house to house that have so often brought "light into the dwelling." Above all, drones felt rebuked, and ceased to be drones. Recruits in large numbers were enlisted in the name of our Lord and King. Many who had been languidly sighing out, "My leanness, my leanness!" were constrained to cry out, "My laziness, my laziness!" and to add in all seriousness, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" In short, could our American brethren repeat these addresses in that great hall once every year, they would do for our various Christian organizations what requires to be done periodically for the machinery of our mills and factories—overhaul them completely, renew and improve much of their belting gearing, and render their operation at once more vigorous and more productive.

THE NOON PRAYER-MEETING

has also been largely blessed. Like some old Eastern well, it has been daily visited by hundreds, who have refreshed their souls with the water of life, and returned to their businesses and their homes feeling that the "sweet hour of prayer" was the sweetest of all the hours of the day. And the requests for prayer that have been presented, who shall number them? who shall even classify them? Above all, who shall say what revelations they afforded of the yearning solicitude, the agonizing supplications, the impassioned cries, that exercise the souls of immortal beings, in every relation and condition of life, in this world of distance and darkness? Whatever some may think of this novel feature in the mode of conducting a prayer-meeting, I feel sure, from observation and experience, that it has imparted new life and interest to a much-neglected institution. These requests have given reality and intensity to the prayers that were offered. They drew out our sympathies towards our fellow-Christians, in connection with trials and wants such as never entered our minds to conceive. They made us feel that "one touch of Nature makes the whole world kin," that "as in water, face answereth to face, so doth the heart of man," that we are all members of the one family called by the one name of Jesus Christ. They did more than that—they gave us glimpses of the fulness that is in our Redeemer, out of which so many thousands may draw, "and grace for grace"—"enough for all, enough for each, enough for evermore." And, in hundreds of cases, they have not been in vain, if we may judge by the fact, so frequently brought out at these meetings, that thanksgivings have been publicly made for abundant answers to them, sometimes vouchsafed in very wonderful ways. Parents have stood up and given thanks for the conversion of their children, and children for the conversion of their parents—brothers for the conversion of sisters, and sisters for the conversion of brothers—teachers for the conversion of their scholars, and ministers for the conversion of some even of their church-members. "And now, O Lord, we thank and praise thy glorious name!" "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name, be praise, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake!" "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion, for He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; He hath blessed thy children within thee!"

THE AFTERNOON BIBLE-READINGS

have been greatly relished by thousands. At these Mr. Moody surprised and delighted many of us ministers by his wonderful acquaintance with the Word of God. Whatever the subject in hand, whether the blood, confessing Christ, the Holy Spirit, grace, faith, or assurance, he proved himself to be a very giant in Bible knowledge; and though the immense audiences, comprising some of the best of our citizens, did not come provided with the Book so generally as they might have done, I have reason to believe that in hundreds of cases they went home to it with souls hungering after righteousness, and determined to become better acquainted with the word of life.

THE EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

What shall I say of these in closing? They have been blessed to vast numbers. In the inquiry-room, I have met with many who stated that they had never had the way of salvation so plainly put before them as by Mr. Moody. In not a few instances, too, Mr. Sankey's beautiful and touching solos, especially, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," "Almost persuaded," and "Prodigal child," have proved to be arrows of conviction, entering the heart in the most unexpected manner, and leading to conversion. And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of all the blessed fruits, already apparent, of the extraordinary efforts of these dear men of God. Suffice it to say, in a sentence, that all classes of the community—old and young, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, ministers and laymen, masters and servants, teachers and scholars—have received a large blessing from the religious services conducted by the American brethren, and are deeply sensible, I trust, of the mighty debt of gratitude under which they have been laid. The Lord bless them, and make them blessings, wherever they go!

Victoria Park, Manchester.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

The closing week has been the most joyful of all. The tide of blessing, which has been steadily rising, has this week reached its flood; the earnestness of the preacher and the eagerness of the people have seemed alike to intensify, and the unconverted have been called to take refuge in Christ with a vehemence of entreaty which has exerted a mighty influence on the assemblies. During these five weeks God has answered the prayers of many years, and we cannot but feel that what has been going on in the city has made Manchester peculiarly interesting to the dwellers in heaven.

At nine on Wednesday evening, about 2000 men reassembled in the hall, to hear what Mr. Moody had to say on the subject of the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Herbert Spencer occupied the chair, and gave a brief address, intimating that it was in contemplation to buy the Museum for the Young Men's Christian Association, for £30,000. Mr. Moody delivered an inspiring harangue, in which he enlarged on the spiritual advantages of the Association, and urged the straining of every effort to reach the young men of Manchester, and to secure the building in question for the Association. A collection towards the object, made at the close, realized £1800, £1000 of which was given, I believe, by the chairman. This amount, with what has been received before, including £500 given last week by Mr. J. Stuart, makes a total, at present received or promised, of £3000.

On Thursday morning, Mr. Moody addressed a crowded meeting in the Higher Broughton Presbyterian Church, and then came on to the noon prayer-meeting in the Oxford Hall, where he read and commented on the earlier part of the 103rd Psalm. He said he had to bless the Lord for what He had done for him. It had been the best year of his life. He had been more used by God than in all the seventeen preceding years. He did not know of one sermon he had delivered, that had not been blessed to the conviction or conversion of some souls. It was a delightful meeting. Every word uttered was set to the tune of "Bless the Lord, O my soul!" When one minister rose to say, "I have to praise God for the conversion of the brother of dear friends of mine, who have prayed for him twenty-five years; for the conversion of the sister and of the servant of another friend; for the salvation of three persons in my own congregation; for the dispelling of the doubts of a young man who travelled 150 miles to these meetings—all which blessings have been given in the course of the present week;" when another minister rose to say he had never met with so much of scriptural teaching concerning the way of salvation, and the clear direction of inquirers to Jesus, as in Mr. Moody's addresses; and another to say that the last ten days had been the happiest of his life—that he had derived an inspiration, had discovered how to preach Christ, had enjoyed sweeter communion with Jesus, and felt like a man whose chains were broken;—they only uttered what many could have endorsed, as a description of the blessings they themselves had received.

Our beloved brethren left in the afternoon for Sheffield, whither our prayers follow them. They are to return, however, for Friday and Saturday, January 8th and 9th, and then we hope not only to have a repetition of the blessings we have so abundantly received, but to hear glad tidings of similar grace bestowed on the neighbouring town.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Of the impression made upon the multitude of unconverted people surrounding our churches, it is only possible as yet to form a rough estimate. No meeting has been held up to this time for new converts, nor has any attempt been made to obtain their names and addresses. The number of inquirers at the various after-meetings cannot have been less than three thousand; but some deduction must be made for those who came forward twice, or even three or four times. There is no doubt, too, that the great majority of the anxious had been previously under religious convictions. Almost all of them were members of Bible-classes, congregations, or even churches. To find an inquirer belonging to what are called the lapsed masses, or even from among those who have separated themselves from all religious influences, has been so far a very rare experience. The very success of the mission, indeed, has been, with regard to this part of the work, its hindrance. The great masses of Christian people who have assembled, have kept out the unconverted. These, feeling less interest in the meetings, have naturally come last, and have been either shut out, or placed in some remote part of the building, where they have heard with difficulty, and their attention has been but imperfectly secured. The difficulty is one which must be felt in every great centre of population, and seems especially to require the attention of those who will be called upon to make arrangements for the approaching services in the metropolis.

The work in Manchester, it cannot be too strongly urged, should only be regarded as in its beginnings. We have not reached yet those who most need our help; perhaps we scarcely see yet the means by which we are to reach them. One blessing has come to us, however, very largely, if not mainly, through the visit of our friends. Besides the impulse which has been given to ordinary church work, a spirit of unity has been called forth among the different religious bodies such as was never known before. Surely, when we think of the vast numbers of our Christian workers strengthened thus, it is not too much to hope for the great result which has so often been placed before us during the past five weeks, "Manchester for Christ!"

STRAIN EVERY NERVE, O LOVE!

A POEM FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Strain every nerve, O Love!
The world, it wants but thee!
'Tis nought below, and nought above,
And nought beneath the sea,
Nor jewels rare, nor guerdon fair
It craves, but only thee!

Much hast thou done, O Love!
Yet more remains to do.
Would'st thou thy lineage prove,
And be to conscience true,
Freely outpour thy honey store,
Like God's o'er-spreading dew.

Ye who have freely given,
Give on—not ONLY gold!
Give on, give on like heaven;
'Tis no time to withhold!
Give out the heart, its warm best part,
Lest it wax dull and cold.

The tears Love wipes away,
As it some ruin stems,
Grow at the last great day
Into bright, lustrous gems,
Which ever shine, with gleam divine,
In saintly diadems!

The victories Love has won
Be further, further push'd!
For still each setting sun
Sees many a woe unsh'd,
And thousands still, by every ill,
To crime and want are crush'd.

Wax stronger, then, O Love!
Be not great efforts rare;
No empty symbol prove
The cross that Christians wear.
Let every grief meet great relief,
And Love each burden share.

Love must the chasm span
That sunders rich and poor;
No law of fellow-man
May form a bridge secure,
But love can trace in each wan face
A brother evermore.

The rushing torrent strong
Fear not, O Love, to meet:
Turbid it flows along,
Yet breaks around Thy feet.
While yet is time, melt woe and crime,
With care and the gospel sweet.

Give Life's serenest years
To minister and bless!
Give wealth of love and tears,
And patient thoughtfulness;
With noble waste, and eager haste
Outpour your tenderness!

And ye whose life runs low,
Give sympathy and prayer!
Forth to the work to go
Your best beloveds spare;
Not wealth to gain, nor fame attain,
But for the lost to care.

Strain every nerve, O Love!
Thou knowest not thy power!
How is it thine to move
Colossal with the hour!
Dauntless arise with beaming eyes,
Exhaustless life thy dower.

CHELTEMHAM CONFERENCE.

DECEMBER 16—18.

In attempting to give you a short account of the Conference recently held here, two thoughts are uppermost in my mind. The first is one of praise; the second of surprise. "The Lord hath been mindful of us." Of course He did not disappoint his waiting people, but give them his own rich blessing. "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." Many have testified to the blessing they received, and I believe there are many more who have been blessed, though we have not heard of them.

The speakers were the Rev. Canon Hoare, of Tunbridge Wells; the Rev. Evan Hopkins, of Richmond; the Rev. G. R. Thornton, of Nottingham; and the Rev. Webb-Peploe, of King's Pym.

We were taught by the light of God's Word and of his Holy Spirit how far many of us were living below both our privilege and our duty. We were not told that there was any danger (if I may so put it) of our becoming perfect; but rather, in the presence of our heart-searching God, we discovered what were our sinful imperfections. Then we were so clearly pointed to the all-sufficient Jesus, and learnt much of God's own purposes concerning Him and concerning ourselves in Him. And need I say that we were led to seek and expect an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, according to that faithful word, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost" (Acts i. 5, and xi. 16)? Many, I trust, were thus baptized, and learnt to praise the Lord, so to speak, "with other tongues."

As to numbers, it will be enough to mention that though the weather was unfavourable, yet on the two last evenings a second large hall was filled with the overflow of those who could not find room in the first. There was evidently great readiness to hear the truth.

It does fill me with surprise to see how graciously the Lord is working. When we reflect upon the numberless imperfections in the midst of which our meetings were carried on, may we not marvel at his condescending goodness in granting us so large a blessing? And does not this conclusion force itself upon us, "What would He not do did we but let Him have it all his own way?"

May the Church of the living God awake more and more throughout the world to this solemn fact, that she has been "limiting the Holy One," who is in the midst of her. We talk of imperfections as if we were proud of them, whereas are not many of them just so many sins which ought to be confessed and forsaken? We make excuses for our unbelief, and call it presumption to trust God! Have we not too much lost sight of this, that true faith and true humility are inseparable, and that he who trusts the Lord most is he who has least confidence in self? These are some of the thoughts which arise in one's mind after such meetings as our Cheltenham Conference. The Lord seems to be saying to his redeemed people very lovingly in these days, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A correspondent, urging the need for the proposed week of prayer for the young women of our land, speaks very strongly on the unhappy practice of educating English girls at Roman Catholic schools on the Continent. She speaks from experience, and relates the case of a lady and gentleman residing in India, who placed five daughters in one of these establishments, and on meeting one of them in London a short time since, was told they had all five been baptized into the Romish Church the previous week. May we not be suffering now from such a line of action in the past? and are not facts of this kind a call for earnest prayer on behalf of our children in continental schools?

FOR THE YOUNG.

"TWICE RESCUED."

"Katie is just gone to sing among the angels. Your welcome flowers are now in her hand. She said, 'The next song will be in heaven.'"

Such was the message that told us of the flight of one of our dear little Home-birds to the happy land.

Will you go back in thought a few weeks, and try to picture to yourself an upper room at the Refuge? There, on a little bed, lies a small child, ten years old she looks in size, but with an old, old face, for Katie has known sorrow early, and that, you know, brings wrinkles on the forehead, and hunger and cold pinch the cheeks, so that they lose their roundness as well as their roses. She is but thirteen; and only five weeks before the time we write of, was brought to the Home very, very ill. Now, she is in bed, propped up with pillows, a little flannel jacket round her shoulders, her hair done up in two funny little plaits.

Katie can no longer run about like other children, for Jesus has taken her aside to teach her some sweet lessons she would not have otherwise learnt.

When you are sick, mother lets you nestle your tired little head upon such soft, cozy pillows; but dear Katie cannot do this, for she has a terrible cough, which prevents her ever lying down night or day, though her head throbs with pain, and she is too ill to eat anything but a few grapes.

Isn't this a very doleful picture, darling? No wonder it makes the big tears come into your eyes as you think of it; and doesn't it make great hot tears burst from our hearts when we know that this is only what happens to hundreds of little perishing children, who, while you are tucked up so snug and warm in your little beds, are every day, and all night long, exposed to the cold, and rain, and the hunger, and nakedness, which sap away all their strength of body, and never let them know the joys of childhood.

But now come and look at a brighter side. Kissing the fevered little cheek; we remark—

"How hot your face is, darling, and your little hands are so cold!"

"Yes," she answers, "I am often like that. Sometimes my feet are dead cold, and then I gets in such heats! It was just cold after cold I took, tramping about with father, and now they say it's consumption. My hands and all are wasting away."

And sure enough the tiny hand is a mere skeleton.

"Well, dearie, your pains are nothing to what the dear Lord Jesus bore for you, are they?"

"Oh, no," she replies, quickly, with such a sunny smile.

"What message shall we give the school-children from you, Katie?"

"I don't hardly know, unless you will tell them that Jesus loved me, and died for me, to forgive me my sins."

"How long have you known this, dear? And who taught it you?"

"Only since I came here, five weeks ago; Mrs. Merry told me, and I just believed it. And it made me so happy; I don't know now what it is to be down-hearted. The girls come in sometimes, and say, 'Why, Katie, you are always laughing!' And so I am; for I don't know what it is to be down-hearted. How could I bear all this pain, without Him always near me?"

A few weeks longer the little one lingered, often suffering intense agony, but bearing it so sweetly and patiently, and her little face shining with such perfect peace, and joy, and rest in Jesus, that to every one in the Refuge she was a wonderful testimony of God's great love to a little child, showing how even such a young life could bring great glory to his name, by bearing pain uncomplainingly for Him, and living to the last in simplest faith on Jesus.

Was it any wonder that, three nights before her death, she said to Mrs. Merry, "I have been twice rescued"?

She sent word to Miss Macpherson, "Tell her I will ask Jesus to fill her full of Himself."

For another friend who had sent some sweet violets she left a message—"I shall thank her at home."

One night, just before the last, when very ill, she said often to the lady who was tenderly watching her—

"Oh, is He not long of coming? I thought of being home before morning. What time is it?"

"Two o'clock, dear. Maybe He will come by cock-crow."

When asked when that was, she opened her large eyes, and said—

"It is four o'clock in the country; but it will be just when He likes, in his time."

The following days were spent so completely resting in Jesus; then the last morning came; and after the hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," had been sung to her, she lay quiet a little; then looked up, and sang—

"My Father calls me; I must go,
To meet Him in the promised land."

Her agony was so inexpressible, she begged them to pray for her release, but said, "I will not grumble; I will wait till He comes. He said He would, so He will; but I want Him to come now. Come, do, dear Jesus!"

These were her last words on earth. The loving Shepherd gathered his tired little lamb to rest in his own bosom.

We have still her four little sisters to care for through the winter. Katie said, "Pray for them; Jesus can save them."

Dear little child, do you know the wondrous secret which made wee Katie so happy? It is all contained in those five words, "And I just believed it," and it is such a blessed reality.

Home of Industry.

ANNIE MACPHERSON'S HAPPY NEW YEAR

TO HER FELLOW-HELPERS THE WORLD OVER.

My beloved Friends,—During these long, quiet evenings in this Canadian Cottage Home, surrounded on every side by far-stretching snowy carpetings, it has been sweet to review the work we have accomplished in the happy location of so many precious youthful lives.

You will be all glad to know that the time of broken health through the great strain of sleeping in the midst of the work at Spitalfields has passed away, and again I am able to romp, teach, write, read, and toil, for the welfare of the little precious ones; all these joys to me for weeks had to be looked at as no longer to be mine here, but the rest of the "little white" to be one of suffering.

It is a denial not to be among the widows and match-box makers at this season, dispensing your love-gifts as in the years that are past, to those who have few of the comforts you and I have around us.

Again in the bright spring-time I hope to return, and be introduced to all the mournful little family Mrs. Merry is now rescuing one by one in the name of our loved Lord Jesus.

Oh could you but see the boys and girls, so changed! I often weep for very joy, scarcely believing my own eyes, and shout, "Praise the Lord for his great love!" Beggar boys on London streets indeed! they are but hidden jewels to exercise the saints, and see whether they are willing to show forth the fruits of the Spirit, and take the low place the Saviour took; having their bowels moved with compassion, and rivers of life flowing through them to others.

Daily, hourly, I thank God for the self-denial ye youthful lovers of our Lord have had in giving up anything of time, ease, sweets, garments, or money; you have laid it up in a treasure-house that is bringing forth fruit to his praise in honest, industrious lives.

To carry out a fresh burden the Lord has laid upon me, I need £1000; for, wonderful to relate, there is a house to purchase 200 yards from this, that would house fifty orphans this spring.

The right-hearted, practical Christian women have always been my greatest difficulty when fresh burdens have been pressing upon me; but the blessing of the Lord at Toronto during the visit of Mr. Varley has issued in offers of help in aid of the work of the orphan and destitute.

During the month of November my faith was exercised by the drying up of funds, showing that this burden might be going before the Lord. Mr. Merry, our faithful cashier, wrote from Spitalfields that our whole fund was £67 7s., but not a debt. Here, also, we were reduced to a few dollars, thirty in family, bread bill owing, the year's taxes to pay, children needing each a warm winter suit, etc. After a few days of looking beyond the clouds, believing that the sun was shining still, from a woollen manufactory there came a whole web of cloth, enough and to spare. Six dear little girls unknown to us were toiling for several months, then held their bazaar in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and sold all, so sending us seventy dollars. Then the town of Galt determined, we hear, to present one hundred dollars yearly in lieu of the taxes. After this the English mail arrives, and tells of love-offerings from the Gairloch and Cannes, and many other places. Who could doubt such a faithful, loving, ever-pleading Jesus, who just lives in us and joys in us, making us his friends, the very objects of his choice, to work in us to do his will. Oh! beloved young friends, look right out of yourselves, and never think you can do enough for Jesus.

Just read how the web of cloth got changed. The ladies associated here announced a "bee." Imagine me, accompanied by our sewing-machine, joining these thirty kind Dorcas, where three machines were already busily at work; such a stitching and striving who would do most, and, for the credit of the Mission, I did try to put in nineteen stitches to the dozen.

Was I not right glad to be able to go back upon my early Scotch training, proving how necessary for all young ladies it is to be able to cut out, shape properly, and put together every plain garment. These are accomplishments which, if learnt in youth, are sure to be useful in after life, and only add gracefulness to those other adornments that enable us, as women, to fill the whole house with the odour of the life we live out for Jesus.

Dear young friends, cultivate also the habit of letter-writing in early life. Just imagine how I would pay you with sleigh-rides and skating on the river in the field below, if you were here helping me, and my young nephews and other lads home from college, in writing two thousand New-year letters! My desire before the Lord is to do well what He has given me to do. My longing is that many of these converted young men and women, now with hale constitutions, should become missionaries. Waiting his time and his call to service, we toil on, joyfully dedicating our all upon the altar.—Yours, beloved young friends, in sweet fellowship of service,
ANNIE MACPHERSON.

OTAGO, NEW ZEALAND.—A minister at Dunedin, Otago, in a letter to a friend in this country, writes:—"I saw your letter to —, and read it with great interest. The awakening is evidently widespread, and has been the means of adding to the church numbers of the young of both sexes. Would that we had a similar outpouring of the Spirit in this region! Our young folks and our old prosperous folks get the notion that religion is only necessary for old, unhappy, dying people. I do not mean to say that we have not many here of all ages who fear God and love his cause, but only that we have a large number whom prosperity is rendering somewhat indifferent to the truth as it is in Jesus. We have had meetings in Dunedin, and in our (the Presbyterian) churches generally, for a week or end, or longer, with results more or less gratifying. As the rule, the attendance was good; and I think that, in many instances, sinners were awakened, and the people of God quickened. The Oamaru meetings were very genial; — assisted at them for a week with good results. Last week they held meetings in Tokomairiro church; and — writes me, in a letter just received, that, as far as attendance was concerned, they may be pronounced successful; but I hope they were successful in a higher sense."

WATCH-NIGHT AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Our readers will have seen the announcement of a Conference on Scriptural Holiness to be held in the Agricultural Hall, Islington, during the entire month of January. Its proceedings, however, commenced on the last night of the dying year, lasting from seven o'clock p.m. till the advent of 1875. The attendance was very small, about fifty persons being present at the opening, while the number did not at any period of the evening exceed 200. This was not much to be wondered at, considering that the metropolis was enveloped in a dense and penetrating fog, and the frost was most intense, besides which watch-night services were held in many of the neighbouring churches. The interest and value of the proceedings, however, were felt by those present to be far out of proportion to the numerical strength of the meeting. It was a season of much refreshing, and we doubt if any of the watch-night services held in various parts of London will yield better results to those who attended them than the one we now speak of. There was a sense of reality and definiteness of purpose pervading the meeting that one does not always find in larger gatherings.

The Rev. John Allen, of Tonbridge Chapel, who has been chiefly instrumental in originating and organizing the Conference, presided throughout, and Mr. Boardman and various other ministers were present. We were told at the outset by the president, how this Conference grew out of a letter written by him to THE CHRISTIAN, and how the way had been marvellously opened and made plain by the good hand and guidance of God. Mr. Allen said he had simply followed where the Lord had manifestly led, and every difficulty had been removed.

The Rev. Mr. Mountain followed the chairman with a cheerful and hopeful address. He spoke of how he had been led to attend the Conference at Euston-road, full of grief and care, and some prejudice. Twenty attendances convinced him that there had been much alloy in his previous service for Christ, and that what he needed was an entire giving-up of himself. This he was enabled to do; and since then he had preached more earnestly, studied more deeply, and loved the Saviour more tenderly. The Bible was now flooded with light to him; and although he had learned no new doctrine, he had realized the grand old truths more fully.

Others followed in the same strain, whose names we did not learn. Before the interval for refreshments, an American visitor—who had come to this country to attend this and similar conferences—hoped that before the close of the evening, some one would state clearly what the object of the Conference was, in order that people might explain it to their friends, and induce them to attend. This suggestion had the effect of producing a most excellent and valuable address by Rev. W. E. Boardman, at a later stage of the meeting.

A young clergyman, in the audience, said he could understand what was meant by a complete surrender; but he was not so clear about what it was to be "dead to sin."

This elicited a further reply from Mr. Boardman, who, in the course of his remarks, gave the following very happy illustration:—A little girl, who had a very violent temper, fell into the hands of a wise teacher, who had learnt the secret of victory over sin. The teacher told the child that she could never cure her temper herself, but that the Lord Jesus could do it for her if she would trust Him. The girl replied she could not believe that. God had given her judgment and reason, and she would govern herself. She tried it, and, like everybody else, failed. In her despair, in one of the bursts of temper, she ran to her teacher, and said, "It is coming; can you help me?" "Look to Jesus." She did look, and the fire was quenched at once. She soon learned that that was the way of death to her besetting sins. By-and-by, the teacher asked her how it was she did it. She opened the book in her hand, and marked a circle on the upper right-hand corner, and said, "That is Satan." She then drew a circle on the lower side of the book, "That is me;" another circle on the left-hand corner—"That is Jesus." "When Satan comes to me," she said, "I fly to Jesus; so that when he comes, I am gone. When Satan came to me, I used to begin to fight him, and when Jesus spoke to me, I could not hear His voice." That is the secret of it, said Mr. Boardman, and his interrogator replied that he now understood it.

After a few timely words from Rev. Mr. Smith, we discovered that 1874 was well-nigh gone, and the chairman improved the occasion by a tender and earnest appeal to all to be ready for the coming of the Bridegroom. Then the whole meeting bent their knees, and raised their hearts in silent supplication to God, and as the old year went to its account it carried with it many an earnest petition for a blessing on its successor. Presently the low notes of the harmonium broke the stillness, and all joined, still kneeling, in a song of consecration,

"My body, soul, and spirit,
Jesus, I give to Thee;
A consecrated offering,
Thine evermore to be."

Lord Radstock read an appropriate passage of Scripture, and the Doxology closed the long service.

The watch-services throughout the city and its suburbs have been of a more than usually solemn character. The overshadowing of recent calamities, and the glimmer of the light of joyful and Scriptural anticipations of "good things to come," have by their united action produced a subdued, dependent, and yet trustful spirit in God's people, which we hail as the promise of a happy and blessed New Year. UNION IN PRAYER.

Dear Brother,—In the hearts of many hundreds of Christians a blessed soul-thirst has been put, such as is described in Psa. xlii. 1, 2. We are singing with deep meaning—

"My all is on the altar;
I'm WAITING for the fire;"

and, fully persuaded that the Lord will not disappoint us, we are expecting a fulfilment in our own souls of Mal. iii. 1—3.

From Acts ii., etc., as well as from the experience of many beloved brethren and sisters now living, we find the usual way in which the Lord manifests Himself to such consecrated and expectant souls is, when met together with one accord and in one place. Witness the mighty outpouring given at the conference in Canada, as described in the December number of The Christian's Pathway of Power. Note also the wonderful blessing vouchsafed at Oxford last autumn.

I suggest that arrangements be made for a series of meetings at Cambridge, after the Mildmay meetings of 1875, when the long vacation will have commenced, and apartments will be available. Cambridge is also very accessible.

Begging space for this in an early issue, I remain, faithfully yours, ROBERT ADCOCK.

THE FRENCH POOR IN SOHO.

The wants around me are the same as before, and perhaps they are greater; for that such agents as want of work, failures, advance in years, and disease, are ever busy among men, and that for many they bring poverty in their train. I would therefore feel exceedingly grateful to the benevolent for aiding me, my missionary, and my Bible-woman, to give to our poor, not only that which is good for their soul, but also the first necessities of life. One shilling cannot possibly be minded from many a purse. If two or three thousand of your readers would kindly send me that shilling each, they would add to their present joys the satisfaction of knowing that even the foreigner among them has not been forgotten by them.

"COME AND SEE."

(JOHN I. 35.)

A NEW YEAR'S MUSING.

AH, Master, patient Master! I would ponder on the way
Thy gentle hand has led me since the well-remembered day
When first, as "Lamb of God," Thou wast presented to my soul, Whose blood should take away my sin, and freely make me whole.

Yes, hearing, I would follow on to know that heavenly love,
Of which the name of Jesus speaks, fresh flowing from above;
And Thou didst turn (how swift to hear the steps that follow Thee!)

Didst cast Thy sweet, attracting glance to welcome even me!
"What seekest thou?" Ah, Master! well Thou knowest every heart—

Knowest the thrill that voice awakes, the love it must impart;
How kindly to the seeking one Thy heart goes forth to meet!
No smoking flax was ever fanned by breath so soft and sweet.

I do not ask to walk with Thee for just the passing day,
As travellers may chance to meet and part on life's highway;
But tell me this, "Where dwellest Thou?" Oh, grant me this request,

That I may know Thy dwelling-place, and there with Thee find rest!

O gracious voice! O gentle Lord! Thou dost accept my plea,
And, binding love around my heart, dost answer, "Come and see!"

Drawn by that cord so sweet, so strong, that promis'd sight im-
I seek to tread Thy footsteps, or to travel by Thy side.

In that sweet company I thought a pleasant path to find;
No valley dark, no desert drear, no mountain-steep to wind;
But valley, desert, mountain, all, my loving Saviour passed,
Still pointing to His dwelling-place, which we should reach at last.

Once, on a mountain-top, I saw a glory bright and fair,
I thought it was His dwelling, and I fain would linger there;
But through a cloud o'ershadowing, which made the brightness dim,

I heard a voice, "This is my Son, my well-belov'd; hear Him!"

And then, in sweet and solemn tones, He tells me of the cross,
Of love so strong which brought Him here to bear my grief and loss,

Tells how the path to His bright home must pass beneath its
No other leads to that fair land, whose flowers never fade.

Then, when I ask about His home in yonder realms of light,
Of all the joy and glory stored for happy angels bright;
He says, "Not only angels bright, but sinners, such as I, Shall see Him as 'the Lamb,' once 'slain,' upon His throne on high."

And as He calls, I follow on, for well I know His voice,
In tones of love and tenderness He bids my heart rejoice;
His word of sweet encouragement still echoes, "Come and see!"
"For where I am, there also shall My faithful servant be!"

"Come!" With the invitation kind, is guidance, help, and strength,

Provision for the journey, and a "Welcome Home" at length;
"See!" Who can paint the glory comprehended in that word,
"See" Home, "see" Heaven, "see" Jesus, "see" my Master and my Lord!

Yes! Jesus is preparing, in His Father's mansions blest,
A place for all His loving ones who, serving, yet shall rest,
There, all His ransom'd family, within "a little while,"
Shall gather in their Father's house, and share a Father's smile!

FACTS BETTER THAN ARGUMENT.

When a man feels the power of the Holy Spirit, or the power of the inner life, he does not care to argue; he has a homespun philosophy of facts which answers his purpose better. Though others may round upon him and say, "You are not learned," he feels that it does not need learning to prove that which is a matter of personal consciousness, any more than we need proof that sugar is sweet when we have a piece in our mouths. Do you doubt the gospel? Try it. The men who speak against the Bible as a rule have never read it; those who rail against Christ do not know Him; and those who deny the efficacy of prayer have never prayed. Nothing is more convincing than fact. Get out of the realm of word-spinning and wind-bag-filling into practical Christian life, proving personally that these things are so, and you will soon be convinced by the blessed witness of the Spirit, the water, and the blood.—Spurgeon, "The Three Witnesses" (No. 1187).

THE GLAD NEWS TO EVERY HOME.

In regard to the plan for visiting the homes of Manchester which has been carried on during the fruitful labours there of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, letters have come in from Scotland and other places, and I would venture to suggest that the Scotch towns to which our American friends have already been, might all accomplish a similar house-to-house visiting.

Your readers will be glad to hear that it is probable both Birmingham and Liverpool (the next towns our friends go to) are likely to be doing as Manchester did.

On Monday, 11th inst., we expect to meet in conference the visitors of Manchester; and this conference may be attended also by deputations from other towns, to which it may be desired to extend the plan.

The heartiness with which the visitors in Manchester went to work during Mr. Moody's visit was most striking, and the result of their labours we shall know more of at the proposed conference.

May we venture, then, to ask special prayer for the towns named, and that right couples of Christian men and women may be found willing to go forth throughout the land, and that their labours may be greatly blessed. It needs good men full of the Holy Ghost and of faith.

The hymn and tract prepared by our American brethren can be had at 6s. a thousand of the Y. M. C. A. 57, Piccadilly, Manchester in large quantities, but where used it should be only as an introduction.

AMONGST THE FRIENDS.

The Rev. W. E. and Mrs. Boardman attended last week the two meetings of the Society of Friends, held on Sunday, at Stoke Newington, and delivered impressive and interesting addresses, which were very favourably received. Mr. Boardman dwelt upon the importance of every believer yielding up everything belonging to him to the disposal and service of the Lord, including his family, his property, his time, his talents, and his energies. Mrs. Boardman dwelt clearly and forcibly upon the nature of sin. She said that at one period she was dangerously ill and likely to die; but the prospect did not dismay her; on the contrary, she derived comfort and assuring hope, from a feeling of her moral life hitherto, her freedom, as she thought, from any particular sin. Unexpectedly she recovered from her illness, and subsequently was brought to see that although her life had been moral and respectable, yet it was impressed upon her that a comparative indifference to Christ's precious blood, and an absence of deep, lively gratitude to the Saviour, did in itself constitute a sin of the very worst description, however secret from the knowledge of men. In fact, such a sin is that spoken of, in awful terms, by the apostle as practically "counting the blood of the covenant an unholy thing."

The address was followed by a remarkable amount of religious utterance by the Friends. Sixteen exhortations and prayers were spoken altogether at this Sunday morning meeting, and a number more in the evening. It was a very unusual circumstance that some half dozen very young Friends on this occasion publicly acknowledged their religious impressions and their consecration to Christ.

PROTESTANT SCHOOLS, PARIS.—The Rev. Horace Noel requests us to draw attention to a Protestant girls' school at Paris, under the superintendence of Mons. Auguste Fisch. Established some three years ago in connection with a missionary work among the Roman Catholic population of Les Batignolles, a district of Paris not far from the terminus of the Rouen and Havre Railway, it is now, owing to a change of locality and consequent expenses, heavily burdening M. Fisch. Being in the immediate neighbourhood of Mr. M'All's last-opened station, where the attendances of men is more than usually numerous, it is specially desirable that there should be evangelical schools for the little ones.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HANDBOOK OF REVIVALS; for the use of Winners of Souls. By HENRY C. FISE, D.D. Passmore and Alabaster.—The publication of this book is a sign of these times of blessing. It treats of the History of Revivals; Objections to them; Indications of them; How Hindered and How Promoted; Singing; Personal effort; Treatment of Inquirers, and Training of Converts, etc., etc. We have not had time to do more than glance through it; but that is sufficient to justify us in saying to our readers, Read it yourselves, and pray God that it may help you to be a wise winner of souls.

THE SPIRIT OF LIFE; or, Scripture Testimony to the Divine Person and Work of the Holy Ghost. By E. H. BICKERSTETH, M.A. Religious Tract Society.—A valuable text-book on the very important subject of the personality, work, and attributes of the Holy Ghost. The subject is treated of in eight chapters, and the entire testimony of Scripture laid before the reader, from the remarkable words, "The Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters," to the last Apocalyptic vision granted to the beloved disciple.

THE RENT VEIL. By DR. HORATIUS BONAR. Nisbet.—Passing over the preface, which is controversial, and which we regret—we hail with thankfulness the twelve chapters of which this book consists. They are expository of the most prominent passages of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and are most valuable as showing the full provision Divinely made for a sinner's peace and a saint's walk with God. Apparently the book has been the result of a desire to combat the claim to sinlessness, which some are supposed (we think erroneously) to make. Nevertheless, we are thankful for its teaching, and pray that it may be made profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.

THE SAINT'S TRAVEL TO THE LAND OF CANAAN. By R. WILKINSON. Trübner.—A new edition of an old book, in which the author discovers to his readers "seventeen false rests short of the spiritual coming of Christ in the saints, together with a brief discovery of what the coming of Christ in the Spirit is." The "seventeen" might have been seventy; for every rest short of God in Christ is a false and insufficient rest. It is a very searching book, and to those who are living a merely external life, and, indeed, to all professing Christians, it presents many profitable considerations for self-examination whether we be in the faith. But it is as much too exclusively subjective, as a great deal of modern teaching has been too exclusively objective. Prophetic Scripture is uniformly "spiritualized," and consequently that which is future is described as present. The following is from the last page:—"What the saint now comes to enjoy is an everlasting dispensation of God in him, which cannot wax old or decay, so that he is made to live unchangeably therein." This describes a condition in which one could hardly say, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." Nevertheless, the book is well worth reading, and therefore we recommend its perusal, while we do not endorse all its contents. The Editor seems to be unlike Barnabas, who saw, doubtless through much failure and ignorance, the grace of God among the converts at Antioch; for he can see nothing in the movement Godward which is now making so many hearts glad, but "advanced forms under which religious Adam puts forth his hand, and appropriates what seems good and pleasant to the eyes," "numberless inventions," and "sentimental fleshly excitements."

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—A large number of this somewhat neglected, and sometimes forgotten, class of our London population, were entertained to a friendly meal, a few evenings since, at Craven Chapel School, at the expense of Mr. George Moore and Mrs. Moore. The gathering was a deeply interesting one, though, unfortunately, the kind entertainers were unable to be present. After a substantial supper, the chairman, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, read a letter from Mrs. Moore, referring to the work of relief carried on in Paris during the siege; and a Quaker lady, Christine Allsop, gave an interesting narrative of her experiences in connection with the same Mission. Addresses suitable to the company were afterwards given by Professor Leone Levi and Rev. Mr. Bryan, and were evidently appreciated. The meeting, we trust, will have helped to ameliorate the condition of many of those sojourners in a strange land.

CAUTION.—We are asked to caution our readers against a begging-letter impostor writing from London under the name of ANNE WYND.

DAILY TEXTS.

“BEHOLD, I MAKE ALL THINGS NEW.”—REV. XXI. 5.

Thurs. Jan. 7.—“If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.” “As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby.”—2 Cor. v. 17; 1 Pet. ii. 2.

Fri. 8.—“I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you.” “Make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die?”—Ezek. xi. 49; xviii. 31.

Sat. 9.—“Thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name.” “A new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.”—Isa. lxii. 2; Rev. ii. 17.

Sun. 10.—“Sing unto the Lord a new song.” “He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God.” “They sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood.”—Psa. xcvi. 1; xl. 8; Rev. v. 9.

Mon. 11.—“Ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him.” “It shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary.”—Col. iii. 9, 10; Ezek. xlvi. 12.

Tues. 12.—“A new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh.” “He is the Mediator of the new testament.” “In that He saith, A new covenant, He hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.”—Heb. x. 20; ix. 15; viii. 13.

Wed. 13.—“A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another.” “Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened.”—John xiii. 34; 1 Cor. v. 7.

“I SAW A NEW HEAVEN AND A NEW EARTH: FOR THE FIRST HEAVEN AND THE FIRST EARTH WERE PASSED AWAY.”—REV. XXI. 1.

WEEKLY PRAYER-MEETING, ST. GEORGE'S HALL.—This meeting continues to be attended with considerable interest, and by goodly numbers of the Lord's people, notwithstanding the severe weather of the past few weeks. Some striking answers to prayer have been vouchsafed in connection therewith. Christians in the West-end will do well to look in every Wednesday at twelve.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For answered prayer in the salvation of souls at Ripponden.

PRAYER.—For a medical man in Linlithgowshire, that he may be constrained to confess Christ before men.—Special prayer is asked for a young man desiring to go as a foreign missionary, that he may be given health and strength for the work, and God's Holy Spirit to guide him.—That God would “strengthen my hands.”—For a young officer, who is in sore domestic trouble and affliction, that wisdom and guidance may be vouchsafed him.—For guidance in New Year's letters to awakened souls.—For sleep, and that eyesight may be preserved and strengthened.—A young clergyman in a large Yorkshire parish asks prayer, that at the outset of his ministry the Lord would use him.—For a Christian young man, about to undergo a strict examination at one of our universities, that he may have physical and mental energy for his work, and that success which will tend to the Divine glory.

PLACES.—On behalf of the West-end Wesleyan Mission House, Sowerby Bridge, during the fortnight's special religious services, commenced on Jan. 3.—The prayers of Christians are earnestly requested that God would bless the efforts of the Church missionaries of the Punjab, to the stirring up of Christians, both European and native, to a higher life, and to greater holiness, and also to the conversion of many Mohammedans, Hindus, and Sikhs, during the time of the Missionary Conference, which will be made a Mission-week, at Umritsar, the Punjab, North India, from January 3 to 10.—For Kingstown, near Dublin, during the week of special services, to be held from January 4 to 10, all denominations joining.—Special prayer is requested for the Mission to be held (D.V.) at St. Margaret's Church, Brighton, January 10 to 20, the Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Mission-preacher.—On behalf of a week (the first week in the New Year) of united prayer alternately at the three Dissenting places of worship in the town of Bishop's Stortford, for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit's influence, and for a revival of pure and undefiled religion in this town.—For Birmingham, that the expected visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey may be greatly blessed to the good of the town.—For a series of meetings to be held in the Free South Church, Elgin, commencing January 10, and that, in connection with special services, the Sabbath-school children may be particularly remembered.—That the ministers and churches of Jamaica may be blessed with a richer baptism of the Holy Spirit.—For God's blessing on five days' special services, to be held in Trowbridge on January 10 and four following days, by Messrs. Opie Rodway, T. D. Marshall, and Somerset Gardner.—For a blessing upon the proposed Mission to be held in Cork, from January 16 to 23, inclusive, and specially on the work among the soldiers of Ballincollig Barracks.—For special services being held this week at Lisbury, by Mr. Opie Rodway.—For Sidmouth, during a week of special services, the first week in February.—For the Mission-services to be held in the Scottish Episcopal churches during the beginning of January.—For two or three weeks' special services at Newcastle-on-Tyne, to be conducted by Ned Wright.

CONVERSIONS.—For a gentleman living only for this world.—For the young men in Barnes, that the Lord would draw their hearts to Himself.—For my father, mother, and five brothers and two sisters, all dead in “trespasses and sin.”—A mother almost paralyzed with anxiety about an only son, who has long wandered in forbidden paths, asks prayer.—For one who has long been seeking Jesus, that she may soon find Him.—For a young man addicted to intemperance, the son of a distinguished scholar.—On behalf of one who wishes the salvation of himself, his wife and family, that God will show them His way.—For a lady, the daughter of a most devoted Christian, now with the Lord. She is entirely given up to the world, and has just recovered from a most dangerous illness, but as gay and careless as ever.—For a much-loved only brother, prayed for for many years.

The Christian.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

THE Week of Special Prayer for 1875 is now over. A report of the London meetings will be found in this number of THE CHRISTIAN. It is not that we are now to have silence, looking up, and waiting to see whether God will answer our requests or no. Men ought always to pray, and not to faint. The special meetings that have been held are to be regarded rather as the kindling up of fires which are to burn throughout the year. The right sequel to the meetings will be a record like this concerning us, "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication," and were "of one heart and of one soul."

Having presented our requests, however, we expect an answer. Our continuing in prayer does not indicate anything inconsistent with such expectation. We have the assurance of an answer, of the best answer, both from our Saviour's own lips, and from the writings of the apostles, whom the Holy Spirit, according to promise, guided into all the truth. The answer must be a large one; for He to whom we pray is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; and his love is equal to his power. Personally I believe that true prayer, the prayer of faith, is always answered, and that in the best way; and that the difficulty is not to make up a book filled with answers to prayer, but to discover a single true prayer that has not been answered, or to which no answer is to be expected. Empty envelopes bring no reply, but the prayer of faith does. Our confidence in the certainty of an answer may be deepened if we afresh consider the reason why the answer comes. The reason is manifold. For example:

"For Christ's sake." So we commonly conclude our prayers. By this expression (which, although not found in the Bible, is in keeping with its teaching) the petitioner renounces all idea of merit or deserving on his own part, and hangs his hope on the merit and acceptance of the Lord Jesus, who is Himself the reason of our being heard, and in whom all fulness dwells. A lower case may help us to understand the higher. There is a certain thing that you need, and have not of your own, and greatly desire to obtain; you know who could give it, but you cannot venture to apply to him for it in your own name. A friend of yours, who is acquainted with your case, says, "Go and use my name;" you do so, and get for the sake of another what you could not have ventured to ask on your own account. So, if we would see the reason why prayer is answered, we must think of that most wonderful thing in revelation—what Jesus is to the eternal Father. The answer is given for his sake; and that is why the answer is so sure, and full, and blessed.

"That the Father may be glorified in the Son." Mark how the reason is found, not in our fervour, or earnestness, or importunity, or perseverance, but quite outside of us. Here is a transaction between the eternal Father and the well-beloved Son. I go in felt unworthiness, and bring my request before the mercy-seat, opening it out, and saying, "Jesus bade me ask this;" and in due time the answer comes, "That the Father may be glorified in the Son."

"The Father himself loveth you." We are his children; He has Himself graciously brought us into this relationship in Jesus. His regard corresponds; he is "our Father who hath loved us." That love of his is reason why He hears us. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more"—who can measure that "HOW MUCH MORE"?—"how much more shall your Father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?"

Once more, "He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit; for He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." All true prayer is inbreathed in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. Man may put right words into the lips of his child or his fellow-man—well-arranged and very beautiful words; but he cannot put the corresponding desire into the heart. It belongs to the office of the Holy Ghost to do that. He is the Spirit of grace and of supplications. He kindles within us desires after those things which it will glorify God to give, and which it will bless us to receive. How He does it we know in part, without being able fully to explain; only we are sure of the fact. Now, it is inconceivable that the Holy Spirit should inspire petitions which are not according to the will of the Father, or that the Father should refuse to grant the petitions which the Spirit inspires. That would be for God to be divided against Himself. We may not know the full meaning and compass of our own desires; they may take the form of broken, ungrammatical words or inarticulate groanings; but "the Searcher of hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit;" and, knowing, will grant to the full those requests which his Spirit has created—one would almost venture to say, "dictated."

Such being our grounds of confidence, what may we not expect at the Lord's hand in answer to the "large petitions" which have been brought before Him at this season? "O my soul, hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance and my God."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—Collectors, subscribers, and donors are particularly requested to kindly send in their contributions without delay to the offices of the above Society, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, as the accounts for 1874 are about to be closed forthwith, all names being required for the forthcoming Annual Report.

THE ORPHANAGE AT NAZARETH.—We are requested to state, with much thankfulness, that the necessary funds for the erection of the Protestant Orphanage at Nazareth have been received, and a large portion of it in small sums from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. All that is now required is the simple furniture, which can be obtained at little cost on the spot.

BIARRITZ.—A correspondent writes:—"I have for some time wondered whether, if the spiritual need of Biarritz were made known in THE CHRISTIAN, some of the Lord's people, able to hold drawing-room meetings, etc., might, be led to pass the winter here. A large number of English and Americans are at present resident here; and though there is an English church, there is little gospel, and no teaching. I think with longing of Lord Radstock's visit to Russia, and pray that the Lord may send a like faithful witness to Biarritz."

CHANNEL FLEET MID-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.—We are truly glad to be informed, by a Portsmouth correspondent, that some eighty officers and seamen belonging to the Channel Fleet, joined by the resident chaplain at either Malta or Lisbon, met on Sunday, December 20, for prayer on shore, and resolved to offer mutual prayer each day from twelve to one. We commend our brave seamen, and their mid-day meeting, to the sympathy and prayers of our readers. Some of them will be, perhaps, praying while aloft, on the "look-out," others down in the hold, and others while walking the deck. How they seem by their very calling to demand the prayers of God's people! "Brethren, pray for us."

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE'S MISSION TO INDIA.

There are just twelve days since Mr. Somerville landed in our midst. During these days his labours have been most abundant, varied, and unwearied. He has addressed twenty-nine or thirty different meetings in Calcutta during these twelve days, besides presiding at a large number of committee business meetings, about as trying to him, and as occupying of time, as his public appearances. And always he has manifested the same zeal, earnestness, and energy in the cause of God and of man. God's glory, and the salvation of man—man the sinner, and Jesus the Saviour—have been put before the Christian public in tones of singular earnestness and power; we believe, to the rousing, refreshing, and vitalizing of many sleepy Christians, and to the conversion, we hope, of not a few who hitherto had only a name to live. Mr. Somerville has also been to us a living sign, witness, and epistle of the great work of mercy which has been going on in Scotland and Ireland, and to some extent in England also.

Previous to Mr. Somerville's arrival, a Committee of Pastors, representing the English and American Episcopal, the Free and Established Scotch, Presbyterian, and the English Wesleyan, Baptist, and Independent churches of Calcutta, arranged for a Conference on Christian life and work, for the mornings of Monday, Nov. 30, and two following days, to be held in Union Chapel (Congregational); and an evangelistic meeting, to be conducted by Mr. Somerville on the evening of each of these days, in the Free Church, as most central, and in every way most convenient.

Mr. Somerville arrived on the first of these days, and was thus just able to be present at the first of these meetings. Rev. Mr. Ross, of Union Chapel, presided as convener of the Pastors' Committee; and Rev. Mr. Richards, Wesleyan minister, as senior minister and missionary, in a few happy words introduced Mr. Somerville to the meeting, and at the same time gave him a very cordial welcome in the name of the pastors and Christian public of Calcutta. Mr. Somerville then ascended the pulpit, thanked God for the cordial welcome and warm sympathy which he had received, explained the nature and objects of his mission, and gave a glowing address to the sympathizing multitude before him. Every evening throughout the week the Free Church was full—sometimes to overflowing—in a way which it had never been before, save at the June meetings this year.

At the same time a mid-day prayer-meeting was commenced in St. Andrew's Church (Established), in the business quarter of the city. Here the meetings were not so large; and it was found that the church was too large, and otherwise unsuitable. So at the beginning of this week, the mid-day prayer-meeting was transferred to a large room belonging to the Old Mission Church (Episcopal), in the neighbourhood of St. Andrew's Church. In this room the mid-day prayer-meeting is likely to be continued for some time, as it seems to be growing in numbers, earnestness, and power; and the evangelistic service was transferred from the Free Church to St. Andrew's, but not with any advantage. Next week, we are to try a monstrous tent, which is being erected on the Maidan, or park, as likely to prove more suitable than any of the churches that are accessible to us.

Besides these daily meetings, there have been more special meetings in a third quarter of the town, in Union Chapel, from eight to nine in the morning for inquirers—some for men only—and also Bible meetings. I have not been able to be present at these, but I have been told by those who were that the Bible meetings have been very refreshing to Christians, and the meetings for inquirers encouraging to Mr. Somerville.

On Sabbath morning, between eight and nine, he had a meeting for young men in the Free Church; and though the meeting had been first advertised for the Dalhousie Institute, which was afterwards found to be unsafe, yet was it, even as regarded attendance, very encouraging, considering the difficulties that exist in Calcutta in the way of such a meeting. The heartiness with which the hymns were sung, the rapt attention with which all listened, and the cordiality with which they responded to Mr. Somerville's offer to meet them again on Thursday evening, were very promising of future success. On Thursday evening the meeting was still larger, numbering between 220 and 250 men, and, if possible, heartier in wishing to meet Mr. Somerville on Sabbath morning next.

I think Mr. Somerville's work among the young men of Calcutta is very promising at present, and second in importance only, if indeed second, to his stirring up, strengthening, increasing the spiritual devotedness of the Calcutta Christian ministry and Christian workers. His example, his life, his zeal, earnestness, and unremitting labours of love in the Master's cause, must tell very powerfully for good on his Christian brethren in the ministry, and on other Christian labourers in the Lord's vineyard throughout India. His address to the ministers and missionaries (some thirty in number) of the Calcutta Missionary Conference, on Tuesday last, was exceedingly impressive and instructive. After having spoken with great power for half-an-hour or more, he submitted to be questioned and cross-questioned with regard to the great work going on in Scotland.

There was another field of labour opened for Mr. Somerville, to him altogether novel, and presenting points of special interest of its own. I refer to his work among the English-speaking Bengali population. During the past week some 2200 native young men were being examined for admission into our University, and 500 candidates for the first examination in arts, or the "Little Go," as it is called. A large number of these were assembled in the Senate Hall day after day throughout the week. On Thursday, Mr. Somerville looked in, and advertised a meeting for them in their own quarter of the town, in the General Assembly's Institution, for Sabbath evening. Sunday evening soon came round, and Mr. Somerville and 400 Bengali gentlemen, students and ex-students, B.A.'s, M.A.'s, M.D.'s, M.B.'s, and L.B.'s, in large numbers, were met in the large hall of the Institution, and met too in much sympathy with one another, as manifested by the bright, upturned, intelligent-looking faces, fixed in rapt attention, mixed with amazement and awe, on the venerable looks and the snow-white locks of the servant of God before them, and by the bursts of applause that sometimes were given utterance to by the assembled young men. At the close of the address, they responded most heartily to Mr. Somerville's offer to address them again on Sunday evening next.

Oh that God, in his mercy, in answer to many earnest prayers offered up of late here and at home in behalf of Calcutta, would be pleased to pour out his Spirit in rich abundance on this great and important heathen city, the capital of all Asia, and rouse it to a sense of its sin and danger, as Nineveh of old, the great heathen capital of Asia, in his day was roused under the preaching of Jonah, to cry in agony of conviction of sin, "Who can tell but God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?" when to my mind, a "revival" took place more astonishing and extraordinary than any of which we have any record in ancient or modern times! Oh that Mr. Somerville may prove a Jonah to this modern Nineveh of Asia! And in the cases, few in number as yet, which have come before him in the after-meetings (not counted in the thirty to which I made reference above), we hope we have the first drops of a great shower that is to fall on us.

STRETFORD, MANCHESTER.—A correspondent states that a good work is going on in this suburb of Manchester. Two week's special services are being held, commencing with a united Communion service on Monday week. Will the Lord's people pray for Stretford?

THE LORD'S WORK IN MANCHESTER.

FROM REV. T. H. GILL, M.A.,

RECTOR OF WHALLEY RANGE.

I have been requested by the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN to contribute a paper respecting the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Manchester. I comply with the request willingly; the more so, perhaps, because I was one of those who, before the visit of the American evangelists to our city, had my misgivings about the work. With any and every real work I have always endeavoured, to the utmost of my ability, to sympathize and, where possible, to co-operate. And the question with me concerning this particular work was, Is it real? Some declared that it would all prove evanescent; that sudden, spasmodic, and fitful action in the Church is invariably succeeded by languor and deadness. Some decried any irregular work; some denounced all excitement; some rebelled against the idea of two men coming from America to evangelize England. For myself I cared little for any of these things. I felt certain, as I feel now, that—whether the work were regular or irregular, spasmodic or continuous, whether accompanied by some amount of excitement or not, and whether the workers were American or English—if the work were real, in other words, if the men were genuine, and the words of their mouth the truth of God, then that God's blessing would rest on their labours and their work abide.

With these feelings I went to the Free Trade Hall, resolved to "try the spirits whether they were of God." The first meeting did not convince me. I went again, and again, and again. Each time I was more satisfied, and I have now no hesitation in avowing my conviction that the men have been raised up of God to do a marvellous work; and I would just venture, in passing, to say to those who have not yet heard them, Don't form your judgment upon a single hearing. There are special reasons in this case why you should not do so. We are all more or less prejudiced against the men. They are American: this is against them. "Why don't they stay at home? Plenty of work for them there," says one. "Are we so destitute of the means of grace that men must come across the Atlantic to teach us the way of salvation?" says another; and our pride is up. Then Mr. Moody is not what the world calls an "educated" man; his diction is not elegant; his style is thoroughly homely, colloquial, familiar; it is, too, unmistakably American; this is against him. Then his utterance is rapid, and, until you get accustomed to his voice, you lose much that he says if at a distance from him. Then he uses exceedingly plain language; he comes at once to the point, and thrusts home hard and fast. This, with the world, is against him. Yet, notwithstanding all this, there is that in the men, if you but give them a fair hearing, which carries you out of, and over, and above, all these drawbacks, until you are thoroughly delighted with them. As you listen and watch, you cannot resist—even the man of the world has been unable to resist, the conviction that the men are thoroughly in earnest, that they are real. This was testified in a remarkable manner recently, in one of our theatres. Mr. Moody has never spared the theatre; day after day in the most uncompromising terms has he denounced it. Yet when an actor at the "Prince's" ventured to apply to him the epithets of "sham" and "cant," the enraged audience would not rest until they had hissed the man off the stage. Manchester is convinced that the men are real, and in that one word I would find, humanly speaking, the secret of their success. There is no conventionality about them; no artificiality. There is an utter absence of all unreality, no trace of affectation, no assumption, but that which comes of a thorough-going belief in their message and their work, nothing put on. There is neither self-consciousness on the one hand, nor timidity on the other. Their behaviour is that of men who have a work to do, and who are conscious of no reasons whatever—no impediments, whether in themselves, or arising from their audience—why they should not do it.

Yet it would be a mistake to suppose that there are no human elements of attraction in the movement. Mr. Moody has undoubtedly many of the necessary qualifications for an orator. His diction may be rough, his grammar faulty, his manner bad, but his words are full of life; they burn; they bite they go home. His illustrations are abundant and apt. He tells a story admirably. He complies with the requirements of the Ars Poetica, "Si vis me flere," etc.—"If you want me to weep you must first weep yourself." But in so doing he still seems to be genuine; his tones sink, his voice trembles, but you are convinced that it is because he feels what he is narrating. Then he is master of his subject; like Apollos of old, he is "mighty in the Scriptures." He provides, too, a "platform" for the degraded, the self-condemned, the lost, such as they rarely find elsewhere. He extends a warm, strong, loving hand to the poor outcast in a manner that can scarce fail to attract, to beget confidence, and to inspire with hope. And, lastly, you have the attraction which always resides in earnestness. Earnestness even in a questionable cause attracts; much more in a good one. And the sight of men labouring three or four times a day, morning, noon, and night, and week after week—not from the love of greed, but from a love of souls—is almost irresistibly attractive. Mr. Sankey's singing, too, is very enjoyable. Possessed, naturally, of a voice of great power and compass, and having a most distinct enunciation, his singing, if lacking in culture, is yet exceedingly attractive.

But when we have said all that can be said for the human elements of attraction, we feel that they are utterly insufficient to account for the success of the movement. When we have exhausted the whole catalogue of reasons which have been given for the flocking, during the past three or four weeks, of thousands and tens of thousands of all classes to the great halls of our city, we feel that the matter is yet unexplained. Had we been told a short time since that an angel from heaven would draw four or five thousand Manchester folk daily to morning and afternoon religious meetings, and that for weeks together, we should have doubted it. And the only intelligible explanation of the phenomenon we have witnessed is this, that it is God's doing. To this we are shut up, and this I do not hesitate to avow is my own conviction. Messrs. Moody and Sankey are the agents, but the work is God's.

So satisfied was I of this, that I cordially invited the evangelists to my own parish. The parish church was, of course, closed against lay ministrations; but having a large iron church—one of two outposts which we have planted down in rapidly-increasing suburbs—I placed this at their disposal. They accepted my invitation, and held their meeting on Monday, Dec. 28, at four p.m. The church seats 650: we issued 800 tickets. The announcement of their coming had not been made many hours before every ticket was gone; and had there been four times as many, they would all have gone. As it was, the crowd round the door was immense, and we admitted something over 1100 people. The meeting was a delightful one, and, if it had no other effect, it certainly removed every trace of prejudice against our friends from minds that before were prejudiced against them.

One of the most noteworthy features in the movement has been the Sunday morning meeting for workers. Three Sundays running I have made my way into the Free Trade Hall, to this meeting; and I must say it was a sight which I could scarcely realize, to see—on these bitterly cold, dark, foggy mornings: the streets all frozen, and walking almost dangerous—to see the people stealing by twos and threes, and by fours and fives, out of the back streets and courts, making their way to a religious service! And still more strange was the sight, when long before eight, the hour for commencing, one saw that vast hall and its galleries crowded in every part!

The inquiry meetings, too, were not a little remarkable. One pictured them in imagination as scenes of great excitement—crying and shouting—groaning and wailing. On the contrary, in those to which I went, I witnessed nothing whatever of the sort. All was calm and sober. The inquirers, who towards the end of the movement came to the inquiry-room by hundreds, sat each one talking quietly to some Christian minister or lay worker, or kneeling with them in prayer, and then retiring noiselessly, one after another, from the room. One could not resist the conviction that the work here, too, was real, and that the more we had of such meetings the better.

As to the actual results of the work, under God, of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Manchester it is, of course, difficult yet to speak. If we talk of what appear to be the results, we are, perhaps, met with a shrug of the shoulders and the old adage, "Time will tell." Well, we believe time will tell, and tell a tale of much real and lasting good. That in this, as in every other great and religious movement we have ever witnessed, there are camp followers and hang-ons, and curious folk, and folk who like Simon Magus have "neither part nor lot in the matter," hypocrites and professors, as well as self-righteous and self-applauding Pharisees, we do not for a moment deny. But we fully believe the day of judgment will reveal many, many true conversions to God as the result of it. We believe too, that more notably, the Christian people who have attended these meetings will be found to have been stirred up to more earnest, active, zealous work for the Saviour than they have ever yet known. And lastly, it is undeniable that one result of this movement has been to bring together, as they never were brought together before, the various sections of the Christian Church. The clergy of the Established Church, and the ministers of all Protestant denominations, may now be seen working together for Christ, to an extent which, a few weeks since, we should have declared simply impossible. Well may we exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" To Him be all the glory.

FROM A CLERGYMAN.

"Thank God for 1874!" Such was one of the messages read out a few days ago at our noon prayer-meeting, a message in which hundreds, if not thousands, will heartily join. The last four weeks of the past year will be remembered with thankfulness and joy, by large numbers who reside in and near Manchester.

Since its erection, many and large have been the gatherings in our spacious Free Trade Hall, but never have its walls witnessed such immense crowds assemble together three times a day, and for such purposes—for prayer, praise, Bible reading, and to listen to Mr. Moody's powerful and heart-searching exposition of God's Word.

The services have attracted to the hall all classes of the community. I have seen there the wealthy merchant, and not far from him working-men, with dirty hands and faces, come direct from the workshop, lest if they went home to change their attire, they might not, on reaching the hall, be able to obtain a seat, or even standing room.

Those who have attended the services will not soon forget the effect produced by 5000 persons joining in singing the sacred songs, as well as the solemn and sometimes awful silence with which the requests for prayer were read, and the telling anecdotes of Mr. Moody were oftentimes listened to. The scenes which were nightly witnessed in the after or inquiry meetings were most interesting, and frequently very affecting. There sits a merchant, well-known for his liberal gifts of charity, pleading earnestly with a young woman; here is a clergyman giving counsel to a man and his wife, the face of each clearly indicating great anxiety respecting their spiritual welfare; within a few yards of them is Mr. Sankey, with Bible in hand, describing to a group of young men the gospel plan of salvation. In yonder corner are five soldiers listening to the word of life from the lips of a Wesleyan minister, while at the door stands Mr. Moody, speaking a few words of loving counsel to inquirers and Christian workers as they pass in and out of the room. Surely over such scenes the angels have many a time rejoiced.

Many are asking, what are the results? and to this question there are not wanting those who reply, "Oh, it is only a temporary excitement of religious spirit which will not last long—in a few weeks or months it will come to nought." Even if such predictions should be verified—and I firmly believe they will not—I, for one, much prefer the excitement on such subjects, if lasting only for a month, than the indifference and lukewarmness which are too prevalent.

It would be easy to fill the pages of THE CHRISTIAN with details of results, which prove that the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to this city has been a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. A union of Christian workers, both clerical and lay, of various denominations, has been brought about, the like of which has, perhaps, never before been seen in Manchester; pleasant Christian friendships have been formed; believers have been edified; the half-hearted and almost persuaded have decided for Christ; those who before were too shy are now bold to stand up and speak for Jesus; reconciliations have taken place between persons who, from various causes, had been estranged, and very many who, before these meetings, could not, can now say with joyful hearts—

"Oh happy day, that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God!"

"Tis done, the great transaction's done;
I am my Lord's, and He is mine."

Great must have been the joy among the angels over repenting sinners in Manchester. Many are the jewels which have been added to the Redeemer's crown, and many are the names inscribed in the Lamb's Book of Life. No wonder, therefore, that many should say "Thank God for 1874!" W. R.

FROM DR. H. P. ZIEMANN.

One of the most cheering features of the Lord's work in this city is the indication of growing oneness of thought and sympathy amongst Christians.

On Monday (28th ult.) as many as 300 clergy and missionaries met for a conference, and forgetting every party spirit, resolved to stand together in the present revival as workers in the same holy cause, as servants of the same gracious Master. I met Mr. Moody just coming from this conference. "I rejoice like a bridegroom," he said, with one of his happiest smiles, "for to-day there has been a wedding." And so did many more rejoice. This was especially felt at the noon prayer-meeting. The Free Trade Hall was crowded in spite of the most unfavourable weather. There was a wonderful sense of the spirit of joy and praise prevailing. God had put a new song into the mouth of his people, "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

We trust that this union is not a mere sitting together on one platform, or meeting in one conference-room. We had some tokens during the past week that it is the work of the Holy Ghost. The same power which has stirred this city, and led hundreds to the feet of the Saviour, has searched the hearts of God's servants. In many cases there was a humbling before the Lord, a treading upon pride, a breaking up of altars with our own names—not I, but Christ; not my position, but Christ's glory! One could not help noticing from prayers and remarks, and even in private conversations, that such has been the soul's experience of many during the past few weeks. Said a leading minister to me, "I am ready to preach in any room or in any pulpit; I have learnt that I must preach for the salvation of souls and not for my church." Such a spirit must be a mighty impulse for new life and new activity, and will carry a rich blessing wherever it goes. May God grant that this happy spirit to-day pervading the brethren will not cease.

I have not been able to attend the evangelistic meetings during the past week, but I hear that the crowds which besieged the Free Trade Hall for hours to hear the "gospel preached," were something unparalleled in the history of this city; and friends told me that the power which accompanied the word increased from night to night. The result was to be seen in

THE INQUIRERS'-ROOM.

One evening I dropped in at a late hour. What a stirring sense of the reality of spiritual life; what a hallowed season of Zion's travail, birth, and prosperity. I think nearly eighty inquirers were in the room, and outside as many more, anxiously waiting to be admitted; so anxious to "seek the Lord," that neither the intense cold of the night, nor the fear to be seen and be stared at, could move them from their place. One picture in the inquirers'-room has especially impressed itself on my memory. A young husband with his wife—she carrying in her arms a dear little baby—were eagerly and longingly listening to the words of a young lady, whose face spoke clearly that she knew the God of happiness. Happy child! where could it be safer than in its mother's arms on the way to Jesus. I heard afterwards that both man and wife found that evening the Saviour, and surely He will not forget the little lamb! A friend, who has been continually working in the inquirers'-room, told me another touching story; he saw there one evening a sweet little girl, about ten years of age; she seemed to be in great distress; did she wish to be saved? Oh, no; she knew the Lord, and loved Him; but there was her father sitting next to her, and he was still unsaved. "Please speak to him," she said, imploringly, "and I will go on praying." But the child's faith was tried: the father left the room with an unchanged heart.

The blessing has come to my own house. Two of my servants came a fortnight since from one of the meetings, telling us that they had given themselves to the Lord; and I have had, since, no cause to doubt their profession. What was it that had roused them? I asked. Nothing that Mr. Moody said; but while sitting in the meeting they felt deeply impressed that they were not Christians. The thought made them uneasy, burdened; and when, after the address, a lady spoke to them of the love of Jesus Christ, their hearts were just prepared to receive Him who can save to the utmost.

We learn in this movement more and more of what importance it is to speak pointedly with persons, and to lay much stress on conversion and on immediate decision; while on the other hand one would be very careful not to speak of all who professed anxiety, and then spoke of finding peace, as certainly converted to God. We shall have to look for fruits. Still, there has been much to encourage hope, and very much indeed to rejoice in. One thing which struck me in the meetings was the ABSENCE OF THE LOWER CLASSES.

Meeting them daily in my mission dispensary, I found that amongst fifty, hardly ten knew anything about these meetings, or understood what they meant. Perhaps the brethren in Liverpool and London will take this hint, and make arrangements to draw the outcasts in, or to get up some meetings for Mr. Moody right in their midst. This great want here has now, however, been in a measure remedied by the set into operation by our dear friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Our visitors have been exceedingly encouraged in their labours of love; their reports prove how much there is still to be done, and how much real good would be done if Christians would love to go after the outcasts and lost ones; if they would go boldly in the strength of the Lord, and conscious that they bring good news.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.

On Friday morning, Mr. Moody came to Manchester, in accordance with his promise before leaving this city.

The noon prayer-meeting was held in the Free Trade Hall, and, although not so largely attended as it was when Messrs. Moody and Sankey were here before, there was a good deal of interest.

Mr. Beith, who had just returned from Glasgow, gave a most encouraging account of the Lord's work in that city. One of the leading men there (Mr. Miller) had assured him that the blessing in the meetings, instead of diminishing since Messrs. Moody and Sankey left, had actually increased, and the whole tone of society is more or less pervaded by the good impressions resulting from their visit.

Mr. Midwood stated that, as the result of the late meetings in Manchester, all the surrounding country districts had been stirred up to new life and earnestness in divine things. Persons coming in from these outlying districts had come to the Manchester meetings, and been themselves quickened, and then gone to communicate to others the good they had received. Thus the glorious work spreads and multiplies itself again and again! Rev. Mr. Mitchell mentioned that the people of Halifax having failed to get Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey to their town, had asked for a deputation from Manchester to come and give them an account of the Lord's work. In consequence of this invitation, the Rev. Mr. McGregor and he had gone to Halifax, where there was a crowded assembly to hear their account of the Lord's work. Ministers of all denominations were on the platform, and the meeting was quite enthusiastic.

At three o'clock in the afternoon there was another meeting in the Free Trade Hall, at which Mr. Moody gave a very impressive address on "Excuses." The hall was crowded; and, when at the close of his sermon, Mr. Moody asked "who would accept God's invitation to the marriage supper of the Lamb?" the cry came in response from all parts of the building, "I will!" "By God's grace, I will!" It was a most solemn and impressive scene. A large room in the adjoining Museum was soon filled with anxious inquirers, many of whom will doubtless date their spiritual life from this afternoon. At the close of the inquiry meeting, Mr. Moody had a conference of clergy and ministers, to consider what day would be best to hold the meeting for young converts. It was agreed that next Friday week would be the best day, if it can be managed; but that is not yet certain.

The meeting in the evening was announced as exclusively for "those who wish to become Christians," and the admission to be only by ticket.

At the appointed hour the hall was filled to overflowing, and Mr. Moody gave a very solemn address on deciding for Christ. The vast audience listened with breathless interest to the close. The Spirit of God was working mightily, and Mr. Moody invited all who wished to decide for Christ that night to go over to the Museum, where the meeting for inquirers was held. No person was allowed to go in except those who were anxious about their souls. Yet the large room (holding about 400) was crowded, most of those present being evidently in deep concern of mind. After the meeting had been opened with prayer, Mr. Moody announced that, as the number of inquirers was too large to have personal converse with each, he would ask two or three witnesses to stand up and tell these anxious ones how they might find rest.

The first who stood up was the Rev. Mr. McDonnell, who in a few simple words told the story of his own conversion through the text, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." He was followed by Mr. G. Beith, who pointed the inquirers away from self and feelings to the person and work of the Lord Jesus as the true object of faith. Then Rev. Mr. Mitchell related a conversation he had with an inquirer whom he had led up, in spirit, to Mount Calvary, and asked him to look up into the face of the great Sufferer, as He hung between the two thieves, and say to Him—

"O Christ, Thou canst not save me."

The man replied—

"I dare not say that."

"Then," said Mr. Mitchell, "look up into his face and say, 'O Christ, Thou wilt not save me.'"

"No," said the man, "I dare not say that."

"What will you say then?"

The poor man saw the truth at once. He believed that Christ was both able and willing to save him there and then, and went on his way rejoicing.

Mr. Moody then said a few words and asked all those who would accept Christ and trust in Him, to stand up. The greater number stood up, not as a mere matter of form, but evidently realizing what the act expressed. Those who still remained seated were then spoken to individually while the rest retired. It was a wonderful night of ingathering to the kingdom of God. To Him alone be all the glory!

On Saturday there was a large meeting of parents and children at the Free Trade Hall, at which Mr. Moody presided. Short addresses were given by Rev. Mr. Robinson and others.

As the Albert Hall in Sheffield cannot be had on Wednesday next, Mr. Moody has decided to return to Manchester, and hold two meetings there on that day.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

Owing to the difficulty of getting a suitable building, the preoccupation of Christian workers, and many other causes, the work among the young men during the time that Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were in Manchester was very unsatisfactory. For a fortnight a small band of Christian young men struggled bravely on in spite of many discouragements. It seemed almost as if no response was coming to their many prayers, and as if the great blessing which had fallen upon the young men of other towns was to be withheld from them. But God put it into their hearts, even though they were a little heavy sometimes, to labour on and wait. And God was waiting too. A little more patience, a little more faith, a little more lifting up of the eyes to heaven, a little more casting of care upon Him, and was He not sure to come? And now it is our privilege to report, that already we have heard the rushing of the wheels of the chariot. The sword of the Spirit could no longer hang silent in its sheath, and God has at last begun a work amongst the young men of Manchester, which is growing day by day in strength and influence, and which shows every prospect of developing into a great religious movement.

On Sabbath night the work began in earnest. The audience, of course, was exclusively confined to young men, and there was a solemnity about the meeting, and an earnestness about the few inquirers who remained at the close, that inspired all the workers with gratitude and hope. The meeting has been continued from eight to nine every night since, in the Museum—the building purchased a few weeks ago by the Young Men's Christian Association, for £30,000, and which has already been the scene of many a decision for Christ. It is situated just where a young men's meeting ought to be, in the thick of the vice of the city. In a leading thoroughfare in the heart of Manchester; on either side, a theatre; exactly opposite, a circus; with a perpetual stream of young men constantly passing its doors; no better ground could have been chosen in England on which to unfurl the banner of the cross.

Every night about 7.30 a small crowd of young men emerge from this building, each with an armful of handbills of invitation to the meeting. Taking their stand in the adjoining streets and about the theatre doors, they distribute these little tinted notices in thousands to the young men lounging about the streets, and accompanying them generally by a courteous and kindly verbal invitation to "drop into the Young Men's Meeting for a little if they have half-an-hour to spare." The result is, that when eight o'clock comes, there are some hundreds of young men, and most of them literally gathered off the street, awaiting the opening of the meeting.

The conspicuous feature of the meeting itself is its entire want of formality. There is always an interest-iness about it which gives even to the careless the desire to come back again; and at the same time there is a certain element of manliness and earnestness about the speakers which often inclines the scoffer and the sceptic, who are always largely represented in the audience, to think better things of religion. After the short opening services, the chairman generally throws the meeting open, and anyone is invited to occupy five minutes with a few brief and pointed remarks. The bulk of the speaking is generally in the hands of those who have just newly found Christ. The young converts rise one after another, and tell in simple, trembling, burning words, "how it all happened;" how they were living away in the far country, how tired they had got of the husks, and how God, who is rich in mercy, saw them a great way off, and called them to Himself. There is a reality and freshness and power about these personal narratives which those who have never heard them cannot understand. There is no eloquence like the eloquence of sincerity; and if the test of oratory be that it stirs a man to the depths of his being, there is no oratory in the world like those simple stories of the living love of Christ. Some one has beautifully said, that those can best speak of Christ who have last been to the cross; and there is nothing will break down the unregenerate heart more quickly than the broken utterances bubbling up out of the fulness of the young Christian's heart.

It would be obviously unwise to quote individual cases, but the following may be introduced as a sample of the kind of work done at these meetings: On Monday night, immediately on the meeting being thrown open—we had just sung, "Jesus loves even me"—a young man, about four-and-twenty years of age, rose from the centre of the hall, and, without lifting his eyes from the ground, began slowly to speak. Every eye was fixed on him in a moment, and the attention was breathless as the measured sentences escaped reluctantly from his pale lips, as though wrung from him by some unseen power.

"My brothers," he said, "it has been for a long time my earnest desire to love Jesus. I have tried to love Him. I have often tried—again, and again, and again. I have failed. I have always failed. Oh, I cannot do it! One thing hinders me. One terrible curse hangs over everything I do—the curse of strong drink. I am its slave. Oh, young men! will you—will you—will you pray for me—that God—may save—save my soul!" The rest is drowned in a flood of tears. He buries his head in his hands, and falls upon his seat in an agony of despair.

Is there one in that meeting, be he enemy or friend, who is not thrilled through and through by these fearful words? Is there one who does not feel a hatred of drink and sin which he never felt before? And is there one who does not respond from the depths of his soul to the earnest prayer which rises spontaneously from one of that hushed and broken crowd that God will bless that poor prodigal, and snap the fetters which are dragging him down to death? No one who can realize that scene could ask if that prayer was real, if that prayer was heard? Yes, thank God, there is a sequel to the tale. Next night, the chairman observes the haggard, emaciated face once more amongst the audience. The meeting is half done, but the interest is so deep that he cannot refrain from asking the young man, "Has he nothing to say to-night?" There is a pause, and the young man rises once more to his feet. He can almost look you in the face this time, and you almost know before he has uttered a syllable that it is well with him; and as your heart beats out its silent gratitude to God, he tells with kindling eye that the Master Himself has met him, and spoken peace to his weary soul.

His story is briefly told. He has lived a lifetime in these past few hours. The night, he says, was the most dreadful he hoped he should ever know on earth. Hour after hour he tossed about, his pillow wet with remorseful tears, wrestling with God in despairing prayer. At last he can bear it no longer. He rises, heartbroken, wakens his young wife, and beseeches her to join him in calling upon God to help. Together they kneel in prayer. He who slumbereth not is near them, and just at the blackest moment of that night, the Sun of Righteousness bursts into the sin-stained soul, and the prayer is changed in a moment into praise, that "the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth."

It may readily be imagined that such a case as this could not fail to have produced a profound impression upon any young man present. And a course of meetings with testimonies similar to this occurring almost nightly, would only require time to become a powerful means of blessing in a community of young men. We believe that there is a great future for this young men's meeting in Manchester. The work, it is true, has only begun. There has been nothing there yet anything like the great work among the young men in Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, and other cities; but the Manchester work has about it all the elements of success, and though these be not yet fully developed, there will yet doubtless be a great harvest of souls.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe desires us to say that the Conference of house-to-house visitors at Manchester has been unavoidably postponed from the 11th to the 18th. The Lord is wonderfully blessing this work. Many cases have come to light of good received as the result of the personal house-to-house visitation.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN SHEFFIELD.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.

Our hearts are filled with praise and thanksgiving to God for the marvellous display of his grace which we have seen in Sheffield this first week of the new year. When the large assembly was bowed in prayer in the Albert Hall, during the closing moments of the old year, a united cry went up to God, from many hearts, that, as 1874 had been a year of rich and exceptional blessing, the year 1875 should see a still more wonderful display of the mighty power of God in the salvation of souls.

Already we see the beginning of the answer to that prayer in the meetings which have been held this week. Day after day the hall has been thronged with eager crowds of listeners, while hundreds have been unable to gain admission. There is most wonderful and blessed unity amongst the various sections of the Church of Christ represented on the platform. It seems to be the desire of each of the dear servants of God, that Christ alone may be exalted, and his name be glorified in the salvation of souls. This oneness of heart and purpose is the real secret of the power which is seen in the meetings. It is this that gives such unction in the noon prayer-meeting, and such point and effect to the word preached and sung by our beloved brethren.

A telegram arrived from Liverpool during the hour of meeting on Monday, asking prayer on behalf of the friends of the three men (two of them mere boys), who were executed in Liverpool that morning for murder. Drink was the cause of it all. And also prayer for the one young man who has been respited.

At the afternoon meeting on Tuesday, Mr. Moody said his heart had been very sore the last twenty-four hours, since he had received that telegram, yesterday morning, about the fathers and mothers of the three young men who had been executed in Liverpool. Feeling thus, he devoted this hour to a most impressive address to parents on their duties towards their children, urging on all to see that they brought their children to the Lord in the days of their youth.

At the noon-day meeting on Wednesday, Mr. Moody again dwelt on the subject of Prayer; as this is the week of special prayer, he is dealing with this important subject in all its aspects. To-day he was largely insisting upon our asking great things, as long as it was for spiritual blessings for ourselves and others; but he warned us to be careful in asking temporal things. From the examples of Moses, Elijah, and Paul, he showed that men who were mighty with God in prayer, when they came to God for personal blessings, failed. Moses asked to get into the promised land, he failed to get an answer; Paul asked to get his thorn removed, but God did not hear him. They got something better than they asked—grace; and thus it is, we must be willing to take for ourselves whatever God sees best to give us. And let us all come boldly to the throne of grace, seeking mercy and grace, and God will hear this prayer and answer it. "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

As in the towns he has previously visited, Mr. Moody is determined to get at the young men.

Since Sunday the interest and results of the meetings have increased every day! There have been three meetings daily in the Albert Hall; the noon prayer-meeting, Bible-reading at three, and preaching at 7.30. Besides this there have been meetings for inquirers at the close of the afternoon and night meetings; and on Wednesday night there was a meeting for men only at nine o'clock. The public meeting closed that evening at about 8.30, and then, when the inquirers had removed to the lower room, and the hall had been cleared, the doors were again opened, and an immense crowd of men which had been gathering in the street rushed in en masse and filled every corner of the large building in a few minutes. It was a very remarkable meeting. The word was in great power, and in concluding his address Mr. Moody gave some most interesting details of the work amongst young men that is at present going on in Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, and other places, and invited all who wished the meetings for men to be continued nightly, to stand up. The greater part of the audience stood up at once, and it was arranged that a young men's meeting should be held every night in the Temperance Hall. On Thursday Mr. Drummond came over from Manchester to take charge of these men's meetings, and at the appointed hour the Temperance Hall was crowded, and there were many inquiring the way of life at the close of the meeting.

On the morning of the same day, Mr. Moody, referring to Isa. xii., "Declare ye his doings among the people," gave some further details of the wonderful work in other places amongst young men; yet, he said, in none of these towns had there been such a meeting, at the outset, as there had been in Sheffield that night. The Lord is working and working mightily in this town, and woe be to those who let such a day of grace go by; to them will be addressed the solemn words, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and ye are not saved."

The meeting in the Albert Hall, on the same evening, was one of the most remarkable I have ever been present at. The subject was the latter part of Luke xvi., and there was a solemn awe over the large assembly crowded into the building which was almost painful at times. The speaker was himself deeply affected, and near the close of the address persons were sobbing in uncontrollable emotion all over the hall.

When the meeting was over, the inquirers flocked down into the lower hall by scores, to be spoken with personally. It was indeed a most memorable night, and will not easily be forgotten by those who were there.

As Mr. Moody had to be in Manchester on Friday, it was arranged that the noon prayer-meeting would be conducted on that day by the Rev. Rowley Hill (the Vicar of Sheffield), who takes a deep interest in the present movement; and several ministers were appointed to conduct the evangelistic meeting at night. Mr. Sankey agreed to remain in Sheffield, so as to keep up the interest at the meetings.

FROM THE "TIMES" AND "DAILY NEWS."

The Times of Monday says:—"The services held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Sheffield, yesterday, were more largely attended than on any previous day. Albert Hall was crowded in the morning long before the commencement of the service, and hundreds were turned away from the doors. It had been arranged to hold in the afternoon a special service for women, and the multitude assembled was greater than in the morning. Every available space in the saloon, the orchestra, and the galleries, was occupied. There was an immense crowd of women outside, who despaired of ever being able to hear the men whose reputation had probably drawn hundreds of them to the doors day after day. The disappointment was, however, reserved for those who succeeded in gaining admittance; for, when Messrs. Moody and Sankey ascended the platform, the former announced that he purposed holding a meeting in the parish churchyard, considering that so many found it impossible to find places in the hall. Mr. Moody proceeded to the churchyard, where he and the vicar held an open-air service."

The Daily News gives substantially the same report, and adds:—"The Albert Hall was crowded in the evening, as the special service for men commenced an hour before the appointed time, in consequence of the building being filled then. We learn from another correspondent that, shortly after six o'clock, Mary Ann Burlinson, a respectable shopkeeper, aged fifty-five, residing in Pearl-street, Sheffield, left home for the purpose of attending the services at the Albert Hall. When she arrived there was such an enormous crowd, and so much excitement, that she could not gain admission, and had to go away. She had not gone far before she fell in the street, and was dead before she reached a neighbouring surgery. The cause is supposed to be disease of the heart."

Sunday was one of the most glorious days for the work of God ever seen in this town. The day commenced with a crowded and enthusiastic meeting of Christian workers in the Albert Hall. At eleven there was a special service for those who are not in the habit of attending any place of worship. Admission by ticket. It was evident that the greatest part of the audience consisted of the class whom it was desired to reach. In order to reach as large a number of persons as possible, a meeting for women was announced at three o'clock, and a meeting for men at 7.30, but the Hall was crowded to excess long before three o'clock, and the streets outside were thronged with thousands who were unable to obtain admission. Mr. Moody announced that he would preach in the parish churchyard, which is only a few minutes' walk from the Albert Hall, and in the very centre of the town. Very soon there was an immense crowd of probably not less than 10,000 persons gathered round the large raised tombstone, which served Mr. Moody for a pulpit; Mr. Sankey remained in the Albert Hall, which was quite full; so that altogether they had the largest number of persons as yet reached by them in this country at any one time. It was most impressive to see that very vast crowd of human beings listening with breathless interest, as the speaker pressed one appeal after another home to his hearers, using the solemn associations by which they were surrounded, with telling effect.

The men's meeting commenced an hour before the time announced, as the hall was crowded to excess at that time. The thousands outside the hall who could not get admission were gathered into groups, and addressed by several ministers in the open air, and Mr. Henry Drummond conducted another meeting in the Temperance Hall. The day will, we believe, be remembered by hundreds, as the day of their new birth into the kingdom of God.

A meeting had been announced at eleven o'clock, for those who do not attend a place of worship. Tickets had been issued, and means taken to secure that these tickets should find their way into the hands of those for whom the meeting was intended. The result has been eminently encouraging. The hall was densely packed, and the vast majority were evidently of a class little accustomed to the sound of the gospel. This meeting had been made a matter of special prayer, and the Lord answered. The Holy Spirit was very manifestly present. Mr. Moody's subject was just the "Gospel" in all its glorious fulness and freeness. He sought first to remove the false impressions so many had of this gospel, as a sad, dreary thing; showed what it was in truth—glad tidings. What it could do for all—set them free—free from death, free from sin—and concluded by a most solemn appeal to all, no matter how lost, how fallen, how sinburdened, to accept, and be set at liberty. The effect of this address was most astonishing; everywhere could be seen strong, rough men bent in sorrow, tears streaming from eyes that had evidently been long strangers to such feelings. The inquiry-room was crowded with men and women, all with the one question—What must I do?

THE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

Many places of worship besides the hall where the noon-meeting is held, have been open during the Week of Prayer. Brethren of all denominations have taken part in the services held in the churches of the Established Church of Scotland. The Scottish Episcopalians began a Mission week on the 10th inst. Earnest missionaries of all shades of opinion are to address these meetings. Father Benson and Father Maturin, of the Evangelist Fathers of Oxford, otherwise called the Cowley Brothers, are to conduct the Mission services of All Saints, where there will be communion at 6, 7, 7.45, and 8.30 a.m. every day, and, also daily, a lecture on "The religious difficulties of the day," with other services.

The mothers' meeting was most interesting. A mother who led it, dwelt on "The Touch of Jesus," as being the point where the healing power meets the unhealed sore and works the cure. Not in our prayer must we rest, not in our hopes and expectations, but in the touch of Jesus. The healing of Jairus's daughter was the subject: the woman whom the many physicians could not heal, "touched Jesus," and health came. Jesus took the little maid's hand, and life returned. The Rev. Mr. Morgan, of Viewforth, in the noon-meeting, said lately, "The unresting, unhurrying Christ," does not come before the right moment. Another mother begged prayer for a young married lady, not likely to recover. Another told of one of our number who had passed away joyfully into the presence of the King last week. Another asked prayer for a lady and gentleman at Edinburgh, who had just lost all their children, of three, five, and seven.

It was proposed by a lady who had just returned from England, that we should follow a plan which she had heard of in Liverpool. Before next meeting she is to prepare a large sheet, on which requests, coming with this note, "To be continued till further notice," shall be inscribed. The sheet will lie on the table at each meeting, and be presented in faith whether there be time to read over its contents or not. "A joyful work it will be," she said, "to erase name after name as the notices of answered prayer come in." A believing relative sent a request for a little orphan. She had lately watched the burning-out of the taper of its young mother's life: she had read through the dark winter's night, in her ear, the promises of Jesus. The novel she had been reading lay open in the drawing-room; the pack of cards lay scattered on the card table; the only child slept in her cot. In the death chamber the ear carried the words of promise to the mind, but the heart well-locked gave no reply. Bitter self-accusation ended in "Down to hell: down to hell!" There was no later word. These particulars were not of course given at the meeting, nor can any have any clue to them. They came from the well-known hand of the believer who sent the request; none overheard that interview. Young mother, who are putting Jesus far from you, you little know what may lie between night and morning. These chill winds of last Christmas do not always blow, but the unwelcome messenger may come to you as surely on the zephyr of the midsummer morning.

MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

The large building for these approaching meetings is being proceeded with, and will be ready by the 1st of February. It will hold 8000 or more.

Many prayer-meetings have been held to ask the Lord's blessing on the efforts about to be made.

The "union meetings" for prayer and praise, have this year been largely attended, and much prayer offered for an outpouring of the Holy Ghost.

Meetings for united prayer are held every Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock, in the College Hall, Shaw-street, and the Liverpool Institute, Mount-street; and at seven o'clock, on the same evenings, and at the same places, there are meetings for the practice of sacred song, preparatory to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit.

The following circular has been issued with respect to the approaching visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Liverpool:—

"Dear Sir,—It has now been arranged that the American evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, will visit Liverpool for the purpose of evangelizing, in the month of February next, remaining the whole of that month.

"At a conference held on the 5th inst., attended by about a hundred gentlemen, including a large proportion of clergymen and ministers who had joined in inviting them to come to Liverpool, the necessary arrangements for the proposed visit were fully considered. Mr. Moody was present also, and gave the benefit of his great experience to the meeting.

"After full deliberation, and in view of all the circumstances of the case, it was unanimously resolved to proceed with the erection of a large wooden structure capable of holding about 8000 persons. This course was deemed necessary in consequence of the large numbers who have come together in other places, and it is not unreasonable to anticipate a similar interest will be felt here.

"The plan and specifications have been carefully revised and approved by the architects, Mr. T. D. Barry and Mr. W. Parlow; and the contract has been made with Messrs. Haigh & Co., to erect and remove the building after two months' use for the sum of £23390. The site is in Victoria-street, immediately behind the Municipal Offices, and is held on a nominal rent from Her Majesty's Board of Works.

"It is intended to hold meetings in this Central Hall for preaching the gospel every evening in the week, and on Sundays at such hours as will not interfere with the morning and evening services of divine worship in the town. We hope and confidently expect that a great blessing will attend this effort, but we would point out that such will only be in answer to the earnest and united supplications of God's people.

"It is obvious that a large expenditure must be incurred beyond the cost of the building. The Committee consider that in order to cover all at least £4500 should be provided, and they suggest that subscribers might arrange to pay one-half on or before the 8th January next, and the remainder at a later date, as required.

"It is hoped that no general solicitation will be necessary for this object, but that all who desire to have a part in so important a work will heartily, and, it may be added, promptly send their contributions to any of the undersigned; or to any of the banks named below. Clergymen and ministers of Christ, who are interested, may have opportunities of placing the matter before their people, and they are respectfully requested, in such manner as they deem best, to call forth their free-will offerings.—We are,

LONDON CONFERENCE ON HOLINESS.—The meetings of this Conference continue to be held in the Agricultural Hall every evening, and so far, they have been seasons of power and blessing. The attendance has been steadily increasing. Christians of all denominations would do well to avail themselves of the privilege and profit of attending the meetings.

TO OUR READERS.

The lengthy and deeply-interesting reports which we publish this week respecting the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Sheffield, and its results at Manchester, oblige us to defer to our next several of the addresses delivered during the Week of Prayer. But as we should not be able to provide for them in our ordinary issue, our next Week's Number will contain the same quantity of matter as the present, at our usual price, one penny.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

MEETINGS AT WILLIS'S ROOMS.

MONDAY.

On Monday morning the opening meeting of the series for the West-end of London was held at the above rooms; and the hymn commencing—

"Heavenly Father, to whose eye Future things unfolded lie," having been sung, a few moments were devoted to silent prayer, after which the Chairman, the Rev. JOHN RICHARDSON, led the supplications of the meeting that the blessing of God might rest upon the united and universal Week of Prayer upon which they were just entering. As illustrating the authority they had for the step they were taking, he read Luke xi., from verse 5 to the end.

The following subjects for prayer were then read:—
"THANKSGIVING AND CONFESSION. Review of the past; prayer for grace to express gratitude, not only with the lip but in the life; humiliation for personal and national sins; prayer for the riches of mercy; and power to overcome temptation."

Mr. Matheson and Rev. S. Shoolbridge then offered prayer.

Rev. JOHN RICHARDSON remarked that he thought the key-note of the meeting had been struck in the word, "Thanksgiving." What a blessed thing it is to have the spirit of praise and thanksgiving! How happy we should be in acknowledging God's great grace and mercy! There are many things for which we should specially thank God in the present. In looking back at the origin of these meetings, when a few missionaries in a far-off country suggested that there should be, early in every year, a week of united supplication upon the part of the whole Church of God in all climes, and noting the small beginning, albeit the conception was grand, and then to perceive how gradually the meetings grew to be more numerous all the world over, I think we have special cause to thank God, and to feel how abundantly He exceeds above all we can ask for or can think of. In our thanksgiving it is not mere lip but life service we should display. Let our object this morning be to stir up a more consecrated life, more personal effort in the Christian Church. Christian people have been sorely wanting in times past in their individuality, in individual action. The body of Christ has not put forth its full powers, because all the individual members have not been in healthy action. If we can only raise ourselves to this higher life, we shall have abundant cause to thank God for the fulness of his grace to us and to his people.

Admiral Fishbourne and the Rev. F. E. Andrews then followed in prayer.

Another hymn, followed by another prayer by Rev. Mr. Boinville, after which the meeting closed by the singing of "Arm of the Lord, awake! awake!"

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday, the Rev. DONALD FRASER presided, opening the meeting by the singing of a hymn, and after the customary interval of a few moments for silent prayer, led the supplications of those assembled to the throne.

Psalms ii. and xcvi. were then read in connection with the topics of the day, "NATIONAL OBJECTS FOR PRAYER— for kings and all in authority; for soldiers and sailors; for the rich and the poor; for prisoners and captives; for the afflicted and bereaved; for the persecuted and oppressed."

The Rev. Mr. Sugden and Rev. R. Johnson then offered prayer, and after another hymn had been sung.

The Rev. DONALD FRASER, in reference to the special objects for prayer that morning, observed: We have met to pray specially for national blessings, not only blessings to our own nation, but to all the kingdoms of the world. A celebrated heathen once said, "Nothing that is human I count foreign to myself;" much more should a Christian say it, who is a servant of Christ, who desires that none may perish, but that all may come to a knowledge of the truth.

The Holy Scripture does not limit the judgment of man in regard to the forms of civil government; but it is always the kingly government we read of in the Bible. Men are left to their own experience, but the Holy Scripture unite with our own best reason, and says nations must have a government, and Christian people are to set an example in the honouring of such, not because this or that party of Christians gets any particular favour through it, but on principle, for conscience' sake. The government of the world is not becoming easier. As the nations grow in intelligence, wealth, and wilfulness, it becomes a more and more difficult thing to govern them, all the more so as we rise above the early, coarse, physical mode of managing nations by the sword of the strong, and prime ministers require more than ever firmness and wisdom. There are wonderful things said about the possibilities of rule in the Bible, and however much the difference of opinion amongst Christians, it is undeniable that rulers might be of great service to the cause of God as nursing fathers and mothers. On the other hand, tremendous mischief may be done, and terrible things are said in God's Word about rulers giving their power to the beast instead of to the Lamb!

We are asked to pray for the soldiers—the trained guardians of national interests and lives; and for the sailors of whom we hear so many heart-rending things at this time—the messengers of civilization, and promoters of international intercourse. I find a difficulty in my mind of praying for particular national objects in detail. I do not know what is best on the whole for this world, how nations would best be conducted, or national strength increase or fall. But in all this I have a joy in knowing the Lord reigns. All my prayers for the earth and its nations are included in this, "May the Lord Jehovah reign." All power is given unto Him who reigneth for ever and ever; upon whose shoulders rest the reins of government. And so we can rejoice, and see a joyful time coming over the earth. Jesus comes to reign, but He is also reigning now. "Will Jesus come to me now in my sorrow?" asks one. Yes, He is coming. Although I know that Jesus reigns, and is coming to reign, yet I see a great many things that make it difficult to believe. People say, "You Christians are no better looked after than other people; you commit as many blunders, suffer as many losses. How is it possible that Jesus reigns? He does not take any care of his people?" My answer is, "You must understand what Jesus promised to do for us. He never promised to keep his disciples out of mishaps and calamities. On the contrary, He said, "I send you into tribulation." He requires us to guard against mishaps and losses, by a proper attention to the natural laws for the preservation of life and property. But what does He do? He so governs as to make all things work together for good. It is not one thing that will do good, but the combination of all things. It is quite an error when we say that everything is plain. Clouds and darkness are all about us. We have to go on looking up to the throne with clouds and darkness all about it; but, thank God, none on it. It is that which makes us strong, to go on believing in a reigning God in the midst of darkness.

All human progress is through conflict, difficulty, and sometimes turmoil; and religious life is just the same. It goes on through conflict, difficulty, and perplexity, and the looking up to a throne surrounded with darkness, but in Him is no darkness at all, for righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.

My joy is of my faith, not of my understanding. The understanding cannot penetrate the clouds. Faith alone does it, and sees the righteousness and judgment which are the support of the throne. At present we see righteousness fighting with unrighteousness upon the earth. A sore battle is waging between truth and error, spirit and flesh, holiness and sin. By-and-by, when the Lord shall reign, and Satan shall have been bound for a thousand years, righteousness shall reign upon the earth, but not be the only thing. Unrighteousness still exists upon the earth, and has a fearful outbreak at the end of the thousand years. But what is behind that? We look for a new heaven and a new earth, where there shall be no unrighteousness and sin.

Let us pray that God may guide the nations to do what seemeth best in his sight. He casts down and raises up. All these things come forth from the Lord, who is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working. God has not left the political course of the nations to his people, but the grand policy of the reign of Christ; that Christ's word may dominate, that Christ himself may come, and that righteousness may abound. "Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous, and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart." Light is sown for the righteous. A sweet and happy figure! What God sows is sure to come up, and He has sown in this time of darkness, light for his righteous ones, and gladness for the upright in heart. His people shall be all righteous, they shall be made upright in heart, and shall enter into the joy of their Lord.

The hymn, "Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious," was sung, and prayer offered, which specially pleaded that the persecution of God's children now raging in Turkey might be speedily removed. Another hymn was sung, and the meeting closed with the benediction.

WEDNESDAY.

The address was given, after the usual exercises, by the Rev. C. DALLAS MARSTON, who presided. He read Gen. xviii. 17, Ephesians vi., and opening verses of Matt. v. 21, and, after the singing of a hymn, spoke as follows:—

The subject of this morning is one that touches us very closely. It has reference to our children, and has been specified thus: "OUR CHILDREN at home, in business, and abroad; for tutors and guardians; for universities and colleges; for the Christian ministry and Sunday-schools." When one looks at the condition of society in which we are placed, no thinking mind can deny that the dangers and temptations which are thrown in our children's way are many more than they were even a generation back. Intercourse is such a common thing, literature is so cheap, and the land is so flooded with it, and withal a spirit of restlessness and frivolity prevail so widely, that children are peculiarly exposed, and it behoves us to be more anxious and persistent in our waiting upon God for them.

The first danger is that of literature. Our boys and girls can pick up novels anywhere at so cheap a price that they may at any time unwittingly buy harm that will stick to them for years. We shall do well to put our children upon their guard against this, and inspect ourselves the literature that is brought into our houses. There is a horrible substratum of evil in much of it, and all the more pernicious because robed in the guise of good, a kind of religiousness that has nothing to do with the religion of the Lord Jesus. This kind of thing makes the literature of the day full of danger to our young people. We may detect the error, but a boy or girl cannot do it.

Another danger is that of amusements. I frankly declare I know not what to say about this. It is an increasingly difficult subject to deal with. We find such a latitude of opinion upon this matter, that it is excessively difficult to draw the line. What need there is for prayer that we may be guided aright. I think he would be a very rash man who attempted to draw a line: I don't attempt it. But one point is very clear, and that is, if we have a conscience void of offence and rightly instructed of God in these matters, we have nothing to do with future consequences. I was talking the other day to a friend of mine, and he put to me this question, "What shall I do about my boys? They are beginning to grow up, and are wanting to go to this and that place. I am afraid if I draw the line too tight that when they get their own masters they will break away altogether, whereas, if I take them myself and show them the dangers now, this may be avoided." I believe this is a mere piece of casuistry. I am sure that if a father brings up his sons, or a mother her daughters, on the understanding that the whole regulation of the family is done by love, the boys and girls will respect their parents' feelings, and that you as parents will have nothing to fear. What we parents have to do with is the duties of to-day and not the chances of to-morrow. The duties are ours, but the results belong to God.

Just one word to parents. We read just now, "Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath." I believe many parents do this. They are so fidgety, so odd and queer in their ways. My friends, do remember you were young once, and that there are many things which you have outgrown, and so will your children. Do not forget there are animal spirits in the young. Aim at keeping them close to yourselves by the sweet bonds of love. God does not provoke his children to wrath, and what a sweet study is that of God as a Father! Time forbids that I dwell on these topics longer. I have only endeavoured to throw out a few imperfect hints. In conclusion, he exhorted the obedience of children to parents, and prayed that God might bless the words spoken.

Mr. Ellis and the Rev. John Manners then followed in prayer, and the meeting concluded by singing another hymn.

THURSDAY.

The meeting was better attended than the previous ones, and was opened by the Chairman, Rev. MORLEY PUNSHON.

“FOREIGN OBJECTS FOR PRAYER.—The extension of religious liberty throughout the world; the prevalence of peace among nations; the increase of harmony, sympathy, and service among Christians of all lands; the subordination of international intercourse, and the increase of commerce, and of science, to the spread of Christ's kingdom.”

Rev. Mr. PUNSHON then addressed the meeting, remarking that at some period of that week it was right that their attention should be drawn to, and sympathies awakened on behalf of, what are termed, for convenience sake, “Foreign Objects for Prayer,” but to those whose catholicity is as wide as the heart of Christ, there can really be none foreign. We feel in Christ for all as brethren. There is, however, sometimes a danger lest, with our own deep and wide-spread consciousness of personal need, we become engrossed with our own cares and fortunes. There are but few, I dare say, who have not been subject to temptations of this kind. We cannot wonder at it, when we consider the manifold necessities that press upon us in the battle of life, and yet to absorb our devotions within our own circle is really practically to defeat their object. When we exemplify universality in our petitions our sympathies are expanded, our thoughts enlarged, and our desires made more after the fashion of Christ's; therefore, a personal blessing may more reasonably be expected by us. Surely if it is into a thankful heart God delights to pour the riches of his grace, then here can be nothing that is so well calculated to work that gratitude in the hearts of believers than a lifting up of themselves into sympathy with Christ's great work in the world. There is a subtle philosophy in this, as well as a matter of daily experience. All the objects we pray for to-day are necessary and needful at the present time; everything relates to the present and daily wants of the Church of Christ. Everywhere we need to pray for religious liberty, for there are places where it is yet imperilled, a spirit of enmity is let loose against some portion of the Church still, and although the restraints of society have tended to restrain persecution, yet it is nevertheless true that all who would love Christ are liable to persecution.

Then we have to pray for the increased harmony and co-operation of Christians all over the world; that there may be no additional stumbling-blocks placed in the way of the conversion of the heathen; that those who have been won by the fellowship of saints may not be driven into a terrible recoil from divisions and dissensions; that there may be mutual recognition and assistance given by all the host which Christ has summoned to the conquest of the world. Then we have need to pray for the subordination of international intercourse, and the increase of commerce, to the extension of Christ's kingdom. There never was a time when it was more needful to pray for these matters than now. With the increase of communication there is a danger of the importation of the vices of other nations; and in the extension of commerce, a ministering only to selfishness and luxury. We who believe that there is one King reigning over heaven and earth, have need to pray that the time may speedily arrive when legislation may be purged of its impurity, literature of its substratum of evil, and science of its pride; when all days shall be Lord's-days; daily labour daily service; one flock and one Shepherd; and God all in all. Nothing will bring this but a rich baptism of the Holy Spirit. If the churches were united as they should be in earnest supplication for the descent of the Holy Spirit upon every ordinance and agency, depend upon it we should have a flood of blessing, the like of which has not been seen before. The set time for blessing is when the people are ready. Let each heart give itself afresh in more complete surrender, and then there can be no doubt that the kingdom will come, and mightily overpower the kingdom of darkness and sin.

Further prayer was then offered, and the meeting closed with the doxology.

FRIDAY.

The Rev. D. MULLENS, of the London Missionary Society, presided. The subject for prayer was for THE CONVERSION

OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL; for the spread of the gospel in heathen lands; and for the deliverance of nations from the yoke of superstition.

After the hymn, “Oft in sorrow, oft in woe,” Mr. Shool-bridge and Mr. Willis led the assembly in prayer.

Dr. Mullens had previously read Acts xix., remarking the difference of area in the missionary field to what it was in the year 1800, and reviewing the different agencies at work at the present time. He now continued, and said he thought the first thought in our minds to-day was one of devout gratitude for the progress which the kingdom of Christ was making all over the world. “I know,” he said, “there are some at times who are doubtful when they see the vast amount of wickedness still in our own country, but for all that I think great and rapid strides are being made.”

Dr. Mullens then referred at length to his visit to Madagascar, telling what a hold Christianity seemed to have taken there, how visible it was in the private and social life of the natives. He then brought forward proofs of how it was becoming nationalized in many parts of the heathen world, and spoke encouragingly of the general progress of missionary work.

The greater part of the hour was spent in prayer, the meeting being thrown open for that purpose.

SATURDAY.

The concluding meeting of the series at Willis's Rooms was presided over by the Rev. JOSEPH ANGU, D.D. The objects announced for prayer were, The condition of the Churches throughout the world, for their increase in zeal, spirituality, and devotedness; and for a clearer witness for the truth among them.

The Chairman read part of Isa. xlv. and Joel iii., and noted that the blessing is always represented as beginning with the Church; and from thence spreading to the outside world. Then, referring to the topics of the day, he observed that the theme of the morning was one which might more appropriately have been selected for the first of the meetings, because, upon our quickened life depends largely the blessing we have been seeking. But there was also an advantage in placing it last, because of the permanence of its lessons. The term “religious revival” is a better one than that sometimes used in its place—the higher Christian life. All Christian life is higher, and there is a danger in using this term, that there may gradually creep in a different lower life in kind, whereas the only difference is in degree and intensity. Before we can know the meaning of the revival of Christian life, we must first know what the Christian life is itself. This involves, at least, four things: 1st, The cancelling of our sentence of death, including deepening of the conviction and a waking up to holy feeling, desire, and consecration; 2nd, Regeneration; 3rd, Christian activity in the regeneration of the world; 4th, An abiding sense of peace and joy. With a full realization of these points our usefulness will increase, and our capabilities for labour abound more and more to the glory of God.

The meeting closed with prayer, asking of God a rich and permanent blessing as the result of the week's meetings.

FRENCH IN SOHO.—For the last eight years, we have given at Christmas times to our Sunday-school children, and to the poor French of Soho and St. Giles's, specially those attending our meetings, a good, substantial tea, with Christmas-tree and gifts. We intend doing so this year again, and we appeal to our friends to give us the means to do a little good to these poor people. Last year we had more than 300 of them assemble.

10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, W. GEO. BARBINE.

MANCHESTER.—Wood-street, Deansgate, one of the most wretched and vilest neighbourhoods of Manchester, has in it a Mission-hall and Boys' Home. The building, erected twelve months ago, is the result of six years' hard work. We have a band of thirty workers, who go out every Saturday evening, in the vicinity of “gaffs,” theatres, flaring gin-shops, and to the masses; give tracts, handbills, books, etc. Thus 3000 to 4000 are sent out weekly. We appeal for help, being quite without funds for the purchase of tracts. Must this vast work stop for want of tracts? We send a cry for help through the country. The people of our Mission are in earnest, and mean work. We shall be glad to forward reports of our movements, also pamphlets on the work, to any who may be desirous to know more. During the last twelve months some scores have received good, and gone on their way rejoicing. Our work chiefly lies amongst the thieves and loafers of the city. ALFRED ALSOP.

APPROACH TO GOD.

REV. J. G. GREGORY, AT LONDON TAVERN.

I think for this opening meeting we cannot have a more appropriate subject than "Approach to God"—our right and title to approach, and the manner of it.

Let us take our start from the Word of God—Heb. x. 22, "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Wonderful privilege! we may draw near as children, as needy, thankful ones.

What is our right? We find it in the context. "This Man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God." Jesus has done the work. He has wrought out our title, the ground of our assurance. We may draw very near, because the work is done, and Jesus, our Forerunner, has taken his seat at the right hand of power in our humanity. He bears no sin of ours now, does no substitutionary work there above. It terminated on the cross. There is no more offering for sin. The way is clear; justice is satisfied. Therefore we have boldness and liberty. We have a right to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus Christ—by the newly slain and LIVING way. Wonderful combination! Not by a dead, but a living Christ—through the death, but in the life; through the work, but in the Person.

Here is our right; we cannot have a higher or a more blessed one. There is no flaw here, no lack. Our acceptance is perfect. Who shall question it? Where our Forerunner hath entered, thither we may wing our way; yea, in heart and mind now, thither we poor sinners may ascend, and with Him continually dwell in the intercourse of blessed fellowship, that all the powers of hell shall not set aside or injure.

Now as to the manner of our drawing near. "With a true heart." God has dealt with us, and does deal with us, in reality, and He will have from us reality. No pretence, no formalism. All outward work goes for nought, unless there be reality in the heart. It is the heart God wants, and will have.

Let us pause a moment, and ask if that is the way we have been drawing near. Doubtless we are all religious here—Christians by name, or we should not have come here. But what about this matter of reality? Will our approach bear the heart-searching eye of God to rest upon it? Oh, those deep chambers! Is there no need for the eye of God to search them? Look into the why and wherefore of our religious actions, our prayers, our praises, our attendance on the ordinances; Lord God, search them!

Perhaps we have not been entering into the blessedness of real communion with God. Why? We have confessed our sin, and offered our prayers, attended the ordinances, consorted only with the children of God, yet we have this want of communion. Is it not because we have some deep, dark chamber in our hearts, and the door has been closed, and we have deceived even ourselves with reference to it? We have not unlocked it. Let us enter this day into the presence-chamber of our God, and pray Him, cost what it may, to give us true hearts. What is it to cut off a right hand, or pluck out a right eye, when fellowship with God is the matter before us? Let us be true to God, and deal honestly as in the day, remembering that it is only when we "walk in the light, as God is the light," that we "have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

"In full assurance of faith." Does this stagger any of us? What is it? Simply taking God at his word, as you men of business will be taken at your word. That is faith. How offended you would be if one took you not at your word. Are you not honest and truthful? Have you not a right to be believed? So the Lord, who is faithful in his integrity, will be taken at his word.

"Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." How? By the blood. Let not that man who just rests on his morality, day by day, say he has a good conscience. Nay, nay! But ask that man, whose eye is on the fully-perfected work of atonement, whose trust is in the precious blood—ask him concerning his conscience. He points to the living Jesus, and tells you of oneness with Him. He has a peace that the world knows not of. He has a foretaste of the joys of heaven as he makes progress thitherward.

What more? "Our bodies washed with pure water." Remember how the priests that ministered in the sanctuary washed themselves. This was typical. What are we but priests—kings and priests unto God? What an exalted office we have! We have been bathed in the precious blood, but what about the body—the hands, the feet, the ears, the lips? There must be a thorough washing with pure water—by the Spirit of the living God, in union with Christ, the risen, living Saviour. Here is the word, "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Shall we take this for our rule of approach? Shall we thus draw near to-day? We have seen our title and the manner of approach. Shall this be our way of drawing near during the year on which we have entered? If so, God shall be glorified in us, and we shall be knit together in the bonds of love. If it be thus, then we shall know how to ride over every trial, and, consecrated to the Lord, shall taste of heaven's joy, and begin even here to sing that song in which we shall rejoice before the throne in yonder glorious heaven where He is gone.

SONSHIP AND SERVICE.

LORD RADSTOCK, AT LONDON TAVERN.

"And it came to pass, the selfsame day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies" (Excd. xii. 51). But a day before they had been slaves under their taskmasters. Their cry went up to God. They had yearnings after something better; but these aspirations seemed hopeless because of the cruel bondage in which they were held. Struggle was useless, and left them still captive. But God said, "I do hear their cry, and I am come down." He came down to deliver them, and also to bring them into relationship with Himself. The result was that they were able to walk through the wilderness, bring water out of a rock, get bread from heaven, and the little ones—for they only were to triumph—could overcome the giants, and take the land flowing with milk and honey, and live there with God.

Let us ask ourselves—do we remember that God has come down in our midst to bring us out of the state of hopeless groaning that every one of us is in when the first ray of light comes into our soul? He has come to bring us to Himself.

What is the meaning of our meeting here to-day? To meet God. But, is it as beggars who come to get a crust thrown out from the palace, and then go away and eat it at a distance, and come back again because they cannot get anything elsewhere? I believe it is often so with us. We only come to God when we cannot get anything from anybody else. Or, do we come as servants, only to get something; as long as we fulfil the duties of our service we shall have our wages, and if we do not do our service properly we shall be turned out of the house and never see the King's face again? Or, do we come as dear children, whose birthright it is to live in the house and to have the King's portion. Yes! it is not as a matter of favour, or of chance, but as a matter of right. We come to take possession of that wonderful inheritance to which we are born heirs. We who bear the name of Christ know we are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. I am sure there are many thus coming.

Let us ask ourselves, further, being children, what next? Is it to be happy in our sonship, and continually congratulating ourselves, and stop there? It is well to be always thanking God for this grace given, but, you remember the Divine Master, being a Son, went on to something else. He took on Him the form of a servant. Sonship was the starting point for service, and so we read in 2 Tim., God has "saved us and called us with a holy calling." If we understand our relationship this morning, I believe that as God sees us, He sees a halo of glory round the head of everyone who has confessed the name of Jesus. He says to the feeblest saint here, "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost."

God has identified us with the blood. The children of Israel were identified with the blood of the Lamb, and "that same day" they were brought up out of the land of Egypt, the land of uncertainty and bondage. More than that, rebellion was almost a necessity. It may be there are some of God's people here groaning by reason of their bondage, who feel that they are entangled with the affairs of this life. It may be their business or family relations, or their own individual circumstances, and they can only say, "When I would do good, evil is present with me."

"Who is sufficient for these things?" You say, "Look at my circumstances, at my relations in business. How is it possible?" It is impossible with man, but "with God all things are possible." God knew the difficulty when He said to Abraham, "I am the Lord God Almighty; walk before Me, and be thou perfect." "Almighty!" Will you trust God to break the chain? You want to be soldiers. I speak now to some who are not yet consciously soldiers. If there are any thus situated, I would say, Look to the blood of the Lamb, put it outside the door. It is God's business to bring you out. The children of Israel did not get out by striving, but the self-same night, when they put the blood outside the door, God brought them out. The responsibility is with Him.

I remember, many years ago, when the question came to my mind whether I should take a public stand, I thought, How can I do it? I shall be expected to live like a saint, and I cannot. But, I thought, what am I called to? To be a follower of the Lord; the power is his. We call Him Lord, and so He is. It was the Father's purpose to bring many sons to glory, and therefore He made the Captain of our salvation perfect.

This year has opened, perhaps to be the most magnificent year in the world's history; perhaps to be the final campaign between the hosts of God and darkness, for aught we know; perhaps when Christ is coming to summon his saints to follow Him into the great battle-field. Is it not worth while applying the axe to these entanglements, to break this alliance? Said the king of Israel, "What shall I do for the hundred talents of silver?" "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this." Oh that God would move us by the power of the Holy Ghost! He is moving; it is we who are holding back. We want thousands of labourers, and millions of money. We see our great buildings, and we say, "This one belongs to such-and-such a firm; they ought to have such a building." What ought God's building to be? In the middle ages they showed their zeal for God by erecting great stone buildings; let us show it by being living stones, polished for the Master's use. If the Lord calls a man to give up a business that may give him £10,000 a-year, and to serve the Lord on £50 a-year, what a precious gift to put on the altar for Him! I do not say we are all called to do it; but what a magnificent service it is!

Are we all on the Lord's side? If the angel of God came down to put a mark on the forehead of every thorough-going servant of God, would it be on your forehead? Do you know what it is, like the apostle, to have borne the prints of the nails on your hands? Are you as a man that has been crucified with Christ? Why not? Because you have not believed his love to you. God has given the gift, but you have not taken it. It is for you, believing God's testimony, to take Christ, the living one, as your Lord. Then you can say, "I have set the Lord always before me; He is on my right hand." And in another picture you will be seen as "coming up out of the wilderness, leaning on the arm of your Beloved."

"MARCHING ORDERS."

REV. W. HAY CHAPMAN, AT LONDON TAVERN.

The position of God's people at the present time appears to me to be very similar to that of Joshua of which we have heard this morning from the Word of God. This servant of God had received very great and precious promises, "As I was with Moses so will I be with thee." He had experienced God's faithfulness. The Lord had brought him and the hosts of Israel safely over the river Jordan. And now they were brought face to face with a great difficulty. There was the key of the position to be taken, the city of Jericho. And it appears that Joshua realized his position, and felt the necessity of the directing hand of the Lord Himself. But it is important for us to notice that the Lord would not direct his servant until matters had been put quite straight between Him and his people. Before the Israelites were allowed to advance, the reproach of Egypt had to be rolled away, and the Passover had to be kept.

This is a very important point in reference to God's people at the present time. If we are to make any advance, and to get a blessing from the Lord, we must look to our own condition in his sight. Are there any duties that have been neglected? Are there any sins to be confessed, any commands to be obeyed? You remember the people were in a panic-stricken condition when the passage of the Jordan had been made, and as long as they were in that condition they were not allowed to go forward; the rite of circumcision had to be observed and the Passover kept.

When these things had been done Joshua realized the necessity of receiving orders as regards the future, and so we find him alone, meditating on his position. It is a very good thing for us from time to time, when there is any great difficulty before us, or any great work to be undertaken, to withdraw and be alone with God. There is no surer test of a man's spiritual condition than that he can go straight and be with God alone. Joshua looked up and beheld the Lord Himself. He saw that in his hand there was a sword, and that the sword was drawn. You remember what the effect was—he fell flat on his face on the ground. He took his right position. He asked for the directing hand of his Master, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" When he receives his orders they are directly carried out.

I want this morning, for a little, to consider what is our position. We too, have "exceeding great and precious promises." We too, of late, have seen the wonders of the Lord in our midst. Are we willing to deal honestly with ourselves as in his sight, to remove everything contrary to his mind, and simply receive from Him the commands as to our future? There is a great work before us all, and how is it to be undertaken? Each one of us must learn the absolute necessity of being alone with the Master, and receiving our orders from Him. It is just as you can be alone with the Lord Himself, and have a clear and distinct view of Him as the "Captain of the host of the Lord," and see in his hand the sword drawn, that you will have the assurance of his leading the host to the battle Himself, and the victory will be yours.

It is comforting and encouraging at the present day, when there are so many difficulties before us, and so many enemies around us, to have this clear and distinct view of Him who is the Lord of hosts. Joshua was not certain whether He was for or against him; but He is not merely one who is going to take a part, He is going to take the command, and his sword is drawn ready for the work.

Beloved brethren, at this time we want to see the Lord Himself. And it is the work of the Holy Ghost specially to glorify the Lord Jesus, and it is for you and me to see that the work is his work, and that He has taken the command Himself. I am sure it is our comfort to know that the sword is in His hand, not in the hand of his servant. And it is just as you can see it in his hand, and trust Him to wield it, that the work will be done.

Now are we prepared thus to separate ourselves wholly, and keep the eye of faith simply fixed on the Lord Himself? Are we prepared to lie low at his feet, putting away our own notions, to look up and say, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" It is as you can take your right place that you will receive your orders. You must not allow anything to come between you and Him, so as to shut out the full view of Him. You must not allow anything to close the ear which will hinder the command coming straight from Him. With the eye fixed, and the ear opened, there will be the heart set at liberty, so that we may run in the way of his commandments. Joshua must have felt a great sense of relief when he received his commands. Up to that time, doubtless, he felt a certain amount of anxiety as to how the great city was to be taken; but when the Lord told him how to do the work, he felt quite confident that it would be done. And if you and I are to do any great work—and we look for it at the present time—we must be willing to do the work in the Lord's own way.

And remember that it was not merely that certain persons were to take a part in the work, and that the priests were to blow the trumpets, but the whole host was to shout. And so it must be with this work that is before us. We must, every one of us, be willing to do our part. Then the city will be ours, and the Lord will give it to us. It is simply as we, each one of us, obey the command of the Master, that we shall have the blessing. It is a very solemn thought that one disobedient servant brought about a tremendous defeat. Therefore it is for every one of you to be in that attitude of trust which will enable you simply to obey the order when it is received. It matters not whether it is in reference to your family—and some of us know what anxiety children cause to parents—or in reference to the youth of this country, with the terrible temptations to which they are exposed on every side; or in reference to the ministers—the one thing needful for us is to have a clear view of the Lord which will enable us to trust Him for the special work we have in hand.

I am sure it is only as we honestly and thankfully rest in the Lord himself, and see Him who is invisible, that we can listen to his voice, and follow Him where He leads. There are so many Christians who allow the Lord to be, as it were, at a distance from them; they have no clear view of Him, because their hearts are not wholly with Him. It is impossible to see the Lord as long as there is anything between you and Him. There must be an entire surrender of self to Him, and a simple acceptance of Him. Then there will be obedience to that which He commands.

Let us, at this time, whatever the position we may be called to occupy, endeavour to ascertain honestly what part we are ready to take. Is there any hanging back, any fear of man? Do you know in your own souls the blessedness of being able to look straight at the Captain of our salvation? How glorious to feel that we are under his banner, and that we are prepared to fight manfully against his foes! There is a stronghold to be conquered, perhaps in your own heart. How is it to be done? There is some tremendous evil you have been fighting against, perhaps, for years, and has been a source of weakness in your Christian life. Remember that the Captain, with his sword, only has the power to gain the victory for you. There may be some great difficulty connected with your family, or some trouble in your house, or you may be called to some special work, or, with others, you are looking forward to a great work in this enormous city, this stronghold of Satan. If we would be encouraged for the battle, and would undertake the work, it must be by each one of us having such a view of Him, seeing that the work is in his hands, and never venturing to go to it without Him, or take a step in it alone. Whenever we have attempted anything in our own strength, we have failed; but when the eye has been on Him, and there has been obedience to his orders, whatever the difficulty has been, it has vanished; the walls have fallen down, and the Lord of hosts has given us the city.

FOREIGN OBJECTS FOR PRAYER.

REV. H. S. PATERSON, M.D., AT THE LONDON TAVERN.

The subject for this morning is both large and limited. First, as to its limitation. Missions to the Jews and to those nations who are still involved in superstition, are excluded to-day, to be embraced to-morrow. Next, as to its largeness. We are asked to pray for the maintenance and extension of peace in all lands, for religious liberty, for the true essential unity of the Church of Christ, for the subordination of all secular interests to the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Need I say that these things can best be done when we ourselves are sincere and simple in our faith towards God.

We have read what the Jew prayed in the olden time, "Lord, be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause thy face to shine upon us, that thy way may be known on the earth, and thy saving health among all nations." Depend upon it, it is in proportion as we ourselves receive the power and blessing of God that we can wing our prayers to heaven, or make our efforts successful for the extension of Christ's kingdom through other lands. The Jews of old had entrusted to them the oracles of God. Their special duty was, in the first instance, to keep the ordinances, the worship and the will of God, as revealed to them in the Word. I believe, secondly, they were designed to make known that worship and will through all lands. But certainly, with us, on whom the ends of the world have come, the main and paramount duty is the dissemination of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; and we cannot expect to be blessed individually or nationally, if we are not constant and earnest in our efforts for the diffusion of the truth. To that end we must be true ourselves, giving full homage to the Lord.

London, in many respects, is the centre of the world; certainly, commercially, it occupies a position second to no other city. We cannot estimate the blessed influence for good that this city would exert on the whole earth, if our merchants—who are princes as well as traffickers—were true and sincere in their love to the Lord, and would subordinate all their concerns to his will, and the advancement of his kingdom. It is a short-sighted and foolish policy to divorce our Christian work from our ordinary secular work, and to arrange in two different partitions the things that belong to the Lord, and the things that belong to our duty in the world. We ought to serve God as well as to love Him, with our whole body, soul, mind, and strength. There is no department of our life from which we can exclude his searching eye, or neglect his all-powerful and all-embracing Word. Let us lay this to heart.

There is one principle that embraces all the objects that are commended to us for prayer—"Be careful (anxious) for nothing; but in everything, with prayer and thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." We may think of many things, but we are not to be troubled about anything. We know the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, and He will do all his pleasure. The nations of the earth may rise up against Him, and rumours of war may reach our ears, but let us remember the promise, "All things are yours, whether life or death; for ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." "In everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." That is our warrant for embracing the wide earth. Christ said, "As the Father hath sent Me, so send I you... Go and preach the gospel to every creature." So we pray for all kinds and classes of men.

We are asked to pray for the extension of RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

"He is the freeman whom the truth makes free, and all are slaves beside." What a strange commentary on these words history gives! Men have never gained freedom except through the gospel; when they have tried it in any other way, they have only sunk into deeper degradation than before. It is only when we know the love of God in Jesus Christ that we walk at liberty.

Then we are to pray for peace, twin sister to wisdom. This peace we believe to be only had and secured by the prevalence of the gospel of Christ. Some say this is a Utopian idea, but let them be good enough to tell us some other and better method of bringing it about. Commerce? I believe it is one of God's laws for the well-being of humankind, but it has proved abundantly useless for the establishment of peace, even within our own memories. Wars have often been embittered by men's commercial selfishness.

Then, with regard to the increase of harmony among Christians, are we not all one body? I do not mean to say that a man should not contend for his view of the truth. I claim my liberty to do this, and I give the same liberty to others. I suppose we must differ; but, after all, if we have the Lord Jesus Christ, and making all allowances for these differences—if we love Christ, and are in sympathy with Him, and seek to honour his name, and establish his kingdom on the earth, we have enough to draw us and keep us together, striving for the faith of the gospel.

I think it is Dr. Moffat who writes in one of his books that, during his missionary travels, he observed a number of animals crowded together on an island in the midst of a great flood. They were exposed to a common danger, and they forgot, for the time, their animosities and antagonisms, and were willing to be helpful to each other. May it not be that God will drive us together in these times, and compel us to unite in opposing the various forces of the devil; so that we may stand shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, hand to hand, for the one gospel of Jesus Christ? How much better to come together to fight against sin—to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty! What an object for prayer this is!

Again, we are asked to pray for the "subordination of international intercourse, and the increase of commerce and of science, to the spread of Christ's kingdom." I believe commerce can be overruled abundantly to this end. We have our missionaries to the heathen, but there are thousands of missionaries who are not accounted for in the statistics of our missionary societies. Some of these are missionaries of evil and not of good, servants of Satan. Still they are our missionaries, and go forth from this city to foreign countries, and return thither again; meanwhile they exert their influence, whether for harm or for blessing. I do not know, but more might be effected by means of these, unordained, unrecognized missionaries, than by those who go out with the benediction of our truest and noblest churches. If our men of commerce, traders, soldiers, sailors, clerks, and labourers who go to our colonies, were all to be imbued with the love of Christ, and showed what that love can do, what a power for good, that God might use to the conversion of many thousands of souls, would be exerted.

Sometimes we are a curse to other nations, especially to the weakest and the lowest. We take shame to ourselves. But if our men were to go forth loving Jesus, seeking to do good work for Him, how much might be done. Pardon me if I say to business men that while looking out for those to whom they give the conduct of their affairs abroad, they ought not to neglect thinking of those who could exert a Christian influence. If they have got common sense and common skill in them, combined with the love of Christ, they will make most valuable servants for their employers, as well as good servants for the common Master.

One word as to the increase of science. I am not afraid of science, either false or true: of true, because it is the truth of God; of false, because it is a lie of the devil. Whatever is true will stand, and I have no fear for the discoveries that are made concerning God's works. I have no hesitation in saying that the present attitude of so-called science is ominous—not to the cause of Christ, anything but that—but ominous to those who are led away from the principles of the profoundest philosophy and the truest science. The outcome of the science of the present day seems to be materialism. What is the teaching of that philosophy? "Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." I defy the promulgators of materialism to draw any other logical conclusion, though I know they disclaim it. But the science teaches it whether they do so or not, and the world cannot stand such teaching. It will speedily bring about its own destruction. Men cannot live on husks, and the day is coming when men will understand that there is something besides matter, that there is something which they call force, but which we call God—the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath by Him revealed to us his love!

LOOKING BACK.

OPENING ADDRESS BY E. BAXTER, ESQ., AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

We meet here, after twenty-five years of intercession with the Lord for the outpouring of his Spirit, and a revival of his work in our country. Our dear friend, Haldane Stewart, for more than ten years held forth the testimony in the invitation to join a concert of prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the New Year's Day. This was followed up by the present Week of Prayer, continued now for about fifteen years, and so we have been at the footstool crying, yearning, and waiting for blessing, and, through God's mercy and faithfulness, do we not find the blessing? We come for the power of the Holy Ghost to be manifested in the midst of us; first in the conversion of individual souls, turning them from darkness to light, and from ignorance to Jesus; and as we look abroad and see the wide preaching of the gospel up and down our land, and throughout the world, and mark how few take on the profession of the Lord compared with the multitudes to whom the gospel is preached, may we not well plead to God that He would vouchsafe an even larger measure of his blessing? We thank God for the restraining power of his Spirit; we thank God for the higher moral tone which the preaching of the gospel gives; but we look for the life, the spiritual life, the quickening of the soul into the risen life of Jesus. This is what we look for to change the man's heart, life, and character, and make him a new man in Christ Jesus. Again, we look for the deepening of the work of grace in the souls that know Christ. Oh, dear friends, when we see the congregations of thousands filling the churches of our land, and also the churches on the Continent, and then inquire how many workers for the Lord there are in the midst of them, we are astounded, and we are cast down in amazement at the few workers compared with the many hearers. Ay, and not only that, but the few workers compared with the many converted souls that are in the midst of those congregations. Oh for that deeper life which shall lead to the consecration of soul, of life, of thought, and of heart to Christ, and then, when from the midst of our congregations the people of the Lord go forth to work, to witness, to win souls together, we shall see the power of the Holy Ghost working mightily, we shall see not only the life, but as our Lord adds, "the more abundant life."

This is what we long and pray for; and, dear friends, what do we see? Looking back twenty-five years ago, and marking the state of the churches in our land, and the churches on the Continent, may we not say the good hand of God is upon us, now awakening the careless, converting the unconverted, reviving his work in the midst of the churches, and bringing forth his servants on every hand? Up and down the country the work of conversion to those who pass up and down it is most marked, most manifest, most blessed. You look at the efforts of the churches, and the revival of life there, and see the same signs—a moving, rising, awakening, and stirring in the midst of us which we have not hitherto known; and now as we see in every special effort where the people are gathered to plead with God for the presence of the Spirit, for the power of the Holy Ghost, for the conversion of souls, and for the edification of his people, God is so manifestly in the midst of them, that it is as though the Lord were come back in the power of the Holy Ghost, into the midst of his people, that they may be bowed down before Him, to seek the blessing, to know that He purposes to give his blessing. And his presence among them and his power upon them are tokens that the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord are come. Looking at the work throughout the country, may we not say a wave of blessing is passing over our land? And may we not say a wave of blessing is reaching to the Continent? May we not say that the Lord has heard, and the Lord is answering? Yes, we may. Ah! dear friends, the many special meetings and conferences, and the many individual servants that offer themselves for the work of the Lord, both men and women, is a matter of deep thanksgiving to God, and encouraging to us to believe that the Lord hath a blessing in the midst of us. And then the meetings for prayer are multiplied and deepening. We have been twenty-five years pleading at the footstool of grace; we see the answer in some sort; we long for the fuller answer yet. We wait upon the Lord, believing, trusting, encouraged. Let it be in the spirit of prayer, waiting in continual prayer, looking to the Lord, and we shall find the Lord will be good to us beyond all we can ask or think, and come, as the Word saith, and "open the windows of heaven, and give us such a blessing, that we shall not be able to contain it."

It is well for us to give thanks for what we see, to be encouraged yet more to praise, and plead, and wait upon the Lord, assured that He will both hear, and will continue to give us the answer as we wait for it.

"FAINT, YET PURSUING."

NEVILLE SHERBROOKE, ESQ., AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

We have got for our subject this evening the words, "Faint, yet pursuing," and it seems to me that at the beginning of a new year like this, such words may be true—nay, should be true either in part or in whole of each believer. Some of God's dear children may be faint and cast down because of the way, yet pursuing; and oh! if we are not faint, if God has given us success, has cheered our hearts, and shown us that his work which He has enabled us to engage in has not been in vain in the Lord; still may it be true of every one of us—yet pursuing.

It has been said that the child of God sees the New Testament precepts and promises, and by faith grasps those precepts and promises, and then, under the teaching of the Holy Ghost, looks back into the Old Testament, and finds pictures and representations of those things. It seems to me that such is the case with the statement before us now, "Faint, yet pursuing." It seems to be a sort of illustration of "patience," because we find in the Epistle to the Hebrews where we are urged to be "followers of those who, through faith and patience, inherit (or lay hold of, as I believe the original means) the promises." They are our inheritance, and it is our privilege and our right to grasp them, through faith and patience. And hence in looking back at this sentence, "Faint, yet pursuing," let us see, as I think we should, an illustration of the fulfilment of that precious word. Let us look first at the man of whom these words are spoken, and I think we shall find here comfort for the fainting ones, encouragement to those who, perhaps, have been hanging back; and I think we shall find too, in those circumstances that are here narrated, a word of warning for some of God's people. And, dear friends, we have come here for blessing, have we not? We have come here looking up to the Master, and we expect Him to give us all something. Oh! that He may give each one the word that is needed.

The first thing that we notice with reference to this sentence is, I think, this—two great classes of people. We look back into the Book of Judges, and find in chap. vi. that there were two classes of people. There were the Israelites and the Midianites, and those two were fighting the one against the other. There were the Israelites, the people of God, and there were the Midianites, the enemies of God and of his people. It is the same thing in these days. There are the two classes—the true Israelites, the people of God, and the enemies of the Lord, or those who are not yet reconciled and forgiven, because it is their own fault, and because they will not come unto Him that they might have life and be reconciled.

But notice, the Israelites sought to slay the Midianites. God's children do not seek to slay unconverted ones, but they want to win them for Jesus. They want, by God's grace, to be the means in his hands of winning them, so that they may no longer be enemies, but become reconciled ones, and pass from death unto life.

And, now, who is the leading character of whom these words, "Faint, yet pursuing," are spoken? That character is Gideon; and I think, when we come to look into this character, we see the feeble representation of the greater, the greatest Captain, the Lord Jesus Christ. We notice first about Gideon that he was called from a very humble, lowly position, but called to a great work—called to do God's work, to save Israel from the hand of the Midianites; and, dear friends, our Jesus was called from the manger to go and do a great work, to do his Father's work, the work of saving souls.

We notice another parallel between Gideon and the Lord Jesus. Gideon offered a sacrifice, and we see that sacrifice accepted on the altar of Jehovah-Shalom, "The Lord send peace." And has not our Captain, the Lord Jesus, offered a great sacrifice? And has not the sacrifice been accepted? And has not the altar been erected? "The Lord send peace." And it is in that confidence, it is because our Gideon, our Jesus, has offered this great sacrifice, that we can go forth and proclaim peace to poor, perishing souls. We can tell them of a peace already made. And oh! should there be one here who has not yet had peace with God, it is our privilege to tell you that Jesus has made peace through the blood of his cross, and there is pardon for you.

We find another thing about Gideon. We are told in chap. vi. 34 that "the Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon," or, as translated in the margin, "clothed" Gideon. Ah! our Jesus was indeed clothed with the Spirit; He was filled with the Holy Ghost.

Again, we see Gideon assembling a large number of persons to go out and fight, and he put himself at the head of them. He went out as their captain. So it is with our Jesus. Yea, now He is calling to his people, to the true Israelites, to come under his banner, and go forth to fight under his guidance and his direction, against the enemies of the Lord. Oh that many may hear the call of Jesus to-night! But that has been already alluded to by the Chairman—amongst the people of God, how very few there are who are really working for Him! Oh that the love of Christ may constrain us; so that, as He gave Himself for us, we may also give ourselves to Him!

You may remember that Gideon set to the three hundred men who were with him an example—perhaps an imperfect example; but our Jesus is a perfect example. None ever could fully and literally say, "Do as I do." The Apostle Paul could say, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ," but Jesus could indeed say, and does say, "Do as I do." May we be followers of Him!

And now let us look at those who were fighting with Midian, and I think we shall see a picture of God's faithful people. How many were there? There were about three hundred; and notice that they were all Israelites, although they came from different tribes. If we look at chap. vi. 35, we shall see this. So it is in these days. People come from different nations, families, and denominations, but the true Israelites are called to go forth under the guidance of their Captain, and to fight for the Lord.

And now I want to notice the testing of those three hundred. In chap. vii. you will see that there was a double testing. We are told that there were in the first place thirty-two thousand men who went out with Gideon, but only three hundred of them went as really the followers of Gideon in this battle against the Midianites. And how were they tested? First of all the proclamation was made that those who were faint-hearted might return, and twenty-two thousand out of the thirty-two thousand did so. Ah, dear friends, what a lesson there is for us here! These faint-hearted ones voluntarily did this, and alas! how many of God's dear children in this day do the same? They voluntarily take the place of the faint-hearted ones, and stand back.

But there was a second testing, which was more the Lord's testing than the first one. Gideon was told to take those who remained, to the water, and those who knelt down on their knees to drink, were to be put on one side, and those who lapped with the hand were to be put on the other. Three hundred did the latter, and were chosen to go with Gideon. What lesson may we learn from this? I do not say, What does it actually mean? but what spiritual lesson may the children of God draw from this? I think it is this: Water was necessary, was it not? And there are many things in this life very necessary for us, but oh! we are not to be hindered and kept back by them. We are told that we are to use this world as not abusing it, and, dear friends, how many of us are kept back by what we call "the necessaries of life." Oh! the Lord teach us to use this world, remembering that it is merely a passage to another. It is a mere battle-field. We are not to dwell here, but like these three hundred men who were so intent on going to the battle, let us take as much water as is necessary, and proceed on our way as they did. They went forward, and how were they armed? We are told that they had to take three things with them—victuals, trumpets, and pitchers with lamps within them. Just notice those three things as representing the necessaries and the arms of God's children—of those who are fighting for the Lord. Not trumpets first, or lamps and pitchers first, but victuals first. These men had to strengthen themselves first; and what a lesson is there here for us—that if we are to be used in God's service, we must be feeding ones. We must be strengthened in the inner man. There must be a feeding upon the living bread if we are really to fight for God. Our own vineyards must be looked after if we are to seek to win souls for the Lord.

It reminds one of a verse in the New Testament, where we are told that God gives "seed to the sower and bread to the eater," and he who sows the seed must also eat the bread. And so, whilst we take the trumpets, and the lamps, and the pitchers, may we not forget to eat victuals which our Father gives us. That was for their strength.

I can fancy that, if the Midianites had known how their enemies were armed, they would have laughed. And, dear friends, the world laughs at God's people; but they do not know what a power there is in the trumpet of the gospel. They do not know what a power there is in the light which God has put into our hearts.

Now what may the trumpet represent to us? I think, the gospel of the Lord Jesus; and it is because the trumpet has been giving a certain sound for some time past that God has been giving blessing. God's people have been pleading for power, and the Lord has given power. The Lord has enabled them to blow the trumpet with simplicity and clearness, and He has given blessing, and the slain of the Lord have been many.

And now let us press this matter home. Most here are, perhaps, workers for God; but when we are teaching or exhorting, does our trumpet give a certain sound? Are we simply trying to make people a little better than they were, or are we telling them of the dying Jesus, and the living Jesus, that we have been hearing about to-night?

But oh! there was another weapon which we must not pass by. They took pitchers with lamps in them, as well as trumpets, and we are told that they had to break these pitchers, and then the lamps shone forth, and the Midianites were frightened. They blew the trumpets, and the Midianites were conquered. Does not this remind us of the verse in the New Testament, "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts"? Praise God for it! But we further read, "We have this treasure in earthen vessels." In this mortal body of ours we have the treasure of Christ; and why? "That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." May the pitcher be broken, may the earthen vessel be broken, and then may the glorious light of a living Jesus shine forth, and there will be power within! Dear friends, why is it our trumpet has been blown over and over again, and there has been no blessing? Is it not because our lips say one thing, and our lives something else? And if this is the case, how can we expect blessing?

We are further told that Gideon's little band were to shout; and it seems to me that that shout was not so much to have an effect upon the Midianites, as upon themselves. And when we go forth fighting for the Lord, whether in public or private, may we shout in our hearts! There is a dear friend who, when praying before he is about to preach, always thanks God for the blessing that is going to be given. It seemed as though he laid hold of God with such power and faith, that he went with full expectation, and was able to shout even before the victory was given. If we go forth in this spirit, our Father will really honour us for trusting Him. And now, doing all this, we are told that these men were "faint, yet pursuing." Oh that we may really pursue, and not be cast down by difficulties and hindrances!

I want you next to notice the great hindrance that arose at this time. The men of Ephraim complained that they had not been summoned to the battle when Gideon went out to fight, and they chode with him sharply. There is a lesson for us here. These Ephraimites were true men. They had done good service in the field, capturing two of the princes, but they complained that they were not called earlier. How many of God's children are there who have got this spirit of the Ephraimites. They are not satisfied with the position that the Lord has given them, or that particular work to which God has called them, but they are the chiding ones—what I may call "the jealous Christians." Let us eschew this spirit, and do the work, faithfully and well, that the Lord has given us to do. How did these 300 men deal with the difficulty? They didn't deal with it at all, but left it to Gideon, and, dear friends, may we just leave our difficulties to our Gideon. Yes, when we meet with fault-finding and chiding Christians, and with those who are jealous, may we just leave the whole matter with Jesus. He knows how to deal with it. But how did Gideon deal with it? He remonstrated with them; but how lovingly does Jesus speak to his quarrelsome, jealous, and envious ones! He knows how to give the soft answer which turneth away wrath. Now, we are further told that when these 300 men who were "faint, yet pursuing," came to Succoth, they appealed to the men of the city for help, and were refused, chiefly, as it seems, because it was even yet doubtful to which side victory would finally incline. How much does this conduct represent that pursued by many Christians. "We are not quite sure," they say, "that the movement will be popular, and we do not like to risk our money or our own character in anything that we are not quite sure of. When we see that the movement is popular, and that you are on the winning side, then we will cast in our lot with you, and not before."

Is not that what many of God's saints are saying now? They are just hanging back, and waiting till the cause of Christ is popular, and you will wait a long time if you wait till then. The religion of Christ was not popular when He was here. It has not been popular since, and I believe it never will be in this dispensation. No, no! You must not mind being unpopular if you want to be a servant of the Lord.

How did Gideon deal with the men of Succoth? They laughed at Gideon, and in this they represent another class of Christians, who try to throw cold water on the schemes of other labourers. It is said in chap. viii. 16 that he taught the men of Succoth with briers and with thorns, and destroyed the tower of the city. Our Jesus can deal severely as well as speak tenderly, and He knows exactly what each one needs. If any one of us is hanging back, and afraid to come out decidedly for God, take care that the briers and the thorns are not sent to teach us.

We read in the book of Psalms, "I will guide thee with mine eye." That is the guidance that the Lord prefers to give to his people; but if we do not consent to be guided with the eye, let us look out for the bit and bridle; and if we are not willing to cast in our lot with the Lord, if there is some tower of pride, self-seeking, or worldliness, the Lord will break it down, and send the briers and the thorns to teach us, and those lessons are very bitter. Let us remember it is said, with reference to God's people, "our God is a consuming fire," and our God can consume our towers.

What was the end of "faint, yet pursuing"? Success. Yes, believers, pursuing onward, upward, homeward, heavenward, we shall conquer because of our Gideon, because of our Jesus.

We are further told in this chapter that the enemies of the Lord were defeated, and so our God will give us success. We need not be cast down. We shall be more than conquerors through Him that loved us; and you may notice a contrast here. These Israelites asked Gideon to reign over them, and he refused. Our Jesus will reign over us for ever and ever, and we shall reign with Him up there in glory, and that is what we are looking forward to. Let each one of us ask ourselves these questions, "Am I a true Israelite yet? Am I one of the Lord's own people? Am I a saved one yet? Have I been born again of the Holy Ghost?" and if by God's grace I can say "Yes," to these questions, then let me ask another, "Am I one of Gideon's three hundred? Have I surrendered to the Lord, and am I just willing to follow Him, for Him to lead me, and for Him to use me? Am I a pursuing one?" If so, we may look forward to victory!

"PLEASING GOD."

MR. S. A. BLACKWOOD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

You will find the words from which I purpose addressing you in Col. i. I suppose, dear Christian friends, that to please God is the very highest ideal of Christian life—one which all who profess and call themselves Christians profess to be aiming at, and, with more or less perseverance, follow after. Whenever we think of pleasing God, we can hardly help instinctively thinking of the only One who ever did please God perfectly on this earth in the past 6000 years, and who said, "The Father hath not left Me alone, for I do always those things which please Him;" and concerning whom that Father said, "This is my well-beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And then, when we think of that perfect example of pleasing God, and look upon our own deep imperfections, we are disheartened. I speak, I am sure, the experience of many who, after repeated efforts, think it impossible to do it, and in a kind of disappointed hopelessness postpone to the future and to another world the happiness which every true child of God longs for, and which to every heart that really loves his Father would be a very heaven upon earth.

And yet at times the testimony of some fellow-pilgrims, perhaps departed, or some passage of Scripture like the one I have read, the life of some fellow-traveller still in the flesh, the fragrance which comes from a life which is evident to us as that of one who pleases God, makes us again ask the question, "Is it quite impossible for us to please God?" There comes, wafted to us over the waters of the flood, 4000 years ago, some savour of the still fragrant life of one of whom the Holy Ghost has left this on record, that Enoch, before his translation, had this testimony, that "he pleased God."

Coming later down the stream of time, we hear of another speaking by the Holy Ghost, and writing to those to whom, if untrue, his words would have been a pretentious boast—"Whatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things which are pleasing in his sight." There we have two grand testimonies, Enoch before and John after the flood, both testifying to the fact that it is possible in the body to please God. And we have many statements in the Scriptures to the same effect. We are told that "when a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." The Lord spoke by the prophet Isaiah of those who chose the things that pleased Him. We read again that "the Lord taketh pleasure in those that fear Him, in them that hope in his mercy." We find the apostle writing to these Colossians that they should "walk worthy of God, unto all pleasing;" and to the Thessalonians that, as they received the Lord, they ought to walk, and to please Him, so that they should abound more and more. Thus we find scattered up and down Holy Writ passages bearing on this subject, and many testimonies that it is possible to please God. And so, though our experience has in the past contradicted this, yet we find everywhere recognized, even in the words we use so frequently in one of our collects, the possibility of the task—"Grant the help of thy grace, that in the keeping of thy commandments we may please Thee both in will and deed, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The testimony of our Scriptures, the language of our collects, the utterances of our prayers, the witness of men departed and alive, and the deep, unsatisfied yearning of our own hearts, all bear witness to the fact that it is possible to please God.

I speak upon the possibility of it, because I am sure that a very great burden rests upon many hearts from the fancied impossibility, and that the enemy of souls, and the accuser of the brethren in that way is most successful in bringing, as it were, a cloud of estrangement between the heart of the child and the face of his Father which is in heaven. I want, by God's grace, that cloud, if it exists upon any of our hearts to-night, to be removed by the power of his Spirit. I cannot conceive of anything more wretched than the life of a Christian who is continually weighed down by the thought that he is displeasing the One whom he loves above all others. What a depressing weight it is (to take even one illustration) for the servant to know or feel that, with all he can do, he cannot please his master; or the child, with all he can do, cannot please his parents. Just such a wretched life must be that of the Christian who feels that he is condemned, so to speak, by his temperament, his circumstances, or temptations, to a life of continually displeasing God. Oh, dear friends, it is possible to please Him, and He has left a record in his holy Word of how we ought to do it. One way is by trusting Him. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Do not you like to be trusted by those whom you love? And do not our Father and our Redeemer like to be trusted? God is glad when we trust Him. Perhaps there may be one here to-night who has never trusted Him. Well, it is in the power of such an one to please God to-night. How? By accepting his great gift to you—Jesus, the Son of his love. You never can please God till you have taken Christ, in whom He is well pleased. That is the beginning, and you must begin at the beginning by taking and trusting Jesus, in whom all fulness dwells. God has given Him to you. He will never give Him a bit more than He has, never; but He beseeches you to take that Christ, and in Him obtain the title-deeds of glory. And when you take Him, what happens then? Oh, look at the picture Jesus our Lord himself has given! He tells us that, when a sinner repents, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God; and the angels get every spark of their joy from God. Whenever one sinner is saved, then the angels are glad. If we begin to please God by trusting Him, a life of faith also pleases Him.

I should say, then, in the second place, that we may please God in a very simple way, by giving Him our company; and that is what Enoch did. We read that Enoch walked with God, and that he pleased God. Oh how easily God, then, is pleased! He is not a hard Master. He is not a Father who is always scrutinizing to find out something displeasing. No; He loves to look upon those things which delight Him, and nothing delights Him so much as to walk with Him. Why, there are repeated exhortations in the Bible to this effect. If you will walk very close to Him, you will not displease Him. Oh what a blessed thing to think that our Father is so easily pleased! Why, my little child of three years of age, when she takes my hand, toddles round the garden: that gives me pleasure; and "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him."

Then there is another way in which we may please God, and that is by coming to Him. He comes to us first, and then He asks us to come to Him; and when we do so, He is well pleased. It is the burnt-offering that pleases God. We read in Psalm li, "Then shalt Thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt-offering and whole burnt-offering, upon thine altar." God is pleased when you give Him yourself, when you give Him your heart, when you give Him your life, when you say, and realize it—

"Just as I am, Thy love unknown
Has broken every barrier down;
Now to be Thine, yea, Thine alone,
O Lamb of God, I come!"

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." God says so. It is more blessed to give yourself back to God than even to receive God's gift. The life that goes on giving and yielding itself up to God, that finds increasingly how blessed a thing it is to give—that life pleases God.

Remember, then, dear friends, these three things—it is pleasing God to trust Him, to walk with Him, and to yield ourselves to Him; and then we shall find it true that whatsoever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things which are pleasing in his sight. If you find these difficult things to do, just cast yourself upon God. We read, "It is God that worketh in you, to will and to do of his good pleasure." And, again, in Heb. xiii. we have it still more clearly stated—"Now the God of peace make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you" (you cannot work it in yourselves) "that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ." God certainly is able to please Himself, and He pleases Himself in the persons of his people, first by giving to them Jesus Christ his Son, then by filling them with his holy Word, and then working in them that which is well-pleasing in his sight.

The speaker closed with a fervent appeal to his hearers to consecrate themselves during this year, on the threshold of which they now stood, to the blessed privilege of pleasing God.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

REV. J. G. GREGORY, M.A., AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

The subject which is placed in my hand whereon to speak to-night is one of paramount importance. It is the subject of the prayer of our dear Lord—"Fellowship with God." Do we who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ realize that fellowship? Are we living in the true recognition of it? Are we living in the power of it? Do we understand anything of it? Is it ours? There is not, there may not be, a believer who is not in free union with Christ, and if he be in union with Christ, he is in union with God. It is not mere fellowship or companionship; it is a fellowship of actual union. What a mystery this fellowship is. I, a poor sinner, abiding here in the midst of a sinful world, and yet in actual union with the King of kings, the Lord of truth, the very God of holiness. Mystery of mysteries, marvel of marvels, manifest love of loveliness! Oh, what a God is our God! We have said this fellowship was a subject of our Lord's prayer as given in John xvii., and I will ask you just to note a point or two in our Saviour's recognition of his fellowship as there put before us. The twentieth verse of that chapter says, "Neither pray I for these alone." Not only for these my disciples round about Me here, "but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word." Dear friends, it is for you and for me. Now mark the burden of the supplication, "that they all may be one." You see the marvellous oneness here—the mystery of mysteries—"As Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." Shall we speak of security here? Let us rather keep to the wonderful love. The power also is spoken of—"That the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." The great future fellowship is spoken of—"And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are."

And now note further: "I in them, and they in Me, that they may be made perfect in one." Now the power given: "That the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." Oh, this is not a mere doctrine, a mere beauty of Scripture truth to be talked about. No, it is a reality of heavenly power which will tell upon the world around us. It is a reality of heavenly power which manifestly distinguishes God's people from the world, which marks them out as his, and more than his, as abiding in his very presence and his very power. Yea, as more than that, as having within themselves an abiding Deity of God moving in them, through them, and using them, and keeping them by his own Almighty power. Mystery of mysteries! Have we noted well this power of our Saviour? If we have, oh! have we been living in the power which is here spoken of? Have we dealt with the words of the Lord as if He had been praying in vain, as if He had been dealing in his supplication to his Father with unrealities. And oh, if we have noted this passage of our dear Saviour, have we not been living in the joy of this wondrous mystery of fellowship? Have we not laid our hands upon the words which tell of it so blessedly, and gone on our way praising and blessing our God day by day? Oh, if not, how have we been reading this precious word of our God's truth? And yet the Spirit was not given. A fresh mystery there was concerning this fellowship and darkness, and in apprehension concerning it when Jesus uttered this prayer. It was a prayer concerning those who, in the gospel days in which we live, should believe on Him through his apostles' word. It belongs to us. All was mystery, then, and wherefore? None could apprehend this fellowship in its power, in its reality, and in its rejoicing, excepting there was the union it spoke of established by the mighty power of the Spirit of God, and that union could not be established until the grand centre of the union should be manifest, and until from the dead, Christ should arise in mighty power, that the whole of the Church quickened together therewith might stand forth in the blessedness of its light, and show to the world that evidence of a living Christ which should make it believe that God had sent Him, and had loved his people as He had loved that Son of his eternal tenderness.

If we turn from the words of the Saviour to those of Paul in the Ephesians, the fact of the fellowship is there dealt with. What is the great burden of the Epistle but the subject of fellowship? It is all about the fellowship. It deals with the effect, the work, the advancement in the grace thereof, with the light and joy thereof, and with the responsibility thereof. The first chapter gives you a sketch of the mighty effect of the fellowship, and it bursts forth, as it terminates, into the blessedness of a prayer which reaches higher than the highest heaven, and it tells the believer that the fellowship is abiding. It goes down to the veriest depths, and tells that the love of God visited the believer there, took him from thence, brought him into union with the living Christ, influenced there the power and the reality of the fellowship, and led him on from grace to grace, and glory to glory, and filled him with blessing. But mark. The apostle speaks of a mystery. He had told us of the grand fellowship, the precious blood bringing those who are afar off into the closest contact with God; and then he tells us how the mystery of the power of this doctrine of a risen Christ was hidden from ages and generations among the things which even angels desired to look into; and then he brings forth the Church as the instrument in God's hands, not for instructing only the world around concerning the fact, but instructing angels too, that unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God. All concerning the mystery of the fellowship, or the "fellowship of the mystery," as the apostle rather calls it. But it is the fellowship of the mystery of the love. It amounts to the same thing, whether we call it the mystery of God's marvellous dealings and love in the fellowship, or the fellowship of union with Christ, and with one another in Him, according to God's marvellous love.

But do we, in a word, want to find the excellence of this fellowship? I think we may find it in the 1st Epistle to Timothy, third chapter and last verse. Remember, he had been speaking about the Church—the pillar and the ground of the truth—the pillar and the ground standing upon the foundation, Jesus. No pillar, no ground, without that; because of the finished work of the Lord, because of the shed blood, because of the complete sacrifice, because of the entirety of the justification, because of the risen Saviour having advanced to the highest post of glory in the heavens, there to be the grand Centre, to which the people of the Lord, by the power of the Spirit, should flock. Therefore, and therefore only, the pillar and the ground of the truth. Having spoken concerning this, he adds, "And, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness." Godliness, in the sense of actual life, and our actual standing in the position which God has given us. "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness."

God—or rather we will not use that word here, because scholars tell us very plainly, and now it is perfectly evident, that the word God does not occur in the original; it is either who or which: which will refer to the mystery; who will refer to the mystery which is Christ. "Great is the mystery of godliness" manifest in the flesh of Christ; justified, proved in the spirit of Christ. Now mark! This mystery is the union, the fellowship, the Church, the pillar, the ground, and the truth based upon Christ, in union with Him—its power, life, righteousness, holiness—all. "Great is the mystery of godliness" manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, who wondered as they beheld, and who wonder as they behold it now preached unto the Gentiles. Believed on in the world; and when the last saint from out the world is gathered in—what then? The whole mystery, the wondrous union with Christ, the entire Church gathered in the embrace of Christ, life and righteousness, and received up into glory. "The glory Thou hast given Me, I have given them, that they may be one as we are one, I in them, Thou in Me," to the intent and glorious end that they may be made perfect in one. Oh! glorious mystery!

Shall we take one passage more from Revelation? The 4th and 5th chapters bring before us most glorious truths. Let our eyes be exalted for a moment to the centre of the throne. There, exalted far above even the angels, sits a Lamb as it had been slain, in the midst of the throne. So read we; but what read we in chap. iv. 6? "Four beasts in the midst of the throne, and the Lamb in the midst of the throne." The four living creatures and the Lamb occupying the same place. Who are these occupying the self-same place as He who sits far above the angels? Whom do they present before the eyes and the understanding of the Church? Let us see. The book was taken and opened by the Lamb in the midst of the throne, for none other was found worthy to do so. The other passages in this very book of Revelation prove to us that this reading contained in the 7th and three following verses of this fifth chapter, is right.

"Thou hast redeemed us," is the song of these four living creatures together, "out of every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue; and hast made us kings and priests unto God thy Father." Oh, yes, dear friends, we are here, the redeemed out of our England. Here we are the monuments of the power of the atoning blood. Here we are poor sinners. God of his great mercy loved us when we were dead in sins; and whom He hath quickened together with Christ, and raised up together, He hath made to sit in heavenly places with Him. There is no doubt about it but that it is we who are meant. Wondrous glory! Oh! the fact of the fellowship. It is no ordinary matter. It is no matter just to be spoken of and passed away. No, dear friends, it is far more. It is a reality of everlasting oneness with the Son of God's love, as now He abides in the resurrection of the life and glory—overlasting oneness with Him, though He sits upon the very throne at the right hand of the eternal power. What then?

Have we only the fact of the fellowship to deal with. We have far more. We must speak about the power of this fellowship. Here, indeed, many of us stand still. We talk about the fact. Oh! thousands of Christians have their lips full of glorious assertions about the fact of the fellowship. They can and do follow us in ordinary conversation. They speak of the way in which we have been led, but when it comes to the matter of the life, that the world may know that God has sent Christ, and has loved the Church redeemed by his blood as He has loved his Son, then it is another matter. When it is recorded that God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, to shine in our hearts, should be therein abiding, that we may show forth the brightness of his glory in the person of Jesus Christ, there is a silence. This is what we want to come to. This is the matter for our day—living in the power of the living Saviour, as if that fellowship were not a mere letter-word, but as if it were a matter in which the Holy Spirit of the living Christ had his daily and hourly interest in every heart. My friends, how is it? I put it to those who believe in the Holy Ghost. How is it that we have the Spirit of the living God in our midst—dwelling in us? Is it not because we are in union with Christ? Is it not just simply dependent upon the reality of the fellowship of which we have spoken? Even so, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the living God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" And what is the temple of the living God but the body of the living Christ. "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it." A mighty temple raised up that it may be to the glory of God. Who would not inhabit it, that glorious possession; that power of eternity? Now, let us lay hold of that. Ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God is in you. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own, but ye are bought with a price;" therefore, let this be your work. It may be. Oh! wondrous as it seems, it may be, and it is your privilege, as it is your work. "Glorify God in your body and spirit, which are God's." Are we living up to this? We are getting far beyond doctrine. We have got into that which is for manifestation in the hearing and of exhibition in the life, which tells its tale of oneness with Christ before the world, and cannot be silent; that speaks forth with a mighty power and heavenly love; which tells the wondrous things which the world knows nothing of, and can know nothing of; carrying this blessed stream beside the wickedness that surrounds us, and leading on to the beauty of holiness, to adorn the doctrine which tells of the love of Christ.

I ask again, Are we living in the power? Oh, my dear friends, what should be too great for the believer? What can you ask Him that He will not fulfil? What mountain of difficulty shall there be which the believer now cannot overcome? What hindrance shall there be which shall prevent his going onward, yea, from glory to glory, until he enters with that abundant entrance into the kingdom of God's wondrous light? Oh how apt we are to shrink back from little cares, and troubles, and difficulties, and say, "I cannot meet them!" How apt we are just to shrug our shoulders, and turn aside, and say, "Nay, but this duty is too great for me, and this care is too crushing for my poor, weak soul; and this is a heavy burden, that I cannot bear." Leave the "I" out of the question. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" Is not the Holy Ghost God? Is not that the very body of Christ? Does not the Holy Spirit signify manifested power, though it be in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be evident as of God, and not of you and me? Oh leave the "I" out! Dear brethren and sisters in Christ Jesus, these are days of work, but how should we work? Not by bringing our poor puny powers into the battle-field, or into the place of labour, but by resting on the Lord in a calm, abiding faith, taking Him at his word, grasping his hand, looking into his face, beholding it meeting ours, following the guiding power thereof, until, led onward and onward, we glorify Him, and the cup is full with the joy of his beloved.

One word upon the joy of the fellowship. "The glory Thou hast given Me I have given them." Oh, blessed be God, there is that before us, and a Christ ever with us, and a God at our right hand, yea, with us, yea, in us, and we in Him! Behold the twofold union! Oh it is so blessed to realize that—"I in them, and they in Me, that they may be made perfect in one, that they may be made one in us." A twofold view so mighty, so blessed, so enduring, who can snap the wondrous chain? Who can sever us from a God like this? Who can point to a care, and say, "That is thine." Nay, it is the Lord's. Who can point to a temptation, and say, "That comes too hard upon Thee!"? It comes upon the Lord; it is not upon me. "I have been crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me"; and now, He having given Himself to me, I may lay my hand upon Him. He is ours—a power, a righteousness, a holiness, a life, a glory, a blessed prospect, a passing from glory to glory, until, in the full blaze of eternal light, we enter where He is, and sit with Him for ever and for ever.

"Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, rejoice," and let your joy be full, oh, full of Christ, and your hearts be full of the rejoicing which tells of heaven! And begin the new song, which is all joy, and sing it lustily, and with a good courage, amid all your cares here; for the Lord is your power, and with the Lord you are, and He is in you of a truth, and ye in Him, and your fellowship is that which never can be severed by any power of earth, of man, of hell, of Satan.

God give us the blessing of his fellowship, for Christ's sake!

PRAYER.

MR. BROWNLOW NORTH, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

Our Lord tells us in Luke xviii. 1, that "men ought always to pray." My subject, then, to-night is prayer—in this Week of Prayer surely a suitable one. Man is a wanting animal, a needy animal. He comes into the world in want, and the first thing he does is to begin to pray. The little child, as soon as it is born, begins to cry to get its need supplied. It is a needy little thing, and it begins to pray, and so man goes on praying, praying, praying all through his life for that which he thinks he wants. You are all praying people. Prayer is not the mere saying of words. Many people profess to pray who are the biggest impostors that ever existed, who never uttered a prayer in their lives, and yet they said prayers from the time they were little children. But prayer is a conduct. The prayer of a man's heart is that which he lives to try and get. What do you live to try and get? That which you find, that which you desire most, and that which you seek after habitually, from day's beginning to day's end, and from year's beginning to year's end. No sooner do men get one thing than they begin to pray for something else, and then again for something else. Can't you remember when you prayed for a little cart and horse in a toy-shop? I can; and I can remember when I got it I saw a bigger cart and horse at the same toy-shop. I didn't then care about the little one, but went to my mother and told her I knew of a better one, and I prayed to her for it, for she was my god, and she granted my request. And then it went on to something else. So it was with you, and if it has never been witnessed of you in heaven, "Behold he prayeth" (because none of these are registered as prayers in heaven), your god is an idol, and you will live a wanting animal to the end of time, and through all eternity, even though you get, one after another, everything you set your heart upon.

Now, who is your god? This is a week of prayer. You all come up professing, by the very act of coming, that the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is your God, and that you want to pray to Him, don't you? But do you pray to Him? You have put yourself into the attitude of prayer since you came into this hall. Do you think it has been witnessed of you in heaven, "He prayeth"? If it has not, it has been witnessed of you in heaven, "Behold, he blasphemeth." You have either prayed, or taken God's name in vain. I do not believe there is greater blasphemy goes up from this earth into the ears of God than that which goes up from people who put themselves in the attitude of prayer, take God's name into their lips, and do not pray one bit. We have just heard of the Mystery of mysteries. We have had a pastor to feed us. Methinks (if I have any sphere in the Church of God) mine is not the office of a pastor. It is the office of one who goes to those—of whom there are so many—who would not go to heaven if they were to die, and to tell them that there is a Saviour, and a prayer-hearing God, and to direct them, God helping me, to seek his Spirit, and to believe in his salvation. Do you believe you have honestly and truly asked Jesus Christ to forgive you and sanctify you? and does your own life prove to you that you so believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, that you are seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness? You know perfectly.

People talk about not knowing whether they are saved or not. You know whether you live for heaven or earth. You are getting on in life. It once seemed very long to you till you would be as old as you are to-day; but it has come, and just as to-day has come, and the beginning of this 1875 has come, so the particular moment in time will come when you will be standing before God, to have your everlasting portion fixed. Are you now praying, and proving to yourself that God is hearing your particular prayer by the Spirit which He has given you, that you may have a home in heaven?

There are several things absolutely necessary to true prayer. First of all there is only one way to come to God, for the Lord Jesus Christ says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

We will take private prayer. I want you to examine yourselves whether you think you have ever prayed. There are many people very high up in doctrine; but when it comes to the life they seem to come short. I believe there are many people who are exceedingly deep in spiritual things, so far as consecration goes, and yet many of these have never had it witnessed of them in heaven, "Behold, he prayeth." Assume your own chamber, assume your door shut, and yourself going to prayer as you did before you came here, for a blessing on your own soul, a blessing on the speaker, a blessing on the people; of course you did. Did you?

The first thing, I hold, we have to do, is to remember we are going to God. What am I going to do? Going to God. How can I go? Through Jesus Christ. What do I mean by "through Jesus Christ"? Well, my sins had made a barrier between me and God; so that I might have been as anxious as possible to go to God and pray, but I could not get there; but Jesus Christ put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and made a door, a way through the rent veil of his own flesh, by which I and you, and any poor sinner, can go to God. I think of the first. How did I go to my room? Through the door? How am I to come to God? Through Jesus Christ. Literally, you cannot get to God in any other way. What am I going to God for? To ask Him for things that I require. It is useless to pray for what you do not require. Multitudes go and pray for the Holy Spirit, but you know perfectly well, if there is a man or a woman here who has not got the Holy Spirit witnessing with his heart at this moment that he is living for heaven more than earth, that God will give that man and woman the Holy Spirit; but they will not ask. A person will ask Him, "O God, give me thy Holy Spirit." God says, "I give Him to you, but you won't have Him." He comes and knocks at the door of your heart, and you say, "I want Him to go that way," and you insult Him; and practically you said, "Get thee behind me, Holy Spirit," if I may so speak, and "Come world, come flesh, come devil." Now there can be no true power without you really and truly want the things that you profess to ask God for. It is little more than twenty years ago since I first bowed my knees in prayer; and a very short time after it came upon me never to ask God for anything I did not want. I remember a friend sitting with me some five or six weeks after, and asking me if I ever prayed for the coming of Christ; and I said, "No;

I should be afraid. Suppose He were to come, I should be in a dreadful fright." "Well," he said, "you are told to do it." We talked, and he showed me that it is a most positive command to pray for the hastening of his coming. I was on my knees soon after, and came to the end of my prayers, and he said, "Pray for the coming of Christ;" and I said, "Do I want it? It is hypocrisy to pray for it if I don't." He said, "Pray God to make you wish it. Tell Him the truth." My thought was, "I have accepted his atonement; I have put on his burdens; if I am not saved now I never can be. Come, Lord Jesus." And I prayed, for I wanted it.

So in the same way ask yourself if you want it. As sure as there is a God, prayer is the greatest weapon to prevail with God that God has put into a poor sinner's hand. I do not believe there is a saint on earth who has any conception of what God has given to man when He gave him prayer. Either there is no God at all, or it is a real transaction, a real speaking to a real Person, who can do not only what we ask, but exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. Ask, then, through Jesus Christ; and before you put up your petition, ask, "Do I wish it?"

It is absolutely necessary to true prayer that there should be two people. There can be no such thing as praying by yourself. It is absolutely necessary that there should not only be the person who prays, but the Person who is prayed to. "Without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to God must believe that He is." Now when you put yourself in the attitude of prayer, do you by faith see the Lord beside you? Never put yourself in the attitude of prayer again without laying hold of this great fundamental truth: "The Person I am going to speak to is present. He made my eye, and He made my ear; and He can hear, and He can see." You pray for what you really desire to have; and when you have asked Him, do not look at what you feel about it, but look at what God says about it.

You who are unsaved, you have not Christ; you have no reason to believe in your own heart of hearts that you are a member of that body which is the temple of the Holy Ghost. You know you have not. You do, in a sort of dreamy faith, profess to believe that, if you die as you are, you will be lost; but your soul cleaves to the dust—you love sin. You would take Christ this minute if you could keep sin as well. If sin could only be retained and Christ secured there would not be an infidel in this world; but you know the thing is impossible. Go and tell God this if it be your real feeling, and when He speaks to you, take his answer for his word. Does He say He will forgive you for Christ's sake, or does He not? If you can put your finger on the chapter and verse (and it is in the Bible), do so; but if you cannot, give no sleep to your eyes till you have found it. Put your finger on the spot and plead it, and try if you cannot do that thing to-day and to-morrow which you could not do yesterday. Through Jesus Christ only ask for what you want. Tell your diseases in the same way to God as you would tell your natural diseases to your physician, and then, when you speak, remember that when He who made the ear hears you, that He is present. More than that, that He has given you his answer, and that that answer is in his Word, and that you are to take your answer from his Word according to what He says, and what you say. I pray God, and I know He hears me—that He will bless the few words that I have been trying to speak to you, exceeding abundantly above all that I ask or think.

THE JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.—An earnest and laborious missionary to the Jews has for fifteen years worked in the neighbourhood of Victoria Park, amid many difficulties, and comparatively little encouragement. After an earnest appeal for his beloved people, he says: "Now in this cold winter, I want clothing for them. Will not Christians send me their left-off apparel and any help which is needed to keep up a Mission-hall and a workshop? There are so many Christian householders, is it too much to ask that they should encourage me with the doing of the general repairs, such as glazing, painting, paper-hanging, etc.? At present we are doing very little for want of funds and materials. Let me not any longer apply the words of the prophet, 'They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.' Any help can be sent to D. C. Joseph, Bonner-road, Victoria Park; Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., Highbury; Dr. W. H. Rule, Croydon; Messrs. Bevan, Barclay, and Co., 54, Lombard-street, City; or to the office of THE CHRISTIAN.

TO be strong in faith two things are needed—a very low esteem of ourselves, and a very high esteem of Christ.

NEW YEAR'S EVE IN THE DRILL-HALL, GLASGOW.

BREAKFASTS AND DINNERS FOR THE POOR.

The meeting on Hogmanay night, in the Drill-hall, Greendyke-street, was one of the most remarkable that has been witnessed in our city. The supper-hour was ten o'clock, but long before then the hall was filled with the expectant guests, while large numbers who could not find admission thronged the entrance. The company consisted mainly of those who have been attending the Sabbath morning breakfasts, who, on one of these meetings, when 1900 came together, were supplied with tickets. In addition to these, 400 tickets were distributed through lodging-houses, among the frequenters of the kilns, and persons attending Sabbath and week-evening meetings in the Drill-hall.

While the large company were assembling in the Drill-hall, the singing, by the choir of ladies from the Ewing-place meetings, engaged the pleased attention of the audience, but was interrupted for a little through a somewhat amusing incident. One of the workers had discovered a small bottle of whisky in the possession of one of the men, and without much persuasion induced him to part with it, when it was passed along to the platform, to Mr. James Scott. Mr. Scott held it up, when it was greeted with great cheering, as some spoil taken from the enemy, and afterwards put away where it could do no harm.

The assemblage was one suggestive of mingled thoughts to the spectator. About one-third were females, and two-thirds males, including a large proportion of boys. The poor folks varied much in their appearance. Some were ill-clad, with pinched features and sad expression of countenance; others were more comfortably attired, and seemed to have known better days. There were not a few intellectual-looking faces and foreheads among the men, while ignorance, want, and vice were traceable in others. The most touching sight, however, was that afforded in the young people, amongst whom, in a setting of rags, was seen many a sweet face, indicative of good qualities that might be developed by proper care and training.

The supper consisted of large plum-puddings, of which there were 281, weighing 1337 pounds, which had been made by different lady friends, and forwarded to particular residences, appointed as depôts, from which they had been removed to the hall in the course of the day, and re-heated.

The scene was one of much animation and interest, rendered still more so by the ready way in which so many lent a hand, doctors of divinity and venerable elders voluntarily assisting in the operations. The crowded hall, as respects temperature, was a wonderful change from the atmosphere outside. Without, the air was piercingly cold; within, there was tropical heat; but all seemed to enjoy themselves notwithstanding. While the puddings were being served, the choir sang, "The Lord will provide;" followed at intervals by "There is a fountain filled with blood;" "Hold the fort," and other hymns. Dr. McEwan subsequently offered a brief and impressive prayer. There was some difficulty in maintaining due quiet in such a gathering, but all things considered, it was wonderful how well they behaved.

A second service of tea and cake followed. "Come to the Saviour," one of several hymns, the words of which, in large letters, were on sheets suspended behind the platform, was then sung, succeeded by "I am so glad," "When He cometh to make up his jewels," and other pieces, into the singing of which the company, as they had formerly done, entered with great heartiness, some of the little folks noticeably being familiar with the words of all the hymns, and joining in them with much strength of lung.

It was now near twelve o'clock, and brief prayers were offered by Dr. Wallace and the Rev. George Stewart, in which reference was made to the goodness of God during the closing year, and a yearning desire expressed that He would wake this, the last night, the crowning night of spiritual blessing. As soon as twelve was reached, and the hands of the clock marked the commencement of the new year, Mr. Scott earnestly prayed, seeking pardon for the past, and grace for the future. Every one present seemed to feel the solemnity of the occasion.

After a few words of Christian counsel, founded on the last clause of the text on the admission card, "Come, for all things are now ready," Dr. Wallace mentioned that on a recent Sabbath he had taken with him to an evening meeting in his church one of the breakfast jugs used at the Drill-hall, and exhibiting it to his hearers there, had expressed a wish that they would put some money into it for the breakfast fund. An opportunity was given for the people as they dismissed placing their contributions in the jug, when £8 was deposited, which was divided between the Drill-hall breakfasts and Mr. Quarrier's Home. Dr. Wallace lifted one of the jugs in which the tea had been served, and a hint which he good-humouredly gave, that it might be filled like the other, was taken up with much spirit. A gentleman threw in a £1 note, other subscriptions followed, and with what was simultaneously collected by one of the lads, the sum of £9 6s. 2d. was raised in a few minutes.

The interesting proceedings were brought to a termination about half-past twelve, by Mr. Keay pronouncing the benediction. At the close, it was found that fully 200 had no place of shelter for the night. All the young men who sleep more or less regularly at the kilns were there, and petitioned that they might be allowed to sit in the hall till morning. As the night was very cold, it was considered dangerous to turn them out to the streets, especially as they had for hours been sitting in a warm atmosphere. One or two gentlemen remained to keep them company. A corner was cleared, and seats put close together were used as beds. After prayer, they got into position as soon as possible. It was a considerable time before many got off to sleep, incessant coughing of a considerable number, who evidently have not long to brave the storms of life, being very disturbing. As the Drill-hall cannot be utilized for sleeping purposes, the committee have resolved to do their utmost to secure sleeping room for all who are houseless during this inclement weather.

Yesterday, by nine o'clock, about 1400 assembled for breakfast, whilst about 1200 were supplied with soup at mid-day. As breakfast will be provided for about 2000 every morning, and dinner for 1500, the committee will feel obliged if missionaries, Bible-women, etc., will give the hint to the very poor with whom they come in contact.

The committee, encouraged by the liberal contributions already received, mean to establish organizations of the same kind in other needy districts of the city as soon as suitable halls can be secured. As the work is so extensive, and involving daily attendance, they cordially invite the co-operation of all Christian workers.—North British Daily Mail.

FROM E. H. HUNTER.

It is cheering to know that these meetings are not only being used to relieve the temporal need of the poor, but the gospel in all its simplicity, being ever kept before them, many, who came for the bread that perisheth, have gone away the happy possessors of the Bread of Life, and are now seeking by their lives to show that they have indeed passed from death unto life. In visiting the low lodging-houses, and among the poor of the city, I am constantly meeting with those who have attended the breakfast meetings, and nearly all express their gratitude, not only for the bountiful provision made for their wants, but for the simple loving words which are constantly spoken to them. One case was that of a poor woman; she had been brought up a Roman Catholic, but in her distress she went to the morning meeting, enjoyed her breakfast, and afterwards listened to the gospel, as she confessed, for the first time. It seemed a strange tale to her, but she believed it. The same evening she came to another meeting, and there was enabled to cast herself entirely upon Christ as her Saviour, and went away rejoicing.

The children are not forgotten either; every Sunday at two o'clock they are gathered together, and enjoy a jugful of good hot soup and a piece of bread. It is a most painful sight to look round upon so many hundred of these poor children, who, alas! are brought to this state, not by their own folly, but by the sins of their parents.

OPENING OF A NEW MISSION-HALL IN BRISTOL.—“Hitherto hath the Lord helped us” for the past; “My grace is sufficient for thee” for the present; “The Lord will provide” for the future. We purpose opening our new gospel-hall (D.V.) on Friday, Jan. 15, with a social tea for believers at five, and a public meeting at seven, to be followed by a week of special services, in which the various ministers and others of the city are expected to take part. Since the gale of Nov. 29, which blew down our tent, the congregation have had no place as a substitute to gather in. We are now about to take possession of the shell, which will accommodate about 600 or 700, and wait upon the Lord to send in what will be needed to erect galleries, vestries, class-rooms, and schools. J. A. VICARY.

GREAT MEETING IN HALIFAX.

On January 7th, a great gathering of all evangelical denominations was held in the Mechanics' Hall, Halifax, for the purpose of stirring up, by prayer and fellowship, the spiritual life of the churches of the town. The spacious hall was crowded to excess, at least 1200 being present, and ministers in great numbers were on the platform, representing all the churches in the town. The excellent Mayor of Halifax, E. Crossley, Esq., conducted the meeting.

After singing a hymn and prayer, the Rev. W. J. Townsend explained the circumstances that had led to the calling of the meeting; after which interesting intelligence was given by Revs. D. Macgregor and B. Mitchell, of Manchester, respecting the work there and in other places. Various other addresses were given by local clergymen.

Such a meeting, perhaps, was never held in the town; it was a gathering of the best life of the Churches, and a powerful devotional feeling pervaded the assembly. The tears ran down many cheeks as the affecting cases of conversion, which had occurred in Manchester and elsewhere, were related. The singing was characterized by great feeling and heartiness; and a unanimous determination seemed to animate the assembly to seek a higher spiritual life and the realization of Divine power in the Churches.

GULIELMUS.

THE LORD'S WORK IN WATERFORD.

During the recent visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Dublin, the ministers representing all evangelical denominations, and others who went up to be present at the convention, on returning, agreed to hold united special evangelistic services, and for that purpose secured the use of the Protestant Hall, which is entirely a non-sectarian building. For four weeks the meetings have been held every Tuesday evening, and have been well attended. Many have professed to have found peace in believing, and are now rejoicing in the Lord Jesus.

The after-meetings for inquiry and prayer have been most refreshing, the Spirit manifestly blessing the anxious souls. A united prayer-meeting is also held every Monday evening, at which a great many requests for prayer are read out, and thanksgiving has been returned to God for many answers received. During the coming week a prayer-meeting is to be held every day at noon, and in the evenings several special evangelistic meetings. We believe the united efforts of God's people to exalt Jesus only will be accompanied with the power of the Spirit, and result in a great ingathering of precious souls.

CENTRAL NOON MEETING,

MOOGATE-STREET HALL.

The following are the subjects for the third week in Jan. :—

DATE.	SUBJECT.	SPEAKER.
Th., Jan. 14.	“Laying aside every weight” (Heb. xii. 1.)	Rev. Dr. Edmond.
Fri., „ 15.	—Buying and Selling (Prov. xx. 14; Amos vii. 5.)	G. Bowden.
Sat., „ 16.	—Boys and girls playing in the streets of Jerusalem (Zech. viii. 5.)	T. J. Meyer
Mon., „ 18.	—Reports.—“They went to their own company and reported” (Acts iv. 23)	Rev. G. T. Flindt.
Tues., „ 19.	—Jonathan's victory. The effects of one man's faith (1 Sam. xiv.)	Rev. David Jones.
Wed., „ 20.	—A soft answer (Prov. xv. 1)	Rev. E. D. Wilson.

The Committee of the Noon-day Prayer-meeting having offered Moogate-street Hall for Saturday afternoon children's services, Mr. Hill and other members of the Children's Evangelistic Band will (D.V.) hold the first service on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 23, at three o'clock. If any ladies would volunteer to make the services known in the neighbourhood, I should be glad to forward them a supply of small bills, but I hope also that many friends will bring children and young people from some little distance.

There must be a number of boarding-schools in Islington, etc., within an easy walk, and some Sunday-school teachers may be able to collect the children of their classes on the Saturday afternoon, and come with them. We ask that much prayer may be offered for a special blessing on this new effort on behalf of the young.

DAILY TEXTS.

"THY RIGHT HAND, O LORD, IS BECOME GLORIOUS IN POWER : THY RIGHT HAND, O LORD, HATH DASHED IN PIECES THE ENEMY."—EKOD. XV. 6.

Thurs. Jan. 14.—"Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low; and tread down the wicked in their place. Hide them in the dust together; and bind their faces in secret. Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee." "In the synagogue was a man whose right hand was withered."—Job xl. 12—14; Luke vi. 6.

Fri. 15.—"And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing (for she died), that she called his name Benoni (son of my sorrow); but his father called him Benjamin (son of the right hand)." "A Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief."
"Ye shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power."—Gen. xxxv. 18; Isa. liii. 3; Mark xiv. 62.

Sat. 16.—"Herod will seek the young child to destroy him...
Then Herod sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem... from two years old and under... Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not."
"Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy."—
Matt. ii. 13—18; Jer. xxxi. 16, 17.

Sun. 17.—"Why withdrawest Thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy bosom. For God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth." "Let thy hand be upon the Man of thy right hand, upon the Son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself. So will not we go back from Thee."—Psa. lxxv. 11; lxxx. 17.

Mon. 18.—"And of Benjamin he said, The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him; and the Lord shall cover Him all the day long, and He shall dwell between his shoulders."
"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto Me that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting."—Deut. xxxiii. 12; Micah
v. 2.

Tues. 19.—"Who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when He had by Himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."—Heb. i. 3.

Wed. 20.—"Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."—Heb. xii. 1, 2.

"I WILL REMEMBER THE YEARS OF THE RIGHT HAND OF THE MOST HIGH."—Psa. LXXVII. 10.

* Christ is the true Benjamin. The mother represents the human nature; the father, the divine nature. The mother calls Him Benoni and dies; the Father calls Him Benjamin, and raises Him, perfected through suffering, to his own right hand for ever.

CORRECTION.—In our issue of Jan. 7, it was stated that amongst the contributions to the purchase of the Museum for the Y. M. C. A., Manchester, was one of £500 from Mr. J. Stuart.
It should have been £5000.

BLACKHEATH.—Every Tuesday morning from nine o'clock to half-past, a few Christian friends meet for prayer in one of the small rooms in the Alexandra Hall. This prayer-meeting began some years ago, but from deaths and the removal of families, the number of friends has been reduced. The meeting is strictly undenominational, and praying people are invited.

LONDON ASSOCIATION FOR FEEDING THE AGED
AND SICK POOR.—A dinner of roast beef and plum pudding will be given to 1200 or 1300 people on Tuesday, Jan. 19, in the large rooms under Mr. Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle, kindly lent for the purpose. Tickets may be obtained by any interested in missionary work, of Mr. Dean, Boyson-road, Walworth. Two hundred portions will be sent to the homes of the sick. H. RUMBOLL.

MR. JOHN ASHWORTH.—The annual Tea was given lately at the Chapel for the Destitute, Rochdale; but our readers will be sorry to hear that for the first time for sixteen years Mr. Ashworth was absent through serious illness. A letter was read from him, and a feeling of deep sympathy was expressed for Mr. and Mrs. Ashworth under their affliction.
His closing words were:—"For many years as your minister I have presided over this, your annual meeting, but now all active labour in the vineyard of my Lord seems ended; the Master calls—I bow in submission to his will. On the day of my departure, if I shall not be able to say with Elisha, 'The chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof,' I shall be able to say with Paul, 'There is laid up for me a crown, and not for me only but for all that love His appearing.' I commend to you Mr. Calman, long my fellow worker amongst you, and now my successor;
him receive in the spirit of charity and love, and may the smile of heaven more and more rest upon the chapel and school for the destitute.—Yours in heavy affliction, JOHN ASHWORTH."

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAYER.—For a dear son in the Royal Artillery, who sails for India on the 15th inst.—On behalf of a dear father, who was some time since a confirmed drunkard, but has been by God's grace kept from it lately. He is now showing a wish for it again.—For two dear boys, who once loved the Saviour, that they may be brought back early this year.—For a mighty blessing on the reading of the Pocket Testaments which have been given, through the kindness of Christian friends, to all the Metropolitan Fire Brigade men and Salvage Corps.—On behalf of a young man whose besetting sin is intemperance, that he may be persuaded to give it up, and become a Christian.—For a young man, suffering from a dreadful disease, accompanied by mental despondency.—For one who was converted between six and seven years ago, and is now engaged in missionary work in one of the worst parts of London, but who has not assurance.—
For three dinners to be given to many hundred poor on January 15, 18, and 19; that God may meet with many souls and bless them.—By a Christian mother for grace to resist a sore temptation, and for more light in her dwelling.—For one who has long been sorely distressed by sinful and miserable thoughts, and who earnestly prays God to grant her a speedy deliverance from them.—For a father whose light no longer burns brightly, through habits of self-indulgence.—For a child of God, in physical weakness, and great mental distress, that if it be God's will, both may be removed.—For the restoration of a young mother, long laid aside.

PLACES.—That God would revive his work in Barton and neighbourhood.—That there may be a manifest token of God's blessing attending the preaching of the Word at East Brent, that the people may "come out" to hear the gospel.—For blessing on a week's Mission at West Drayton, Notts, to be held by Tom Jones, from January 17th.—For Cuddapah, India, and for those engaged in preaching Jesus there.—For an abundant blessing on a week's evangelistic meetings, to be held in Roscommon, Ireland, by J. George Watson, from January 18th.—For an outpouring of the Spirit during the stay of the squadron at Gibraltar, that the meetings held by officers and men may lead to the conversion of many souls, and that the daily mid-day prayer meeting may continue.—For God's blessing upon a new place lately opened in Naples, for preaching the gospel every night.—That the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Birmingham may be blessed to the spiritual good of its inhabitants.—For an awakening at Woolston, Southampton, amongst saints and sinners.—For a fit man to be chosen to fill the vicarage of St. Paul's, Sheffield, just become vacant.
—For blessing upon children's services about to be held in Congleton, by Mr. Spiers.

CONVERSIONS.—For an aged father in a false state of peace.
—For a Bible-class commenced on the first Sunday in this year, that a large room may be filled, and that the teacher may be filled with the Spirit.—For an aged relative past eighty, in very delicate health, who, it is greatly feared, is not prepared to die.—For two dear youths, fifteen and seventeen years of age, fatherless, and exposed in their daily occupations to great temptations.—For a widowed mother and her family.—For the conversion of four elder girls in a Sunday-class, who are very ignorant and thoughtless.—For a widow and three children.
—For a husband, and a prodigal son who has not been heard of for many years.—For prodigal sons and members of Christian families who have forsaken the God of their fathers.—
For one most sinful, and that one who visits her may be privileged to point her to the Saviour.—For a son who has wrecked his own prospects, but seems now anxious.—For a father, mother, four sons, and one daughter, Roman Catholics.—For two victims of drink, lying at the point of death.—For a sailor, the son of Christian parents, who has long been under deep conviction, now in a foreign hospital.—Prayer is requested by old man, aged seventy-two, on the point of death.—For the son of a praying mother, at one time a professing Christian, but now a sceptic, and the associate of the ungodly.—For a lady who has sought the Lord for nearly twenty years, that she may be aroused from the indifference which is creeping over her.—A young convert asks prayer for her parents, who are much opposed to the truth, and whom recent affliction has only hardened.

The Christian.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE FOR THE UNSAVED MASSES?

I HAVE but little time at my disposal, but I cannot help laying the grave question which heads this paper before the Christians of Britain, with the earnest prayer that they may once more give it their most urgent attention. I cannot presume here in any way to answer it, but for the last week or two it has lain so heavily on my heart, that I am unable to refrain from asking God's people to join me in solemnly facing this dark and terrible problem. Some say this is just the old story of religious destitution, the old appeal on behalf of home missions, which everyone knows about, and is sick of. But I venture to say that very few of us know anything about the story, old and sickening as it is. My friends, there is a spiritual famine in this Christian land of yours that I for one had never even dreamed of. Here, for instance, in this town of Sheffield, I am told that there are 150,000 people who not only never go near a place of worship, but for whom there is actually no church accommodation provided, even if they were willing to take advantage of it. Thus there are in all, say, 80 churches and chapels, which, allowing an average of 1000 seats to each, give accommodation for 80,000 people. Supposing each of these to be three-fourths full, you have 60,000 church-going people out of a population of 260,000. It leaves thus a very wide margin to say that there are 150,000 souls in this one town without even the possibility of the means of grace. A moment's reflection upon the appalling state of things revealed by these figures—and I am told that England generally is in much the same condition—is enough to make every one of us who names the name of Christ humble himself in the sight of God. And it seems to me that if there be upon God's earth one blacker sight than these thousands of Christless and graceless souls, it is the thousands of dead and slumbering Christians living in their very midst, rubbing shoulders with them every day upon the street, and never as much as lifting up a little finger to warn them of death, and eternity, and judgment to come. Talk of being sickened at the sight of the world's degradation! Rather let those of us who are Christians hide our faces because of our own, and pray God to deliver us from the guilt of the world's blood. I believe that if there is one thing which pierces the Master's heart with unutterable grief, it is not the world's iniquity, but the Church's indifference.

But this is a mere re-stating of the difficulty. Let us pass round the question. What is to be done for the masses? Let us pass it round from city to city, from village to village, from heart to heart; and let us all contribute to the answering of it, and contribute in deeds as well as in words. Let every man and woman feel that the question is not for ministers, and elders, and deacons, but for them! Especially would I lay it upon those who have never worked before, to ask God to show them their own personal duty in this solemn matter. It is not enough that we give our means; we must give ourselves. I may hire a man to do some work; but I can never hire a man to do my work. Alone, before God, I must answer for that; and so must we all. It is not enough that you say "My work has been to hire another man's work"; for that hired man's work is, after all, only his own work, and you have helped him to do it better; and his work is counted to his own account, and can never be registered on yours. To help another man to do God's work is well; but it can never take the place of your own work for God; and are there not hundreds of Christians whom God has blessed with wealth and influence sheltering their consciences to-day under the purchased labour of a hired substitute? We think it is cheap service—paying a missionary to live for us his short-lived life in the deserts of India; or a couple of Bible-women to do our work in the hovels of the poor at home! But oh! it is very, very dear if it take the place of the work which God has given to "every man" to do. "Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work what sort it is." It is a great truth that the world is saved by the substitution of Christ for sinners; but it is likewise a very solemn thought that the world is being lost by the substitution of one Christian's work for another's.

Next to this great evil of employing substitutionary labour instead of our own, there exists a grievance scarcely less injurious to the spread of God's work among the hearts of the people. Many a man, without neglecting his own work in the least, has the means of employing others in addition, and for this purpose it is no uncommon idea that anybody will do! For work among the masses, it is argued, there is nothing like selecting those who have themselves been born and bred within the sphere of the masses. Now this is a fatal mistake. God's servants ought to be the flower of the land. They ought to be chosen from amongst the best that a nation has; and one of the main reasons why the masses are as yet almost untouched by the power of the gospel of Christ is, that we send the wrong men to reach them.

I have just one more suggestion to make—for my writing now is more with the intention of once more throwing down the gauntlet at the door of all true Christian hearts; and my own contribution to the question can be but a very humble one.

After good men, it seems to me that we want good methods. Above all, we want new methods. Not at all, however, that the old methods are bad, but simply that they are old. The best old methods are, perhaps, as good as, or better than, any new ones; but they are old methods, and that is enough. The world has got tired of them. It will not have anything more to do with them—the worse for the world, perhaps, you say, but that cannot alter the fact. Men are crying out for novelty. Perhaps a better word would be "variety." Well, let them have variety. They want it; in everything else they get it; why not in this? If we cannot win the people by old, plainly enough the only reasonable line of action is to try new means; and if the new bait does not succeed, let us try again; and if that does not do, let us go on trying till we find a bait that does.

My friends, in a work like this we are bound to succeed. It may indeed require a long, long struggle, but God will give each one of us who begins it grace enough to pursue it. And let those who are in ear-most about it begin now. Let there be no waiting till some other man takes some other step in some other town. This is one of Satan's tricks for casting responsibility off the shoulders which should bear it. And let us be silent about our inability. If, as humble followers of the Master, we are really willing to take up this work, God will take care to stand by us. Only let us be earnest, and self-sacrificing, and single-eyed for his glory. Otherwise it is useless to begin. He can excuse weakness, and work through it; He can excuse blunders, and overrule them for good; but with half-heartedness, and lukewarmness, and indifference to the value of immortal souls, we may as well make up our minds that He can do nothing. So if we mean to take up this solemn question for ourselves, let there be no half measures. Let us count the cost honestly, not in the poor light of this shadow of a life of ours, but with the great measure of eternity; and if, after all, God pleases to lay the burden of these poor souls upon our threshold, let us fall upon our knees and say, Amen.

My friends, it is no melancholy duty. It is no misfortune to find out that God wants us. Those who have this idea of it will be little use to Him, and they will not be long in discovering some means of getting out of it. The excuses which Satan puts into the sinner's heart for rejecting Christ are nothing to those with which he tempts the Christian to abstain from Christian work. We have thousands and thousands of Christians who can tell you in a minute why they are not doing anything for Christ. The excuse has been lying there for years all ready formed, and by this time they are perfectly satisfied upon the subject. At the beginning of their Christian life, Satan told them some little lie—"they were too inexperienced for work" perhaps, "they had not the gift," "they might just spoil matters," "they must wait for better openings," and "a fitter frame for service." And so this matter of work has been hushed up. And God's people are slumbering on the faith of such miserable subterfuges, while souls are dying in hundreds at their very doors! God only knows what a fearful revelation it would be, if He were to challenge these excuses this day, and expose their hollowness to our barren and fruitless lives! It is high time we were waking out of sleep. Let us rise and examine ourselves in the sight of God, and see what is to hinder us from entering the vineyard of his Son. And if we see it to be His will that the God-like work of winning souls should fall into these unworthy hands of ours, let us accept with humble faith the holy privilege, and count no earthly sacrifice too great if it is to help even one of these poor souls to reach its eternal rest.

VISITATION OF THE PEOPLE AT HOME.

We are making an enormous place, as you are aware, in Liverpool, for Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and we pray that very many may be gathered in by the public preaching; but what a mighty ingathering there might be if at once thousands of God-sent men and women would go to every home of Birmingham and Liverpool, and especially to every home of those towns to which Mr. Moody has been obliged to refuse to go. And why should we not pray that the homes of all England should this spring be so visited? Truly yours,

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

23, Fenwick-st., Liverpool, Jan. 15, 1875.

P.S.—The visitation of Liverpool is to commence next week, and we believe some of the neighbouring towns will follow shortly.

An important meeting of those who have taken part in the house-to-house visitation in Manchester, was held, as announced last week, on Monday evening, and in our next issue we hope to give a report of the proceedings.

ITALIAN PEASANTS.—We are sorry to be obliged, by the pressure of matter, again to postpone the continuation of Mrs. Wallis' interesting communication, of which the first paper appeared in our issue of the 7th inst.

ALL-DAY MEETING IN BIRMINGHAM,

JAN. 26, IN BINGLEY HALL.

Now that Messrs. Moody and Sankey are within three hours' ride of the metropolis, we would ask especial attention to the subjoined announcement. An All-day Meeting at Birmingham affords an admirable opportunity for the ministers of Christ in London to see and take part in one of the leading features of the work of our brethren whom God has so signally used, not only in the salvation of souls, but in arousing the churches to a deeper sense of their responsibility to God and man, and in drawing Christians together in united action to fulfil the purpose for which the Church of God exists on earth—to win souls for Christ.

We earnestly hope, therefore, that from London, and other cities and towns, the ministers of Christ will, in large numbers, take advantage of this All-day Meeting in Birmingham, to see for themselves the character of the work which God is doing in our midst by our American brethren.

Bingley Hall, in which the meeting will be held, will accommodate 12,000 persons.

PROGRAMME.

- 10 to 11.—Service of Praise, led by Mr. Sankey.
 11 to 12.—Lecture on Works, by Mr. Moody.
 12 to 1.—Prayer-meetings, and how they should be conducted. Mr. Moody will open.
 1 to 3.—How are the masses of the people to be reached?
 3 to 4.—Question Drawer. Questions on practical subjects will be answered by Mr. Moody.
 Mr. Sankey will have charge of the singing. Mr. Moody will preside all day.

Tickets will be sent to Ministers, on application to the Convention Committee, 30A, Paradise-street, Birmingham.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN SHEFFIELD.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

The past week has been a time of pentecostal blessing in Sheffield. The town has been stirred to its depths; more, perhaps, than any of the towns in England the evangelists have yet visited, considering the short time they have been here; and the Spirit of the Lord has been manifestly working in many hearts that have hitherto been strangers to his power. Messrs. "Moody and Sankey" have been the subject of common conversation; and while, no doubt, much of it has been nothing more than curious talk, yet there remains a large and solid substratum of good, and, I trust, lasting, result. The local press have reported and commented on the meetings in a very fair and generally appreciative spirit; and there has been a large demand for those papers that contained sketches of our honoured American brethren; and yet there does not appear to be any disposition unduly to magnify the human agents in the work. The mouths of those who do not sympathize with the movement have been wonderfully silent; and the overshadowing presence and power of God have revealed themselves, even in this respect.

A new publication, the Sheffield Methodist, of Saturday, devotes a large proportion of its space to a record of the meetings, and says, in a sketch of Mr. Moody:—

"Some say that the secret of his success is to be found in Mr. Sankey's music and singing. Some say it is to be found in that tact which draws large numbers of the most Christian ministers and laymen around him. Our impression and belief is this: he is full of the love of Christ and true gospel simplicity; is filled with the Holy Ghost and with faith; fears nobody, loves everybody, has full confidence in his plan of working, and in a deep and well-developed Christian experience; carries in his own bosom that divinely-written commentary on the truth of God, which causes him to pour forth streams of spiritual light over the minds of his crowding auditors. The consequence is, the hand of the Lord is with him, and multitudes believe and turn to the Lord, both men and women—yea, and children also.

"We have been told that some of Mr. Sankey's hymns are rather childish. Our answer was, that the older, wiser, and better we grow, the more childlike we become. Praise God for sweet hymns, in which both very old and very young Christians can happily join."

The Sheffield Independent, of Saturday, reports several of Mr. Moody's addresses at considerable length; and this, though no doubt acceptable to its readers, is peculiarly unfair to Mr. Moody himself, as he must, perforce, give the same, or nearly the same, addresses in other towns; and after they have been read, they do not come home to the hearts of the listeners with the same freshness and power. Of course, the burning earnestness and homely bluntness of his delivery, or the wonderfully moving charm of Mr. Sankey's singing, cannot be reproduced by any verbal description; and these will always attract the multitude, both careless and Christian, although the words used may be familiar.

The meetings on Monday and Tuesday of last week do not call for any special notice. They were crowded—sometimes to excess—and in every way indicative of most hopeful results.

On Wednesday, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were both at Manchester, and on Thursday, as the Albert Hall was engaged for a ball in the evening, the evangelists did not hold any public service, but from three to ten o'clock p.m. a special meeting for inquirers, in the Temperance Hall, was attended by a constant stream of anxious ones, who were pointed Christward, there, as I trust, to lose their burdens.

Mr. Moody spoke no less than four times on Friday, on each occasion with much power, and with signs following. It need scarcely be added that Mr. Sankey's solos, including such favourites as "Only an armour-bearer," "Dare to be a Daniel," "Whiter than snow," etc., deepened the influences produced by Mr. Moody's impassioned discourses. Indeed, it is made more and more manifest that the special gifts of each evangelist have been most happily wedded together for the common purpose they have in view.

At the closing service in the evening there was no diminution either in the attendance or the interest. It was chiefly intended for the young converts, who were admitted by ticket, and crowded a large part of the area of the Albert Hall. Both the galleries were also crammed long before the hour of commencing. It was a glorious and inspiring sight to look on such a vast sea of human faces, all lit up with eager expectation, and all assembled to hear the simple story of the Saviour's grace and power. The scene was more impressive still when, at the appointed hour, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey having quietly crossed the front of the platform, and taken their seats, the whole assembly rose and joined in singing the hymn,

"Ring the bells of heaven, there is joy to-day, For a soul returning from the wild."

and afterwards, in that jubilant old hymn that used to be sung at revival meetings fifteen years ago, and is ever fresh and new:—

"O happy day! that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God;
Well may this glowing heart rejoice,
And tell its raptures all abroad."

After Mr. Sankey had sung "Whiter than snow," Mr. Moody spoke with his accustomed pungency, simplicity, and power, chiefly addressing the young converts. Surely they will never be able to forget his words of affectionate encouragement and caution, as he pointed out the dangers that would inevitably come to them in their Christian life, and the unfailing source of strength amidst them all. Then came his parting words, evidently painful alike to speaker and hearers. "I have learned to love you," said Mr. Moody, and the earnest gaze and tearful eyes before him testified, more loudly than words, how his love was reciprocated, and his labours and counsels prized. I was forcibly reminded by the scene of Paul's farewell meeting with the elders at Miletum. I verily believe the many hundreds of young converts would, one and all, have fallen on Mr. Moody's neck, and kissed him, sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. One little fellow, at the close of the meeting, came to me in great distress when he found that Mr. Moody had left without having given him a shake of his hand.

Before the meeting was dismissed, Mr. Sankey sang a parting hymn to the tenderly pathetic tune of "Home, sweet home," and the vast crowd lingered long in the hall where Christ had won so many sons and daughters within the past two weeks.

The work among the young men has been taking root during the week, and now that the counter-attraction of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services is wanting, it is believed that the meetings specially for young men will be largely attended and much blessed. Mr. Drummond remains in Sheffield during this week, to assist in consolidating the work among this important class of the community. It has been a "Happy New Year" for Sheffield, and the faith of the Lord's people prompts them to hope that "still there's more to follow."

Upwards of eighty—clergymen of all the evangelical denominations in the town, and the other members of the committee—met Messrs. Moody and Sankey at breakfast in the Imperial Hotel, on Saturday morning, to bid them farewell. Reporters were excluded, but I understand that the unanimous expression of the company was one of gratitude to the evangelists for their untiring and successful labours in Sheffield, and for the spirit of cordial co-operation among the various divisions of the Church that their visit had so blessedly generated. Practical as he always is, Mr. Moody used the occasion to urge upon the committee the necessity of rearing a central and suitable building in the town, where all those interested in the continued success of the work could meet on neutral ground, and carry on the meetings. An influential committee of laymen was appointed to take immediate steps for carrying out the suggestion, so that the good work may go on.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey left for Birmingham on Saturday afternoon, attended by the prayers and good wishes of hundreds in Sheffield whose hearts have been made glad, and whose lives have been illumined through their instrumentality. May our loving Father in heaven have all the praise!

"WORK THE TELEGRAPH."

BY MRS. MEREDITH.

Tuesday last, wet and miserable as it was, was a bright day in the hearts of many in Sheffield. Oh how the telegraph, that has its wire on earth, and its whole power in heaven, worked! I had to make vigorous efforts to get a few tickets of admission for the evening meeting. It was for unsaved persons only; and I longed to bring in some known to me, though their willingness to come was by no means certain.

"Work the telegraph," said a friend, as I was sending away the tickets. "Incidentally my prayer went up. 'Lord, call them in to hear the voice of thy messenger, and let the sound wake their dead hearts,' was my cry all the day long. A great many were employed in the same way.

Round the door of the Albert Hall was a crowd continually changing, but always great. Into it I pushed, and addressed myself to every one with whom I could get speech. Putting my question in different words to each one, I inquired if the ticket wanted was for personal use, and distinctly as a means of seeking peace through the teaching about Jesus. In some cases it was; but in by far the greater number it was for others—husband, wife, child, son, daughter, neighbour, friend, who was not yet in Christ, and for whom anxious desire was awakened. It was a great intercessory effort.

"You pray, while you wait and strive, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, I've been many a year praying now for— This is a fine chance to bring matters to a point." So it was. "You may mention salvation to-day to any man in Sheffield, and not surprise him. He expects it; or, if he does not, he is stupid. It is the talk of the place, the preachers going about are waking up every one, whether they want to come or not."

"Every one gets the message somehow or other, and even if they don't answer it, it reaches them. They'll have to account for it."

A poor woman, carrying off quite a lot of tickets, said, "See, I have a soul for each of these, and I know that they will be saved. I'm praying all the way."

Working the telegraph!

I went into a shop, and sat down to take some tea. Three ladies, who entered directly after, joined me. We began to talk, and then and there united in prayer for those to whom we had been employed to carry messages concerning that evening's meeting. In the post-office, asking the best way to send a foreign letter, conversation began about such things.

One, who had information to give, having done so, added, "There are many ways to that place."

"But only one to our Father's heaven. Do you know it?" I said.

The confusion of face that told a tale, made the whole gospel come forth.

"This is the day of mercy in Sheffield."

"It won't end with the preaching of two men," said the hearer.

"Certainly not; but you have no authority for waiting until they are gone. The Lord always means that your time is now."

"Don't you think I may be saved to-morrow?"

"I know nothing about to-morrow. Don't dare to put off. You may die to-night."

The man walked at my side silently.

"Friend, believe. Jesus has borne the punishment due to your sin. You have salvation if you see this, and will never die."

"This is a message to me, I know; for I have been thinking all day that I must try and be saved."

"Only believe. Jesus did all for you. You need not try; it is done."

The man's sudden "Thank you," and abrupt turning away, left me in a very wet, slippery part of the steep, dark streets of this singularly ill-shaped town. I turned into a stationer's shop. The attendant told me that no notice of the meeting had reached her that day, and that she did not know what was going on in the Albert Hall. "People are going there to learn the way to be saved," I said. "If you go, you must give yourself up to Jesus. He will receive you."

I saw the same face, whose eyes looked at me rather scoffingly than otherwise as I spoke, in the hall later on, flowing with tears.

"Work the telegraph" was good advice. When I reached the hall, even standing-room was for that evening not to be had, except far behind, where no speaker's words could be heard. There, however, it was joy to be, and to continue the sweet service of prayer.

When the "inquiry time" came, with eager longing to see the birth of souls into our glorious household of faith, I passed into the room for the anxious. To some the light and liberty came softly and slowly. One grasped her "all" so quickly. "It is like a telegram," she said.

A young woman with whom I knelt burst out into joyous words, "Bless the Lord! O Jesus, how lovely! I see He is mine; I am his now."

Another kissed me warmly. "I can't help showing how glad I am, because He bought me with his blood."

A heavy, sad face lit up with a cry. "Now I know it. Christ said, 'Come unto Me.'"

How delightful it was to stand a moment, and to see the rejoicing groups, to look round on rapturous faces! "There were very few hard to be dealt with," was the report of many of the workers, as they retired from the harvesting-place. In the binding of the sheaves we may not number the ears of the gathered grain, but we shall know when He cometh how many of his jewels were rescued on the day we "worked the telegraph" in Sheffield.

Sheffield, Jan. 14.

P.S. I must open my letter to say that those tickets the dear Master sent through my hands have been used to bring in one soul, as I learned this moment while closing this paper for post.

MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BIRMINGHAM.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

There is every outward indication that the wave of spiritual awakening and quickening, now passing over our land, is about to make itself felt in this very large and important centre of the world's industry also. Messrs. Moody and Sankey began their labours here on Sunday last, and they are to remain in the town for two weeks. Birmingham has been called "the toy-shop of the world," and its immense population—which amounts to nearly 400,000—is largely made up of the artisan class. Experience has shown that wherever the American evangelists have gone—though their services have been attended in some towns by numbers of those in the higher ranks of society, socially considered, and also by a sprinkling of the very poor and degraded—the bulk of those coming under their influence have belonged to what we are accustomed to call the middle classes. There is, therefore, a wide field in Birmingham for the efforts of our American brethren, and the meetings on Sunday were such as to encourage the hope of much success.

Their first meeting was held at the somewhat early hour of eight, but long before, just as the grey dawn was breaking up, streams of people were moving with hurried feet from all directions to the place of meeting, the Town Hall. By the time that Messrs. Moody and Sankey appeared on the platform, the fine hall was crowded, passages and all, with some 3000 people. The meeting was advertised for "Christian workers," but there did not appear to be any restrictions as to admission; and if the vast assembly was composed entirely of Christian workers, in the true sense of that term, I should imagine Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit would be unnecessary.

But I suppose real Christian workers are not too plentiful in Birmingham, more than in other towns, and I would fain cherish the hope that those present on Sunday morning who have hitherto done any work for Christ, went away with a deeper determination to devote themselves to it, inspired by the stirring words of Mr. Moody, and constrained by the heart-melting tones of Mr. Sankey's sacred songs.

The whole audience joined heartily at the commencement, in singing, "Hold the fort," an evident proof that the hymns used at these services have now become almost household possessions. Then Mr. Sankey sang, amid the utmost silence, the rousing hymn, "Here am I, send me."

Mr. Moody's address was directed specially to workers, and was well fitted to awaken the slumbering energies of the Church. Mr. Moody is very careful in his addresses to lose his personality in his theme, but the characteristics of Christian workers, on which he insisted, are all remarkably apparent in his own character. They were "courage," "love," and "enthusiasm," and one could not fail to be impressed with the notion that he was speaking the things that in his inmost soul he knew and acted on. His wonderful magnetic power was shown when he related some of his oft-told illustrations, which seemed to lose none of their wonted effect by repetition.

Numbers of the local clergy and ministers were on the platform, and the Rev. H. G. Thwaites, of St. Mark's, took part in the proceedings. The Rev. R. W. Dale, the well-known Independent minister of Birmingham, at whose chapel I attended in the forenoon, prayed most fervently in the course of his service for unity among all shades of Christians in the town, and for God's blessing on the special efforts of the next two weeks.

Half-past two was the specified hour for the afternoon service in the Town Hall, but I believe the building was surrounded by crowds waiting admission about midday, and when I reached the hall, some time before the hour, ingress was almost impossible. At the church which stands opposite, the ordinary service was going on, and it too was speedily filled with disappointed crowds, while hundreds went away. I succeeded in getting into the hall with much difficulty, just as Mr. Sankey was about to sing for a closing hymn, "The Ninety-and-nine." His few touching words before he commenced to sing, and the pleading tones of his rich, full voice, as he sang of the lost one brought back at such a terrible cost, evidently moved and thrilled many hearts, and after the benediction was pronounced, everybody seemed unwilling to depart.

Mr. Moody's theme, I learned, was "the old, old story" of the cross—the "good news;" and its effect may be judged from a remark made to me at the close of the meeting—by a Methodist local preacher and class leader, who, he said, had been converted thirty-five years,—that he had never seen such a service in Birmingham before.

After the audience had slowly filtered out, a large number of people who had been unable to gain admittance, rushed in, but as there was nobody apparently appointed to speak in such an emergency, and Messrs. Moody and Sankey had gone, they were obliged to retire. A precious opportunity was thus lost. It is to be hoped the committee will take care to prevent the repetition of such a circumstance.

One roughly-clad man, to all appearance a common labourer, who had come in after the meeting was over, seemed much disappointed. He had walked, in the rain, nearly six miles, in order to hear Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and arrived too late to gain an entrance. He said he had to walk back again and preach the same evening. He was somewhat relieved when he succeeded in obtaining a ticket for the workers' meeting next Sunday morning; but I suspect he will have to start from home before Birmingham is awake, if he is to make sure of getting inside the Town Hall.

Such a gathering has seldom, if ever, been seen in this town, as was to be witnessed in the Bingley Hall on Sunday evening. Birmingham has the reputation of being a hot-bed of political agitation; and on one occasion, I am informed, this stupendous building was filled to overflowing to hear John Bright; but it is a new thing for it to be crowded with 10,000 souls to hear the gospel preached and sung. There must have been at least that number inside the doors, and how many were excluded I cannot say; but the service was somewhat disturbed ever and anon by the clamouring multitude outside knocking at the doors for admission. It was a sight truly gladdening to behold, and never to be forgotten.

For an hour or so before Messrs. Moody and Sankey arrived, the time was occupied in singing hymns, and as soon as they reached the platform, Mr. Moody asked all to join in singing the doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." It was repeated at his request, with a more overpowering volume of sound than before.

Mr. Sankey sang "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," and subsequently, "The ninety-and-nine," and his voice rang through the immense building with wonderful effect.

Mr. Moody delivered a powerful and affectionate address on "The Gospel," in continuation of his afternoon's address on the same subject. He seemed as if he could never tire of dilating on the absolute freeness and fulness of the offer of salvation, and his illustrations, as usual, were very telling and appropriate.

Altogether it has been a memorable day in Birmingham. At none of the meetings, however, was any provision apparently made for inquirers; but this will no doubt be seen to as the necessity arises, which I trust and believe it will.

Mr. Moody announced that there would be services in Bingley Hall every evening except Saturday, at half-past seven o'clock, and a noon prayer-meeting every day in the Town Hall.

Thus the movement has taken root in Birmingham, and great and glorious results may be confidently expected.

It is asserted by some that in a town like this, where agitation of various kinds is almost the normal condition of things, there will not be such an abiding impression produced by Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit as in other places. But we cannot thus limit the power of the Holy Spirit, or permit our faith and hope by such arguments to be turned aside.

SOWING AND REAPING.

Sow with a generous hand;
Pause not for toil or pain;
Weary not through the heat of summer,
Weary not through the cold spring rain;
But wait till the autumn comes
For the sheaves of golden grain.

Scatter the seed, and fear not;
A table will be spread;
What matter if you are too weary
To eat your hard-earned bread?
Sow while the earth is broken;
For the hungry must be fed.

Sow, while the seeds are lying
In the warm earth's bosom deep,
And your warm tears fall upon it;
They will stir in their quiet sleep,
And the green blades rise the quicker,
Perchance, for the tears you weep.

Then sow; for the hours are fleeting,
And the seed must fall to-day;
And care not what hands shall reap it,
Or if you have passed away
Before the waving corn-fields
Shall gladden the sunny day.

Sow; and look onward, upward,
Where the starry light appears—
Where, in spite of the coward's doubting
Or your own heart's trembling fears,
You shall reap in joy the harvest
You have sown to-day in tears.

BLACKHEATH.—We have had a very blessed series of morning meetings, in connection with the Week of Prayer, at Blackheath. May the spirit of fellowship in Christ, which has characterized them not only last, but increase during the remainder of the year! The chairmen on the six days, from Monday, the 4th, to Saturday, the 9th, inclusive, were Admiral Sir C. Caffin, J. Holt Skinner, Esq., Lieut.-Col. E. Wilmot Brooks, G. Lidgett, Esq., Gen. Burrows, and C. H. Marten, Esq. When the chairman had opened the meeting with a hymn and prayer, a short scriptural address was given each day by a minister of the gospel, after which the meeting was declared open for prayer and praise. This manner of conducting a meeting was a novelty in the Blackheath Week of Prayer meetings, but few, if any, of those who took a part in our morning gatherings this year wish now to go back to the old system of pre-arranging who the leaders are to be. The addresses on the six days were given by the following ministers of the gospel in the order named:—Rev. James Bardsley, Vicar of St. Paul's, Greenwich; Rev. Joseph Beazley, late Minister of the Congregational Church, Blackheath; Rev. Robert Marten, Minister of the Baptist Chapel, Lee-road; Rev. E. N. Newton, Minister of the Wesleyan Chapel, Blackheath; Rev. C. H. Marriott, Assistant Minister of the Episcopal Church, Blackheath Park; and Rev. Rylands Brown, Minister of the Baptist Chapel, Shooter's-hill-road.—Faithful yours in Christ,
R. WILMOT BROOKE.

PAGES FROM DR. BARNARDO'S NOTE-BOOK.

VI.—ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

God's work is infinitely precious to Himself. Even the feeble and faltering faith of His servants is not always permitted to interfere so much as we sometimes think, with His gracious purposes. I look back now over a period of many years' happy service for Christ, and can recall unnumbered instances in which God has answered prayer. But even more frequent than these have been the times when He, in His kingly condescension, has given infinitely above and beyond all that we could ask or think.

In times of temptation and trial, answers to prayer, which have been noted in the most holy place of one's memory, are sweet resting-places for faith; for at such seasons may we not argue thus:—If God has interposed in such a way, and at such a time in days gone by, surely He will still deal with us after as gracious a fashion; and if our cry in the past has been heard, in its feebleness and weakness, by His loving ears, surely we may believe that, in the future, He will be equally quick to note the utterance of our needs.

For the encouragement of the faith of your readers, I recount one or two remarkable instances of prayer answered, and of help unexpectedly sent, at the very last moment, when necessity had almost become extremity.

Quite lately (within four months of the time at which I write) we were almost penniless. Some two HUNDRED children, entirely dependent upon our care, sent us continually to the throne of grace for even the daily needs. But although these were met, our bank account remained very low—in fact, so low, as almost to necessitate its being closed. Just at this time of necessity, an additional burden was placed upon us; for the weather quickly changed, and sharp and bitterly cold winds made us quickly change autumn clothing for the warmer winter dress. One morning I received from the matrons of our various HOMES a simultaneous request for more bed-clothing. "We must," said one, "have more blankets; the children are shivering and cold at night, and cannot sleep. Last night the little ones heaped upon their beds all their daily clothing, and were still cold, and some of them died in their sleep."

In much distress, I examined the state of our funds, and found we had no money, not even a pound in hand beyond what was absolutely required for our daily needs. Earnestly we implored our heavenly Father to help us. He who sent that bitterly icy wind could surely protect our poor wee bairns from its trying influences! So we asked the Lord to send us blankets for our family. But no money came that day; and next day, unable any longer to bear the thought of the little ones being cold, we went to the house of business at which we deal, and selected the kind and quantity of blankets required. They came to close upon £100; but as we had not the money, we simply selected them, and did not buy. We felt that we must not incur debt; and so again that day we spread before Him whom we served the pressing needs of the case.

Next morning at breakfast the daily packet of letters arrived, and a lady friend, who was our guest, was looking anxiously at the little pile at my side. I said to her, "If there were even £100 here, I could use it all in one hour for our little ones!"

The first letter we opened was from a clergyman in the south of England, enclosing a cheque for £100! The letter contained these words: "To provide additional clothing needed by the inclement weather." Praise the Lord!" was all I could say. Reading the kindly-worded letter, I understood it in my inmost heart to be a messenger from heaven! Oh how quickly and gladly I wended my way again to the City, and paid down the sum which was to give our waifs the welcome and much-needed clothing!

Upon another occasion, very recently, I was much tried and exercised as to the result of a letter to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, announcing our intention to build COTTAGES at Ilford for the reception of neglected girls. As soon as my letter appeared, I became unusually troubled. Suggestions that I had not laid the matter sufficiently before God; that I was walking in advance of His guidance; that the responsibility of such a weighty step would be too much for me; these and many other thoughts akin to them, made my heart sad and sorrowful; and it was only when again I rolled the whole matter upon God, that I could realize the Psalmist's words, "They looked unto Him, and were lightened."

Whilst much occupied by the duties and responsibility of the work on my hands, an opportunity arose unexpectedly for two or three days' leisure from town; and hearing that there was to be a meeting at Oxford, for fellowship and consideration of God's Word, I resolved to go. Reaching the terminus a little before the time for the train to start, I met an old friend, a poor-rich man—poor so far as money and possessions go, but rich in faith, and in childlike confidence in God. In days gone by, he had often been the means of blessing to my soul; and his prayers and sympathy were always welcome and refreshing.

We entered a carriage, and found ourselves alone. Having conversed for a little while upon spiritual things, my friend asked me a few questions about our work, and feeling drawn out towards him, I opened my heart fully, and stated the difficulty and exercise I experienced. My friend asked me—

"Are you prepared, if the Lord were to show that you have taken a step in advance of His guidance, to publicly renounce your intention, as you have publicly announced it?"

A moment's consideration only was needed, and I answered truly—

"Yes, for if God be not in it, better a thousand times that all should fail, than that we should attempt this new effort."

"Then," replied my counsellor, "all is well; we will now commit it in simple faith to God in prayer, and as you are going down to Oxford with a view to refreshment and spiritual blessing, let us unite in asking God, if it be His will, to show you clearly before your return to town whether you are right or wrong in your purpose; whether you should abandon your design, or go forward, trusting in Him."

"Agreed," I said, the very suggestion seeming to take a burden from my heart; and in that railway-carriage we knelt and rolled our difficulty and desires upon the mighty and omnipotent arm of our Burden-bearer.

Reaching Oxford, my poor-rich friend came with me to my hotel for a few minutes, and again in my room we knelt down, and "left it all with Jesus." Then we sallied forth to one of the meetings. I think Pasteur Theodore Monod was speaking, when I entered, upon the words, "Trust Him." I listened eagerly to his clear and lucid exposition, and then, without speaking to any one, silently returned to the hotel, pondering much over and thanking God for the refreshing words to which I had listened.

Early next morning, whilst dressing, I heard rather a loud knock at my door.

"Who is there?" I cried.

"I want to come in," returned a voice.

"You cannot come in; I am dressing," I said.

"I MUST," was the equally decisive reply.

"If you must, then come in," and through the half-opened door I saw the head and shoulders of a gentleman, who asked—

"Your name is Barnardo?"

"Yes," I replied.

"You have got a Home for girls?"

"Yes," he was told.

"I understand," said the new-comer, still keeping at the door, "that you are about to build cottages?"

"I hope so, by God's help," was the answer.

"Have you got any money towards the undertaking?"

"Not a penny," was my reply.

"PUT ME DOWN FOR THE FIRST COTTAGE. Good morning."

He shut my door and went away. Quickly re-opening it, I ran after him into the corridor, and drew him back into my room saying, "Let us praise the Lord together." And so we did. We thanked God for His infinite love and mercy; and then the following little story, fresh proof of God's tender and gracious care, came out:—

This gentleman lost a dear child some time ago, and had resolved to do something to perpetuate her memory. He also wished to help the work of God in my hands, and one morning, while at breakfast, thinking how he could help me, a copy of THE CHRISTIAN, containing the very letter which had given me anxiety, was brought in, and laid upon the table by the servant. Opening it, his eye fell upon my article, and at once he decided to give the sum of £350 needed for the first cottage.

But although this was his intention he never communicated it. On reaching Oxford, however, the same night as myself, he came to the same hotel, and in the morning, while dressing, asked the attendant, who were the latest arrivals? My name was mentioned among others. Immediately he asked, "What is the number of his room?" Upon being told that it was No. 28, he came at once to my door, and knocking in the way I have described, gave me, just in the hour of indecision and waiting, a proof, beyond all doubt, that our God does hear and answer prayer.

Softened and subdued, feeling "surely God is in this place," I went down to partake of my morning meal, and while at breakfast my poor-rich friend of last night entered the room. I said nothing at first, but he looked at my face, and, I suppose, saw there the story, for he simply said, with confidence in God beaming from his eyes, and irradiating every feature, "BEFORE THEY CALL I WILL ANSWER, AND WHILE THEY ARE YET SPEAKING I WILL HEAR."

So the first cottage came. Since then, five others have been given or promised, and we have now no fear but that He who has laid it upon our hearts to care for these children, who has sent the children in many cases almost to our door, and has so far raised up friends to build these houses for their reception—I say we have now no doubt but that He means to continue, as ever, our "Pillar of cloud by day, and of Fire by night."

Will you praise Him, dear readers, with us? And if you have time to pray for us, will you just ask that He may keep us simply dependent upon Himself for all that is needed in His Own most precious work?—Yours by His grace,
T. J. BARNARDO.

EAST GRAEME-STREET MISSION-HALL, DOVE-HILL, GLASGOW.—The friends in connection with this work of faith and labour of love, held a tea-meeting, on Saturday evening, Jan. 2, for those who had received blessing during the working of the Mission. Mr. Quarrier occupied the chair. There were present Mr. E. H. Hunter, Mr. William J. Stewart (his fellow-labourer), Mr. Bursen (from Canada), Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Ramsay, and Mr. Thomas Henderson. At the close of his address, Mr. Quarrier said: "And now we purpose building a Mission-hall; a Home for Working Lads, to accommodate 100 from fourteen to twenty years of age, and sixty children from two to fourteen years of age; a Dormitory for forty respectable young women, making in all 200! But we have no more funds for the future. What, then, shall we stand still? No! God's word to the children of Israel, through his servant Moses, was, 'Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward,' and this, dear Christian friends, must be our motto. In reference to the Cottage Homes, we purpose to build ten cottages, to accommodate thirty children in each, with a father and mother at the head of every household. Each child will be taught to read and write, and also to work. For this branch of the work £6000 is required." On Monday evening, the hall was filled with a different class, viz., 400 casuals, gathered from the lodging-houses in the neighbourhood, to whom a good tea was given; after which the gospel was preached by Messrs. Quarrier, Hunter, Stewart, Ramsay, and Bursen.

FOR THE YOUNG.

LITTLE MARY.

Mr. Ross was an infidel, one of those men who say the Bible is not God's book. His wife became a Christian soon after her marriage, and loved the Bible, and tried to serve God; but Mr. Ross was angry whenever he saw a Bible, and would throw it into the fire, or out of the window.

His poor wife did not dare to let him know she had a Bible, or ever read one. But she had a little pocket Bible, and she kept it hid away in the bottom of her trunk, and when her husband went away on his trips down the great river—for he was captain of a boat—she would get it out and read it every day.

Three little children called her mother, and she spent much time every day in talking to them about God, and the Bible, and their duties, and told them to pray every day that God would make their father a new man.

The eldest of the children, little Mary, had evidently given her heart to the Saviour at about ten years of age, and loved to pray. She seemed to live near God, and to see Him as ever about her.

She continued this habit of prayer, and her father, as he returned from one of his trips, overheard her several times; but she was his pet, his idol, and he could not be angry with her, though he thought it was a childish whim, and she would soon get over it.

Calling her to him, one day, he took her on his knee, and asked—

"Mary, what do you go about praying for? What does a little girl like you know about prayer?"

"Father, I like to pray," said the child.

"But what do you pray for; what is it you are wanting?"

"I'll tell you what I pray for; but you must promise me something first."

"Well, what must I promise?"

"Well, father, if you will promise to go to meeting with mother and me to-night, I'll tell you what I pray for."

She put her little hands caressingly down his cheeks, and said, "Pa, I pray every day that God convert your soul, and make you love his Bible and Him too." With these last words, she put up her little mouth to his, and gave him an earnest, loving kiss; and as she did so he felt as if something struck him on the top of his head. He became faint, and trembled, and afterwards declared it seemed as if God had smitten him.

He said nothing then, but went to meeting that night; and his conviction of God's power increased, until he humbled himself as a sinner before Him, and was enabled, by faith, to trust in Christ for his salvation. How ashamed and sorry he was when he remembered how he had fought against the Bible.

He went away very soon in his boat. When he came back, it was dark as he reached the wharf, but, before going home, he went to a book-store, and bought a large elegant Bible, and carrying it home, laid it on his wife's table.

Mrs. Ross and little Mary were very happy in the change in his feelings; and ever since then he has led a Christian life, always thanking God for little Mary and her prayers.

GRAVEN-HILL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, BAY-WATER.—There was a large attendance lately at the usual weekly prayer-meeting, in the lecture-room of the above church (Rev. A. M'Millan, pastor), when an address was given by Mr. J. S. Morant, student of the Lancashire Independent and Owen's College, Manchester, embodying some interesting details of the evangelistic work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in that city. The audience paid marked attention, and appeared deeply interested in listening to the clear and concise, although necessarily brief, statements as to the wonderful manner in which God has so graciously blessed the work of these evangelists, and the way in which his people, including many of the students, have been stirred up to assist in this glorious movement.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN CANADA.

My dear Brother,—The close of another year has come, with its testimony of continued blessing. Surely our debt of mercy was never so great, our gratitude never so much, as now. Here again, "Ebenezer!" And may we, as Israel of old, make the word, not memorial of time only, but of victory, so much ground gained, and, with shouts of dependent praise, make our memorial stones fresh starting-points for future conquests.

Many of your readers have long been my helpers in prayer, and I would again thank them, and ask for future remembrance.

The past weeks in this Dominion have been marked by much solemn and faithful testimony in the preaching of the gospel; for herein is our chiefest work. In Montreal I was enabled to give a clear, faithful presentation of Jesus. Many were brought from death to life by the power of the living Christ, whilst hundreds of Christians were enabled to realize their position and responsibility more intelligently. I need scarcely say that I found very much sympathy, save in one or two cases of wealthy, worldly men connected with churches, who have more love for dollars than godliness.

From Montreal to Ottawa, where again I was most graciously permitted to preach the Lord Jesus. Many have been gathered into the churches there. The brethren received me heartily, and the days passed very sweetly in his presence who is Lord and King.

Thence to Kingston, where we had a most precious season of power. Here in a pre-eminent degree we shared the blessing of true unity, and all the Lord's servants helped me greatly. Hence we had Psalm cxxxiii. reduced to our daily experience, and from our exalted Aaron we shared the generous flow of holy love. Blessed be his name for ever!

From Kingston to Belleville, where I found myself too exhausted to work, and here I rested somewhat in the Marchmont Home. What a work of blessing is being carried on by the different Homes here! My soul has been greatly refreshed this Christmas in seeing some of the dear boys return to "Blair Athol," to spend a few days with our sister Miss Macpherson. The change in appearance, from London's hapless poverty and degradation, to this glorious clime—bright, rosy faces, full of laughter and fun, and yet deeply interested in the dear, loving Saviour, whose Spirit thus practically tells his own sweet story of love to their young hearts. One dear fellow specially delighted me. I was present as he was ushered in with his little brother, his eyes full of tears of gratitude and joy as he said to Miss Macpherson, "Please, miss, here's a present for you," drawing a large, fat, beautiful goose from under his arm, carefully packed. Excuse my adjectives, but I cannot help it, for I fairly loved the boys; and when I looked back but four years, and contrasted their hapless life (workhouse children) in one of our English provincial towns, my spirit was full of gladness, and I thanked God for these broad lands, and the untiring energy of the band of workers and friends who so intelligently and successfully save them from poverty, crime, and wretchedness, and, by change of position, sympathy, common sense, and Christian love, fit them for useful, prosperous lives here, and, by grace, for eternal glory yonder.

After some rest, I proceeded to Toronto, where your readers have already followed. I rejoice greatly in the work there, and can only say, "It is the Lord." Never did I more deeply feel my utter unfitness for his work. The hearty love of the brethren was most grateful, and here again we saw the great, the exceeding value of united effort and earnest prayer. The good work progresses with much ingathering, and increased spiritual life.

After a month's constant work, from morning till midnight, I was very much exhausted, for the fresh, clear air is very stimulating, and beyond strength it leads you; so that I am just paying the penalty of an over-wrought brain. I have been resting some days, and, with the amusement of the ice and plenty of exercise, feel already much refreshed.

There is here a wide and effectual door, and I go on Saturday to Hamilton and Brantford, for special work; but of these and St. Catherine's, where I spent a few days, and also Niagara, I will send you some information in a future letter, unless, indeed, work needs my return to London and home, when I will see you face to face.—Yours very sincerely in Christ Jesus.

LONDON CONFERENCE ON HOLINESS.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name." Here is an indubitable precedent for the numerous conferences, concerning the things of the Kingdom, that characterize the present day; and the words were forcibly present to my mind last Thursday afternoon and evening, when I attended the meetings of the above Conference in the Agricultural Hall, Islington. I saw no other reporters present, but I think the recording angel who takes notes for the "book of remembrance" must have been there, for, as far as I know the mind of the Lord, there was not a little said and sung and prayed that could not but be pleasing in his ears. The theme of the proceedings, from first to last, was that most delightful, most wonderful, most inexhaustible of all themes—JESUS and his love. If I were to condense the utterances of the various speakers into four lines, I should choose the refrain of the opening hymn, one of the most inspiring verses in modern hymnology—

"Sweetest note in seraph song,
Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung—
Jesus, Jesus, Jesus!"

The rhyme may be defective, and not up to the standard of an exceedingly hypercritical correspondent of a religious contemporary last week, but there is a power in the lines to kindle the deepest and truest affections of the heart, that all the lexicons in the world could not put forth. And when the human soul hungers and thirsts after the Righteous One, what matters it whether there be a flaw in the finishing of the spoon that conveys the nourishment? But I am going astray from the Conference.

The key-note was struck by Mrs. Boardman, who presided during the ladies' hour, from 3 to 4, and read from Hebrews ii. 9—"We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour." She showed how the material forces of the world are now nearly all subject to man, but there are certain things that he is powerless to manage and subdue—chiefly sin, Satan, and death. Jesus has conquered them all. But the mass of professed Christians are not content to leave them in his hands; they think to overcome by their own striving, and the result is hopeless failure. How Christians are in bondage to self! Why do they not give up the fruitless task, and look to Jesus alone for redemption from the power as well as the penalty of sin? So Mrs. Boardman talked to us in the most unreserved and homely fashion, and I could not but regret that comparatively few of her sisters in Christ were there to hear. I hope I am within the mark in saying that there must be thousands of Christian ladies in Islington who are not above the need of such teaching. If any of them should read this page, will they forgive me if I seriously advise them, for their highest good, to strain a point, and be present at one or more of these ladies' meetings, to be held from 3 to 4, in St. Mary's Hall, every week-day this month? They will certainly not regret it.

Admiral Fishbourne took Mrs. Boardman's place at 4 o'clock; and the next hour was devoted to praise, prayer, and short addresses by Mr. Donald Matheson and Rev. W. E. Boardman. The latter gentlemen gathered up the thoughts of the previous speakers, pointing out the threefold way in which we are to look to Jesus. We see Him seated on his throne, as a pledge of our ultimate victory; we look at Him in order to have our love quickened and our hearts filled with admiration; and we look unto Him to go before us in the Christian race, and to remove the difficulties from our path.

After tea came the hour for conversation, towards the end of which the harmony of the meeting was somewhat disturbed by one of the audience, who could not agree with the views that had been expressed as to the higher life, and showed considerable impatience when a brother sitting near him complied with his request to quote chapter and verse. Some earnest prayer followed, and restored the devotional tone of the Conference, like oil on the troubled waters.

After further addresses, chiefly of testimony, the Rev. J. Allen, of Tonbridge Chapel, gave some earnest and wholesome counsel to Christian workers, as to what they must avoid, and as to the true source of power for service.

As I left the Hall with the dispersing audience of 250 to 300, I felt that the four hours had been very well spent, and that the numbers attending the Conference would be multiplied ten-fold, if the desire for greater consecration to the Saviour were as prevalent as it ought to be. G.

APPEAL FOR PRAYER

ON BEHALF OF MORE THAN 150 MILLIONS OF CHINESE.

There are nine provinces of China, each as large as a European kingdom, averaging a population of seventeen or eighteen millions each, but all destitute of the pure gospel. About a hundred Roman Catholic priests from Europe live in them, but not one Protestant missionary.

Much prayer has been offered on behalf of these nine provinces by some of the friends of the China Inland Mission; and during the past year nearly £4,000 has been contributed on condition that it be used in these provinces alone. We have some native Christians from these regions who have been converted in our older stations, and who are most earnestly desiring the evangelization of their native districts. Our present pressing need is of missionaries to lead the way. Will each of your Christian readers at once raise his heart to God and spend one minute in earnest prayer that God will raise up this year eighteen suitable men to devote themselves to this work. Warm-hearted young men, who have a good knowledge of business, clerks or assistants in shops who have come in contact with the public, and learned to gather the wants and suit the wishes of purchasers, are well fitted for this work. They should possess strong faith, devoted piety, and burning zeal; be men who will gladly live, labour, suffer, and, if need be, die, for Christ's sake.

There are doubtless such in the churches of the United Kingdom. May the Lord thrust many of them out. We shall be glad to hear from such.

NUNEATON.—During the Week of Universal Prayer, much ground has been broken up, many who stood aloof now come forward. We have had such prayer-meetings as we have not had before for many years in regard to numbers and blessing. Our God is carrying on his own work in the hearts of his people. Greater earnestness, stronger faith prevails; and in regard to conversions, all the churches are feeling the results of this work in the accession of many new members. We have also to praise the Lord that the people of Coventry, having heard of our blessing, are going to have special services in a large hall, mid-day and evening next week. Surely God is going to do great things for us.—Yours in Jesus, S. C. G.

THE POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.

In a letter to Mr. George Pearse, Mons. Barbier writes as follows. We commend him and his work of faith to our readers' attention.

We have had many blessed testimonies of good wrought. Many of our poor countrymen from France have learned to love that gospel which they once hated. For the last five years they have had preaching four times a week, and you both well understand the class we have to deal with. Very many have returned to France, Belgium, Switzerland, etc., but those that remain in London are faithful to us. One aged man, a lawyer, who was an unbeliever, has only twice in six years missed coming to the meeting; also a woman, during five years, has only missed three or four times.

As we can no longer have Grafton Hall, formerly lent by our good friend Mr. Weatherley, we have managed to get a place in St. Martin's-street, Leicester-square; but it is small, low, and dirty, and we are continually worried by the children in the neighbourhood. Pray, dear friends, that I may get a corner on God's earth more fit for preaching the gospel of his grace.

Expenses augment each year, and there are miseries amongst these poor foreigners that have to be immediately attended to, and we cannot get into debt. Believe me, our faith is often tried.

Our Home for school teachers, governesses, and ladies'-maids, is another means whereby the gospel can be daily preached, perhaps to twelve or fifteen of them—my wife placing these in Christian families, after taking them in hand herself, has proved a blessing to many.

In the Sunday-school we have sixty children. When I hear these small voices singing the revival hymns, my heart leaps with joy. We have three humble, devoted persons to help us in that part of the business, for which I thank God. Our free reading library is famous—more than 150 volumes have been read within six months by these poor people. Our own library and the Home one are well liked. Yes, the Lord has done much for us; bless his holy name!

CONFERENCE OF MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Committee appointed to carry out the details of the proposed Conference of the Members of the Church of England, on the 17th and 18th of February, 1875, beg to announce the following arrangements:—

1. The meetings will take place at the Cannon-street Hotel; and will be held each day from half-past 10 to 1 in the morning, and from 7 to half-past 9 in the evening. The Rev. Prebendary Auriol will preside.

2. The subjects for consideration at the morning and evening meetings will be the following:—

- (1) Wed. morning, "The Believer's Standing" (Phil. iii. 7-10).
- (2) Wed. evening, "The Believer's Curse" (Phil. iii. 12-14).
- (3) Thurs. morning, "The Believer's Prospect" (Phil. iii. 20, 21).
- (4) Thurs. evening, "The Believer's Provision" (Phil. iv. 19).

3. The afternoons will be occupied with meetings on missionary work:—Wednesday, home; Thursday, foreign. There will also be a Bible-reading on each afternoon. These meetings will go on from half-past 2 to 5.

4. Admission will be by tickets; and application for these, accompanied by a stamped envelope, should be made without delay to Mr. James Pearce, 48, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, London, W., and not to any member of the committee. Applicants are requested to state distinctly for which of the meetings tickets are required. There will be a few reserved seats at half-a-crown each for each day.

THE EAST-END TRAINING INSTITUTE.—No one who is acquainted with the increasing work and responsibility devolving on Dr. Barnardo, in connection with his own more immediate work, will be surprised to learn, from the report in another column of a meeting at the Edinburgh Castle, that he has found it necessary to retire from the directorship of the Training Institute, in which he has hitherto been associated with Mr. Graitan Guinness, upon whom the sole directorate will henceforth devolve.

"STOP THE TRAIN!"

Few in this land have not had their hearts deeply touched by that terrible disaster in the neighbourhood of Oxford on Christmas-eve, which turned what was anticipated as a day of mirth into a day of mourning, and plunged so many, at a moment when they were least thinking of it, into eternity. The details of the dreadful carnage will not soon fade from the memory even of those who only read of them. My object in referring to them now is to recall one little incident recorded, which spoke to my heart with singular power a lesson which many besides myself, I fear, have need to learn.

It is recorded that among those who had the good fortune to escape on that terrible night, was one man who, finding himself safe, had sufficient presence of mind to remember that another train on the same line was almost due, and so, without a moment's delay he seized a red railway-rug for a signal, and rushed back until he met the advancing train, and stopped it, and so prevented a repetition of the awful disaster. One cannot hear of an incident like that without a feeling of gladness. Every one praises the man, admiring his thoughtfulness and promptitude. And every one rejoices in his success.

I felt rebuked when I read that; Christian reader, how is it with you? We believe in hell, don't we? We believe that if men and women reach a certain point unconverted, a fate awaits them, of which, after all, that which met the unhappy travellers in that doomed train, is but a shadow. I say again, don't we believe that—believe that every soul that passes into a Christless eternity passes into a state where, for ever and ever, there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. And how many all around us are rushing heedless to that fatal point! We find them everywhere, among our neighbours, among those with whom we transact business, among our own relatives, in the bosom of our own families. There is scarce a day but we come in contact with some one, regarding whom, as we look him in the face, we have to say, "There is a man who, if he dies as he now is, will be in everlasting burning." Oh, terrible thought! It makes us tremble the very mention of it. But it is a reality; God says it, and that is enough: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Well, then, I ask, What are we doing? Will that man in his zeal to stop that train have to rise in judgment against us? He did that to avert a temporal calamity. What are we doing to avert the destruction of immortal souls? Oh, my readers, let us awake to the reality of things; and let our intercourse with the unconverted and unsaved be in harmony with the sense we have of their awful peril. Away with all frivolity! Let there be something more, too, than mere allusion to the subject nearest our heart. They may be offended at our plainness of speech now; but what of that? They will thank us by-and-by. Anyhow, let us not hold back or mince the truth.

Did any one object to this man that it was no work of his to interfere with the running of trains; he was not one of the regularly ordained officials of that company, whose duty bound them to work the signals? And will any one object to a man who seeks to warn another of his soul's danger, and point him to the place of safety, because, forsooth, he has had no official appointment to that important work? Surely the day is gone by when such a folly could be uttered. Ministers and other office-bearers of the church have their own special spheres, and they are spheres of high responsibility and honour. God but grant them to be faithful! And when one thinks how numerous they are—how every little parish and district in our land has its signal-posts more than sufficiently manned with them, what a blessing might our land enjoy, if every man but felt his responsibility, and sought grace from God faithfully to fulfil his commission, so that he could say, "We watch for souls as those who must give account."

But the question is not one of rights and responsibilities. It is simply this: these precious souls are in peril; in a little while they will be beyond the reach of help. What is to be done? Here is one deeply concerned about them. He knows the way of life; he has experienced it himself; he has been himself as a brand plucked from the burning. But must he hold his tongue, and let them hurry on to their awful fate, because no bishop or presbytery has laid hands upon him, and consecrated him to that work? Ah! methinks if these eyes of ours were but to get a true glimpse of their state who have passed the boundary-line, and begun but to taste the fierceness of that wrath which will consume them for ever, we would make short work of all such objections as these. Our cry would be, as we see those who are hastening towards the same end, "Stop them! stop them!" Ministers, if you can—if not, laymen—will you not haste to the rescue? Men, hoist the signal; women, lend your hand!—any one, any way! Only let them not come on to that awful fate. "By all means save some."

It was no objection to the man who stopped that train on Christmas-eve that the signal he used was not a very artistic one, not at all of the ordinary orthodox character. It was only a railway-rug; but it was the only thing he could get. And it was enough; it stopped the train. The passengers were saved. And many a soul has been saved by means as humble. Many a time a few stuttering words, uttered by an earnest heart, though in defiance of all orthodox rules of grammar and pronunciation, have been the means of introducing the light of God's glorious gospel into darkened hearts. If men are but in earnest, and will bring their talents, however humble, and put them, as the lad put his two loaves, into the hands of Jesus, they will be astonished to find to what a marvellous extent He can use them. God can dispense, if need be, with man's learning, and culture, and eloquence. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings He can perfect his praise.

Oh, my brother, do not hesitate to utter the message God has laid as a burden on your heart, through fear it may grate on ears polite! Out with it, out with it, as best you may, and leave the issue with God! Are you to let these men around you perish because you cannot address them in correct phraseology or manner? Away with the thought! Up to them with such words as you can get; up to them with the message God has given you. Wave your signal, however rude. There is not a moment to lose. "What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

DAVID E. M'NAB.

Manse of Ardrossan, Jan., 1875.

DOVER.—Advantage was taken of the Week of Prayer here to hold a conference, not on the scale of the annual one in September, but with the object of promoting consecration, and helping to bring nigh those who are yet afar off. The meetings were held, afternoon and evening, in Christ Church Schoolroom, Rev. G. A. Rogers, vicar, presiding, and extended over three days. Many brethren from Shorncliffe and Sandgate were present. The subjects of conference were all of a practical character, and the addresses given were calculated to awaken and promote the desire for more thorough dedication to the Lord's service.

DESTITUTE AND NEGLECTED CHILDREN.—There are in London alone, in connection with the Reformatory and Refuge Union, sixty-two Homes, capable of accommodating 4000 such children. All these are entirely supported by voluntary contributions; and there are besides twenty-three other Homes, containing more than 3000 children, only partially supported by Government grants, and therefore relying to some extent upon the aid they may obtain from the Reformatory and Refuge Union. We need now £2500, to help for another year to rescue from poverty, destitution, and crime 4000 children, who are not only kept, and fed, and taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and habits of industry, but, what is of infinitely more importance, are being instructed in the saving truths of the gospel. The boys are taught carpentry, boot-making, tailoring, farming, printing, etc., and the girls trained for domestic service; while even for the cripples some suitable employments are provided. Any contributions towards this good work will be gratefully acknowledged by,

GEORGE HANBURY.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN THEATRES, ETC.

At a recent meeting in the metropolis, a speaker said that London for Christ meant the world for Christ. When we consider the influences that are ever, and in so many ways, being radiated from it, we are almost ready to acquiesce in the statement. The promoters of the special services in theatres and music-halls have just issued the report of their fifteenth series of services, which is replete with momentous facts, and the most encouraging details of their special work. In the preface to the report it is stated that London

"Has 117,000 habitual criminals on its police register, increasing at an average of 30,000 per annum.

"Has more than one-third of all the crime in the country committed in it.

"Has 23,000 persons living in its common lodging-houses.

"Has as many beer-shops and gin-palaces as would, if placed side by side, stretch from Charing-cross to Portsmouth, a distance of seventy-three miles.

"Has 33,000 drunkards annually brought before its magistrates.

"Has as many paupers as would more than occupy every house in Brighton.

"Has upwards of a million of habitual neglecters of public worship!

"Has sixty miles of open shops every Lord's-day!

"Has need of 900 new churches and chapels, and 200 additional city missionaries!

"Has an influence with all parts of the world, represented by the yearly delivery in its postal districts of 238 millions of letters!"

"The claims of such a city on the sympathy, prayers, and help of Christians throughout the United Kingdom, the Committee for these services consider to be self-evident.

"For the fifteenth time they again commend to public support their own small contribution to the great missionary-work which has yet to be accomplished in this great centre of the world's influence. It is far from them to underrate the importance of the ordinary and recognized work of the Churches of Christ; but they submit that so long as London is London, the focus and magnet of the three kingdoms, it will ever stand in need of such an agency as these services to gather into the fold of Christ the "waifs and strays," the "shipwrecked" and "lost," in the battle of life.

"During the past series the Committee are able to report that 367 services have been held, attended by about 231,700 persons, making in all, from the commencement of this effort, 2,815 services, attended by 3,119,600 persons."

From the interesting reports sent in by the missionaries labouring at the various theatres we extract the following representative cases of conversion:—

"In my special work, as a city missionary, I visit the police-station in Albany-street, Regent's-park, and when the theatre was opened I invited the men to come, and very many of them accepted the invitation and came very regularly, and when I visited the station I took every opportunity of speaking to them of the service, and asking how they enjoyed it.

"On the last Wednesday in November, one of the sergeants asked my opinion of theatres, and while replying to him a little group formed to listen, and when I ceased speaking one of the men called out, 'I saw you on the stage last Sunday, Mr. C——.' 'Then you were at the theatre?' 'I was so, and got my face well washed with salt water (tears), and ain't ashamed to tell it; the preacher touched me up, and a good many more; here's one, and he laid his hand on another constable. The little knot separated, as pay had commenced; but I sought out the constable and found him in a most happy condition of mind. He continued to attend as often as his duties would allow, and has now been a member with the Wesleyans the last three months. On New Year's-day I met him as he was on duty in Camden High-street, when I remarked on the change that he had experienced, and he answered, 'Lor bless you, sir, I'm so happy at times, I don't seem to know what to do to praise the Lord more.'

"A young person waited one evening to speak with me about her soul. She was dressed in a most expensive manner, but I soon recognized in her a prostitute of the highest class. She said, as I looked on her splendid attire, 'Oh, don't judge of me by these things. O God, what emptiness, what sin it conceals; Ch, sir, if you know me as God knows me you would hate, you would scorn me.' I replied, 'No, I would not; I would rather help you if I thought you were sincere.' This case is too long for details. She vowed that night that she would not return to her evil practice, and that she would on the morrow leave her lodgings. I called the next day to see her. Happening to knock at the wrong house, a lady asked whether I knew the nature of the house I was seeking, and administered certain cautions relating to my character. I found the right address, and had an interview with the householder. Without any ceremony I stated the object of my visit. He flew into a passion, and said, 'Then you, sir, are the cause of Miss A—— leaving me in this manner? The Philharmonic Theatre, eh? That clears up the mystery. Well, sir, you will please leave my house at once,' etc. 'No,' I said, 'you invited me in, and I can't be turned out in that way. I haven't finished my business with you.' I remained with him half-an-hour, when his last words were, 'I'll attend your service next Sunday.' Miss A—— had fulfilled her vow. Her splendid residence has been exchanged for a single room in T——street, and her sinful life for an honest and upright one."

"Mr. E——, a commercial traveller, and evidently well-educated, had been led into evil company and very perplexing circumstances. He was about to rush madly out of the world, but accidentally dropped into the theatre one Sunday evening. What he heard filled him with dread. 'To rush out of this world would be to rush into the presence of an angry God. He could not do that, and in the agony of despair he asked me, What can I do? He had walked the streets one night without a home and without a friend. He was weak from hunger, and but thinly clad..... I got him food and lodging while his relatives were communicated with. His case was to all appearance genuine, and his sorrow real. For two weeks he was lodged and boarded by a poor Christian widow who attended my services, while a clergyman to whom I made known the case, provided another opening for him. During the two weeks he was constant at my Mission services, and begged me to give him work to do, that his mind might be diverted from his trouble. I found him a most willing worker, sometimes arranging music for my singing-class, or assisting in the cleaning of the Mission-hall, which was then being repaired. I have every reason to believe that he has entered life again a changed man. As we parted he said, 'Mr. T——, away from you I feel as a child..... Pray for me, that my new resolutions fail not.'"

"At one of the services—it was the last but one—March 22nd, Jabez Inwards, Esq., had preached a striking sermon from Rev. iii. 20, 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock.' I went towards the door, and I spoke to a young man dressed as a sailor, and he told me that he felt very miserable; that he had strolled up Waterloo-road, and seeing the door open, he came in, and 'I never felt as I have since I heard the preacher.' He gave me his name, J. B——, aged twenty, serving on a barge, 'George Francis,' loading at the wharf near Waterloo-bridge. 'Oh, sir,' said he, 'could you give me a Bible, for I want to read it?' I promised to bring him one. I provided a Bible and went to the wharf; he was on the look-out, and he at once recognized me, and came across several barges moored, and asked me to follow him. I was not accustomed to descend a rope-ladder, but I ventured, and soon set my feet on a barge, and then clambered over one and another, and then descended with him into the cabin. Here by our two selves I set the way of peace before him, heard his simple story, got him on his knees, and during prayer he sobbed aloud. I gave him the Bible, and wrote his name in it, and his gratitude was very hearty. He asked me for my name, and where I lived, and he said, 'When I see my mother I shall tell her all about you, and what I feel.' Concerning the services, he said whenever he was in London, and they were held, he should come."

"A Polish Jew, named B——, many years since attended theatre services, and for the first time became dissatisfied with Judaism, and every winter continued to attend these services; and for the last three or four years, when the theatre services were over, would attend a church. 'But,' said he, 'I like the theatre services, for they make things so plain, I can understand them; and then I can come to these services, and not look different from other people, as I can't make the appearance now as formerly; and when I go to church, I get into any corner where I can hear, but not to be seen, if possible.' After attending the South London Palace one evening, I asked him to come to my Sunday men's Bible-class. He came, but was at first very shy. I followed him up, and gained his confidence. He was then most anxious for instruction. After a few weeks, a converted Jew, a member of my Bible-class, procured for him a Hebrew Bible, and spent one hour with him in reading and searching the Scriptures which testify of Christ. At his own request, I introduced him to the Rev. W. Thomson as a candidate for baptism."

"A man was brought to the theatre through one or two of the little bills. He was, on Sunday morning, in Club-row, with a number of men that work under him; and wherever he and his party turned, they read on the bills, 'Come and hear Ned Wright;' and he told his companions, 'We must go and hear what this man has to say.' And they accordingly came, with the intention of having something to laugh and talk about during the next week. 'But oh,' said he, 'after I was in the theatre but a few minutes, all my past life was brought to my view. I felt as though somebody had split upon me. In fact, my comrades thought I was taken ill; for I felt awful, and how I got out I cannot tell you.' Some of his friends went with him to tea at his house. The wife noticed that there was something very peculiar about him. She asked him what was the matter. He asked her if she could pray. The poor woman did know how to pray. Then he told her where he had been, and what was going on in his mind. They accordingly came in the evening again, and stayed to the prayer-meeting. After the service I entered into conversation with him, and invited him to come to the Tuesday evening prayer-meeting. It was at this meeting I got to know the history and case of the whole family. I am thankful to say they are now truly converted to God, simply by hearing the word at the Pavilion Theatre, and they were regular attendants at the theatre till the close. I then advised them to settle in some church or chapel, and they settled at Christ Church, Spitalfields."

"In conclusion, the Committee would once more remind their subscribers of the urgent need of some such efforts as these Services to Christianize the immense floating mass, nearer two millions than one, lying outside the pale of the Christian Church. The population of this great city is ever outgrowing the ordinary organization of the Church, and indeed, every other organization, municipal and otherwise, as well. The "back-work" alone to be done is indeed great; but if the responsibility of rising to the greatness of the work cast in God's providence upon the Christian Church in this great centre of the world's influence be onerous, the ultimate dignity and reward of being found equal to it, both to the Church and the State, will be proportionate. At the present time the whole of Europe is in commotion with the rising tide of conflict between the different classes of society, and little effort is put forth to throw upon the boiling waters the oil of gospel truth. Be it ours to lay the foundation of all moral and political greatness and welfare by seeking individual reformation, "a new birth unto righteousness," in the homes of the people."

CROSS-WEARING.

I am crucified with Christ—
With Him nailed upon the tree;
Not the cross, then, do I bear,
But the cross it beareth me.
Solemn cross on which I died,
One with Him, the Crucified.

Shall I take that blood-stained cross,
Cross of agony and shame,
Cross of Him who fought my fight,
Cross of Him who overcame?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Shall I drag thee through the crowd,
'Mid the laughter that is there;
Whirl thee through the giddy waltz,
Bound upon my neck or hair?
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I make that lowly cross
Minister of woman's pride,
Drawing eyes to me that should Fix upon the Crucified?
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I call this glittering gem,
Made for show and vanity—
Shall I call this gaud a cross,
Cross of Him who died for me?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Dr. H. Bonar.

MR. TOYE'S ORPHANAGE.—I had the pleasure a few days ago of visiting Mr. Toye's Orphanage, and was delighted to see the happy faces of sixty little ones, whom the Lord has committed to his charge. I could not help feeling, and deeply too, what a work of patience and labour of love our brother is engaged in, for I know his faith has been for the past three months very sorely put to the test. There is great present need, and I feel sure it would be only for you to make this known through your valuable paper to enlist the sympathy of many of the Lord's people. The address is, George-terrace, Greenwich.

THE EAST-END TRAINING INSTITUTE.

FAREWELL MEETING AT THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE."

The Directors of the East-end Training Institute held a farewell meeting last week, to commend to God and his work three of the students trained under their roof, and now about to depart to their life-work—one to India; another to South Africa, in co-operation with our beloved brother Major Malan; and a third to Burmah.

After tea, which was limited to the more immediate friends of the undertaking, the doors were thrown open, and the large hall speedily filled, showing that in the very east of London, there is, thank God! a genuine interest in missionary effort. Mr. T. B. Smithies presided, and many ministers and well-known gentlemen were around him.

Prayer was first offered by the Rev. Frank White; and, after singing, Mr. H. G. Guinness explained the deep need for such an Institution, viz., the immense tracts of country still utterly unevangelized in Asia, Africa, etc., with reference to which as yet the clear command to go and "preach the gospel to every creature" is practically ignored.

During the two years that the Institute has been established eleven young men have been sent forth, and numbers of applicants are still, spite of recent enlargements, waiting for admission. Two of the students then spoke—one a Hindoo, who has received the needed training in this land, and now returns to his own people to be, as we trust, an epistle of Christ "known and read of all men." A verse of the thoroughly-missionary hymn, "Here am I, send me," was sung between each address; and towards the close,

Dr. BARNARDO made an announcement which is important to all acquainted with the work from which he now retires. "Watching a ship some three years ago in process of building, I wondered the use or the need of a quantity of timber by which it was surrounded, and on inquiry found it was needed as a support and prop till she should be launched. I saw that ship again lately, starting with a large living freight; the timbers were gone, the props removed, she sailed unaided and alone. So it has been as regards myself and my position in reference to the East-end Training Institute. When, two years ago, my honoured brother and fellow-worker Mr. Guinness placed the scheme before me, I hesitated, for, much as I loved and honoured him, the sense of my own personal unfitness to take a leading part in such work was almost overwhelming, and, besides this, I even then feared that the duties connected with my own peculiar work would greatly engross my time. Nevertheless, after much waiting upon God in prayer, I felt it right to begin with him this most precious work, and for awhile, being then unmarried, I lived among the students as a kind of resident principal. I look back upon the hours spent with these dear young servants of Christ, and in connection with him who first of all designed the effort, as being some of the happiest in my life. Now, however, my own work has increased exceedingly, and I have felt that I must not be a divided man, and that the time for props is over for the Institute. The work, too, of the Institute has grown, and, like my own, will demand from those at its head the consecration to it of their entire time and strength. This I cannot give; and, therefore, reluctantly and with great regret, I withdraw from the direction and management of an effort than which I believe there is none more calculated to advance the glory of Christ and the extension of his kingdom. The object of the work is Godlike; the manner of it, in my judgment, as nearly perfect as it can well be for so initiatory a stage of its progress. I leave my position as a director only for the reasons already given, to remain, however, one of the warmest friends of the Institute, a member of the new council which Mr. Guinness is about to form, and, so far as in me lies, a true fellow-helper. In conclusion, let me add that all donations and subscriptions to the Institute, and all letters relating to its management, must in future be addressed to H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E."

An interesting address was then given by the Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society. A young Chinese gentleman, studying law in England, added a few words; and Mr. Smithies made an earnest appeal to God's people to aid foreign mission work more liberally than they had done in the past, comparing the total of moneys contributed to missionary causes with that paid for the dog-tax, drink, etc.

This happy invigorating meeting will, we trust, be one of many such which shall assemble to say good-bye. "God be wi' ye," to heaven-sent messengers of Christ.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILD MAY PARK.

In harmony with the invitation of the Evangelical Alliance, and with the custom established for several years by the late Rev. W. Pennefather, meetings were held morning and evening in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. They were well attended, and the spirit of prayer and supplication was manifestly present.

A considerable number of written requests were remembered in silent prayer at each meeting. Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton presided on each occasion, except Thursday morning and Saturday evening. At the former meeting his place was taken by Rev. D. Wilson, the venerable vicar of Islington. The subjects named by the Evangelical Alliance were read at each meeting.

The Rev. C. F. COBB, Vicar of St. Jude's, gave the address on Monday morning. Starting from Heb. x. 24, 25, he observed that if the meetings were to be profitable, they must be fruitful, having a combination of love and good works. To say to our Master that we love Him, and not keep his commandments, was mocking Him. To say to our poor brethren, "Be ye warmed and filled," and not give them those things they need, was mocking them. He then dwelt upon some of the signs of the near approach of the day of the Lord, viz., increased intercommunication of nations, and increased knowledge (Dan. xii. 4), the gospel preached for a witness to all nations (Matt. xx. 14), the want of faith (Luke xviii. 8), and the increase of superstitution (Rev. xvi. 13). Having spent some years in India, as a missionary, he dwelt touchingly on the need of increased labourers, and alluded to a petition sent in by Mr. Hudson Taylor for China, where there was a population of 150,000,000 of human beings without a single Protestant missionary.

In the evening, the Rev. Dr. H. S. PATERSON dwelt upon "Mercy and Judgment," as stated in Psa. ci. 1. After speaking of individual and national mercies, he dwelt on the sins of the nation, specially drunkenness and infidelity. Of the former he said we were bound, as Christian men and women, to lay it to heart. Till we were aroused as one man to direct our prayers and efforts to this one thing, little could be done. Of the latter, he said it abounded when there was deadness in the Church. The only effectual way to meet these doubts and denials was Christian living. Our agreement and God's almightiness could do anything. Let us confess and judge our sins, and put them away, so that there should be nothing in us to hinder the working of his mighty power.

On Tuesday, the Rev. Dr. OSWALD DYKES, minister of Regent-square Church, dwelt on the importance of prayer for kings and all in authority, from 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. It had been objected that Christianity did not contain the element of patriotism. But he argued that as Christ taught his followers to love all, it certainly included their own land and people. Referring to our national blessings, he said if any had cause to bless God we had. How much we had to thank God for a pure Court! He had been specially impressed with this while reading the new life of the Prince Consort. As to the past year, what a bountiful harvest had been vouchsafed! Then think how wonderfully famine had been overcome in India, and our own nation preserved in peace, and spared the horrors of war. Social troubles, such as the agricultural labourers' question, had, in a great measure, been laid to rest. On the other hand, great calamities, like the loss of the "La Plata" and "Cospatrick," and the Shipton railway accident, reminded us sadly of our mortality, and called forth sympathy and prayer on behalf of survivors and sufferers. There were also features in our national life which indicated danger, and might well produce humiliation and shame. Our national prosperity threatened to breed the vices attendant upon luxury, and to lead to senseless display. We might well pray for these dangers to be averted, and the nation made wiser by what had befallen other nations.

In the evening, Mr. W. T. PATON delivered a stirring address, on the encouragements to prayer contained in Luke xi. 9, 10. He noticed, first, who was the Teacher, "I say unto you." To his mind, that was our answer to all the philosophical objections to prayer. If He says, "I say unto you," does not He know all the difficulties? He next noticed the spirit in which prayer is to be offered—the spirit of a child; and the privilege we have in prayer—coming to a Father. He then dwelt upon the three promises, wrapped up in three precepts—"ask," "seek," "knock." Asking implied a sense of need; seeking implied a sense of loss; and knocking implied a sense of exclusion.

On Wednesday morning, the Rev. HENRY E. BROOKE spoke on "The outpouring of the Spirit." The address was an exposition of the seven verses (Isa. xliii. 27 to xlv. 5), taken connectedly. This connection was shown to be most important to the right understanding of the passage, and it is generally missed by the division of chapters, which here mars the sense.

In the evening, Mr. FINLAY GIBSON read portions from 1 Chron. xvi., and dwelt upon the testimony of the Word of God as to answers to prayer in connection with faith—"Whatsoever things ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them"; in connection with pleasing God, "Whatever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight" (John iv. 22); in connection with work, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward"; and in connection with the glory of God, "Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever" (2 Chron. xvii. 24).

On Thursday morning, the Rev. G. F. HEAD, Vicar of St. Mark's, Tollington Park, spoke on Eph. i. 19, 20. The mighty power of God as exhibited, first, in raising Christ from the dead, and seating Him at his own right hand, and then as exhibited in raising believers from a death of sin, and giving them the new resurrection life of holiness. The analogy was carefully traced step by step, and dwelt upon with much freshness and force.

In the evening, the Rev. M. GUY PEARCE, Wesleyan minister, expounded Acts ii. 41-47, and applied it to the present time. First, he noticed a great contrast between the early Church and that of to-day. Then (1) people were actually saved, three thousand in one day; (2) the work was seen, and it was continuous, "The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." Next he dwelt upon the great Revivalist, "The Lord added," etc.; and finally upon the Church. He described it as (1) a believing Church, "They that steadfastly believed"; (2) a living Church; (3) a happy Church, "They that gladly received the word," etc.; (4) a united Church, "Continued steadfastly," etc.; and (5) a praying Church.

After the large meeting in the hall, a second meeting was held in No. 6 Room, for those who desired to make a full surrender of themselves to the Lord. This was repeated again on Friday, and was found to be a time of refreshing to many.

On Friday morning, the Rev. GORDON CALTHROP, Vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury New Park, read Acts i. 11, and delivered an address on "The present condition and future prospects of the Jews." He did not expect Israel as a nation to be brought in under the present dispensation, the purpose of which was rather to gather out a people for his name. He closed by adducing some reasons why Christians should take an interest in the Jews:—1. Because our Lord belonged to them according to the flesh. 2. We owe them a very deep debt of gratitude as helping so largely in our legislation and sanitary arrangements, and as the depositaries for so many ages of the Old Testament Scriptures. 3. We owe them a debt of reparation for the injuries done them under the name of Christianity in former ages. 4. We bring ourselves into harmony with the purposes of God.

In the evening, the Rev. GEORGE SAVAGE, of Bexley Heath, expounded Isa. xii. in connection with Isa. xlv. 1-5. He opened up the double relationship of the Lord's people. First, they are His; then He is theirs. He summed up by urging the Lord's people to say to the Lord, "I am the Lord's"; then to say it to themselves; and then to others; thus owning and confessing Christ to their soul's health.

On Saturday morning, the Rev. Dr. EDMOND spoke on "Revival," from that well-known passage in Psa. lxxxv., "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?" He defined revivals to be the increase of spiritual life where already given—the giving it more abundantly—and then showed: 1. That the cry for revival was in itself a sign of revival. 2. That where revival comes in any form, it always generates a thirst for more. 3. That one great argument in seeking revival is what God has already done. 4. When God grants revival, what glorious results follow—how his people rejoice!

In the evening, Mr. St. JOHN MILD MAY presided, and delivered the address. It was an exposition of 2 Cor. v., and applied both to saint and sinner.

During the week, most of the neighbouring ministers attended, and prayer was offered by the Revs. J. Dodd, D. Blueloch, John Wilkinson, H. Dixon, Kingsford B. Sidebottom, and Messrs. M. Michell, W. Gadsby, G. Kirkham, H. Hutchinson, A. H. Maude, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Sapstead, and others.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

REV. J. H. WILSON, AT LONDON TAVERN.

There is a remarkable advice given by Joseph to his brethren, when about to leave Egypt for Canaan—"See that ye fall not out by the way." Under the circumstances, it was a peculiarly apt advice, and it is one which cannot be too earnestly studied, or too commonly carried out by Christians in the present day.

Let us call up some of the reasons for this advice, that must have been in the mind of Joseph, and apply them to our own case.

"See that ye fall not out by the way," because ye are brethren. Strife is unseemly under any circumstances, and especially in the family circle. And we who believe in Jesus are Christian brethren and sisters; and if strife be unseemly in a family, it is also amongst Christians. Whatever be our name, if we love the Lord Jesus Christ, we belong to the one great family.

Again, Joseph's brethren had to pass through an enemy's country, and that was a strong reason for their not falling out by the way. Union was needful, not only to resist the common enemy, but to enable them to make progress to the land of Canaan. In like manner, we, as Christians, have to pass through a world in which sin predominates. No one conversant with our present state needs to be told how many enemies we have—infidelity, popery in various forms, sensuality, and conformity to the world in many churches, and to an extent truly alarming. What need there is for more thorough union among all who love the Lord Jesus, that we may be strong to conquer vice, and overcome evil with good. It is a mournful fact that is revealed by the census returns, that there are six millions of people in England alone, living in open neglect of the means of grace. There is need for us to be united in our Christian walk, that we may overcome this evil through the truth of the glorious gospel, by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Another reason for union among Joseph's brethren was, that they were bearers of precious treasure. The people in Canaan were starving on account of the famine, and Joseph's brethren were to carry home food for their family, and probably seed for future harvests. It was needful for them to keep together, not only for their own sakes, but that they might conserve the lives of others. Are not Christians the bearers of precious treasure? We have received the seed of the Word; it has been committed to us in a measure in which it has not been committed to any other people in the history of the world. Surely there is need for us to cling together at the present day, that we may sow the seeds of truth in the midst of so much prevailing error.

Another thought is, that Joseph's brethren were all travelling to one home. They were all going to Canaan, their father's house. Had they fallen out by the way, and even saved their lives, but lost the corn, what a mournful retrospect it would have been! We, as believers, are all going to the heavenly Canaan; and just in proportion as we consecrate ourselves to God's service here, in love and unity, do we lay up treasure for ourselves in heaven. In view of the glorious fact that in heaven there are different degrees of glory, while at the same time the very lowest position is beyond our comprehension in happiness and peace, let us lay to heart this advice given by Joseph; so that by entire and thorough consecration to God's service, in all things in which we are agreed, He may be glorified.

BOYS' REFUGE AND INDUSTRIAL HOME, MANCHESTER.—This useful institution has just completed the fifth year of its labours, with many encouraging tokens of success. Just now a workshop, with steam power, dining-room, schoolroom, and gymnasium, are in course of erection, at a cost of about £1600. Many of the boys, rescued from the want and temptation of the streets, are now filling respectable situations in life, some on board the training-ship, others growing up in safe homes in Canada, or the Western States, while the majority are retained at home, to train for honest labour there.

THE LORD'S REMEMBRANCERS.

REV. LUKE WISEMAN, AT LONDON TAVERN.

You will remember that one of the Hebrew prophets calls upon the faithful of his day as the "Lord's remembrancers." "Give Him no rest till He shall establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Wonderful is the condescension by which our Father in heaven permits us to be spoken of in such a relation. Clearly, then, if we are the Lord's remembrancers—and I apprehend if that position of honour belonged to the Jewish Church, it belongs even more fully to the Christian—there is something to put Him in mind of, something that He has spoken. I need not to-day occupy your time with reciting, or even summarizing those wonderful, brilliant, and glorious promises which have issued from time to time from the lips of men specially inspired by the Holy Ghost, which declare that the present darkness of mankind shall pass away, and that the true light shall everywhere shine; that the unbelief of the Jew shall become a thing of the past; that the ignorance of the heathen shall be succeeded by a knowledge of the Christian faith. And is not the Lord's Prayer in itself virtually a promise? for can we conceive that the Head of the Church would have put a prayer into the lips of his people, to be used from generation to generation, except it was known to his own infinite wisdom that it would be accomplished? Therefore when from time to time we ask our Father in heaven that the kingdom may come, that his will may be done on the earth as it is in heaven, it seems to me to have the assurance and certainty of its own answer.

But we are not simply to be the Lord's remembrancers. It is for us to cultivate a spirit of serious, tender, anxious, intelligent concern for the welfare of our fellow-creatures. The injunction of the apostle on this point is perfectly clear, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others; let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." That word "also" clearly relieves the passage of any imputation which hypercriticism might have cast on it, of appearing to encourage neglect of our own spiritual concern. Take care of your own things first; see to it that your heart is right with God; but be not solicitous for this exclusively. If it shall please God to raise any of us to the higher walks of the Christian life, we shall be very much delivered from a mere selfish piety, although we shall never be delivered from holy watchfulness lest we should offend the Spirit of God, and a constant desire for our own salvation. But we are to have the mind of Christ; and what was that? He made Himself of no reputation, and took on Himself the form of a servant, and humbled Himself unto the death of the cross. And the unselfishness (if I might use the expression in reference to our Divine Master) was rewarded with a correspondingly glorious exaltation.

If we are willing to sink in Christ, we shall rise with Him; if we take up the cross with Him, we shall share the crown with Him. Depend upon it, if we are one with Him in the sorrow, the comfort, the sympathy, we shall also, through his infinite grace and mercy, be sharers in the glorious everlasting reward.

I remember visiting a friend on his death-bed, who, besides being engaged in a life of business, had devoted a great amount of time, and labour, and thought to the benefit of his fellow-creatures. Visiting him on one occasion, he made to me this remark, "I pray but very little for myself now. It seems to me that the battle is fought and the prize is in view, and my devotions with regard to myself are not so much prayer as thanksgiving. I praise God many an hour during the wakeful night. But do not suppose I do not pray. I believe I pray more than ever I did in my life, because now I have more time to pray for my fellow-men, and for the nations of the world."

He went on to describe how each day, and certain parts of every day, were devoted by him, as he lay there gradually sinking to his rest, to prayer for those in whom he felt a special interest, and also for those whom he had never seen.

Let us, then, bear in mind that it is our high privilege to be the Lord's remembrancers, to think on the things of others, and to offer up our prayers continually, of course, with all the practical efforts of which we are capable, for the extension of the kingdom of Christ on the earth.

With regard to the heathen, we have a prospect that in some aspects may seem to be appalling. Yet in India, for example, every one who knows the country, and understands at the same time the gospel of Christ, is ready to confess that a wonderfully extensive preparation is going on there. But few are actually joined to the Christian Church; but there is a general persuasion that in the course of a generation or so, the idols will be cast away, and the Christian faith will become the faith of the people.

With regard to the Jews, long and tedious as the work may appear, we observe some rays of hope. At all events, there is a better understanding now than formerly between the Christian and the Jew. The Christian no longer tramples as formerly on his Jewish brother, and one cannot but hope that the way is being prepared in the mind of the Jew for the reception of that glorious gospel we so greatly long for them to embrace.

With respect to the heathen world I would mention that a new province has just been added to the British empire—a small one to be sure, the group of the Fiji Islands—but highly important from its geographical position. I need hardly remind you that, forty years ago, that province was in a most degraded state. Now the people are nominally attached to the Christian faith, and now that an English government is going out, and British authority and jurisprudence are to be set up, I venture to name it as a subject for prayerful consideration, that such men may be chosen as will not unworthily represent the Christianity of this country. We know very well, as has been told us, how much we need to pray for our soldiers and sailors who, in many parts of the world, are the sole representatives of the British name. There is, undoubtedly, a considerable improvement both in the army and navy, and also, I trust, in the merchant navy. What an influence we may have for good, and, on the other hand, what evil we may be the means of spreading. May the Lord pour out his Spirit on us as a nation. Streams of grace are descending in our great towns; let us pray that God in his own time and way, and by his sovereign mercy, may be pleased to send us his blessing also.

CHRISTIAN FAITHFULNESS.

MR. E. OWEN HAY, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." All the Church is summed up here, as it were, in one man; so that while the message came to the Church, every individual member felt that it was for him. Everyone—the rich and poor, old and young—all felt that God had spoken, so pointed are the words. Dear fellow-believer, God speaks to thee to-night—"Be thou faithful unto death."

Faithfulness is a relative term, implying a relation between, at least, two parties. It is to be a reciprocal relationship. You and I know who these two parties are, and that one of them is faithful to the other—the Lord God Almighty to the Christian believer. "Faithful is He that has promised." He is our God who is faithful to his people, whose faithfulness is the blessed girdle binding together all his perfection and glory; and when we enter into his glorious rest, we shall be able to sing that He was faithful, and that "not one thing hath failed of all that the Lord hath spoken concerning us."

He speaks to all here to-night with a solemn voice, and says, "Be thou faithful unto Me." Let us look at the various relationships in which we stand to this glorious God, as revealed in his Word.

Of one thing I am sure, that faithfulness always implies danger and difficulty, through which, and notwithstanding which, we are to be faithful unto Him. In the passage before us it was evidently so. We have a glorious and perfect Pattern of faithfulness in this book; for there was One, only One, who was faithful in all things, who, in treading these sin-polluted shores, has been faithful to God—the Man Christ Jesus. This relation of fidelity to God implies nearness, personal contact with God. He who knows not God cannot possibly be asked to be faithful.

The first relationship in which we are placed is that of a servant. "Ah," some of you may say, "that's not a very high standing." Is it not? There is no higher or more glorious and noble work on earth than serving and blessing God. Remember that He of whom we have been speaking, who was in the form of God, took upon Him another form, that of a servant, or, as the Greek has it, a slave. God himself draws our attention to this. "Behold my Servant, whom I uphold." If Jesus was a servant, well may you and I count it a privilege to be servants of the Most High God. "Be thou faithful" as a servant unto God. We expect a faithful servant to be observant and watchful—to see our desires almost before they are expressed. And near unto Him must we be for service, that we may watch Him, see what He wants, mark his will, and run to do his bidding. And then we expect that a servant will be patient, and perfectly obedient to our will in everything. Our wills must be broken to his will. I am afraid that, when we receive Him into our hearts, it is as a spectator; but that is not what He wants. He ought to be enthroned, and occupy every chamber. He wants us to open to Him the head, the heart, the lips, the feet, the hands, the purse—everything at his disposal. It would then be blessed and happy service, a service of song and delight. How often we have said, "Come with us, and help us;" but that is not right. We should wait for Him to guide us, and tell us what to do in the morning, at noon, and at night. Another thought is, that we are to be not only observant, watchful, and obedient, but jealous of the Master's honour, even in the least things.

But we must go higher than this. The thought of a servant implies many others. For instance, there is a soldier with his eye on the captain, enlisted in his service. Our Captain is one who goes before, bearing the standard. And thank God, our Captain never was known to be beaten. We follow Him to certain victory. Be thou faithful as a soldier. We often have a lonely sentry walk, watching some corner; and it seems all dark night, and very cold. There is to be no sleeping on the post, no laying aside the weapons, no parleying with the enemy, but constant wakefulness and watchfulness.

Then there are others implied, such as faithful citizens; but we will leave this part of the subject, all being included in "Be thou faithful as a servant."

But there is a nearer and dearer relation than that. Jesus said to the little band, "Henceforth I call you not servants; I have called you friends." Friends! That is a relationship of intelligent sympathy, and is beautifully illustrated in Scripture, not only by Him who is the life of the book, but also in many another subordinate character. You find Abraham as the friend of God, Enoch walking with God, and so on. And God asks this question, "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" God is holy, spotlessly holy, and yet we believers are called into friendship with God. That is made possible by the cleansing power of the blood of the Lamb. The fellowship must be of the light, for "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all;" and they who would walk with God must walk in the light with Him. The blood of Christ alone enables us to keep this glorious position of friendship and intimacy with God. We expect a friend to feel sympathy with us in all our projects and aims, to share our joys and delights, and to weep over our sorrows and woes. We are called to friendship with God, and we find a wonderful illustration of this in Scripture. When God was going to destroy Sodom, He had a friend on earth, Abraham; and He said, "Before I destroy Sodom, I must go and tell my friend Abraham; he will be interested, and will sympathize with the purposes of judgment." And, later on, in Amos iii. we find, "Will the Lord do anything but He revealeth it unto his servants the prophets?" Ah, friends, the "secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." You know a secret is whispered. You have to be very close to a person to hear it. The Lord whispers his secrets into the hearts of his people.

And now we will go a step higher. "Behold what manner of love He hath bestowed upon us, for He hath called us to be sons of God." What an advance in relationship! How much we expect of the sons of great men on earth! But we are adopted into the family of God, and are called to be faithful as sons. Oh how careful we should be in all manner of behaviour, that we may walk as the sons of God! We must be careful about the company we keep. Suppose a great man, being childless, was very anxious to adopt some boy as his son; and one day, as he was walking through one of the streets of our city, saw a lot of little boys playing in the gutter. He takes a fancy to one of them, and, taking the little man away, washes and clothes him, as becomes his new position. And then his education commences. He is to be a gentleman. After a little while, this same gentleman is walking through the streets again, and, suddenly turning a corner, sees another group of ragged boys playing again in the gutter. And, can he believe his eyes? Yes, there is the very little boy with his new clothes, playing with the others. "Oh," he says, "this is a hopeless affair. I shall never make a gentleman of this boy. It is not the marbles or the play I mind, but the companionship." Now, friends, ye have been taken out of the gutter of this world's pollution, snatched away by blood-stained hands; ye have been clothed by Him who is the righteousness of his people, and your education, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, begun. What fellowship, then, can ye have with the world? You belong to the family of God. We hear people asking, "Is there any harm in this amusement, or in going to this or that place?" I always feel that when it comes to the "any harm" question, it is the wrong side of the matter altogether. When a Christian asks this question, he simply means, "How far may I go round, and not give up my God?" The question for you is, "Is there any good? Can I glorify my God in this? Can I serve and honour Jesus by doing it?"

Is there any harm? Yes, there is harm, positive harm, because of the companionship—not in the mere amusement, but in the companionship; for, remember, ye are children of the Lord God Almighty, and He is not ashamed to be called your Father. Shall we, then, have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness? Look at Bunyan's Pilgrim. He goes from the City of Destruction. He runs for eternal life to the gate, is admitted, and, coming to the cross, loses his burden. He goes on, bound for the glory. And now we will suppose he wants to look back at the City of Destruction. He turns round, and the first object that meets his glance is the cross of Christ. If we want to look back at the world, we must do it through the cross, full in view, with the world behind it. And let that remind us of what the world did with Him. It took Him, and with its wicked hands crucified and slew Him. We can never have any fellowship with the world.

But there is another and still higher connection than sonship, a more intimate relationship than this. In Rom. vii. 4 we read, "Wherefore, my brethren, ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead." Married—the closest tie that earth can know! Some of us can remember the day when we repeated these words, "For richer and poorer, in sickness and in health, till death us do part." But in our contract there is no dying. We are married to Jesus through all the long ages of eternity, and there shall be no end to the closest and dearest tie. Married into Jesus! He has left us for a time, but He is coming back to celebrate the nuptials in great glory. He is getting ready that fair and beauteous mansion for his bride. While we are left here, we must take care to keep ourselves for Him—that we do not lean on the arm of the world, and walk with it. "Be thou faithful" as a wife, a bride, an espoused one, to the heavenly Bridegroom. "Until death"—what does that mean? Not until the hour of death, but up to dying-point. It means that, rather than be unfaithful to God as a servant, friend, son, or wife, we should welcome death. Ah, friends, a little curl of the lip, a little sneer, has often made us pull down our colours, and run away! Shame upon us, that we fear the world, and shrink from avowing that Jesus is the Lord! No man can say that but by the Holy Ghost, who will give us the power to fulfil these blessed relationships; and so shall we be able to serve our God faithfully in all things, for Christ's sake! Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WATCHWORD.

REV. MARK GUY PEARCE, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." The Lord write the words upon our hearts. Oh that they may begin to glow for us with newer and fuller meaning than we have seen in them before. When I remember what the Psalmist, who only caught the faint streaks of the rising Sun of Glory, thought about Christ, and remember the little light he had, I always feel heartily ashamed of my own thoughts of the All-Beautiful and Perfect One.

Just listen to what David says of Him in Psa. ii. Its poetry is grand, but its faith is grander. First, we have the heathen raging, and the people imagining a vain thing. We have the rulers taking counsel together, numbering up their armies, marching up and down over the plains, shouting their watchword. "Come," say they, "let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us." And then see the great host, tens of thousand in number, coming down over the hills, kings at the head, with a shout of triumph already breaking along the ranks. And what next? Listen! Then "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision;" and turning to his Son, He says, "I will give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." And then there comes the glorious decree contained in verses 9—12.

Now, dear friends, that is our Jesus to-night, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." I want you to exult in Jesus, to sound his praises through all the length and breadth of the earth, wherever the foot of man has trod. I want you to enter upon this, another year, anticipating that it shall be the most glorious year the Church of Christ has ever known, and I would that we set our Great Captain, the Lord God of glory on high! What do we mean by our wretched unbelief when we march under such a Commander as Jesus, and bear such colours as the gospel of God's love? If some titled somebody goes over to Rome, or some man of science speaks against our most holy faith, we forthwith hide our heads, and shrinking back, hoist down our colours. Shame! shame upon us! The Lord is on the throne, and is waiting until the heathen shall be made his inheritance. Our hearts should be made strong to-night, for we have on our side "the King of kings, and Lord of lords."

Our motto is a watchword for the Church. Now I question whether we think enough of our dependence upon the Lord. We pray for labourers when they come, and for our colleges, and teachers, and missionaries; but we do not pray as we ought for the Lord to give us the men. We do not set before us our utter dependence on the Lord Jesus for the men. You may get a preacher who will preach orthodox truth; he will tell you how to be saved; he will point you to the Lord Jesus; he will tell you all the gospel, and yet does not preach Christ. A man cannot preach Christ until his own heart is filled with the love of God, touched and melted by the tenderness of Jesus Christ, until he has entered into the sufferings of Jesus, and has got a good grip of the truth. Our colleges cannot make a true preacher. God only can send a man forth filled with his Spirit to preach the gospel in its fulness and power. If we make this year one of mighty blessing, we must get our preachers from Christ.

I rejoice when I remember the preaching of Peter. He was a poor and weak servant, yet, nevertheless, filled with the Spirit, and consequently upon the first day of his ministry three thousand souls were saved. And Jesus Christ is in the midst of his Church to-day. We hear many people praying that God may give a great blessing with the labours of our brethren, Moody and Sankey, in London during the coming spring. But why wait till the spring? Why not now? The Lord is with us now, and can make Moody's and Sankey's of all of us if He will. Paul preached the gospel of Christ with such tremendous zeal that he left a trail of Christian churches behind him wherever he went, and Christ, our Leader, leaves a far more glorious trail of light behind Him. With what confidence can we ask great things of Him, that He may pour out his Spirit upon the Church, that now, as in the days of the apostles, there may be added daily to the Church such as are to be saved. Oh let us set Him at the head of all our Churches, and depend upon it 1875 will be written in letters of gold on the records of time. We shall then have such tremendous blessing, such as we have never seen before, if we only cast our care upon Him. The Lord strengthen our faith in Him as the Head of the Church!

I want each individual member of the glorious Church of Christ upon earth to make this motto their watchword during the year 1875. What sort of a year are you going to make of it? I feel as I did when I was a schoolboy, and had finished a copy. Oh! it was a sad mess!—a blot here, and all blurred and smeared ~~there~~. I looked at it, and felt ashamed, and was so glad when I turned over the leaf to a clean, smooth, unblotted, unblurred page. But how quickly the new page grew as bad as the previous one! Oh, what could I do? Do? Why give it up in despair. Then the master came down from the desk and took my hands in his, and then began. "Ah, sir, I can do it when you help me." Just the very truth we ought to learn as Christians. 1874 is blotted and blurred from mistakes and failures; but what are you going to do with 1875? If you rest on yourself it will be as bad as before; but rest upon Jesus, who is "able to keep you from falling," and all will be well.

One word to you, old, but half-hearted Christian. Hoist up your colours, shake them well, that all may see. Do not let business swallow all your energies. What! is business so that you cannot squeeze even a single word in for Jesus? Shame! shame!

The name of Jesus is like a many-cut diamond, flashing whichever way we turn it. Turn it one way, and it says, "He shall save his people from their sins"—from your bad temper and half-heartedness. Rest on Jesus, let Him take hold of your hand, and He will do it. We get buffeted about under the waves of sin, but Christ has come to save us from them; and if salvation is worth anything at all, it is worth this. Do not run away, and say, "That is a doctrine I do not agree with," but just see if it is in the Word. Do not you think that God's love will and can do it?

Then I would remind you that we can set up this truth in relation to providence. I like to think Jesus leads his people. We do not often think of Jesus in relation to providence. We have faith in Christ, and trust in God. When God was sending the children of Israel into Canaan, He said, "I have sent my angel before thee, to bring thee into the land;" and in the Epistles we see plainly that that angel was the Lord Jesus—the same Jesus as to-day, who leads and guides his people still. The Father hath not only sent Jesus to die for us, but to lead us right up to heaven. Perhaps some of you are thinking in this wise, "I wish I could take Jesus for everything; but I see a great sea before me, and do not know how I am to get over it." Oh miserable unbelief! We seem to look everywhere before we see Jesus. Rest, friend, on his love; He will not fail nor forsake thee. There is some difficulty in your business, or some one is a hindrance to you in your Christian life. Why not take hold, once for all, of Jesus? If you have Jesus, away with your fears. Do not live this fearful, troubled life any longer; do not walk like people on the ice, afraid to move lest they fall. Lay hold of Him for everything, for your sorrows as well as your joys, and He will fulfil his promise, proving Himself to be, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

It is a watchword for sinners. Jesus is the same now as He was on earth. You do not know the Lord Jesus, and you think He is a great way off. He is so tender and loving to poor sinners. See Him in the crowd yonder, his heart breaking with tenderness, and listen—"Come unto Me, all ye that are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." This is Jesus to-night. His heart yearns over you, and his arms open to you. I pray you cast yourself upon his tenderness. No one was ever forbidden to come. Even a poor outcast woman got near Him, and washed his feet with tears, and wiped them with the hair of her head. Dear soul, if thou hast no other friend on earth, you have Jesus, who is now enthroned on high. There is only one difference. Then He was a poor Man, and now He has got his great fortune. It is the same heart, but a richer hand—the same love, but greater power. He is the same to-day as for ever. He will be the same when we get home to the glory, now so near, that the hill-tops of eternity are beaming with the glow of the rising sun. He is near; oh, so near! And as one by one we gather in the sheaves from the harvest-field of time, the veil is gradually rising, revealing the glorious person of Him who reigneth for ever and ever. Soon will He appear in all his glory, with tens of thousands awaiting, and we shall then enter into our perfect rest. Amen and amen!

SIN AS COMMITTED BY THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

This is a very solemn subject for me to speak on, and for you to hear about. I can truly say that, perhaps, no one in the assembly is, in one sense, more qualified to speak on it than myself.

It is a subject, of all others, in which we ought to keep very close to God's Word. There are many divers and strange statements made in reference to it, and false hopes, disappointing in the end, excited in the hearts of God's children with regard to it. The Scriptures of truth speak most plainly; first, upon the object of the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ into our world, and into our nature. "He was manifested to destroy the works of the devil." "He appeared once, in the end of the world, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." "He gave Himself that He might redeem us from all iniquity." (I am speaking to you as children of God) "and purify us to Himself, a peculiar people, zealous of good works." And, more than this, He came, that through the rent veil of his own crucified body, He might open the way of access for us to the very throne from which He descended.

Another matter the Scriptures tell us emphatically and clearly about, is this. Not one thing the Lord Jesus Christ came to accomplish hath He failed in accomplishing. God raised Him from the dead in token that He was satisfied with his work. His resurrection is God's receipt in full to the Lord Jesus Christ for all He undertook to be, to do, or to suffer.

The Scriptures tell us, further, on this subject, that no child of God can live in sin. The apostle said in his Epistle to the Romans, not that it is difficult for the child of God to live in sin, or unseemly, or improbable that he shall do so, but that it is impossible. "How shall we that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Brethren, we that are the children of God have been baptized by the Holy Ghost into his body, of which the Lord Jesus Christ is the Head. And if we have union with Him in his death, we have union with Him in his risen life. "He that is born of God doth not sin; his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." "He hath become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that he might be married to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead." We have been redeemed from the curse of the law that we may receive the adoption of children, and we are placed in a new position. We are no longer under the law, but under grace. And the obligations that attach to us in our new position how great they are! We are to "walk with God as dear children," and partakers of the Spirit.

Sin, as it is transgression against the law, has no existence as against the child of God. His blessed Lord and Head has had the sin transferred to Him. Christ has suffered for it; He hath blotted it out, and put it away, as far as the east is from the west. We shall never be condemned, and nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus.

But again, the Scriptures teach, and conscience and experience teach us, that we are all sinners. Ah, brethren, how true it is—"the whole head sick, the whole heart faint." So far as human nature goes, every child of God is a sinner. We have committed numberless sins, and every day sees the list lengthened in the case of every child of God, so far as his human nature is concerned.

It is on this account that the Scriptures are so full of warnings and exhortations to us that some seem to forget. And what is the argument used in these exhortations? "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." We need the warnings; we need to be on our watch-tower, not to sleep, as do others, or to be drunken as others, but to be sober, putting on for a breastplate and helmet the hope of salvation.

I have had a good deal of experience, I trust, as a child of God. It is many a long day now since the God of all grace revealed Himself to me in sovereign mercy, and told me that for Christ's sake He had forgiven my sins. And yet I stand here and say solemnly, in the presence of God, not only am I a sinner, but I believe the root and principle of every sin that ever grieved God's Spirit, or insulted the Majesty of heaven, is to be found in this heart. To tell you the truth, I do not understand the man that has learned to think otherwise. I do not understand walking in the light, and not discovering the dreadful spots and stains that the light of God discovers to the man who walks in it.

But thanks be to God, that light discovers the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. The Spirit never comes merely to show me myself that I may despair, but He shows me also the fountain opened, and bids me welcome there to wash and be clean.

Let me refer to the way in which the Spirit of God teaches us by the disciple whom Jesus loved, on this matter of sin. I suspect that John was about as holy, as loving, as whole-hearted a Christian as any that have arisen since his day. He speaks to the children of God very solemnly on the subject of sin in them. "If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a liar, and the truth is not in us." That is the past. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." That is the present. He does not speak to other people apart from himself, "If we say." And then I find him appealing to the children of God, upon the ground of their privileges, and saying, "Little children, I write unto you that ye sin not." That is, sin in the future.

But how the light that discovers the need, discovers the provision! "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." He is the High-priest before the throne. Have you ever thought of that? The high-priesthood was an office set apart simply and solely for sin and sinners. He had nothing whatever to do with righteous people. He had to make atonement for transgression, and bring the blood within the veil, and make intercession on the ground of it for the poor sinner for whom he appeared. We have an High-priest, who hath an unchangeable priesthood; "Wherefore He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by Him, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for us."

I hold as much as any man holds, that the more we walk in the light of Jesus Christ, the more we live by faith on Him, the more we behold, as in a glass, His glory, we shall be imbued with his character, catch his love, and reflect his likeness.

I know the truth—or the text, I should rather say—that sometimes is pressed on one who does not, perhaps, take so high views on the subject as others, "He that abideth in Him sinneth not." I confess I cannot enter into the interpretations that are sometimes given of that text. One will say, "He that abideth in Him sinneth not;" that is, he does not sin. That is contrary to the experience of every believer I have ever met with; certainly it is contrary to mine; and it seems to me to be contrary to the passage itself. It is pretty clear that it is not the act, but the habit of sin the apostle is speaking of. Certainly sin is not, cannot be, the characteristic of a believer; cannot be other than an odious thing, to be hated, avoided, and prayed against.

Another interpretation is, "It is the old man that sins; the new man never sins." People talk on this subject almost as if the Christian were made up of two persons—one person called "the old man," and another person called "the new man." Now, as it has been well said, one may ask the question, "Which of them is responsible for the sin?" Certainly not the new man, created in righteousness and true holiness. And the old man—why, he has been crucified, dead, and buried long ago. Or, again, who gets the pardon? The new man? He does not need pardon. The old man? He is never pardoned; he is executed. Who is risen with Christ, the old man or the new man? Who progresses and grows in Christ? The new man? He is perfect. The old man? Nay, we believe that Adam never progresses. The fact is, we may put a very false construction on this blessed passage by taking a view like that. The truth is, the child of God is not two persons, an old and a new man, but a person, with two diverse and opposing natures in him, struggling the one against the other, so that he cannot do the things he would.

The types of the Old Testament, and the teaching of the New, fully tell us of the existence of sin in every child of God. Remember how the priests, in passing to and fro between the altar and the temple, were provided with the laver, in which they washed their hands and feet. They had need to do it in the service of the sanctuary. Come to the New Testament, to that beautiful passage in the thirteenth chapter of John, where the blessed Lord, for our instruction, took a towel, and girded Himself, and began to wash the disciples' feet. Peter did not understand the act of humiliation, and said, "Dost Thou wash my feet?" "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." "Lord, not my feet only, but my hands and my head." There he was wrong again. "He that is bathed needs not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." Between the bath here and the robing-room in heaven, the believer contracts defilement by the way, but the Saviour has undertaken to take it away. This is the very business for which He ever lives at the right hand of God.

Let us not think that, because we need that cleansing, we are not justified from all things; and because we are justified from all things, we have no need of the daily cleansing of the girded Saviour.

Sin in the children of God is an awful thing. I believe solemnly, I do not merely say I believe, I am perfectly satisfied, that the devil is not guilty of the sin that a child of God is guilty of. Has the devil sinned against the Father that gave his only begotten Son to die for him? or against the Holy Ghost the Comforter come down to tabernacle and temple in him? In Ezekiel xvi. 49 I read, "As I live, saith the Lord, Sodom, thy sister, hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters." Such is the enormity of sin as committed by the child of God.

Bear with me for a few moments while I ask your attention to the nature and consequences of this sin, as illustrated in David's history. The Lord sent Nathan to David. Into the peculiar nature of David's sin, or the manner in which the prophet was taught to discover its turpitude, I need not enter. The one is too familiar, and the other too strikingly beautiful, not to be known to everyone hearing me. But I can imagine the flushed cheek and the agonized frame of the man as the confession is forced from him, "I have sinned against the Lord; against Thee only have I sinned." And when the prophet tells him that the sin is put away, remember what he said, "Thou hast despised Me." When we sin thus, God regards it as a despising of Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us. That is God's account of it. Take heed to it, child of God.

Then, again, we read, "By this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." You that call yourselves Christians are marked men and women, in the midst of a world that hates Christ, and his truth, and his Spirit, and his character. They watch you, that they may throw stones at Him. The devil tempts you to sin, not merely because he wants you to sin, but because he wants you to reflect on the character of Jesus Christ. The world will say, "There is your psalm-singer, your man of prayer, who would not go to a ball, or a theatre, or any worldly amusement; see how he can sin when it suits him, and when he thinks no one sees him." We give great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme.

I remember a friend of mine, some years ago, told me he went to a meeting in Liverpool to hear a professed infidel. There was an harangue by a very loud-spoken man, and, amongst other things, he spoke of "the God that you worship, you that call yourselves Christians." "Why," he said, "I would not let a man like that into my house if he were alive in my day. See the man after his own heart! He was one of the greatest scoundrels that ever lived—an adulterer, a murderer, and liar. What was he not?" And he went on for a considerable time in this strain, and the meeting was closed. An old gentleman stood up, and said, "May I speak, sir?" "Yes, my friend, what have you to say?" "I have to say that if ever I had a doubt as to the inspiration of the Word of God, you have removed it. It was said, many a day ago, of poor David, 'By this deed thou hast given much occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme.'" The meeting broke up, I trust the better of the observation.

But, lastly, see the consequences of David's sin, "The sword shall never depart from thy house." How God hates sin, though He loves the sinner. He spared not the angels that sinned; He spared not his own dear Son, when sin was laid on Him; and do you suppose He will overlook sin in his children? No, there is an inseparable connection between sin and suffering. Remember David's sorrow when he went, a broken-hearted father, into his lonely chamber crying, "Oh, Absalom! my son! would God I had died for thee!" You cannot sin against God without grieving the Holy Spirit, and you cannot grieve Him and be happy.

I hope none of you will say of me as was said a short time since, "Poor Mr. Rainsford! he is only in the seventh of Romans, he has not got into the eighth." I trust I have a place in the truth, both in the 7th and 8th of Romans, and I trust I am looking forward to the time when the consequence of my being dead to the law, by the body of Christ, and of my being married to another, shall have its full fruition; when I shall say, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory. O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

But I do see "another law in my members warring against the law of my mind," and, so far, I am in the 7th of Romans. I think, with creation, I do "groan being burdened, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." I do believe "there is no condemnation" for me, and I would appeal to you in the language of the 12th of Romans, "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

LEICESTER.—The Week of Prayer closed in this town by a large gathering of about 2000 persons in the Temperance-hall. Rev. E. Davys, of Trinity Church, presided, while on the platform were ministers and laymen of all denominations. Earnest prayers were offered up by Revs. Messrs. Meyer, Isaacs, Williams, H. Lankester, Esq., M.D., and others, for the spirit of unity, and that Leicester may have an outpouring of the Holy Spirit the same as experienced elsewhere. May the Lord send some earnest labourers at once!

THE AWAKENING IN IRELAND.

DUBLIN.

On Monday morning (Jan. 11) the clergymen and other Christians engaged in the united evangelistic services held during the previous week met in the Metropolitan Hall at a quarter before eleven o'clock, to give an account of the meetings in the various districts of the city and suburbs. All those who spoke appeared to have had tokens of the presence and power of God at least at some of the meetings which they attended, and others said that visible signs of the operations of God's Spirit of awakening had been observable in all the meetings where they were present.

In one centre, where the meetings held were very large, during the progress of one of the services, a number of Christian young men went out to the streets and lanes and houses in the neighbourhood, and invited the people whom they met into the meeting. In this way they brought in forty people. At the close of the meeting no less than thirteen persons out of the forty remained as anxious inquirers to be spoken to. One man who had been brought in rather against his will by those who went out to search the highways and hedges, at the end of the meeting remained, anxiously asking, "What must I do to be saved?" and before he left he professed to be rejoicing in his risen Saviour.

In other districts the services were so acceptable to the people that of their own accord they desired they should be continued this week also, and sent in a request to the committee that certain speakers who had been with them last week should go back this week. In these places the meetings will be continued during the latter part of this week.

The report from Kingstown was of a most cheering nature, and the gentlemen who gave it in described the work going on there as "wonderful." The noon prayer-meeting held there every day is crowded, though the building where it is held is capable of containing some four or five hundred people. The evening services, too, at eight o'clock were so well attended that the Independent Chapel had to be secured for an overflow meeting. Every night, too, many remained for the after-meetings. Among others who have been reached are the working classes. On Tuesday night a meeting for working men alone was held, and was attended by nearly two hundred. It is no uncommon thing to see working men speaking to their companions, and anxiously urging them to accept Christ. Nor are those who have professedly found peace all of one denomination. Some of a different faith have accepted, and now rest on Jesus. As has been the case throughout this movement ministers of all evangelical Churches unite on the same platform in Kingstown to advance God's cause, and He has apparently set his seal to their united efforts.

Another speaker said that considering the numbers present, the meetings in Kingstown were quite as remarkable for the spiritual power there manifested as any meeting conducted by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. The work among the seamen, as well as among others of the working people, was particularly mentioned as being very great. On Saturday last as many as fifty of them met together for prayer. On that occasion one of them prayed for the conversion of some companions of his, and Sabbath night thanks were returned for their salvation.

At the Exhibition Palace, on Sabbath afternoon, there was a very large audience, and the services were exceedingly solemn. The character of the meeting may be guessed at when I say that many were of opinion that they had never been at a more impressive meeting in the Exhibition Palace. Many persons were deeply smitten with conviction of sin, but as no arrangements had been made for an inquiry meeting none was held after the service. However, it is intended that such shall not be the case in future.

It is evident, I think, from all this, that God is still working in our midst; and it is plainly the duty of all who love the Lord and wait for his coming to beseech Him not only for the continuance, but for the greater manifestation his power.

BELFAST.

The splendid evangelistic meetings in St. Enoch's Church last week were sights worth seeing. The spectacle of the vast mass of people assembled nightly, not to listen to any great orator, but to hear simple gospel addresses, and to join in earnest worship, was inspiring in the extreme. When the last meeting came, and the immense church was seen filled to its utmost capacity with a deeply-interested congregation, it was felt to be impossible to close the series. When requested to signify their own desires on the subject, the whole assembly rose to their feet en masse, in token of their wish that the meetings should go on for another week. Arrangements were entered into accordingly, and the result has fully justified those who made them. Large and very earnest congregations have gathered nightly to hear the gospel, and numbers have waited at the close of the services to be instructed in the way of truth more perfectly.

The noon meeting on Monday, at which progress is usually reported, was very large. The Rev. John Mac-naughtan presided, and delivered an address on the words—"What hath God wrought," in the course of which he referred to letters which he had just received from places like Castlebar and Ballygawley, descriptive of a remarkably good work which is going on in those distant places. The Rev. Hugh Hanna spoke of the great meetings in St. Enoch's the previous week. After the first meeting, he said, there were thirty inquirers, after the second forty, after the third sixty, and after the fourth 100. He had never seen stronger cases of conviction than at these meetings. The Rev. Dr. Donald said he had never witnessed a deeper or more solemn influence, or more genuine cases of conviction anywhere than at the meetings of last week. The other meetings during the week have been well kept up.

DUNMURRY.

There was "great joy" in the city of Samaria when Philip went down thither and "preached Christ unto them," and wrought miracles upon those who were possessed with devils, and palsied, and lame. Similar might the record be concerning our village last night, although no miracle of bodily healing was performed upon any of the dwellers therein. But a mightier than any earthly wonder was wrought, for the Holy Ghost was present in our evangelistic meeting, comforting the backslider, breaking hard hearts, and subduing rebellious wills. Since 1859 no such scene has been witnessed here; for, at the close of our meeting, between twenty and thirty remained for conversation and inquiry. It was a night to be remembered. For, here in one part of the church were a godly father and mother rejoicing over two of their sons, just entering manhood, and members of my Bible-class, who had decided for God, and Christ, and heaven. There was a husband (himself a recent convert) exulting in his wife, who, there and then, had accepted Jesus of Nazareth as her Redeemer and King. Yonder, in another part of the church, were two mothers in tears, "sorrowing, yet rejoicing"—rejoicing in the Saviour, and intensely anxious and sad, as they thought of their husbands and children still "out of Christ." And over in another pew might be seen a father, formerly careless, worldly, worse—declaring himself on the side of Christ, to love and serve Him for ever; whilst here, too, were strong young men and maidens, whose hearts were filled with gladness, and whose tongues did utter praise. As on former occasions, the attendance was large, and the devout attention of all betokened the earnestness which burned within.

STEWARTSTOWN.

As mentioned in our last, the revival is going on here with great power—an especial blessing resulting from the harmonious co-operation of the ministers and people of all denominations. At the close the ministers arranged to continue the meetings during the next week, and the people testified their approbation by a show of hands. Accordingly meetings have now been held on two evenings this week, and as the increasing crowds could not be accommodated in any other building in town, it was resolved to meet every evening in the First Presbyterian Church. Every available seat in this house was occupied. At the close of the meeting this evening (Tuesday), persons were invited to remain who had been specially blessed by these services, or who were anxious about their salvation, when nearly 200 remained, and prayer and praise were engaged in. The succeeding meetings are expected to be even more successful. One leading feature in these meetings is that all the higher and more influential classes attend them, without any exception, and great numbers of poor people who go to no place of worship are brought in by Christian workers, and attend night after night with great delight. Numerous requests for prayer are sent in every evening. One encouraging circumstance is that these large meetings are not called together by the novelty of strange preachers or evangelists, the entire services having been conducted exclusively by the local ministers.—The Witness.

MISS DE BROEN'S WORK IN PARIS.

Mr. James E. Somerville, writing from Cannes, sends us a sketch of this Mission, from which we extract the following:—

Several English ladies have come over to give help to Miss De Broen in her most interesting field of work. Are there not many ladies who have received blessing lately at home who could concentrate their energies to such a mission as this? Love to Jesus and a small knowledge of the language are nearly all that is needed. Visiting from house to house the sick and poverty-stricken, and speaking to them of the "Friend of sinners," occupies much of their time, and I understand that none have ever received anything but a hearty welcome from these messengers of Christ.

Miss De Broen has suffered much disappointment lately, inasmuch as through a quirk of the law connected with some old title, the piece of ground which was all but purchased for the erection of the iron-room (for which subscriptions have been received) has been lost in the meantime. And, further, there is at present no regular medical missionary; a Parisian doctor kindly gives his services three times a week for a few hours. But a regular medical practitioner is very much wanted, who would be willing to give his whole time to the work, and, in short, to act as a medical missionary. Through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN I make this appeal to the Christian medical men. Can no one be found among their number, either out of practice, or wishing, for the sake of Christ, to resign practice at home, who would undertake the work of a medical missionary among these poor, ignorant, but most accessible people in Belleville? Miss De Broen, 21, Rue Piat, Belleville, Paris, will be most happy to give information as to terms, and what is required for the work.

PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE AND HOME.

Friends interested in this work will be glad to hear of its progress. Since the house was opened on September 10, we have had continual cause for thankfulness to God that, notwithstanding all opposition (which still goes on), we are doing well, and the numbers frequenting the house are steadily increasing, the attendance at the lectures, Bible-classes, singing-classes, and mothers'-meetings, being larger each week. This being the troop-ship season, the value of the Institute is felt by women and children disembarking, or waiting to embark. There is not sufficient barrack accommodation for them, and until our house was opened, many have been without shelter at such times for many hours, sometimes for the night; some are penniless, but we receive all. One Saturday night thirty came to us in this way, wet, tired, and hungry, to be lodged until the Sunday, and we are scarcely ever without some in the house. Friends of the soldiers embarking for India also come here from long distances. One poor young woman with a baby came from Wales to bid her husband good-bye. Some one brought her in, and seated her by our fire, half stupefied from grief and want. She had not a penny, her baby then only five days old; we put her to bed, and kept her some days. Two soldiers' wives came from Ireland, and were walking the streets with only a few pence, until directed here. Last night our house was quite full of people, who sailed in the "Malabar" troop-ship to-day, some of them unable to pay for what they had. Every ship takes out some who love the Saviour, and we are able to give to the care of such large stores of papers, tracts, etc., for distribution on the voyage, when they are eagerly received. Our work here is to care for the bodies and souls of men, women, and children, as God shall enable us, and I thank Him daily that He has given us this house. Hundreds are praying for us; I want them to praise with us, too. Our greatest drawback is the want of a large hall for religious and social meetings, but the ground is now being cleared preparatory to building one, and additional dormitories. I am endeavouring to raise the £1500 yet required for this purpose, and should be thankful to address drawing-room meetings on "Christian Work in the Army," whenever friends are willing to convene such for me. Personal service is greatly needed in this work. I would most gladly receive any Christians (who can pay for their board, etc.) wishing to devote a few weeks to work among our soldiers and sailors, or their wives and children. Inquiries may be addressed, or contributions sent to me here.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—Pray call the attention of your readers to the urgent importance of prayer for Spain; that the enemies of the gospel may not succeed in closing the door which was so happily opened to it after the downfall of Isabella II. To human calculation it seems as if the triumph of the priests and their party was at hand. But, as God turned the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness, in answer to David's prayer, so He may now "take the wise in their own craftiness" again, if his people will but do as David did.—Very truly yours,

HOBACE NOEL.

GREAT ALL-DAY MEETING IN PHILADELPHIA.

By the arrangement of the Young Men's Christian Association, Monday, 14th December, was set apart in Philadelphia for an all-day service. The place was the Central Presbyterian Church. From ten a.m. until three p.m. were the hours appointed, the order of service being changed every hour. During the first hour Mr. E. Pearsall Smith was the leader, and spoke. Mr. Henry Moorhouse followed, with some comments on the vision recorded in the 10th chapter of Daniel. The second hour was set apart for a praise service, under the leadership of Professor Johnson, and was very delightfully employed. The third hour was devoted to the "promises of God." Mr. Rowland, the Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, occupied the chair. He invited all who had a burden upon their hearts for un saved friends to rise up. A large number responded. The fourth hour was devoted to the furnishing of accounts of the great revival on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. George H. Stuart presided, and gave a statement of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, quoting largely from the Belfast Witness. Mr. Stuart said these results of God's work abroad were observable—1. The conversion of many thousands. 2. Deeper spiritual life in the Church. 3. A more close study of God's Word. 4. Faith. 5. Last, but not least, workers for Christ increased nearly twenty-fold in Scotland and Ireland. The fifth hour was in charge of Mr. Moorhouse. Thus closed five hours of solemn, earnest, united waiting upon God—opening, as we trust, days of wondrous revival power in our midst, and hastening "the latter day glory."—Philadelphia Christian Standard.

GEORGE-YARD RAGGED SCHOOL.

R. E. W., having seen the following extract from a letter written by Mr. George Holland, of George-yard, White-chapel, to a friend in the country, and being anxious to help, offers £1 percentage on every £5 given in reply to this appeal on behalf of Mr. Holland's arduous work, up to the 11th February. Donors will kindly state when giving, "In reply to R. E. W.," that R. E. W. may know the extent of liability incurred.

EXTRACT.

"The children have suffered greatly during this inclement weather, their limbs being almost frozen, and wanting sufficient food. One little girl, looking very ill, had, we found, been thirty-six hours without food. We visited the room where she lived, and found it destitute of furniture, of fire, and of food. The mother and children also were nearly destitute of clothing. One little child had no covering at all; one child, aged eleven, was nearly in the same condition; and the mother could spare nothing from her own scanty covering; the husband and father was sick, and in the infirmary. There are many such cases among the deserving poor. I do not speak of drunkards, for they must put up with the consequences of their sin, but I am thankful to say that many drunkards are becoming sober. The work has been so arduous this Christmas that I wonder I am able to keep on, but the Lord has answered the prayers of his servants for me, and has helped me through. The little nursery is, I believe, a blessed work; I want to reach widows, if possible. When the shelter for girls is in operation I hope to gladden many a mother's heart by restoring to her her child. The work is enormous, but it is the Lord's, who will supply our need, though I know not how, and it is a privilege to do anything for the Divine Master.

BLESSING IN DUMFRIESSHIRE.

During the term of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to Glasgow there were very frequent requests for prayer for Dumfriesshire, which our faithful God heard and has in a remarkable manner answered. Dumfries, Annan, Ecclefechan, also Carlisle, Whitehaven, Dalbeattie, and many of the country districts, have been visited by Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn, whose labours have been signally blessed; many hundreds, if not thousands, having been brought to know the matchless love of Christ, while many have already passed away into the presence of Him who loved them and gave Himself for them. Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn have had the most hearty co-operation of numbers of the various ministers in the different places they have visited, which has greatly facilitated their labours. Will God's praying, believing people continue to plead for Dumfriesshire and Cumberland, especially Carlisle? And also remember Mr. Scroggie, who is now at Stockton, and Mr. Dunn at Bowdon, near Manchester, where they commenced their labours last Sunday. Great numbers have already been gathered in at these two places filling the hearts of God's children with unspeakable joy.

JAMES N. CARR.

Carlisle, Jan. 15.

TEN DAYS' MISSION AT BRIGHTON.

As many of the Lord's people have been waiting upon Him for an outpouring of his Spirit during these Mission services at St. Margaret's, they will rejoice to hear of the blessing already given, and raise with us the note of praise to Him who hath heard and answered his children's cry. Truly, in answer, a baptism of the Holy Ghost has been given to the missionary, Rev. W. H. M. Aitken; and thus the simple gospel truths, clothed in the most forcible language and illustrated by various telling anecdotes, have fallen with quickening power on many hearts.

The church has been more crowded at each service. On Friday night the after-meeting was such as has only been witnessed in the work of God so blessed under Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The anxious were requested to go up into the gallery, which was soon occupied, while at the same time the body of the church remained almost full; and the number throughout who that night obtained deliverance through the blood of the Lamb "the day" alone will declare.

In the morning services the body of the church has been filled, and very many believers have obtained great blessing. One going out of church yesterday grasped my hand, and said, "Will you praise God with me? This Mission has been such a blessing to me! I always felt there was some little corner of my heart which was not the Lord's, but now I can truly say the whole is his!" She had long been a child of God, and a most earnest worker for Him.

On visiting a lady to whom I had spoken amongst the anxious the previous evening, I found the husband also rejoicing in the Lord. He was awakened the first night, accepted Christ himself on the second night, and his wife the third, and though a perfect stranger, met me with the words, "Praise God for the blessing this Mission has been to my soul. I have only lived for the world, but I am proud to say a great change has taken place in my heart;" and he wept like a child.

It is purposed (d.v.) to have the concluding service on Thursday evening next, under the Dome. May many readers of THE CHRISTIAN specially plead that, in the last great day of the feast, there may be a yet more abundant ingathering of souls, and that therefore his dear servant may continue to be "filled with the Spirit," that the man may be hidden, and the grace and power of God alone be manifest.

Mr. Aitken commences a Mission at St. James's, Leeds (d.v.), next Sunday. Plead for a similar blessing there.

WEEK OF PRAYER AT PORTSMOUTH.—The hall has been crowded. Working-men from our dockyard have dropped their hammers and tools at twelve o'clock, and taking a bit of cold dinner, have come to the meetings. Praise the Lord! is language befitting our lips; the Lord has done great things for us, and we seem to hear Him saying to us, "Thou shalt see greater things than these." After the prayer-meeting this day a meeting was held of ministers and friends, to consider the expediency of continuing these meetings next week. Thank God it was decided in the affirmative. Naval and military officers, and soldiers and sailors, police, and others, have been present, and it would have done your heart good to have listened to their prayers. May we in the south yet feel the mighty wave that has deluged the north; yea, we have felt the droppings. Lord, send the shower!—Yours in Jesus, G. W. D. DOWKINER.

MISSION-WORK IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

On Friday afternoon, Miss Weston narrated her seven years' work among the seamen and marines of the Royal Navy, in Room No. 6 of the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. As our readers already know, a letter written by Miss Weston to a sailor, and shown to others, was the commencement of a work that has now attained such great dimensions. The number of the monthly letter to the men, beginning at 250, is now 4000, and that to the boys, 2000. Perhaps to those who know what sailors are, the most remarkable department is the temperance one. Imagine branches on board nearly 80 naval vessels, with thousands of staunch abstainers! God most wonderfully inclines the commanders and others to favour the work, or it never could have succeeded as it has. But the spiritual work will always afford the deepest interest to every child of God; and the details of early struggles, and the marked blessing which has rested upon it, were most thrilling. Miss Weston's great object now is to secure a large red brick house close to the dockyard gates, at Devonport, and turn it into a "Sailor's Rest" and Mission. In thirteen weeks the Lord has sent her £1700 of the £4000 needed, and she is full of faith and hope that the remainder will soon be sent. One thing is certain: no one can listen to her marvellous story without bidding her God-speed most unreservedly. Captain the Hon. E. Moreton presided at the meeting on Friday, in which also Captain Liebenrood, Mr. Edmund Wheatley, and others took part.

DAILY TEXTS.

"PRAYING IN THE HOLY GHOST."—JUDG 20.

Thurs. 21.—"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." "Every one that asketh receiveth." "I knew that Thou hearest me always."—Ephes. vi. 18; Luke xi. 10; John xi. 42.

Fri. 22.—"Abraham prayed unto God, and God healed Abimelech." "The people cried unto Moses; and when Moses prayed unto the Lord, the fire was quenched." "Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray Thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw."—Gen. xx. 17; Num. xi. 2; 2 Kings vi. 17.

Sat. 23.—"Hannah, she spake in her heart, only her lips moved;...For this child I prayed, and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of Him." "The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends; also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before."—1 Sam. i. 13, 27; Job xlii. 10.

Sun. 24.—"He went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." "Who in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that He feared."—Matt. xxvi. 39; Heb. v. 7.

Mon. 25.—"Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, Oh that Thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that Thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me. And God granted him that which he requested." "I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ...that He would grant you according to the riches of his glory...to be filled with all the fulness of God."—1 Chron. iv. 10; Ephes. iii. 14, 19.

Tues. 26.—"Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." "Fear not, Daniel, for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words."—James v. 17, 18; Dan. x. 12.

Wed. 27.—"And now, Lord, behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word;...and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness." "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Acts iv. 29, 31; Matt. xxi. 22.

"THE SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH OUR INFIRMITIES."—ROM. viii. 26.

We have still on hand some copies of last week's Double Number, price 2d., containing Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Sheffield, and the results of the work in Manchester; also reports of addresses in London during the Week of Prayer, etc., etc.

COLERAINE.—Mr. and Mrs. Leadbester have continued to work most successfully at Coleraime, and the number of converts is very considerable. They are now about to leave, and carry with them the loving prayers and sympathy of many in the town.

A very successful series of evangelistic meetings has been held during the past week at the Moorgate-street Hall. Ned Wright had crowded congregations, and on Friday evening last a tea was given to 400 policemen, postmen, and fire brigade men, B. Paton, Esq., in the chair. Gospel addresses were delivered by Mr. J. J. Jones, Admiral Fishbourne, A. F. Kinnaid, Esq., Ned Wright, Dr. Mackenzie, Mr. Ashworth, and Rev. J. Lamb. We heartily commend this last effort to the attention and help of our readers, feeling sure that not only does an urgent need for it exist, but that a special blessing will follow it. We shall be happy to receive any contributions towards it.

PARALYZED AND EPILEPTIC.

DEATH OF THEIR FRIEND, MISS CHANDLER.

Sir,—Many of your readers will be sorry to hear that Miss Johanna Chandler, founder of the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, died suddenly on Tuesday evening, Jan. 12, at her residence, 43, Albany-street, Regent’s Park, after only a few days’ illness.

Contributions in aid of the funds of the hospital will be very gratefully received by me, or by Mr. E. H. Chandler, until final arrangements for the future be made.—I am, sir, yours truly,

SARAH A. WHITMORE,

Private Secretary to the late Miss Johanna Chandler.
43, Albany-street, Regent’s Park, Jan. 15, 1875.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

BY THE STILL WATERS. Meditations and Poems on the 23rd Psalm. The Meditations by the Rev. S. W. CHRISTOPHERS. The Poems by BENJAMIN GOUGE. Haughton.—We have read much better expositions of this wonderful little Psalm, and we have read far worse. The poetry is well adapted to the subject, and some of it very good.

BABY DIED TO-DAY, AND OTHER POEMS. By the late W. LEIGHTON. Longmans, Green and Co.—Fugitive pieces, from the pen of a true-born poet, who deceased at the early age of twenty-eight. The poems combine tenderness and vigour, and betoken a sensitive earnest soul who linked the human and the Divine in every outlook of life, and was specially true to “the kindred points of Heaven and Home.”

LIFE MORE ABUNDANT, the Necessity and the Privilege of the Church of Christ. By the Rev. EDWIN WRENFORD. Partridge.—A pamphlet forcibly written on the subject of the more abundant life which is the privilege of God’s people. The writer acknowledges that only lately has he felt the power of the truth in Jesus which has recently gladdened so many hearts, and now he says, “All men’s objections cannot dispose of the work itself, so sweetly solemn, so calm, so deeply earnest; this feature alone proves it to be from God.”

PERFECT LOVE; or, Plain Things for those who need them, concerning the Doctrine, Experience, Profession, and Practice of Christian Holiness. By J. A. WOOD. Elliot Stock.—This is a detailed exposition of the subject of Holiness, and to an earnest and inquiring mind may prove a boon. We say may advisedly, because we think that this book and many others of a kindred nature start questions that are not found in the Word of God, and suggest replies hardly to be established by “thus saith the Lord.” Still there is much calculated to stimulate seekers after the more abundant life in Christ, provided the reader be one whose “senses are exercised to discern both good and evil.”

ADDRESS TO EVANGELISTS. Hodder and Stoughton, 8d.—The summary of an Address given by Capt. W. E. Smith, Hon. Sec. of the Evangelization Society, to a class of candidates for the office of evangelist in connection with it. It is brimful of good sound sense, Christian wisdom, and practical advice. The difficulties of the evangelist’s position, and the special dangers to which he is exposed, are set forth in commendably plain terms, and the specific remedies in an equally unmistakable manner. No doubt evangelists are liable to err, as well as other Christians, but if they will read this address prayerfully, and in the spirit in which it was evidently delivered, we think their mistakes will be reduced to a minimum. We heartily commend it to their notice.

THE STORY OF THE SCOTTISH CHURCH, from the Reformation to the Disruption. By Rev. THOMAS MCCRIE, D.D., LL.D. Hodder and Stoughton.—The story before us covers one of the most eventful, painful, and yet glorious periods through which the Church of Christ has passed. It is written by one who has made it his life-study. Every page is full of interest; you cannot open the book without alighting upon some deed of daring faith or martyrdom on the one side, or of cruelty, or injustice, or murder on the other. It ought to be on the bookshelf of every Christian family; and all our children ought to know the history of the noble men and women who thus endured for Christ’s sake. They were of that long and saintly line of witnesses of whom the world was not worthy.

CHILDREN RECLAIMED FOR LIFE; the Story of Dr. Barnardo’s Work in London. By the Author of “The Romance of the Streets,” with an Introduction by the Author of “Jessica’s First Prayer.” Hodder and Stoughton.—Many of our readers are familiar with the graphic, vigorous descriptions of this author, of various phases of London life, and in dealing with the need for and the origin of Dr. Barnardo’s work, he has employed his powers well, and on a worthy subject. This is not a sketchy outline, but a careful survey of every side of Dr. Barnardo’s enterprise, and of its real worth to us and to our nation. In fact, in his own way, the author makes us feel as if the doctor was a necessity of the times we live in, and we are inclined to think the same. It is the best and most succinct account of the work from 1867 till 1874, that has appeared, and will, we trust, find many readers in 1875. The book is tastefully and handsomely got up, so that inside and out, it will prove an attractive gift book.

DAVID BLAKE, THE SAILOR. By Mrs. SEWELL, Author of "Mother's Last Words." Jarrell and Sons.—We expected touching rhyme and flowing metre as we opened the book, and found it; but we were scarcely prepared for the solid substratum of fact on which the earnest, thrilling appeal for our brave sailors is founded. Are not the dangers of the sea and the suspense and terror thrown over the homes of these men enough? Must they be the prey of landsharks immediately on their arrival in port, and can no rendering of the golden rule be brought to bear upon the state of our sailors, who are kept from their wives and families just when the first eager desire for home is strongest and sweetest. Mrs. Sewell has done a good work in the same line of things, though, perhaps, on a higher plane than that of Mr. Plimsoll, M.P. We cordially recommend the book to our readers' thoughtful perusal.

VIENNA.—The following account recently sent to the secretary of the Monthly Tract Society by their agent in Vienna, shows that prayer and God's work is happily extending in continental cities, where they are so much needed:—"On Friday, the first day of the New Year, we opened our hall for public worship with prayer, and the attendance was good. Yesterday the public worship was attended by 110 persons. The police authorities were of course present in plain clothes, and one officer has been much 'moved' by the solemn character of our worship. Another has said within our hearing, 'that these services must be for good, for they pray for the Emperor and family, and the authorities set in dominion over us.'" A letter sent since the above was received, says, "We have had two glorious prayer-meetings this week; last night the room was tolerably full, and we had one of the ministers of the Reformed Church here; also Dr. Fardy, Church Councillor, the noble Dr. Schaffler, and his son, the Rev. Mr. Schaffler, of Brum, in Moravia, and a missionary from Innsbruck. All present appeared to be solemnly impressed by the prayer offered up.

CANTERBURY.—The Week of Prayer was observed in this city in accordance with the suggestion of the Evangelical Alliance, and we rejoice to say it proved a time of refreshing to those of God's people who were able to attend; the result of similar meetings held at the commencement of the past year was so gratifying that the committee of the Young Men's Christian Association who organized the meetings, were encouraged to secure the larger Music-hall, capable of holding some six hundred people, and each evening they had the satisfaction of seeing the hall nearly filled. The assembly was presided over by the Dean of Canterbury, Colonel Horsley, and clergymen and ministers of various denominations, commencing with Dr. Payne Smith, the dean, who gave a short cheering address on the 106th Psalm. The prayers offered were marked by their earnestness and fervour. We would ask fellow readers of THE CHRISTIAN to unite with us in praying that God would grant to this city, so full of religious profession, a share of the blessings we hear are descending in the North of England. We have recently had proof that God is working by his Holy Spirit in our midst, and several souls have been truly born again, but we want to see still greater things.

PRAYER ANSWERED.

In September last a lady had missed her train at Wemyss Bay Station, so had time to listen to an account of village work in a Suffolk village from a comparatively stranger tourist there at that time. After some encouraging words, which might be supposed to pass between Christian workers, the lady said, "I see why missing my train was ordered. I will now go home, and pray for a revival in your Suffolk parish."

On Sunday, November 22, the special work was begun by a drawing-room meeting at the rectory. Above forty assembled, including old and young men, husbands and wives.

W. H. Jary, Esq., of Burlingham House, Norfolk, the well-known evangelist, was invited by the rector of the parish to help on home missions at that time. The passage Mr. Jary selected for the Sunday evening address was 2 Kings v., the cleansing of Naaman the Syrian by the report of the little captive maid.

On Monday evening there was a continuation of the bright work. The same gentleman delivered an address to a crowded meeting in the National Schoolroom, an annual meeting for Missions. The rector, with solemn and touching earnestness, encouraged a missionary spirit in his people, and prepared them for Mr. Jary's address, which bade them help on missionary work at home and abroad.

Should this account meet the eye of that Christian lady, she will rejoice and thank God with us in the results of her prayers in such happy gatherings, addressed by one who was strengthened and sent forth by the earnest prayers of his own household, and other friends, rich and poor.

What fruit remains? (John xv. 16). One of the hearers has since expressed his great desire to become a missionary in God's distant vineyard. Fruit also in a spirit of praise, and greater desire to glorify God in heart and life, "beginning," a poor woman said, "as the gentleman told us, at home, as Christian wives and parents."

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For gracious answer to prayer for restoration.

PRAYER.—For prodigal sons, members of Christian families, who have forsaken the God of their fathers.—A medical man in great perplexity as to his path of duty, desires to see plainly if it be God's will he should remove from his present sphere of work.

—For a lady in mental and bodily affliction, that she may be comforted, being almost in despair.—For blessing on a new Sunday-school, where there are numbers of poor, untaught children.—For God's blessing on a letter sent to a near relative abroad, beseeching him to decide for the Lord.—For blessing on a visit to a lady who knows not the Lord Jesus, that by words and actions she may be a powerful witness for Christ.—For a father who seems hopelessly given up to intemperance.—For a beloved and only son, once rejoicing in Christ Jesus, but who has been suffering for some months from mental depression and delusion, that Jesus would "come and heal him."

PLACES.—For the approaching Mission in Leeds, Jan. 24—31, that all the preachers may be "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith," that they may preach the gospel of Christ to prepared hearts, and that it may be the power of God unto salvation to multitudes in that important town.—For six weeks of evangelistic services amongst the Protestants of the West of France, to be held by J. G. Alexander.—For Acton, and that a Young Men's Christian Association lately formed may prosper and be owned of God, and many young men savingly converted.—For a Mission to be held throughout the Staffordshire Potteries, for eight days, from January 24, that the Lord would pour out His Spirit abundantly upon all those who preach and hear His word.—For the town of Sunbury and the surrounding villages.—For a church in Devonshire, that God's work may be greatly revived, and that the prevailing deadness may be removed; also for a work of grace in the Sunday-school connected with it.—For blessing on temperance work at Milverton, Somerset.—Pray that there may be a place opened at the Curragh Camp, Ireland, for the preaching of the gospel, as the place at Major Manning's has been closed by the order of the General.—For Hastings and St. Leonard's, and the villages around, that the daily united prayer-meetings now being held, may result in showers of blessing.—For blessing on a week's Mission to be held at Stansstead Abbots, Herts, commencing Jan. 24.—For special meetings at Lowestoft.

CONVERSIONS.—A widowed mother and a widowed sister ask the prayers of Christians for a much-loved son and brother, wandering far from "home."—For a young convict, who was impressed during the London Mission in February last, but, it is feared, is now fast returning to his old companions and ways.—For a young medical student at Edinburgh, that he may be born again.—For a husband terribly opposed to the truth, and to all who are interested in divine things. Also for an aged father, the subject of prayer for forty years.

LET not the lady who has sought the Lord for nearly twenty years give up now. Hab. ii. 3: "Though it tarry, wait for it"; "At the end the vision shall speak."

THE MASSES.

BY REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

At Sheffield, Mr. Moody told us he was shocked at the immense proportion of the population there going to no place of worship. At Birmingham, his friend Mr. Scott, who has had experience in ministering to the comfort of the very poorest of Glasgow, remarked, "The masses have not deserted the Church of Christ, but the Church has deserted the masses." I cannot answer for Sheffield, but I do know that in Liverpool and London, although some congregations are bright exceptions, yet, on the whole, we are sadly guilty; and perhaps other towns are not much better. In extenuation, it may be said that our fathers and ourselves, having been accustomed to this state of things,—our eyes may have the more easily become closed to the deplorable circumstances around us.

But is it possible for such things to exist in the face of an open and read Bible? Indeed it is, and that in the very teeth of our Lord's plain commands. Look to the religious history of England for the last two hundred years. Did not our first Sunday-school, pressed from heaven on an unwilling Church, come upon us as a new discovery? Was it not more intensely so with our first foreign missions? Then let us look to the history of the apostles, and see the slowness of the disciples to follow, in evangelistic work, the plain commands of their Lord. See how reluctant Peter was to offer Christ to the Gentiles; and when the Holy Ghost fell on these same Gentiles, it was announced as a wonderful thing. But, still further, see in Acts viii. how the rapid spread of the gospel to distant regions was thrust upon the Church without its will, when the disciples (about five thousand), leaving the apostles at Jerusalem, went, not spontaneously, but were dispersed like a scattered flock, and so everywhere the glad tidings were spread by them. Are we, in England, so much wiser in 1875 than our fathers, that we and our evangelistic methods must be perfect? Shall we not rather, in response to the kind expostulation of our beloved American brother, acknowledge our guilt, and see if our sympathetic Lord will not show us our fault, and say even to us also, "Rise, Peter, slay and eat;...what God hath cleansed, that call not thou common"? Do not we need to have new fields of service discovered to us?

Shall we not get to our closets in this matter, and look if our Father, who seeth in secret, will not reward us openly?

Shall we not get together, throughout our land, special meetings of workers, apart from the unconverted, and pray in the first instance, not for the careless, but for ourselves, that we, being endued with power from above, may bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, and may receive wisdom from heaven, and get faith to move mountains?

Then if the Spirit should commend to us what Mr. Moody has written in the leading article of your last number, let us take it to heart, and let us consider our public preaching. Is it free from enticing words of man's wisdom, and attended with the indispensable Spirit sent down from heaven? Is it delivered with apostolic variety, as to place and audience; or is it confined in ruts, as it were, by the sameness of the place and of the audience? Is the preacher, and are his helpers, praying for and expecting conversions? Let us long and pray that the public preaching in places of worship, in halls, in the open air, and everywhere, may be more blessed than ever; but oh! may the Spirit flash upon the Church, that there is not merely a "missing link," but a great chasm in the non-working of hundreds of thousands of our communicants.

It is said just now that Russia can do little with her enormous armies, because the Czar cannot get officers for the men. But how much worse off is an active minister with the communicants asleep! If the salt has lost its savour, must not, of necessity, putrefaction reign around? Jesus went amongst the most depraved, and if live members of his body be as true salt, surely we may expect the most depraved, the most brutal, and the most abandoned, be they rich or poor, in multitudes to be subdued to the Saviour! He sympathized with the needy; but how can we practically sympathize with distress but by mingling with the distressed? Love will not grow by precept merely; it must have practice. "Pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" (James i. 27).

As a venerable London minister sat in his pew one Sunday evening, listening to a stranger in his pulpit, the stranger asked the hundreds of communicants if they had not done wrong in being there listening to him, instead of being scattered over London at work. One of them afterwards spoke to that minister, but the good man—dear Baptist Noel, replied, "It would be well if you would go and do as the stranger said."

The thousands scattered abroad in the eighth of Acts were, for the most part, ordinary Christian men and women, and yet they went everywhere declaring the glad tidings. Do not let us begin to attach any less importance to public preaching; and yet I believe a country has never been evangelized, and never will be, by public preaching; and for the present deplorable condition of our own land it is needful that house-to-house work, and individual work, should at once be brought up to the front of the battle, in a way that neither we, in this generation, nor our fathers have seen.

It is a capital thing to see Mr. Moody and a few of his friends, at the close of his public preaching, dealing with individuals; but reflection will show to those who have already received the knowledge of Christ, what a far more glorious thing it would be to have holy, joyful volunteer men and women dealing individually with our whole population in their own houses and everywhere. This would be a very different thing from mere tract-distribution, however useful that is, and would require not only holy living Christians, but persons God-sent, and specially anointed for the work.

It is no mean work; for Paul spent much of his busy life not merely in preaching publicly, but from house to house, whilst he was three years at Ephesus. If our true public preachers and their helpers, in loyal harmony, so as not to disparage public preaching, went heartily into this work together, what might not be the result in 1875? Mr. Moody said humbly, in Manchester, at the new year, that he believed the Lord had given him more souls in 1874 than in the seventeen years of his previous preaching; now might not the Church of Christ in Britain, quickened by the living God, thus see more of our population subdued to Christ in 1875, than in the last generation?

Oh what resources that man of faith has, who, sensible of his own nothingness, and leaning only on the living God, lays about him with the jaw-bone of an ass! "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto the Father." The Lord calls, and our country demands—nay, the Lord's harvest demands—that fainting Gideonites should follow Christ in the pursuit? He will lead lame cripples to victory.

BUYING AND SELLING.

AN ADDRESS AT THE NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING, MOORGATE-STREET HALL,

BY REV. GEORGE BOWDEN.

THE subject chosen for our consideration is one specially suitable to a gathering in the heart of this great commercial city. While giving a brief exposition of the two Scriptures selected for me (Prov. xx. 14; Amos viii. 5), I would have it understood that I fully realize the large amount of truth, honour, integrity, and confidence which prevail in the commercial transactions of many a successful business man. I know they are often to be found. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way." An intense hatred of evil is as essential a feature of a sanctified soul as an intense love of that which is good.

The first Scripture I quote is the portrait of a buyer; and the second of a seller—portraits not only true of those engaged in the centre of the highest civilization; Sir Samuel Baker and Dr. Livingstone tell us they are equally true of the markets of tribes in the centre of Africa.

The buyer. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer; but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth" (Prov. xx. 14). The rude form, "It is naught, it is naught," is now confined to the lower stratum of the community; but the same kind of feeling has utterance in other forms. "That is not equal to the last"; "So-and-so has a much better article at the money"; "You don't expect to get that price surely." 1. This is a lie! He knows it to be so, and his congratulations of himself on his lucky purchase will show he knows it. This Book says, "All liars"—no matter whether a lie of the pulpit or of the drawing-room, of the shop or exchange—"All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." 2. This is selfish—seeking personal advantage at the cost of another. It is the gratification of that poisonous, parasitic feeling, selfishness, which narrows, blights, and cripples the heart where it dwells. It is the casting aside of the Saviour's words, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"; "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." 3. This is covetous; personal advantage by the increase of gain. It is the influence of mammon—the meanest spirit of hell, of "covetousness, which is idolatry." 4. This is glorifying in shame. The man boasts of his cunning or skill, his audacity and success. He has had a "good day," "bought such things for so much," "has made so much"—a good day! Can that be a good day which leaves deceit, selfishness, covetousness, wrought into the character? I know he does not glory in the lie. He detests selfishness in another; he denies a love of money, but he glories in success by such means. If he has made a million of money, and has wrought these evils into his character, it is a bad day, a miserably bad day. Better no crust in the cupboard than untold wealth gotten by a lie or wrong.

The seller. "Saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat" (Amos viii. 5). The new moon was a religious festival, when work was put aside, as on the Sabbath. The first part of this Scripture describes the restlessness and impatience of the man who attends religious services because it is a custom, because he will lose friends if he does not, but who has no interest in them, his heart going after his covetousness. It describes him who carries his newspapers, letters, trade-books, into Sabbath hours, and longs for the opening of the warehouses, and again to be at trade. Why? That he may make a profit out of the small ephah and large shekel, the false measure, or extravagant prices—out of the ignorance or poverty of the buyer who purchases the "refuse wheat"—that which is worthless or adulterated—at the price of that which is good. These words describe all short lengths, or short weights, and bribes to servants to pass them over, and not report them to their masters; all making up of things with the best at the top or outside; all adulterations of that which is sold. What originates all this? Is it because men love to injure their fellows? No; but it is lust of money. Men do not like to poison their fellow-men; they have no pleasure in their pain; but they like the profit brought by mixing the inferior and injurious article with the genuine. They have no gratification in putting men and women into hovels in which they would not put their horse or ox, but they like the percentage which the rents bring. They have no delight in making men and women drunk; they abhor that grosser form of vice; but they like the money which the trade in these things brings. They do not enjoy seeing men and horses toiling in omnibus, in tram-car, or cab, for seven days in the week; but they like the dividends.

All who have to deal with consciences quickened by divine truth find this constantly, that a youth brought from the instructions of a pious mother, or from the earnest teachings of the Sabbath-school, is made to start, and question, by many a thing which is done in commercial life; he finds his love of truth and right subjected perpetually to a very severe strain; he is led into a conflict in which, too frequently, he is very weak. How concerned we are if we discover anything poisonous mingling with our food or drink! What attention the poisoned water at Darwen has awakened! Better, far better, have the body put to pain or feebleness by our diet, than have conscience, character, heart, perpetually poisoned by commercial practices which must end in spiritual ruin.

How are these things defended? "Oh, So-and-so" (naming some well-to-do tradesman) "does it."

"It is done throughout the trade." "You cannot live unless you do it." "Mr. — does it, and he takes the chair at your religious meetings," etc., etc. Instead of asking what is right—what is true—what does the Lord Jesus say? men ask, "What do others do? What is the custom?" Trade is no ignoble thing when free from wrong; but we must remember, trade is intended to feed and clothe a man, not to damn a man. Let me entreat you constantly to bring everything to the test of God's truth, and may He make you lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation!

AMONG THE ITALIAN PEASANTS.

BY MRS. WALL, OF ROME.

II.—WHAT THE GOSPEL IS DOING.

A few days after my arrival, when inquiry seemed to be excited in several minds, we sent written invitations to those who, before the persecution, seemed most interested, to come and hear the gospel preached. Not a single person came, and, shortly after, we found that several Gospels were torn, which is always a sign that the priests are visiting the houses of the people.

A young man who was with me commenced a laborious visitation from shop to shop. Many interesting conversations were held, and much kindly feeling manifested, but there was no indication of readiness to take any public action in favour of the gospel. The people round the house seemed specially suspicious; would look down when we passed, turn their backs, retire from the windows when we looked, and become absent, as if their souls were not at home when addressed.

The priest, ever active, from the hole of the confessional, down each line of his web, was watching the victims entangled in his net; and when one dared to stir, came up with wrath, torture, and poison, inflicting punishment until resistance ceased. Threats of excommunication, abandonment, assassination, and all the darts Rome keeps for her foes, were made use of. There existed a wall between us, high as heaven, deep as hell—the wall of mystic Rome—the wall which still exists in Italy, and is being re-erected in our own beloved country.

I sent to Rome, and soon received some large wall-papers, splendidly engraved, sent to us by Mr. T. B. Smithies. It was deeply interesting to see the effect "The Prodigal's Return" produced on this simple people. After I had given one or two to children, there was quite a stir, and a rush to get them. Refusing to give more to the little ones, I promised to give to the parents if they would come and ask for them. From this time persons began to enter our excommunicated door, sit upon our chairs, and touch our hands. As they are generally unable to read the parable in which the engraving is enframed, we read it to them; and as the great Roman wall is now pierced, the truth, entering the heart, brings tears to their eyes. Take a few instances as an illustration of this truth.

1. A young man of twenty, evidently a tinker or a blacksmith, very dirty, and clothed in rags.

"What do you wish?"

"I want to be instructed."

"Do you believe all the priests tell you?"

"No, I don't believe in them at all. The only thing I believe in is the mass."

"Do you love Jesus Christ?"

"Yes."

"Do you believe Jesus Christ loves you?"

"How is a man to know that?"

His church had left him in the dark at that point.

2. A woman, dressed in black, with three lengths of ribbon—red, white, and blue—hanging from her girdle.

"Why do you wear these colours?"

"I have just recovered from a long illness of several months, during which I promised the Virgin, if she would restore me, to perform this as a vow."

Since then the woman's husband has been here, and all the men who work in his shop.

3. Eight or ten soldiers, all favourable to the gospel.

4. Several students from the School of Art, who tell me their late master, who died a short time since, was evangelical. These come regularly for instruction.

5. A clerk from an office, who desires to converse, becomes deeply interested, and declares himself a Christian. A day or two after this, he went through the streets crying against the priests. The people say he is mad.

The number of visits has thus gone on increasing until we have sometimes received thirty in a day; but spies are placed around us, and as soon as the priests know that one has been to us, he is surrounded by those who have the most influence with him, and is generally induced not to return. Then, the want of faith in each other is such, and the divisions of classes and families so complete, that each man regards his fellow as a possible spy and traitor, and therefore prefers coming alone. Hence the "Nicodemus" state is the rule, and not the exception, and, humanly speaking, I do not see how it can be otherwise at present. If a man declares that he is a Christian, he is ruined, if he depends on others for his livelihood; therefore he thinks for himself, and lives in silence, receiving occasional clandestine instruction, and awaiting the liberty which does not come by Acts of Parliament or revolution, but by the enlightenment and change of public opinion. At present we are in the catacomb period. Tens of thousands who now swarm the hidden places of society, and have come to the light, when the propitious time has come, will emerge from the darkness, and fill our meetings.

The door which is but very partially open for the more public work of preaching, is quite open for the distribution of the Scriptures. These should be given gratuitously, because of the poverty, ignorance, and superstition of the people. Religious tracts can be distributed without any opposition, while wall-papers, with woodcuts, are eagerly sought, and carefully nailed up in the house or shop. Visitation from house to house is easily carried on, and would, I am sure, produce great results. The people have no difficulty in sending their children to us. At present many come, and on Sunday morning last we had a class of fourteen or fifteen.

Such is the state of the ciociaria; such the opportunities presented; such the work to be done. Bold, persistent, prayerful effort would, I am sure, meet with God's blessing, and raise up a witness for Christ at the very walls of Rome.

Mrs. Wall also gives the following interesting particulars with reference to the progress of the work in Rome:—

Our work here is very encouraging. Yesterday morning, at our service, we had about seventy present, most of whom commemorated the death of our risen Lord. Several more have received the truth, and are anxious to be numbered with his people, and among them a family, composed of a shopkeeper, his wife, and servant. It was most affecting, last week, to see his wife, in tears, take from her breast three little silver amulets which she had worn for years, saying she did not wish to keep anything which was not in accordance with the religion of Jesus Christ.

This family is so anxious to do something for Jesus that they even wished to keep tracts in the shop, although they knew that many seeing these would never enter the shop again. They have great difficulties in business, owing to the exorbitant rents they have to pay but they never neglect the meeting.

CORRECTION.—By an unfortunate misprint in our last week's issue, p. 13, the subject for consideration on the evening of the first day of the approaching Conference of members of the Church of England was made to appear as "The Believer's Course," instead of "The Believer's Course."

MESSESS. MOODY & SANKEY IN BIRMINGHAM.

FROM REV. H. G. THWAITES.

I feel that all those who have seen the work that God is doing through Mr. Moody ought to bear testimony to his grace.

The work began on Sunday the 17th by a large meeting in the Town Hall at eight a.m., when some 3000 or more were present; 5000 tickets were issued. The afternoon service was crowded long before the hour appointed, and quite 2000 went to Christ Church, close by, where Rev. R. D. Monro preached. There were thousands unable to get into Bingley Hall at night, although 9000 chairs and all the aisles and galleries were occupied.

But it was on Monday that the actual work began. The Scotch Church was used for the after-meeting on Monday; since then Mr. Scott, of Glasgow, has used this church for young men, and the after-meetings have been held in the hall. The Lord is doing great things.

We must not exalt the instruments, but praise the Giver of spiritual good. This is much impressed upon the audience by Mr. Moody, and only as the eye is upon the Master can God bless.

The Bible-readings are of great use to Christians; these are held in the afternoon. If no other result followed from these services beyond the union of Christians, a great work would be done. I hope that the clergy will in every place join heartily, for either the work is of God or against Him; if of the Lord, opposition is fighting against God; indifference is virtually opposition. Is this of God? I spoke to many anxious souls each night this week, and many professed to find peace in believing, Jesus is the theme of the sermons, and his blessed work the only hope held out to the anxious. Surely this is of God. May the Church wake up to see this, and act. Birmingham is a most difficult place to move, but 12,000 to 15,000 are coming together night after night. Who could move this place so mightily? I venture to say, that if it were not God working, no such gatherings could be held. Brethren are asked to pray for this place, that the after effect may be permanent. I trust my feeble testimony may be of some value.

St. Mark's, Birmingham, Jan. 23, 1875.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

When I had been with our brethren at Newcastle and Edinburgh, at the commencement of the present work, I was struck with the fact that where they left off at the former place they commenced in the latter. And this has been generally the case in the places which they have subsequently visited. The tide has risen, with little exception, all the time, and nowhere has this been more manifest than at Birmingham. The spirit of prayer and expectancy which preceded their coming has been more than rewarded by the result. Some supposed that the difficulty in the way of the union of Christians, in and out of the Establishment, would be greater here than anywhere, but the reverse has, to a considerable extent, been true; and consequently, once more the 133rd Psalm has been verified, that where brethren dwell together in unity, God commands the blessing.

BINGLEY HALL,

where the meetings are held, has been provided with 9000 chairs. They were hired for a fortnight, at a cost of sevenpence per chair, including fixing and removal. It may seem incongruous to say that a person is more likely to be converted in a chair than on a seat without a back, but this is really so, for if he be sitting in an uncomfortable position, it is impossible that he should pay the same attention, or yield himself to the influences around him in the same degree, that he would if his attention were not distracted by his physical discomfort.

Not a sound of footsteps is heard, for the floors of the galleries, as well as of the area, have been laid with sawdust. The noiselessness consequent upon the arrangement is not a mere negative advantage, for the unusual stillness in so vast a throng adds wonderfully to the solemnity of the audience.

The acoustic properties of the hall are such that it is far easier to speak in than either the Free Trade Hall in Manchester, or the Town Hall in Birmingham, though the congregation is in excess by thousands of both of these put together. The arrangements exhibit the result of much forethought, intelligence, and skill on the part of the Committee of Management, and while there is no exhibition of official control, the immense crowd is managed with the greatest simplicity and ease.

I cannot describe the effect produced upon the mind and heart of a Christian, standing upon the platform and gazing upon the eager faces of that great and silent assembly. The hush upon them is evidence enough that all can hear, and the intensity of their attention proves that the word finds ready entrance to their hearts. The observer, however, cannot but be aware that there must be some cause of the effect produced which lies deeper than the well-announced words of the singer, or the homely pathos of the preacher. The truth is, there is an unrest in the hearts of men which longs to be allayed, but which so often remains untouched, because of our want of sympathy and our unreality. It is true that few men have had such a training as Mr. Moody. He began his Christian life as a Sunday-school teacher, then as superintendent, first of the school, and afterwards of a Mission-chapel, in the young, free, and energetic city which is the key of the Great West of America. Then he pursued his studies of the gospel and of man upon the battle-field and in the military hospital, where, as a delegate of the Christian Commission, he saw what "ten thousand killed and wounded" really meant. This form of words he had often read in newspaper narratives of the war, but never understood until he heard the soldiers' dying groans, and saw some pass into eternity in dark despair, and some in sure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection. Again, in Chicago, his adopted home, he completed this eventful collegiate life in the harrowing experiences which were brought upon him by the fire which almost destroyed that beautiful city. On a Sabbath-night he had preached, and his comrade Mr. Sankey had sung—

"To-day the Saviour calls, for refuge fly;
The storm of justice falls, and death is nigh;"

and before morning a hundred of their congregation had perished. In the period of suffering which followed, Mr. Moody found a congenial sphere in spending and being spent for the relief, in manifold ways, temporal and spiritual, of his fellow-citizens.

But though few men have passed through so unique and thorough a college course as this, there are needed other elements to account for the hold which God has given this man upon the hearts of others. And in the fore-front of his qualifications stands the spirit which the apostle describes when he exhorts us to "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." This is the reason why Mr. Moody's anecdotes never grow stale; they bring the tears to one's eyes to-day just as much as the first time we heard them, and even more, because the man himself is deepened, and his soul, grown in love and increased in power, is all thrown into every tale he tells.

I am not writing about Mr. Moody, but thinking out on paper the means by which men gain the ear and heart of their fellow-men, and this man happens to be the illustration which God is giving me. He told us on Sunday morning, in speaking to some thousands of Christian workers, how it was the necessity of this sympathy was pressed upon his mind, and how indeed, more definitely than before, he acquired it. He was called to visit a poor woman, with a drunken husband, whose eldest little daughter had been drowned. So many oppressed by poverty and sorrow were passing through his hands, that he did not enter into this poor stranger's case, until, as they left her house, his little girl said—

"Papa, if I had been drowned like little Adeline, would you feel bad?"

"Why, yes. I should break my heart."

"Did you feel bad because that poor Frenchwoman had lost her child?"

The arrow went home; he felt he had not put himself into the mother's position, and had been unlike his Lord. He returned, prayed with her, helped her beyond her expectation; and, in the train of circumstances which followed, it was evident that the Great Teacher was imparting a valuable and important lesson, the purpose of which was to conform his child and servant to his own likeness in sympathy for others.

I dwell upon this in the hope that we may all receive the same invaluable instruction, and learn, like Jesus, to knock and wait at the door of human hearts, until they open to Him who says, "I will come in and sup with him, and he with Me." It was surely an echo from this utterance of the Lord that found expression in two lines of a love-song which we used to know in our childhood—

"I will share with thee thy sorrows,
And thou my joys with me."

This same sympathy came wonderfully forth on Saturday night, when the text was from Isa. liii., "He was wounded for our transgressions." Mr. Moody simply told the Old Old Story of redeeming love, from the upper room and the last passover, to the day when the Son of God went home, but stopped upon the way to send two angels with this message to his disciples, that He would come again. It was evident that, like Ezekiel and John, the preacher had eaten the little book, and that the story of the cross had become a part of himself, so that he could not but speak the things which in his soul he had seen and heard; it was therefore no surprise that the people drank it in so eagerly.

On Sunday morning, at eleven, the hall was fairly filled with a congregation admitted by tickets, distributed on the express understanding that the receivers were those who attended no place of worship. The whole aspect of the gathering showed that the tickets had fallen into the right hands; but the people sat as still as the most orthodox congregation, and listened, spell-bound, to the story of the grace of God. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," and the sympathy of which we have spoken moved that great throng with a common impulse of love to God. Would that it might last for ever in every heart. When the question was interjected in the midst of the discourse, "Who will have Him?" the response, "I will!" "I will!" sounded from every part of the house; and at the close, literally, hundreds arose to express their desire that prayer might be offered to God for them.

In the afternoon, not only was Bingley Hall densely thronged, with its congregation of 15,000, exclusively of women, but an overflow meeting was held in the Town Hall. In the former place, a thousand or fifteen hundred turned round and knelt down when it was proposed that those who desired prayer should thus express their wish.

On Sunday evening, the meeting was for men only, and was crowded two hours before the time. The overflow filled the Town Hall, and the meeting was presided over by Reginald Radcliffe, Esq.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Never before in Birmingham have any preachers drawn such vast numbers of people as these brethren are doing at this time. Thousands are flocking daily to hear them from the districts around. The whole community seems stirred up. That which seems to be uppermost in men's minds, is the present marvellous gatherings that are daily taking place. There is no lack of opportunity for the Christian to put in a word for the Master, for wherever you go, whether in the counting-house, shop, refreshment-room, train, omnibus, and even as you walk along the street, the one topic is the doings of these wonderful men of God. If you want to get a seat at their meetings, you must be there fully one hour before the time, and a stranger entering the town must be struck with the determination of those who daily seek these gatherings.

Every day this week hundreds have been turned away from the noon-day meetings held in the Town Hall. Meetings are now being held in Carr's-lane Chapel every afternoon at three o'clock, and here again it is necessary to be there some time before the service commences. In fact, yesterday I was there at two o'clock, and the body of the chapel was then filled. It is estimated that three thousand people are packed in this building every afternoon.

To convey to the mind of the reader the sight which presents itself on entering Bingley Hall (the place of evening meeting) is impossible. Sloping down from the galleries which run round the building, other galleries have been erected, and the whole building, from the speaker's platform, looks like one vast amphitheatre. The crimson cloth which drapes the galleries adds to the general effect, and makes the hall (said to be one of the dreariest-looking buildings in the Midland counties) look very comfortable. The immense sea of faces is singularly impressive, especially when from 12,000 to 15,000 people are listening eagerly to catch the words that fall from the speaker's lips.

The question may be asked, What effect is this movement having upon the people in general? I reply, good every way. The stirring addresses given by Mr. Moody to Christians, from the very first morning, are bearing fruit. They are beginning to look about, and realize that thousands around them are living without Christ. Many Christians have spoken to me of the fresh energy with which they have been stimulated, through attending the meetings. As for those who nightly throng Bingley Hall, the best test of the work I can give is, that whereas at first the after-meetings were held in a neighbouring church, the anxious ones have now become so numerous, that they are obliged to remain in the hall, while earnest Christian workers, with Bible in hand, pass from one to another, and open to the inquirers the way of life,

All this proves to us the great power of God, and what He can do by two men who give themselves wholly up to Him. The work "is marvellous in our eyes," but it is not less marvellous that their physical strength does not give way under their unceasing labours. While Mr. Sankey is greatly gifted with power to use his voice in singing the gospel, Mr. Moody has a way of marvellously picturing, in the most vivid manner, Bible truths. From the humorous he can come down to the pathetic, and so move his hearers to tears, and withal there is a "holy boldness" which is seldom to be met with in the preachers of the present day. May the Lord go on to bless abundantly the efforts of these men, who have already produced such an unusual and significantly powerful effect upon Birmingham.

Birmingham, Jan. 22.

FROM DOUGLAS RUSSELL, ESQ.

Returning North from a few months' sojourn in the South of England, I arranged to reach Birmingham on the day of our friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey's arrival, so as to have a fortnight with them in their gospel meetings, which is a privilege I have not hitherto enjoyed, owing to absence from the country, and pressure of work in other parts.

Having now closed the first week, I proceed to give a brief resumé of the work done, so far as it appears on the surface, remembering that doubtless there is a vast amount being accomplished which only the eye of God sees—not to be fully disclosed till "that day."

Your correspondent has described the meetings of Lord's-day, 17th. Had it been mere curiosity that led to all the crowded meetings on that opening day, one day's services might have sufficed, but "these wondrous gatherings day by day," have gone to prove that it is something deeper far.

Each day (Saturday excepted) the noon meeting for prayer, etc., in the Town Hall, has been crowded long before the hour, which is considered wonderful in such a busy commercial town as this is. With the exception of last night (when about 9000 were present, very large for Saturday night), Bingley Hall has been usually crowded to its utmost capacity. As a temporary arrangement, it is admirably fitted up for the present purpose, seated for over 9000, and providing standing room for about 3000 more.

From Tuesday to Friday Mr. Moody has been giving a Bible lecture in Mr. R. W. Dale's Chapel (accommodating some 2000 persons), which is always crowded. Yesterday afternoon (instead of a daily prayer-meeting) a large and interesting children's meeting was held in Bingley Hall.

The Lord has helped Mr. Moody to preach the gospel with great plainness of speech, with all the earnestness of a man who in his inmost soul believes it; and, what is infinitely important, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which is very manifest from the results which follow. Mr. Sankey is also enabled to sing the gospel with heart and voice,—the sacred songs, under God, carrying with them much arresting and melting power, his service being an invaluable accompaniment to the preaching of the former.

God has been presented not as against the sinner, but for him—not as hating him, but loving him, his love being expressed in the unspeakable gift of his Son. Christ has been constantly preached in the glory of his person and the perfection of his work. The story of his wondrous birth, lovely life, atoning death, triumphant resurrection, glorious ascension, prevailing intercession, is sweetly and powerfully told, while his coming again is pointed forward to as the Church's blessed hope. Salvation, full, free, and eternal, is offered to the sinner—nothing to do for it, nothing to pay for it, but to be accepted as a gift, ringing out in clearest tones in every discourse. Assurance of salvation is put upon its right ground, not one's changing feelings and imperfect experiences, but the unchanging word of God, and perfect work of Christ. Thousands are being drawn toward an uplifted Saviour, and I believe that, already, hundreds have been drawn to Him.

At the close of the evening meeting the galleries are cleared, and anxious souls are invited to retire for conversation. Large numbers accept the invitation. With others, I have gone to the Scotch Church to deal with the young men, who, to the number of 500, come flocking from Bingley Hall to hear more of the way of life. Every night there is much cause for joy, in sympathy with those in the Father's house, over dead ones brought to life and lost ones found. From the first the tide of blessing has been steadily rising, and it is evidently not near its flood yet.

Another result, worthy of note, of this blessed movement is the drawing together, in the bonds of Christian love, of the Lord's servants, bearing different earthly names. It may be said of the denominational pools what is written in Psa. lxxxiv. of those in the valley of Baca, "The rain also covereth the pools" (margin). The pools exist, but by these showers of blessing they are being rapidly covered. May this continue to increase more and more here and everywhere; because thus to dwell together in unity as brethren is good and pleasant, like the oil on Aaron's head and garments (one oil), and as the dew of Hermon, descending upon the mountains of Zion (one dew); for there the Lord commands the blessing, and life for evermore (Psa. cxxxiii.)

The Bible-lecture is a rich feast for the children of God, where "milk for babes," and "strong meat for them that are of full age," are dealt out. The weak are strengthened, hands that were hanging down are lifted up, the tongues of the dumb are loosed to sing God's praise. All are blessed, while the Lord is glorified. To Him be praise for ever!

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Dr. Landels, of London, in a sermon on revivals, remarked upon Mr. Moody's sense of the urgent necessity of arousing the churches to their work. Mr. Dale said on Sunday last that the prayers of the Christian people which had been offered for so many years, were now being answered; the hopes of many years were now being fulfilled. The scenes which had been witnessed within the walls of his church during the past week, were almost enough to stir the dust that slept beneath the pulpit, and to unclose the lips of the dead in hymns of joyful thanksgiving. Mr. Moody had said a great deal about sudden conversion. He did not know whether it was necessary, but if it was so, he would take his stand frankly, and without hesitation, by his side. The consciousness of salvation did, in a very large number of cases, come at once, and especially was that the case in connection with the present religious movement in Birmingham. The whole meetings of the present week had been singularly joyous ones. He could not imagine that even the deaf, the dumb, and the blind, who came to Christ with their infirmities, went away with greater joy than many persons with whom he had conversed during the week.

The Morning News of Monday says—"Never before in the history of Birmingham, I believe, have two men drawn such large numbers of people together as Messrs. Moody and Sankey have done, time after time, during the whole of last week and yesterday. The Town Hall, Carr's-lane Chapel, and Bingley Hall, have been entirely filled at most of their meetings, uncomfortably crowded at some, and all but full at one or two others. Since commencing their labours here, they have held twenty-two services, namely, four in Carr's-lane Chapel, six in the Town Hall, and twelve in Bingley Hall. No doubt in many cases the same persons presented themselves at the meetings again and again; but it is probable the audiences were, for the most part, different on each occasion. At the four meetings in Carr's-lane Chapel some 12,000, at the six in the Town Hall about 24,000, and at the twelve in Bingley Hall, at least 120,000 persons must have been present, making a total of 156,000 men, women, and children, to whom, during the last eight days, they have preached and sung the gospel. Nor does the interest in the men and their work as yet know any abatement, it being likely that the services to be held this week will be as numerously attended as those of last week."

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

We are very glad to learn that previous to commencing their labours in Liverpool, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey intend to take a week's rest. This brief period of well-earned repose, will, we trust, invigorate our American brethren for the great work that is before them in Liverpool and London. The services in Liverpool will commence (D.V.) on Sunday, 7th proximo.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK IN SHEFFIELD.

A friend writes, that there is only the same story as before—the last meeting of the young men has been the best of all—larger than any former one, and the interest still deepening. There is almost as much excitement here about Birmingham as in Birmingham itself. The newspapers are full of it. To one church there has been an addition of over a hundred members. A telegram from the young men of Dublin to those of Sheffield indicates that things are going on well there also.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION, BLACKHEATH.—A system of personal visitation has been set going in Blackheath, attended by the happiest results. Ministers of the gospel largely encourage the movement, and it is suggested that similar associations should be formed of godly laymen ready to act in the metropolis and suburbs when Messrs. Moody and Sankey visit London.

A QUESTION FOR MINISTERS.

A correspondent of the Record writes:—

Sir,—Messrs. Moody and Sankey are now in England, and are doubtless producing some great and manifest results. But besides these there is a secondary or incidental effect which may be produced by their mission; and to this secondary effect I think that it would be well that your readers' minds should be directed.

The question has been asked in a weekly journal, "What is it that we are expecting?" And that question is surely a natural one. Two answers given are of a negative kind. We do not expect in Mr. Moody a John the Baptist, a Savonarola, or a George Whitefield. Nay, we do not expect even a Chalmers or an Irvine. It seems to be generally admitted by those who have heard Mr. Moody that in gifts and in natural qualifications he does not differ greatly from most other men.

Still less are we to imagine that the Holy Spirit, in any unusual manner, waits on the steps of these evangelists, going with them to Sheffield and to Manchester, and leaving Sheffield and Manchester when they leave it. Such a thought would be obviously profane.

But what, then, is it that we do expect, in the coming visit of these two men to the metropolis? This question is an important one, and is easily answered. We expect the arrival of two men among us whose object avowedly is, the conversion of sinners. Hoping, praying for, and anticipating the gracious aid of the Holy Spirit, these men trust that they may be enabled to call many men and women "out of darkness into marvellous light." This is the object of their mission; and, unless this is in some degree accomplished, they will feel and acknowledge that their work in London has ended in a failure.

Now the secondary result of which I have spoken is this:—Surely the hearts of many ministers of God's word must be stirred within them when they behold and ponder this great fact. Is it, indeed, necessary that two men should come three thousand miles to try to awaken London, and to convert some of the souls which are found there? If there be any necessity, any opening for this, surely the question must be asked, "What have we been doing?"

Evidently we must not forget that there are always myriads of people in London who hear no preaching whatever, who never enter a place of worship. Some of these may be attracted by "this new thing." Still it is hardly of these the American evangelists are thinking. Assuredly of all the thousands who throng to hear them, the bulk will consist of men who hear sermons every week of their lives.

But those sermons have too generally been on subjects which had no bearing on the conversion of sinners. How constantly do we hear from evangelical pulpits neat little essays on some topic or incident in Scripture history, of which we are compelled to say, "Not one word was there, throughout the sermon, which would lead any sinner to ask, 'What must I do to be saved?'"

Here, then, there is room for a most important change. And I trust that the American visitors will not leave London, when their work is done, without having forced many ministers to ask themselves, "Why have I left this work to strangers? Why has it never occurred to me to ask myself, Is it not my chief business in this world 'to call men out of darkness into marvellous light?'"

HOW TO REACH THE MASSES.—A correspondent writes:— "Every Christian tradesman should 'watch the market,' and at the right time speak for the Master. Many a tale of sorrow and sin is told over the counter. When the heart is thus opened, how easy it is to speak of Him who died to redeem us from all sin! Missionaries behind the counter might do a great work for the Master. The Lord move them to do it, that his name may be glorified!"

THE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

In accordance with a previous announcement made in THE CHRISTIAN, a meeting was held by the superintendents and visitors in the Museum on the 18th inst. There were present a large number of workers. The reports given showed how useful the effort had been to reach the tens of thousands who seldom, many of them never, attend public worship. Some visitors had taken very low districts, where both public and private houses had been visited alike; over and over again was the story repeated, respecting the eagerness with which the pamphlet, prepared for the occasion, had been thankfully received, and the opportunity afforded of speaking to the dear people of a Saviour's love and power to save. Some of the most notoriously wicked people were affected by the appeals made by the disinterested visitors. The Jews, too, treated the distributors well. Hundreds of Roman Catholics eagerly received the pamphlet, and in many cases heard a seasonable word. Several conversions were reported as resulting from the mission. The meeting was so exceedingly interesting that it was thought desirable to adjourn for a month, so as to leave time for unfinished work to be attended to.

It was most gratifying to find that in almost all successful cases, the superintendent and visitors had met together for prayer before entering upon the work. As a rule it was considered desirable that, to effectively reach the masses, each superintendent should not have more than twenty visitors, and each visitor not more than two hundred houses to visit. The pamphlet is being ordered in large numbers by friends in other towns. May the work begun of house-to-house visitation, and personal testimony for Christ, go on with vigour in all our small, as well as large towns.

Another meeting of the visitors will be held at the Museum on Monday evening, Feb. 15, at seven o'clock, prior to which it is desirable that all the districts of Manchester should be finished, and a final report sent to the Secretary, John C. Edgar, 57, Piccadilly, in order that a full report of the work may be presented that evening.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

Since the departure of our beloved friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the Young Men's Meeting has been conducted every evening in the large room of the Museum, Peter-street, under the direction of the Evangelistic Committee. Night after night has the interest been kept up, and not a meeting has passed without conversions being recorded. The Museum being situated near to, and in the same street as, several places of amusement, it is not uncommon to see fine young men laid hold of and brought straight from the doors of a concert hall or theatre to the Young Men's Meeting. A most touching case occurred recently of a young man who was induced to go to the Museum instead of the theatre, and was then brought to see himself a sinner, and Jesus as his present Saviour. A considerable band of young men go forth half-an-hour before the meeting commences, with invitation slips and tracts, and compel their fellow young men to come in.

An inquirers' meeting always follows the general one, and not a night passes ere several are asking the all-important question, "What shall I do to be saved?"

THE MUSEUM FOR THE CENTRAL OFFICES OF THE MANCHESTER YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The sum required for the purchase of this admirably suitable building for the Young Men's Christian Association is being rapidly raised. Ere this paragraph is read, it is expected that, in some way or other, the amount of the first purchase, viz., £30,000, will have been secured. £8000 more will be required for the redemption of the chief rent, adaptation of the premises, and the building of a lecture-hall, capable of seating 1200, and a smaller one for 500 persons.

It is a fact not generally known, that, of over 1600 young men who have joined the Association during the last two and a-half years, about three-fourths have no homes in Manchester. The Association, with its central and branch houses, is specially adapted to reach and benefit this interesting class.

No sooner does a young man come to this great city, than he has the opportunity of meeting with good companions and lodgings, and is helped in securing a good situation if he needs one, and, indeed, find a "home from home," with all that can possibly help him in the right direction.

Perhaps some readers of THE CHRISTIAN would like to help in the present great undertaking of providing for the 75,000 young men of Manchester, and also for the many more who doubtless will be coming ere long to this great commercial centre.

"The Association was resuscitated in the spring of 1872. During the past two and a-half years, more than 1600 members and associates have been enrolled, a very considerable number being young men entire strangers to Manchester.

"The purpose of the Association is to promote the religious, moral, and social welfare of young men, and to offer facilities for intellectual improvement and intercourse, where every effort is made to exclude evil influences. To carry out these objects there are provided:—Bible-classes and devotional meetings; lectures, on useful and interesting subjects; reading-rooms, in the city and suburbs; libraries for circulation and reference; distribution of good pamphlets, tracts, and gospel slips (at least one million per year); evening classes for mental improvement; recreations of a manly and healthy character; means for obtaining employment for young men (over 100 situations are procured yearly); home-like lodgings in the branch houses for young men whose homes are not in Manchester."

FEMALE ORPHANS' HOME AT RICKMANSWORTH.

There is no more pitiable object anywhere than a female orphan child, who is cast upon the mercies of a cold world, bereft of friends and counsellors, and without any ostensible means of sustenance. How many a story of shame and misery could be traced back to the loss of a mother's care and a father's protection, at an early age! The Home at Rickmansworth endeavours to merit its title by laying hold of and caring for such needy and unprotected ones.

The last published report says:—"The primary object is the salvation of the souls of those brought into the Home, and every endeavour is made in the spirit of love to lead them into the fold of the Good Shepherd, that they may, by believing in Jesus, have everlasting life. The next object is to train the children for domestic service, and to lead them to feel it to be a respectable way of obtaining a living. In order to this, they do all the house-work, and make, with the assistance of the superintendent, their own clothes."

Children are admitted from the ages of four to ten, and unless previously removed by their friends, are kept till they are fifteen, when they are placed in service. God has blessed this work in a very marked and encouraging way, and we cannot imagine any institution more worthy of Christian support. It takes about £20 only to support and instruct each child annually. The report of the energetic superintendent, Mrs. Incombe, contains many interesting and cheering facts, and friends may obtain copies of it at the London office of the Mission, 85, Queen-street, Cheapside, E.C., where contributions either of money or of clothing will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

VICTORIA HOME FOR YOUNG GOVERNESSES.—The objects of this institution are fourfold:—1. To afford cheap and respectable lodging and board for young ladies coming to town seeking engagements, or changing their situations, and to preserve them from the trials and dangers which constantly beset them on the threshold of their London career. 2. To supply a comfortable home on Sundays to those whose services are not required, and preserve them from the perils attendant on uncontrolled leisure on that sacred day. 3. To meet the need of those who are waiting for engagements by providing the wholesome enjoyment of a domestic circle. To promote this object a piano has been presented, and a carefully-selected library opened for their use. 4. To form a centre of Christian influence for those who are removed from parental guidance, and in need of friendly counsel and sympathy. Funds are greatly needed. Will those who love the Lord come to our aid?—Yours in gospel service,

CAROLINE HURD.

THE WORK OF GOD IN BELFAST.

Many of your readers who have prayerfully watched the progress of the work of God in Belfast in past months, would doubtless like to know how it advances, and what is its present position. Men who are equally ignorant of spiritual things and alienated from them, joined by some who are opposed to everything outside the usual routine of formal religious services, have with confidence predicted the speedy collapse of the whole movement; and certainly if the work had been of men—if our American brethren had been the cause of it, and not mere instruments—if the work had been a mere ebullition—it must, long ere this, have subsided, and those who were the subjects of it already found returning to the old formality, and worldliness or wickedness.

I state the united opinion of those best acquainted with the extent and depth of this flood of blessing, when I say that there seems no abatement as yet of the power with which the stream of the river of God flows through this part of the land. Our daily prayer-meeting continues, and is as well attended and as full of interest as ever. Each Monday we have reports of the work throughout the town and neighbourhood; weekly, also, we have a meeting of all ministers who take an interest in the work, and from such sources we can form a very accurate estimate of the progress or decline of the movement.

There is a unanimous testimony from ministers, some missionaries, and all other workers, as to the thirst of the people for the Word of God, their eagerness to attend meetings at which the gospel is preached, and the numbers who in anxiety tarry to inquire, "What must I do to be saved?" The number of such meetings held weekly in the town it would be impossible to reckon, in all manner of places and by all manner of persons, lay and clerical, old and young.

At the beginning of the year we joined our brethren over the world in the Week of United Prayer. This week was to us a season of great refreshing. We added to the week of prayer a week of united effort. The ministers of various churches, with delightful harmony, agreed to suspend for the time all Congregational meetings, and to co-operate in the large nightly gatherings. The Lord smiled upon this united effort. The attendance was large, and numbers, there is good reason to believe, were brought to rest in Jesus. Indeed, it may be confidently stated that if you announce a meeting for preaching the gospel, you may count upon a large and eager company of listeners in any part of the town.

While the work of God is thus progressing in Belfast, still greater progress is being made throughout all the surrounding country. This spiritual movement may be said to extend through the whole Province of Ulster. To meet this cry for help, organized efforts are made by the ministers, and also by the Young Men's Christian Association. The delightful tidings that fresh fields have been occupied, and are yielding fruit, have been so frequently reported at our meetings, that we are in great danger of esteeming it as a common thing. Places hitherto secure, locked in the torpor of spiritual death, have been opened; the remnant, who acted as the Lord's remembrancers, have been greatly quickened and filled with joy, while sinners unsaved have been brought to life by the voice of the Son of God. Many parishes, remote and rural, in all parts of Ulster, have been visited, and rich harvests reaped. Among the most recent places to which the life-giving waters of the sanctuary have come, may be mentioned, Monaghan, Armagh, Newbliss, Stewartstown, and, I may add, most of the villages and towns in the County Down.

The Young Men's Christian Association has been very active and much owned of God. They have organized, under their unwearied hon. secretary, bands of Christian workers, who have gone forth, two by two, into many hard and trodden paths, and God has wrought mightily by them, and they have reaped great harvests. Some of our most earnest and successful workers are those who have been hired and entered the vineyard in these late months. Would that we had many hundreds more of such labourers, for it seems to me, more than ever, as if the Master cried to us saying, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

The work, I am glad to say, is reaching the lower strata in society. Jesus is calling in many among us from the streets and lanes, from the highways and hedges. In one of the most spiritually destitute parts of the town, more than one hundred lately united in asking, through the missionary working in the district, that they might be admitted to fellowship at the Lord's Supper. The Rev. Grattan Guinness is at present with us. He is addressing young men specially with regard to the claims and call of the heathen. Most deeply interesting meetings have been held, and already a goodly number of young men have expressed their willingness to go anywhere and preach the gospel to the heathen. Surely if these "Times of Refreshing" continue, and the same rich blessing be poured out upon all the empire, the Church of the living God will be prepared to arise and witness and work for Christ, and no longer continue covered with shame, surrounded by scoffing Scribes and Sadducees, as she confesses herself unable to cast out the unclean devils of worldliness, impurity, and drunkenness, that have so long afflicted and tormented the Church of the nation.

Belfast, Jan. 22, 1875. H. M. WILLIAMSON.

FOR THE YOUNG.

"SHALL YOU HAVE ANY JEWELS IN YOUR CROWN?"

The following story was related at a recent meeting of parents and children in Sheffield, held in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services there:—

A young lady was preparing one evening to go out to a ball, and her little sister, about seven years of age, came unnoticed into the room, where her maid was assisting her to dress. After watching for a while what the maid was doing, the little girl crept near the chair, and began to put her little fingers through her sister's long hair, and play with some jewels that were shining there. By-and-by she went right in front of her sister's chair, and, looking up into her face, she said—

"Sister, shall you have any jewels in your crown?"

Oh, what a question that was! The Lord had sent the little girl to lead her sister to Jesus. The words rang in her ears, "Shall you have any jewels in your crown?" She could not get them out of her head.

She finished her dressing, went downstairs, and drove off to the ball. But there her little sister's words came back to her mind, and she could not get rid of them. She had no heart for the music and the dancing and the gaiety all round about her. So she ordered the carriage, got into it, and went back home again.

The moment the door was opened, she flew upstairs, and found her way to the room where her sister was sweetly sleeping. She could sleep undisturbed, because she was resting on Jesus, and the angels were watching around her bed; for they encamp round about all the Lord's children.

The young lady went up to her little cot, stooped down over it, and clasped her little sister, and said—

"Darling, you shall have one jewel in your crown, at least."

That was the turning-point in her life. The little girl had been blessed by the Holy Spirit to the leading of her elder sister to Jesus.

Will not some of you try and do the same? How blessed to be permitted to lead one soul to the Lord Jesus Christ! And a little child may do it. That is the way to praise the Lord, as well as to come ourselves to Him. We cannot help speaking about Him, if our hearts are full of love to Him. And He will teach us what to say.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE'S MISSION TO INDIA.

During last week, the evangelistic services were held in the Scotch (Established) Church, and were well attended. The meeting was held at an hour (six to seven) deemed most suitable for the large class of gentlemen engaged in government and mercantile offices, and there was a good attendance of them. Had the hour been later, though we should probably have missed some of this class, there would, no doubt, have been a larger attendance of the public generally. The mid-day prayer-meetings (quite a new thing here) have been well attended, and much interest has been shown in the morning Bible lectures. One of the most interesting meetings yet addressed by Mr. Somerville was one of children, in Union Chapel, on Sunday afternoon last. About 500 children and young people were present. Mr. Somerville expects to address a similar meeting in the Scotch Church next Sunday.

Mr. Somerville has succeeded in the most encouraging manner in getting the ear of the young men in the city. Most interesting meetings have been held. At one of these, held in the Free Church on Monday evening last, thirty-two stood up and declared their decision for Christ. A Christian Young Men's Association has been formed, the main object of which is the conversion of souls. A committee of the young men has been formed to arrange for meetings of their own class, and to organize other plans of work.

Mr. Somerville will likely remain two weeks longer, and then go to Madras, from which he has already received invitations.

This week the evangelistic meetings are being held in Lewis's Theatre, and have been well attended.

"TRUST YE IN THE LORD FOR EVER!"

When strong in power assailing,
The enemy is nigh,
Stand in a might unfailing,
And sing of victory!
His arm who fighteth for us
Shall quell the foeman's thrust;
Praise is our battle-chorus;
Now is the time to trust!

When waves are dark before us,
No human succour near,
When threat'ning clouds hang o'er us,
"Nor sun nor stars appear;"
His angel stands beside us,
The holy and the just;
No evil shall betide us;
Now is the time to trust!

Through suffering victorious,
Christ summons to the same,
Sounding the watchword glorious,
"I also overcame!"
Shall the cross He gives appeal us?
Shall we trail it in the dust?
Lord, whatsoe'er befall us,
Be Thou, be THOU our trust!

Made willing by Thy power,
Our inmost souls exclaim,
Not "Save us from this hour!"
But "Glorify Thy name!"
We hear our Leader calling,
And we know that all is well,
For Thou wilt keep from falling,
Oh! our Immanuel!

And on and onward ever,
When the way is rough and steep
At the crossing of the river,
When the shadows gather deep;
We'll sing, our hearts upraising
To the Faithful and the Just;
Now is the time for praising!
Now is the time to trust!

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

BY REV. J. WILKINSON.

First in order, not in pre-eminence. There is no difference between the Jew and the Gentile in matters concerning individual salvation. The Israelitish nation is God's firstborn among the family of nations. "Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, my firstborn" (Exod. iv. 22). A position so distinguished implies privileges and responsibilities. The privilege of the firstborn among the Israelites was to possess a double portion of his father's inheritance (Deut. xxi. 17). This birthright was Esau's, but was sold to Jacob. It was also Reuben's, as the firstborn of Jacob's first wife. In consequence of Reuben's impure conduct, the birthright was transferred to Joseph, as the firstborn of the second wife. "For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler (or prince), but the birthright was Joseph's" (1 Chron. v. 2). Joseph got his double portion of the land of Canaan by his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, being adopted as sons by Jacob, and taking their places as heads of tribes. This firstborn of nations is set apart, consecrated in all time to God. The firstborn of the individual families of this elect nation are also consecrated to God. "Sanctify unto Me all the firstborn.....among the children of Israel;.....it is mine" (Exod. xiii. 2). "All the firstborn are mine;.....I hallowed unto Me all the firstborn in Israel;.....mine shall they be" (Num. iii. 13).

The firstborn among the families of Israel was God's own in the interest of the other members of the family, and the nation of Israel God's own in the interest of the rest of the world. The honour and privilege of this close relationship to God carry with them corresponding responsibility. If truly obedient to God, the firstborn in the family becomes an example of obedience, and an active instrument in promoting obedience among the younger members of the family; and so also the nation in its relation to the world. It is terrible, however, to contemplate even a temporary failure of Israel's destiny and mission as God's firstborn among the nations. The most honoured becomes the most despised; the most protected, the most persecuted; the most favoured, the most chastised. "For she receives at the Lord's hand double for all her sins" (Isa. xl. 2). "And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double" (Jer. xvi. 18). Nevertheless, in the grand and glorious future, Israel is guaranteed as God's firstborn, his double portion of blessing in the interest of the world. "Instead of your shame, there shall be double; and instead of ignominy, they shall rejoice in their portion; for in their land they shall inherit the double, they shall have everlasting joy" (Isa. lxi. 7, Henderson's translation).

The special responsibilities, then, of this elect nation are measured by its special privileges, and its special chastisements correspond with its special advantages. "Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. ii. 9-11).

I would here seriously ask your readers, and the Christian Church at large, "Does not this passage teach the Church the order to be observed in the conduct of Christian Missions?" Has this order ever been inverted or annulled? Apostolic precedent, as well as Scripture precept, favours this order. "Beginning at Jerusalem," I dare not quote, as many good people do, as meaning the same as "first to the Jew." "Beginning at Jerusalem" means literally, "beginning at Jerusalem," to all Jerusalem Christians; but to London Christians "beginning in London," i.e., begin where you are, and show your fitness for the work of preaching the gospel, and your estimate of the gospel as meeting the need of sinners, by seeking the salvation of the souls perishing at your door. "Beginning at Jerusalem" is an appropriate subject for home missionary guidance; but the order, "first to the Jew," might be observed with great advantage both by home and foreign missions.

It is a strikingly interesting and instructive fact, that the Apostle Paul, though pre-eminently the Apostle of the Gentiles, never entered town or city during the whole of his apostolic career, but he sought out his brethren, and preached the gospel "first to the Jew." It is true that some have hastily thought he did this only for a time, and that when some Jews "contradicted and blasphemed" at Antioch in Pisidia, the apostle then turned from the Jews to the Gentiles. He did indeed turn from those blasphemers to the Gentiles then and there assembled, and waiting for their offer of eternal life through Jesus, and on the same terms. But even to those blasphemers Paul said, "It was necessary the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Why was it necessary? First, because it was God's order; and secondly, because of the difference in the religious education and training of Jew and Gentile. The same salvation, through the same Saviour, and on the same terms, would do for both Jew and Gentile, but the same sermon would not. To the Jew he showed from the Hebrew Scriptures that Jesus is Messiah, but the Gentile he urged to turn from dumb idols to serve the living God. The question arises, "Did Paul turn from all the Jews, and for ever, when some blasphemed at Antioch in Pisidia?" If he did, of course he will labour in future only among the Gentiles. Let us follow him to his next place, and see what course he pursued. He went to Iconium—what to do there? "And it came to pass in Iconium, that they (Paul and Barnabas) went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake that a great multitude, both of the Jews and also of the Greeks, believed" (Acts xiv. 1). And in Acts xvii we find they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews; and Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath-days—Saturdays—reasoned with them out of the Scriptures—the Old Testament manuscripts—and some of them believed (Acts xvii. 14). To preach the gospel "first to the Jew" was Paul's manner, or regular custom, and thus we have apostolic precedent, as well as Scripture precept, for observing the same order. The priority of the Jewish claim does not rest simply and solely on the ground of justice for past wrongs, nor on the ground of gratitude, simply on account of blessings received—though much might be urged on these grounds—but on much higher ground; "first to the Jew" is God's own order, founded in infinite wisdom, in the interest of the Jew as an instrument in blessing the world.

Had the Church, in her missionary operations, gone first to the Jew, she would, in proportion to her success, have annihilated the most powerful opposition to the gospel, and secured the most able, intelligent, and successful missionaries. For the Jews are in all lands; have access to all people; are familiar with the manners, customs, and languages of all nations; and have a physical constitution acclimatized to all countries. They already believe in the same God we believe in; they believe, as divine two-thirds of our Bible, and which constitute the foundation of the remaining one-third. They are waiting for a Messiah. This people are highly accessible all over the world. The gospel of Christ carried to them through one language—Hebrew, which is not difficult to learn—secures, in their conversion, an agency for preaching in every land and language "the unsearchable riches of Christ." "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, in those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying we will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you" (Zech. viii. 23).

I would not have the Church of Christ slacken her efforts, either at home or abroad, for the direct and immediate conversion of the Gentiles, since the present generation of sinners—Jews and Gentiles—is passing away into eternity, and if anything be done for the salvation of either Jew or Gentile, it must be done at once—now. But surely the one should be done, and the other not left undone. Paul was a missionary to the Gentiles, but wherever he went he offered salvation “first to the Jew.” Why should not all ministers and missionaries to the Gentiles do the same, specially in the case of Jews residing within their sphere of labour? Why should not the Lord’s stewards put the Jew first on their subscription list for this New Year? Why should not ministers and people, in private and in public, give the Jews a prominent place in their prayers?

Our regular work in preaching Jesus to the Jews needs prayer and help. Our “house of call” needs prayer and help. Our Orphanage needs prayer and help. Rome needs prayer and help. The casual Jewish poor need prayer and help, in clothes as well as money. Oh! blessed God, God of Israel, whose are the silver and the gold, touch the hearts of thy rich children to give freely and liberally to thy cause in all directions, and dispose them to observe thine own instructions, “to the Jew first and also to the Gentile.”

The Lord permitting me, I will give in a subsequent number of THE CHRISTIAN a few striking facts, illustrating and enforcing the importance of observing this divine order.

A WEEK OF PRAYER FOR WOMEN.

The Lord’s throne has already been encircled with a cloud of prayer for young men, and the showers from that cloud are now falling on us; multitudes of souls have been gathered into the great harvest in answer to those prayers. Young men are bestirring themselves to live and act for God. In Cambridge, Manchester, Sheffield, Dublin, and Belfast, they are already being used by their “great Commander” to do a mighty work.

In our small town of Dorking (in Surrey) and its neighbourhood, quite a little host of young men have rallied round our gracious Captain, and are upholding zealously his blessed cause, and each one has found a work to do.

“I can put my arm round a fellow’s neck, and ask him to come,” said one lately, who up to the time of his conversion, had been a trouble to himself and to all around him, but who now is one of our most useful helpers.

And shall we not plead for the women of our land? The influence of a Christian woman in her home, and upon those who immediately surround her in her daily life, is, in all its gentleness, and even weakness, a mighty power, blessed of God, and acknowledged by man. Shall we not plead for the immediate and mighty descent of the Holy Ghost on the women of our country? In our own localities let us beseech a blessing on our friends and neighbours, our relations too, that those who are the Lord’s may be marvellously quickened, and “endued with power from on high,” whilst those who are still in the sleep of death may now be roused by an invisible Hand and awakened to see their peril—their sad loss of service to a Master who has given his life for them—and the ruin and injury too often wrought by their evil example and unhallowed influence on those who need their sympathy, and might have so richly benefited by their friendship. Have women no temptations? Look at our factories, houses of business, young women at home—and what homes!—and young women in service.

At a hotel in Scotland this summer, the landlady was entreated to permit a service in the house for half-an-hour one Sunday afternoon, for the servants of her establishment. “No,” was her reply; “if they want to be saved, I suppose they can be saved, but it has nothing to do with me.” Then in the upper classes, do our hearts not bleed for the aching hearts, the aimless and often disappointed lives, of the young ladies we meet, and for those who are living in pleasure, just beginning “to enjoy life”? Oh! mistaken word! without a God! without the Giver of Life! Oh! brothers and sisters, plead for our women, that they may be delivered from their worldliness, vanity, indolence, love of ease, their countless surrounding temptations, and brought as labourers, under a divine Master, into a vineyard of infinite extension, boundless interest, and heavenly reward. During our week of prayer, may many aching hearts be comforted, needy ones relieved, anxious ones satisfied, and wandering ones brought within the shelter of our peaceful fold.

WOMAN’S WORK.

“Who hath despised the day of small things?”

In our day the Lord hath put forth his almighty arm, to wield a multitude of “small” weapons—has put forth his omnipotent strength on the behalf of “small” instruments, and thus gathered in a mighty harvest, by means of reapers called into the field by his voice, and not the voice of man. He “hath chosen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty.” Do we see the Lord’s glory increased by his own choice of instruments, and shall we refuse the call to enter the field, because of our own former lack of service, because of our unfitness, by reason of our weakness? No; rather let the feeblest agencies now be clothed by Him who is our strength.

This is the opportunity for the weak ones to “glory in their infirmities,” because his “strength is made perfect in weakness.” In this great emergency our Captain is calling his troops into the field; yes, the “irregulars” too. And is his call to be refused? The mightiest honour of heaven is obedience to the Lamb, and are we to cling to an earthly shrinking from our very highest and most honourable calling?

Yes, WOMEN have a work to do. The women of Samaria, Anna, Mary Magdalene, and a host of others, have “told of Jesus” (John iv. 28; Mark xvi. 7), and the message has been received. It has brought gladness to aching hearts; it has brought courage to the feeble, rest to the weary, and has comforted many an aching heart.

We have instances of “woman’s work” in the present day in every town and village of our land, and successful work it proves, too, often reaching those whom none else could reach, and penetrating the recesses of many a home and family that would otherwise seem inaccessible to the blessed rays of gospel light.

At the Mildmay Deaconesses’ Home this department has had a seven years’ trial, has been conducted with much skill and patience, and has found large success in its varied branches of labour, among which may be enumerated—mission work, visiting from house to house, Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, boys’ and girls’ classes, as well as hospital nursing.

Why should not our Christian women now in every town and village form a rallying-point, in the shape of a weekly meeting for prayer, praise, reading the Scriptures and consideration of local work? A gathering of even “two or three” thus simply commenced, in earnest dependence on a Father’s blessing, a Saviour’s presence, and the Holy Spirit’s power, could not fail to draw down rich showers on the parched land—a “time of refreshing” indeed “from the presence of the Lord.”

It may be mentioned, for the encouragement of those who are willing to commence these readings, on however small a scale, in their own localities, that they have been carried on very happily and with great blessing during the past year in many different places.

WINDSOR.—The Week of Prayer was observed in this borough during the second full week in January, instead of the first. The meetings were conducted in a manner similar to the London meetings, and were very largely attended. The subjects of prayer were local as well as general, a method which we think worthy of more universal imitation. As a rule, our prayers are far too vague and indefinite. Reference was made, at some of the meetings, to the awakening that is going on in various parts of our land, and personal effort was urged on the Christians present. Many special requests for prayer were sent in, and offered. We regret to notice, from an account in the local paper, that the meetings were almost exclusively confined to the Nonconformist bodies.

THE WORK OF THE LORD IN WAKEFIELD.

A fortnight's special religious services, of a character unprecedented in this town, have just been held with marked success. A week's services were first projected, consisting of a Christian conference every morning, and a public service every evening. These were held alternately in the two largest schoolrooms (Zion, Congregational; and West Parade, Wesleyan) at the command of the evangelical dissenting denominations.

The meetings grew in interest and numbers through the week—so much so, that it was determined to continue them a week longer, making them of a more marked evangelistic character. The town was divided into twenty-five districts, and visitors were appointed to each district, who made a house-to-house visitation every day during the last week. The result was, that the meetings were crowded, and overflow meetings had to be held.

Many have been impressed during the services, and have come anxiously inquiring the way of salvation; and it is confidently expected there will be large accessions to the churches of this town.

On Sunday night, January 10, a united Communion Service of all the Nonconformist churches in the town was held in West Parade Chapel, when a little over a thousand members communed together. It was a most impressive service, and a sight never to be forgotten.

LONDON ASSOCIATION FOR FEEDING THE SICK POOR.

Some one has remarked that, in the Lord's Prayer, the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," comes before that other request, "Forgive us our trespasses." Without inferring that the former is the more important of the two, it will readily be admitted that Christians are better able to impart spiritual nourishment to others if the pressing wants of the body have been first supplied. We think, therefore, this Association is actuated by the divinest wisdom in making the one a stepping-stone to the other.

A most interesting gathering was held, in connection with this Association, on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 19, at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, when about 1600 poor, mostly aged people, of both sexes, were entertained to a most substantial meal—in many cases, evidently, a very welcome one. Hunger is the best sauce, and it could too plainly be seen, by the wan and pinched faces of many of those present, that they were no strangers to it. Besides the large company that filled the lower rooms of the Tabernacle, several hundred of the infirm poor who could not be present were supplied at their homes. One very peculiar and gratifying feature of the meeting was the presence of some hundreds of blind folks.

After the more material part of the programme had been heartily discussed, everybody went upstairs to the Tabernacle proper, where "a feast of fat things" was provided, in the shape of earnest and affectionate gospel addresses, by various friends of the Association. Bendigo was one of the speakers, and told, in a very simple, unassuming manner, the story of his conversion. The rapt attention of the audience during all the addresses proved that they were not insensible to their paramount need of the "bread of life," and we trust many of those sick and sorrow-stricken ones left the Tabernacle, not only refreshed in body, but having the hunger of the soul both created and supplied.

Many stayed at the close to be conversed with; and if the light of the cross has penetrated into some hitherto dark and sorrowing hearts and homes, the labours of those who organise these gatherings will be amply repaid.

LLANDUDNO.—Last year an effort was made to observe the Week of Prayer, which was but feebly responded to by the English residents. We are happy to say this year the subject has been taken up in a hearty and cordial manner. A meeting has been held each evening, from seven to nine o'clock, in one of the dissenting places of worship, three being used; consequently all the Protestant denominations in the town were represented in the congregations. Sankey's hymns were used, a goodly number of requests for prayer were sent in, and it is believed that there have been special manifestations of the Spirit's presence, and that much good has been effected. To God be all the praise! We know that we have praying friends who will rejoice to hear these glad tidings.

GOD'S ANCIENT PEOPLE.

Various communications have lately reached us, having reference to the ancient people of God. We hail this as a sign of increasing interest in the Jew, and, more than this, a sign that we are drawing near to the times when, the fullness of the Gentiles being brought in, all Israel shall be saved.

Will not those to whom God has freely given, give freely, in the way of earnest prayer, that during the coming time of widespread effort, and publication of the everlasting gospel, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would incline the hearts of many thousands of Jews to attend the meetings, and that, hearing the word of life, they may find Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of David, the Son of God, the Lord our Righteousness.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers has held during the past week ten services for children in the Mechanics' Institute, Hanley, and a great and glorious work has been done through his instrumentality. Many souls have been brought to a knowledge of their Saviour, and his own people have been cheered and stirred up to carry on the good work.

The singing of hymns constitutes a large portion of the services. Sheets containing a dozen or so are given to each person who enters the hall, and Mr. Spiers teaches the tunes and leads the singing himself. Interspersed among these are a brief prayer or two, and short addresses by Mr. Spiers, plentifully illustrated by anecdotes; indeed, he never seems at a loss for a story; but his stories are always taken from some occurrence in every-day life, or from facts within his own knowledge.

An earnest but very simple gospel address is always given by Mr. Spiers to conclude with; and, after another hymn and prayer, the first meeting concludes, Mr. Spiers having first invited those who desire to be spoken to about their souls to remain behind. When the doors have again been closed, an earnest prayer for the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon the anxious ones is offered up; and, after a hymn, such as "There are angels hovering round," beautifully sung by the hushed audience, and a few words on the object of these after-meetings, the audience is at once divided into little groups, and each is taken by a Christian friend; and, amid perfect stillness, broken only by the low murmur of the voices of the workers, the inquirers are spoken to, and shown from God's Word the way of life, and urged to accept a present salvation. After a short time, in many cases, the mournful faces are seen to light up with joy, as the glorious truth dawns upon their minds that Jesus has forgiven their sins, and saved them. There is no excitement, unless the sobs of some bowed down with a deep sense of their guilty state can be so termed; but the mighty power of the Holy Spirit is felt to be in the room, present in the midst, and striving with the souls of sinners, and leading them to trust in Jesus.

Soon Mr. Spiers asks all to sing, "I am coming, Lord, coming now to Thee," or to repeat after him, "Jesus, I do trust Thee; trust without a doubt;" and the hymns came direct from many hearts, beating with the newly-given life of a child of God, and conscious of that peace He only can give. The meeting then closed with praise to God for his wondrous love, and prayer for further blessings.

The names and addresses of all the converts are taken down at the end of the week, and sent to their various pastors.

No wonder, then, that the hall was packed every night, save the market night, Saturday, and that on Sunday last 1600 at least were present, while hundreds were turned away from the doors. After this, nearly 600, including the workers, remained to the after-meeting. At this farewell service, Mr. Spiers introduced a new hymn, not yet printed, which was sung by friends on the platform, and afterwards the children repeated the first two verses line by line, and then joined in singing them.

I would mention the case of one lad of some twelve summers, whose happy face was observed from the platform one night eagerly drinking in every word uttered. The previous night he had exclaimed, "Oh, I do love Jesus, and believe He died for me; but I used to be such a wicked boy, and did swear so."

At the last after-meeting a friend spoke to no less than twenty-eight young women in deep concern about their souls, while Mr. Spiers had nearly as many in another part of the room; and another group of a dozen or more youths and adults were being spoken to by a third friend, all evidently seeking Jesus.

I shall not easily forget the scenes I have been privileged to witness. God be praised for making bare his arm, and coming amongst us! Oh, his matchless, boundless love! And "still there's more to follow."

A meeting is to be held this week to arrange for permanent Sunday and mid-weekly evening services for children and converts.—Yours in our loving Lord,
W. H. B.

RUDMORE, PORTSMOUTH.

This part of the town is a district principally inhabited by navvies, fishermen, their wives and families. As a rule, the people, so far as we could see, have been very indifferent to spiritual things. Our brother, Mr. H. Cook, of Gosport, on whose heart the Lord seemed to lay the condition of the people, was led to open a good-sized room for the preaching of the gospel, and the result has been most encouraging. In the first place, Mr. Cook moved his floating Bethel near this neighbourhood, invited several navvies and fishermen on board to tea one afternoon, who accepted the invitation, enjoyed their tea, and listened with great interest to the precious gospel told them afterwards.

Every Lord's-day evening the gospel is preached there, also on Wednesday evenings. A gentleman has been giving lectures to the people there lately, illustrated with diagrams, on different subjects, which they thoroughly enjoy.

Rudmore is an additional field of service for our brother Cook, who is abundant in labours for his Master. He has also just taken the Pier Hotel (close to the water), Gosport, and transformed it into a "British Workman" public-house, which seems much appreciated by very many, fishermen and others. This undertaking, as well as Rudmore, has been attended with a great deal of expense, and I am sure, if Christians fully knew the important and peculiar character of the blessed work Mr. Cook is engaged in, there would be no lack of sympathy or funds. With his boat he visits the foreign vessels that come into port, and distributes Bibles, books, and tracts to the sailors in their own languages, which are generally very readily received; and thus the Word of God is carried into all parts of the world, and, in many instances, finds its way into the hearts of some of the poor fellows, to the joy and rejoicing of their souls.

In the summer months he takes his vessel (fitted up on purpose for meetings), and visits many parts of the Isle of Wight, invites the villagers on board, and on most occasions they very readily come to hear the word of life proclaimed. At other times he will hold the meeting on shore. The people assemble listen with interest and wonder to the blessed truths declared, and go away profited and blessed.

Should any of the Lord's people desire to have fellowship with our brother in his labours, I should be pleased to receive and forward to him any help; or contributions could be sent direct to his address, Stoke-road, Gosport.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—Having to thank the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN for kind help given to this charity during 1874, I would ask them to continue it. We have now five Homes to care for, with sixty inmates, forming chiefly a band of sick and impotent folk. For their necessities we are now commencing a fund for a Bible-woman nurse. For this we make an especial appeal. Any contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by Elizabeth G. Harrison, Thornhill, Ealing, W.

LEAMINGTON YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A work among the young women of Leamington has been working now for more than a year, and attended with much and manifest blessing to both bodies and souls of those who come under its influence. The chief agent in these efforts has been Miss Taylor, who, seeing the deep need of such an institution, earnestly desires to commence a Home in Leamington similar to the Young Women's Christian Association Homes in London, Dublin, and elsewhere. A suitable house and an earnest Christian matron have been offered, and it is proposed to open the Home in about a fortnight, providing good plain fare at a low cost, enlarging the Home as means are sent in. The work is undertaken singlehanded, and from a deep conviction of the need of it, and we earnestly hope our readers' sympathy and help will not be lacking. Miss Taylor's address is, Holmesdale-villa, Leamington.

THE "SAILORS' REST" AT DEVONPORT.

Dear Fellow-helpers,—I ask you to join with me in praising "Him who only doeth wondrous things." About thirteen weeks ago I had not one penny towards the starting of the "Sailors' Rest" at Devonport; now I have £1700, sufficient to purchase the lease of the house! In a short time I trust it will be mine, or rather, the Lord's. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down;" by faith the Lord has cast down walls of difficulty, and has provided means for the purchase. Some have remarked, "You will find it a great deal more difficult to get the last £2000." I do not believe it. My Lord has the key of the treasury; He has given me the earnest, and He will give the money needed to build it up, and launch our life-boat.

I want £1000 more by March 31. Without this sum I should not feel justified in giving orders to the builder and carpenter, and I should be sorry to let the spring pass by without commencing alterations. I want to get all finished by the end of the summer.

Dear friends, if money is wanted for loan or business by a certain date, it is forthcoming. Shall it not be so now? £1000 more in hand by March 31! There are signs of showers of blessing in the service. Dear friends from China and other parts write and tell me that the Spirit is "moving on the face of the waters," and our dear sailors on board ships of war are deciding for Jesus, and are stepping into the life of faith.

Your hearts were glad, I know, when you read in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 14, that at Lisbon some of the officers and men of the Channel Fleet held a mid-day prayer-meeting, and gave gospel addresses afterwards every day during the Christmas leave. You will be still more thankful when I tell you that the origin of that work was a visit of several officers of H.M.S. "Agincourt" to my Sunday afternoon meeting in Devonport. They were so struck with it that they said to me, "With God's help, we will start branches of this work wherever we go; we will copy this meeting at Lisbon and at Gibraltar. Will you send us leaflets to sing from? and above all, pray for us."

I have before me a long letter from the "Agincourt," which would cause the tear to start to every Christian's eye with an earnest Thank God! "We had," writes this officer, "a believer's meeting on the first day of leave, when I was led to urge the blessed life of full consecration, as the only one for shipboard. Notices were distributed among the men to come to the gospel addresses, a red ensign marking the house where the blood of Jesus was to be spoken of. Several came in and found Jesus. We have had the drops; we expect a shower at Gibraltar."

Thus has God honoured the Sunday gospel work at Devonport. Dear friends, the money He sends is but an earnest of the blessing which He will give when the Sailors' Rest is open, and the red ensign by day and the glittering letters, "Welcome Home" by night, draw Jack to the place where Jesus waits to bless.

A. N. D. has nobly given a full and liberal percentage on every pound collected, in response to his appeal. Is there not another A. N. D. in England who will come forward that the next £1000 may be at the bankers by March 31?—Yours, in Christian fellowship, AGNES E. WESTON.

OUR CHRISTIAN SAILORS.

I am glad to be able to say that souls are being saved in H.M.S. "Modeste," for which I asked prayer when I last wrote; to two Christian officers and one seaman, there are added, since her arrival in Shanghai, seven more.

The British gunboat "Frolic" had not one Christian in her when she came into this port last May. There are ten now, beside several interesting inquirers!

The "Dwarf" left us last week for England, with seven decided Christians. The Christians of the "Curlew," about ten in number, are about to leave Hong Kong soon for England; also the "Thistle" and "Hornet," in both of which there are Christians.

Few have such glorious opportunities of witnessing for Christ all over the world as the sailors, and Christ has many unflinching soldiers in the British navy now; also in the American navy. God is making bare his arm in the latter, in this port. May I again add, Pray for us!—Very truly yours,
J. McLEAN.

MISSION TO THE ASHANTEES.

A special interest has attached to this African people since the British expedition, which resulted in the partial breaking up of the Ashantee power, and the re-establishment of the British rule and prestige. A favourable opportunity thus seems, in God's providence, to be presented for more solicitous regard as to the spiritual condition of this, in many respects, interesting race.

The Church Missionary Society has issued an appeal, made by the Bala Missionary Society, on behalf of this Mission. They do not ask English Christians "to go to that land of sickness and fever;" the missionaries are already at the Gold Coast, but the means of providing for their conveyance to Coomassie and support there are wanting, and it is thought not unlikely that Christians in this country, some of whom may have business and other connections with that part of Africa, would be willing and glad to contribute to the funds of a Mission to this benighted people. Amidst the multitude of mercies that God is bestowing on our land, let us not forget our less favoured brethren in these distant and unhealthy climes.

It is desired to establish two Mission-stations, the cost of which will be about £6000, and £700 will be required annually to sustain them.

Contributions will be received by the Treasurers, The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., at Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co.'s, Pall Mall East; Joseph Gurney Barclay, Esq., at Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co.'s, 54, Lombard-street; and R. N. Fowler, Esq., M.P., at Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler, and Co.'s, 50, Cornhill; Messrs. Nisbet and Co., Berners-street; E. Hutchinson, Esq., the Lay Secretary, at the office of the Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, London; and Mr. I. P. Werner, agent of the Bala Missionary Society, 8, Moorgate-street, London.

GRAY'S-YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

It was a pleasure, on a recent Lord's-day morning, to quit our ordinary habit of assembling ourselves with the people of God, and betake ourselves to a spot not far from the hum and fashion of Oxford-street. It was a bright morning, and Gray's-yard looked its best. Above stairs were about 500 men, of a class never seen in any ordinary place of worship, who after receiving a piece of bread and a cup of coffee, were earnestly and lovingly addressed by ministers and other gentlemen; Sir Robert Carden also speaking to them in a friendly way, and expressing warm desires for their welfare.

Below stairs were 300 or 400 more, including women, all being entertained in the same hospitable way. At the close of the services, the real breakfast was given, consisting of a solid meat-pie, and a small currant loaf and coffee. During the meal many conversed personally with the men, and heard from them the secret of their present state of destitution. The majority of the men were out of any constant employment, though a large portion of them were robust and healthy-looking.

As we emerged from the somewhat exhausting atmosphere of the Mission-room, and encountered the church-going population of the West, we felt that it was a godlike work that these Christians were devoting themselves to; nay, more, that nothing but the very mind of Christ, "who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich," could actuate or energize them to this daily, weekly, incessant labour; and of Him they shall receive their reward. Any further information may be received on application to the honorary secretary, Mr. Edmunds, Gray's-yard, James'-street, Oxford-street.

BOWDEN, NEAR MANCHESTER.—The town of Bowden is now receiving a rich blessing from God. After united meetings for prayer, Mr. J. N. Carr, of Carlisle, was invited to address a ladies' Bible-class connected with the Congregational Chapel, and in the evening preached at the Baptist Chapel, when many professed to find Christ. On the occasion of a second visit, he was accompanied by Mr. Dunn, and a large concourse of people assembled at the various meetings. The word preached bore the old characteristic of being "sharper than a two-edged sword." Numbers remained to be spoken with, and strong, stalwart men and little boys were seen weeping side by side on account of the load of guilt. Mr. Dunn continues the work, preaching every night to large audiences, whilst the cry is still heard, "What must I do to be saved?"

LONDON CITY MISSION.

Few men, we suppose, carry on their work amidst more discouragement, and less immediate tokens of success, than the London City Missionaries. Any encouragement and sympathy that are afforded to them must therefore be peculiarly welcome. Mr. and Mrs. Bevan and Mr. and Mrs. Williams, who have so long taken such a deep interest in this work, gave another proof of their sympathetic regard for these labourers in the dark spots of London, by entertaining them and their wives to a social tea at the Cannon-street Hotel, on Thursday evening last. Mr. George Williams presided during the evening, and he, Mr. Bevan, and the other members of the committee, were very cordially received by the assembled company, numbering about 700. Addresses of encouragement, sympathy, and counsel were given by various clergymen and others, and we trust the season of pleasant intercourse will have the effect of strengthening the hands of the missionaries, and cheering them on in their somewhat arduous and discouraging work.

SHIPWRECKED SEAMEN AND THE GOODWIN SANDS.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to bring before your readers the case of the shipwrecked seamen who are constantly being brought at this season, cold, dripping, and in a destitute condition, into Ramsgate Harbour?

By consulting the wreck-chart published annually by the Board of Trade, it appears that there are two places off the shores of Great Britain which are specially fatal to sailors, Great Yarmouth, and that part of the coast which lies between the North and South Foreland. Between these two headlands, at a distance of about five or six miles from the shore, are situated the dangerous Goodwin Sands. On these sands, and in the shoal water between them and the main land, nearly sixty wrecks have occurred annually during the last ten years. For all such casualties Ramsgate is the principal place of refuge. It occupies a central position, and the Government having placed a steam-tug at the disposal of the harbour authorities, our life-boat is taken at once, and in the roughest weather, to the scene of action; the shipwrecked crews thus rescued are brought into Ramsgate, and a small Home is provided for their reception, where dry clothing and other necessary comforts are supplied. But this institution is, neither in its appointments or accommodation, such as the importance of this work demands. It is proposed, therefore, to combine the Home with our Sailors' Bethel, and to erect one substantial building, by which greater efficiency, and a considerable saving in the current working expenses, will be secured. For this purpose the Board of Trade have kindly granted us a suitable site, which we hope soon to occupy; but even if this combination cannot be effected, the time has come when something more efficient should be provided for the spiritual and temporal well-being of the sailors frequenting this port.

I may add that a seamen's chapel, thus erected, would not merely provide for the spiritual wants of the sailors, but be a great boon to the visitors who congregate here in thousands during the summer months. This latter would be a most important field of evangelistic labour, as large congregations could be secured every day in the week, and at almost any hour, and the gospel of the grace of God fully and freely proclaimed to large masses of people.

Would those of your readers, therefore, who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, kindly aid us in this undertaking? We hope to commence with about £500 in hand, but about £2000 will be needed for the accomplishment of the whole.

—I remain, dear sir, yours faithfully,

J. EUSTACE BRENNAN,

Vicar of Christ Church, Ramsgate, and Superintendent of the Ramsgate Harbour Mission.

The Vicarage.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—Those of our readers who have prayed for this town, and the work of God under the care of our brother, E. Harries, will be glad to know that there are growing signs of blessing and prosperity. Will God's people pray for the fishermen of Great Yarmouth? Many of them perished during the late severe weather. They are very careless men, just ashore for a few days, which are generally spent in drinking, and then off again for their two months' voyage.

DAILY TEXTS.

"FOLLOWERS OF THEM WHO, THROUGH FAITH AND PATIENCE, INHERIT THE PROMISES."—HEB. vi. 12.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For much blessing on the Sabbath drawing-room services held at Belvedere House.

PRAYER.—For a gentleman exposed to great temptation in Liverpool and Manchester.—For one sorely tempted, and much distressed in mind, that he may find the peace which his heart yearns after.—For a beloved husband, whom the devil is tempting to return to his besetting sin, drink.—For a young man, that he may have grace to overcome a besetting sin, and that the scholars under him may be brought to Jesus.—For the restoration of one who did run well, but has, for many years past, been under the influence of strong drink.—For a young man, for some years an earnest evangelist, who is now devoting his time and talents to the service of Satan.—For a child of God, earnestly seeking more work in her Lord's vineyard.—For blessing on a village Bible-class.—For the restoration of a teacher's hearing, if the Lord so please.—For a father and mother, whose eldest son was lately drowned on the coast of Newfoundland, whilst working there in the cause of Christ, that they may be comforted and strengthened under their deep trial.—For the students at University College and Hospital, London; many seem to be either infidels, or such as take our Lord Jesus only as a great example.—For a young men's Bible-class, recently awakened, that the good impressions may be lasting, and the teachers filled with the Holy Ghost.—That the Lord would guide a beloved pastor as to acceptance of a call to another sphere of labour.—For a young man, that his reason and memory may be perfectly restored.—Major Malan requests prayer for guidance in the Lord's work. His heart is full of desire for the spread of the knowledge of the name of the Lord Jesus in Africa. He knows not how best to help on this blessed work, whether by personal service among the heathen, or by visiting the churches in Europe and America. He prays for guidance to do the Lord's will.

PLACES.—Prayer for Airdrie, N.B., is earnestly requested, that God may unite the hearts of His people, and give the promised blessing of union (Psa. cxxxiii.) in a series of meetings to be begun on the last Sabbath in January.—For rich blessings to the inhabitants of Birmingham during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.—For Waterbeck, in Dumfriesshire, that in these times of quickening it may be stirred. Also for Greenlaw, the county town of Berwickshire.—That Brecon may receive the blessings which it so much needs.—Earnest prayers are requested of God's children in England for a great revival in a town in Switzerland, where ungodliness and indifference are prevailing. Pray that God's people there may be roused, and unconverted men saved.—That much blessing may attend the evangelistic services about to be held by a member of the Evangelization Society in the Literary Institute at Lynton, commencing Jan. 31, and that all sections of God's people may unite to promote His glory.—For a blessing on special services, proposed to be held March 7—14, in the parish of Mayfield, Staffordshire.—For Bible-readings in the Temperance-hall, Barton-on-Humber, that the word of God may have free course and be glorified.—On behalf of united evangelistic services to be held (D.V.) in Melksham, from Feb. 1—6.—For five days' special services at Cransley, near Kettering, by Mr. Opie Rodway, to commence next Saturday.—For Mission services to be held in the churches and chapels of Torquay, from Jan. 31 to Feb. 7, that believers may be quickened, and precious souls saved.—For special services conducted by Henry Lyon, at the new Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, commencing Sunday evening, Jan. 31.—For an ingathering of souls through gospel meetings being held at Ford Forge.

CONVERSIONS.—For a father and his two sons.—For a dear father and mother, and two sons.—For a father, mother, son, and daughter.—That two gentlemen, brothers, may be led to attend Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Liverpool, and be converted.—That a brother, who is seriously ill, may, through the Lord's mercy, be restored to health, and, above all, brought to Christ.—For a brother, now suffering from illness, who has continued for some years in habits of intemperance and other vices.—For a young man, a printer, who is almost persuaded to be a Christian.—That the two sons of a Christian man may decide for Christ.—For my uncle, once a useful worker for Christ, but now wholly engaged in the cares of this world.—For a young man living in sin and drunkenness, that he may soon be converted, and be a living witness of the power of God.—For three brothers and two sisters.

PRAISE YE THE LORD.—Major Malan renders praise for exceeding abundant answers to prayer offered in December, 1873, by an assembly of Christians at his house in London, in reference to his journey to Africa. He knew then that nothing but miraculous power could strengthen his body to journey to Marija, in Basutoland, from whence this praise-offering is sent. The Lord has blessed him beyond his utmost hopes and desires. He confesses unbelief and impatience as a warning to all engaged anywhere in the Lord's work, lest they should be obliged thus publicly to humble themselves before their brethren, when they, too, offer praise to the Lord.

South Africa, Dec., 1874.

MALVERN.—A correspondent writes:—"The work here is wonderful, very wonderful! Night after night we have a crowded church, with fashionable people, and a hundred stay for the after-meeting. Many have decided for Christ. Yesterday I had a drawing-room meeting, and about sixty people were there, high fashionable Ritualists, and God was with us. Pray with and for us."

FORTHCOMING SPECIAL MEETINGS.

CONFERENCE OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS AT PRINCESS MARY'S VILLAGE, ADDESTONE.—It is proposed, if the Lord will, to hold meetings in the second week in March next, for the consideration of the following subjects:—"The early age at which children are born again" (Psa. lxxi. 5; Jer. x. 21); "How holiness is manifested in them" (Prov. xx. 11; Eph. vi. 1; Col. iii. 20); "Our duty to promote their spiritual life" (Eph. vi. 4; Col. iii. 21; 2 Tim. iii. 15; Psa. xxxiv. 11; Deut. xxxi. 13); "The training referred to in Gen. xviii. 19; Deut. xi. 19; Prov. xiii. 6." The Christian.

SOME SIGNS OF THIS TIME.

THESE columns contain from week to week matter which cannot but gladden every Christian's heart. The spirit of expectancy increasing, if not already prevalent, throughout the churches—the willingness of the people generally to hear the gospel—and, above all, the evident operation of the Holy Spirit in convincing men of sin, and leading them to peace in Jesus—are joyful occasions of thanksgiving to God.

But there is another side of the picture. The powers of darkness are active also, and there are many signs of the times which, like storm-clouds, are already visible above the horizon.

No one can observe the rapidly augmenting armaments of the continental nations without apprehension and alarm. The following is from a recent leader in The Times :—

"In the gloom that surrounds us one thing is perceptible, All men are arming themselves. It is the darkness that may be felt, and the sensation is not imaginary. At the word of command, Germany is arming en masse, and the surrounding nations—that is, the best part of the world—cannot but do as she does. The momentary dreams of peace and quiet, arts and progress, have fled away, and Germany recognizes the stern necessity of her case, which is that what she has won by arms she can only hold by arms, and as long as the arms are in her hand. It is no longer possible to doubt the sagacity and truth of her rulers, and they say that henceforth every German, sound in wind and limb, must be a soldier....For ages Germany has possessed all the glories, except those of policy and war. Now it has these, and the others as well. It is surrounded by great empires. The prosperity of England and Russia alone would be enough to tempt an anchorite to ambition....Why should it now shrink from an appeal to arms, which cannot but give it more than ever? This is the new attitude of Germany; all or nothing; for in her case not to advance is to recede. Accordingly, the more she arms, the more does France, the more does Russia. The former now commands, under all heads, about a million and three-quarters of men; the latter more than three millions and a third. Austria, Italy, Denmark, Holland, and Switzerland, are arming as fast as they can. It is a universal strain on the energy and resources of the world. But self-preservation never yet was found sufficient to keep up high tension long. When all nations arm it will be for something, and they will look before as well as behind. A dozen millions of men cannot be withdrawn from common industry and civil duties and engaged in the most costly and destructive of all employments, except to the continual loss and hindrance of the people. Where the women work like horses, as they do in Germany and France, the presumption is that both men and horses are wasting or misapplying their powers....In fact, a time will arrive when the burden of a much larger armament will compel a question between disarmament and initiative in war. If only to secure peace, Germany will have to appeal to arms, or, if not she, some other Power involved in this wild sword-dance of nations. Such is the inevitable result of an inflation of armaments proceeding upon rivalry and provocation; and it can only be averted by a timely resolution to be content with what one has, and to stand only on one's guard against unprovoked aggression."

Let us, on the other hand, call attention to the recently-passed marriage law of Germany, which forbids young men to marry before the age of twenty, and young women under eighteen, and requires the consent of the parents to the marriage of either sex, up to the age of twenty-four. It has been well shown that the chastity, the lengthened youth, and the home-life, which render such legislation as this possible, sufficiently account for the successful opposition which the Teutonic race made to the arms of the Roman Empire in former days, and for their superiority in the recent war with France. Does it not also suggest a comparison of our own country with Germany in this particular, and cause us to think with apprehension of the future of the youth of our own land?

This country was, perhaps, never more prosperous than now, looked at from a money point of view, but it was never, since the Reformation, so leavened with Romanism; never were its rulers or its people more insensible to the subtle working of this Satanic worm, which creeps into English homes, and leaves its slime upon all the sanctities of family life; and yet, like a petted serpent, hisses sedition in public assemblies, and newspapers, and books. We recommend those who think it an unwise thing to sleep over a volcano, to read "The Modern Avernus" (Hatchards), which contains overwhelming evidence of the progressive enslavement of this country, which is the design, not so much of the Pope as of the Jesuits, whose puppet the Pope is. The self-secure attitude of England to Papal aggression may be gathered from The Times, which speaks of Mr. Gladstone's recent article in the Quarterly Review on the "Speeches of Pope Pius IX." as "of the smallest possible value, if not positively mischievous, as tending to introduce and promote among us that spirit of unintelligence which is over-mastering the German mind in the contemplation of Roman Catholicism." Thus is the English mind hushed to sleep, while Jesuits abroad and at home are devoting all their crafty energy, in the words of the pseudo-Archbishop of Westminster, "to conquer and subdue an imperial race."

Another book is lying before us, "Sins of Trade and Business," by the Hon. and Rev. Canon Lyttelton, and "The Morals of Trade," by Herbert Spencer (Isbister). A great subject of inquiry is opened here, and perhaps a Conference of Christian men of business, to consider how to harmonize the morals of commerce with the morals of the Bible, would be a useful and practical addition to those already periodically held.

There is also another little book which, though very one-sided, ascetic, and ritualistic, contains some truths which may be read with profit. We refer to "Modern Christianity a Civilized Heathenism" (Simpkin), from which we make a few quotations :—

"We cannot understand you now. We have not the faintest notion what it is that you want us to do. Your sermons tell us of one sort of Christ and your conversation of another. In your gospel, we see a Christ bruised, and covered with reproach, and laughed to scorn; in your daily life, we see a Christ who has grown ashamed of his poverty and low estate, has cast off the garb of the Man of Sorrows, and has become a courteous gentleman, or a shrewd business-like man of the world. And because we see these things, we don't believe in any Christ at all."

"The unseen and the infinite baffle me, bewilder me, distract me; only by some infallible proof can I be persuaded of their reality. Such proof I should discover in the working of a miracle before my eyes. You tell me that I cannot have such proof. Then I will have personal witness. I will have that testimony by which miracles in the physical world were superseded when, in the spiritual world, if there be a spiritual world, God proclaimed a kingdom whose life and progress should be the mightiest miracle of all—the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of men."

"If I am to believe in God, it must be because I see Him in Christ; if I am to believe in Christ, it must be because I see Him in Ignatius, in Augustine, in Bernard of Clairvaux; because there are men and women living on this earth on whom He has left his mark so visibly that it cannot be mistaken; men and women as firmly persuaded of his death upon the cross as if their own eyes had seen Him die. And what do you think must be the life and conversation of one who has seen Him die; who knows, moreover, as your sermons teach us, that his own sins, his own wilful indulgence of appetite or desire, were the sins which put his Saviour to death; who is conscious at every moment of the day that he himself is verily guilty of the murder of his God?"

"I know for certain how Christ would be treated if He were here. I can see the Press deriding Him; the fine lady picking her way past Him in the street; the poor flocking round Him as a Friend; the magistrate committing Him to prison. Let me see his witnesses treated thus, and I will believe that He has sent them; their Christ-like life in the face of cold modern refinement, in the teeth of cruel Common Sense, shall be to me a miracle no less stupendous than the feeding of the five thousand in the wilderness, or the raising of Lazarus from the dead. But while I see them claiming the right to live as other men, glorying in the fact that they have no peculiarities, smiling politely on sin, and caressed by those who would have spat upon their Lord; so long as I see them thus, they shall teach me, if they please, the principles of Christ's philosophy, but they shall not dare to tell me that they are priests of a crucified Christ."

We may add to the causes of alarm already noted, the remarkable want of men of principle, capacity, and courage, so that when a Gladstone resigns the lead of one of the great parties in the State, there is absolutely no competent man to supply his place.

Another feature of the times is the devotion of time, talent, and capital to the one end of increasing wealth, and the concentration of wealth, as never before, in the hands of comparatively few. To guard against this very thing, God enacted special laws for Israel, making the seventh a year of release, and the fiftieth a year of Jubilee; and one of His sternest anathemas is that of the prophet, "Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!"

Of these varied causes of apprehension our prophets take almost no account; or if ever a voice is raised against them, it is some feeble rebuke like that of Eli to his sons, or some weak remonstrance like that of Nicodemus to the Sanhedrim, "he being one of them."

It was not thus the Gospel supplanted Heathenism, not thus the men of Galilee turned the world upside down. "It is well known," says Bishop Porteus, "that the first preachers of the gospel declared open war against all the follies, the vices, the interests, the inveterate prejudices, and favourite superstitions, of the world." It is not so now; and the weakness of our conferences, and even of our evangelization, is this, that we compromise the truth; that we are afraid to look it fairly in the face; that we do not love it well enough to seek it for its own pure and holy sake alone; that we are not content with "daily bread," though that be our daily prayer; that we shrink from being reviled, and persecuted, and spoken falsely of for Jesus' sake; that we do not rejoice and be exceeding glad at the prospect of such godly fellowship with the apostles and prophets, nor joyfully salute from afar the promise that great is our reward in heaven, and confess that we are strangers on the earth.

Therefore the salt has lost its savour; therefore is it good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men; and the Church of Christ to-day (notwithstanding the ingatherings at which we with heart and soul rejoice) is far from being "terrible as an army with banners." Our noon prayer-meetings, considered as meetings of God's people with their God, are painful illustrations of our prayerlessness. The age is out of breath, and the Church partakes of the spirit of the age; the age is shallow and superficial, and the Church is shallow and superficial too. The State looks in vain for a man to supply the place of one who lags in the race; and Jerusalem has "none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she has brought up."

The Revival of 1857 in the United States preceded the deadly war by which God opened the eyes of men to His estimate of Slavery, and swept that wickedness away; and out of that baptism of blood has come a result like the sign which God gave to Hezekiah, when the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down on the sundial of Ahas. American Christianity has recovered ten degrees by which its sun had gone down. What shall be England's case? "Now for a little space grace hath been showed from the Lord our God, to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place, that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage"—is this in preparation for our baptism of blood? Is "the great war," which The Times prognosticates, a part of the "more to follow"? If this arrow be in God's quiver, our silver streak of sea may be no more to these British Isles than Babylon's mighty river was to her.

Oh that we knew our need, that we understood that in the sight of the Son of Man, as witnesses of Him whose despised name we bear, we are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Then, out of the humiliation of that self-consciousness should rise a cry that would rend the heavens on its upward way—"Oh that THOU wouldest rend the heavens, that THOU wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!" Our one great want is GOD. Oh that in deed and in truth we feared His Name! Then should the Sun of RIGHTEOUSNESS arise upon us with healing in his wings.

AWAKENING AT LEEDS.

The Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken writes:—"God is pouring down blessings here. Many churches are crowded out, hundreds failing to gain admission. Hundreds are seeking the Lord every night, and finding, too. No town, I should say, in which a Mission has been held, has been so shaken yet. This, at least, is my impression. All praise to God! There is an excellent feeling between Churchmen and Dissenters. All are ready to help."

CORRECTION.—Last week we referred to house-to-house visitation at Blackheath. We understand, however, that though the visitors mostly reside there, the work of visitation is carried on chiefly in the large districts of Deptford, Greenwich, and Woolwich. Workers are wanted.

AUSTRALIA.—Revivals are reported in Australia, having been produced by hearing the glorious news of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Scotland, by the labours of the American evangelists. The people have caught the fire, and they go together under a divine impulse to pray. One clergyman writes that no less than a hundred have been hopefully converted in his congregation through these efforts.

THE WORK OF GOD IN BRECON.—In a series of united prayer-meetings, held in Brecon during the first week in the year, the power of the Spirit was made manifest, and the meetings were rendered, under God's blessing, the means of greatly strengthening the faith of believers, and strongly impressing many who had not decided for Christ. Cottage prayer-meetings, some in English and others in Welsh, are held during the week in those parts of the town most suitable for the gatherings, and the rooms are often found too small for the poor people who crowd into them. The Young Men's Christian Association, which was started some time ago, under the most favourable auspices, is the means of attracting together many Christian workers. Meetings are held weekly, and many of these gatherings have been found very profitable. The important work of tract-distribution is being carried on in the town. There are many encouraging signs around us: the relations between the various denominations in the town are more cordial than they have ever been before, and there is an increased feeling of unanimity with regard to "the one thing needful." The general attendance at the means of grace has greatly improved, the Holy Spirit has blessed the faithful ministrations of the gospel, and many of the hearers have been quickened into new life. Brethren, pray for us, that our faith fail not, and that the Lord whom we seek may suddenly come to his temple.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE IN INDIA.

The Indian Daily News of January 6, says:—

"The Rev. A. N. Somerville brought his evangelistic services in Calcutta to a close on Wednesday evening last, by a protracted 'farewell meeting,' extending from six to half-past nine p.m. The audience was the largest he had during his whole stay, for the theatre in Chowringhee was crowded to excess the whole evening, there being, it was calculated, over fifteen hundred people present. There was also a large number of the Calcutta clergy on the platform, and many more in the body of the building, representing not only all the Protestant denominations, but also the Roman Catholics and Unitarians. There was also a good sprinkling of Bengalee gentlemen present. The first hour was devoted to the consideration of the question—'How to reach and retain the non-church-going portion of the Christian community.' The next hour (seven to eight) was devoted to the consideration of the question—'How best to influence the non-Christian native population of Calcutta.' The remaining portion of the meeting was occupied by the chairman in an address on 'the Holy Spirit,' illustrated in Mr. Somerville's usual forcible style, and delivered with his usual power and earnestness. The meeting was closed with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Wilkins, and a few farewell remarks and the benediction by the chairman. This was the eighty-second meeting at which Mr. Somerville presided during the thirty days he was among us, and at none did he spare himself. Very justly he might say, in the words of the twelve apostles, 'We give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the Word.' On Thursday evening he left for Allahabad and other cities in the Upper Provinces, and the prayers and good wishes of many in Calcutta follow him."

We have also received an interesting letter, dated Allahabad, 9th January, from Mr. W. F. Somerville, Rev. Mr. Somerville's son, who accompanies him. We make the following extracts:—

"We reached here late on Friday night, the 1st of January, and after a preliminary meeting for ministers and Christian friends on Saturday, my father preached in the morning of Sunday in the Baptist Chapel, and in the Scotch Church in the evening. He had also a service for Bengalee gentlemen (Baboos) in the afternoon."

"Every day during this week two meetings have been held; a daily prayer-meeting at eight in the morning (the favourite time of meeting in India in the cold weather), intended more for Christians, and an evangelistic service in the evening. The great feature of the morning meeting is the requests for prayer and thanksgiving."

"There is no public hall at Allahabad, but we have taken the Railway Theatre for the evenings, which serves our purpose. There are a great many soldiers here, and every morning and evening we have many benches of red coats present at our meetings. My father is to give an address to them in their barracks on Monday evening. On Tuesday there is to be a lecture for young men, the subject being 'The Fiery Furnace' (Dan. iii.). Sir Robert Stewart, chief justice of the North-West Provinces, has agreed to be chairman. To-day we hope a Young Men's Christian Association will be formed here, as at Calcutta, in which spiritual objects will be primary."

"On Thursday, the 14th January, my father will have his farewell meeting here. Friends from other stations are expected to take part."

"On Friday morning we start for Lucknow, where we shall remain for about ten days, and then go up to the Punjab. There is a great number of soldiers in the Punjab—indeed a considerable proportion of the British army in India is stationed there. My father has received letters from that quarter, entreating him to go there. In the meantime we act according to God's guidance and circumstances. My father often tells how much he is supported by the prayers of God's people at home, and he earnestly hopes all those who have already been suppli-ating for a great blessing on this Mission will continue doing so with unabated zeal. We are both in very good health; the climate is suiting my father well. He says he was never better in all his life, notwithstanding all the work he goes through. We think we are greatly benefited by drinking nothing stronger than water."

"We have a great deal to encourage us, especially in the continuous attendance at all the many meetings; but we look still for those mighty manifestations of divine power, such as have filled the British Isles with astonishment. We find Mr. Sankey's hymns of great service. The musical department has a most happy effect on the meetings."

THE WORK OF GRACE IN CANADA.

In THE CHRISTIAN, of December 17, you publish a letter from our dear friend Miss Macpherson, giving an account of Mr. Varley's work in Canada. Permit a Toronto pastor to continue the narration, especially as we are assured that this will insure the fervent and constant remembrance of Canada in the prayers of many circles at home; we need this, dear brethren and sisters: do not forget us.

Mr. Varley continued his labours with us during the month of November. The interest was unabated. Week after week, 500 to 700 attended the afternoon addresses to Christians, the great Metropolitan Methodist Church, built by Dr. Punshon, and seating over 2000, being crowded whenever opened in the evening. But the work was too much for the workman—two or three services every day, the evening ones being fully three hours long, besides daily entertainments at the houses of Christian friends! This dry atmosphere, too, is less favourable to continued exertion than the moist climate of England. So that, at the end of a month's incessant labour, Mr. Varley was compelled to "come apart, and rest awhile." This he did, not at "a desert place" exactly, but in the neighbourhood of one of our Father's grandest handiworks, Niagara Falls. There he was welcomed and refreshed by Christian hospitality and quiet.

After thus resting, Mr. Varley spent some days at St. Catherine's, a town of 10,000 inhabitants, and at Hamilton, a city of 30,000, where each place of worship was crowded, and many acknowledged having received great help in the Christian service. He is this week engaged in Brantford, a place somewhat smaller than St. Catherine's, and we hear that God is richly blessing him there also. There has been an unusual degree of preparation for such a visit, in prayer and the spirit of unity.

In Toronto I am most thankful to say that the interest awakened by Mr. Varley's labours did not cease on his departure. Indeed, it cannot be said to have begun with his coming; for, long beforehand, there was "a sound as of abundance of rain." All through last winter, and well into the summer, the weekly prayer-meeting of the Evangelical Alliance had kept us in full sympathy with the blessed work in Edinburgh and elsewhere. The news of God's mighty works were continually rehearsed, from private and public sources (THE CHRISTIAN very frequently), and we joined in thanksgiving and prayer for the mother country and our own.

Brother Moody has been among us here, and we have followed him and his fellow-labourer in prayer from place to place. Nor did we fail to receive a blessing then. In several of the city churches there was a quiet, gracious work, and the ingathering of a bounteous harvest; and on not a few spots throughout the country the "plentiful rain" came down. Much was done in the removing of objections to the use of certain revival measures, inquiry-meetings, and the like. At the great meetings of the several ecclesiastical bodies in June, "the work of God in Scotland" was the theme of devout inquiry, exhortation, and prayer. And thus the way was prepared for an evangelist, our expectations were enlarged, and our hearts united.

Thus also, when Mr. Varley left us, the work of grace still went on, and is still going on. Last night, Mr. Bone, a devoted missionary to the sailors on the Welland Canal, addressed my prayer-meeting, and told us that after visiting some twenty churches in the city, he found special interest in them all. In travelling through the country also he found the same awakened state of feeling everywhere, evinced in the readiness with which religious conversation was entered into among travellers on the railways and steamers. There have been numerous additions to several of the churches during the past two months, and they are being "added daily" almost. Many of them are of the young—children of ten and upward, and my own testimony is, that no cases of conversion are more clear and satisfactory than those.

There are shadows to this bright picture in the forms familiar to all who have been in revival scenes, so that I need not describe them in detail. But that there is a real, deep, and lasting work of grace here there can be no doubt. Many vainly "going about to establish their own righteousness" have now "submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God"; and not a few of the careless, vicious, and hardened have been "brought out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son."

Pray for us, dear English friends; pray for us that the word of God may "have free course and be glorified," even as we pray for you. There are many links between England and Canada now, and they are multiplying all the time. We are, in truth, a bit of England, transplanted to a fresh soil. We trust in the one Lord Jesus; we live beneath the same cross; we meet at a common throne of grace. There let us "pray one for another" continually.

"THE CHRISTIAN" IN CANADA.

Dear Sir,—If you can spare a small corner in your next issue, I think the following extract of a letter just received from a clergyman in Canada, to whom I have been sending THE CHRISTIAN regularly for the last six months, will cheer and encourage yourself and your readers, specially those who are sending this paper to any in a far-off land. He says:—

"I beg to thank you with all my heart for supplying me with the much-valued CHRISTIAN, which, I can truly say, was blessed by God to stir up my own mind, as well as others, to seek more earnestly the blessing of God, by which so many hearts were gladdened in the dear Fatherland, as well as in other places.

"Towards the end of last October, I was constrained to attempt holding a series of evangelistic services, and, from the very first meeting, the blessing of God has attended the feeble efforts put forth. Every night since then we have had crowded meetings, and I am safe in saying that no less than 200 souls are known as having found the Saviour. Already about 100 are added to the church. All denominations have reaped the fruit of the revival in additions to their numbers from among those converted in our church."

The account of this work in a Canadian magazine sent me is still more wonderful. The Spirit of God working in mighty power, numbers every night in deep anxiety about their souls, and the church so crowded, that many were compelled to go away.

Perhaps these glad tidings may induce more of your readers to send THE CHRISTIAN to distant lands, where it is so deeply valued; and as so large a blessing is being vouchsafed in Canada, may not we in England pray for and expect the same, going forth with renewed zeal and earnestness to work for the Master—Yours truly,
C. E. T.
London.

FALLEN ASLEEP.—Again the ranks of the Christian workers, known to our readers, are thinned by the removal of Mr. JOHN ASHWORTH, of Rochdale, author of "Strange Tales," etc. He has been suffering much for some time, but we had not expected to hear of his departure so shortly after our notice of Jan. 14. He fell asleep on the 28th, in his 62nd year. A local paper says—"His loss among the poorer classes will be almost irreparable. During his illness, the Right Hon. John Bright and Rev. Dr. Molesworth were amongst his visitors."

We also regret to announce the departure of Mrs. JOHN VINE, at 4, Lower Camden-place, Bath, on Jan. 25, after a long illness, borne with patience and resignation, aged thirty years.

FOR THE YOUNG.

"HOW CAN I KEEP MY WORD?"

In the upper room of a house which stood where the Broad-street Railway Station has since been built, a boy, ten years of age, was tossing wearily upon his bed. A glance at his pale face and emaciated frame sufficed to show that his life had come nearly to its end.

The father having returned from his daily labour, sat sorrowfully, and with many tears, watching his little one. It was a calm summer's evening, and the sun was near setting, when the sufferer, waking from an uneasy slumber, roused himself and said, "Father, I'm going—to Jesus—very soon—I shall have—no more—pain then."

The father mournfully replied, "Yes, Jemmy, you'll be happy then; but we shall be miserable without you."

"But shan't we all be happy when we meet in heaven?" said the child. "Father, I want you to promise that you will meet me there."

The father, though an honest, industrious man, was not a Christian; and the request of the dying child filled his mind with a sense of his own unfitness for heaven, and he could only reply, "I'll try, Jemmy, I'll try."

The boy shook his head at this, and said, "Father, I want to meet you in heaven; you must say, 'I will.'" The strong man was subdued by the earnest manner in which this was spoken, and said, "Don't worry, dear boy, I will, I will meet you in heaven."

A look of satisfaction settled on the face of the sufferer, who then composed himself, as if for slumber. But when the evening twilight faded into night, he was gone to the better world.

Alone in the chamber of death, the father now groaned in agony; and, as he paced the room, he said, "How can I ever meet my child in heaven, such a sinner as I am? and yet I have promised to meet him there. Oh, how can I keep my word?"

His hands were busy all day; many cares pressed upon his mind, but the recollection of his promise followed him wherever he went, and in all he did, "How can I keep my word? 'What must I do to be saved?' 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' So, then, the ability is not in myself. 'When we were yet without strength, Christ died for the ungodly.'" Then came the cry, "Lord, help me to keep my word. Lord, help me to trust in Him who died for the ungodly;" and He who always hears the cry of the contrite, heard that prayer, and the father went on his way rejoicing in Christ.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

We invite the special attention of our readers to this week of special prayer, to be observed during next week, viz., from 7th to 13th inst., inclusive.

It was announced in our columns at the end of November last, and we trust that, ere this time, friends throughout the country have made their arrangements for its observance as far as possible. If, by any means, it has been overlooked, there is still time to organize efforts to join in this important work. In our last week's number a correspondent writes some weighty words on this subject, which Christians generally would do well to consider carefully and prayerfully. We look for rich showers of blessing on the young women of our land, in answer to the volume of united prayer that will ascend to our loving Father next week. Let us join effort to believing prayer.

BIARRITZ.—A correspondent, writing from Biarritz, in response to a paragraph in our issue of Jan. 14, would be glad to communicate with the writer of it, with a view to co-operation in gospel work. Address, W. Rooksby, Maison Vaureal, Biarritz, France.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY IN BIRMINGHAM.

My dear Sir,—I feel constrained to bear my humble testimony to the great and blessed work which it has pleased God to carry on for the last fortnight in Birmingham, through the instrumentality of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It seems to me they have been raised up of God, and endowed with special gifts and power to accomplish a mighty revival, throughout some of the leading cities and towns of our United Kingdom. To the Lord Jehovah be all the praise,—even as they themselves delight to ascribe it! and now to thousands in our great midland metropolis, and its suburbs, the great and looked for blessing has come. Not without much prayer and effort beforehand; for there has undoubtedly been daily and fervent supplications at the throne of grace for these promised “showers of blessing.” And now, amidst all the cavil of unbelief, and other opponents, thousands can testify, day by day, to the reality and power, and widely spreading and deepening blessing upon their souls. Sinners have been converted to God, and believers edified. Whole congregations, both in churches and chapels, have felt its animating power. The clergy and ministers of various denominations have rejoiced together in this blessed work of the Lord, and felt its quickening influence. Many of the Lord’s servants have met together for the first time, and felt their hearts drawn out in brotherly love and sympathy, enabling them to overlook various minor differences of creed and church government.

The noon-day prayer-meeting was first held in the Town-hall, which large building was filled long before the appointed hour. A very solemn and prayerful spirit seemed to pervade the masses—the stillness was quite impressive, and the great bulk of the people seemed to enter most deeply into the importance and solemnity of the occasion. The numbers at the noon-day prayer-meeting were probably quite 3000. Afterwards it was changed to Bingley Hall, where thousands more might be accommodated.

The afternoon Bible-reading is also well attended, and greatly enjoyed by many. The evening meetings have gone on, steadily increasing, until at length I suppose some 15,000 must have been congregated together. The attention of these great masses (assembled an hour before the time) was well sustained by singing—and, as a brother clergyman said to me, on the platform, “we never heard such singing of the good Old Hundredth Psalm before, and probably may never hear the like again.”—as it burst forth from the hearts and lips of this vast assemblage. Oh! it was a touching sight, and a telling sound—such as Birmingham itself had never witnessed before—15,000 met together, night after night, to listen to the loving, sympathizing, fervent preaching of JESUS CHRIST, the Saviour of sinners! And the audience felt it! The Holy Spirit of God seemed working in our midst—alike on preacher and hearers—and many were the hearts moved.

At 7.30 Messrs. Moody and Sankey entered the building. The service began by singing, then prayer was offered, another hymn or two were sung, a portion of Holy Scripture read, another hymn, and then followed the address. Numerous anecdotes were related, as if not only to illustrate certain points, but also to rivet the attention, and then, as the preacher’s heart and tongue seemed set on fire, all these little adjuncts were submerged in the one glowing, burning theme—salvation for lost sinners—yea, a present and immediate salvation for every one that believeth in Jesus! As I sat near the preacher, I could read the meaning of the big drops upon his brow, and how his whole frame was moved, not with selfish passions, seeking personal admiration, but steeped in the love and the spirit of his Master. One great object was kept steadily in view—the glory of God in the salvation of sinners through Jesus Christ, and the intense longing that thousands might share with him the blessings and the joys of THIS GREAT SALVATION! Almost breathless stillness chained the audience, Numbers stayed for the after-meetings; the females in the side galleries, the males in the Scotch Church adjoining. On the first Monday evening Mr. Moody himself undertook the men, but finding the numbers so large, he sent up to the platform for assistance. Undoubtedly personal interviews are the best.

We have reason to believe that many found pardon and peace in Jesus, and are spreading their happy and holy influences around. The singing appeared to be improving night after night, as the vast masses gradually learned the tunes and hymns. Mr. Sankey’s solos were powerfully and sweetly sung, and his clear utterance and distinct enunciation of syllable after syllable gave a great effect and pathos to the whole.

Many of my own people are deeply interested, and though our parish is a suburb four miles from Birmingham, numbers continually attend; rich and poor seem thoroughly to appreciate and enjoy it. I have also noticed clergymen coming in from all parts.

And on Tuesday, Jan. 26, the day of the convention, it was supposed that from one to two thousand ministers of various denominations attended the gathering, which began that day at ten o’clock, and continued till four p.m. Truly it was a great evidence of the divine blessing, as the delegates from Edinburgh, and Dublin, and other cities, told how the work was still progressing in their respective cities, after Messrs. Moody and Sankey had left, and in some places ripening in a most marvellous manner. Indeed, a letter reached me only yesterday, telling me of a brother clergyman in Dublin, who had a list of sixty persons in his congregation, who had apparently been brought to Christ through attending the meetings of Moody and Sankey. The following conversation took place last Saturday, in my own study, as a staunch supporter of a Unitarian preacher entered the room. I inquired,

“Have you been to hear Moody and Sankey?”

“Yes, and listened with great delight. They have taken down a few shutters, and let in more light.”

“Does it not differ greatly from the preaching you have been accustomed to hear?”

“Certainly!”

“Then why go again to a Unitarian preacher?”

“I don’t intend.”

“Will you go and look out some faithful gospel ministry, and attend that?”

“I will.”

“Go, and the Lord be with you.”

I have since heard of another Unitarian being led to confess Christ, and to rejoice greatly in Him. Verily the Lord is blessing the evangelistic labours of our dear brothers in Christ—Moody and Sankey. I do not pretend to endorse every utterance, or to see with them exactly, eye to eye, on every point. But I do see, and I do greatly rejoice in their being raised up by God to proclaim, so touchingly, and so successfully, the utter ruin of sinful, fallen man, and his recovery solely through FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST!

“A COVENANT SALVATION” is dear to my own soul, and I do long to hear of every devoted minister clearly and faithfully setting forth THIS (see it fully expressed in Ephesians i., 3rd to 11th verses). But my whole heart loves Moody and Sankey for their work’s sake, and for our dear Master’s sake, and I bless God for the great refreshment He has vouchsafed to me and to many others through them! A bad influenza cold has prevented me joining them at their farewell address this evening. In compensation for this my loss, I can only lift up my heart in prayer for a rich increase of blessing upon the work, while my pen has been thus occupied in endeavouring to portray for others something of the great work the Lord is carrying on through their honoured instrumentality. Fervently praying that our gracious and covenant God may be pleased to continue to them all needful supplies of strength for their arduous labours in Liverpool and London, and “make ALL GRACE” abound towards them,—I remain, yours faithfully in Christ Jesus, CHARLES B. SNEPP,

Vicar of Perry Barr, near Birmingham.

ALL-DAY MEETING IN BIRMINGHAM.

There was no service by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Birmingham on Monday last week, as the Bingley Hall was used for John Bright's meeting with his constituents. As will be seen by a communication in another column, they held a farewell meeting at Manchester.

THE ALL-DAY CONVENTION

on Tuesday was in every way a successful meeting. It was attended by immense crowds throughout the day, and many well-known ministers and others were present from London and various towns in the provinces, as well as Scotland and Ireland. Mr. Moody presided throughout the day with his usual tact and energy.

The first hour was fitly devoted to praise, and Mr. Sankey's opening address was followed by powerful testimony to the value of the services by our brethren in Scotland and Ireland. All the speakers concurred in saying that a new song had been put into their mouths.

Mr. Moody occupied the next hour with an address on "Work;" and his trenchant words, uttered in the presence of so many Christian workers, were potent with blessing, in stimulating them to do more than ever for the Master in their widely-separated vineyards.

"How to conduct Prayer-meetings" was the next topic, and a most important one it is. We cannot better describe many of the prayer-meetings we have been accustomed to attend in past years than by comparing them to "wet blankets." They have been characterized by so much frigidity and routine, that we do not wonder the attendance has mostly been small. Mr. Moody will have done us British Christians a great and lasting service if he has been enabled so show how our prayer-meetings may be made broad and deep channels of blessing and happiness both to Christians and the careless world round about us. We look for this result.

More important, perhaps, was the subject of the next hour, "How to reach the Masses." Whoever will solve that problem will earn the unspeakable gratitude of all who sigh for the conversion of the nations to Christ. The rousing addresses of Mr. Chown, of Bradford; Mr. Newman Hall, of London; Mr. E. W. Dale, of Birmingham; Mr. Fletcher, of Dublin, and others, all men of large experience, will, we trust, have contributed somewhat to this desired end.

Mr. Moody was as practical as ever in his answers to the questions sent in; and, if those who sent them will only apply those answers, we are inclined to think the hour devoted to the "Question Drawer" will be the most fruitful of any.

In the evening a public service was held in the same place; hundreds were unable to gain admission. The Rev. Newman Hall, of London, delivered an address, earnestly entreating all present to forsake sin and come to Christ. Mr. Moody, in his discourse, urged on his hearers immediate decision for Christ.

Mr. Sankey's singing of sacred songs seems to make a deep impression upon the great congregation.

At the meeting in Bingley Hall on Friday evening, Mr. Moody said: I was very dejected last night. Our meetings have been so much blessed that an effort was put forth to get Bingley Hall for another week. When we got home last evening, we found a despatch from a gentleman, saying, we could not have the hall. I was greatly depressed, and I have been depressed all day. Now, however, I have just been told we may yet obtain the hall for another week. But the committee are wavering a little, as they have some fears the people will not come out to the meetings next week. We have had good committees wherever we have been; but we have never had a better committee than the Birmingham one, and I know they will come to a wise decision. But if you are anxious about your souls, you'll attend the meetings. We'll get several gentlemen to speak, and we hope you'll rally round them and the committee. We have had great blessings in other towns; but I think we never met with anything that came up to this—to our meetings in Birmingham. I must say I've never enjoyed preaching the gospel more than I have done since we came to Birmingham. We've reached so many people. I only wish we could have such a hall wherever we go. I think if we could only take up Bingley Hall, we would carry it round the world with us, as a place in which to preach the gospel to all men. But I would like you Birmingham people to go with us. Well, then, if we do our best to get speakers for another week, will you do your best to get hearers for the speakers?—(Many cries of "Yes," "yes.") Well, keep your promise. Why, almost any man could speak in this hall to such a meeting as this. The very sight of you is enough to make a dumb dog bark. I'll telegraph off to Liverpool and London to send us all the help they can. There will be a service on Sunday afternoon, when one of your own ministers will preach. On Monday night you'll have a thanksgiving service. Come to it to thank God for having answered our prayers to bless these meetings. Has God not answered your prayers?—(Cries of "Yes," "Yes.") Then on Tuesday we'll get some one else to speak. On Wednesday there will be the usual services in the churches and chapels. On Thursday night there will be another speaker. On Friday I will come back, on my way to Liverpool, and we'll have a meeting for all the converts. Now, let all rise who will support the committee and attend the different meetings. [Almost the entire audience stood up in response to this appeal.] Yes; the committee are quite satisfied. We'll go on then. Pray there may be hundreds and thousands converted next week. If things do not always please you, don't complain; just pray. Pray for a great blessing next week.

MR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS IN BELFAST.

The Belfast Witness of Friday last has the following:— "Mr. Guinness is, we are told, highly satisfied with the results of his present visit to Belfast. He came on a missionary tour to obtain recruits for the Training Institute in the East-end of London, of which he is director. Young men are there prepared for missionary work—prepared mentally by suitable instruction, and prepared practically by being sent to labour among the home heathen who live around the institute. The institution is non-sectarian, and sends out men anywhere and everywhere that they are applied for. Last year some were despatched to the East Indies, some to the West Indies, some to China, and some to Burmah.

"At the close of his first meeting in Belfast, Mr. Guinness asked any young men who were willing to devote themselves to God's service in the missionary cause to meet with him after the service. No fewer than twenty-one responded to the invitation, and this number has grown, till now there are somewhere about ninety, from the age of seventeen to twenty-five, who say, 'Here am I, send me.'

"This is one of the most remarkable results of the recent awakening which has yet been seen. Of course these large numbers of men will not all be accepted. They will be sifted and tested, but the fact of so many offering themselves for mission-service is something remarkable and something new in Belfast."

ALL-DAY MEETING TO BE HELD AT GLASGOW.

Monday, Feb. 8, will be the anniversary of the first meeting held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Glasgow, and those who were at the City Hall on Sabbath morning, Feb. 8, 1874, will never forget that meeting. It was a fitting prelude to the great work the Lord sent these beloved brethren to do here—a work which still continues, and shows its vigorous vitality by the new channels it has made for its flow in the Drill Hall, and other similar efforts among the lapsed masses in our city.

In thankful remembrance of what God has wrought, and to stir up to more earnest prayer and further effort, the Evangelistic Committee have resolved to observe Feb. 8 as an All-day Meeting. The services will be held in Ewing-place Church, commencing at twelve, and continuing till four. First hour, prayer; second, praise; third, work (more especially, further effort among the lapsed and ignorant); fourth, rewards. A number of our esteemed Edinburgh brethren will take part in the proceedings, and we look and pray for a great blessing on our meeting. The Rev. Mr. Adams, of Bristol, is expected to address the Converts' Fellowship Meeting in the evening.

Will your readers unite with us in asking that the Lord may be specially present; and that we may have a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost on this occasion.

JOHN E. MILLER,

Joint Secretary, United Evangelistic Committee, Glasgow, Jan. 28.

FAREWELL MEETING IN MANCHESTER.

BY REV. W. ROBINSON.

We have been favoured by Mr. Moody with another visit, the occasion of which will be learned from the following advertisement, which appeared for several days in the Manchester papers:—"Mr. Moody will (D.V.) hold a farewell meeting in the Free Trade Hall, on Monday evening next, the 25th inst., for recent converts only. Admission by ticket, which can be obtained by personal application only, at the Museum, Peter-street, every day this week, from 10 A.M. to 8 P.M."

I was able to spend the greater part of three days in the rooms where these tickets were given, and to have a brief interview with a large number of those who made application, who represented almost all ages, and every rank of life. These interviews were most interesting and profitable, and revealed an almost endless variety of circumstances in connection with our recent evangelistic services.

One of the applicants had been, till the visit of Mr. Moody, a Roman Catholic, and confessed that, up to that time, he had never read the Bible. He also said that if the priest should become aware of the change in his religious views, persecution would be his lot for some time to come.

One had been a member of a church where extreme Ritualism is practised, but expressed his intention, in future, to worship elsewhere, as such practices were no longer in harmony with his spiritual feelings and desires.

Among those to whom I spoke were several Sunday-school teachers, who confessed with regret and shame that, prior to the holding of those services, they had been "blind leaders of the blind"—had been endeavouring to teach their scholars a gospel, the "fulness of the blessing" of which they themselves had not experienced.

Amongst those who applied for tickets were three young men, genuine specimens of the working class. They were companions, and came into the room together.

I said to the first, "Can you honestly say that, by Mr. Moody's addresses, you have been led to give your heart to Christ, and have become a changed character?"

With great fervour he replied, "Thank God, I can!"

I asked, "Before these services were held, what place of worship had you been accustomed to attend?"

"None," he quickly answered; "I used to spend my Sundays in the public-house."

As I was speaking to the second, from whom I received the most satisfactory replies, the first said to me, "I fetched him to the meetings;" and whilst in conversation with the third, who proved to be an anxious inquirer, the second said, "I fetched him to the Free Trade Hall."

It was also very interesting to learn by which discourse the various applicants for tickets had been convinced of sin, and shown their need of Christ. To one the sermon on "The Blood" had been greatly blessed. In the case of others the address on "Excuses" had swept away every "refuge of lies," and led to a complete surrender of the heart to Jesus; whilst many were constrained to come on the Lord's side by Mr. Moody's powerful discourse, from the words of Elijah, "How long halt ye between two opinions?"—a discourse which will long be remembered by those who heard it.

From these interviews I also ascertained that the singing of the sacred songs by Mr. Sankey had produced a deep impression upon the hearts of a large number, some by "What will the harvest be?" others by "Nothing but leaves." One lady told me that the singing of this latter song made her thoroughly ashamed of herself, because she felt that up to that time she had brought to the Saviour no fruit—"Nothing but leaves."

On the morning of the 25th, owing to a change in the arrangements, made at the request of Mr. Moody, it was announced by advertisement and by placards that members of Christian churches and inquirers would be admitted into the hall by ticket only, and for six hours there was a constant stream of applicants for these tickets. Long before the hour at which the meeting was to commence, the spacious hall was filled; the galleries and a limited space on the floor being occupied by members of churches and inquirers, the remainder of the seats in the body of the hall having been reserved for recent converts. I have ascertained, and could give exactly the number of persons present, who had obtained admittance by converts' tickets, but, for several reasons, refrain from doing this. Many, I have reason to believe, from a variety of motives, declined to come forward and avow themselves converts. It would be a mistake also, I feel sure, to judge of the results of a work like this by numbers only. We cannot tell. God only knows to how many in and around Manchester the recent services have proved a blessing—how many persons as well as homes have, through them, been made brighter and happier.

Mr. Moody made his appearance on the platform with his accustomed punctuality. After the singing of two hymns and prayer, he opened his Bible, and began by telling the young converts that he desired to fix their thoughts upon the word "Able."

At the close of his address, and with a tremulous voice, which showed how keenly he felt the parting, Mr. Moody urged upon the converts and all, the importance of unity, and of making Christ by faith, a living, personal Friend.

The concluding prayer was offered by Mr. Moody, his words being almost choked by emotion, whilst in all parts of the hall loud sobbing could be distinctly heard. "I will not say Farewell," he added, "but Good-night; we shall meet in the morning, in the brighter and better world above." He then hastily left the platform and the hall, feeling himself quite unequal to the task of going through the farewell scenes which would have taken place had he delayed his departure.

Thus ended a meeting, the pleasant and happy recollections of which will linger long in the memories of many, and thus came to a close a series of evangelistic services, for which very many will doubtless thank God so long as they live on earth, and through all eternity.

St. Clement's, Manchester.

FADELESS LEAVES.

BY MRS. MEREDITH.

What is a man's leaf, to which the promise, "His leaf also shall not wither," refers? It cannot be his act or deed, for this is distinctly called his "fruit." May we not apply the metaphor of the leaf to the word spoken, which is used by the Spirit unto salvation; for instance, the evangelists' "addresses," as we call them? The words may be meagre, ill chosen, ungrammatically applied, badly pronounced, tautological, and without trope or illustration, but if they are the vehicle of God the Holy Ghost, they never fall to the ground and die. Repetition of them never wearies. They are the old, old story, ever new to some soul, always sweetest to those who have the most frequently heard them.

However often Mr. Moody has repeated his simple, clear statements of the work of Christ, and Mr. Sankey has sung the song he loves all songs above, of "Jesus and his glory, of Jesus and his love," their expressions never become tiresome, nor pall on the most fastidious ear which is attuned to the melody of grace. The miracle of fadelessness is wrought upon them.

Some people tell me that they have heard every word both these servants of God have uttered in public in Sheffield, and that they would gladly hear all, without one single omission, over and over again. They would even be glad to follow the preachers to Birmingham and elsewhere, and sit under the same sounds, without any addition or alteration, for almost any length of time.

This is a testimony to fadelessness by those who have long had the substance in them of that same tree which grows by the rivers of water.

"I shall never forget those words—no, never! They will live in my memory while I have a brain." So said one who sat next me at a meeting, and I, for a moment, envied her. It is a sensation that no one can describe, and that none can twice experience—that influx of sudden light, joy, and peace, which springs from a word dropped right into the heart. To some of us it happened so long ago, that it seems to have occurred in ages and ages past, and almost to have become a fossil in our lives, its memory only a specimen of a period now replaced by a new formation. But the sight of the new birth brings to light this hidden treasure, and revives the rapture of other days, and shows us that the words of life are true immortelles—the fadeless leaves of our great branch from the Stem of the tree of life.

It is the experience of a great many persons—in fact, of an overwhelming majority of those who have the most frequently heard Messrs. Moody and Sankey—that there is a speciality in their practical, downright, business-like way of winning souls, that prevents their course from becoming tedious.

"These men go to work to attain an object, and never cease until they accomplish it," said a man of eminence in the commercial circle of this town; and he added, "It is the only way to do any business; no wonder they succeed. Fine fellows; I can't help respecting them, though I don't hold with their particular line."

"Will you not let them practise their particular line of business on you?"

"I should not wonder if I do, some day. They'll be in London, I have no doubt, and I'll go to hear them there, if I can manage it. You see, I am so well known here, I don't care to have it said that I am admiring their gospel. As a man of the world, I should say they'll have a better chance of us in London than anywhere."

"But suppose you don't get this chance, as you call it. They won't suffer—you'll be the eternal loser."

"I can't say any more than I have granted. It is wonderful the spell they exercise; I acknowledge that it does surprise me to see — and — and — crushing and squeezing into the Albert Hall, enduring night after night such a stifling crowd, when, if it is gospel they want, they can have it at their dead ease from the vicar. He's as good as these men, only he has not got this attraction—this thing—whatever it is. London is the place—yes, London! We won't be marked out there, and we shall have plenty of room. Ay! I'll hear them in London."

No doubt many are saying this in Birmingham, and in Liverpool too. Then let us pray that the Lord may grant London this visit, and may make it easy for these rich men to come up to hear. Let them have the desire to quit their merchandise, and take to their chariot—made comfortable with all Pullman's appliances for travelling without trouble—and then may some Philip be sent to join himself to them, and bring their minds to understand what they hear.

For several hours lately I conversed in a train with a lady, who, though she was going home to Sheffield, and had a large circle of friends there, had not heard of the two preachers who were then labouring in that town, nor had seen any notice of their work elsewhere. Let us hope that this case is almost unique in Great Britain now.

I have been privileged to receive some letters from some who gathered fadeless leaves in the Albert Hall. One says, "I never knew the exact truth that all is done for my salvation. Jesus did it all. I understood it best from the way the singing put it. May I ask you to return thanks for me when you think of what I have learned—no, not even learned; I am not able to do that. It was just a gift of sudden knowledge that made me at once and for ever perfectly happy. I agree with you; the words that reached me are 'fadeless leaves.'"

Another said, "I want Mr. Moody to know that I am sorry I was so rude to him at first, as not to sit down, and let him speak to me. In a few minutes I was changed, and wanted to go over and over again the good news. Pray that I may not lose it—that I may not fall back, and forget this great peace."

What a pleasant thought it is to connect the words of the conversation referred to here with fadeless leaves! "They can never perish." Memories and all, they will endure beyond sun and moon. "It is life everlasting to hear the glad sound."

One more told me she had a terrible dread of herself. "I have reason to hate and fear myself, I am so bad."

"But you can take hold of the 'free from the law' condition."

"Oh yes; 'Jesus hath bled, and there is remission.' How delightful to know that this is not a mere 'Moody and Sankey' hymn, but a truth from the Book of God, his own very word, and that's why I love it, and why I shall never forget it—no, never."

In closing this hasty notice of what came to my knowledge in connection with the work in Sheffield, I feel I must add a word that may help friends to trust the Lord Jesus with their health. The wet day's ramble, an account of which I sent you, was begun when I had a really bad cold, and had lost my voice. Its close found me quite restored, instead of worse. The same One who said unto me, "Go out," gave me healing and cure while I was in the very midst of adverse circumstances. I increasingly perceive that, when the Lord needs us to have bodily strength, He gives it for the occasion. I also learn daily that people find it difficult to cast the burden of health on the Lord, and to be careful for nothing in this matter above all.

SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, AROUSE THEE!

WAR SONG FOR THE CHURCH.

Soldier of the Cross, arouse thee!
Lift the blood-stained banner high;
'Tis no time for fear or fainting,
See thy Captain still is nigh.

Onward, onward, thou art marching,
'Midst the dying and the dead;
Lift thy voice, proclaim His merit,
Who to save His people bled.

Let no other theme entice thee,
Lest thy labours should be vain;
For the Spirit blesses only
Those who Jesus' love proclaim.

'Mid the noise and din of battle,
Pressed by foes who often boast,
They shall conquer; see exalted
Jesus rules the struggling host.

Therefore let no foe appal thee,
Yield no single inch of ground;
Steady, onward, press, and struggle;
All who conquer shall be crowned.

See the troops of hell dispersing;
On his white horse comes thy Lord,
Crowned with many crowns—adore Him,
Strong His arm, and sharp His sword.

Gather round Him, forward with Him!
Share His conquest and His fame;
Faint not, fight on, still proclaim Him,
Till all lands shall laud His name.

Then when all His will's accomplished,
All His saints around His throne,
Thou shalt hear the gladd'ning welcome,
Well done, soldier, welcome home.

FIELD-LANE RAGGED-SCHOOLS.—There is a great lack of teachers for the Sunday and Friday evening Bible-classes in connection with this Mission, so much so that the work is seriously hindered. Will any of our readers in that neighbourhood, whose hearts the Lord has touched with love to Him and his blessed service, volunteer to supply this lack? The superintendent will be happy to welcome them if they apply at the schools in Little Safron-hill, Farringdon-road, E.C. "Work, for the night is coming."

THE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

There is no question that the Scottish Episcopal churches in Edinburgh have been moved by the Mission-week which was held here, and which closed in the beginning of last week. Numbers of anxious inquirers were conversed with in several of the places of worship. We quote the following from a contemporary:—

"With somewhat mingled feelings we refer to the Mission services which were held last week by the Scottish Episcopal Church in Edinburgh. We cannot but rejoice that, to many immortal souls in all ranks, Christ has been preached earnestly. We cannot but regret that this has not been in all cases with equal purity of doctrine. And it is difficult to know how to characterize a movement which undoubtedly preaches Christ, but in which also the Church—nay, a section of the Church—is practically placed between our souls and Him."

Except that Mr. Pigou exhorted the many converts whom, at his closing address, he said he saw around him, to be frequently at the Communion, he did not differ much from those evangelists whom we are accustomed to see blessed. The addresses were full of reference to the power of the Holy Ghost, the free offer of eternal life on the spot through the Son of God, and the necessity of separation from the world in its amusements. He said he had never seen more satisfactory results of a Mission-week. There were traces of strong emotion carefully suppressed, and deep anxiety lest those he was about to leave should be entangled by any snare, or hindered from telling the love of Jesus wherever they should go. The uselessness, and worse, of the sacraments to dead souls was insisted on. "Would you offer a piece of bread to a dry bone?" he said.

At the All Saints' service, where there were not many listeners on the Friday evening, there was nothing but naked Romanism. The address resembled the declamation of an Italian monk in Passion-week. The sufferings of the Saviour were dwelt on with a minuteness more fitted to distress than impress the mind, and at such length as to weary it out unprofitably. Then just when the harangue might have tended to arrest some, the sacrifice of the Eucharist intercepted the Saviour from the eye.

The attendance at the Southminster Theatre was very large. A most interesting class of inquirers were conversed with last Sabbath evening. The addresses had been full of point and power. The breakfast for the poorest in the morning had been so largely attended, that the young had to be drafted off to the St. Giles Working Men's refreshment rooms. The latter place was also well filled in the evening by the class most longed for, and the services in all of these were highly encouraging. A poor man who had walked from Newcastle presented himself at the breakfast ten days ago, and found Jesus there. He was soon after seized with illness, and lies dying in one of the wards of the infirmary, trusting in the Lord. He wrote to the manager of the refreshment rooms to tell of the good he had got, and asking that one of the gentlemen might come to visit him.

The mothers'-meeting has been tried by the sudden removal of one of its most fervent leaders, Mrs. Campbell. She held a meeting for women on the Monday, and before the week ended was, with little suffering to herself, received into the presence of the Lord. Quite lately she was in her place amongst us, it being her turn to conduct it, according to the alphabetical list.

The Rev. W. Scott Moncrieff, of Edinburgh, in a letter to the Record, has the following respecting the Mission mentioned in Mrs. Barbour's letter:—

"Every night except Tuesday I attended St. John's Church, when Mr. MacLagan, Mr. Kennion, and Mr. Mathews were the missionaries, and at the special request of Dr. Sandford, the Incumbent, I remained after the service to assist in dealing with the many inquirers who were invited to stay. The congregations were very large, including many members of the different Presbyterian Churches. The service was short, simple earnest, and thoroughly evangelical, the preaching most tender and faithful. I never heard more effective evangelistic addresses. It was something new and strange to hear fervid extemporaneous prayers and warm heartrousing appeals in that fashionable church. The conversations I had with the inquirers, as I went from pew to pew, showed me that the Spirit of God had indeed been amongst us, causing his word to penetrate many hearts. The Bishop assisted the missionaries in dealing with the inquirers. He, like the rest of us, was going from one to another amongst them...."

VISITING THE POOR.

The absence of the working classes from public worship must strike every thoughtful observer. Even where they form the great bulk of the population, the attendance is in meagre proportion, and bears no comparison whatever to the numbers remaining away. Church-going is almost confined to the upper and middle classes, who rightly regard it as a matter of great importance.

In dealing with the working classes, however, on this subject, the mistake is very commonly made of treating persons who are not open to persuasion on the point as if they were outside the pale of salvation altogether, without ever examining whether there may not be in such cases circumstances which render regular attendance at church exceedingly difficult, if not quite impossible.

A fact or two, which may be tested by any one in any neighbourhood, may go far to guard against this mistake on the part of those who desire the spiritual welfare of their poorer brethren.

We determined to visit a cottager as the bells were inviting us to a comfortable seat in church. He has the character of being an inveterate neglecter of God's house, and we were led to expect rather a rough reception, having been strangers to the man. He was seated at the fire, several children scrambling for a place in "daddy's lap." His wife was engaged preparing the dinner. With judicious ceremony we gain admission, and at once interest the man by interesting one of the little ones in an illustrated paper, and were thus masters of the situation at once. What folly it would have been to have upbraided the man for not being at church, when such an opportunity presented itself of speaking of those things "which angels desire to look into." He and his wife listened attentively, and received our papers most gladly; so that we doubt not there was an impression created, and, with the divine blessing, it may bring forth fruit. This man had been given up because he either would not or could not attend church.

The man told us—and it is the case with hundreds of others—he goes to work every day before daybreak, does not return until it is quite dark; his dinner is sent to him, which he receives cold; and Sunday is the only day he can either see his wife or children by daylight, or get a warm dinner.

The writer makes no plea for the deliberate neglect of religious exercises, or for self-indulgence on Sunday; but he asks those whose every want is cared for to think gently of those who are here described, and be not so narrow-minded as to think their Sunday lost or misspent by visiting such cases, to tell of Him who "dwelleth not in temples made with hands." In occupation of this kind there will be found some difficulties, without, however, many of the temptations and distractions inseparable from public gatherings, wherever held. B.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION AT CHOWBENT, LANCA-SHIRE.—This Mission is unsectarian, and intended to gather in those who attend no Sabbath-school or place of worship. It has proved a blessing to many. The workers are most anxious to preserve the young in the paths of temperance, and reclaim others who have fallen. Some interesting anniversary services were held lately, and much testimony given of blessing received both by old and young. At present the meetings are held in a warehouse that is in use during the week, and this necessitates the removal of the goods every time the services take place. It is intended to raise a suitable building in the course of the spring months, so that it may be available every evening. Help towards this object is still needed. Donations will be thankfully received by James Rawlinson, Market-place, Chowbent.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN RUSSIA.

Dear Sir,—Whilst your readers, in common with all in this land who labour, and watch, and pray for the coming of the kingdom of our blessed Lord, are greatly cheered by the great blessing which the Holy Spirit is pouring out, through the instrumentality of our American brethren here, there is a fear that many fail to observe the less marked manifestation of gospel progress in other parts of the world. I should like to call the attention and bespeak the prayers of Christians here to the work of the Lord in Russia, a country which has lately become specially interesting to us through the marriage of its imperial daughter to our royal prince. And I am the more induced to do so by the impression that, from a religious point of view, Russia is to the British Christian almost a terra incognita.

You are probably aware that the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews had been endeavouring, for the last twenty years, to obtain permission to locate Jewish missionaries among the upwards of three millions of Jews resident in Russia and Poland, but that all such attempts had ended in failure, the law of the land stringently excluding all foreign missionaries from the empire. Last November, however, the Society above-named deputed myself and their Clerical Secretary, Rev. F. Smith, to proceed to St. Petersburg, to make another effort in this direction. Through the earnest efforts of friends there, who had for some time been interested in the work of the Bible-stand, the special object of our mission was placed before persons of high influence and authority, and so effectually pleaded for, that we fully succeeded, and obtained permission, and the sanction of the Emperor, for missionaries to be sent to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation among the descendants of Abraham in that vast empire.

When we consider that, in the dominions of the Emperor of Russia, there are nearly as many Jews as in the whole of the world besides, ought we not, with a loud voice, to bless the name of the Lord, for the wide door being opened for the gospel of Jesus Christ. I might mention, by way of illustration of the above fact, that in Warsaw there are at the present time about 90,000 Jews, about double the number of their co-religionists in England.

During my stay in the capital, I was rejoiced to find that many Russian Christians were actively engaged in various ways in making known the unsearchable riches of Christ among their countrymen. One feature of the work is remarkable, namely, that most of the efforts to spread the gospel in its simplicity and purity are made by ladies of the highest social position and refined culture. Foremost among these "honourable women" is her Imperial Highness, the Princess Eugenie d'Oldenburg, niece of the Emperor, and cousin to our Duchess of Edinburgh. This exalted lady devotes her rare ability to the good of others, and is known and loved as the true guardian of the poor. She not only devotes herself to the organization and direction of numerous charitable institutions, such as the Society for aiding Discharged Prisoners, the Institution for Training Hospital Nurses, etc., but she visits the hospitals and prisons, and distributes the Scriptures to the inmates. The princess has also translated some English tracts into Russ, and has them scattered far and wide. She graciously sent for me, and inquired particularly as to the work of the free distribution of the Scriptures in Roman Catholic countries, which seemed to be a work of special interest to her. I was very much struck by her unaffected piety and gentle demeanour. At the Paris Exhibition she had herself received one of the Gospels from our Bible kiosk, and now she aids in prosecuting the same blessed work in her own land.

The following letter, addressed by her Highness to our committee some time since, will show her appreciation of our work in Russia:—

"To the Committee of the Bible-stand, Crystal Palace.

"It is with true joy that I have received the copy of the Holy Scriptures which you have kindly sent me through Count Korff. I have heard much of your work, and know with what zeal you are spreading the good seed. It is indeed necessary to attract souls to Christ, and to live in Him, for I am persuaded that only those who have accepted Christ as their Saviour can do any real good to their fellow-creatures. The copy of the Bible will always be to me a souvenir of your good work, so beloved by all Christians.

(Signed) "EUGENIE PRINCESS D'OLDENBURG.

"St. Petersburg, Oct. 25, 1874."

It would occupy far too much of your space to detail the particulars of many of the excellent plans of Christian usefulness pursued by the Lord's servants there with which I was made acquainted. I will merely mention one or two. One lady has established a Home of Industry for Poor Women; another has instituted the first Night Refuge for the Destitute, of which hundreds avail themselves; and others have promoted and are carrying on ragged-schools. These and other similar enterprises are mostly of English birth, or at least are modelled after similar good works here, which have been visited by our Christian brethren, the Russian philanthropists.

These Russian Christians take a deep interest in all kinds of Christian work in England, and are almost as familiar with it as we ourselves are. The labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Pearsall Smith, Lord Radstock, and other evangelists, have interested them very much. For very much of this they are indebted to THE CHRISTIAN, and it seemed like meeting an old friend to find copies of your paper on the drawing-room tables of Christians in St. Petersburg.

AWAKENING AT MALVERN.

It may be well said, in the language of the holy writ, "we have seen strange things to-day." Day after day a large number of people have found their way to Emmanuel Church at noon, for the purpose of joining in prayer. No prescribed form of prayer has been used at these special services, but it has been frequently remarked how reverent, earnest, and expectant the prayers have been. Night after night the church has been attended by a steadily-increasing congregation, evidently representing all classes of the community, and the most indifferent strangers, led there solely by curiosity, could not but be affected by the deep solemnity pervading the entire assembly. We are told that when Dr. Ziemann arrived from Manchester towards the close of the meeting on Monday evening, he said that this "atmosphere" of earnest religious feeling impressed him as soon as he entered the church. Those most actively engaged in the movement have expressed their honest conviction that an effect will be witnessed in Malvern similar to that seen in Manchester and other places. And with this conviction guiding them, they have determined to continue the Mission through next week, it having been found in other places that the first week is usually one of sowing, and the succeeding weeks the time of reaping.

We did not expect that Mr. Richardson would give the sanction of his presence to any scenes of noisy and boisterous excitement, nor has this been the case: quiet solemnity and intense earnestness have characterized these services. Never, we think, will the impression be forgotten which was produced when, after a most powerful address from Dr. Ziemann, Mr. Richardson asked the whole congregation to kneel in silent prayer, and then still kneeling, the whole congregation sang with soft hushed voices, the beautiful hymn, "There are angels hovering round." We could not but feel that spiritual presences close around us were indeed waiting to carry the tidings, "Poor sinners are gathering home." There can be no doubt that the work is wonderfully helped by the part Mr. Davis has taken in it. During this week Dr. Ziemann has been the chief speaker, he being compelled, we understand, to return to his medical work in Manchester, but Mr. Davis, a true musician, has brought out by the sweetness of his touch on the American organ, and the pathos which he can throw into his voice, the full meaning of Mr. Sankey's hymns.

It is not usual to hear a minister sing to a congregation, but we think that the expression of Holy Scripture, "speaking one to another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs," may be practically interpreted by some such rendering as the one thus given. At any rate, the effect is very thrilling when at the close of an earnest address which has gone to the hearts of all, Mr. Davis sings alone some such spiritual song as the "Ninety-and-nine" or "Prodigal child, come home." We can, of course, not venture to predict what may be the ultimate result of the Mission, but we feel sure of the present effect, and shall not be surprised to hear that before the end of next week, it will be difficult to find standing room in Emmanuel Church.

Special services also are being held for the little ones, so that they are not forgotten.—Malvern Advertiser.

GOOD NEWS FROM PLYMOUTH.

Dear Sir,—I feel it is only right that I should give some account of a very blessed movement that has commenced, and is still in progress, in connection with my Sunday-school and congregation.

Not quite three weeks ago, just at the close of a series of united services, two boys from my Sabbath-school waited on me to ask if I would allow them to have a meeting for prayer. I arranged to meet with them the next (Saturday) evening in my vestry. They then told me they had found the Lord.

Percceiving in this an indication of the approach of the blessing that we have been so long praying for, I determined to announce from the pulpit the next Sabbath a series of special services. I did so. That evening one of the same boys waited on me again, just before entering the pulpit, to say there were four other boys who wished to speak with me. I told him I would be glad to see them in the vestry after the service. Instead, however, of four boys coming, six came, and these, with the two first boys, made eight, and so all, that night, professed to have found the Lord.

On Monday night, after the first special service, I intimated that I would be glad if the boys that were anxious to be spoken with would go into one vestry, and the girls into another. To my surprise, I found that in response to my very calm appeal, both vestries were crowded with weeping penitents, many of whom entered into peace that night.

And so the work has been going on from night to night, not confined to the young, but extending to parents and adults. Till now, within a period of three weeks from the commencement of the movement, I have on my books the names and addresses of 118 persons who profess to have found the Lord. This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

We make known the wonderful works of God, that praise may be given to his holy name, and that prayer may be offered that the work may grow and increase.—I am, yours truly,

J. WOOD,

HENRY MOORHOUSE IN AMERICA.

We have most gratifying accounts of the Bible-readings of Mr. Moorhouse in the United States. It seems to us an encouraging sign of the times that these meetings for the exposition of God's Word by Mr. Moody on this side, and Mr. Moorhouse on the other side of the Atlantic, have excited such a widespread interest. A correspondent, writing from Syracuse, New York, says, "No statement can represent the impression produced on the hearts of Christians there by Mr. Moorhouse's readings. In one town he was obliged to hold his services in the Opera House, as none of the church buildings were sufficiently large to contain the crowds."

The Philadelphia Sunday-school Times says:—"The London lay evangelist, Mr. Henry Moorhouse, has been electrifying our people with his eloquent exposition of the Word; he has much of Mr. Moody's power; is original, impassioned, full of force, and pours wonderful freshness, and strength, and beauty into his Bible-readings and comments."

We extract the following from the Syracuse Journal of Jan. 9:—"A great number of the people of this city have been profoundly moved during the present week, by an unpretending, simple-hearted, uneducated man. The largest church edifices have been tested to their utmost capacity by the audiences which have thronged to hear this man, and hundreds of persons have gone away because they were unable to find room. People of all denominations, and of no denominations, have sat under the spell of his utterances; and have been moved by emotions as never before moved. Bible truth has been wielded by this humble, trustful disciple of the Master with a power which can come only from the source of all power.

"The success which has attended the efforts of Harry Moorhouse proves that what the great majority of the people need, is the presentation of the truths of the Bible in the plainest, most practical manner, accompanied with illustrations which bring out great central ideas in bold relief, so that they become, as it were, visible realities photographed indelibly upon the heart. Indeed, is it not possible that the preaching of the present day contains too few seed-thoughts, and too much ornamentation? May it not be that the tendency of the theological schools is too much towards learned disquisition, and too little towards such preaching as the masses need; too much towards human dogmas, and too little towards the plain declarations of the Bible? We do not pretend to be able to answer these questions authoritatively. But we know this to be a fact; there are large numbers of well-educated ministers all over the Christian world who do not reach the masses of the people, and who cannot reach them with their preaching, and yet such men as Harry Moorhouse and D. L. Moody, speak to those masses and sway them as by divine power for good."

FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.

The calamity of famine in Asia Minor, where thousands of our fellow-creatures have already perished through a failure of the crops, and where multitudes more are sure to die unless large and prompt assistance be forthcoming, constitutes a claim of such urgency as to call for aid, even at the expense of some real self-denial to the givers. Parents there are selling their emaciated children to obtain food; and extreme misery is widely extending throughout that great peninsula.

Its scriptural associations should deepen the interest of Christians in its need, especially as being the land where the apostle Paul, of Tarsus, was born, and whence, sailing from Troas, he brought the gospel to our Europe. Amongst its honourable men were Timothy of Lystra, Paul's most beloved and "own son in the faith"; Epaphras of Colosse, "always labouring fervently in prayers" for his townsmen; Trophimus and Tychicus of Ephesus; Gaius of Derbe; and other of the apostle's companions. The present famine desolates regions to whose ancient people the epistles to the Ephesians, Galatians, and Colossians, and the first epistle of Peter, were written; the land also of the Seven Churches of Asia, several of whose representative towns still continue, as, for instance, Smyrna, "the Crown of Ionia," where the apostle John spent the closing years of his life.

Our common sympathies with afflicted humanity may rightly be deepened for the descendants of peoples so especially connected with New Testament history and the earliest spread of Christianity. And that glorious One, who moved as Lord in the midst of the Seven Churches, will surely regard with his favour any efforts to help their land. Contributions in aid of the sufferers may be forwarded to Mr. Joseph Beck (a member of the Common Council of the City of London), 97, Albion-road, Stoke Newington, N., who has kindly consented to take charge of them, and to apply them, through the best available channels.—I remain, sir,

A CHRISTIAN.

A "BRITISH WORKMAN" FOR NORWOOD.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your pages to make known a need which is pressing upon the hearts of some of God's people in Norwood? As in most places, public-houses abound, and, as a natural consequence, sin and vice abound also. God has put it into the hearts of some here to seek to counteract the evil now existing, and to offer the working-men a safe place of resort, free from the numerous temptations connected with the public-house; in fact, to establish what has proved such a blessing in other places, a "British Workman," i.e., a public-house without the drink.

For a long time past, such a place has been earnestly desired; but we waited to see God's will clearly in the matter, wishing only to follow his leading. It seems to us that God is now opening the way; for a chapel is just now for sale, in a good situation, and it is suggested to buy the building, and convert it into a "British Workman." This would also combine the advantages of a workmen's hall, with rooms for classes and meetings, which latter have been long needed; in fact, the work here has been suffering greatly for want of a suitable room for meetings. The present Workmen's Hall is much too small for the numbers who come in, and hardly reaches the class who frequent public-houses. It would, of course, be merged in the proposed "British Workman."

The working-men are doing all they can to help by their earnest prayers, and also by collecting funds.

Another class who would be greatly benefited by the establishment of a "British Workman," is the men-servants who come with carriages to the Crystal Palace on Saturday, and who, for want of some other place, for the most part, spend their afternoons in public-houses.

To purchase the chapel, and make the needful alterations, £1500 is needed, towards which £360 has already been promised. An appeal is being made to Norwood and its neighbourhood, but for this large sum we are obliged also to ask the help of all who are interested in the welfare of the working classes.

Commending this work to the prayers and to the liberality of your readers, I remain, yours truly,

H. S. STREATFIELD.

Hurst Lodge, Farquhar-road, Upper Norwood.

OUR ENGLISH SISTERS IN PARIS.

"Loving-kindness and tender mercy" may fitly express the Report of the Mission Home for 1874!

In dealing with work upon such untrodden ground, it would be impossible to trace the many living interests it has revealed, or the dark shadows cast by the deadly gaiety of a city which tell but too truly of its sad need, or, above all, the wondrous guiding of the strong and loving Hand which has borne its burden and supplied its need day by day, bringing the "old, old story" of a Father's faithful care into daily remembrance. Will his children pray that no want of faith may hinder the continual looking to Him to supply the many wants of the future!

The first payment on behalf of the purchase of the house was made on December 9, with true joy and thankfulness of heart, securing it as a Home for English girls for ever! The next is due (£2800, with interest) on March 9th; and the third, June 9th.

Looking at the need, heart must fail; but gathering strength from the experience of the past, and looking beyond it to Him who is a Great King, not straitened in his gifts, and can meet it all in a kingly way, one may well ask, "Is there anything too hard for the Lord?"

The Sunday Bible-readings at the Young Women's Christian Association Rooms, 88, Faubourg Saint Honoré, where food is freely provided for those who have to find their own upon that day, continue to be greatly blessed. From eighty to one hundred pass through these rooms every Sunday. Some new faces are constantly being welcomed there, glad to escape the strange loneliness of the crowded boulevards. One of the lady helpers of the Home is now resident at these rooms, and devotes her time in visiting during the week. Much prayer is asked that she may bring in many souls to Jesus.

The labours of the Mission nurse have been greatly blessed, and are widely needed. It is hoped they may be supplemented by increased lady helpers at the Home during the coming year. The sickness, and too often death, amongst English girls, before one has time to visit them, is sad, and the difficulty of finding out where they are, very great.

One, in the hospital of the Salpêtrière, had never even had an inquiry after her since she was taken there from the shop where she worked in the Rue St. Honoré, four years ago!

Very recently another, who had separated herself in early life from her family to embrace Roman Catholicism, sent to the Home to be visited, not feeling saved, although she had twice received extreme unction, when supposed to be dying. Her hot, feverish hands grasped that of the one who visited her, and with that searching look which they in sight of eternity only can give; "Tell me," she asked, "tell me, is believing in Christ sufficient? Is it what you are trusting to? They tell me to do so many things!"

Few moments were felt to be more blessed in realizing the great Teacher to be near, as those in which this dying one was simply pointed from the weary "many; hinges," which exhausted her fast ebbing life, to the "rest;" of the Mediator between God and man—Jesus! He who had been watching the lifelong struggle to earn peace, graciously responded to the faint grasp of the dying girl, and led her to his Father's house in peace.

Inquiries were made ere leaving the hospital if any other sick English girls were there. "Yes; three had been in the same étage—Annette, a girl of seventeen, who danced at the 'Gaiety,' close by; but she was dead!" "Did any one visit her?" "No." So poor Annette, who, doubtless, had many to welcome her at the "Gaiety," passed away without one to welcome her to Jesus!

The same inquiry was made in another part of this large hospital. "Yes; there had been two English in that wing; Mais, madame, vous êtes arrivés trop tard; elles sont mortes!" Another, who was found dying of consumption in her attic in the cité Pigalle, upon the comforts produced at the cost of pledged clothing, was brought from it to the Home to learn of Jesus. She had left her home eleven years ago, through a family quarrel, and came to Paris as a governess. Feeling her heavenly Father's forgiveness so sweet, she longed to be at peace with those left of her early home, and to die amongst them. Her yearning was so intense, that, although the cords which bound her to life were so fragile that it was feared they might snap in the effort, it was felt right not to refuse her request. She was taken to London, where a relation promised to receive her. She did so, but in a few hours told her that she could not die there! and sent her alone, propped with pillows, in a cab to her father, a man holding a respectable position in the City, who told her, and the lady who followed to make inquiries after her, that he "could not recognise her in her destitute condition, and that she could not come there!" The dying one returned to her cab, to seek more mercy from an old school friend. Neither could she help!

Here the lady who brought her from Paris and the dying girl met. This yearning to lay her head in peace amongst those who had once loved her, was her last earthly clinging, and it had failed her. "Only Jesus is left to me now!" she exclaimed. Truly, none else cared to own her!

Very weary, she was taken to Guy's Hospital, where she soon passed beyond the reach of man's forgiveness, and with "only Jesus," entered the land where the inhabitants shall not say, "I am sick," where the most destitute are welcome, and sin and want are no more.

Will his children pray for a large outpouring of the Spirit of Him

"Who did not send, but came Himself to save;
He—did not lend, but—gave!"

ADA M. LEIGH.

AWAKENING AT KILBRIDE, IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to give a word of encouragement to those ministers who desire to have, but as yet have not had, a great ingathering of souls from their own parishes or congregations?

This has been a very dead parish, and for the two years that I have been located here, I have earnestly and believingly prayed for an awakening. Since the blessing I received at the memorable Oxford Conference, my longing for souls has been intense. For the last three months we have held a prayer-meeting after our Sunday evening service. At this meeting extracts were read from THE CHRISTIAN, and God was asked to do the same for us as He had done elsewhere. And now the answer has come. God has done more than we dared to expect.

I called upon the Wesleyan minister, and asked him to unite with us during the Week of Prayer; and this he readily consented to do, on my agreeing to meet for another week in his schoolroom.

The interest deepened, and the numbers increased night after night, until the whole neighbourhood seemed to be stirred to either sympathy with or opposition to the movement.

On the last evening of the meetings many were obliged to go away, unable to gain admission. Addresses were delivered by local ministers and laymen, and the touching hymns used by Mr. Sankey were heartily sung. Deep earnestness and solemnity pervaded the gatherings, and the numbers that attended the after-meetings increased night after night, until they reached upwards of 100. The parish is small, but it was said that scarcely a house was unrepresented.

The most unlikely characters were brought under conviction. Two young men left the meeting one night, and spent till one o'clock in the morning in the fields, crying for mercy, which they found before the dawn. Another young man, a sad profligate, after he had found peace, exclaimed, with clasped hands, and eyes suffused with tears, "Oh the love of that Jesus to save me!"

On the Sunday following the fortnight's meetings, a thanksgiving service was held in the parish church, when a special sermon was preached to young converts on Gal. v. 1. The Lord's Supper was then administered to all who wished publicly to testify that they were on the Lord's side.

More than half of the congregation remained to partake of the memorials of their precious Saviour's death.

The number of those who professed to have found the Saviour during the past few weeks must be at least sixty.

Our hearts are overflowing with gratitude to God for the "strange things we have seen to-day." We stand amazed at the wonders He has wrought, and believe this is but the beginning of still greater things. The work is telling, not only upon the general public, but upon our Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, and Young Men's Association; and some are already coming forward to offer to do something for Jesus.

May this record of events I have faintly endeavoured to describe be the means of encouraging others to pray and labour with expectation for similar results, without waiting for evangelists to come and stir up their parishes and congregations!—Yours truly,
W. T. McCORMICK,
Jan. 25. Incumbent of Kilbride, Arklow.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

The Committee of this Society have arranged for a special Mission for the poor outcast women of Wapping, Shadwell, and the neighbourhood, where so many wretched outcasts commit suicide in despair, and are thus lost for time and eternity. It is hoped that by this effort the gospel of glad tidings will be proclaimed to all.

At the meetings to be held in connection with this effort, it is proposed to distribute gratuitously a copy of St. John's Gospel to every unfortunate, and also a copy of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hymn-book.

Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN make this effort a subject of special prayer? And contributions of the Gospel and the hymn-book will be most acceptable, and can be forwarded to the office of the Society, 8a, Red-lion-square, W.C.

A PORTABLE WINTER TENT.

Mr. John Hamblton has just returned from Barrow-in-Furness, which is a good field for evangelistic work, and where many souls have come to Christ during the last ten days.

In a letter received from him, after remarking that many evangelists are tempted to build expensive brick or stone houses, often landing themselves in debt, and thus destroying much of their power for testimony, he says:—

"The best thing for winter work that I have seen is a wooden tent, lately put up by a gentleman at St. Helen's, Lancashire, where many souls were gathered from the masses of that town during last summer. John Vine's canvas tent was blown down during the October gales, but it has been replaced in another part of the town by one made of wood, bolted and screwed together completely, and so cheap that it would be worth the expense of the railway fare to go and look at it, for those who contemplate building gospel halls."

Mr. Hamblton gives us a very minute description of the wooden tent, for which we have not space, but we doubt not he will be glad to communicate the details to any one interested in the erection of buildings for evangelistic services. His address is, 40, Menzies-street, South-hill-road, Toxteth Park, Liverpool.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—To all Friends Interested in the Welfare of Seamen.—The directors present an urgent appeal to all interested in British shipping, and in the welfare and evangelization of seamen. This Society was established more than fifty years since, and is based upon broad, unsectarian principles. It employs thirty-nine agents, who befriend sailors in every possible way at twenty-six ports in the United Kingdom, as well as at those of Antwerp, Genoa, Hamburg, and Malta; and in fourteen of these ports institutes or reading-rooms are provided. A central institute is maintained at Shadwell, in which all seamen have free access to a library, reading-room, coffee-room, lecture-hall, and savings'-bank. There is also an excellent nautical school. Ship libraries for the use of the crews are placed, without charge, on board foreign-going vessels. While the annual income of the society greatly needs enlargement, the sum of from £600 to £700 is immediately required to put the Institute at Shadwell into thorough repair, which it now greatly needs, and to meet special liabilities incurred during the current year. Contributions may be forwarded to the office of THE CHRISTIAN; to the Society's credit at the Consolidated Bank; or to Thomson Hankey, Treasurer, Bank of England.

TEN DAYS' MISSION AT BRIGHTON.

The subjoined notice of the closing meeting of this successful Mission appears in the Brighton Daily News:—

"The interior of the Brighton Dome seldom, if ever before, presented a spectacle similar to that of last night. It was the close of the St. Margaret's Church Mission Services of the past twelve days; and there the concluding service took place. It was not the attendance which was of so signal a character, although that could not have been larger, nor was it the service proper which was of so unusual a nature. The after-proceedings were those which constituted a scene probably unprecedented within the Pavilion grounds. The stirring sermons of the Mission preacher, the Rev. W. H. Aitken, his earnestness, zeal, and vigour, and the rumours abroad that under his ministry the ranks of unbelievers in Brighton had been palpably reduced, attracted thousands of persons to the Dome last evening to hear his farewell address, and perchance see some tokens of his labours. In every part the Dome was crowded at eight o'clock; even standing room was at a premium, and very shortly afterwards could not be had. The crowd upon the platform composed a number of the clergymen and ministers of the town, and many of the leading evangelical residents.

"The Rev. Filmer Sullivan, the pastor of St. Margaret's Church, presided, and was immediately supported by the Rev. Mr. Aitken, the Rev. D. F. A. Grahame (the curate of St. Margaret's), and the Rev. A. B. Mackay, of the Presbyterian Church in Church-street. All these took an active part in the first part of the proceedings. The Rev. Filmer Sullivan was the first to engage in prayer, after an opening hymn had been sung. The Rev. Mr. Aitken then delivered a long address, with wonted vigour and impressiveness.

"A request of an unusual character was made by him. He asked all those present who had been induced to believe in Christ as a consequence of the Mission services, to stand up and confess their Lord by singing, "Safe in the arms of Jesus." Between three and four hundred responded to the appeal. During the singing of two or three subsequent hymns, those who did not wish to remain while the second part of the proceedings was being conducted, left the building. Many hundreds, if not above a thousand, still remained. Then was the spectacle witnessed which was so novel to the Dome. Small groups were voluntarily formed. Several engaged in quiet but earnest conversation; others knelt and prayed together. Active Christians found abundant work in striving to bring that mental peace and joy which they themselves experienced to many more. Conspicuous among the zealous workers were a non-commissioned officer of the Scots Greys, who is also known in scientific circles, and a comrade from a Kentish town. Just before midnight the company assembled in front of the platform, and listened to a few parting words from the Rev. Mr. Aitken. He thanked his Christian friends for the support they had accorded him during the Mission-week, and particularly the Rev. Filmer Sullivan, who had been his special stay. The only regret appeared to be that the Mission days were closed."

The Rev. Filmer Sullivan writes to us respecting this Mission:—

"Having asked the prayers of the Lord's people for this Mission, I would now ask them to praise God for the abundant blessing He has poured forth. We asked much, and I trust expected much, but He has far exceeded it in the giving. Our dear brother, Mr. Aitken, was wonderfully upheld and strengthened, and truly the power of Christ rested on him as he proclaimed the Master's message in its freeness and its fulness. Crowds flocked to the church night after night, and, though the band of workers was large, yet on some occasions there were not enough to deal with the many anxious souls at the after-meetings. At the last Wednesday evening service, during the sermon, the whole congregation rose up and sang the Te Deum, which was most impressive, and afterwards between 500 and 600 remained together round the Lord's table.

"The concluding service was held on Thursday evening, at the Dome, when nearly 4000 persons were assembled. At the after-meeting about 1000 persons remained, and, when those were asked to stand up who had been brought to the Lord during the Mission, a cloud of witnesses (numbered in the local paper at between 300 and 400) arose, thus giving their silent but eloquent testimony to that which God hath wrought in our midst.

"We continue to have large gatherings of those who have received blessing, at which Lord Radstock and Rev. G. B. Thornton have been assisting. Joy and praise are now being heard in many dwellings, and filling many hearts.

"For these great mercies we would give our God all the praise and all the glory. Continue to pray for us, that his work may go on and prosper."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

"THE HIVE" YEARLY VOL. FOR 1874. Elliot Stock.—Has well earned its claim to be "a storehouse of material for working Sunday-school teachers." It is a perfect mine of varied information, and would prove an acceptable gift to any busy teacher of the young.

THE CLEFT ROCK, AND OTHER POEMS. Macintosh.—A collection of detached pieces, characterized throughout by deep spiritual insight and true poetic feeling. They are evidently the production of one who has been made strong through suffering, and to tried and troubled hearts these sweet verses will afford divinest consolation. One beautiful piece, entitled, "The Love of Christ," and adapted to the well-known tune of "The Gates Ajar," adorned our pages some months since.

THE EXPOSITOR. Edited by Rev. SAMUEL COX, of Nottingham. Hodder and Stoughton.—A new monthly contribution to the exegetical literature of the day, and one that will speedily take a high rank. The name of the editor is in itself a tower of strength, and he is supported by others scarcely less illustrious in the field of Biblical exposition and research. A most invaluable help to all earnest students of The Book.

THE LOST SHEEP. By J. FRIEDBERG. Ranken and Co.—The Rev. Adolph Saphir, of Notting-hill, writes a preface to this narrative of twenty-one years' labour among the Jews in the East-end of London, and we cordially endorse his statement that it is "a very simple and unadorned, but most interesting and instructive account, of faithful, affectionate, wise, and persevering labour, amid trials and discouragements of no ordinary kind." Its issue is timely, and will serve to deepen the tardily awakening solicitude among Gentile Christians for the spiritual condition of that people to whom we owe so much, but for whom we have been accustomed to do so little.

RELIGION AT HOME; or, The Ark on the Hearth. By Rev. F. JONES, Curate of Whitfield, Glossop. Shaw and Co.—The author, in his preface, well says that "Home, not the State, not the Church, but Home—is the stronghold of Christianity." The book is specially written, we presume, for Church of England parents, as we find frequent references to "baptism," "confirmation," "liturgical prayers," etc., but it contains much that Christian parents of every name may very profitably read and ponder. We heartily endorse this remark about singing in the family, "None of the productions of the great composers can move me to-day like the hymns we sang at home." Mr. Jones informs the reader, in the preface, that he has "purposely been fragmentary" in the treatment of his subject, and in doing so we are disposed to think he has made a mistake. A consequent defect in the arrangement of the book is the absence of a table of contents.

YOUNG WOMEN'S HOME, 19, ARTERIAN-ROAD, WEST-BOURNE-GROVE, W.—This Home was opened by Miss Kennedy some nine years since, its object being to provide a cheap and suitable Home, with clear gospel teaching, for young girls, while seeking for situations in London. The numbers in the evening meetings have increased so rapidly, that the overcrowded state of the rooms is a great drawback to the work; for not only is it difficult to find seats for all who attend, but Miss Kennedy, whose lungs are very delicate, and those ladies who occasionally assist her, find it most trying to speak in such an atmosphere; and unless enlarged premises can soon be obtained, she fears she will have entirely to relinquish the work. The house at present occupied consists of ten small rooms, the rent being £55 per annum; and it is thought that one possessing the required accommodation might be obtained at an increased rental of £20. The sum of £50 is also needed for removal, etc. I beg earnestly to commend this labour of love to the sympathy and prayers of those of the Lord's people who are interested in the welfare of young friendless girls in this part of London, and will thankfully receive any contributions entrusted to my care.

WORKING-MEN'S LORD'S-DAY REST ASSOCIATION.

—A special meeting of members and friends of this association was held on the evening of Wednesday week, in Exeter Hall. Sir C. Reed, chairman, said that their object had been misrepresented, and they were called Sabbatarians. He did not object to the word, but he objected to its being represented that they desired to force others to a particular observance of the Sabbath. What they maintained was that the Sunday was a benefit to working-men, and they stood up in defence of keeping it for them as a day of rest. As far as he could judge, the decided opinion of the people was in favour of keeping the Sunday free from labour. Of course there were and must be exceptions, as in the case of persons engaged in navigation, in the protection of property, and in works of mercy. He did not think, however, that there was any necessity for the employ of postmen on the Sabbath. If they could do without the work of postmen in London on the Sunday, what necessity could there be for making them work in the country? But they had often to walk eight, nine, or ten miles on the Lord's-day, and with a burden as large as that which "Christian" carried on his back. He called on them not to give up the Sunday, but to preserve it for the sake of both body and soul. The meeting was then addressed by the Rev. Mr. Murphy, Mr. G. Pritchard, and others, and at its close a lecture was delivered by Mr. C. Hill, the secretary, bearing on the subject, and illustrated by dissolving views.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION, ENDELL-STREET, ST. GILES'.—The third annual report of this Christ-like institution, conducted by Dr. George Saunders, has been issued, and will be found to be of engrossing interest. It is published by Messrs. Ranken and Co., Strand, and may be had either of them, or at the Medical Mission rooms, Endell-street. The few following sentences we quote from it set forth the object of the Mission, and for the details of last year's work and fruits, we must refer our readers to the report itself :—"Though differing in matters of detail, the essential object, plan, and result of every fully-developed Medical Mission are the same. The object is, from the basis of care for the body, at a time when the heart is softened and subdued, to reach the sin-stricken soul. The plan is, for the medical man himself to point the sick one to the Saviour of sinners, and to endorse his words by his works of mercy. The result is, as experience everywhere proves, that the physician's free gift of medical skill and appliances 'maketh room,' not only for himself but for his Master's message." We would also direct our readers' attention to a little book lately published by Partridge and Co., price one penny, entitled, "The London Medical Mission: What it is doing; No. 2," written by Miss Louisa Clayton. It is a most encouraging record of work done for Christ, and we wish it a large circulation.

LIVERPOOL MEDICAL MISSION.—"A constant reader" favours us with an account of the operations of the above Mission, which seeks to follow in the footsteps of the Great Physician. We regret our space will not admit of giving our correspondent's highly interesting communication. The work of the Mission is conducted on the same principle as the London Medical Mission, referred to above, and is under the superintendance of Dr. Owles, 178, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool, who will be glad to give information, and receive aid in support of it.

ST. JAMES'S, BERMONDSEY.—A correspondent writes of the great need of efficient helpers in the parish of St. James's, Bermondsey, for district visitation, and gives a touching case of dark, deep ignorance, hardly credible in this afternoon of the nineteenth century. Any information will be given to those who desire it by the Rev. W. Allen, Vicar of St. James's; or by Rev. J. Farren, Congregational minister. Access to St. James's is easy, as trains run every twenty minutes from Charing-cross to Spa-road.

DAILY TEXTS.

"THOU GOD SEEK ME."—GEN. XVI. 13.

Thurs. Feb. 4.—"The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." "Have I also here looked after Him that seeth me?"—Prov. xv. 3; Gen. xvi. 13.

Fri. 5.—"O Lord, Thou hast searched me and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, Thou understandest my thought afar off." "Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God."—Psa. cxxxix. 1, 2; 1 John iii. 21.

Sat. 6.—"A land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." "I have hallowed this house which thou hast built, to put My name there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually."—Deut. xi. 12; 1 Kings ix. 3.

Sun. 7.—"Yes, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no judgment. And He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore His arm brought salvation unto Him; and His righteousness, it sustained Him."—Isa. lix. 15, 16.

Mon. 8.—"I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt....for I know their sorrows; and I am come down to deliver them." "I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will heal thee." "God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil that He had said He would do unto them, and He did it not."—Exod. iii. 7, 8; 2 Kings xx. 5; Jonah iii. 10.

Tues. 9.—"The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him." "I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners."—2 Chron. xvi. 9; Isa. lvii. 18.

Wed. 10.—"Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength." "Pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Isa. xlix. 5; Matt. vi. 6.

"WHOM HAVING NOT SEEN, YE LOVE."—1 PET. I. 8.

APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN LADIES.—A sum of money is needed at once to pay for printing two millions of a small pamphlet for distribution in London by Mr. Moody's agents (similar to the one distributed in the North). Are there not many Christian women who have diamond rings and brooches, and earrings innumerable, lying in shelves in their cases, rarely, perhaps, used or looked at, and would it not be a sweet service to sell them for Jesus' sake, and give the proceeds for this little work of love? About £500 will be required. I have realized £50 by the sale of a diamond ring and some other jewellery, and would now affectionately plead with Christian women to help me to raise this £500 as soon as possible. M. E. P.

SPECIAL PRAYER DURING THE SESSION.—The Committee of the National Club have issued a card announcing that a Meeting for prayer will be held in the Committee Room, Whitehall-gardens, every Tuesday afternoon, from 1.30 to 2 o'clock, during the sittings of Parliament.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—Prayer was requested in THE CHRISTIAN for a son of Christian parents, who was to undergo a hard examination in Christmas week. We now desire to praise God for bringing him through successfully.—For spiritual blessing on a town in the North of Ireland, for which prayer was asked in THE CHRISTIAN lately.—For prayer answered on behalf of my brother-in-law, who was addicted to drink and blasphemy. He has partly given up the first. Oh pray on!—For two brothers, brought to Christ in answer to recent prayer in THE CHRISTIAN.

PRAYER.—A wife requests prayer for a beloved husband, once a sincere Christian, now led away into Deism and scepticism, and that she may be preserved from the doubts raised by his arguments, and helped to pursue a Christian course.—For a gentleman, who is suffering torture from neuralgia, that the good Lord would reveal Himself to him, and give him submission.—For a servant of Christ, just returned from labouring in Madrid, that the rest and means used may, if so pleasing to the Lord, be blessed to his speedy recovery.—For an aged lady of eighty, who, though a religious professor for many years, is now assailed with doubts. Pray that "at evening time it may be light."—For a dear child of God, still wandering in the paths of sin; she is very unhappy, and resists the strivings of God's Spirit.—That a young Christian may have restored health, to work harder for the Master, if it be His will.—For a young minister, that he may have much fellowship with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ.—For the speedy recovery of a young Christian from scarlet fever, and that God will, in His mercy, stop infection from spreading.—For the head of an institution, that the means used may be blessed to the relief of her extreme suffering, and complete restoration to usefulness and work.—For an aged relative, who has just returned, at seventy years of age, to his post in the mission-field, his wife dead, and no prospect of any sort of help in his arduous work—not a European on the spot.

PLACES.—That the Lord will graciously visit a village in Northamptonshire, to stir up the Christians, and arouse the dead souls to their true state.—For Jersey, that God would revive His work there, and, if it be His will, send some earnest labourers to help His ministers and people.—For the appointment of a minister of sound evangelical views to a parish in a suburb of London, now vacant.—For Leeds, that the Mission of this week may be abundantly blessed, especially to the young men there.—For Winchester, that showers of blessing may attend the meetings at which Charles Edwards and William Martin are addressing very large congregations.—For special united services in the Brighton Town-hall.—For the villages of Haughton-le-Skerne and Hurworth-on-Tees.—For a prayer-meeting just begun amongst the non-collegiate students at Cambridge.—A member of the Evangelization Society asks prayer for much blessing upon the preaching of the gospel by him in Sidmouth, from Feb. 4 to 9; Tiverton, Feb. 9 to 12; Parracombe, Feb. 14 to 21; Bideford, Feb. 21 to 28.—That a mighty awakening may soon take place in the towns of Chichester and Bognor.—For special blessing on Rev. Horace Noel's visit to Brussels, that the Lord may incline the hearts of large numbers of workmen and soldiers to come to the meetings.—For five days' services by Mr. Opie Rodway, commencing Feb. 3, at West Kingston.—For a week's special services at Burton-on-Trent, by H. Holloway.—For blessing on special services to be held in Brechin, N.B., from Feb. 7 to 14.—On behalf of Helensburgh—first, for her ministers; secondly, for the regular church services; thirdly, for the Sabbath-schools; fourthly, for the Sabbath forenoon services for the young; fifthly, for the weekly kitchen prayer-meetings.—For blessing upon a special service in the Lecture-hall, Deptford, on Sunday evening, Feb. 7.

CONVERSIONS.—For a self-confident, talented girl, whose powers of intellect keep the truth from her heart.—A Christian minister asks the prayers of God's people for the conversion of a son, who has left off going to public-houses for the last month, but is still hard and careless about his soul.—On behalf of a reckless young man.—For my father, that he may become a man of prayer.—For a large circle of worldly-minded relatives.—For a young man, who has gone far astray through intemperance. He has resided in London for years, lost his situation twelve months since, and is occasionally homeless and destitute. He is still in London.—For an only son, causing deep and sorrowful anxiety to his father; he is going to India on Feb. 3.—That a beloved brother and his wife may be drawn to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Liverpool, and may be converted.—On behalf of a young friend, now in Melbourne, who is a lost man, fond of drink, which he cannot give up. His mother has lately died, broken-hearted, yet believing her prayers will one day be answered. May her death prove life to him!—For the conversion of two beloved brothers, of one of whom all trace is lost.

The Christian.

GOD SEEKING KINGS.*

BY DR. H. BONAR.

OSONS of men, this is the honour to which God is calling you! It is for the end of making you his kings that He is seeking you. To deliver you from wrath is the beginning of his purpose concerning you; to set you on his throne is the end—nothing short of this. Think what the riches of his grace must be, and his kindness towards us in Christ Jesus our Lord! Where sin has abounded, grace has abounded more. Herein is love. Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed on us, that we should not only be called sons, but kings—that we should not only be lifted to a place in his family, but to a seat upon his throne! To make us in any way or in any sense partakers of his glory, and sharers in his dominion, is much, but to make us “heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ” is unspeakably more. A throne such as man can give and take away seems to many a worthy object of ambition; how much more the kingdom which God gives, the kingdom which cannot be moved!

And if any one asks, “How may I share this royalty, and win this crown?” we answer in the well-known words, “As many as received Him, to them gave He power (right) to become the sons of God;” for what is true of the sonship is true of the kingship too. We obtain it by receiving the Son of God. He that takes Christ receives a kingdom, and becomes a king. His connection with the King of kings is his security for a throne. Oneness with Christ gives him the royal inheritance. To be washed in his blood, to be clothed with his raiment, to be quickened with his life, to be gladdened with his love, to be crowned with his crown—these are some of the steps of honour, up which He leads those who believe in his name.

For it is a throne that cannot be bought. It is the gift of “the King eternal, immortal, invisible;” and He giveth it to whomsoever He will. The invitation which the Son of God gives to us in his gospel is an invitation to a throne and crown. He holds it up, and bids us look at it. He holds it out, and bids us take it.

I know not if all this were ever better described than by John Bunyan, in the beginning of the “Pilgrim’s Progress,” in the dialogue between Christian and Pliable:—

“Pli.—Come, neighbour Christian, since there are none but us two here, tell me now further what the things are, and how to be enjoyed, whither we are going.

“Chr.—I can better conceive of them with my mind, than speak of them with my tongue; but yet, since you are desirous to know, I will read of them in my book.

“Pli.—And do you think that the words of your book are certainly true?

“Chr.—Yes, verily; for it was made by Him that cannot lie.

“Pli.—Well said; what things are they?

* From “The Rent Veil,” recently published by Messrs. Habet and Co.

“Chr.—There is an endless kingdom to be inhabited, and everlasting life to be given us, that we may inhabit the kingdom for ever.

“Pli.—Well said; and what else?

“Chr.—There are crowns of glory to be given us, and garments that will make us shine like the sun in the firmament of heaven.

“Pli.—This is very pleasant; and what else?

“Chr.—There shall be no more crying, nor sorrow; for He that is owner of the place will wipe all tears from our eyes.

“Pli.—And what company shall we have there?

“Chr.—There we shall be with seraphims and cherubims, creatures that will dazzle your eyes to look on them. There also you shall meet with thousands and tens of thousands that have gone before us to that place; none of them are hurtful, but loving and holy; every one walking in the sight of God, and standing in his presence with acceptance for ever. In a word, there we shall see the elders with their golden crowns; there we shall see the holy virgins with their golden harps; there we shall see men that, by the world, were cut in pieces, burnt in flames, eaten of beasts, drowned in the seas, for the love that they bare to the Lord of the place, all well, and clothed with immortality as with a garment.

“Pli.—The hearing of this is enough to ravish one’s heart. But are these things to be enjoyed? How shall we get to be sharers thereof?

“Chr.—THE LORD, THE GOVERNOR OF THE COUNTRY, HATH RECORDED THAT IN THIS BOOK; THE SUBSTANCE OF WHICH IS, IF WE BE TRULY WILLING TO HAVE IT, HE WILL BESTOW IT UPON US FREELY.”

Thus very simply and beautifully does Bunyan put the manner of obtaining the glory. Some would call this too free. Some would say, Here is the way made far too easy, without any preparatory alarms and repentance. But there stands John Bunyan’s idea of the way of a sinner’s entrance into the kingdom; and let him who can improve or correct it do so. “The Lord, the Governor of the country, hath recorded that in this book; the substance of which is, If we be truly willing to have it, He will bestow it upon us freely.”

Bunyan’s soundness of doctrine is well known. His Calvinism was of a very decided kind. His views of Christ’s redemption-work were very precise. His belief as to the necessity of the Holy Spirit’s work was undoubted; yet he delighted to set forth the gospel in all its scriptural simplicity, unencumbered with preparatory exercises and processes intended to make the sinner “fit for receiving Christ,” and fit for having the peace of the gospel dispensed to him; and never did he state that free gospel more freely, that simple gospel more simply, than when, in the manifest fulness of his heart, he wrote the above sentence, and put it into the lips of his pilgrim:—

“IF WE BE TRULY WILLING TO HAVE IT,
HE WILL BESTOW IT UPON US FREELY.”

Such a sentence shines like a star; yes, like a star to a tempest-tossed sinner in his night of darkness. He asks, How may I be saved? How may I be made a worshipper? How may I become a temple? How may I be taken into the royal priesthood? God’s answer is not, Work, and pray, and wait, and get convictions, and bring yourself under the stroke of the law; but, Believe and live; believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. Likest in its naked simplicity to these divine utterances is that star-like sentence of the Puritan dreamer. It is but another form, in language all his own, of the concluding message of gladness dropped from heaven, as the great book of truth was about to be closed and sealed:—

“WHOSOEVER WILL,
LET HIM TAKE THE WATER OF LIFE FREELY.”

Too free! Too easy! Too simple! It will only make skin-deep professors! Another gospel! So say some whose idea of the gospel seems to be that of a work to be done by the sinner, not of a work which Christ has already done; whose exhortations to the inquirer are, Wait, pray, seek, wrestle, labour on, and possibly God may drop salvation into your lap; whose theory of a sinner's approach to a Saviour turns all upon the necessity of some long, laborious preliminary seekings, repentances, convictions, terrors, by which he is so humbled and broken, as to be at length in a right frame for Christ to bless him, in a right condition to be trusted with rest of soul;—whose largest grasp of the glorious gospel extends only to this, that it is good news for the qualified, for those who have been ploughed deep enough and long enough by the law.

Well, go to; go to, we say to such. Away and dispute the matter not with us, but with the Master. Ask Him why He “received sinners” at once, without preliminary work, or qualification, or preparation, or delay; why He said to the hardened profligate of Sychar, “Thou wouldst have asked, and He would have given;” to Zaccheus, “Make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house;” to the adulteress, “Neither do I condemn thee;” to the thief upon the cross, “To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise.” Upbraid Him with allowing three thousands of Jerusalem sinners, at one bound, and under one single message, to pass into the kingdom, instead of keeping them “waiting at the pool,” or tortured by the law into gloomy fitness for the glad tidings: express your astonishment that He should have set such an example of rearing churches out of heathen idolaters in a single day—Corinth, Ephesus, Colosse, Thessalonica, Philippi—without waiting for years before calling their members “saints;” or permitting them to sit down at the table of the Lord; set up your foolishness against his wisdom, your presumption against his lowliness, your traditions against his commandments, your love of darkness against his joy in light; proclaim your amended gospel, the gospel of Galatia, “Except ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing;” but what will be the result of those amendments and restrictions on Christ's free gospel? What will all this wood, and hay, and stubble come to in the great day of the Lord? What will be thought of all these barriers which human self-righteousness has reared to check the speed of the flying manslayer, and keep him from too easy and too swift an entrance into the city of refuge, when “the breath of the Lord, like an overflowing stream” (Isa. xxx. 28), shall sweep these barriers and their builders clean away.

MANCHESTER.—From a correspondent we hear that a good work is going on in Manchester, under the preaching of Henry Holloway. Great success has attended the efforts to reach the working classes, and a good attendance has been obtained of men and women in their working clothes, fresh from mill or factory. Many cases of interest have arisen, and there is cause for praise and prayer in connection with these labours.

WORK AMONG THE CABMEN.

A Saturday night with the London cabmen was new to me, yet I readily accepted the invitation I received to accompany Mr. J. J. Jones, of the Police and Cabmen's Mission, on his round of labour, last Saturday evening. Thinking what I saw and heard might be of interest to your readers, I subjoin the following.

We left the centre of the City, then rapidly becoming deserted, about nine o'clock, and wended our way westward. As we got into the Strand, the noise and bustle of Saturday night commenced.

My conductor's plan was to visit the large stands—and more especially the theatres, music saloons, and such-like places, where he expected to find a large assemblage of cabs; and truly he was not disappointed, for long lines of two and four-wheelers stretched up and down in front of these abodes of pleasure. He began work in Drury-lane, thence to Covent Garden. Illustrated papers, such as the Herald of Mercy, were freely distributed to the men. Plain, unattractive tracts often receive but sorry treatment, yet these brightly-illustrated papers meet with eager and thankful acceptance.

I pause here to answer a question which occurred to my own mind ere I started.—“Is Saturday night, when hundreds of young and old of both sexes are eagerly seeking amusement, a suitable time to carry the gospel to these men?” I went, however, relying on the superior knowledge of the friend whom I accompanied, and certainly I can now say I found the time most auspicious. The cabmen are generally idle while the “performances” are going on; they have brought persons from all parts of London, and are waiting to take them back on the emptying of the theatres. Thus the men, while lounging about, smoking their pipes, were by no means loath to engage in conversation. Englishmen are proverbially grumblers; and perhaps, of all classes, we look upon cabmen as the most dissatisfied. Our business connections with them are often very unsatisfactory; but the evil lies in the system more than in the men. [A little, also, in their customers.—Ed.]

Each man pays his employer a certain sum per day for the use of the cab, the amount varying from 12s. 6d. to 15s.; whatever they make over this is their profit. They have, therefore, no stated hours of labour, the time they remain out depending upon their own success. The average is fifteen hours. During this time they are exposed to all weathers, and have scarcely any shelter. Surely, then, theirs is a hard life.

But how about Sunday? Most men can go through arduous work for six days in the week, when the seventh is a day of rest; but with many of this class, week passes week, and the months creep by, yet there comes no day of rest for “cabby.” Fully one-half—probably more—of our London cabs being out on Sundays.

But of those who get the Sunday to themselves—how do they use it? One very respectable man, when asked how he spent the Lord's-day, told us that he stayed in bed all the morning, being so thoroughly tired; the remainder of the day he gave up to his wife and family, never going to any place of worship, as he felt he had a right to rest on the Sunday. Yet, when he heard the gospel of love put before him, he was deeply serious, and confessed the importance of attending to his soul's salvation.

Leaving Covent Garden, we made a long detour, distributing messages of mercy and love as we passed from stand to stand. Near the Haymarket there was an old man, whose thin white hair and pinched features told of years of hardship and suffering; he had one Sunday in twelve to call his own, and worked each day from fifteen to sixteen hours. A short, middle-aged man, close by, when asked if he was able to attend the preaching of God's word on the Sabbath, replied that he had to work every Sunday in the year. His employer had thirty cabs, and all were sent out on the Lord's-day, as on others. This man sometimes slipped in to hear a word while his cab stood at the door of a church, but not once in twelve months could he lay aside duty, and take his place with his family in the house of God. His parting words, as we wished him good-night, fell with sorrow on our ears—"I wish to the Lord Sunday-work was done away with; it wears a fellow out; but," he added, with a sigh, "I s'pose it never will be."

The Alhambra, in Leicester-square, was a great centre for cabs. Here most of the drivers were young men, giddy and thoughtless, yet some of them, when treated judiciously, received us otherwise than with kindness, and all listened attentively to words of loving exhortation.

The police returns show 8720 cabs now running daily. I may mention that the office of the Police and Cabmen's Mission is at 14, Richmond-road, Dalston, E.

It may be asked, Why have a special work for cabmen? I reply, as the result of my Saturday night's experience, the merchant, clerk, mechanic, or labourer, lays aside his duties on the Lord's-day, and can be brought by various means under the sound of the gospel. But the poor "cabby" has got few Sundays, and his hours of duty are too long for him to attend gospel meetings in the week.

To bring these men under the influence of saving truth, you must send missionaries to them, who will visit their stands, and talk to them of the glad tidings, during the many hours they have to wait, listlessly looking out for "fares." MEDICUS.

[We record with pleasure the opening, on Saturday, by the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., of the first Cabmen's Shelter in London. Its dimensions are 18ft. by 6ft., height, 10ft. 8in. It is in Acacia-road, St. John's Wood, and others are about being erected.]

THE MESSENGER.

"Blessed is the man that heareth Me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors."—PROV. VIII. 34.

I stand at His gate to-night,
I linger beside His door,
'Twill not be in vain if I do but wait,
I have proved Him often before.
I am watching with eager eye,
Listening with opened ear,
For the Master's voice I must catch to-night,
Each word must be plain and clear.
For a message I have to bear,
He told Me I was to come—
That He had work for me to do,
To carry a message home.
I know not what it will be;
Whether a simple word,
Or whether 'twill cost me toil and pain
To utter all I have heard.
But often 'tis happy work,
For His message is full of cheer,
His words of comfort, of hope, of love,
Wipe away many a tear;
Sometimes 'tis a pardon free
To a rebel condemned to die;
When my Lord says, "Loose him and let him go,"
Oh! who has such joy as I!
Sometimes 'tis "Return," "Return,"
To a child who has grieved Him sore;
And how sweet to hear the faltering tones,
"Can I ever grieve Him more?"
Or perhaps 'tis a warning voice,
Counsel both wise and true,
To one who stands in a slippery place,
Knowing not what to do.
And though some will not heed
The message I have to tell,
My Lord will know—for He told me so—
If I do my service well.
So I listen beside His gate,
And I hush my heart to hear,
For the Master's voice I must catch to-night,
And each word must be plain and clear.

MORAVIAN MISSION SHIP.

Most of the friends of Missions know something of the self-denying and devoted labours of the Moravians in Greenland, South Africa, and the West Indies; but comparatively few are aware of the work they have been carrying on along the Mosquito Coast, nearly between the North and South American Continents. They came to a most unpromising field of labour, the tribes of Indians on that coast having been first subjected to the cruelty of the buccaneers, and then corrupted by the strong drink introduced by the European traders; and neglected by all. The Moravian missionaries have been labouring with cheering tokens of success among these poor creatures, undeterred by the difficulties of a trying climate, and of a country in which the only way of proceeding from one station to another is by sea, and often a rough and dangerous sea.

At first this was effected in the canoes of the country; but this was a mode of locomotion quite impracticable except in summer weather, and even then nearly impossible where the mission families had to be conveyed. A collection was made by the friends of the missionaries, and chiefly by the children of the American congregations connected with the Moravians, and a vessel purchased, called "The Messenger of Peace;" but it proved afterwards to have been built of a kind of wood unfit for service, and after various attempts to repair it, it had to be abandoned, and lies a half-decayed wreck on the shore. With great efforts another small vessel was purchased, called the "Meta." This was well adapted for sailing, though the cabin was so small that four or five persons could hardly sit or stand together without painful crowding, and it may easily be imagined what was the consequent suffering when a missionary family had to pass days in such an abode, the roll of the small vessel making it unsafe, at least for children, to be on deck in rough weather. Such as it was, however, they contentedly availed themselves of this much-needed help to pass to and fro to the various stations, which require constant superintendence.

But on the 21st of June last, the little Mission vessel was surprised by a furious whirlwind, near the station of Greytown, and wrecked on the sands there. Happily no lives were lost; but the violence of the waves completely reduced the ship to a useless wreck, and the Mission band is left without any means of locomotion, except the canoes, which are only safe in the calmest weather.

Not only this, but they are cut off from all regular means of procuring from more civilized localities those necessaries and comforts of life without which no Europeans can long keep their health and strength. The friends who know of their present state of distress are anxious to raise money to assist the Mission in the purchase of a vessel to replace the lost ones. It is believed that one really solid and commodious might be obtained for about 35,000 dollars (£700). There is, we believe, no missionary body in existence whose funds are so small in proportion to the amount of work accomplished, as that of the Moravians; and the quiet and unpretending manner in which they carry on their work, causes it often to pass unnoticed by those who would give their hearty sympathy if they knew how much is quietly, patiently, and cheerfully done for the extension of the Saviour's kingdom by this little band of earnest Christians.

The smallest contributions for the Missionary Ship will be thankfully received, and can be sent to the secretary of the Moravian Missions in London, the Rev. E. Shaw, 97, Hatton-garden.

MINISTERS in various parts of London are effectively helping forward the work of God by giving in sermons and at prayer-meetings information respecting the meetings of our American brethren, as well as those just held at Leeds, and of evangelistic work generally. We trust that this wise method will be adopted by all who desire the spread of the gospel and the salvation of souls.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA.—An appeal has reached us from this place for "some books and pamphlets published in Madrid and Barcelona, suitable for schools or worship, such as hymn-books with music." Can any of our readers who possess such books in Spanish supply this want? If they could forward a few to Ramon Monsalvete, 15, Sutton-street, Kingston, Jamaica, they would be doing a great kindness.

MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MOVEMENTS.CONFERENCE AT FREEMASONS' HALL.

At noon on Friday last, Freemasons' Hall was crowded with ministers and other Christian workers from all parts of London and suburbs, to meet Messrs. Moody and Sankey in conference touching the forthcoming four months' services in the metropolis. The gallery was filled to overflowing, and every inch of standing-room was occupied. The general tone and spirit of the meeting were most hopeful and encouraging. There were, of course, various expressions of divergent opinion, some of the topics referred to being very irrelevant, and others untimely; but there prevailed a very general feeling of agreement as to the necessity of the efforts to be made. The disagreement was confined to matters of detail, and any difficulty that may be felt on these points will, no doubt vanish in practice, as they have done in other places. Mr. Moody's business tact, Christian courtesy, and common sense, were put to the test in answering the many and varied questions put to him, and it must be admitted that these qualities were very happily utilized.

Mr. Thomas Stone, Chairman of the Central Committee, presided at the meeting, which was opened by singing the hymn, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," and Rev. Canon Auriol offered prayer. After another hymn,

Mr. Moody addressed the meeting. He said: I am come here this morning not so much to speak as to let you friends question me. I believe there are a great many obstacles that can be moved out of the way, with regard to the work in London, if we have a fair understanding before we commence. I have found, during the past nineteen months, that our greatest difficulty has been prejudice. We have found when people came to the meetings once or twice that this has all fled away, and if we can get the London ministers in sympathy with us at the beginning, it will greatly help the work. I find some of the best men keeping out of the work, because they have heard this or that—some of the things, perhaps, true, and some of them not true. And if we only come to a fair understanding to begin with, it will, I believe, help us greatly.

I was invited some time ago by different societies and ministers to come up to London, but I did not then see my way to come. I did not know that I could come until a few months ago. When I had decided, I thought the committee of the Noon-day Prayer-meeting would make the arrangements, so I asked them to see what could be done about buildings. They tell me they have secured the Agricultural Hall from the 1st of March for ten weeks, at £50 a week, which I think is very reasonable. They have also secured Exeter Hall for two months, for the daily prayer-meeting. The plan, as it lies in my mind, is something like this: that London should be divided into four districts, and that we should spend a month in the north, one in the south, one in the east, and one in the west. I am constantly getting letters from ministers, asking me not to pass them by, but to speak in schoolrooms, churches, and chapels. But if we carry out this plan and attempt to reach, say, the East-end, we will not be able to touch it; we must have buildings that will reach at least 10,000 to 15,000 people. If we went to churches and chapels, the Christian people who have heard of the work from their ministers, or who have been reading the religious papers, will flock out, will be there an hour or two before the time, and the careless people will not get in. That has been our experience in the past months. The success of our meetings has been their failure, because we cannot get at the class of people we would like. We have found this at Dublin and also at Birmingham, where our meetings have been very largely attended.

I do not know why they should not be successful here, if we could only get buildings in these four divisions, so that the people could hear. If we have very high ceilings it will be impossible to preach to so many people, but if the roof is low as it is in Bingley Hall, Birmingham, it will be a good deal easier to speak in such buildings than here, without making any more effort than I am doing now. In that way we hope to reach the masses. But if that is done, of course we cannot go to the different churches and chapels, and ministers will understand that is because it is impossible to reach the masses in that way.

There has been some prejudice against the inquiry-room. I will tell you the mode we employ, and you can judge for yourselves. People say that we are establishing the confessional. I do not think we are. It is like a man throwing out his net, and now and then he pulls it in to see if he has caught anything. You would not think much of a fisherman if he didn't do that. If we can, we like to have an adjoining room. We ask those who would like to be spoken to, quietly and privately, about their souls, to step into another room. There the ministers and godly people go and talk, and pray with them, and these meetings have been wonderfully blessed. An impression has gone out that there is great excitement in these meetings, but the fact is, we do not allow any noise. Very often you will see a room where a hundred inquirers are being spoken to, yet you will hardly hear a whisper. Latterly, we have not taken the names of those persons. We found at Edinburgh that the taking of the names kept away a good many of the upper classes. If they went to a church where the minister was not in sympathy, they did not care about giving his name. So we dropped that plan, and at the close of our series of meetings we ask all those who profess to have been brought to God to give their names and residence, and the church they prefer. In that way we get their names and send them round to the different ministers, so that they may look after them. We have found that to work very well.

Mr. Moody then described the order of conducting the noon-day prayer-meetings, but as this is so well known to our readers we need not repeat it here. He continued:—

There is another subject which I wish to say a word or two upon; and as it is a matter somewhat personal, it may be no one here would care to refer to it.

A great deal has been said about our making a fine thing financially out of this movement, from the sale of hymn-books, organs, etc. Now I desire to say that, up to the 1st of January, we received a royalty from the publishers of our hymn-books. But from that date, when the Solo Book was enlarged, we determined not to receive anything from the sale of it, and have requested the publishers to hand over the royalty upon all our hymn-books to one of your leading citizens, Mr. Hugh Matheson, who will devote the same to such charitable objects as may be decided upon.

In regard to the organ question, I want to say once for all that we are not selling organs—that is not our mission; nor are we agents for the sale of organs; neither have we, nor do we receive, a commission or compensation in any way whatever, from any person or persons, for using the organ we do at our meetings.

I hope now that no one here will think that I have made these statements to create financial sympathy in our behalf. We do not want your money. We want your confidence; we want your sympathy and prayers. And as our one object in coming here is to preach Christ, we believe we shall have them, and that, with God's blessing, we shall see many brought into the fold of Christ. If we make mistakes, come to us and tell us; then I shall not fear for the result.

We must expect opposition. If you think that a great work is to be done here without opposition, you will be greatly mistaken. The opposition will be bitter, and you had better count the cost before you begin. We would like you to stand by us right in the thick of the fight; not to go into it, and then when it has become warm to leave us. There will be many bitter things said, and many lies started, and, as some one has said, a lie will get half round the world before the truth gets its boots on.

Let us sympathize with and pray for one another, and there will be no doubt of success. If God blesses the work in one place, then it will go on, when we leave it and go to another division, and so on. If God use you in the work it will be a great deal better than for us to do it ourselves. It is better to get ten men to work, than to do ten men's work. Last week, when we were leaving Birmingham, we found we could get the Bingley Hall for another week, and I suggested that they should carry the work on. They said the people would not come out; I asked them to try it. We telegraphed to different places, and got our friends Mr. Newman Hall, and Dr. Fraser, and Mr. Lockhart of Liverpool, to go to Birmingham and speak to the people. I see by the Birmingham papers yesterday that the meetings were attended by 7000 or 8000 people. Mr. Moody appealed to Dr. Donald Fraser, who sat beside him, and who confirmed the statement. Mr. Moody added that he did not see why the work should not go on for a year. He then stated his readiness to answer any questions that might be asked, in order to remove prejudice, and produce a good understanding among them with respect to the work.

We do not propose to report in detail all the questions addressed to Mr. Moody, as many of them were with respect to matters of detail, which will doubtless be seen to by the committee, and others again were of doctrinal and controversial character, and not to be answered "right away" as Mr. Moody would say. Mr. Moody judiciously declined to enter on disputed ground, and with admirable skill and readiness replied to his numerous interrogators.

We give the substance of such of the questions and answers as will, we think, be of service to the public.

In answer to a query whether the services on Sundays would be held in the great halls during the hours of ordinary divine service, Mr. Moody said they had studiously avoided holding meetings at the same time as the regular services until they went to Sheffield. The Vicar there suggested that they should have a service at eleven o'clock in the Albert Hall, solely for those who attended no place of worship. He (Mr. Moody) said that nobody would come; but as he was fond of making experiments, they would try it. To their great surprise, the hall was packed. How did they know the people did not attend any place of worship? They gave out a good old hymn, and it was as flat as could be; they could not sing it. At Birmingham they tried it again, and from 8000 to 10,000 attended of the class they desired to see, and God put his seal on the effort. It might be thought well to do it in London too, in order to reach the people, but the ministers would understand that it was done out of a pure motive, and not to draw the people away from them. Their object had been to strengthen the different churches, and not to pull them down.

A question about the comparative value of total abstinence and the preaching of the gospel, led Mr. Moody to say that there were many men in London with a crotchet of some kind or other, which they rode to death. But they wanted a harp with a thousand strings, not one string. He himself was a teetotaler out and out.

Referring to house-to-house visitation, Mr. Moody related what had been done in Manchester, where every family, rich and poor, had been visited, and stated that the same was now being done in Liverpool. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, at Mr. Moody's request, gave full details of the happy results of the Manchester visitation, and stated that he would have great pleasure in devoting a week or two to organizing a similar visitation in London, preparatory to the opening of the special services, and this without any expense to the committee.

A gentleman asked to whom the inquiry-room would be accessible, and Mr. Moody replied that, first of all, they asked all ministers in sympathy with evangelical truth to go and talk with the anxious; and if they were found insufficient, they were asked to name godly people in whom they had confidence.

Some one asked Mr. Moody what he wanted the ministers of London to do. He replied that they were desired to attend the noon prayer-meetings, and show their sympathy by taking part in them, and also by working in the inquiry-room.

Some questions were asked with reference to sectional committees for the different districts of London, and the Chairman stated that the necessary arrangements were being made.

Mr. Moody replied, in answer to another gentleman, that they did not profess in any way to reckon up those who were converted at the meetings; their record was on high. To the meetings for young converts, they only invited those who professed to be converted. God and themselves alone knew the real state of their hearts.

Mr. Moody said they sometimes had open-air meetings, but the climate of England was treacherous, and London fogs were against them, so that they should not be reckoned upon.

Being asked if provision would be made at the meetings for the poor and miserable, Mr. Moody said they wished to reach all classes, the miserable rich as well as the miserable poor. He was in hopes that during their stay in London, all classes would be reached.

Some one inquired what provision there would be with respect to tickets of admission for ministers, to which Mr. Moody replied that tickets were of little use when there were great crowds; at the same time they would do their best to accommodate ministers.

Mr. Hugh Matheson said, that in conversation with the secretary of the London City Mission, the use of several large theatres was discussed, but in order to reach the class of people who would be likely to come to the meetings in them, it would be necessary to distribute small handbills in the various localities.

Several inquiries were addressed to Mr. Moody with respect to the kind of gospel he preached, one gentleman suggesting that he should put it in print, so that all might know. Mr. Moody promptly replied, amidst the strongly-expressed approbation of the bulk of the meeting, that it was already in print in the 53rd chapter of Isaiah.

Mr. Sankey, who led the praises of the meeting throughout, made some remarks with respect to singing at the special services. He said he was very desirous that they should have only Christians to lead the service of praise. He requested them to select those in whom they had confidence in the various districts, and practise the hymns between this time and March. He would try and come up to London and meet them for one day before the services began.

The Hon. Cowper Temple, in a short and very appreciative address, moved the thanks of the meeting to Messrs. Moody and Sankey for their continuous and disinterested labours, and the motion was cordially assented to.

After a few closing words from Mr. Moody, who, with his fellow-worker, had to start almost immediately for Birmingham, Dr. Moffat closed the interesting proceedings with the benediction.

WINCHESTER.—Those interested in this city, and who have often besought the Lord to pour out his Spirit here, will rejoice to hear that the addresses delivered by Mr. Charles Edwards, of the Evangelisation Society (late a working-man), are awakening the deepest interest, St. John's Rooms, holding from 600 to 700, being crowded by persons, numbers of whom attend no place of worship. Every night the same attentive faces are seen: and although we speak not of results as yet, we feel that the Holy Spirit is at work in many a soul. A free tea was given on Friday evening, the 21st ult., to about 250 of the lowest of our citizens, after which a stirring, earnest address was given, on the words, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock," by Dr. Thornton, Bishop-elect of Ballarat, followed by Mr. Edwards on the words, "What think ye of Christ?" The children have not been forgotten, 800 to 900 being gathered on Wednesday to hear the good news so plainly told of "the Friend for little children." Those who carry on this work most earnestly ask the prayers of your readers, that they may be given wisdom from above, and that a calm, deep work of God may be felt in the hearts of all who hear.

THE WORK AT BIRMINGHAM.

I must write you a few lines according to promise of what the impressions made on my mind are by the few days spent in Birmingham in connection with the work of our friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

The first thing I will notice is the evidence the work gives of the power of the simple preaching of the cross of Christ. The singing, no doubt, attracts many; but the power is not in the singing, but in what is sung. It is the old story of a Saviour's love to a lost world that thrills the hearts of those who hear it sung, and that helps to swell the vast audience that daily, and often twice a day, and on Sundays four times a day, draws together vaster crowds than, perhaps, were ever drawn together consecutively for any political or scientific object.

Christ meets every need, heals every disease, and wipes away every tear; and it is the simple declaration of this that gathers the crowds now, as it did nineteen centuries ago, on the mountains and plains of Galilee. The infidel is prone to say that Christianity is dead, and does not meet the need of the age. These meetings show that it is alive, and still meets the need of all who come to the healing stream. As in the days of our Lord's personal ministry thousands followed who went away, and were none the better, so is it now. But when hundreds stand up at the close of an earnest, simple gospel address, as we have witnessed at these meetings, desiring to be prayed for, and wishing to become Christians, there is a power from God which it must rejoice every true-hearted child of his to witness or to hear of.

The next thing I would remark on is the directness of the preaching of Christ, the lifting up of the Lord himself, that characterizes the ministry. Dogmatic teaching will not serve; we need a personal Christ, brought near to the personal need of the sinner. And this is a marked feature of the work, and one which all engaged in the preaching of the gospel will do well to ponder, and see whether the secret of the general want of power felt be not that theories of truth have taken the place of the living truth itself. Mr. Moody lifts up a living Christ, and makes his hearers almost think they hear his footfall, and listen to his voice. Christ lives in his ministry.

Thirdly, Christians are led to realize the fact that they are, firstly and chiefly, fellow-disciples of the same Lord, having in the gospel by which they are saved, and which they preach, a common ground of evangelistic effort, which, while it does not call for a compromise of the smallest truth, holds paramount the living truth of a common Saviour and a common salvation. This is no small gain in this day of narrow sectarianism and Pharisaic exclusiveness. Romanists came to hear, because Rome has not been attacked; and many were saved, and then found that Romanism and priestcraft were not of God. May all be willing to say, as our brother Moody said on one occasion, "If I have one drop of sectarian blood in my veins, I would gladly pour it out!"

Fourthly, an uncompromising testimony against a worldly Christianity that would seek to take as much of this world as would not absolutely rob the soul of the world to come. Unflinchingly our brother exposes the shame and sorrow of a world-bordering life. He would give his Lord all, under the influence of the grace of the all that has been received; and this in a manner that will be very simple and very new to many of his hearers, who may have been Christians like Lot in Sodom, almost, perhaps, ever since they were converted. We shall not readily forget the gold chain that had become so tarnished in a man's pocket, from contact with some lead there, that he was giving it back, thinking it a fraud. And Mr. Moody added, "The gold will be tarnished by the lead, but the lead will not take up the gold." The world draws down one that seeks its fellowship, but is not drawn up by him.

Fifthly, we would notice the great prominence given to working for Christ. He remembers the word, "To every man his work," and, in the deep earnestness of his own conviction of the joy of working for such a Master, would he press it on all, and lead many to find in it a remedy for coldness of heart and lifelessness of walk, and many a life-long sorrow.

Mr. Moody's addresses to Christian workers are full of plain, common-sense directions, wherein is no mystery, and which commend themselves to the judgment of all faithful men. There may be a little danger of a forgetfulness of that communion with God which can alone give work a tone and character which will make it what the work of Him was who spent his days in labour, and his nights in communion with God. This element is, perhaps, a little wanting, but to most the call is sorely needed, "Rise, and be doing;" "Work, for the night is coming." May that little song, "Nothing but leaves," linger long in the hearts of all who heard it sung, and lead to many sheaves and fewer leaves.

Sixthly, I think we see that there is a power in the gospel to reach the masses. Hard and careless many are, but there are soft moments in the hardest heart, and anxious forebodings not unfrequently fill the most careless soul. There are hours and days, weeks and months, of divine visitation, when many will gladly listen, if a fitting person and a fitting place be provided. They know not what they want; they know not where to find it; but we, who know the sinner's want, and know where it is to be met, are responsible for so presenting it, and for so providing for its presentation, that the subject and the place shall fall within the reach of needy and often thirsting souls.

After much had been said about reaching the masses, Mr. Moody wound the question up in these few words, "Go and fetch them."

But may God keep his people from seeking to reach those outside by levelling up and levelling down, as if to meet God and the world half-way. Let the heights and the depths remain, as they ever will, in fact, remain, and seek the power of the invisible, almighty arm that lifts out of the one, and places the sinner's feet firm on the other, in one mighty act, that lifts from the dust to the throne. There are no steps here.

Much more might be written, and, in conclusion, we would ask much prayer, that, amidst many labours and constant public effort, our dear brethren's hearts may be kept in the secret of his presence. H. GROVES.

Kendal.

FROM REV. H. G. THWAITES.

I venture to follow my letter of a fortnight since with a second upon the work of God through Mr. Moody's faithful uplifting of Christ, and Mr. Sankey's singing of the songs of peace. I know of no one of the many blessed hymns which has more struck the heart and arrested attention than that sweet one whose chorus begins, "Oh, 'twas love, 'twas wondrous love, the love of God to me." This love and its manifestation is the theme of every sermon, and, of course, God owns it. Ministers wonder at failure, and try to discover the cause; a week of services such as Birmingham has had for the last fortnight, I think, must answer the question, "What is the cause of failure?" for we have seen in the crowded meetings, in the overwhelming number of anxious ones, in the utter breaking down of strong men, the secret of success. The wondrous love of God has been the weapon which has been used, failure in using this weapon has been the cause of failure in result. Never has Birmingham been so mightily moved; in the workshops Sankey's songs are sung, and men who cared for none of these things are anxiously inquiring after the good news. Oh, may our God carry on the work begun with mighty power!

The arrangements by the Bingley Hall committee were most excellent; there was, however, one lack which, for the sake of friends in Liverpool and London I must mention. We had in Birmingham no suitable place for after-meetings for dealing personally with inquirers, a large number of whom we had, and even larger must be expected in Liverpool and London. The inquirers were directed to the Scotch Church one night, five minutes distant; another to my church and schools (St. Mark's), eight minutes away; on other evenings the hall and its galleries were used; but no one place was suitable. In Liverpool and London, where halls are being built, I venture to suggest if halls, schools, or churches, are not available within two minutes of the large hall, that other provision should be made, so that none of those wounded by the Lord's sword may go away without being cared for.

St. Mark's, Birmingham, Feb. 6, 1875.

THE FAREWELL MEETING.

Services were held in Bingley Hall last week as follows:—On Sunday afternoon Mr. Sankey conducted, and Rev. F. Galloway, and Messrs. J. B. Gould (American Consul), and W. H. Greening (a member of Birmingham School Board), delivered addresses. On Monday night Mr. R. W. Dale, M.A., and the Rev. Newman Hall (London), were the speakers; on Tuesday, the Rev. Newman Hall; on Wednesday, the Rev. Donald Fraser (the well-known Presbyterian minister of London); and last (Thursday) evening, Mr. W. P. Lockhart, Liverpool. All these meetings have been well attended, from 5000 to 7000 persons having been present at each.

The Birmingham Morning News gives a long report of two services held there by Mr. William Nobbs, the converted policeman, and says:—"Plain and unaffected, disdaining alike oddities of gesture, mannerisms of speech, or adventitious, and it might be added meretricious, helps of all kinds, William Nobbs, with the same quiet force with which he might have narrated his evidence in a police-court, conducts his sermon. He has something important to say, and he says it in a clear, straightforward manner. To him the judge is always present. The little Bible he holds in his hand is grasped much after the same fashion as if he had just sworn to speak 'the whole truth, the sole truth, and nothing but the truth,' before a jury."

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's farewell service at Birmingham was held on Friday evening, when the Bingley Hall was once more crowded to its utmost, nearly 1600 converts' tickets being applied for. It would be manifestly premature to assert that this number of people have been converted during the previous three weeks' services. As Mr. Moody said at the Conference in London, on the same day, they did not desire to reckon up the number of converts, because they could not judge of the reality of the cases. At the same time we think it very probable that many have been brought savingly to believe in Christ who did not apply for converts' tickets. In any case, the progress of the movement in Birmingham has been such as greatly to encourage and cheer our American brethren and those who helped them in their labours, and we respond to Mr. Moody's hope that it may "continue for a year."

Mr. Moody's address to the converts was, as usual, most fitting. Pointing them to the true and only source of abiding strength, he warned them of the dangers ahead; and we hope his words will dwell in their hearts for many a year to come. His parting sentences were the expression of affectionate regard, and it was plain, from the demeanour of the audience, that the parting on their side was a most reluctant one.

Mr. Sankey sang the farewell hymn with great pathos and feeling; and on leaving the hall both he and Mr. Moody were besieged with friends anxious to receive a parting shake of the hand. They proceeded to Liverpool on Saturday.

Mr. G. E. Thomas writes concerning this meeting:—"We shall never forget that address." Such was the almost involuntary exclamation of a well-dressed mechanic who was standing by us in the aisle of Bingley Hall last night. And truly the work of the Lord in this town is such as has never before been seen here. We were praying and expecting great things, but the blessing has exceeded our expectations, never before have the people of every class been so moved and such glorious results followed. A week having elapsed since Mr. Moody left us, we are enabled to speak in a measure of results. First, the life of the ministers who have taken part has been largely increased, so that the testimony of many of the hearers last Sunday was, "Our minister preaches like a new man;" then the renewed life of the churches is already manifesting itself in the desire to work either in Sunday-schools or tract districts; and besides this the people outside are more disposed to hear the gospel, many coming into our churches and chapels last Sunday, and in more cases than one when notice was given out after the service that inquirers would be spoken to, numbers varying from twenty to sixty passed into the vestry, and many rejoiced in a new found Saviour. In our own chapel we have had services nightly, conducted by our brother, Mr. Nobbs, of Gloucester, and such a gracious time we never knew before, on each occasion the chapel being crowded, and many coming after into the vestry and going home happy in Jesus. Our hearts are indeed full of praise; should we be silent the stones might well cry out, "But we will bless the Lord from this time forth, and for evermore."

Park-hill, Moseley, Feb. 6, 1875. G. E. THOMAS.

GOOD WORK IN DORKING.

Some months since we laid before our readers an account of the labours of Miss Cotton here among the working-men and lads, who were formerly addicted to spending their evenings loitering at the street corners, and probably in public-houses. She has been enabled to commence and carry on classes of various kinds to which numbers of the labouring men have flocked, and the town has, to a great extent, been revolutionised. Gospel addresses have been given in connection with the classes with the happiest effects.

The work has now assumed such proportions that Miss Cotton is, we understand, much straitened with respect to the premises in which the meetings are held, and desires to enlarge them, in order to meet the growing necessities of the work. In a recent letter she writes: "The poor old rooms are like a nutshell to us now; both upper and lower are quite useless for the numbers that come. The necessary additions to both can be made for £200. We are quite overwhelmed with the work, and the people are getting impatient, not liking the heat of the rooms, or to be turned away so often. God is doing a mighty work here; we hear of fresh conversions and instances of reform every day or two."

We hope it is only necessary to mention these facts to elicit a hearty and speedy response from those able to help, and we cordially commend this matter to the prayers and substantial support of the Lord's stewards who may read these pages. Miss Cotton's address is, Tower-hill, Dorking.

GRAVESEND.—Rev. William Guest writes:—"We have had services here unprecedented in interest and attendance. For four nights the Assembly-rooms have been crowded to their utmost capacity. Some hundreds have stood every night for two or three hours, being unable to obtain seats. Excellent lay brethren from London have spoken, and the crowds have been most unwilling to go away. This first vigorous effort of services strictly unsectarian has been signally blessed of God."

NEW GOSPEL-HALL, BRISTOL.—It is now a little over twelve months since the Lord led me to make this city my headquarters for evangelizing; and, in looking back, the question is suggested, "What hath God wrought?" To his name be all the glory! Our gospel-tent, which was so wonderfully used of the Lord during the twenty-seven weeks of continued nightly services for the masses, has now been superseded by a substantial and commodious building, which has often since its opening been crowded with about 1000 persons; and, moreover, not a few have already been born of God beneath its roof. The hall is situated in the centre of a growingly populous neighbourhood, having the Hall of Freedom, so called, recently opened by the infidels, within sight. Our intention is (if the Lord will), as funds are forthcoming, to erect galleries, vestries, class-rooms, and schoolrooms, for which purpose sufficient ground has been secured. "Owe no man anything," was what we at first started with, and, by God's help, purpose strictly to adhere to. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember us before the throne of grace?

MESSES. MOODY & SANKEY AT LIVERPOOL.

FROM MR. SAMUEL NASH, SECRETARY Y.M.C.A.

The labours in Liverpool of our dear American brethren commenced on Sunday. For the accommodation of the evangelists Victoria Hall has been erected, Messrs. Haigh and Co. being the contractors. It is throughout a wooden structure of enormous strength; the internal dimensions of the building are 174 feet long by 124 feet wide, divided by two rows of upright columns, which form the front supports of the galleries, leaving an open central space 72 feet in width, and on either side a gallery 26 feet in depth. At the bottom end of the hall the gallery is 40 feet in depth, while the platform—40 feet square and 4 feet high—is at the other end. The total height of the building, from the floor to the ridge, is 52 feet, and to the eaves 25 feet. The hall will seat 8000 persons, but the passages are wide, and, with the standing room, nearly, if not quite, 11,000 persons may be able to hear easily what is going on.

For the purposes of daylight, over 80 windows have been provided. For evening services the building is lighted by twelve pendent circular gas coronæ, six on each side, each fitted with 150 jets. Underneath the galleries there are 14 smaller coronæ, each of these latter having 15 jets. The arrangements for lighting, warming, and ventilating the building are really excellent. There are 20 doors, all opening outwards, from 4 to 8 feet in width each.

There is a large "inquirers'-room" adjoining the platform end of the building, 116 feet long by 34 feet broad. Arrangements have been made by which this room may be divided if necessary by means of a curtain, thus giving two good-sized rooms, each nearly 60 feet long by 34 feet broad. This inquiry-room is lighted by skylights and gas-burners, and is entered by three large doors, one on either side of the platform, and one from the street.

Near to each of the entrance doors small wooden huts have been erected for colporteurs, who will dispose of hymn-books, Bibles, religious publications, and books.

The acoustic properties of the hall are very good. This large building has been constructed within forty days, and will cost £3500.

Friday (Feb. the 5th) was observed as a day of preparation for the visit, and special meetings for the purpose of waiting on God, and offering united confessions, praise and prayer, were held. The first of these meetings took place in the morning from eight till nine o'clock, nearly 400 persons being present, the Rev. Herbert Woodward (incumbent of St. Clement's) presiding, and founded a short exhortation upon Zech. iv. 6, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." At the mid-day service nearly 2000 were present. Mr. Thomas Matheon (chairman of the Committee of Arrangements) occupying the chair. From three to four o'clock a still larger meeting was presided over by the Rev. Canon Fallow, M.A. (St. Bride's Church), while the evening meetings, from seven to eight, and eight to nine o'clock, which were by far the largest attended of all, were conducted by the Rev. C. M. Birrell (Pembroke Baptist Chapel), and the Rev. Alexander M'Aulay (superintendent Wesleyan minister).

At each meeting a considerable number of the leading clergy and ministers of all denominations were upon the platform, showing the thoroughly unsectarian character of the movement, and the love and unity which unmistakably prevail to a large extent amongst the Lord's people (both clerical and lay) in Liverpool.

On Saturday evening, in the Hall, Mr. Sankey met the choir, which is a very efficient one (numbering 200 male and female voices), and which has been practising for some weeks past in the College Hall, Shaw-street, and the Institute, Mount-street, under the leadership of Mr. H. Snowdon.

FIRST MEETING.

The first meeting conducted by Mr. Moody was held on Sunday morning last at eight o'clock, and was specially for "Christian workers." About 4500 or more persons were present. There was a large attendance of ministers and other leading Christians on the platform. The proceedings commenced by Mr. Moody giving out the hymn,

"I am so glad that our Father in heaven Tells of His love in the book He has given;"

after the singing of which, the Rev. H. Baugh, M.A. (St. Mary Magdalen's Church), offered up prayer. Mr. Sankey (after having himself offered up a short prayer) then sang the hymn, "Ho, my comrades, see the signal," the congregation joining together in singing the chorus. Portions of the first chapter of Joshua and the sixth of Isaiah were read, and after Mr. Sankey had sung the hymn,

"Hark! the voice of Jesus crying,
'Who will go and work to-day?'"

Mr. Moody delivered his address to the Christian workers of Liverpool. Speaking from the portions of Scripture he had just previously read he urged upon the Lord's people to be very earnest and courageous in coming clear out from the world and testifying for the Master, to be true followers of the Lord Jesus, full of love, and showing in our lives—ay, and courtesances, too—the reality of the happiness and blessedness of being children of God, and thus promote his glory and the salvation of precious souls. "Scatter seeds of kindness" was then sung, after which the Rev. Thos. Macpherson, M.A. (Presbyterian minister), closed the meeting with prayer.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

Long before the appointed hour (three p.m.) the vast building was crowded in every part, while thousands were outside unable to obtain admission; indeed, several times the noise of the surging crowd vainly seeking even standing room, was distinctly heard inside the building, and once or twice threatened to interfere with the comfort of the meeting.

Further admissions being simply impossible, Mr. D. M. Drysdale took the opportunity of preaching to the crowds who still congregated outside the building.

At twenty minutes to three, Mr. Moody stepped upon the platform, and gave out the 100th Psalm, "All people that on earth do dwell." The singing of this well-known hymn by the thousands of voices was grand in the extreme, and very soul-stirring.

Mr. Thomas Fairclough having engaged in prayer, Mr. Sankey sang, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," amidst profound silence, each word of the hymn being distinctly heard in every part of the building.

Mr. Moody read a portion of 1 Cor. xv., and, after the singing of "I heard the Saviour say," delivered a most earnest and powerful address on "What is the Gospel?" He beautifully and simply explained the gospel, using Scripture after Scripture to prove his statements, again and again urging upon his hearers that "Christ had tasted death for every man," that "faith alone could save," and besought all present to "decide now, for now is the day of salvation." His remarks were very pointed, and illustrated by several touching anecdotes.

After singing, Mr. Moody concluded the meeting with prayer.

EVENING MEETING.

This meeting was announced to commence at 8.15, but long before this hour the entire building was again crammed to excess, thousands being unable to get in, and this, notwithstanding a continuous drizzling rain. At half-past seven (three-quarters of an hour before the time appointed) Mr. Moody gave out the hymn, "There is a gate that stands ajar," after which, Mr. D. M. Drysdale engaged in prayer. Mr. Sankey then sang as a solo, "There were ninety and nine," preceding it by prayer.

Mr. Moody then read the parable of the "Good Samaritan," Luke x. with running comments, bringing out clearly and very simply the gospel of the grace of God.

The hymns, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah," and "Safe in the arms of Jesus," having been sung, Mr. Moody took for his text Luke iv. 18, and preached therefrom a most powerful discourse, further bringing out the gospel. The address was in fact a continuation of the one delivered in the afternoon. He again made use of several most touching anecdotes to illustrate the truths he preached. Many a face was seen in the meeting with the cheeks bedewed with tears, and deep and frequent were the responses following many of Mr. Moody's utterances.

Mr. Sankey having sung "Prodigal come home," Mr. John Paterson, J.P., and the Rev. O. M. Birrell concluded the meeting with prayer.

One of the most noticeable features in connection with the afternoon and evening meeting was the vast numbers of men attending, especially young men, the great majority at both these large gatherings were males.

It has been arranged, that, for the present, the noon prayer-meeting shall be held in the hall, and the gospel preached each evening at half-past seven o'clock.

Will all the Lord's people in other towns join in prayer for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Liverpool, and that tens of thousands may be won for the Saviour.

OUR SOLDIERS AT PLYMOUTH.

Plymouth being so far from London, we are apt to feel ourselves a little cut off from the centre of spiritual activity and usefulness, yet the example of other places has not been quite lost upon us. For some years an active local committee have been successfully working a Soldiers' Institute, although on a very small scale for so large a garrison. But they believe the time has now arrived when some further effort must be made, as larger premises are required, and it is also thought advisable that the management should be the same as at Aldershot. Miss Daniell, with her usual kindness, came down to superintend the work in Plymouth for a short time. The increased success has been so marked, and the results so encouraging, that it has been determined, with Miss Daniell's sanction, to affiliate this institute with the one at Aldershot, and pass on members and workers from one to the other. The way seems also to have been providentially opened with regard to a suitable building, as an hotel, quite in the centre of the three towns, has been offered for sale.

The inhabitants of Plymouth and its neighbourhood have in a very short time most liberally subscribed upwards of £900 towards the £3000 required, and the committee, believing that they are engaged in a most important work for the spiritual benefit of the officers and soldiers of our army, look confidently forward to the time when the Lord will move the hearts of his people in other places to help both by their prayers and contributions.

Our treasurer is Mr. George Kingston, Devon and Cornwall Bank, Plymouth.—I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

A. HUTCHINSON, Major Royal Artillery.

Bull Point Barracks, Devonport, Feb. 6.

THE LATE JOHN ASHWORTH.—We have received from Mr. A. L. Calman, Balgay-terrace, Rochdale, a copy of a letter written by our beloved and esteemed friend, Mr. John Ashworth, shortly before his death, in which he recommends Mr. Calman as his successor to carry on the work in connection with the Chapel for the Destitute at Rochdale. Mr. Calman has undertaken the charge committed to him, and will issue the annual report (D.V.) in October next as usual, giving at the same time a sketch of Mr. Ashworth's life.

WATERFORD.—The work of the Lord in Waterford continues to prosper. He is indeed doing "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." The interest in the Evangelistic Union meetings, held in the Protestant Hall, is evidently increasing. There was a good attendance from the first, but for the last fortnight the building has been crowded at each service. "Surely the Lord is in this place," was the acknowledgment of many last night, as we bowed in silent prayer, asking that the words which had been spoken by his servants might find an entrance into the hearts of the hearers. The work is the Lord's. He is blessing it, and we can trustingly leave the result in his hands. It is intended to continue these services during February every Tuesday and Friday evening, at half-past seven o'clock.

PREPARATIONS IN LONDON.

We direct attention to an advertisement on another page, issued by the committee in charge of the arrangements in connection with the approaching services in London. We need hardly add anything to what is there stated respecting the inevitably large expenditure that will be incurred, but we trust that the great body of London Christians will promptly respond to the appeal that is made. Some of our leading citizens have contributed largely towards the expense; but as the expected blessing, when it comes, will extend to all classes, surely all will feel it incumbent upon them to bear the burden of money outlay in proportion to their ability.

A meeting, consisting of nearly one hundred ministers of various religious communities, was held on Monday, Jan. 25, at the Beaumont Institution, with a view to furthering the objects contemplated by the intended visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to the East of London.

Amongst those present were the Rev. Joseph Bardsley, Rector of Stepney; Rev. Dr. Kennedy, Stepney Meeting; Rev. S. Charlesworth, Rector of Limehouse; Rev. Dr. James, Wesleyan Chapel, Bow-road; Rev. G. T. Driffild, Rector of Bow; Rev. George Lamb, Stepney-green Tabernacle; Rev. J. F. Kitto, Vicar of St. Matthew's, Poplar; Rev. C. Stovel, Baptist Chapel, Commercial-street; and Rev. Wm. Tyler, Mile-end New-town Congregational Chapel.

On the motion of Dr. Kennedy, the Rector of Stepney took the chair, who called upon Dr. James to open the meeting with prayer.

Letters were read from the Rev. S. Bardsley, Rector of Spitalfields; Rev. J. Cohen, Rector of Whitechapel; Rev. J. P. Cachemaille, and Rev. E. Parnell, expressing their inability to attend, but cordially approving of the objects of the meeting.

After a statement by the Chairman relative to the circumstances which had brought them together, Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, R.N., and E. Paton, Esq., who attended as a deputation from the Central Committee, said they came to express the views and wishes of the Central Committee.

It was unanimously agreed to form a General Committee of all those friends present, with power to add to their number.

An Executive Committee was also formed of representatives of the various districts comprised in East London, from Aldgate to Stratford, and Victoria Park to Millwall.

It was unanimously resolved that the Rev. Joseph Bardsley, Rector of Stepney, be the permanent chairman; and the Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile-end-road; Rev. D. M. Jenkins, Mile-end-road Congregational Chapel; Rev. Thornley Smith, Wesleyan Chapel, Approach-road; Rev. J. Fletcher, Baptist Chapel, Commercial-road, to be honorary secretaries.

A circular has been issued to the clergy and ministers of the North of London calling a preliminary meeting to appoint a local committee to work in conjunction with the Central Committee. The circular is signed by R. C. Billing, B.A., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Islington; H. J. Berger, Vicar of St. Philip's, Arlington-square; J. Oswald Dykes, D.D., Regent-square Presbyterian Church; John Edmond, D.D., Park Church, Highbury; Joshua C. Harrison, Park Chapel, Camden Town; Robert Maguire, M.A., Vicar of Clerkenwell; Francis Tucker, B.A., Camden-road Chapel; Luke H. Wiseman, M.A., Highbury. [We greatly regret to state that the last-named gentleman has since died suddenly.]

A choir is being formed to aid the singing at the evangelistic meeting in March. Mr. Sankey requests that all who are willing to help will send their names. Address to Capt. Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N. Only those who can furnish good reference as to Christian character will be accepted.

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.—A Young Men's Meeting was commenced on Friday evening in the above hall, which was a great success. One object of this meeting is to band together young men, with a view to unity in prospect of the great work to which we are all looking forward. A meeting will be held every Friday evening at eight o'clock, to which all young men are invited.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES,

SURREY CHAPEL.

The following extracts are from the eighth report of these special services:—

The spiritual results continue to be very encouraging. During the past year exactly fifty children have been admitted into the Christian Band, and sixteen have been welcomed into the church at Surrey Chapel and elsewhere, most of them being scholars in our Sunday-schools.

Another gratifying and important feature is the fact that, out of our present band of eighteen helpers or teachers (all earnestly working amongst the inquirers at the after-meetings), fifteen were formerly children who attended and were led to decision for Christ at these special services.

Of those removed by death during the year, one was our valuable helper, Lewis Davis, aged twenty-one. Shortly after having been transferred from the Christian Band to the church at Surrey Chapel, he went on a voyage, died very suddenly on board ship from sunstroke, and his body was buried on the coast of South America. He was very useful, both in these services and in the Sunday-school, and was a striking illustration of how this special agency for the conversion of children not unfrequently brings to the Saviour some of our unconverted senior scholars.

The remainder of this report shall give, as briefly as possible, a few instances of the various ways in which the Saviour has been pleased to bless this special service to some of our little friends during the past year.

A boy, who, with two others, had trifled during the service, begged to remain to the inquiry-meeting, found Christ, and is now a consistent member of the Christian Band.

Another boy, after attending the services for some time, was led to decision for Christ at our summer anniversary meeting, was admitted into the Christian Band, and has recently joined the church. This same boy, immediately he had found the Saviour, induced another lad, a pot-boy at a neighbouring public-house, to come with him to the Sunday evening meeting. The lad was deeply impressed during the address from the words, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," requested special prayer at the after-meeting, and was enabled at once to look to Christ, and be saved. He soon left the public-house, and removed to Scotland, whence he writes to us full of Christian joy.

After one of the inquiry-meetings, a little boy of nine and a-half years, with beaming countenance, told the secretary that he wanted to speak to him. It was to say that he had given his youthful heart to Jesus. The conversation was deeply interesting. It appears that, on the preceding Friday evening, instead of attending the Band of Hope as usual, he remained at home, went into his little room alone, and there yielded his heart to Christ. He prayed the following little printed prayer, which had been given to all the children on a recent Sunday evening:—"O God, wash me from all my sins in my Saviour's blood, and I shall be whiter than snow! Fill me with the Holy Spirit, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen." And after that he added, "I prayed in my own words." That act of consecration was recorded in his diary. He joined the Christian Band, and subsequently the church.

As an instance of the importance of individual conversation and prayer with children, I may mention that one Sunday evening, after the inquirers' classes had been formed, the superintendent observed a little girl of sad countenance sitting alone at the farther end of the room. He spoke with her for a few moments about the love of the Lord Jesus for sinners, and how little children like her might at once come to Him and be blessed. She then joined very earnestly in a short, simple prayer, and he bid her good night. That was the first special service she had attended. She came to the next meeting, confessed joyfully her happy trust in the Saviour, and is now a most joyous Christian child and member of the Christian Band.

Some of our children, especially boys out at work, have to endure persecution, and much need our sympathy and prayer. A very earnest and interesting boy, who works at a neighbouring factory, told us, in the course of conversation, the other evening, that he is there surrounded by bad boys, who, having found out that he has confessed Christ, persecute him very much. Pointing contemptuously at him, they say, "He's a Christian! Yes, a pretty Christian! a Christian ought to be always reading his Bible." They did this because he had reproved them for swearing. We reminded him of the Saviour's example and words, and advised him to be kind to them, and pray for them.

"I do," he replied; "I go on errands for them, and help them all I can."

"That is right," we said; "they will soon find out that a boy who is a Christian is better and kinder than a boy who is not a Christian."

I will close this report with the loving benediction of a little dumb girl, aged eleven, which may encourage the hearts of all who are striving to bring little children to Jesus. It is a pleasant and a growing habit with some of our little friends to bring us their favourite texts. Here is one which little dumb Nellie slipped into my hand a few evenings since: "Dear Mr. T., I have wrote you this text, 'Whoso shall receive one such little child in My name, receiveth Me.'" SAMUEL TYLER.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN EAST BRENT.

My dear Brother in Christ,—Possibly some of your readers may remember that I addressed a letter to you a year and a half ago, describing the deplorable teaching to which the people of the above-mentioned place are exposed, and the efforts made by some Christian friends to disseminate the gospel there.

So terribly opposed to the gospel were the statements which I then quoted from Mr. Henry Denison's sermons, that I myself verified them by the personal testimony of two hearers before sending them; and more than one of your readers hesitated to believe that any teaching so erroneous could have been correctly reported.

More recently, in November last, however, my attention has been drawn to the reports of shorthand-writers of lectures in East Brent Church, and to indignant protests against the teaching, in the local newspapers of Weston and Bristol, which evidence that the melancholy errors of the ministers of that locality are in no material degree modified; and a startling proof of their tendency has been given within a few weeks, in the perversion to Rome of a young lady, the daughter of a highly-respected and beloved evangelical clergyman in that neighbourhood, who unhappily visited Brent, and drank in the teaching there.

And this sad result must ensue in the case of many others exposed to these doctrines, unless the Lord's people are earnest to oppose and counteract the evil by teaching the true gospel of the grace of God.

I rejoice to say that those efforts which have been made here have been much blessed. The scriptural education of the children in the British School, and the Mission services, have been maintained prayerfully and steadily by the friends who originated the work.

The schoolmaster and his wife are the Lord's workers, true missionaries, and the education they give is based on loving Bible teaching, thoroughly penetrating all their instruction, and contemplating nothing short of the salvation of his children's souls. Of course, in order to be quite unfettered in teaching the Bible, no Government aid is sought or accepted; and hitherto the friends who have carried on the work have had faith to trust that the Lord will put it into the hearts of his children to supply the needful funds.

I rejoice to say that during the past year a great reinforcement has been added to the Lord's workers in that locality. The Somersetshire Scripture-readers' Society granted the salary of a Scripture-reader for East Brent, and the Lord has found for the work a very faithful young man, a true evangelist, who now, with his young wife, is quietly, and prayerfully, and believingly labouring for the souls of the people around them.

We have ample evidence that the modest, unsectarian, loving testimony of these good men is powerfully drawing the hearts of their neighbours, and winning their interest and affection for the gospel; some have been already, the Lord be praised, brought to the feet of Jesus, and we are looking for an abundant harvest in East Brent.

The Mission services have been carried on by Christian friends from Bristol, Weston, and Clevedon, and have been un denominational and uncontroversial, wholly confined to the preaching of the gospel of the grace of God.—I remain, my dear brother, in the bonds of Jesus, faithfully yours, Clevedon, Jan. 31, 1875. C. J. BRAD, M.A.

P.S.—If any one is disposed to contribute, the treasurer of the Mission is Frederick Wills, Esq., Clevedon, Somerset.

THE MISSION IN LEEDS.

Our town has been deeply stirred. An "eager, anxious throng" of 40,000 people at once has been moved, while Jesus of Nazareth has passed by. The sacerdotal element has not been wanting, but there has been, on the whole, a glorious proclamation of salvation through the crucified One.

In the great factories of our town, multitudes have listened to the glorious gospel, and for these special services the four hymns beginning, "Jesu, lover of my soul," "When I survey the wondrous cross," "Rock of ages, cleft for me," and "Just as I am, without one plea," have been exclusively used. Everywhere Christ on the cross has been lifted up, and "Look unto Him, and be saved," has been the message. The "light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ," has, for the time, put out the ritualistic candle.

The Nonconformists have been deeply stirred. Our prayers, our sympathy, our co-operation, have been gladly and thankfully rendered.

Rev. W. H. Aitken's labours have been the most marked of any. With a John-the-Baptist-like ruggedness and fervour, he has in our public halls from day to day so proclaimed the glorious gospel, that now, if we had but a building as large as Bingley Hall, Birmingham, he would fill it.

The interest is just now at its height. Last night our Town-hall was so inadequate, that Oxford-place Chapel adjoining was thrown open, and there might be seen a clergyman of the Church of England in the pulpit, preaching to the people "all the words of this life."

We are all a little bewildered as to what to do with the movement in its present aspect; but the Spirit of all wisdom and grace will guide us into a knowledge of his will.

Prayer is going up everywhere that those who have received, and are receiving, "the word with joy," may not be either "wayside" or "stony-ground" hearers; but, by the abundant fruits of love and holiness, from henceforth may show that the word has fallen into honest and good hearts.

Amongst us all the one feeling is, that the grand old gospel is the one good thing the people need, and the one only and all-sufficient remedy for all the evils, personal, social, and national, of our own and of every age.

"Thy precious blood Shall never lose its power."

—Thine very truly,

W.

The following is from the Leeds Mercury :—

"Leeds has been the scene of a very unusual excitement during the past week. In the middle of the day men of business have left their merchandise; during the hours of labour the steam-engine has been checked; before the ordinary time for closing shopkeepers have put up their shutters; and, strange to say, these wonders have been accomplished neither by fast nor feat, neither by an extraordinary calamity, nor by an ordinary occasion for rejoicing. Religion has done it all. In this great centre of industry, religion has arrested business and manufacture, has succeeded in stirring society to its depths, and in showing herself in a new light to thousands. Men have been led to reflect that this is a subject of practical importance; for its reality has been put to a rough test, and they have seen it stop a mill and lock an office-door. They have discovered that the future world—of which we hear in our best clothes on Sunday, and which we too often shut out from our sight when we place the clothes in their drawer on Sunday night—is almost as real a thing to some as that 'rainy day' for which we toil and save. They have even heard a Bishop talking in his every-day coat in every-day English in a machine-room, and they have heard him gladly. In language as unvarnished as the scene, congregations assembled among lathes and looms have been told of a 'Son of Man' who came to seek and to save that which was lost. Such songs as 'Jesu, lover of my soul,' have burst from thousands of manly voices, to ring amid the rafters of a tool-shed. Formality has been flung to the winds. Enthusiasm has risen to such a height, as to dispense with forms; and prayers fresh from warm hearts have filled the Episcopal churches and public rooms of the town, compelling the most thoughtless to acknowledge the power of religion. Chill and cold must be the heart that could witness the scenes we have reported unmoved. Indeed, even chill and cold hearts have been stirred by the powerful wave of religious feeling that has passed over the town.

"It is right that we should confess to the pleasure we have felt in observing how far sectarian feeling has been forgotten. This has been one of the distinguishing signs of the week, and it is the more to be observed because politicians have not in the meanwhile overlooked the question of Establishment.

'As we wax hot in faction,
In battle we wax cold,' is quite as true in religion as it is in war. The converse is equally true. When Christian men are fully absorbed in their noblest work, their points of dispute dwindle, and they understand that their Commander-in-Chief requires more room than is commonly allotted to Him in religious systems. It is instructive to notice how large a share of the success of the Mission is due to the general use of free prayer. Beautiful as is the liturgy of the Church of England, it loses much of its natural force by constant usage, and lately it has lost much more by the introduction of the practice of intoning. We wish that the clergy could perceive the effect that has been produced on multitudes by that method of reading the service. 'These men pray as if they meant it,' was the remark of a working man last week, who had long been accustomed to the 'sing-song' voice. Sing-song had given him the impression that the parson 'did not mean it.' 'As if they meant it' is the key to the success of the whole movement.

"Immense is the power of Christianity in earnest. Even the most staid observer must confess that we have been told nothing new during the week. Indeed, the addresses which have excited such a marked influence have been much simpler than the elaborate discourses which pour from many pulpits every Sunday; but how much greater has been their effect! The clergy and laity of the Church of England have learnt for themselves, and helped to teach others, that religion must reach the head through the heart, and that even in these enlightened days it is impossible profitably to reverse the process. They have realized what the clever men of all sects often fail to realize, how very just was the assertion of the great Founder of Christianity, that a personal Christ will regenerate the world better than any form or creed. Nor is it a small matter that employers of labour have been induced to lay their works idle. The A B C of Christ's teaching is that men should deny themselves. Nothing is so certain to convince others, and the masters who freely sacrifice an hour's labour for the sake of their religion give evidence of sincerity which itself will have more effect than a score of sermons."

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Dear Sir,—I came to Leeds on Tuesday, and was privileged to take part in the thanksgiving services held in St. James's Church, where the Rev. W. H. Aitken had been the Mission preacher. It was a touching sight to see the body of the church crowded with about 700 communicants, many of whom had received blessing during the services.

Leeds has been stirred more deeply than any other town where a similar movement has taken place. It is estimated that out of a population of 280,000, no less than 50,000 have been listening, night after night, to the preaching of the gospel. Much earnest prayer has been offered for months past, and a rich blessing has been vouchsafed. At the parish church, the number of awakened sinners has been very large. From early in the morning until late at night the whole time of the Mission preacher, the Rev. G. H. Wilkinson, of Eaton-square, has been taken up with anxious souls, and it has been his blessed privilege to lead very many to the Saviour.

At all the supplementary meetings held in the Town-hall by the Rev. W. H. Aitken, there have been a large number of seeking souls, and numbers have gone away rejoicing in the knowledge of forgiveness through the blood of Christ.

On Friday evening, Feb. 5, the hall was packed with three or four thousand men, who listened with breathless attention to the gospel message; and after the sermon two large rooms were filled with anxious souls, while many remained to the after-meeting, and were spoken to by believers in the hall.

The greatest sympathy for the work has been manifested by the Nonconformists of the town, who have thrown themselves heartily into the work, and helped it on in every possible way.

I venture to think that this wonderful outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on Leeds has its lesson for the Christians of England. Let Christians of every name unite in earnest, believing prayer and effort, and we shall see even greater things than these. This morning the concluding address was given by Mr. Aitken in the Town-hall on Psa. cxxvii. In illustration of verse 6, he referred in a very touching way to his sainted father, and told us that among the earliest recollections of his childhood were the sobs and groans and prayers of his father in the room underneath, and which were often the last sounds he heard as he closed his eyes in sleep. As a churchman, he rejoiced that this work had begun in the Church of England, and that the Nonconformists of Leeds, forgetting the coldness and sin which had disgraced the Church in time past, and had really caused the alienation of so many from her communion, had manifested such a loving, Christian spirit. He said that beneath the cross of Christ there was common ground on which all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ could unite to do his work, and described the present work of grace as God's great Liberation Society for the emancipation of souls.

A great united prayer and praise-meeting of all denominations is to be held in the Town-hall this evening.

Truly, the Christians of Leeds can say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad," and are encouraged still to pray—"Turn our captivity, O Lord, as the rivers in the south." G. H.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

The blessed work has been going on at Leeds since the 24th ult. Churches filled to overflowing every night, and schoolrooms and chapels opened to take the overflow. Bible-readings and lectures were attended in a manner never before seen in Leeds. Truly, the Lord was present in power. I was only able to be present on the last Sunday. In the morning I attended St. James's, where the Rev. W. H. H. Aitken was the missionary. He is well known as a revivalist, and his power it is impossible to describe. He riveted his hearers for three-quarters of an hour, and the deep impression left showed that many a heart felt that the word was from God. I could understand Mr. Aitken, with his marvellous power, drawing such large congregations, and I was anxious to see if other mission preachers got the crowd Mr. Aitken did, and whether they could keep the attention of their hearers. I had heard that a clergyman from Sheffield (Rev. G. J. Watts) was at St. Clement's, and drawing very large congregations; and being myself a Sheffield man, I thought I would go in the evening to St. Clement's. I got there long before the time for service, and found the church quite full. Forms and chairs were placed in every available corner. All the steps up to the communion table were filled, and there was scarcely room for the choir to pass to their places. Mr. Watts preached from 1 Kings xviii. 21. The word was indeed with power. For nearly three-quarters of an hour he riveted the attention of that vast gathering. Apparently without a note before him, he poured out words which seemed to go home to every heart. I shall never forget the close of his sermon. Holding the people, as it were, breathless, he called upon all who were for Baal or the world to rise; then, after a pause that seemed almost awful, with a voice clear and thrilling, he bid all who were "halting between two opinions," who were "undecided," to rise. These calls were not responded to. Then the preacher, after another pause, said, "Those who are on the Lord's side, stand up." Almost before the last word was uttered, the whole congregation were upon their feet. The sensation was wonderful; even the preacher seemed startled at the effect he had produced. Tears were pouring down the eyes of many. As that vast congregation stood with eyes fixed upon the preacher, he asked them to sing the hymn, "Oh, happy day, that fixed my choice." At the close of the hymn, Mr. Watts said he should go across to the schoolroom and hold an after-meeting for those who did not remain to the Communion. In a few minutes the schoolroom was packed in every corner, and when I left at 10.30 there were still at least one hundred then remaining to be spoken to. It was the nearest approach to the glorious services lately held in Sheffield by those great and good men, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, that I ever saw.

I came away praising God for his goodness in raising up men for such blessed work as I had witnessed in Sheffield and at Leeds. May the Lord graciously bless the many efforts now being carried on in different parts of his vineyard to win souls to Christ.

Sheffield, Feb. 4.

We have also received an interesting account of the services in New Wortley Parish Church, somewhat similar to the foregoing. Our correspondent says one of the features of the Mission has been the number of cases in which both husband and wife have been brought to the Lord.

Another correspondent says:—

It has been most delightful to see Churchman and Quaker, Methodist and Independent, kneeling by the side of anxious ones, and pouring out their hearts to God for their conversion. Christians have been lifted up above the little dividing lines of denominations, and have remembered only "that One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." A large committee, representing the various Nonconformist churches, has been appointed to meet a similar committee of our Episcopal brethren, to carry on this blessed work."

MR. SOMERVILLE AT ALLAHABAD.

On his leaving Calcutta, some of the brethren in Allahabad invited Mr. Somerville to visit this station in the North-west Provinces. He commenced his labours on Sunday the 3rd instant, preaching at the Cannington Chapel in the morning, and at the Scotch Kirk in the evening, on both which occasions he had a large audience. In the interval between the two services, Mr. Somerville gave an address at the Zilla school to the educated native gentlemen of Allahabad, taking for his subject the circumstance recorded in Acts when there appeared to Paul in a vision a man in Macedonian garb, saying, "Come over and help us." He told the people how the gospel which had first been preached in Asia was, by means of this vision, carried over to Europe; and now, in these latter times, God was sending back the message of mercy to Asiatics. The audience were well pleased with the address, and signified their desire to hear the Scotch preacher again.

From Monday, the 4th January, to Thursday the 14th, Mr. Somerville held a series of services, consisting of Bible-readings and prayer in the morning, and of evangelistic services in the evening. The former were held in Cannington Chapel, and were attended by about one hundred people of all denominations; the latter took place in the Scotch Kirk and Railway Theatre, and were attended by crowded audiences of from four to six hundred. Mr. Somerville's Bible-readings were very choice, and his expositions very lucid and practical. The daily requests for prayer read out on each successive morning, and responded to by the audience in silent supplication, were very numerous and varied in character, and showed that there is much spiritual life in Allahabad and an earnest desire for the salvation of immortal souls. The evangelistic addresses in the evenings were all characterized by simplicity, point, and fervour, and were frequently illustrated by telling anecdotes. There is reason to believe that these have been blessed to many souls, that the weak have been strengthened, the thoughtless aroused, backsliders reclaimed, and that God's own dear people have had their faith increased and their zeal quickened.

At 1 P.M., January 10, Mr. Somerville addressed about four hundred Sabbath-school children at the Railway Theatre on the history of Ishmael; and two hours after he again preached to educated natives from the story of Christ's visit to the house of Zaccheus. On the following evening, Mr. Somerville spoke to the soldiers in the regimental schoolroom on Jonathan and his armour-bearer. This was followed on Tuesday night by an address to young men on the fiery furnace, when not less than six or seven hundred persons were present, although admission was allowed only by tickets. Immediately after this service, several young men stayed behind, and a Young Men's Christian Association was organized, having for its chief object the advancement of the spiritual interests of its members, and, as subordinate to this, their intellectual and social improvement.

On Thursday, January 14, which was Mr. Somerville's last day in Allahabad, a special conference was held, in which several ministers took part. At this conference, which was presided over by Mr. Somerville, the following questions were considered:—

"1. How far the methods of evangelization found at present to be so successful in the British Isles and elsewhere, may be made available for the native population of India.

"2. How to reach the lapsed and lapsing classes of society who are nominally Christian.

"3. How to awaken and promote a sense of responsibility in the minds of Christians living in India, in respect to the salvation of their countrymen, and to that of the Hindu and Mohammedan population."

The consideration of the above topics was followed by brief practical answers given by Mr. Somerville and others to various questions connected with Christian life and labour; and then, after a short interval, Mr. Somerville delivered an address upon the office of the Holy Spirit in the economy of grace.

In all these services, Mr. Somerville was ably seconded by his son, Mr. W. F. Somerville, who brought out with him a cabinet organ from Scotland, and presided most efficiently at the service of song. G.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN CANADA.

Mrs. Varley sends us portions of a letter from one of Mr. Varley's helpers, of whom there are quite a band:—

"Your account of being safe at home reaches us here whilst very full of the Lord's work in the hands of your dear husband. He will have told you of the blessing that flowed at Hamilton, and is now flowing here also. Praise His holy name. Of course everywhere everybody says, 'Oh! this is the place to tarry.' At Toronto they want him for another month, and every town in this Western Canada, and large churches are filled afternoons and evenings with listening throngs, that never heard such glad tidings, or words of faithful dealing, or are ever likely to hear it.

"The whole tone of the churches in this country is being raised, and from end to end is open to Henry Varley. He is being used to unite the two largest bodies, Methodists and Presbyterian—all are being profited, and the blessed Bible is becoming precious to thousands. It is for him the honour of being an ambassador to the churches."

Mr. Varley is expected home early in March. The Lord has been gracious to the church over which he is pastor, and faithful preachers have been sent to proclaim a full and free salvation to good congregations each Lord's-day, though the members of his flock are longing for his return.

Miss Macpherson also writes from Brantford, Jan. 16, 1875:—

If the hearts of God's children were led to praise Him for blessing at Toronto, through the Blessed Master using his child, Henry Varley, we can again and again call you to continue that song. For in the towns of St. Catherine's, Hamilton, and now at Brantford, the dear children of God have realised a blessed revival in their own souls, making, as we have heard hundreds describe it, the precious Bible a new book to them.

The following is the way the work is spoken of by Canadians themselves:—"The interest in these meetings, which were continued for the greater part of the month, was very deep and general. By many Christian people they were found to be at once instructive and quickening in a high degree, and it is believed that in the case of not a few of all ages and of all classes, but especially of the children of Christian parents, they issued under God in their decisive acceptance of the Saviour, surrender of will and affection to Him. And to God, who strengthened his servant to undergo so great an amount of labour, and who won acceptance for his message in one heart and another, be all the praise."—Toronto Globe.

These towns have witnessed scenes of blessing unknown before.

Hotels' billiard-rooms have been emptied, the worlding exclaiming, "Gone to hear Varley! What does it mean?" and, to find out, they, too, seek for admission. What our poor lost world is longing for is just this lifted-up Saviour. Wonderfully sweet have been the manifestations of his own drawing power. In every place visited, wherever the children of the Father were in one accord, and with much expectancy, there the blessing came in rich abundance.

The dear farmers and their wives day after day sleigh in eight and twelve miles to listen to the fresh unfoldings of the wondrous truths dwelt upon, so that the glad tidings are spreading from east to west, and north to south. Yea, the whole churches throughout the Dominion are thirsting for a deeper baptism. Ask that the servant of the Lord may be sustained and guided by the Spirit in every town. He would have him go to. Limit not the Holy One of Israel, as heretofore. May this whole continent be witnessed to as never before, and every eye filled with deepest longing for a coming Lord.

Thus much of a great and glorious work, of which volumes could be written, full of songs of praise.—Yours in Jesus,
ANNIE MACPHERSON.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES AT FORESTERS' MUSIC HALL.

Dr. Sharpe, in a communication full of interest, but for which we cannot find space, gives many particulars of the recent services held by Joshua Poole in the Foresters' Music Hall, Mile End. It was taken by Mr. F. N. Charrington at the opening of this year, and intended to follow up the services of the summer in the large tent. The hall seats nearly three thousand, and is densely packed on every occasion, and, what is better still, with the very class of people for whom the preaching is intended. Hundreds of workmen and their wives, many who never set foot in church or chapel, pigeon-flyers, bird-catchers, and poor outcasts known by their flashy attire—all these are drawn together by the influence and attractive power of the gospel as preached by our brother, Joshua Poole. The attention and interest of the audience is most remarkable for that locality, and is only a true indication of the gracious, solemn work God is carrying on in the hearts of many of the denizens of the East-end. Much fruit and good is already apparent in the lives as well as the professions of a large number. At the close of the service in the Foresters' Hall, the anxious retire to the Oxford-street Hall, where Christian friends are in attendance to converse with them.

Our dear brother, Joshua Poole, writes: "May the Lord give us all wisdom to let down the net on the right side of the ship, for the fields are ripe to the harvest." There is much joy and gratitude in the hearts of those dear East-end workers, with a deep sense of what still remains to be done. Will our readers pray frequently for this locality.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

Beloved Brethren,—This is the twelfth year since my heading, as above, first appeared in the pages of The Revival. To the covenant Three in One—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—be the praise and the glory that I have been continued to this day testifying to the lapsed and dark masses around that Jesus is the Christ, the Mighty to save.

Bearing in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus Christ, the result of the long-continued (and oft painful) labours to the outcasts, my soul seems to grasp my pen and write more firmly and strongly than ever, "Have faith in God."

The shepherd having found the lost sheep as the fruit of his labour and search, is not content to keep the joy consequent to himself, but calls others to share. The Lord has been graciously giving us the joy of harvest, ay, goodly sheaves! and I would that others should rejoice and praise with us.

Let me say to his glory that I have been more encouraged in visible results of late than I have been in the whole course of my spiritual experience, extending from 1858.

Ay, since the great, good, and tender Shepherd visited our household, and bore back, in August last, to his own bright fold, our precious one with joy, the work seems to have revived greatly, and largely-increased spiritual power vouchsafed. I have been favoured in seeing numbers confess Jesus, from the white-haired old man, down to the precious little lamb in our Sunday-school.

"Oh, for hearts and tongues to sing, Glory, glory to our King."

Some of the cases are of the deepest interest. One, a dear girl of about eighteen, whose sight is fast going. Doctors say nothing can stop it going altogether. Praise the Lord for giving to her spiritual sight and light ere it has gone. By the aid of very strong spectacles, she seeks to store her mind with the Word ere the time comes when she can read it no longer.

One after the other the Lord brought to Himself the three daughters of one family. Since then the dear mother has confessed Jesus; and now we are praying and looking for the father to complete the circle.

In 1860, the Lord gave me the soul of a young woman for Jesus. She was living with a man at the time. I had them married. She has held on her way with us ever since. Much prayer all these years has been made for the husband, and a week or two back, at the close of a service, I had the joy of joining their hands as one in Christ. Since then, one of their dear children has been led to Jesus in the Sunday-school.

Fearing to trespass too much upon your space, I cease

(if you allow me to say) for the present. I ask for cordial, earnest praises and thanksgiving to be rendered to Him for all the past, and oh, will dear readers plead for us poor labourers in the dark, back streets of Spitalfields that all grace and needs may be daily given.—I am, my dear brother, yours faithfully,

WILLIAM JOSEPH LEWIS.

14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E., Feb. 3, 1875.

[It may be that in the great and prominent work of our American brethren, the faithful, persevering, and more hidden labours of others of God's beloved servants seem to be overlooked. This is very far from our wish; we are very sure they are not overlooked by the Master. It would be a grievous mistake to undervalue one class of labourers because others are for the time more prominent. We were never more anxious than now to receive all true work for Christ, and we are always glad to record the pithy and valuable notes of faithful brethren like our beloved friend, W. J. Lewis.—Ed.]

DR. CRANAGE'S OBJECT-LESSONS.

In the New Hall, Wellington, Salop, on Sunday, Jan. 24, Dr. Cranage gave the first of a series of descriptive lectures on "Noah's Ark; its Physical Structure, Dimensions, Use, Type, and Moral Teachings." The lecture brought immense numbers to the hall, which was inconveniently crowded, so that many had to stand the whole time.

As his custom is, Dr. Cranage had provided himself with suitable objects for the lecture in numerous animals and birds, modelled in wood, and a wonderfully-constructed ark, made, in all its proportions, on a scale according to the Ark of the Deluge, being half-an-inch to the cubit, or forty-two times less than the original. This needed the model to be twelve feet six inches in length.

The ark was placed on the platform, with one of its sides towards the audience, Dr. Cranage not wishing to expose the storeys and sections of its interior till a future day, when he hopes to show the rooms, and stalls, and food-stores God had commanded to be made and provided, thus showing how He cared for the comfort as well as the safety of his creatures.

From the platform, and down the centre of the hall, a long, narrow platform had been erected, fifty-one feet in length; this was elevated on standards three feet five inches high, so as to bring all the animals within the field of vision. The whole length of this table was covered with green baize, and the little models arranged in Scripture order from one end to the other. Going to the platform end, we saw the model of Noah nearest to the open door of the ark; next to him his three sons; then came Noah's wife and three daughters, suggesting a separation of the sexes during the time of the judgment of waters. These were followed by the clean animals in sevens, then the clean birds and insects in sevens, as God had said. Now comes a long line of the unclean birds and beasts, not in sevens, but in pairs, the male and his female, as God commanded Noah. The character of the lecture was redemptive, humane, scientific, and sanitary.

God willing, Dr. Cranage promises to continue these Noah's Ark lessons on Sunday evenings, which will take him many weeks to accomplish.

EAST LONDON MISSION SEWING-CLASSES.

We are asked by the Hon. Elisabeth Waldegrave to plead the cause of the sewing-classes of the East London Mission and Relief Society. "They are, with a few special exceptions, composed of very poor and respectable widows. The prosperity of the working classes does not affect them, but has rather dried up many little sources of charity which reached to them before. We wish friends could come and witness the eagerness with which these needy ones walk long distances in the coldest weather, and work a whole afternoon to earn sixpence, and their deep gratitude for it.

"We have now ten classes of from fifty to seventy, but we are anxious to add some more during the next few weeks, at the earnest request of many of those labouring nearly single-handed among the masses of poor around them, to whom they have proved such a help in past winters.

For each sovereign sent, two more widows can have work for seven weeks, all extra expenses being met by other sources. Thus an opportunity is given to others to help many whom they could not otherwise reach, and of seeking out some of the many thousands of uncared-for and unknown ones in this great city.

Contributions may be forwarded to Hon. Elisabeth Waldegrave, 70, Portland-place; or to the secretary, East London Mission and Relief Society, 2, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

RAYS FROM THE CROSS. Addresses by H. GRATTAN GUINNESS. Edited by C. E. H. J. E. Hawkins.—Six recent addresses, well worth retaining in this more permanent form. The two entitled, "Facts, not Fables," "Behold your God," are forcibly instructive.

FROM JERUSALEM TO ANTIOCH. Sketches of the Primitive Church. By J. OSWALD DYKES, M.A., D.D. Hodder and Stoughton.—A series of pictorial essays or discourses, tracing "the course of events from the Lord's Ascension down to the commencement of formal missionary enterprise among the Gentiles by the Church at Antioch." Taking the sketch of Stephen the proto-martyr as an example of the rest, these chapters are distinguished by vividness of description and chasteness of diction; as expositions, they are comprehensive, if not exhaustive; and while they are most instructive for family reading, they are peculiarly valuable to preachers and teachers. We heartily commend the volume.

THE HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM. By the Rev. J. A. WYLLIE, LL.D. Parts I.—IV. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.—Now that the battle of the Reformation has to be fought over again, and the insidious enemy of God and man, the harlot pseudo-church of the seven hills, is sitting on her seat in the high places of the city, to call passengers who go right on their ways, the publication of this History is very opportune. The author has had long acquaintance with the subject, and is an eloquent writer on a theme of world-wide interest. The illustrations are good and numerous; the paper and print excellent; the price at the rate of 48 pp. royal octavo for 7d. We wish it a very extensive circulation.

THE CHILD'S BIBLE. Part I. 6d. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.—This is another of the well-printed and illustrated issues of the same publishers; but we confess we would rather our children had the Bible as God has given it, than pruned and trimmed according to man's prophaness.

THE STORY OF THE SCOTTISH CHURCH.—In noticing this book three weeks ago, we inadvertently stated the publishers to be Hodder and Stoughton, instead of Blackie and Son.

DAILY TEXTS.

"THERE ARE THAT RAISE UP STRIFE AND CONTENTION."
HAB. I. 8.

Thurs., Feb. 11.—"If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." "Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men."—Acts v. 38, 39; 1 Cor. xiv. 20.

Fri. 12.—"Only by pride cometh contention; but with the well-advised is wisdom." "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom...For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work."—Prov. xiii. 10; James iii. 13, 16.

Sat. 13.—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences...and avoid them." "Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread."—Rom. xvi. 17; 2 Thess. iii. 12.

Sun. 14.—"The Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and His name one." "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Zech. xiv. 9; Eph. iv. 5, 6.

Mon. 15.—"The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient." "These things doth the Lord hate...a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."—2 Tim. ii. 24; Prov. vi. 16, 19.

Tues. 16.—"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind...Is Christ divided?"—1 Cor. i. 10, 13.

Wed. 17.—"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!...It is as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion."—Psa. cxxxiii. 1, 3; Isa. lii. 8.

"STAND FAST IN ONE SPIRIT, WITH ONE MIND STRIVING TOGETHER FOR THE FAITH OF THE GOSPEL."—PHIL. I. 27.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.—For some little time past we have been holding special services at the new Mission-chapel, with the avowed object of reaching the lowest classes in and around St. Giles's, hitherto all but untouched by the ordinary efforts of the Mission. For the first fortnight, Bendigo and other brethren were with us; and the simple, unaffected story, as told by our brother night after night, was very telling, and made a marked impression upon scores of rough Irishmen, who crowded into the chapel at every service. This week our dear friend, Henry Lyon, is amongst us with his harp to sing and preach the gospel. We have been permitted to see some striking cases of blessing, but feel quite persuaded that far greater things are just about to be witnessed amongst the untouched masses of this needy portion of our great city. Brethren, pray for St. Giles's!

MOTHERS' PRAYER-MEETINGS.—A goodly number of Christian mothers are now meeting every Wednesday afternoon at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, to pray specially for the conversion of their children; and through God's mercy in answer to prayer, similar meetings are being formed in other parts of Ireland. This is a movement in the right direction, and devoutly is it desired that these gatherings of praying mothers may become very general throughout the country. The Lord waits to be gracious. Let mothers, therefore, come together and pray, as mothers only can pray, for the life of their children. "The promise is unto you and to your children," and will assuredly be fulfilled to all who obey the divine injunction, "Pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord; lift up thy hands toward Him for the life of thy young children." J. G.

ELGIN.—Some of your readers may remember a request for prayer on behalf of special services to be held in the Free South Church last month. These meetings, spite of repeated disappointments as to expected supply, continued to be largely attended, and the interest was such as to warrant their being prolonged over a fortnight. From first to last there was much solemnity, and while many of God's people felt the season a true time of refreshing, it is cheering to know that the effects were not confined to them, and that not a few professed to have come under impression. Among those who took part were the Rev. Nugent McPhail, High Church, Elgin, who struck the key-note of the series by a stirring sermon; Ingram, Rothiemay, Ball, Frickheim, Lins, and Pringle, of the U. P. Church; and Anderson, Congregational, Elgin. In the Sabbath-school especially, much impression has been received, a fact which may interest those who may recollect a special request for prayer sent in on behalf of the young.

CLAPHAM.—A daily prayer-meeting, largely attended, is held at Clapham, four times in the Wesleyan Schoolroom at noon, and twice in St. James's Schools in the evening.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For manifest blessing given at the Mission services in the Staffordshire Potteries, where many souls were won to Christ.—For great blessing received in Stanstead Abbots during the Mission week, for which prayer was requested in THE CHRISTIAN.—For an unlooked-for opening at last amongst the poor old soldiers of the first French Empire, who now eagerly listen to the gospel message.—For great and manifest blessing granted at Tisbury, Trowbridge, and Devizes.—For the droppings of a shower of blessing at Guilden Morden.—For several souls led to Jesus at a village Bible-reading, and pray for continued blessing.—For very gracious answers to prayer, asked for in THE CHRISTIAN, for the Mission at Cork, between Jan. 18 and 23.—For the hopeful conversion of one who was more than once petitioned for in THE CHRISTIAN, as a sceptic. Pray that he may become a shining light in a dark neighbourhood.—For manifest tokens of God's blessing at Craw-crook, attending the present preaching of the word by James Osborne, of Silloth.—For tokens of awakening in the county of Westmeath.

PRAYER.—That the speakers at the soldiers' meetings in Paris, and who, save Mr. G. Ferrer, are all laid low with exposure and fatigue, through the late inclement weather, may be speedily raised up again, as the meetings are more thronged than ever, and there is manifest blessing.—For a gentleman suffering torture from neuralgia, that the good Lord would reveal Himself to him, and give him submission.—For a Christian boy at a large public school, exposed to very great temptation.—On behalf of the policeman, postmen, fire brigade, cab, omnibus, and tramway-car men of this great city, and that suitable helpers may be sent to work for Jesus among them.—That one of the Lord's servants long out of health may be perfectly restored.—A mother advanced in years brings her afflicted daughter to Jesus for healing, if it be His will.—For a Bible-class of young women, lately begun in the Highlands.—For a lady, a professed Christian, that she may be quickened into spiritual life, and be enabled to forgive one who has offended her.—For an old man, who is "trying hard" to believe on Jesus, but cannot find Him.—For an office-bearer in the church, who is addicted to strong drink.—That a young man suffering in his head may be restored to health, if it be the Lord's will, and thus enabled to work harder for Him.—For one who is saying, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"—For my brother, that he may be brought to realise his true position in God's sight, and to surrender himself entirely to Christ.—For a young lady, suffering under great darkness and depression.—For a Sunday-school teacher and her class, especially for one girl whose companions in workshop lead her into bad ways.

PLACES.—For blessing on a mission in Youghal and Middleton, from Feb. 8 to 14.—For blessing on the labours of a minister just appointed to a church in Nottingham.—For Harford village, Grenada, West Indies.—For blessing on a week's services, to be held by Opie Rodway and Somerset Gardner, in Bognor, commencing Feb. 13.—For blessing on a week of special services in Ewell, Feb. 27 to March 6.—For a regiment in Ireland, that the Lord will strengthen those that are His own, and bring out many as faithful soldiers of Christ.—For much blessing on a large tea-meeting to be held on Feb. 16, in the Corn Exchange in Devizes, for Sunday-schools.—For Parkgate and Neston (Chester)—For a week's meetings, to be conducted by W. Taylor, in Selby, Yorkshire, commencing Feb. 15.—For a week of special services to be held in Arnold, Notts, conducted by Thomas Johnson, of the Evangelization Society, commencing Feb. 14.—For a special blessing upon the week of special services, to be conducted in the parish of Gray Friars, Reading, by the Rev. W. Haslam, commencing on March 14.—Some of the Lord's people who desire to know more of Him and to be instructed by Him, and fitted for doing his service, propose to meet together, to wait on Him, in the Town Hall, Brighton, on Thursday, Feb. 11, at eight p.m., and they invite all who love the Lord to unite with them in spirit.—For Beaminster, Dorsetshire, that the Lord will bless the meetings which are being held by the Evangelization Society.

CONVERSIONS.—For a husband and father given up to drink, who has been prayed for for more than thirty years.—For two prodigal sons, who are causing their family much distress.—On behalf of a beloved sister, in the last stage of consumption, and without hope.—For a children's Sunday evening service, commenced last week.—For a large ungodly family, that every one may be brought to Jesus.—For one who has had many privileges, but who is still in the dark.—Will you please to ask all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray to God for my conversion. My heart is hard, and my mind is very dark, but I am in trouble about my soul. Pray for me and my dear wife and mother, that we may be saved.

Requests must be accompanied by the name and address of the sender. Each request should be written on a separate half-sheet of note-paper. Those requests not inserted will be sent to one of the noon prayer-meetings.

FORTHCOMING SPECIAL MEETINGS.

The Christian.

"FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE."

BY REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

LAST week was to be seen in Liverpool the vast multitude who had been fortunate enough to get inside the huge wooden tabernacle gathered round our Americans, and Mr. Moody obliged to elevate himself by standing upon the table. When he went to the inquirers' room, where order was preserved by a Presbyterian minister, he left a clergyman of the Church of England giving a short address to the awakened ones in the great hall; and afterwards were to be seen groups over the inquirers' room and in the hall, to whom the way of life was being explained in conversation by Christian men and women, ministers, medical men, working-men, etc.

Who could help but rejoice that such a multitude had been so gathered out to hang on the words of the preacher? And who could help rejoicing after witnessing those dialogues with anxious souls? But yet where could we go for so strong an appeal to earnest Christians to carry on such dialogues at the doors or in the homes of our whole population?

That night there were two men, brothers, perhaps about twenty-seven years of age, whose cases were very striking—one converted, and the other not. The Christian brought up the other. They seemed to love one another, and were alike in lusty health. They both went away, together rejoicing in their common Saviour. Now how many hundreds of such cases may exist in Liverpool at this moment! They cry, "Come over and help us!" And how many thousands there are who, from infirmity, engagements, or indifference, never can be reached until the Church obeys the command to "Go" to "every creature!" Is it not a wretched, unbusiness-like mistake to reverse this command, and expect the walking to be done by the unconverted, instead of by the Church? There are times when we are to "hold the fort," but on this point the word of command of our Master, who walked Himself till He was weary, is, "Advance!" And let us be thankful that, so far as Liverpool is concerned, that town is now being visited from house to house, simultaneously with the preaching there of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. If the neighbouring towns within twenty miles of Liverpool could be so visited ere they leave Lancashire, how profitable it might be!

Preparations are being made here for a general visitation to the homes of London, which may be commenced in the north, round the Agricultural Hall, this week. It is probable that Christians who can afford it will come from distant parts of the country to assist the London friends in thus visiting from house to house during the four coming months, and this may tend to spread a general forward movement throughout our whole country.

May we, then, most earnestly entreat special prayer for the public preaching of the gospel in Liverpool and London just now, that nothing may be done to hinder loving co-operation, and that the Lord of the harvest may qualify and send forth hundreds of couples, both of men and women, to the homes of Liverpool and London; also that the hearts of the people be made to receive them. What is wanted is not persons willing merely to carry round Mr. Moody's leaflets, but those who, in addition to offering the leaflet, will, helped by the Holy Spirit, courteously and courageously invite to a Saviour whom they themselves have already found. In Lancashire, a doctor's daughter got so attracted by some sick cases, that she could not give them up. May many such friendships with affliction be soon formed in London.

Let us remember that this responsibility is placed by the Saviour upon us, for He says, "Give ye them to eat." Our helplessness is no hindrance at all. Then there was lack of bread, but Christ—and the multitudes were fed; now there is our utter inability, but the very same living Christ is with us. Let Him speak, and the dead will live. "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

48, Great Marlborough-street, W.

"HOW DO THE YOUNG CONVERTS STAND?"

THIS is a question that some are often asking. It may be asked in a right spirit; for Paul said to Barnabas in Antioch, "Let us go again, and visit our brethren in every city, where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do" (Acts xv. 36). Paul did go, and found the young converts going on well in Syria and Cilicia, all the better for the "confirming" word which he and Silas addressed to them.

It is worthy of remark, that, on another occasion, at Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 4), the word preached was blessed to some of the Jews, but specially to the "devout Greeks and chief women," who were not heathen, but persons under Jewish teaching—answering very much to that class of persons among ourselves who, of late, have been most numerously blessed, viz., not the non-church-going, but the attenders upon ordinances, hitherto unconverted. A most interesting church was formed, but Paul and Silas were compelled to leave them after a few weeks' stay, for the reasons for which we need not dwell upon. They felt very anxious about the young converts then left behind; they feared "lest by some means the tempter might have tempted them, and the labour bestowed on them be in vain." But Timothy was sent to visit them, and came to Corinth, reporting to Paul that the young converts stand fast in faith and love, longing greatly to see once more the man who had been the instrument of their conversion (1 Thess. iii. 5-7). This report was brought only a few months after the Church at Thessalonica had been founded. Timothy had gone in and out among the converts, and held meetings with them, and was able to attest from personal knowledge that there was no falling away; and Paul, for his part, though anxious, was not suspicious, but wrote in his letter to Thessalonica, "What thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before God?" There were a good many grave faults, at the same time, reported by Timothy—much that showed need of greater knowledge and holier practice; yet still Paul saw nothing in this fact to shake his persuasion of there having been a true, thorough, extensive work of God.

"How do the young converts stand?" This is a question asked by another class of persons, who are more fearful of being deceived, and losing their character for shrewdness, than ready to take part in the work themselves, and so have the opportunity of undeceiving souls whom they might meet with. They have been at times (as all of us have been) mistaken in their opinion of some hopeful case, and so have become suspicious of all cases.

We had among us here in Scotland a singular man of God, professor of Hebrew, Dr. Duncan, who died some years ago. Perhaps the class of persons we refer to might take a hint from the following anecdote given in his Life:—A brother minister said to him one day, "Dr. Duncan, I admitted a man of whom I thought that, if ever there was a converted man, it was he. But he went wrong upon my hands. Now I have another case, of which I think quite as well as the other (but no better), and I'm afraid to admit him, in case he should turn out like the other. What say you?"

The answer of Dr. Duncan was as follows:—

"There was once a man called Simon Magus. This man took in Philip the evangelist, who was, no doubt, mortified at being so deceived. Just after this Philip was sent away from Samaria to a desert spot, and there he fell in with an Ethiopian nobleman reading his Bible, as he drove home from keeping Pentecost at Jerusalem. The nobleman asked him to take a seat with him in his chariot, and they got into conversation upon the passage in Isaiah that he had been reading. Philip threw such a flood of light upon it that the nobleman saw the Saviour in it, and longed to be baptized; and on coming to a pool of water, asked what was to hinder it there and then? 'Oh, a great deal, sir; for you see, I am a Scotchman, and was taken in the other day by a man they call Simon Magus, and it may be you will take me in too! But if you'll come back next year, and I find you of the same mind, I'll admit you!'"

A friend (as he professes to be) has sent to some of us a sheet of what he calls, "Kindly reflections on the present religious movement." There are five lines of it devoted to what he thinks are "good results," and thirty to what is evil already, or likely to be so. His last fear is, "The silence of Satan in this movement, and the loud applause of the world." As to the latter clause, what would he have said at Pentecost (Acts ii. 47), "having favour with all the people"?—though the truth is with us that the world is bitter and scornful whenever the subject is mentioned. But this friend's most singular idea is that regarding "the silence of Satan in this movement," which perhaps means that there have been no extravagances, no outcries, no visible excitement, such as have appeared so often in other times of revival. No doubt, if there had been such extravagances, he would have pointed to them, and alleged that these gave evidence against the work and proved that Satan was there. Now, is not this the old spirit of that generation which our Lord thus describes: "John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say He hath a devil. The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold, a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children" (Matt. xi. 18, 19).

We in Glasgow who have watched this movement and taken part in it, are aware that our testimony cannot have much influence on those to whom we are strangers. But to those who will listen we should like to testify to the permanence of the work among us; and if any would come and see for themselves, they would at once discover how extensive as well as real this work has been. Personally I can say (and many of my brethren are prepared to make the same statement) that the fruit of last year has been as satisfactory every way as at any period of my ministry, while it has also had some new features of special interest. There have indeed been cases of backsliding; but what of that? Is not the parable of the sower true in all ages?

On Monday last (the 8th), there was an "All-day Meeting" held here. That day last year was the day when Messrs. Moody and Sankey began their labours; and it was with great thankfulness that those who attended that crowded meeting (crowded every hour from twelve to four) reviewed the past, thanked God again and again, and sought to gird up their loins, and move onward still.

Glasgow, Feb. 12.

RESTING.

Resting in Jesus! We've rested
Our souls on His infinite love;
We have known and believed that He loves us,
Our treasure, our joys, are above.
Who shall accuse us? Our Father
Hath justified sinners; we're free.
Who shall condemn us? Will Jesus,
Who died for our sins on the tree?

Resting in Jesus! Yes, resting,
Though sorrow our brightness may dim;
Nor death nor the world can take from us
Our strength and our comfort in Him.
Running the race set before us
With patience, for Jesus is near;
Fighting, and working, and struggling,
Yet resting, to God we are dear.

Resting so sweetly in Jesus,
Quietly entering life,
Laying aside the armour,
Over the toil and the strife.
Resting triumphant in heaven,
The crown of His love on our brow,
Seeing the King in His beauty,
Praising Him perfectly now!

AN EVANGELIST'S MULTIPLICATION TABLE.

A labourer in the Lord's vineyard for more than fourteen years, now at a salary of £87 per annum. Providing we each have three meals a-day, at three-pence each meal, and we are seven in number:—

7 times	9d.	=	5s. 3d. per day.
7	5s. 3d.	=	£1 16s. 9d. per week.
52	£1 16s. 9d.	=	£95 11s. 0d. per annum.

Now how is this family to be supplied with household, firing, and clothes, and make a respectable appearance?

[The above is by a London labourer in the gospel, well-known to us.—Ed.]

DIED FROM NEGLECT.—Died, in Laodicea, the prayer-meeting, aged one year. The health of this meeting was poor most of the year, and its life was despaired of; but anxious friends kept it alive; and sometimes it would revive so as to encourage them. Discouragements, however, at last prevailed, and the prayer-meeting died. It died from neglect. Not a Christian was present when it died. Over forty are living within a mile of it, and not one was there. Had two only been there, its life might have been saved, for where two are agreed as touching anything they shall ask, it shall be done. Two-thirds of the forty might have been there had they been so disposed; but they were not, and the prayer-meeting died.—American paper.

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

BY REV. JOHN WILKINSON.

This is God's order. God has neither annulled nor inverted it. Paul, by divine authority, wrote down this order, and in his labours, though the apostle of the Gentiles, always observed it. This is simple matter of fact. Then why should the Christian Church practically deny this order by neglecting the Jew; or invert the order by saying in effect, "To the Jew last." By observing this order, God would be honoured, the Jew saved, the Church strengthened and revived, the heathen world largely reached with the gospel, and Jesus glorified in the salvation of both Jew and Gentile.

The Jew is usually an intelligent believer in Jesus; he will know what he is to believe, and why he is to believe it. See those Berean Jews receiving the word with all readiness of mind, and searching their Hebrew manuscripts daily to see whether the things Paul told them concerning the Messiah were so. "Therefore many of them believed." Intelligent believers are likely to make firm believers; and intelligent and firm believers are likely to make successful preachers, for who can preach clearly the truths he only half knows? and preach successfully the truths he only half believes?

In THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 28 we promised, the Lord permitting us, to give a few facts illustrating the importance of giving prominence to the question of Jewish conversion.

The late Dr. Neander (new-man), who wrote the "Life of Christ," and "The History of the Christian Church," and who was one of the most distinguished converted Jews since the days of the Apostle Paul, was made the means of confirming an enfeebled Protestant faith, and reviving spiritual Christianity in Germany.

Dr. Abraham Capadose, who slept in Jesus on the 16th of December last, stating, an hour or two before his death, "I have no more wants. This day is my coronation-day—my coronation-day through the blood of Jesus;" was the first to begin Sunday-schools in Holland, and has shed a bright light in that country for many years—a light reflected from the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

Let us look for a moment at the case of Bernard Kerb, as referred to in the Bible Society's reports for 1873 and 1874, under Mexico. Mr. Parkes, the society's agent, mentions that one day "there came into the Expendio a dusty, travel-stained young man, to purchase a Hebrew Bible and Hebrew Testament;.....he had lost the use of his right hand, and could not work at his trade as a tailor. The German Benevolent Society assisted him to travel as a hawker. He always travelled with his Hebrew and German Bibles." Nearly 200 miles away he had been robbed of all he had, and his main purpose for walking the 200 miles back was to purchase fresh copies of the Word of God. This Bernard Kerb turned out to be a converted Jew, was engaged by Mr. Parkes as a colporteur, of whom Mr. Parkes says, "He will go where the Mexican men are afraid to go, and will do his work conscientiously, with as little expense as possible. The other day he walked along a lonely route of sixty miles with not more than two villages in the whole distance." He has suffered assault and stoning from the Romanists. How sad is the lot of the poor Jew; if an unbeliever, the Papists persecute him for his unbelief; if a believer in Jesus and an active distributor of the Word of God, he is still persecuted by these Papists! Mr. Parkes very significantly adds, "With such men as this Bernard to send through the length and breadth of the land, we should be justified in spending thousands of dollars on this superstitious country."

And now let us look for a moment at the converted Jew in his relation to the heathen world.

Take the case of Isidore Loewenthal, who was murdered at Peshawur, in India, at the early age of thirty-three. In stature a dwarf, with a delicate frame, large head, strong will, and with powers of endurance fit for a giant. He has been called the greatest master of the Afghan tongue. An Indian journal said of him at the time of his death:—"It may give some idea of his linguistic attainments to say that in four years he was able not only to master that difficult language, the Pushtoo, but also to complete an elegant and faithful translation of the New Testament. Perhaps no man in India had so great a knowledge of Asiatic literature, and few are so complete masters of the manners and customs of the natives and oriental politics, as he was. His library, which filled the four sides of his rooms, reached by a ladder, was the richest part of Calcutta in ancient MSS. and rare books. It was said of him that no man but he had ever gone, or dared to go, into the Kyber Pass, and he was respected by all who knew him, whether European or native, and loved by many. His knowledge of the natives made him of great service to the Government at the time of the mutiny. Indeed, if he had not been a missionary he might have been a statesman. It has been often remarked by some of the best judges in India, that Isidore Loewenthal had one of the most powerful intellects that ever came to India. Little idea can be formed of the laborious habits of the man. Three or four hours' rest were all that he allowed himself. Compositions for quarterlies, essays on various subjects, contributions on missionary topics of literary interest, with kindly correspondence to a numerous circle of friends, together with daily preachings in the Bazaar, served as a change from more severe studies that yearly told upon his slender and delicate frame. To spend an hour in his society was a treat never to be forgotten. He was no less remarkable as a preacher than a writer or a talker, and will ever be remembered for the able sermons which he delivered to the soldiers at the Umballa Pass."

And who was this remarkable man—this Isidore Loewenthal, who had accomplished all this work for Christ before his marvellous career was mysteriously closed by the assassin's hand? Thirteen years before his death, at the age of twenty, he was a Jewish pedlar, walking along the streets of Princeton, New Jersey, in America. A Christian minister fell in with him, took an interest in him, sent him to college, and was the means of bringing him to Jesus. This Jewish pedlar became a head and heart believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and then became in a few years one of India's most learned and useful missionaries.

Whether we look at the converted Jew, as in the case of Dr. Neander, reviving and strengthening the faith in Protestant and rationalistic Germany; or at the case of the converted Jew, Dr. Capadose, establishing Sunday-schools in Holland, and interesting himself in the conversion of the young; whether we look at the converted Jew, Bernard Kerb, fearlessly distributing the Word of God amid persecutions, among corrupt, dead Christians; or whether we gaze upon the marvellous work among the heathen accomplished by the converted Jew, Isidore Loewenthal, we confess to a feeling of wonder and amazement beyond the power of language to describe, that the Church of Christ should be apathetic as to the conversion of a people so remarkable in themselves, and though separate from, yet sustaining, for all practical purposes, a close relationship to every nation and tongue, and still "beloved for their fathers' sake."

Brother and sister Christians, we urge the claim of the Jew—the prior claim of the Jew; on the authority of the Word of God we urge it; by the wrongs of ages we urge it; by the incalculable blessings we have received through him we urge it; by the needs of the Church and the world we urge it; and for the glory of Christ we urge it. We owe the Jew a heavy debt of justice for past wrongs; we owe him a debt of gratitude for untold blessing; and we owe him a debt of love for Christ's sake.

Let us, then, sympathize with scriptural, prayerful effort to win the Jew to Jesus—for his own sake, for he is a sinner, and perishing; for our own sake, for the Church will be strengthened by his conversion; for the world's sake, for the Jew is destined to be an instrument of blessing to all nations; and, above all, for Christ's sake, who will never "see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied," whilst his brethren according to the flesh, in their ignorance and blindness, refuse to confess Jesus Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Oh that the day may soon dawn when God will extend peace to Israel like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream!

In a subsequent number of THE CHRISTIAN we purpose (D.V.) giving some account of the results of modern missions among the Jews, with facts coming within the range of personal experience.

MR. HENRY VABLEY IN CANADA.

My dear Brother,—I know you will rejoice to hear how great the blessing has been in Brantford. Truly we have reason to say, "What hath God wrought!"

The interest has continued to increase so that hundreds have received Christ Jesus. I am not sure that the work has not surpassed Toronto, and more and more do I see that if we carry God's gospel, "a living Christ" to our fellow-men, He will abundantly bless us.

How important it is to take the living Lord into all our service, for "wherever the river came, life came" (Ezek. xlvi.). Old men and women, middle-aged of both sexes, young men and maidens, boys and girls, by scores, are now "new creatures in Christ." My soul is full of praise, and giveth blessing, and honour, and glory unto our great King.

One young man, quite a leader among the card-players in the drinking-houses here, was brought to Jesus, and he went down to their presence and said, "Gentlemen, these hands have handled the cards thousands of times. I now know Christ Jesus, and I will never handle another so long as I live."

Time would fail me to give you the remarkable cases. In one house of business nearly every young man and every youth has turned to God. Jesus of Nazareth has been abiding with us in very marked and blessed power. I never shook hands with so many saved ones at one time as on the afternoon of the last meeting, when Knox Church was so crowded that many could not get in at three o'clock.

The night before saw ninety-nine stand up asking for prayer, and we did not reach home until 1.40 A.M. The evening previous ninety were standing up in token of their anxiety to be saved; and 12.30 P.M. found us still among the seeking ones. In the schools the work is equally blessed, and numbers of the young ones have been brought to Jesus.

The ministers have helped very heartily, and many Christian workers among us have been greatly used of the Lord in winning souls. It has been harvest indeed. The commercial rooms have been deserted, and the drinking-houses spoiled of their customers. From all parts we have heard the sound, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

"Never," said an old resident, "has Brantford been aroused to the present depth of interest in spiritual things. The increased spiritual life, and the awakened regard for the word of the Lord, we need not fear to overstate; it is simply blessed. And, as of Samaria, it may be said, 'There was great joy in Brantford.'"

I am not one whit surprised. I know how many thousands are constantly praying for me. And when I remember the Oxford Conference, and how hundreds of the most devoted of the Lord's children carried me to the throne of grace, in no presumptuous spirit did I say 10,000 souls for Christ during my stay on this side the Atlantic. There is surely a spiritual counterpart to the great wholesale houses in the commercial world. Some of us must get into the wholesale trade if great results are to be seen.

The Lord is with us. Let us not limit the Holy One by our unbelief, nor doubt his presence when we speak his word, nor occupy our audience with other than Himself, and have more regard to his operation and power than to the people's reception or opposition. Brethren, pray for us.—Yours in our Lord Jesus, Stratford, Jan. 23.

HENRY VABLEY.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A CHILD'S IDEA OF PRAYER.

Jennie Lee, who was only four years old, no sooner saw work laid aside than she ran to her mother's knee and claimed a seat there. Mrs. Lee lifted her to her lap, and went on busily thinking of her duties and cares, while she rocked herself and Jennie to and fro.

For a while Jennie amused herself very quietly by winding a string in and out through her fingers; but presently she began talking to herself in a low tone.

"When I say my prayers, God says: 'Hark, angels, while I hear a little noise.'"

Her mother asked her what noise was that.

"A little girl's noise. Then the angels will do just so" (shutting her mouth very tight, and keeping very still for a moment) "till I say, 'Amen.'"

Isn't this a sweet thought?

I wonder if the children who read this story of little Jennie have ever thought how wonderful it is that God always hears their prayers. He is surrounded by thousands and thousands of angels, and all praising Him with their golden harps; and yet, through all the music and all the praises He hears the softest prayers of a little child kneeling by the bedside. He must be very loving and very kind to children. We should think He would sometimes forget, and be listening to the beautiful sounds in heaven, instead of the prayer of a little child. But He never does. There is never too much singing or too many praises there for Him to hear a little girl's noise. Do you not wonder that children do not pray to Him much more and much oftener than they do?

FUNERAL OF MR. JOHN ASHWORTH.

Full particulars have been sent us of the funeral of the late Mr. Ashworth, and it is exceedingly cheering to find how his life-long service of self-denying love has been recognized and appreciated by those he sought to benefit. Not only did the inhabitants of Rochdale assemble in large numbers to pay their last tribute of respect to their friend and benefactor, but many, including Mr. John Bright, and others from a distance, made an effort to be present at the closing ceremony.

The members and attendants at the Chapel for the Destitute, the teachers of the Mission-school, friends, and fellow-citizens, walked to the grave three abreast, followed by the carriages of many gentlemen and ministers in the neighbourhood of Rochdale.

Our friend still lives, not only in the presence of Jesus, but in the hearts of the men, women, and children, among whom he lived, laboured, and died. He is called to higher service, and we hope his friend and successor, Mr. Calman, will largely share the same love and the same prayers that brightened Mr. Ashworth's course.

THE WORK OF GOD IN CASTLEFORD.—Towards the close of last year, the committee of the Castleford Sunday-school Union arranged for a united observance of the first week in this year, as a week of prayer. The ministers and churches heartily entered into the scheme. During the week the meetings increased in numbers and interest. All were convinced that God was willing and waiting to bless. It was, therefore, agreed to continue the meetings for another week. Meanwhile on the Sunday all the ministers interchanged pulpits. In the second week larger numbers still attended, until the Mechanics' Hall, the place of meeting, was crowded. The Spirit of God was manifestly, though silently, at work in many hearts. The sobs of penitence were heard. Tears of godly sorrow began to flow, and not a few came inquiring, "What must we do?" Never did the town experience such a gracious visitation. The churches are baptized, believers are quickened, places of worship are frequented, and not a few are savingly converted. The meetings are still continued, and this week arrangements are made to hold half-hour services in the public works. On Sunday afternoon, the members of the different churches met in the Wesleyan Chapel unitedly to celebrate the dying life of their common Lord. The service, which was most interesting and impressive, was conducted by the Rev. D. MacCormick, Congregational minister. May God have all the praise.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY AT LIVERPOOL.

FROM THE REV. PATRICK WHITE,
 BELINGTON PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

As of the apostles of our Lord it was said, "These men, who have turned the world upside down, are come hither also," so of our brethren, Moody and Sankey. It is joyful to see that the success which attended their self-denying labours elsewhere, promises to be equalled, if not surpassed, in Liverpool.

All Liverpool is moved by them; but as yet, not all with the most desirable feelings. Some seem actuated by a spirit of embittered hostility, and do not hesitate to write and speak of these servants of Christ, what has not the shadow of truth. This very opposition is, however, doing good. God makes "the wrath of men to praise Him." I have known of some who entered Victoria Hall bitter enemies, and left it attached friends to the movement. Many flock to the meetings, apparently from idle curiosity, and thousands under spiritual anxiety, whilst God's people rally round the evangelists with an enthusiasm and hearty good will which is cheering to observe. Mr. Moody seems to have lost none of his popularity in address. His style is plain, peculiar, and strikingly forcible. No sameness of figure or phraseology, but new thoughts, new subjects, and new illustrations, producing deeper impressions, and drawing greater crowds than the one preceding it. There is no other satisfactory reason which can be assigned for his unprecedented popularity, but that the mighty power of God is with him.

The good work in his and his brother Sankey's hand seems like the noble river pouring its waters down the mountain, reaching the valley, deepened, widened, and expanding itself by the numerous tributaries which join it, it flows on with irresistible majesty, bearing before it every barrier of man, and yet not a ripple on its placid surface.

Perhaps, of the marvellous work of God's grace going on in our midst, the "after-meetings," or is the most interesting and remarkable. Here are found representatives of all ages, from the very young, of only ten years, to the aged. All classes of character are discovered there, from the virtuous and moral, to the regardless and abandoned.

"Can such a wretch as I be saved?" was the question asked me by a seaman whom I knew twelve years since, the son of a humble, but truly pious man. Oft had he wept over his thoughtless son, but faith never failed him. He still said James will be all right yet. What was my joy may be conceived, but cannot be expressed, when the above question, "Can such a wretch as I be saved?" was asked, and a strong seaman caught my hand.

"Yes, James, you can, and God is this night answering the prayers of your dear good father."

"But, sir, I am such a sinner."

"No matter, if every sin you have committed was as aggravated as all the sins of your life combined, and that you committed ten thousand sins, for every one of which you are guilty, the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, can cleanse from all sin."

"Oh, but I am so ashamed, I cannot look up." Such was the feeling of the poor prodigal; but the loving Father was not ashamed to take his sinful son to his heart and home.

"Will you give yourself to Christ?"

"I will," was his reply; "and I go to sea to-morrow, sailing for America as I never did before."

THE SCOFFING INFIDEL BROUGHT TO GOD BY A HYMN.

Such I have known to be the case. At last Monday evening's meeting, an intelligent young man informed me he came into that hall to scoff at all he heard. "I believed only in God and the devil; the latter I served well, and as sitting laughing at the fools (as I then thought) about me, that beautiful hymn, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' was sung. A sudden thrill passed through my whole frame, and then like a dart ran through my very heart. My feelings were awful, but I listened to the next verse, and felt there is a Saviour. Who is He? Where is He? Instantly I realized the truth, Jesus is the Saviour. I threw myself into his loving arms, and here I am now, rejoicing in Him."

"Blessed be God," I said, "for such news. Now, brother, go home and tell your friends what great things God hath done for your soul."

"Will you pray?" he said.

We went together to the throne, and then he said, "God bless you; I will now live and work for Jesus."

The devil lays his plans, and no doubt thinks they are well arranged, but whilst he proposes certain events God disposes of them in a very different way than Satan expected. He works by his servants, as God works by sanctified souls.

THE DECEIVER DISAPPOINTED.

Of this I have had an instance.

"I am under a dreadful temptation," said a young man to me.

"What is it?" I asked.

"I was given drink by a man professing to be a Christian, and whom I have heard preaching the truth to me and others, but who is opposed to Moody and Sankey, and I was sent here by him to give annoyance. Now I am brought to Christ, in place of dishonouring Christ in this meeting, what am I to do to that man?"

"Pray for him," I said, "and God will give him to you as a star for your crown. Tell him plainly his state, and bring him here with you next night."

"I knew a lady who went to a religious meeting as an avowed infidel, sent there by two sisters-in-law for a similar purpose to that which brought you this night here. She was brought to Christ, and sent back to them full of Jesus, and was the means of their saving conversion; and now all three are rejoicing in the great salvation effected by Jesus, the Son of God, for every penitent, believing child of Adam."

Truly the Lord is doing great things for us in Liverpool, "whereof we are glad." But faith induces us to expect still greater blessings, feeling that we have only yet got the first drops of the showers. We look for the latter rain, praying that Liverpool may be made in every home the habitation of righteousness, that the Word of God may be in every hand, and its precious truths written on every heart, and holiness to God may characterize all its inhabitants.

BY A WORKER.

It may emphatically be said of them, "They came, they spoke, they conquered." For twenty years I have been more or less mixed up with the evangelistic work of the town, but never have I met with more opposition and scorn to any movement than the present.

The erection of the vast hall to hold 10,000 persons, was looked on as monstrous folly. As it was being built, the talk was, To what purpose is this waste? But now, what was called Moody's folly, is seen to be God's wisdom.

Men who wrote, spoke against, and laughed at it, now speak with bated breath, come and hear, and go with changed thoughts. "Nothing succeeds like success," is an old world's adage, and in this is proved to be true:—6000 at the midday prayer-meeting; 6000 at the afternoon Bible-lecture; 10,000 at the evening meeting, with the inquiry-rooms full, are something that even the Exchange has to admit. But beyond this, there is the mighty working power of God's Spirit working and acting, which no tables can register or numbers record. "Tis not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit," was the key-note of the preparatory meetings, which has been steadily kept before all the workers.

Looked at in a plain matter-of-fact light, we ask what brings the people together? Preaching, teaching, singing, can be heard, more artistic and eloquent, almost anywhere, we are forced to admit. It is the power of the Spirit in making plain words burn and simple singing 'ouch.

The part allotted to me in the great work has enabled me to see and test much that is going on. And this I can say—there is wheat; there is chaff. The wheat is sound, and will be a glorious, bountiful harvest. The chaff will be blown away. Wheat and chaff always grow together. Never have we been privileged to see so much real genuine work—anxious faces, tearful eyes, aching hearts. The general feeling is that souls are being born again, even though they have not courage to stand up or walk into the inquiry-rooms.

Last Thursday night, Mr. Moody, after a telling address, went into the inquiry-room, and his place was occupied by Mr. Fairclough, a cotton broker, who wielded the sword of the Spirit with amazing power right and left. His words, powerful and well-chosen, fell with force, and told on the vast audience that seemed spell-bound. Many seemed to be convicted of sin, and hurried into the inquiry-room.

Liverpool needs the prayers of the Christians of Great Britain at this crisis. Every arrangement that man can make has been made for the well carrying on of the work. But what we fear are unwise helpers and the Sanballats who would come in and mar the work.

The popular feeling is well expressed by the enclosed lithographic sketch, which, while rough, is not adverse to the evangelists.

[Our correspondent encloses a very rough caricature, entitled, "The Man and Dog Fight," in which Mr. Moody is the man fighting with a dog, whose four heads are—Intemperance, Vanity, Crime, Immorality, encircled by the collar SIN, while a number of persons of various classes, standing round, freely express their opinions.]

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

"Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children. Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it."

Such has been the prayer of our beloved friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and those who have supported them in their work here for the last ten days, and the Lord has heard and answered them of a truth. In some places which our brethren have visited the fruits have begun to appear almost as soon as the seed was sown. In others, and notably Dublin, the apparent results were some time delayed, though the blessing of many conversions to God was afterwards abundantly given. In Liverpool, already, the issue of the meetings has been most encouraging.

In the opening services, Mr. Moody remarked that many people thought the Victoria Hall was a bad investment, but that, if souls were born there, perhaps some of them would like to have a little stock in it.

On the evening of Monday week, the first opportunity was given for anxious inquirers to be spoken with. Mr. Moody had just delivered a most heart-searching address, in which he had shown man's unutterably lost condition without Christ, and many refugees of lies had been laid bare. But he did not leave the sinner there. With all simplicity and affectionate earnestness, he held up a crucified Saviour, and once again it was shown that the good, old-fashioned gospel—stripped of all rhetorical dead-weights and conventionalisms that often prove hindrances instead of helps—had not lost its power. Mr. Moody's earnest invitation to those who were anxious about their salvation, to stand up, and afterwards to meet him in the inquiry-room, was responded to by hundreds, who were not deterred from showing their anxiety by the curious gaze of many thousand spectators.

Many striking instances of conversion have occurred, and other cases have come under my own observation in which backsliders have been led to return to their first love. One day at the noon prayer meeting Mr. Moody told of an interesting case of conversion he had met the night before. A young stalwart man, who was to sail for America next day, had come into the meeting. He had been pricked to the heart by Mr. Moody's pointed appeals, and found his way to the inquiry-room, and here, as he believed, to lay his hitherto unforgiven sins on Jesus. Later in the evening he called on Mr. Moody at his hotel, and received a letter of introduction to any of the Christian friends in America he might meet. He was accompanied to the hotel by his brother, who had come from the country with him to see him sail, and who seemed overjoyed to think that one so nearly related to him was taking Christ with him ere he left his native shores.

The experience of Monday evening has been repeated every evening since, more or less, and I have not the least doubt but great numbers have been led to see and feel their lost condition, and to cast their all on Christ, who have not openly avowed it. We may reasonably suppose that curiosity has mostly passed away, yet it is no easy task sometimes to induce the vast audiences who throng into every corner of Victoria Hall, to leave, after the benediction has been twice pronounced.

At the evening meetings the hall is always crowded with something like 10,000 people, and if it were not that the committee keep a great part of the passages clear to allow of access to the inquiry-room, every inch of standing ground would be occupied. The attendance at the noon prayer-meetings averages 4000 to 5000, the audience, of course, not being so mixed as those in the evening. One gratifying circumstance, however, in connection with the noon meeting should be noted, and that is, the presence of so many of the Liverpool merchants and business men. I have heard it stated that between twelve and one, when the noon prayer-meeting is held, 'Change is half deserted, and it has been remarked that no other source of attraction has ever drawn so many of these busy men away from their money-making for an hour in the middle of the day. May they carry away some truth that will cling to them when they are tempted to forget God in their haste to get rich! The requests for special prayer have been very numerous and so varied that it would be impossible to characterize them. The notices of the secular press, while not expressing any hearty sympathy with the movement, have been very fair and honest, as a rule, considered as simple reports of the proceedings.

A very happy feature of the work here, as elsewhere, is the sympathetic co-operation of many clergymen and ministers of various denominations. They appear on the platform and take part in the services, as well as in the personal dealing with the anxious. This is matter for thanksgiving, though some correspondents of the Liverpool papers assert that the very presence of the evangelists here, and the admitted need there is for their labour, is a slur upon their own zeal and fitness for the work of evangelizing the destitute and depraved masses of the town.

I am not seeking to defend any apathy that may have been shown by ministers or Christians generally with respect to the moral condition of this town, which by universal consent is most deplorable. But all must agree that, after the ministers and their flocks have done their utmost, there is a crying need here for special effort. And it is gratifying to know that the worst are being, to some extent, reached by the present movement. At one of the noon meetings, important testimony on this point was given by Dr. Owles, of the Liverpool Medical Mission. He stated that he had met with some few among the very poor of this town who had already been present at the meetings, and he had heard of many others who were desirous to come. In the inquiry-room on Monday night there was one little fact which was most encouraging to some of those who were labouring in the lower parts of Liverpool. Among the first batch of those who were present, numbering somewhere about twenty-five, there were three well-known faces from the district of Scotland-road, and each of them had brought another friend with him. During the past two evenings they had conversed with several souls. In some the impression had evidently been very slight, but in others he might say, with equal certainty, it had been very deep; and in one or two instances within his own personal knowledge souls had returned on the second evening to state that they were truly saved. He might say, too, that, on speaking further with them, the impression of one or more intelligent Christian was, that their cases were real, that they had truly distinguished between the touch of the crowd and the touch of faith, and that virtue had gone out from the Great Physician which had healed their souls. The inquiry-room, however, was no necessary test of what the real work was. Many who were naturally somewhat forward were ready to go there under very slight impression; whilst others who were more reserved, and in whose souls the work had gone far deeper, would go home, and would not dare to speak even to their nearest friends. He trusted, however, that as the work went on, very many would come with the cry, not only in their hearts, but within their lives, "What must I do to be saved?"

Mr. Moody gave two Bible-readings last week, to large and deeply-attentive audiences. The first, on Thursday, was given in the College Hall, Shaw-street, when about 2000 people were packed into the building, and many failed to gain admission. The subject was, "Confessing Christ," and this privilege and duty was carried home to the minds of the hearers in the most trenchant, and, at the same time, scriptural language. The second was held in Victoria Hall, in order to accommodate all, and upwards of 3000 availed themselves of the rich feast of fat things, which every honest and healthy Christian must feel these readings to be.

FROM MR. SAMUEL NASH, SECRETARY, Y.M.C.A.

SUNDAY (7th.)

The first convert was a young man won through the singing. Another case to-day was that of a collier from Wigan, for years an inebriate, and one who had frequently been committed to prison for being, as he said, "drunk and disorderly;" he was thoroughly broken down upon hearing Mr. Moody describe a touching circumstance which occurred in a New York prison, and at the close of the meeting was led to give his heart to Jesus.

MONDAY.

Nearly 5000 persons present at the noon prayer-meeting to-day. There were thirty-four special requests for prayer read out.

Long before the hour named for the commencement of the evening service, the building was crowded in every part, and large numbers were unable to obtain admission. Upon the conclusion of the address, and in response to an invitation from Mr. Moody, over a hundred persons rose to their feet, manifesting by this a desire on their part to become Christians. About 300, of both sexes, were to be seen in the inquiry-room at one time, anxious about their souls. Numbers who disliked entering the inquiry-room were conversed with in the large hall, several of these professed to find peace; of the latter one was an emigration agent, two were bank clerks, one a cab-driver, two were office boys, and two were young ladies engaged in business.

TUESDAY.

A larger congregation than yesterday attended the noon meeting to-day, and there were again numerous special requests for prayer. Mr. Moody, whose remarks were chiefly upon the subject of prayer, earnestly besought the Christians of Liverpool and elsewhere to be very prayerful, taking everything to God in prayer. Mr. Moody spoke with his accustomed earnestness; several times during his discourse the tears might be seen trickling down many cheeks, showing the deep impression produced.

One of the most interesting cases in the inquiry-room was that of a young man, who for a long time "refused to be comforted," by reason of his having succeeded in prejudicing the minds of so many of his companions against Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and thus preventing their attending the meeting. "Suppose," said he, "they should die unsaved through me?" (The following Thursday evening he brought one of his fellow-workmen into the inquiry-room, and said he had induced four or five others to attend the meetings.)

WEDNESDAY.

Notwithstanding the bitter cold, quite 6,000 persons attended the noon prayer-meeting. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Moody and Dr. Owles.

The evening meeting was again crowded to excess; between 300 and 400 persons remaining behind, anxious regarding their eternal welfare. Of those who professed to find peace, one was a farmer from Llandudno; another was from Northwich, Cheshire, another was a Jew, and one a Roman Catholic. Many working men also went away rejoicing in a newly found Saviour; in fact, it is most gratifying to see how the working men are being reached and saved, meeting after meeting.

THURSDAY.

There were over seventy special requests for prayer at the noon meeting to-day, which was again very largely attended, notwithstanding the weather. Mr. Moody, Mr. Thomas Matheson, and the Rev. Hugh Falloon, M.A., of Chester, addressed the meeting.

At three o'clock, Mr. Moody gave a "Bible-reading" in the College Hall, Shaw-street. The building, which accommodates about 2500 persons, was crowded to excess; a second, or overflow meeting, was therefore held in St. Augustine's Church, close by, conducted by the Rev. W. J. Edwards.

Despite a wet evening, the building at night was again crammed to excess nearly three quarters of an hour before the time announced. After a fervent prayer by the Rev. W. Lefroy, M.A., a most telling discourse was delivered by Mr. Moody on "Regeneration." Over 400 persons, anxious about their souls, remained behind in the hall and in the inquiry-rooms. Numbers went away happy. Did space permit, many touching cases might be mentioned. One was a grandmother who had brought her orphan grandchild; a father, who was anxious about his son, brought him to the meeting, and both went home rejoicing; two or three seemed to be dock-labourers; several were clerks and shop-assistants; while quite a number of highly respectable females went home professing to have received pardon for their sins.

FRIDAY.

The requests for thanksgiving and prayer were more numerous to-day than yesterday. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Moody, Mr. D. M. Drysdale, and the Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh.

Mr. Moody's "Bible-reading" was held in Victoria Hall this afternoon, no other building in town being capacious enough. The attendance was large, and mainly composed of ladies.

The evening meeting (which was mainly composed of young men) was conducted by the Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, M.A., who delivered an earnest and telling address, bringing out the gospel, and urging upon all then present to accept Christ. Numbers entered the inquiry-rooms to be conversed with. One was a poor blind girl, whose sweet, happy face spoke volumes. One or two were boys, apparently about fifteen or sixteen years of age. There were also three young ladies, all employed in a large drapery establishment, besides several very respectable young men, artisans, and others.

At night the audience was as great and varied as on previous evenings. After the hymn, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," by Mr. Sankey, and prayer by the Rev. Charles Garrett, Mr. Moody spoke again on the subject of "The new birth." A large number stayed behind to be conversed with, the inquiry-rooms being full, besides numbers in the body of the hall.

The Rev. W. B. S. Matthias, M.A., of St. Matthew's Church, mentioned a remarkable case he had dealt with, that of an old lady just turned 100 years of age (who had been brought to the meeting by her relatives), and who that evening had found peace; three sisters also gave their hearts to Jesus. Another case was that of a commercial traveller. A gentleman mentioned that during the week seven in one family had been won for the Saviour. Several cases of conversion through the singing have been brought forward, one somewhat remarkable, through Mr. Sankey singing "Nothing but leaves," at the Bible reading in the afternoon.

SATURDAY.

The Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, conducted the noon prayer meeting to-day, and gave a very interesting account of the work in Scotland.

At three o'clock a meeting of parents and children was held. Between 6000 and 7000 children were present. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. R. H. Hammond (who presided), Mr. Thomas Fairclough, and Mr. D. M. Drysdale.

SUNDAY (14th).

Over 5000 attended the eight o'clock meeting for "Christian workers," this morning. Mr. Moody, with tears, implored the Lord's people to make the best use of their talents, to look on the bright side of things, never to be discouraged, whatever the difficulties might be, but to be filled with enthusiasm for the Lord and his blessed work. His illustrations were of the most touching description, the audience again and again being moved to tears. Mr. Moody himself (especially when engaging in prayer at the close) was visibly affected, and was several times scarcely able to proceed. His address will not soon be forgotten. God grant it never may be!

At eleven o'clock, "a meeting for those who attend no place of worship" gathered fully 6000 persons, chiefly young men. Mr. Moody's address was a powerful and touching appeal—full of love and tenderness—for decision for Christ. At its close, upon the relation of an anecdote regarding a dying "prodigal son," every head was bowed, the vast audience being moved to tears. Upon the conclusion of the meeting, 243 persons immediately followed Mr. Moody into the inquiry-room; of these only 31 were females. Christians and inquirers were all alike in tears, with hearts so full as to be scarcely able to speak one to the other. An adequate description of the meeting is simply impossible; it was "the Lord's work, and marvellous in our eyes." Nearly every one in the after-meeting professed to find peace. One poor working-man came up to the writer and gave a sovereign (his savings) as a thank-offering to the Lord for salvation found. Of those anxious to be saved, and who went away happy, several were clerks in offices, two were Unitarians, quite a number were carters, riggers, and the like, while not a few spoke of the drink as being their besetting sin.

At three o'clock a meeting for females only was held in the large hall, which was crowded to excess. At the close of the meeting, and in response to an invitation from Mr. Moody, upwards of 500 females, young and old, rose to their feet, professing by so doing their anxiety to be saved.

While Mr. Moody was addressing the females in Victoria Hall, a meeting for young men was held in the large St. James's Hall, or Theatre, which was crowded out. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Thomas Macpherson, M.A., and Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, M.A. Hundreds were turned away, and a second or overflow meeting was held in Byrom Hall, Byrom-street, addressed by Messrs. C. E. Dixon, R. J. Glasgow, and A. Matthews.

During the time Mr. Moody was speaking to the females, large crowds remained outside the building, and these were addressed by Mr. D. M. Drysdale.

Before seven o'clock the evening meeting was crowded to excess by men; upwards of 11,000, young men and old, were packed within the building, while thousands remained outside, unable to obtain admission.

Mr. Moody's address was very powerful and seemed to produce a marked effect. At the close of the meeting over 500 men remained behind, anxious about their souls.

A crowded meeting of "females only" was held in St. James's Hall, while the meeting for men was being held in Victoria Hall; the speakers were Messrs. Drummond, Drysdale, and Baxter.

Would the Lord's people generally join in praising God for what He has already accomplished in this "black spot on the Mersey," and pray that we may see far "greater things than these"? The Lord increase our faith.

FROM OTHER CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Sankey's singing has been a great source of attraction to the multitude. Hundreds on hundreds, who would probably not have been at the trouble to stir from their homes to hear the preached word, have flocked to witness this new thing—singing the gospel. I have heard those who affected to sneer at the movement as a whole, yet express their strong desire to hear Mr. Sankey sing. Every lover of the souls of men most rejoice that so many have been led within the sweet sound of the gospel, even by such ignoble motives, and there has been evidence revealed here that, as in other places, the simple truths sung by Mr. Sankey have led to conviction of sin in the minds of the hearers. Such hymns as "The Ninety and Nine," "Nothing but leaves," "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," and several others, have been chiefly blessed in this respect.

ALL-DAY CONVENTION AT LIVERPOOL.

An all-day Meeting will be held at Victoria Hall, Liverpool, on Wednesday and Thursday, March 3rd and 4th.

IN THE INQUIRY-ROOM, BIRMINGHAM.

Dear Sir,—It was my high and happy privilege to lead many to the feet of Jesus, and get them to look off unto Him, and amongst them these. The first evening I was there I went with my Bible under my arm into the gallery, and there at the end of the row of chairs sat a young man who, from his respectable appearance, evidently moved in good society. He looked dejected and anxious. I took my seat at his side, and looking into his face, said—

"Well, friend, are you saved?"

"No, but I want to be," said he, earnestly.

"Well, tell me now how it is you are not saved."

"Why, I am often questioning whether this is the right religion or not, and then I get uneasy, and can't rest."

"Well, but do you know of any better religion than this, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners?"

"No."

"Are you a sinner?"

"Yes, I am."

"Well, if Jesus died to save sinners, and you are a sinner, you must be the very one He died for, eh?"

"Yes, I must be."

"And now let me read John v. 24 to you, and you believe it while I read it." I then read it slowly, and said, "Now haven't you eternal life?"

"Yes, I shall have when I die."

"No, no; that is too uncertain;" and twice more I read it over very slowly, emphasizing the "hath," "shall not," and "is passed," and turning towards God all the while to reveal the truth to him, and after the third time he said suddenly, as the big tears fell from his eyes—

"I see, I see! I've just got to believe; I've got it now!"

"And now," said I, "let us get down on our knees, and thank Jesus for what He has done for you."

After a pause, he said, "Do you mean me, sir?"

"Yes, you."

"What, aloud?"

"Yes, aloud: He wants to hear you thank Him, and so do I."

And then, in a few broken, trembling words he did so; and after he had finished and I had thanked Jesus too, I said, "Give me your address, for I would like to write to you," and he gave it me, at a place forty miles away.

"Well, but," said I, "what brings you here?"

"Why I came on purpose to be saved, and I am staying with my mother and brother, who are Christians, at the — Hotel, and now I shall go home to-morrow."

"And will you tell them as soon as you get back to the hotel that you are a saved man?"

"Yes, I will."

"Well," said I, grasping his hand, and he holding mine, oh, so warmly, "you are quite certain that you now have eternal life?"

"Yes quite!"

And giving him one or two precious life-texts, the young man went on his way rejoicing, as his happy face clearly indicated.

Oh, dear fellow-workers for and with Christ, it is worth a lifetime of effort and toil to bring just one such precious soul into life-giving contact with Jesus, to introduce one such fellow-sinner to his and our Elder Brother!

One evening, as I went into the Presbyterian Church to the men's inquiry-meeting, I saw a man about thirty-five, sitting close to the door, with a cold, sarcastic look upon his face. Somewhat against my inclination, and, I suppose, my flesh, I turned back, and sitting down beside him, said—

"Well, my friend, are you a sinner?"

Frowning at me, he said, sharply, "No."

"What, not a sinner?"

"No, I've never sinned in my life."

"What, never told or acted a lie?"

"No."

"Never got into a temper?"

"No, never intentionally."

"Never thought anything wrong?"

"Not that I know of."

Mr. Moody had been that evening giving his heart-searching, sin-revealing address on, "There is no difference." I said, in amazement—

"Can you say all this after what you've just heard Mr. Moody declare?"

"Oh," said he, "I haven't heard him."

"What brings you here, then?"

"I thought I'd just step in, and have a look."

I then read to him, slowly and prayerfully, Rom. iii. 9—26, and again looking at him, said—

"What can you say now?"

His careless look was exchanged for a look of pain and conviction; his proud neck was bent, as he said, in a startled way—

"Why, I'm lost."

"Oh, now," said I, "I can tell you of Jesus, who came to seek and to save the lost." And I read to him that text, and Isa. liii. 5, 6, and Matt. xi. 26, when he said—

"I'm lighter and easier now."

He told me he had a Christian wife at home. "And won't she be glad to hear I'm saved?" said he.

He prayed, then went down to his house, no longer a Pharisee, but a poor Publican, justified through believing in Jesus. Another hard heart falling on Christ, and being broken and healed too.

One more case, and I must close. On one of the first evenings, as I looked up and down the same church, I saw, away at the end of a pew, a big, rough-looking man, clad in a sack suit, and, to all appearance, a navvy, kneeling on the floor, with his arms on the pew-seat, and his head buried in them. I went to him, and, kneeling beside him, put my hand on his great, broad back, and said, "Why, friend, what's the matter?" The only answer was a groan. "Do you want to be saved?" Another deep groan, which spoke volumes of intense pain for sin, and desire to be forgiven. I quoted one or two Scriptures to him, including 1 John i. 7—9, and John v. 24, and said, "Now will you believe these? Because if you do, you are a saved man at once." And he said, "Yes, I will." And the groans ceased, his voice got cheerful, he lifted up his head, and looked at me for the first time, and a smile came across his burly face, as, with tears in his not often moistened eyes, he said, in reply to my question, "Well, aren't you happy now?" "Yes, I am."

As he went out, I introduced him to a minister, and said in his presence, "Well, how are you now?" "Oh," said he, his rough face beaming, "I'm right enough now." And his after actions have proved the genuineness of his conversion.

I have seen him at nearly all the meetings. Every night he finds his way to the young men's inquiry-meeting from his lodging-house home; and although he can neither read nor write, he can, and does, tell out of the abundance of his overflowing heart what Jesus has done for him, and what He will do for all. Twice he has got upon his feet in the open meeting, and in his simple and rough, but genuine way, told of the great love of Jesus, much to our delight; and he is to be found each evening sitting or kneeling beside some anxious one, pointing him to the sinner's Friend, his Friend. I often shake his hard, horny hand, and he tells me by his lit-up face and glad words that he is happy in Jesus.

Another diamond this, rough, but very precious withal, for the Lord to shape, and polish, and place in his glorious coronet, studded with the jewels of blood-bought souls.

Dear unsaved reader, believe and trust in Jesus simply, easily, as all these have, and you are saved for ever. Dear Christian reader, pray earnestly for these and all the new-born souls resulting from this revival amongst us; and pray also that many more may be gathered in. S. C.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

We shall not attempt to detail the efforts and accompanying blessing connected with this week's services for young women. To the dregs of society they have penetrated; its very flower filled the Assembly Hall this afternoon (Friday) at three o'clock. The evening services have been well attended, and every night with deepening blessing. After three meetings yesterday, and two this morning, at each of which it could well be said, "His banner over us was love," we went to the afternoon meeting chiefly to conduct thither a lady from America, and also from the thought that the attendance would not be large.

Let none of the workers in the large English towns tremble at the thought that perhaps after a year is past, the eager, anxious throng of worshippers shall crowd their streets no more. To-day, after fifteen months have come and gone, with no attraction as to speakers but the well-known voices of pastors whom they can hear every Sabbath, the hall was thronged by young ladies in every part. Boarding-schools and bands of sisters from families were interspersed. Mothers and guardians were there to wait the answers to long-offered prayers. The kingly Suitor from the skies was offering his salvation through the preached word, and none doubted the Divine call was being answered by many willing hearts. We could fill columns with an account of these addresses given under the breathing of the Holy Spirit, but we forbear. The Lord alone be exalted in this day.

WILLINGHAM.

The week of prayer for young women has been observed in Willingham. On Lord's-day the 7th, the Rev. W. Jackson preached the sermon on the subject. On Wednesday evening, Mrs. Jackson, the wife of the minister, conducted a meeting for females, and gave an address on the choice of Mary. The cottagers' meeting, on Monday evening, was likewise turned into a prayer-meeting for young women, at which a young inquirer offered her first prayer in public. An intense desire for the salvation of young people has been manifested at all the services.

DUBLIN BELIEVERS' MEETINGS.

This semi-annual gathering has, as usual, proved a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord: an Elim where the reviving effect of true ministry of the Word by the Spirit has been experienced by many of God's pilgrim people. Extensive united efforts for the evangelization of the unsaved can by no means be a substitute for Christian fellowship. The extra strain they involve on the grace and spiritual strength of those who take part in them render seasons of prayer and mutual edification only the more needful. Believers must come apart sometimes to rest in the green pasture of the Word, that they may rise up again and go forth, like giants refreshed with new wine.

The effect of the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Dublin was perceptible in the recent meetings, though not so much as might have been expected perhaps. The old Metropolitan Hall, associated with hallowed memories in so many minds, is now almost as much devoted to evangelistic work as in 1860-61. Meetings are held there most evenings, some of young men exclusively. It was crowded to its utmost capacity at some of the meetings of this recent conference, and large assemblies mustered at all, admittance being as usual by ticket. The early morning prayer-meetings were delightful seasons of realized nearness to God, and much power in supplication. The intervals of intercessory prayer at the other meetings were too long unbroken. Few can really pray for nearly an hour at a time. The mental and spiritual capacity of some may be equal to the task, but to the mass in any meeting, such an exercise becomes a weariness; whereas, if broken by the singing of a hymn, or by the reading of a few of the promises of the Word of God, it might be a service of joy. The best prayer-meetings we know, are those in which prayer is not long continued without a break.

The presence of many young converts infused a fresh life into the meetings, and imparted a charming warmth and simplicity to many of the addresses. The under shepherds had caught the chief Shepherd's spirit of tenderness towards the lambs, and were led to care specially for their wants, lingering amid the young herbage of elementary truth, and guarding with many a watchful warning the recent additions to the flock. Growth in grace and knowledge were urged in simple words of instruction and exhortation by Mr. Barton, Mr. Wrenford, Mr. H. Groves and Mr. Cargin, and the recently-converted must have enjoyed the loving warmth with which they were welcomed in these "believers' meetings."

The side-room at the Metropolitan Hall was crowded at breakfast by friends from all parts of the country, who enjoyed exceedingly pleasant seasons of mutual greeting, and of fellowship in prayer and in the truth. Short addresses were given afterwards, occupying much of the time prior to the noon meeting. Mr. Stevenson, of the China Inland Mission, gave an address at one of these breakfast meetings, and narrated several instances of conversion which had come under his own notice in China, in a way that drew out the sympathies of all present. We were glad that in spite of a hint that "these meetings were intended for teaching," this missionary brother persevered in speaking of the subject God had laid on his heart. He replied to that hint, "I wish to teach;" and he did teach a most important lesson, that having received Christ Jesus the Lord, our duty is not only to walk in Him, but to seek to make Him known to others, and first and most to the most needy. We were glad, for it would be a grievous thing if, at conferences, where Christians have bread enough and to spare, yea, feed to the full on the fat things and dainties of Divine truth, a reminder of the deep needs of those who lack even a crumb from the children's table should be deemed out of place. We need, at such times, more prayer for the world at large, more of stirring each other up to holy zeal and self-denying devotion. The end of thought is action; the end of the truth is love; the end of teaching is Christian conduct. Christ said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." The practical should never be esteemed or treated as of secondary importance.

Space forbids our giving abstracts of the addresses, though many of them were valuable. As we multiply meetings, we must needs curtail reports. Mr. McVicker dwelt sweetly on the Friendship of Christ, as illustrated by the story of Jonathan and David. Dr. Barnardo spoke of the lepers in the siege of Samaria ("We do not well, this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace"). Mr. Henry Dyer gave an important word of exhortation about "purged lips," from Isa. vi. Mr. Henry Groves uttered some cautions about what to hear and how to hear. Mr. Shuldham Henry spoke on the character of the Christian's walk. Mr. H. Grattan Guinness dwelt on the love of Christ to his own, as manifested by his own words in John xvii. Mr. Russell Hurditch, on the contrast between the obedience of Abraham and the worldliness of Lot; and Mr. Wrenford in his closing address at Willow-park on Thursday, on "Whose I am and whom I serve," put prominently the principle that it is only as we recognize the fact that we are his and not our own, and yield ourselves to Him to fulfil his will, in dependence on his strength, and seeking his glory, that our service can be either acceptable or successful. He narrated some striking recent circumstances in his own experience, illustrative of the fresh power for service which results from hearty self-surrender to God, and also some encouraging cases of conversion. Rev. J. Stevenson spoke of the work in Birmingham, which he had lately visited. Rev. Mr. Cargin gave an address on "Grow in grace," remarkable for the fund of illustration derived from the process of grafting.

The evangelists' breakfast-meeting on Friday morning at Willow-park, was, as usual, devoted to brief practical addresses on points connected with gospel service, and was felt by all to be a profitable as well as enjoyable occasion. To the honoured and venerable host who gathered thus around him his younger brethren, to refresh and edify them, we would say, "Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren and to strangers, who have borne witness of thy love before the Church." MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

On the 28th ult., an announcement appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of a proposed special effort to bring the gospel of the grace of God before the poor outcast women of the East of London. Last week an experimental meeting was held, and Mr. Thomas, of 200, Euston-road, describes the proceedings thus:—"At half-past four, a goodly number of missionaries and others employed at the East-end met for special prayer, when there was a remarkable spirit of prayer manifested. A little before six a band of volunteers went out into the highways and hedges to compel them to come in. Nearly eighty responded. To these refreshments were supplied, after which the meeting commenced, the singing consisting of some of Moody and Sankey's popular hymns, such as "Scatter seeds of kindness," "Room among the angels," "Come to the Saviour," "The sweet by-and-by," etc. Three gospel addresses were delivered by ladies, in the course of which, "the truth as it is in Jesus" was most lovingly and faithfully set forth. The president for the evening put it to the meeting as to how many would like to go to heaven after death? First, one hand was held up timidly, then another, till all ventured to express the desire. Before the meeting broke up, each young woman was presented with copies of St. John's Gospel and Sacred Songs and Solos. The meeting closed with very earnest prayer at half-past nine p.m., when three brethren present connected with the Midnight Meeting Movement came together, moved by one spirit, and proposed that a second meeting should be held very soon.

Space forbids further details, but it is hoped that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will do all in their power to furnish this mission of mercy to the poor outcast women of the East of London. Communications can be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. H. G. Weakley, at the office, 8A, Red-lion-square.

ALL-DAY CONFERENCE IN EWING-PLACE CHURCH, GLASGOW.

Monday being the anniversary of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to this city, it was resolved to hold a Conference of Christians interested in the spread of the Lord's work. The church was crowded; nearly all the evangelical churches were represented. The subject for the first hour, twelve to one, was

PRAYER.

The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. A. Thomson, of Edinburgh, who, after reading some suitable passages, said that it was an astonishing fact that God heard the prayer of his children. The Psalmist says of God, "O Thou that hearest prayer." Nehemiah had to wait four months ere he got the king's ear, but we have not to wait four minutes to get our petition sent to the King of kings and Lord of lords. It was also a certain fact that God not only is the Hearer of prayer, but that He delights to answer prayer. This fact is taught us throughout the Word. And how does He hear and answer? for we all know that our sins had closed the way. But our sins were laid on the Lord Jesus Christ, who has by his death on the cross opened up the way of access into the presence of God. Again, it was an experienced fact. There is not a man of God here but has proved this in his own experience. All God's saints, from Abraham, Moses, Daniel, Paul, down to the present day—yes, to the present day, look to Edinburgh, our own city, what hath God wrought there in answer to the prayers of his people? and here in Glasgow, what great blessing you have received. Now let us be straightforward; the fact is, we have often got more answers than we are aware of. He turns our water into wine.

Mr. Miller here read several requests for prayer, one from Rev. J. Fordyce, now on his way to Simla; and also for the men of the 64th Regiment. Rev. Dr. M'Ewan led in prayer.

Rev. Dr. Wallace referred to the fact that so many people being present was an evidence of God's being the Hearer and Answerer of prayer. During the past year how many prayers have been heard and answered, how many ministers have been quickened and are preaching with renewed power, how many elders and church members have been revived and stirred up; and then go down to the Drill-hall and see hundreds praying who never prayed before. And then there is another branch of the Christian work. I refer to the theatre opened on Lord's-day last. Yes, my friends, God does hear and answer prayer.

Prayer was here offered, at Dr. Wallace's request, on behalf of Miss Leigh and her glorious work on behalf of young women in Paris.

The next hour was devoted to the subject of PRAISE.

Rev. Dr. A. Bonar opened the subject (2 Chron. v. 13). The trumpeters and singers were to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord, and they were to praise the Lord, saying, "For He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever." There is as much said about praise as there is about prayer. How important, then, is praise! There is not a minister who has taken part in the various meetings during the past year but can testify to good received, and power and grace multiplied.

Several ministers and laymen spoke on the important subject of praise. One minister said that too often they had gone to preach, not knowing whether they were to get blessing or not; but a great cause for thankfulness and praise was, that faith in the preaching of the gospel had been greatly increased.

Dr. Wallace referred to praise as a new power in the churches; so many can now sing, "He hath put a new song in my mouth." Referring to the influence of that sacred song, he said he attended the funeral of two little girls, sisters, who died of fever; amidst the gloom and sadness of that home of the dead, the father asked if I would give out the hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and with weeping eyes and trembling voices we sang it. There was praise amidst suffering. Dr. Wallace also spoke of a class it was so difficult to reach—the boys who are for ever whistling or singing the last new trashy song as sung at the singing saloons, but many of whom are now singing these sweet hymns. He referred to the preceptors and choirs of many places of worship being anything but spiritual-minded men and women, and he said the Church would never have much power unless those who conducted the service of praise were themselves subjects of the Spirit's teaching.

The hour from two to three was occupied with the subject,

"WHAT MORE CAN BE DONE FOR THE LAPSED MASSES?"

Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, who presided, remarked that we must now strike a lower key-note. Prayer and praise are good. "These ye ought to have done, but not leave the other undone." We have now to speak of work in a very different sphere. In Col. i. 10, the apostle gives a general description of a Christian's walk, but he is careful to add, "being fruitful in every good, and increasing in the knowledge of God." He is afraid lest the Church in any age take one of them and leave the other. To attend meetings such as this is good; to attend a place of worship is good; but we must be careful to abound in every good work. He referred to the breakfast meeting in Edinburgh, and said he believed the Church had been somewhat neglecting the teaching of Scripture and the example of Christ, in regard to the use of temporal gifts as a means of spiritual good.

Several ministers and laymen made some useful and practical remarks, touching on the need of greater effort to be put forth on behalf of the masses.

Mr. James Scott (leader of Ewing-place young men's meeting), said: One of the first questions we have to ask ourselves as professing Christians is, "What do the masses think of us as ministers?" Many think that ministers work by piece or time. Referring to a minister who used to preach in the open air, Mr. Scott asked one of those cavillers, "What do you think of Mr. So-and-so? I'm sure he's an earnest Christian; he goes into the open air, and preaches to the people." "Oh yes," was the reply, "but he's doing that to fill his church. When that is accomplished, you'll see an end of his open-air work." Mr. Scott suggested that halls should be got in various parts of the city, and services held in them for the non-church-attenders.

The last hour was occupied with the subject, opened by Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Newington, Edinburgh. Rev. Dr. Laing, Rev. Dr. Arnot, Rev. Mr. Duncan, and others, took part. Dr. Wallace, at the close of the meeting, suggested that a telegram be sent to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, expressing the gratitude of the meeting for the work they did while in this city, and assuring them of an interest in their prayers.

"REWARDS,"

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—Times of refreshing have come to our town. For many weeks past the cry has been, "O Lord, revive thy work!" and in answer showers of blessing have fallen. Evangelistic services were commenced on Sunday, Jan. 10, when Mr. G. M. Scroggie, from Scotland, opened his commission in the Theatre Royal, a building which holds about 2500 people: It has proved totally inadequate for the thousands who wish to gain admittance on Sabbath evenings. The week-night meetings have been held alternately in the People's Hall (formerly an old theatre, but now used entirely for the Lord's work), the United Presbyterian, Baptist, and Congregational churches. The interest at all the services has been great, and many, especially amongst the working classes, have been brought to know the truth as it is in Jesus. Mr. W. Dunn is now labouring amongst us, whilst brother Scroggie is visiting St. Helen's, from which place tidings we reached us of great blessing. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that the united labours of Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn during the next few weeks, commencing Sunday, Feb. 21, may be used by the Almighty to the salvation of thousands of precious souls?—E. P. TELFORD.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN CALIFORNIA.

Jan. 4, 1875.—Rev. Edward Payson Hammond having been invited by the pastors of San Jose to take charge of a series of Union meetings, came here from Illinois last week. He preached to Christians on Friday and Saturday evenings in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The number present at these meetings was not large, but there was a spirit of earnestness and solemnity pervading them which showed that God was already moving upon the hearts of his people.

At half-past two o'clock Sabbath afternoon, a mass meeting for children was held in the music-hall. The hall was crowded; hundreds who came could not even get standing room, and were compelled to go away.

Mr. Hammond's sermon was upon the suffering of Christ and his love for sinners. The little ones listened with unabated interest, and when, after the meeting had continued two hours, they were invited to stay longer in order that Christians might talk with them about coming to Jesus, all stayed; they wept when spoken to; they asked us to pray for them, and many knelt down and prayed earnestly for themselves. A judicious minister estimated the hopeful conversions at this first children's meeting at over fifty.

In the evening the hall was crowded again. Hundreds stood in the aisles and in the vestibule. Mr. Hammond's sermon was upon the words: "Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace." After the sermon ministers and other Christians went through the congregation inquiring who were acquainted with God, and who of those not acquainted with Him desired to know, and would seek Him. All the labourers in this "button-hole work" as one of the brethren called it, were well received. God had evidently gone before them: many were found to be deeply interested and anxious. Some were converted before the meeting closed.

This morning there was a prayer-meeting at nine o'clock in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Hammond expounded Daniel's confession and prayer (Dan. ix. 2—19) in a very impressive manner, and the brethren reported their conversations with inquirers Sabbath afternoon and evening. Many interesting facts were stated, and all felt that a great and good work was begun, and that if Christians had faith in God and would work with Him, the whole city might be shaken as St. Louis was last winter.

Jan. 11.—The interest in the services of Mr. Hammond has increased from day to day. At the meetings for conference and prayer at half-past nine a.m., there has been an average attendance of from two to three hundred. Mr. Hammond has been expounding the Scriptures with great clearness and force, dwelling especially upon the conditions of prevailing prayer. Christians have been edified, drawn together and near the Saviour. Many regard these Bible expositions as the most valuable of Mr. Hammond's ministrations, and feel that he has given them views of divine truth that will make them happier and more useful than they have ever been before.

The children's meetings have been interesting and profitable. Mr. Hammond preaches Jesus to them with wonderful simplicity and power. When they profess to love Jesus and to have received from Him new hearts, Mr. Hammond has them examined by some one of the ministers present, and if they give satisfactory evidences of having been born again, their names are entered in a covenant book. Thus far ninety-seven have signed this book. Many who have not yet signed hope that they have been converted.

On Sabbath night the hall could not hold half of the people who crowded there long before the hour appointed to hear Mr. Hammond preach to the sporting men of the city. Hundreds who never go to the church stayed in the aisles of the hall two hours while Mr. Hammond told them of the ark of Noah, of the scoffers in his day, of the flood that drowned the old world, and illustrated by it the ark of redemption, how men treat it, and the consequence of refusing to enter it.

While Mr. Hammond was preaching in the hall, there was a prayer-meeting in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Christians there humbled themselves before God, and pleaded with Him to pour out his Spirit on the impenitent men and women in the music-hall. At the inquiry-meeting in the hall, after the sermon, it was evident that these prayers were heard. Many are convicted of sin, and not a few found peace by believing in Jesus. We all feel now that God's set time to favour this city has come.

This morning Mr. Hammond, with the ministers and others, is visiting the saloons and inviting their keepers and patrons to attend the meetings. Revivals are reported this morning in Santa Clara and in "The Willows," two miles west of the city.—The Occident.

WHO WERE THE LOSERS?

BY HUDSON TAYLOR.

[The following thoughts were suggested after reading the article in THE CHRISTIAN of Feb. 4, on "Some Signs of this Time," by noticing in how many departments of the work of God the labourers are burdened for want of funds, and yet surely many of the Lord's dear people are suffering far more, and will eternally suffer loss, from the want of more self-denying faithfulness in the discharge of the stewardship with which He has entrusted them.]

History repeats itself. Eighteen hundred years ago there was a widespread impression that a coming Messiah would soon appear, and a few were earnestly waiting for the redemption of Israel. He did appear, but how?

He came a poor man; apparently the son of a carpenter. He chose fishermen as his apostles. He sought not his own. He closed a wondrous life by being lifted up, but on a cross; by being crowned, but with thorns.

But in dying, He destroyed the power of death; He could not be holden of it; He rose again from the grave; commissioned his disciples to preach the gospel in every land, to every creature; ascended to heaven, and shed forth the promise of the Father, the Holy Ghost, on those He had left behind as his representatives and witnesses.

Strange was the effect this produced. The disciples began to think that Jesus meant what He said, and acted on his directions; they began to love as brethren; to sell that which they had and gave alms; to live in such manifested unity and love that the world was constrained to exclaim, "See how these brethren love one another." No member of the Church had any lack. The poor, rich in faith, had their temporal wants supplied; and wealthy believers laying up treasure in heaven preached the truth by example as well as word. Doubtless many of the wise ones of this world spoke scornfully of their fanaticism and folly, and prided themselves on their own possessions, determining to enjoy themselves, and then to "leave the rest of their substance to their babes." But did they do so? We shall see.

A few years rolled on, and, as foretold by the Master, troublous times came. Jerusalem was compassed about with armies. The day for selling possessions and using the proceeds for Jesus was passed. Many of the faithful believers were far away, preaching the gospel in distant places. Some, however, still remained in Jerusalem. Suddenly, the besieging army withdrew,—the gates of the city were thrown open. Some, literally obeying the words of the Master, escaped from the housetops, without coming down into the house to take any of their goods. Others, abroad, returned not home, but at once fled to the mountains; and forthwith the gates were shut: the last opportunity of escape was gone. Of those who escaped, some may have spent their all in the service of the Master, and thus have had nothing to leave. Others, though obedient to his warning, had, perhaps, been more "prudent," and had retained somewhat of their possessions "for a rainy day." Who were the losers? And again, some members of the Church, perhaps, abode by their stuff in Jerusalem, instead of fleeing to the mountains. Again I ask, Who were the losers?

History repeats itself. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. In that day, who will be the losers? Who are the followers of Him who laid all He was and all He had upon the altar? who emptied Himself, giving His life a ransom for many? Will they be the losers?

BIBLE-READINGS.

A correspondent writes concerning the need of further effort on behalf of the many souls brought under the sound of the gospel through special services, and suggests the question, "How shall the Church of Christ keep a hold on such?"

One agency of undoubted value, and perhaps not yet as extensively adopted as might be wished, is the Bible-class; or, better, the Bible-reading. Invaluable as preaching is, it needs to be followed, among the uneducated especially, by teaching of a more personal nature, that people may see for themselves what God says about sin, salvation, and holiness.

The Bible-reading necessitates no public gifts. In fact, we think the faculty of profitably and happily conducting such meetings is a peculiar one, and often stands alone. It involves no outlay, save the purchase of a few clearly-printed Bibles, and a box to keep them in, with the loan of the cottage-parlour of some Lydia, whose heart the Lord has opened. Here, on the Sunday afternoon, let Christians, professional men, shopkeepers, clerks, etc., give an hour to the study of the Scriptures, with ten or a dozen men, teaching them to compare one passage with another, and bring fresh ones the following week, encouraging them also to ask or write questions.

If these meetings became common in every district, what might we not see? Snares broken, homes remodelled, public-houses emptied, and churches and chapels filled.

Speaking of such Bible-gatherings for the upper classes, our friend and correspondent Miss Cotton writes:—

"A need of suitable subjects for the hour's study is sometimes felt. To meet this want, it is proposed that outlines of such Scripture studies should be supplied to those who desire them, and will forward their address to E. R. C., Tower-hill, Dorking.

"Faith, Love, Truth; Life, Joy, Wisdom; Hope, Peace, Mercy; Weakness and Strength; Hope and Despair; Sin and Righteousness; Death and Life; Defeat and Victory.

"The mine of Scripture is so full of interest to the mind, as well as the heart, that we need never flag in either individual or united study of its blessed contents, always remembering that on our knees we plead for the light of the Spirit, to reveal to us Him who is the golden centre of the rich storehouse."

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT MONAGHAN.

Since the beginning of the year, these services have been regularly carried on almost every evening till the present time. First of all, the movement was started by a series of Union prayer-meetings in the first week of the new year, conducted by the Revs. R. Meyer, J. Bodel, and J. A. Allison, in their respective churches. Soon, however, the meetings became so popular, and the anxiety of numbers to attend so great, that it was arranged to hold all the services in First Monaghan Presbyterian Church, as being the only house fit to accommodate the worshippers. It was evident to all that not any merely human power could bring together such audiences as night after night assembled, and with unusual attention listened to the different speakers.

Several of the ministers from Belfast had previously volunteered their assistance in carrying on the work, and amongst those who visited, to give a helping hand, were Revs. H. M. Williamson, W. Park, Dr. Knox, G. Shaw, E. Workman, and a number of laymen; also Revs. J. Macaonaghie (Castleblayney), and W. Witherow (Donaghadee).

At the close of two of the weeks, when the question of continuing the meetings during the next was put to the house, and all invited to stand up who were in favour of it, the whole body of worshippers, glad to have an opportunity of manifesting their approval, rose up immediately with one accord. Old and young now seem thoroughly awakened to the fact that one thing is needful, and by God's grace they have determined to choose that good part which shall not be taken away from them. The services, according to the testimony of all who have been present, have been greatly blessed; the careless have been roused, and many who professed faith in and love to the Saviour have had their grace strengthened and revived; while to many an anxious one, the desire of whose heart was, "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him," Jesus of Nazareth has revealed Himself as still passing by in all the glory of His power, mighty to save. Very many remained after the services for instruction and spiritual conversation, and found this exercise much blessed to their souls. Meetings held for those recently converted have been attended by near two hundred persons, mostly young people. The work is still being carried on.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN RUSSIA.—II.

You will be pleased to hear that our devoted fellow-labourer, Count Korff, has already translated your wall-sheet, "The Two Roads," for the benefit of his countrymen, and also one of the Eastbourne Scripture-rollers, and is now compiling a Russian daily text-book. This devoted Christian friend has, ever since 1868, been an indefatigable helper, superintending the work, and distributing our Gospels. When he was in London, I had the pleasure of introducing him to Mr. Smithies, who placed the first impressions of the British Workman in Russ at his disposal. Upon his return to St. Petersburg, he obtained permission from the Government Censor to import and circulate this publication in Russia. The great favour of this concession will be apparent when it is considered that not even a Russian Bible, printed abroad, can be brought into the country. This Russian Workman is much prized both by rich and poor, and I had the gratification of attending one of the meetings of a committee formed in St. Petersburg to promote the regular monthly issue of it. Mr. Smithies supplies the stereotype plates of the engravings. May the divine blessing follow this effort also!

The amount of Christian literature imported from England is very great. I conversed with a gentleman who had purchased in England cases full of books and tracts, from which they are making selections suitable for translations. Mr. Spurgeon's sermons are read, both as they issue from the press here, and also in the French translation, and they are greatly appreciated. Many Russians have heard this servant of God in this country.

The gospel message so faithfully proclaimed by Lord Radstock at St. Petersburg last winter was blessed not only to the quickening of the Lord's people there, where there was so great a famine as to spiritual food, but it proved also a savour of life to many of the unconverted among the upper classes. It scarcely is possible to calculate the large amount of spiritual good thus effected.

I must recur, in a few sentences only, to the work of Count Korff in directing the work of our Bible-distribution, and who can tell us of not a few conversions through reading them. He has lately been supplying them to the cabmen of the capital. Through our friend's and other co-workers' earnest efforts, the Gospels find their way to the remotest parts of the country—among the soldiers of the Caucasus and Central Asia, to the prisoners in Siberia, to the sick in the hospitals, and to the shipwrecked sailors all along the coast. A small supply of our Gospels is kept at every station of the Russian Shipwrecked Mariners' Society; and the Czarевна (sister of our Princess of Wales), who is the patroness of the institution, has sent a very kind letter of thanks to the Count, for providing the sailors who have been rescued from a watery grave with the word of life.

It will interest you to know that Miss Nugent, who lately presented a Bible from the maidens of England to the Duchess of Edinburgh, has sent to our committee over £21, the surplus money that remained after having purchased the Bible, to be used for the free distribution of our Gospels in Russia. The whole sum was subscribed in shillings by upwards of 7000 young ladies.

A most remarkable work is also going on in the villages in the south of Russia. Here a considerable number of Christians, mostly agriculturists, meet together daily for an hour, for reading the Scriptures and prayer, and are therefore named "Stundist"—a German word, derived from hour. They hold that "holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation," and do not accept any other authority in spiritual matters. May the Lord bless and guide them!

My recent visit has greatly increased my conviction of the importance of placing in the hands of our fellow-men the pure Word of the living God; and I do earnestly hope that this very imperfect sketch of what I have seen and heard of the way in which the Lord is opening up the way for the spread of the gospel among the teeming millions of that country may incite not only to prayer for Russia, but to the putting forth of direct personal effort for its evangelization.

One of our most active distributors wrote, a few weeks since, to a member of our committee, that the Gospels (we circulate the four bound together) could be profitably distributed by hundreds of thousands, if they only had them; for the soldiers, peasants, etc., are most anxious to search the Scriptures for themselves. Now here is an opportunity for all Christians to help; for it is a work in which all who love their Saviour can participate. What greater privilege can a Christian enjoy than to be able to say with our Lord Jesus, "I have GIVEN them thy word?"—Yours faithfully in Christ,
J. ALEXANDER.

BRIGHTON.—Weekly evangelistic services are being held in the Town-hall, Brighton. Col. Pugett and another friend, of the Coldstream Guards, preached last Lord's-day to large and appreciative audiences.

WINCHESTER.—A quiet but successful and blessed work for God has been carried on in this sober old cathedral city since the beginning of the year. It had been arranged that a week of work should immediately follow the usual week of prayer; and, accordingly, special services were commenced by Mr. C. Edwards, of the Evangelization Society, on January 11, in St. John's Rooms, capable of holding about 700, and the largest that could be conveniently secured for the purpose. The meetings were soon crowded, a large proportion of those attending being those not frequenting any place of worship. It was soon seen that the desire to hear the word would not be satisfied by one week's services, and the rooms were accordingly taken for a second week, and then again for a third, when Mr. Edwards was joined by another of the Society's agents, Mr. Martin. During this third week, two meetings each day were held, and were well attended, those in the evening being crowded. Mr. Martin left at the end of the week, leaving Mr. Edwards to carry on the work for another week. The services closed with an eight o'clock meeting on Sunday evening, when the room was crammed to overflowing, there not being standing-room to spare, and numbers leaving to content themselves with standing in the passages and adjoining rooms. Results are with the Lord. Suffice it to say that the meetings have throughout been characterized by an earnest, devotional spirit, that Christians of various denominations have been drawn together, and stirred up to more zeal in God's work, that prayer-meetings which had long languished have started afresh, and been well attended, and that many have undoubtedly been impressed and awakened by the power of the Spirit blessing the word.

UNION HALL MISSION, CARLISLE-STREET, EDGWARE-ROAD.—The Lord is much blessing our efforts among the poor of Lisson-grove, and I am anxious to lay before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN other important propositions in connection with the Mission. We feel the deep need of using every means in our power in order to reach the working-classes; and we are sure that a pleasant reading-room and coffee-bar has drawn many from the public-house, and in other ways been made a means of blessing to the souls of our fellow-men. There are two houses and a room, which will seat 150 persons, attached to our large hall, and we are offered the lease (which has forty-six years to run) of the whole of these premises, including the hall, for £250; but this offer only stands good to March 25th next. We, therefore, ask the earnest prayers and practical help of the Lord's people, that, if it be his gracious will, He will incline them to give liberally at once, so that the place may be secured. Besides the reading-room and coffee-bar mentioned above, we are desirous of forming a wood-chopping and shoeblack brigade, or Home, in order to reach some of the destitute lads around us. The Mission is known to some of your readers, and as the premises will be put into the care of well-known Christian men for evangelistic purposes, we with confidence make it known to all who desire to see the Lord's kingdom extended in the hearts of men.
ROBERT BILKE.

Wed. 24.—"The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." "Jesus drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen, and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables, and said unto them, ... Take these things hence; make not my Father's house a house of merchandise." "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God; neither he that loveth not his brother."—1 Cor. iii. 17; John ii. 15, 16; 1 John iii. 10.

"LET JUDGMENT RUN DOWN AS WATERS, AND RIGHTEOUSNESS AS A MIGHTY STREAM."—AMOS V. 24.

CENTRAL NOON MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

The following are the subjects and speakers for the last week of February:—

- | | | |
|---------------|---|-------------------------|
| Mon. Feb. 22. | —Meditate upon these things" (1 Tim. iv. 15).
Reports of work. | Mr. T. B. Smithies. |
| Tues. „ 23. | —Faith without works, dead, being alone (Jas. ii. 17). | Rev. C. E. de Haviland. |
| Wed. „ 24. | —Cast your net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find" (John xxi. 6). | Mr. Rich. H. Hill. |
| Thurs. „ 25. | —Him that overcometh" (Rev. iii. 1, 12, 21; xii. 10, 11). | Rev. B. B. Girdlestone. |
| Fri. „ 26. | —Secret faults (Psa. xix. 12) | Robert Taylor. |
| Sat. „ 27. | —We will go with our sons and with our daughters" (Ex. x. 8-11). | Dr. Geo. Saunders. |

The Young Men's Prayer-meeting, held in Moorgate-street Hall, is quite a success. Christian young men are invited to take part in this meeting. We believe the Lord is about to shower blessing upon young men in London. Then let us be in the way. A meeting will be held every Friday evening, at eight o'clock, to which all young men are welcome.—Yours faithfully,
JOHN SCOTT.

A PRAISE MEETING.—Recently a meeting for praise and testimony was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Though convened without any public announcement, it was largely attended. Captain Moreton, who presided, read and commented upon the 103rd Psalm, and then read a number of letters received from females, who had recently found the Saviour in connection with the various services at the Conference Hall. Personal testimony was then given by seven men who had recently received blessing. The preaching at the hall, the week of prayer, and the mission week a year ago, had severally left blessing on these souls. One who for years had been an open advocate of infidelity, was deeply moved while relating his conversion, brought about by the preaching in the open air up the Green Lanes last summer. The general thanksgiving, repeated by the whole assembly, brought the meeting to a close.

MR. SANKEY'S CHOIR IN LONDON.

A choir is being formed to aid the singing at the evangelistic meetings in March. Mr. Sankey requests that all who are willing to help will send their names. Address, Capt. Hon. R. Moreton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N. Only those who can furnish good reference as to Christian character will be accepted.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

GOSPEL MAGAZINE. Collingridge. Price 6d.—Solid, but not dull. Contains much scriptural exposition, and is thoroughly evangelical in its tone throughout.

QUIET THOUGHTS. By MARTHA CAREFUL Nisbet.—Written by a quiet soul, and for such, breathing at the same time a social, friendly spirit, that, if prevalent in lives and homes, would lead us upward and onward in sweet and happy fellowship. "The blessing of peace" is found in quiet hours, and here given out in quiet thoughts.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST. Hodder and Stoughton. Price 6d.—The varied contents of this number may be stated as political, descriptive, critical, and controversial—food for many palates. We were pleased to see the talented editor, Mr. R. W. Dale, so heartily co-operating with Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Birmingham, and shall be looking for a record of his impressions and experiences in the March number.

SWORD AND TROWEL. Passmore and Alabaster. Price 3d.—Mr. Spurgeon discourses pleasantly on his "winter retreat," Mentone, and tells how greatly he was benefited by his last sojourn there. We earnestly desire a like result on this occasion. A paper on Spain will be found interesting in the light of recent events.

EVANGELICAL MAGAZINE. Hodder and Stoughton. Price 6d.—Contains much thoughtful writing on subjects of present-day moment. The article by Rev. J. Baldwin Brown, on "Civil Society and the Recent Policy of Rome," is an excellent contribution to the controversy raised by Mr. Gladstone, that still rages around the Vatican and its "prisoner."

YOUNG MEN'S MAGAZINE. 168, Aldersgate-street, E.C., and Nisbet. Price 1d.—The old "Quarterly Report" of the Young Men's Christian Associations (which, by the way, might more properly have been called the Three-quarterly) has given place to a monthly, under the above title. The January and February numbers contain useful papers for Christian young men, and a great variety of intelligence respecting kindred associations.

THE MOTHERS' FRIEND. Hodder and Stoughton. Price 1d.—Many mothers, we suppose, have not much time to peruse magazines, but if they can induce Emily or Nellie to read this little monthly to them while they nurse the baby or mend the husband's stockings, we think it will prove a "friend indeed."

THE REDEMPTIVE LOVE OF GOD. By Rev. J. W. PITCHFORD, M.A. Nisbet.—An instructive and faithful exposition of the gospel. The only objection we have to make is that the author seems to confuse between love and complacency, and to imply that God does not love the sinner, and that his love is only to be attained by believing in Christ; whereas it was because God loved the world that He gave his Son. He asks, "In what way do the Scriptures represent that this special and distinguishing love is to be attained by man?" Now the Scriptures do not appear to us to put it exactly thus. Nor could we say that "the great flood of divine love will never flow towards us, until this obstacle [our sins] is removed." "We love Him because He first loved us."

HOLINESS AS DEMANDED AND PROVIDED BY THE GOSPEL. By J. F. B. TINLING, B.A. Partridge, 1s.—Amidst much written and said on the subject of Holiness that is obscure, ambiguous, or erroneous, it is a real refreshment to meet with a manual which carries you along in parallel lines with Scriptural truth, so that you have not to stop and consider at every step what these expressions mean, or whether they are according to the faith of the gospel. We heartily commend these addresses, as giving no uncertain sound as to the effects which the gospel of Christ is designed and intended to produce in the hearts and lives of believers. We know that they have been much blessed of God in more than one place where they have been delivered.

CONFERENCES OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—In consequence of the anticipated visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to London, the usual quarterly conferences will not be held in February and May.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAY FOR LONDON, with its 4,000,000 inhabitants! Ponder, and then plead the following:—Zech. iv. 6, 7; Matt. xvii. 19, 21; Mark xi. 22—24; John xvi. 23, 24; James v. 16—18. If LONDON be converted, the WORLD may be brought to Christ.

PRAISE.—For a brother and other friends at Baldock, who are now rejoicing in Christ Jesus.—For an abundant answer to prayer of a gentleman exposed to great temptation in Liverpool and Manchester, inserted in THE CHRISTIAN Jan. 28.—Thanks to Almighty for bringing a prodigal son, clothed and in his right mind, to the feet of Jesus, for whom his mother has often requested prayer in THE CHRISTIAN.

PRAYER.—For a son in a lunatic asylum, that, if God's will, reason and memory may be restored, and that he may be taught by the Spirit.—That a lady may be restored to health, after years of suffering, if it be the will of God.—For a gentleman, who is suffering torture from neuralgia, that the Lord would reveal Himself to him, and give him submission.—A medical student (Edinburgh), preparing for an examination in April, that God would help him to work, and crown his work with success.

PLACES.—For two villages in the neighbourhood of Scarborough.—For young Englishmen in the tea and indigo plantations in Assam.—For a parish in Dorsetshire, waiting for a new curate, that the Lord may use some one to arouse it from its spiritual deadness and sloth.—That the Lord would in spirit and power graciously visit West Hartlepool.—For Portobello, that God's people may be led to arouse themselves to united effort in behalf of the unsaved.—For a week of special evangelistic services at Baldock, Herts, commenced on the 15th inst.—On behalf of a service for children every Saturday afternoon, in the Stewart-lane Mission-room, Battersea-fields.—For great blessing upon services in the Ragged-school, Lincoln, every Sunday evening.—That a union prayer-meeting at Reigate may be established, that obstacles may be removed, and showers of blessing vouchsafed.—That a faithful minister of the gospel may be appointed to the vicarage of Lambourne, Berks.—That the labours of an evangelist, now on a visit to the village of Rothes, may be greatly blessed.—For the young men's meeting held every night at the Presbyterian Church, Broad-street, Birmingham.—For the parish of Barton, Westmoreland, that a godly clergyman may be sent.—For Biarritz, that special efforts may be graciously owned of God, and His servants filled with the Spirit.—For blessing on the services at Derby Gospel-hall, by H. Holloway.—For Dunse, Berwickshire.—For a Mission at Hink's Hay, in the parish of Dawley, from Feb. 14 to 22.—For special services at Stonebroom and Tupton, Derbyshire, commencing Feb. 21.—For an outpouring of the Spirit on Drogheda and its neighbourhood, and for a blessing on the united prayer-meetings.—For blessing on a Mission this week in Pontefract, Yorks.

CONVERSIONS.—For three brothers, one about to proceed to India.—For eight sons and daughters.—Two wives, for their beloved husbands.—For a brother and his wife, who do not seek rest in Jesus.—For a father and mother.—For two brothers, under the dominion of drunkenness.—For the two wicked sons of a widowed mother.—For the members of a worldly family long the subject of many prayers, that they may be blessed by hearing Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Liverpool.

THE YOUNG MEN OF PARIS, who were so greatly blessed during the week of prayer last November, have invited all the other Continental Christian Associations (those of France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, and Spain), to join them in a second week of special prayer and effort on behalf of young men. It was not thought advisable to extend the same invitation to Great Britain, considering that two such weeks of prayer have there been observed during the year 1874. But I fulfil a promise to my brethren in Paris in asking, through your columns, that English Christians will, during the last week of the present month (February 20th to 28th), unite their prayers to those of the Christian young men of the Continent, that in these less-favoured lands many young men may be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. In Paris daily meetings will be held in various Protestant churches, as on the last occasion. Many of those who then found peace in believing are expecting then to bear witness to the grace by which they stand. In Bordeaux, also, where I expect to spend most of the week, there will be daily evangelistic meetings. For both these places I would crave special prayer, that there might be a great ingathering of precious souls.

The Christian.

TESTIMONY FROM THE NORTH.

"For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord."

1 THESS. III. 8.

WHEN our friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, began their great evangelistic enterprise in the North, some eighteen months ago, they necessarily commenced their labours under many obvious disadvantages. They themselves were strangers in a strange land, the work to which they had put their hands was not generally held in the highest estimation by the Christian communities of this country, and the methods which our friends had adopted for carrying on their work were novel enough to be almost startling. Hence the labourers were looked upon by many with suspicion, the work was judged by past work of a similar kind, and by many was condemned before it was tested; and the methods of working, whilst they drew many to the meetings from that class of society, both Christian and un-Christian, who, like the Athenians, spend their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing, did undoubtedly keep away for a time many whose sympathy and help were most desirable. All this, however, was what might have been fairly expected, and, perhaps, calculated upon. Revivals, and the methods and results of revivals, have sometimes left painful cause for suspicion concerning that class of agency in Christian labour; and when we were told that this wave of revival, so called, would, in its ebb, either leave the Church, like a stranded wreck, high and dry amongst the rocks and shingle, or would carry her farther out on the sea of unbelief and indifference; when, also, we were told that the converts admitted to the churches from such work would prove to be an element of pain and weakness, rather than an addition of real life and power, we could only say to all such objections, "Time will show," and to all such objectors, "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight even against God."

The object we have in view in writing this article is to show what answer the voice of time has given to many of the objections which gathered about this work of revival during the earlier days of its history. About the labourers, and their methods of working, we do not purpose to say anything; they have alike commended themselves to Christians in every part of the United Kingdom, and have thus, in the best manner possible, replied to all objections. We intend to confine our attention to some of the results of the eighteen months' work. Sufficient time has now elapsed, we think, to show what is likely to be the kind of results which the movement has left in the churches, and in the minds of individuals supposed to have been influenced by it. We think also that the time has now come when we may safely begin to inquire about the actual facts in connection with this work, as they stand related to Church life and experience, especially in regard to the converts admitted to the various Christian communities.

To this end we have submitted the following questions to several of the northern churches in England and Scotland:—

1. How many converts were admitted to your church during the revival?
2. Have there been any cases of falling away from the Christian profession amongst those admitted during that period? If so, how many?
3. Has the general tone of piety displayed by the converts been equal to that of converts admitted under the ordinary methods of church-work?

We felt assured that if the answers to these questions were as satisfactory as we hoped and prayed they might be, they would constitute such a strong presumptive evidence of the genuineness of the work, as almost to put the matter beyond dispute; and would also be the means, perhaps, of clearing away any suspicions that were still lingering in the minds of some concerning the reality of this particular work of revival; and would also do something towards preparing the minds of Christians generally for the adoption of more earnest and vigorous methods for the quickening of Christian life, and the conversion of sinners to God.

The answers sent in from the churches to which the questions were submitted have been of a kind to call forth our deep gratitude and thankfulness to Almighty God for his marvellous goodness. Over 700 members are reported to have been added to these churches from the home, the Sunday-school, and the world. These numbers do not take into account all those who may have professed to find peace in Christ at the inquirers' meetings or the meetings for young converts. The number of this class, as Mr. Moody rightly said in London, "we do not profess in any way to reckon... God and themselves alone know the real state of their hearts." We are speaking now only of those who have passed through the stricter tests which ministers, deacons, elders, and churches would apply, before such converts could be admitted to the privileges of church-fellowship.

Of this class, then, over 700 have been placed upon the roll of these churches—a number in itself sufficient to prove to our American brethren, were no other proof forthcoming, that their mission to this country has been of God, and that they have not laboured in vain; and sufficient also to prove to the churches that, in answer to prayer, and earnest, scriptural, well-directed effort, large harvests of souls may be gathered for the Lord in every part of the land.

But how have these children, born amidst all the heat, and spiritual fervour, and holy joy, of extraordinary services, stood the test of time, amidst the somewhat quieter and more even conditions of ordinary Christian life and labour? Have they fulfilled the doleful prophecies which were uttered concerning them? How much of the seed has really fallen into "good ground," and is bringing forth the thirty, sixty, and hundredfold measure of the golden grain of holy living, healthy Christian zeal and love, and "patient endurance in well-doing"? And how much of it has proved to be seed scattered in stony places, gladdening our hearts first with the promise of speedy but steady growth and abounding fruitfulness, but soon filling us with apprehension, then sadness, and last of all with profound grief and humiliation, by finding it withering away almost as quickly as it sprung up. Compared with such questions as these, the matter of numbers is insignificant indeed; it is on the answers to these that success or failure largely hinges.

On this point again the answers from the churches demand from us a lofty ascription of praise to God, who has so abundantly magnified his grace. One minister says, "We have received into our fellowship seventy converts, and there has not as yet been a single case of falling away." Another says, "Only one (out of ninety), I believe, has really proved a mistake, though, of course, some of the rest are less gratifying and hopeful than others. My own impression is that with us and all the churches here, the results of the revival are far more solid and deep than some of us expected to find them." A third writes, "I have received about sixty into church fellowship, who owed more or less, in the matter of their decision for Christ, to the revival; and of all these I know at present of only one that has fallen back. Some have left the town, and, of course, I cannot say positively how they are deporting themselves, although I am disposed to think they are striving to live a consistent, Christian life. The person to whom I refer as having backslidden was a foreigner, and at the time of his admission was not so well grounded in the Christian faith as the others." A fourth says, "Out of a hundred cases of conversion, as they seemed to be, I could not name ten who have turned back." A fifth writes, "I am not aware of more than two persons (out of forty-seven) who may be counted positive backsliders; one of these was previously a besotted drunkard; the other a young man very disadvantageously placed at home." Another writes, "It was my privilege to admit during the course of last year two hundred and sixty-seven to the fellowship of the church of which I am pastor, a large proportion of whom trace their conversion, so far as human instrumentality is concerned, to the special meetings held nightly in our district during the first three months of the year. Of hundreds known by me who professed faith in Christ I can at this moment recollect only one who has since fallen away."

And so the testimony flows on in the same strain to the end, giving indubitable proof that the work has not been of man, but of God; and that those who have joined our churches have not done so in a moment of ignorant excitement, and under the pressure of feelings that had no root in the abiding verities of the Gospel; but that they have been "born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."

And now, as to the last question put to the churches. What is the quality of the divine life found amongst the converts? Because it is quite possible to have large additions of members who will live a sufficiently consistent life to keep them out of the reach of church discipline, and preserve them from being reckoned among backsliders; and yet their lives may be lamentably deficient in many directions, and their general influence upon a Christian community may be hurtful rather than helpful. What say the churches on this point? Again the answers are of the most gratifying kind. If we had been told that the general tone of piety had been equal to that of converts admitted under ordinary methods of church work, we should have had abundant cause for thankfulness; but the reports go even beyond this mark.

One minister says, "The general tone of character in these converts is as quiet and staid as you usually find in cases that occur when no great movement is going on; and in most of the cases there is a frankness in confessing Christ such as, in Scotland at least, is not readily found in professed converts who are admitted at ordinary times. We bless God every day for what He has done for us, and for what He is still doing." Another says, "To your question I unhesitatingly reply, that in my opinion the piety [of the converts] is superior to that of those joining us at ordinary times. It is hopeful, happy, and active, and just such, in most cases, as one should desire to see." A third writes, "I have no hesitation in testifying that thus far the steadfastness and general tone of piety of the recent converts has been fully equal to that of persons added to the church at ordinary times." One brother, out of the fulness of his heart, says, "For unity of spirit, determination to work, prosperity in respect of numbers, funds, and real spiritual life, my congregation has been ever so much better since Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit than ever it has been since it was a congregation."

Upon these testimonies it is surely needless to enlarge; they speak for themselves. The voice of these ten churches (only a few amongst the many whose evidence would gladly have been given) dissipates our doubts, and puts to flight our fears concerning the real worth of a movement, which was rightly characterized by one of the speakers at the Freemasons' Hall, as "one of the most remarkable facts in modern history." Shall we not, then, do well to give earnest heed to such testimony? In prospect of the mighty campaign which is about to be undertaken in the metropolis of our land during the coming months, permit us earnestly to urge upon all Christian workers the necessity and wisdom of casting to one side—not fair and honest judgment of proper methods and the like—but suspicions, which can only harass and hinder a work which will tax to their utmost limits the time, energy, and prayerfulness of the people of God. If the work has to be done well, no strength must be wasted on mere trifles. The task is one of exceeding great magnitude, and we believe the only chance of success, under God, is for all to be thoroughly united, and ready for the work, and when the trumpet sounds, for every man to go straight before him, and so take the city; let the testimony from the North put courage and zeal into the hearts of all workers.

The Lord has said to the North, "Give up," and in response to his call, sons and daughters have come flocking to his gates with new-born joy in their hearts, and gladness shining on their face. He is now saying to the South, "Keep not back." Let the call be heard in every heart, and home, and church, and district, that the Lord's name may be abundantly glorified in the quickening and reconsecration of his people, so that in this and in the gathering of the Christless to Himself, "He may see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied."

Berkeley Villa, Bristol. WILLIAM R. SKERRY.

WINTERTON, LINCOLNSHIRE.—A fortnight's special services have just been held here by Mr. W. W. Martin, from the Evangelization Society. The Temperance-hall has been crowded every night to hear earnest gospel addresses, and much good has resulted. Several have been brought to Jesus, and there have been very blessed results among the young. Mr. Martin's addresses to the children will not be forgotten. His afternoon Bible-readings were blessed seasons.

THE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

Since the beginning of the week of services for young women, there has been a deeper consciousness among believers of the present depth of the work in Edinburgh than there may have been before. There was always the same faith about it, but more has been coming to the surface. At no time and in no way shall the Lord's people give themselves wholly to his work, without having a new avenue, as it were, opened into his own heart, to find anew that He is the prompter of all they have besought Him for. He tells them that He has been the Alpha in it all, and they doubt no more that He is the Omega also.

The work in the Drill-hall has been full of encouragement. Face to face with the laborious lovers of the lost who have planned it, are the bloated faces and shrivelled forms confronted. The table they have spread is no sooner laid, than it is surrounded by a grateful company of the hungry. And one low place of refreshment, at least, has been shut since that door of hope was opened.

Our note of last week was printed without the date. We cannot help repeating the remark that the experience of God's people here, after fifteen months of blessing, should encourage all workers throughout England to have no misgiving as to the continuance of the work around them.

One who has visited the converts for a year past writes, "When I see you next, I shall have glad news to give you of the proofs of steadfastness I have had in my district." The constant meeting of believers at noon, the glad recognition, the familiar word in passing about some important work on hand, or plan for that which opens beyond it, makes all feel the family tie to be a very real one. Doubtless it will often be looked back upon from the golden streets of the city above."

At the Bridge of Weir Station, not far from Glasgow, some men were returning from working on the railway, and, in the fog, stepped out of the carriage too soon, and fell over the bridge. The first was killed. One writes regarding him, "I have no doubt that, to Donald Munro, sudden death was sudden glory. On my first meeting with him, just after I came here, he said to me, 'When you speak to your heavenly Father, don't forget Donald Munro.'"

Since then we have heard of the death of a girl of twelve, whose home was only a few miles distant from his. She had long been anxious, but, like that of many in that district, as all over the land, her anxiety had lately turned into simple faith. Her minister told us, before she died, she was speaking of her heavenly Father's love, thus: "I have as kind a father as there is in Scotland, and yet my heavenly Father's love seems so great to me now, as if I scarcely had a father on earth at all." The heavenly love, even while making the earthly so very sweet, was, by its own greater strength, making it easy to have the earthly tie broken. The intensity of the love of Jesus comes in upon us, and all flies before it.

An evangelist passing through Edinburgh this week said, "I have been at home for rest, and confined with cold there. I had no meetings, but during a little visitation, saw fourteen or fifteen aged persons brought to the Lord."

Our Lord Jesus must have his own in these wondrous days. Be they tottering on the brink of the abyss, He pulls them back from thence. Where you would believe that erroneous teaching would almost put souls beyond his grasp, even there does his right hand follow them. "Wherever you go," said one who is always intent on the King's business, "you have just to put down your foot and possess the land."

We lately had the satisfaction of being present at

THE MOTHERS' MEETING IN GLASGOW,

As here, it meets on Thursday, from 11 to 12, in the hall under the church where the noon meeting is held. There is nothing to prevent mothers' meetings being held in all towns at the same hour. There is no need for an address being given; the requests for prayer are all the address we need to listen to. If only six mothers were to meet and lay down requests for all their burdens, then most eloquently would the little papers plead with the Lord, and with the mothers' hearts too. A mother must be appointed to receive the requests for each day. She gives out the psalm or hymn, and reads some verses of the Bible. Then a few requests are read, and some mother will be led to pray, if she who reads the requests is not led to do so at the time. The chain will lengthen; mother after mother will willingly offer to be custodian of these sacred requests—these persisting petitions of poor helpless women, who will never cease crying till Jesus says, "IT IS DONE."

Who would refuse such a simple work? Would she not fear lest her boy's name, her girl's need, should drop out of its place in praying hearts? She would have the falling showers to saturate the parched soil of her garden till every buried seed should be in germ, in leaf, in bloom! Oh! what she gains by just giving in her name as willing for one day to read these requests, choose that hymn, read these verses!

Just now God is arranging for his own work everywhere; if we should miss our chance to be made some use of, He would have to arrange without us. It is our power for the time. We may decline; but He would have us accept, yield, offer ourselves willingly. The names of willing mothers are noted down alphabetically. A book of requests is kept, into which each is copied, and room left for the thanksgiving to follow. It used to be difficult to keep up prayer-meetings, especially of women. But everything is now as on the wheels of progress, and only those who refuse to lift one foot and be carried along with the advancing chariot are left unblest. Mothers will be led generally to say a little word about what they read. Even when they try to be silent they can hardly help saying something. But when people have much business on hand, little speaking is required. A text and three little stories might make up a woman's part in the meeting at any time, and these are furnished for us on every hand at present. It is not fair to have long prayers, though we are all so apt to have them; two or three short ones, even from the same lips, would be better for the first few meetings until several mothers were led to pray.

ASSOCIATION OF LAY HELPERS.

A most interesting sermon was preached in St. Paul's Cathedral, in connection with one of the services of the Association of Lay-helpers, by the Rev. G. H. Wilkinson, Vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton-square, on Monday, Feb. 8. Admission was by ticket, but the vast dome was thronged with eager listeners. Mr. Wilkinson, who had just returned from his Mission at Leeds, preached from Rev. xix. 16, specially dwelling upon the words, "King of kings and Lord of lords." He drew a graphic contrast between the weakness of Bethlehem, the labour of Nazareth, the agony of Gethsemane, the sacrifice of the Cross, and the ascension glory of Him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords." And he said that the experience of the Lord must be in some degree that of his whole Church, and of every individual member of it. He drew a wonderful picture of the contrast between Paul without Christ, and Paul with Christ. He spoke of the manifest presence of God the Holy Spirit at the Leeds Mission, and exhorted all those engaged in God's work to reality of life, and wound up by a powerful appeal to all his unconverted hearers to come to the foot of the Cross, and find present pardon and peace in the precious blood of Christ.

LEEDS CABMEN.—On Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 15, 16, the annual suppers were given to Leeds cabmen and their wives at the Friends' Meeting-house. Addresses were given by ministers and others, and religious papers were distributed. There is reason for hoping that these annual suppers are productive of much good, and there is no doubt that previous suppers prepared the way for the successful introduction of cabmen's shelters in November.

THE MINISTRY OF SONG.

Deep down in every bosom there are hidden heart-strings, touched by the finger of memory when we hear, in soft, low tones, the plaintive melodies of our native land, or the same old tunes that were sung in the little whitewashed church long ago, when we were very little, and the sermon seemed very long. But the psalms or hymns were sung with a vigour which, in later years, we may have somewhat abated. And for what reason? Why do we no longer sing so heartily? Has the man of forty less cause to praise God than the child of four?

But it was neither one of our national songs, nor yet one of the grand old psalm-tunes, which had drawn the crowd round a street-singer the other night. A small provincial city, a cold night, yet about 400 people were standing quietly round a singer of no extraordinary excellence. The words that he sang were these—

"There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we can see it afar;
For the Father waits over the way,
To prepare us a dwelling-place there."

And softly and reverently the crowd joined in the chorus; and through the hushed streets and the starry night the sweet melody rose, and lingered, and fell—

"In the sweet by-and-by
We shall meet on that beautiful shore."

There was never a word of preaching. One could not even tell whether the singer were using his talent chiefly for the glory of God, or for the sake of the money which was freely showered upon him.

It was the power of sacred song which had drawn these people together.

It has not always been so; but just now, through all Scotland, there are memories of a God-given singer whose tones found an entrance into many a hard heart, and won the citadel thereof for King Jesus—memories of preaching and of singing which were to each other as nail and hammer. There was a Hand which guided both, and fastened the simple words as "nails in a sure place."

To how many has that sermon in song, "Jesus of Nazareth," been blessed as the means of their conviction or conversion! How many are now "safe in the arms of Jesus!" How many have answered to the call, "Who will go and work to-day?"

And what a blessed new field of labour the knowledge of the power of sacred song has opened up to many of God's people! In Edinburgh there is an institution where poor helpless beings are housed and cared for. Some young ladies went to sing there. They had no talent for preaching or teaching, but they had a talent for music, and a Saviour to whom it was consecrated; so they went to sing of God's love and mercy. After they left, the superintendent observed one poor paralytic, who for eleven years had not spoken a word. This woman was now seen walking up and down, whispering to herself. The superintendent went near, and these were the words she was saying—

"Depth of mercy! can there be Mercy yet in store for me?"

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

As one who is herself a sweet singer has said, "The power of God has gone with these hymns as it never went even with the Hallelujah Chorus." The power of God—that is the secret of the power of sacred song.

Twenty-six hundred years ago, when the children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir had come up to fight against the children of Judah, it is written that Jehoshaphat, after prayer and consultation, set the singers to praise the Lord in the beauty of holiness. "And when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten."

There are three enemies still, and there is the same

[132]

Lord. Let us lay hold of the same weapons, and go forward, praying, watching, giving thanks, till "the kingdoms of the world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ."

"In God's great field of labour
All work is not the same;
He hath a service for each one
Who loves His holy name:
And you to whom the secrets
Of all sweet sounds are known,
Rise up, for He hath called you
To a mission of your own.
And rightly to fulfil it,
His grace can make you strong,
Who to your charge has given
The ministry of song."

ANENA.

GATHERING AFTER THE REAPERS.

BY MRS. MEREDITH.

We hear with deep interest of the work of following among the sheaves, and gleaning in the harvest-field, that is being carried out in places visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. For this purpose, drawing-room meetings greatly promote the progress of the kingdom of Christ among those of whom it is declared, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven!" It is a truly necessary work prepared for some hands to do, to pluck up the thorns that "choke the word" in such places.

Now that "Jesus of Nazareth is passing by," there must be no one left without the knowledge of his presence; and it is not at all certain that the news of his movements reach those that dwell in great houses, without special effort being made to acquaint them with the peculiar work of God that is going on around them. "Let him that heareth, therefore, say, Come," to whomsoever he can reach, who may be "out of the way," "far off," "strangers," and "foreigners," albeit according to the flesh our own brethren and sisters.

There are many who are removed by circumstances into a place of earthly composure—not repose, nor rest, nor even calm, but mere composure—just that sort of state the production of which is well described as "making a silence, and calling it peace." And it is a matter of life and death to break this silence. The manner of doing it need not be rough. The gentlest dove will enter the regions where it prevails with as much effect as the most powerful messenger, if the step be "after the Spirit," and not "after the flesh."

"May we pray here?" asked one, in a voice of nervous, quivering anxiety, whose surroundings were of "purple and fine linen," and who had only a few days before heard with the understanding, for the first time, that she was a lost sinner.

"Yes; our Jesus is here. We are always with Him. He never leaves us anywhere, and will hear us now, as well as at any other time, or in any other place."

"What! in this room, filled with such frippery things?"

"No doubt about it. Let us kneel down, and tell Him what we were talking about."

The sense of incongruity was soon gone, as we were told; for He who manifested Himself overshadowed all things, and gave a blessing so bright, that all else faded.

"Have I a right to be so happy as I am?" said a young lady at a meeting, of which we have had some joyous details.

"Why not?" was the reply; "in what consists your disqualification for rejoicing in the Lord?"

"That I have not yet proved myself to be fit. I am only just beginning to know his love, and have not shown my change of state in any way."

Assured that she need not wait until she had made progress in the new life to enjoy the blessing she had received, she became overpowered with the feeling of wonder that Jesus had called her, repeating, "Even me, even me," and declaring that she was indeed "the chief of sinners."

Another friend tells us of a discussion between young converts, whose parents were unlikely to relax their bonds to society.

"Must we refuse to play cards, even when it annoys our father and mother, and inconveniences friends?"

"Is it wrong for us to be present where people are amusing themselves, and passing away precious time, although we may not be joining in the proceedings of the party?"

"How can I live in this house, and not be continually sinning against God?" cried the member of a very worldly family to a friend.

A great many such queries have been addressed to those who have tried to encourage and aid "little ones" that have been brought to Jesus out of high places. With adoring gratitude we heard from such workers that there was an answer always ready for every question. No difficulty was too great to be solved. One reply gave the key to all the problems, and it was the simple words, "Jesus saves!" Jehovah-jireh, even our words. "New supplies each hour we meet while passing on to God."

"We dwelt," said one worker, "on the present tense: Jesus saves—not will save—but saves—now and here; and the salvation is from sin!"

"Do you mean that I shall find He saves me from having to play those games, and do those things that now I hate?"

"Yes."

"Oh, how will He do it?"

"I don't know, and dare not predict. Pray, wait, watch. He will surely do it. 'Jesus saves; He saves from sin.'"

"We sang that hymn often during those days at —," said one who has been seeking souls in a very dark place, where wealth and evil abound. It is very pleasant to hear that thus there are many gleaning in the harvest-field whose "labours are not in vain in the Lord." This work is resulting from the sound now going through our land, and echoing at this time, particularly in the centres of human achievement. It may be useful to make it known that the gospel is flowing over its channels, and thus spreading on every side into the recesses where "the strong man armed" keeps his victims.

I have been myself much interested at some meetings of women in Sheffield, since the evangelists left, to perceive that the precious Bible is being largely opened up to eager hearts. At the last one of a series that was held in the Temperance Hall, there was a warm response to a call to bring forth treasures out of its store. We had a rush of texts on the subject of the "Water of life" read aloud through the room.

After singing the hymn now so familiar to us all by that name, the company turned to the Word of the living God, and found in it the numerous declarations and descriptions of those "streams that make glad the city of our God," and was occupied to a late hour, even then parting reluctantly, in pursuing the refreshing streams through the Holy Book.

CORRECTION.—The writer of the appeal in aid of the Moravian Mission Ship, in our issue of Feb. 11, has, by an oversight, given the address where donations can be sent as Rev. E. Shaw, 97, Hatton-garden. It should be Rev. H. E. Shaw, 7, Ely-place, Holborn, E.C.

"MANY HANDS MAKE LIGHT WORK."—The work of God, through the instrumentality of our dear brethren, Moody, Sankey, and others, is but little known to the lower classes, especially those among whom I and my coadjutors are working, namely, policemen, cab, omnibus, and tramway-car men, and I thought if you would kindly make it known through your valuable paper, THE CHRISTIAN, that I should be glad to receive any copies of that or any other gospel paper that the readers could spare, believing that many of them would gladly pay the half-penny postage, and send them on to me each week, and they would be the means of doing very much good, especially now Messrs. Moody and Sankey will so soon be in London (God willing), and we desire to awaken an interest in them and their meetings, so as to bring as many as possible under the sound of the gospel. Address Mr. J. J. Jones, 14, Richmond-road, Dalston, London, E.

A WORD ABOUT OURSELVES.

The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN have come in for their share of reckless and anonymous mis-statement in one, at least, of the Liverpool papers, to which they do not purpose to make reply. But we are sorry to find that a report in one of the London papers contains the following statement by our brother in the faith, Mr. W. P. Lockhart—

"It had been reported in THE CHRISTIAN that there were 7000 present when he was at Bingley Hall, but there were not more than 3000, and they might generally divide the numbers reported in that journal by one-half."

We are obliged to give to the statement which we have italicised the most unqualified contradiction. We habitually reduce numbers which we have reason to think exaggerated, and we often substitute a general term for a specific statement, where we have no means of ensuring accuracy. In the particular case quoted by Mr. Lockhart, our report stated that

"all these meetings have been well attended, from 5000 to 7000 persons having been present at each."

It will be seen that Mr. Lockhart's quotation is itself not strictly accurate; and with regard to the numbers, they were copied from a Birmingham paper, which, certainly, was inspired by no inducement to exaggerate. Mr. Moody, in speaking at the Conference at Freemasons' Hall, said—

"We telegraphed to different places, and got our friends, Mr. Newman Hall, and Dr. Fraser, and Mr. Lockhart, of Liverpool, to go to Birmingham, and speak to the people. I see by the Birmingham papers yesterday, that the meetings were attended by 7000 or 8000 people. Mr. Moody appealed to Dr. Donald Fraser, who sat beside him, and confirmed the statement."—THE CHRISTIAN, Feb. 11, same issue as the one quoted from above.

Possibly, the Birmingham papers may have been mistaken, and Dr. Fraser, Mr. Moody, and ourselves, may have endorsed the mistake; but that it is our habit to exaggerate numbers, we cannot too emphatically deny. And we also add that in all our reports we carefully endeavour to ensure truthfulness, and are much more accustomed to tone down communications than to add one heightened tint of colour.

OUR POLICE AND POSTMEN.

Dear Sir,—Those of your readers who are interested in these men will, doubtless, like to know how the work of sending packets (containing British Workman, etc.) to them progresses. Above 2000 such packets have been sent from here since last June, besides many hundreds from the voluntary helpers who have taken addresses off my hands. Almost daily I am receiving new addresses, to which it is impossible that I can myself send monthly packets, even did funds permit. Whilst tendering hearty thanks to those who have aided me already, may I ask if there are no other Christians who will take some addresses, and send monthly packets to them?

As time, strength, and funds permit, it is my earnest prayer that the whole of the Great Britain letter-carriers may be thus cared for. There is more difficulty in getting policemen's addressees, but to them also we send as God enables us.

Will any reader of this take charge of forty-three policemen in one large town? Also twenty-five men in another town? Those who cannot aid in other ways may greatly strengthen our hands by pleading with God for blessing on the work. We long to see souls saved; indeed, my constant desire is that the whole of our letter-carriers and policemen may be the Lord's. Address Miss Whiteway, Elmore House, Chudleigh, Devonshire.

[This is from a dear invalid sister in Christ, and is an effective illustration of what God will enable a weak one to do, if there be first a ready mind.—ED.]

THE OXFORD CONFERENCE.—The senders of notes of the Oxford Conference who have not yet had them returned, are respectfully asked to apply for them to Miss A. H. Clifford, Highbury-place, Kingsdown, Bristol. If any persons have not had all their notes returned, or have received any which do not belong to them, they are requested to send notice of it to the above address as soon as possible. It is desired to express special thanks to those who have so kindly lent the notes from which the book has been compiled.

Feb. 15, 1875.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY AT LIVERPOOL.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

"This is glorious work; this is reality." Such was the remark that reached my ears one evening last week as I was passing through the inquiry-room adjoining Victoria Hall. There, I thought, is the whole movement in a nut-shell. The more I see it, and the more I ponder over it, I am impressed with the feeling of reality that pervades this work as it is now going on in Liverpool. Endless are the surmises, and very ludicrous some of the guesses, as to the secret of its wonderful success. The Liverpool critics (and their name is legion) are fairly puzzled. They cannot dispute facts, though they are not always careful to ascertain what the facts really are, and seem to have a wonderful aptitude at twisting them. But there is much that they cannot help seeing and knowing, and they are at a loss to understand how two simple common laymen have been able to do what hundreds upon hundreds of highly cultivated and refined theologians have not got within sight of. I sum it all up in the one word reality. The age is full of hollowness and pretence, both in the world and in the Church; the result has been, you can hardly distinguish the one from the other.

Mr. Moody has often been described, and criticized, and dissected, both by friends and foes, but I think sufficient stress has not been laid on his predominating characteristic of reality. His gospel is the same as one hears in most places; yet it is different, because it is so real. Never mind if his weapons are not of the most orthodox kind; they accomplish the desired object all the more, perhaps, just as the youthful David's sling and stone went straight to the mark. To follow up the parallel, Mr. Moody is not content with sending his message straight to the hearts of his hearers, but he follows it up, as David did, when he completed his victory over the Philistine. As he said the other day in London, he pulls up his net anon to see what he has caught. This is the highest test of his reality, and the one that has evoked the greatest criticism. But it is the one that has all along contributed most to the success of the movement.

During the past week the slain of the Lord have been many. Every evening has seen fresh groups scattered over the inquiry-room, with tearful eyes and troubled hearts, drinking in the affectionate words of invitation, or the plain words of appeal, addressed to them by Mr. Moody and his co-workers. People who know least about it may affect to shrug the shoulder at the inquiry-room, but one or two visits there would do them good, and probably convince them how indispensable it is to success in this work. I hope one result of this awakening in our land will be that every minister of the gospel and every one who seeks to speak to his fellow-men about salvation, will not only cast out the net, but will draw it up every time.

The leading attraction of the meetings last week was Mr. Moody's Bible lectures. On Tuesday and Wednesday he gave two lectures on "The Blood," and on Thursday and Friday, two lectures on "Heaven." These were delivered each day at three o'clock in the afternoon, and again in the evening, so as to enable a large number of persons to attend them. On each occasion the hall was crowded; so that on a moderate computation, the seed of the word of God relating to these two most important subjects was sown in the hearts of some 60,000 or 70,000 persons, many of them from a long distance. In the words of the hymn we may ask, "What shall the harvest be?" The day shall reveal it.

The lectures are a treat of no ordinary kind. As expository discourses they are most valuable, and reveal, to some extent, how Mr. Moody has got, to use a common phrase, "the Bible at his finger ends." Probably few of his thousands of hearers ever before had such a correct estimate of the value of the doctrine of "the blood," or, as Mr. Moody calls it, "the scarlet thread" that runs through the Scriptures, like the thread that holds together a string of precious pearls. Mr. Moody traced the doctrine, from the slaying of the beasts in Eden, with whose skins God clothed our first parents, recorded in Genesis, down to the Revelation where the redeemed sing the song of Moses, and the Lamb that was slain. The lectures on "Heaven" must have left the impressions and ideas of that "prepared place for a prepared people," clearer to the minds and dearer to the hearts of the listeners than ever.

But these lectures have a wonderful hortatory as well as expository value. As Mr. Moody held up the sacrifice offered on the cross, "once for all," and dwelt on the exceeding preciousness of the blood of Christ as a sufficient atonement for sin, many a head was bowed, and many a heart melted, that had hitherto been steeled against the story of a Saviour's love. Again, when Mr. Moody, speaking on "Heaven," showed the utter worthlessness of earthly treasure when compared to the "prize" for which Paul looked and longed, the arrow of conviction went home to many a heart. His remarks on the necessity for many Christians throwing out a good deal of "ballast" before they could rise to a higher spiritual life, were, I think, very timely, and capable of application in these money-getting and money-worshipping days.

It is a gratifying fact that the attendance at the evening meetings chiefly continues to increase. During the first week of the services the Victoria Hall was almost sufficient to hold the crowds of eager listeners; at any rate, the overflow was not considered so great as to necessitate the opening of other places. Last week, however, overflow meetings were held, sometimes in two and sometimes in three different places, St. John's Church, William Brown-street; Byrom Hall, Byrom-street; and Newsome's Circus, which adjoins the Victoria Hall.

One evening, I went to St. John's Church, where I found Rev. W. H. M. Aitken and the Vicar of the church conducting the service after the model of the services in Victoria Hall. The body of the church was filled partly with the overflow from the hall, and partly with those who had been induced to enter by personal solicitation, and by hearing a group of young men singing hymns in the churchyard. It was a motley company, and a great majority consisted of those who, from their dress and appearance, do not often find their way to God's house. There were numbers of men such as one sees lounging at street corners and about public-houses, many young girls in working attire and without bonnets, and a number of rough, neglected-looking street Arabs. Their behaviour, with one or two exceptions, was most orderly and attentive. Mr. Aitken gave a singularly solemn and searching address, on the misery and ruin caused by sin, and the cure provided in Christ the Sin-bearer. A good sprinkling remained at the close to be conversed with, and many of them were enabled to lay their sins on Jesus, or, as Mr. Aitken puts it, to accept the fact that God had laid them there nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

It is interesting and refreshing to notice how all grades of society and all ages are represented among the anxious who throng the inquiry-room at the close of Mr. Moody's addresses. From the richly-dressed lady to the poor wail of the street, with scarce enough of clothing to cover his nakedness; from the boy and girl of eight or ten years, to the horny-handed, grey-headed, working-man, with all the intervening stages of life, there you find all, burdened with the same sense of sin, and afterwards rejoicing in the same Saviour. Truly, we are all one in Christ.

The noon prayer-meetings continue to be well attended, and are chiefly remarkable for the accumulated testimony that is given to the good effect of this movement in outlying towns and country districts. The meetings have been attended during the past week by large numbers of Welsh ministers and others, and with their proverbial fire and energy, these warm-hearted labourers in the Lord's vineyard, among their native hills, will become retailers of the quickening and refreshing influence they have received in Liverpool. At one of the noon-meetings Rev. Mr. Hetherington gave some most interesting accounts of good work among the sailors here, who had attended the Victoria Hall services. He said he believed the ramifications of this awakening would, through the agency of these converted sailors, extend to nearly every port throughout the civilized world.

The special work among the young men, which has been carried on in other towns where the evangelists have been, by Mr. Henry Drummond and others, is being organized here also. On Saturday evening there was a meeting for young men, chiefly to make arrangements, at which Mr. Moody was present. In the meantime the meetings will be held in Newsome's Circus, and shortly it is expected that the Concert-room of St. George's Hall will be available.

Sunday last was another day of much sowing of the precious seed of the word, and reaping too. The early meeting for "workers" was some 8000 strong. Mr. Moody's address was a continuation of those he had delivered on the two previous Sunday mornings—"To every man his work." His remarks were chiefly directed to work in the Sunday-school, in which he said the whole Church of God could be engaged. He spoke of the good that even little children could do. He would a good deal rather have a little miss some thirteen or fourteen years old to tell the other children of the love of Jesus than an old man with no fire in his heart. He enforced his appeals by some striking and appropriate incidents, of which he seems to have an inexhaustible store. He prayed that all those present "might have a passion for souls."

Mr. Sankey, whose voice was missed on Friday last, was present on Sunday morning as usual, and sang some of the hymns appropriate to the occasion with much power and effect, especially "Scatter seeds of kindness," and "Go work in my vineyard." He was in excellent voice, and his tuneful notes of exhortation sounded through the vast company with very touching and powerful emphasis. At the second service for non-church-goers, he sang the solo part of that beautiful hymn (one of the finest in the collection I think), "What shall the harvest be?" the audience joining in the chorus. He sang likewise, with his usual depth of pathos, that moving story in verse, of the Shepherd's love to the lost sheep, "The Ninety and Nine."

This service was not quite so largely attended as on the preceding Sunday, but by the time Mr. Moody's address commenced the hall was quite full. It was a somewhat saddening thought that so many thousands of people in this town, who most of them have not the slender excuse of want of respectable clothing, should admittedly and regularly absent themselves from the public worship of God. Yet it was pleasant to think that they were so far convinced of the importance of spiritual things as to come to Victoria Hall to hear more about them. Mr. Moody simply, and in that wonderful realistic way in which he describes things, told the story of Christ's agony, betrayal, shameful maltreatment, trial, and crucifixion. The heart must have been hard indeed that could remain unmoved, and the whole congregation seemed deeply to feel the surpassing interest of the story recited by Mr. Moody. Numbers rose at his invitation, indicating their desire to become Christians, and the inquiry-room was filled at the close with those whose hearts had been touched, and who desired a sense of God's pardoning love, through the infinite merits of the Crucified One.

The afternoon meeting for women was a wonderful sight. The hall was packed to excess, and many hundreds failing to gain entrance, an overflow meeting was held in Newsome's Circus. Mr. Sankey sang the solo, "Mary Magdalene," amidst the most profound silence, and the pathetic and beautiful words of the hymn brought tears to many an eye. Mr. Moody spoke on "What Christ is to us," a most pregnant and powerful address on a theme that he said it would take all eternity to exhaust. As at other times, Mr. Moody asked those who wished to be prayed for to rise up, and hundreds upon hundreds responded in all parts of the house. A more touching or cheering sight I never witnessed. Mr. Sankey sang, "Almost persuaded," and Mr. Moody said that there were so many anxious, it would be impossible to speak with them; so he asked them to go home, and at five o'clock to take God's Word, and kneel down, pleading his promise, and commit themselves to Him. All the Christians in the hall would be praying for them at that hour. He prayed that they might be altogether persuaded.

Mr. Moody repeated his afternoon address to an immense audience of men in the evening, and in the course of it made strong reference to the great curse of Liverpool, the drink traffic, amid the approval of the vast congregation. He asked them to show their detestation of it by becoming abstainers. There were hundreds of inquirers at the close. A deeply interesting meeting of about 7000 young men was held in the Circus from nine to ten o'clock, conducted by Mr. Henry Drummond. These meetings are to be continued every night.

The meetings are, we understand, to be continued in the Victoria Hall during March, after Messrs. Moody and Sankey have left for London.

FROM REV. PATRICK WHITE.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," was the divine injunction to the Thessalonian Christians.

God has endowed man with mental powers and moral sensibilities, by which he is qualified to investigate truth and error, and decide for that which is good, taking the Word of God for his rule, the Spirit of God for his instructor, and obtaining the testimony of an approving conscience.

The work of the American evangelists has been now for two weeks before the Christian public in Liverpool, tested by Scripture requirements, observation, and experience; and the invariable decision of impartial minds (so far as known to me) is, that it is a genuine work of God.

Curiosity and criticism have been substituted in many by true heart-searching and a decision for Christ. The labours of our brethren are varied and multiplied, evidently intended to reach all classes. To some it is a source of fear, and to all of wonder, how they are able to go through all the services which they undertake.

The arrangement for this week have been four services for the Lord's-day, two for Monday, and three for each of the other week-days, Saturday being excepted, which they make their day of rest.

The first meeting held this week was on Sabbath morning at eight o'clock, intended for who were admitted by ticket. It is computed there were 5000 present on that occasion, representing largely Sabbath-school teachers, members of Young Men's Association, and others engaged in different departments of Christian work in the town. The address by Mr. Moody was one of the most effective which he has delivered since he came to Liverpool.

Several have informed me that they never heard anything more impressive, earnest, and soul-stirring. It was based on the words, "Here am I, send me," and the narrative of Dr. Moffat's appeal to Scotland for labourers for the mission-field was touching in the extreme.

It has been resolved to conduct a of the town, passing no door, giving an invitation to every family to attend the meetings, and presenting a leaflet with a few loving words, urging present acceptance of Christ, and containing one of Mr. Sankey's sweet hymns. A section of the town was assigned to me, and in response to an appeal made on Sabbath to young Christians to undertake this work, as a proof of the impression produced by Mr. Moody's address, more young friends offered their services than were required; and it is pleasing to report that they have in general met with a kind reception by all classes and denominations.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION

The eleven o'clock service was intended for but was not limited to such, as many from all the churches seem determined to be absent from no meeting they can possibly attend.

The service at three o'clock was confined exclusively to women, of whom there were at least 5000 present, and the marked attention (I learn) of the audience could leave no doubt of the deep interest taken in the proceedings; but the evening meeting for men was truly marvellous, and one not to be soon forgotten by those privileged to observe it.

It was a sight impressively grand to see 10,000 men standing up to praise God, representing the mechanics, sailors, porters, shop-keepers, and even prosperous merchants, of our town, and above all the young men, of whom there are in Liverpool no less than 25,000.

The good effects may in some degree be estimated by the hundreds who, in the after-meeting, sought an interview with Mr. Moody and others, to learn from them the way of God more perfectly.

Monday's noon meeting partook very largely of the character of the preceding noon meetings; differing however in one respect, that numbers of strangers, especially from Wales, were noticeable both in the body of the hall and on the platform.

At the evening meeting, not only was the hall packed in every available place, even an hour before the appointed time for commencing the service, but some thousands could not gain admittance. This state of matters became worse on Tuesday, although Mr. Moody requested those who attended the noon or afternoon meeting, not to return for the evening.

There was no diminution of the crowd. Windows were opened for ventilation, a consideration which Mr. Moody never forgets. Multitudes congregated outside and could not be induced to leave, in the hope of eventually obtaining admission, whilst about 500 went to Byrom Hall, where an overflow meeting was conducted.

I must not omit to notice

THE BIBLE-READINGS.

Some friends had expressed a wish for their continuance, after the specimens with which the public were favoured the preceding week; and notwithstanding all his services, Mr. Moody kindly proposed giving four Bible-readings this week.

Two on the "Blood." The first, as typified in the Old Testament. The second as fulfilled and appropriated in the New. Yesterday and this day, the Bible lesson was "Heaven." As a means to induce the same audience not to return, he repeated the subject in the evening; but it failed in this respect in having the desired effect. As the hall had been considerably left open from the preceding meeting, hundreds remained over, and waited for the evening, resolved to secure a place.

All these Bible-readings have been most interesting and instructive, but that of last evening, in its impressions, regarding Heaven as a Home—the interest in, and assurance of each to be there, especially in the earnest and affectionate appeal to parents—cannot be expressed, as it was apparent that there was a work of heart-searching going on in many known only to Him to whom the secrets of all hearts are visible.

THE NOON-MEETING

each day was left open after Mr. Moody spoke, that opportunity might be given to any to bear testimony to the good work elsewhere. It was pleasing to hear both ministers and highly respectable laymen bearing testimony to the genuineness of the work, and amongst these, the Rev. Dr. Arnot, of Edinburgh, who said that after fifteen months' experience, he came to tell of jealousies sunk, of love reigning, of opening fields too long neglected by them; of the fruit-bearing of practical philanthropy, going hand in hand with Christian love, pointing out how many a home of penury could be made glad by a mite from the rich; and how gifts, especially of singing, amongst ladies, could be used to soothe many a sorrow and assuage many a pain; and though at the meetings one may not hear many new things, yet old things are new—new praise, new prayers, and new preaching, as a spirit of new life pervades all.

Thank God, whilst we hear good news such as this, we are not left without fruit amongst ourselves, brief though the work has been. Daily thanksgivings are returned for prayers answered and grace received. And one of the chaplains of the Sailors' Home came forward and said that almost the one half of the sailors were to be found every night, either in that hall or holding a meeting for prayer in the Home, and it rejoiced his heart to say, he had met with many of them who gave undoubted evidence of a saving change.

One cannot but thank God, when we hear such news of the sons of the ocean, all the world over distinguished for their generous sympathies, warm and impulsive nature, and true intrepidity, feeling that, when brought to Christ, they shall be witnesses of the truth to the very ends of the earth, where British commerce may reach, and direct many a poor tempest-tossed soul to the haven of eternal rest, and the safe anchorage within the veil.

As prayer is the high privilege of God's children, it especially becomes all in Liverpool who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and look for his coming, to cry aloud and spare not, live at the throne, hold up the weak hands and strengthen the feeble knees, that Heaven's windows may be opened over us, and the abundant blessing come.

BY A WORKER.

Work in connection with these special services, if we avail ourselves of our privileges, means much toil. Mr. Moody has scored the word "duty" out of our vocabulary, and inserted, "glorious privilege." Those who take up this work, and carry it out faithfully, find that each meeting, especially in the evenings, involves some four hours' physical and mental effort, making due arrangements for the comfort of ten thousand visitors, looking up and after the numerous cases of special inquirers. I can liken it to nothing so much as work in the trenches before a besieged city, in which every nerve and energy, spiritual and physical, has promptly and wisely to be put forth—parties sallying out, either singly or in company, to trace out and capture the anxious and inquiring.

Our great hinderers in this are the Christian lookers-on and curiously inclined; they feel an interest in the fight with the powers of darkness, but, from various motives, do not help. Such will persist in filling up the benches, to the exclusion of hundreds who ought to be brought in. There is a large amount of selfishness in the Church, very apparent in our meetings. We do not know how to deal with it, taking up, as it does, the best seats, and monopolizing much room. Mr. Moody and others have spoken from the platform about it, and tried to stir up the conscience, but in vain. They are almost worse than Meroz; for they not only do not help, but they hinder.

The house-to-house visitors report that the very poor, those to whom every hour is daily bread, say that it is no use going to the hall; they cannot get in; and they cannot afford to leave work at five o'clock, and wait two or three hours for the meeting, which those who have no employment do, to get the seats with backs. Christians had much better be holding prayer-meetings elsewhere, for the Spirit's power on the word, than keeping out those who know not the truth, but would come to hear it.

Those who know Liverpool best all say that those who can face a Liverpool audience, and pass the crucial test of its critical investigation, must have something more than ordinary in them. This is now being done, with the usual accompaniment of respectable and rough rowdiness doing all it can to blacken and wrest plain-spoken truth.

The old slave-driving element is largely developed here, and is not confined to the back slums and dark corners of the town. Many a tale of shame might be related of how Liverpool has treated honourable grey heads, that have come on missions of philanthropy and love; but we forbear. The Master went that path, so all his followers must. The disciple is not above his Master here, as in days of old.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Our hearts are being stirred to their very depths by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. God the Holy Spirit blesses the word to the salvation of many precious souls. One woman came from Crosby, drawn in spite of the rain. "Let us go," she said to her husband; "if it was a place of amusement we should go," and of course the Lord met them and spoke loving words of peace to them. Her eyes were streaming with tears; "We could not go without just coming to the inquiry-room, to testify the Lord is gracious."

Just before the gas was put out I asked a man if he were anxious about his soul; he was, and had been for some years, he had been spoken to by a clergyman and admitted a member somewhere, but he had no rest; he said he thought it was humbleness of mind he wanted. I tried different ways, at last I said, "Where are your sins?" "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." I began to despair, but the Holy Spirit had fixed his own word, friends were waiting and getting impatient, I could not leave this poor soul; great was my surprise and joy to hear him, on passing me to go out, ask me to go with him, as he wanted the text again, "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." He rolled it over on his tongue. "The Lord—hath laid on Him—the iniquity—of us all." "Sweeter than honey or the honeycomb,"—"more precious than fine gold,"—his face radiant, his whole manner changed, he said, "I can't get over that." "Glory be to God!" I said. He joined me in glorifying and praising God, the angels were near, there was joy in heaven.

FROM THE "LIVERPOOL MERCURY."

What can be the secret of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's success is a question much more easily asked than answered. Certain natural principles readily suggest themselves. For the last eighteen months success has followed the evangelists like their shadow. Something must also be allowed for the novelties they have introduced into a religious service. An earnest revivalist we have seen before. But as Mr. Sankey professes to do, not as a performance, but as a vital part of the work in hand—the "admonishing one another" in song, with which the early Church was familiar—is undoubtedly new to the undemonstrative churches of Britain. The organizing and business power at work has also been considerable, and there is a kind of romance in being a worshipper among ten thousand, to say nothing of the majestic volume of the harmony and the magnetism of a crowd. Mr. Moody, again, is just the man to attract a mass of people who like to see old truths dressed in new, if sometimes homely enough, attire; who can appreciate a touching story told with dramatic power, and who have no objection to a kind of piquant familiarity on themes to which from pulpits they have been unaccustomed. It would be easy to enlarge this basis of natural principles, but every one has his own theory, and with supernatural principles it is not our province to interfere.

What we hope is, that this evangelistic crusade will give a moral tonic to the town. Liverpool needs it. Very likely we get the credit of the sins of other people, but we have quite enough of our own. If this movement be properly used, good ought to be done. There are hundreds among us who would not understand some of our most popular Liverpool preachers, who will understand Mr. D. L. Moody. There are hundreds on whom the anthems of Chester Cathedral would be lost, who will be melted into tears by Mr. Sankey's pathetic songs. Let these classes be brought to Victoria Hall.

Mr. Matheson's idea of a

in certain districts commends itself to sober judgment. The town missionaries, who labour among the self-neglecting, should be of service here. Possibly beyond the courts and alleys there are others who need Mr. Moody quite as much; but it is in dingy dens that lawlessness finds its home, and the fear is that this important enterprise may pass away, and the very people who need it most, and to whom it might be specially useful, will never be reached.

We have nothing to say against meetings for Christian workers. Nor can we blame the curiosity that takes regular church-goers to hear the famous evangelists. But what is imperatively needed is the presence of those who never darken the door of church or chapel, and who regard all preaching as either superstition or priestcraft. An eleven o'clock service on Sunday with admission by ticket is not enough. The immense majority of every Victoria Hall audience should come from the dregs of our people. Otherwise a splendid opportunity will be missed. Lawlessness and godlessness will be as great as ever. And some little reason will be given for the taunt, with which we do not sympathize, that these services are simply on the part of the religious classes "a theological dram-drinking."

MR. MOODY INVITES CRITICISM.

He asked the ministers and laymen, on Monday morning, to speak out freely. He frankly admits that he is neither a university man nor a trained theologian. He is willing to be regarded as an excavator, not as a master builder. It is perfectly evident he has never graduated in any school of rhetoric. His rapidity of utterance when he began his services was positively painful. He bowled along like the Holyhead express. His audiences stared in amazement. Impressiveness was out of the question. The ship was caught between two seas, and, while trying to settle itself after one shock, "right away," as Mr. Moody himself would say, came another, and there was nothing but perplexity. Mr. Moody fairly eclipses Mr. Lowe. Having now learned to "cultivate the pause," he speaks with less impetuous and more concentrated energy, and therefore does justice to himself. To this we must add that our first impressions of Mr. Moody's invitations to

were not favourable. That scene on the top of the table, with the repeated calls to "the unconverted" to stand up and be prayed for, was open to grave question. The result proved it, for comparatively few responded. It is not every man and woman who can walk down a long passage the observed of thousands of eyes, and, entering a room among strangers, register themselves as "anxious." The deepest streams flow in the silence and shadow of the mountain glen, and the deepest spiritual moods seek retirement, and are more given to self-suspicion than public disclosure. These things are not street stories; and it may be that those who seek the inquiry-rooms are not those on whom either the most powerful or the most permanent impressions are produced. The greatest part of this enterprise, after all, may be the unseen work—work never heard of in any inquiry-room, and that can never be tabulated in any secretary's report. At the same time, we are pleased to state that, in the inquiry-rooms, up to the present, there has been an entire absence of excitement. The inquirers are dealt with separately, each by one of their own sex, or sometimes they are addressed in a body by the evangelist. On all occasions there have been a stillness and a seriousness befitting the work; and on Sunday evening last (14th) there were upwards of 300 who sought help in this way.

Indirectly, at least, Liverpool, we think, will be a gainer by this movement. It has given us, for example, the most complete illustration of

UNION AMONG THE DIFFERENT PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

We agree with Mr. Bushell in his views of the "irreligious differences" among the sects, and are pleased to see so pronounced a Churchman speaking out in this way. If the Victoria Hall services have done nothing else, they have brought the different denominations closer one to another, and proved to Churchman and Dissenter alike that there is good in them all. A spectacle like this is a grand moral picture, and cannot be lost on the general community. Dean Stanley has said that each of our divided churches teaches some truth which would not be taught so well but for such a state of separation. Long after the Victoria Hall has been taken down, we shall look to see this ecclesiastical union maintained, at least in matters of a social, moral, and religious nature. In face of a common danger, our churches may well grapple unitedly with a common foe; and if the generals in the army are agreed, the common soldiers will be less disposed to quarrel among themselves. And our religious teachers may learn something in another direction.

THE COMPLAINT AGAINST THE MODERN PULPIT

is loud and deep. With many, it is in a state of hopeless decline; a want of power is observable everywhere; and it has specially failed in reaching the masses. Along with a great deal of exaggeration, there is perhaps a little truth in this. Now, if Mr. Moody has one characteristic, it is directness in preaching, going right to the point at once; hitting the nail on the head. Likely enough, an educated congregation could not appreciate him during a course of years; they would tire of his best stories, and seek for more substantial pulpit work. But, on the other hand, during lengthened ministries, the best of preachers are apt to get fossilized, to run into grooves, to continue antiquated styles, and especially to be deficient in illustration—the "likes" of the greatest Preacher, and "the windows that let in the light." Now, with the masses, direct and illustrative preaching is an absolute necessity. It is here Mr. Moody reigns supreme; and although it is very different from Dr. Guthrie's, and far below the standard of Mr. Spurgeon, it tells—the wise men in our pulpits will see it, and not be ashamed to take a lesson from the rough-and-ready American, even with his "barbaric" speech and jerky gesticulation.

One other idea it may be worth while to express:—

THE UNDEVELOPED POWERS OF SONG,

and in particular of sacred song, with which this movement has made us familiar. Many of the tunes may not bear examination. And there is perhaps too much of a plaintive sameness about them. Mr. Sankey's voice also may be husky now, and his staccato style not according to rule. Still, these sacred songs have sprung up into an extraordinary popularity, and for choral singing they have a peculiar adaptation. If in the upper gallery of a Dublin theatre they were so highly thought of the other night, as for one of them to be instantly raised the moment a satirical allusion to their interpreter was discovered in the broad fun of a pantomime, these songs must have both a charm and a merit it is idle to deny. In Germany, song has a power it has never acquired in England, after all these years. Every German peasant can sing. The "Volkslied" is an integral part of German national and family life. Our moral and social reformers, therefore, may learn there is an auxiliary to their labours in song which they have not yet fully understood; and if the profane and senseless rants picked up in penny gaffs were to be exchanged among the lower orders in Liverpool for the tones of "Scatter seeds of kindness," or "Rescue the perishing," the best results would flow from the teachings of a broad and gentle humanity, wafted on the wings of beautiful and tender song. And, on the principle of the proverb of Andrew Fletcher, of Saltoun, "Let me make the ballads, and who will may make the laws," if a taste for these beautiful melodies were diffused through every home among us, a direct religious gain would follow; the children would drink in the highest truth, and love it for its sweet and touching strains; there would be a Christian power at work at every fireside; and the labours of these busy weeks would leave their mark on generations.

LIVERPOOL CONVENTION

THURSDAY.—10 to 12, How are the Masses to be Reached; 12 to 1, Prayer-meeting; (Interval); 3 to 4, Question Drawer (practical questions to be sent in writing to Mr. Moody); 4 to 5, Bible-lecture; (Interval); 7.30, Gospel-meeting, Address by Mr. Moody.

Mr. Moody will preside. Mr. Sankey will have charge of the singing.

THE PANTOMIME AND REVIVALS.

The cynical critics of the revival services in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have received sympathy and aid from very appropriate, if unexpected, sources. Extremes often meet, and the union occasionally reflects dishonour on each. It is so in this case. The theatres, with the pantomime, have offered their contribution towards an estimate of the labours and character of these successful evangelists, and have done themselves dishonour in burlesquing characters they cannot understand. During the performance at one of the Dublin theatres a clown entered and said "I feel rather Moody." The pantaloone rejoined, "And I feel rather Sankey-monious," hoping, no doubt, to catch the popular taste by these paltry puns.

But they mistook their mission. The gallery, by the conventional standard of playgoers, ought, we infer, to have been in raptures at this happy hit at earnest religious men; but it was not, and instead, showered down a smart volley of hisses at the buffoons who, without provocation, made the stage the instrument of their vulgar hatred of earnest piety. Further, the cannon was turned on the enemy. Some one struck up "Hold the fort, for I am coming," and to the consternation of clown, pantaloone, and stage manager, the whole gallery was in chorus, and the curtain fell, but not till the hymn was sung.

The extreme that would treat such ridicule with indignant condemnation, but deal a steadier and more deadly blow at religious enthusiasm and earnest Christian effort, by an affected solicitude for order, propriety, and self-control, joins the clown and his companion in an unjust attempt to prevent the success of a noble attempt to awaken to religious life and action.

Our American friends need no apology from us. They have, or rather the God whom they serve has, proved the genuineness of their mission, and by unusual tokens of his favour. There have been innumerable revivals of the same kind, although not to the same extent, which have died away apparently into streamlets that have diffused blessings unrecorded by any church, but in this case each denomination of evangelical Christians seems appointed to receive evidences of the greatness of the work done. Such excitement alarms the moderates and puzzles the sceptics, but it very imperfectly realizes the importance of that gospel which all profess to serve, but so few are prepared to honour.

The normal condition of the Christian Church should be nearer to the spirit of these revivals than to the prevailing state of the past. Our church organizations have failed to secure the freshness of Christian character and freedom of Christian action. They have been permitted to stereotype infirmities and crystallize Christian excellences, and are waiting for such an influence as has found its home with our brethren. The press has its duty and privilege in these efforts. It has transferred to thousands of homes and families the sacred impressions enjoyed by the vast multitudes meeting for worship, and, as a rule, has tolerated no ungenerous attempts to mar these results. The difficulty of awakening suitable interest in the Church work of believers, is too appalling to permit a whisper of doubt when a magnificent success is possible, and the united testimony of ministers and laymen to the genuineness of this great work leaves no temptation to distrust. The rising tide may overwhelm those who will persistently stand on the sands, but it will carry to safety and triumph those who suitably accept its aid.

The London Conference was true to the metropolitan character. Any provincial success cannot be accepted until metropolitans have ventilated their criticisms. Mr. Moody must have felt as if he had passed from the temple to the synagogue where tradition reigns. But he was equal to his task, and left no doubt that if London is to have a revival it must be on the same terms and conditions on which other peoples have been blessed. It is confessedly an unmanageable place, and has many eminent Christian characters and gifted guides; but Messrs. Sankey and Moody will only visit it on the understanding that the same appliances are used in the centre as in the surrounding districts where Divine grace has so signally triumphed. If London is visited we have no doubt, as in Dublin, the gallery will be on the side of Christian earnestness, if the boxes vote for the old caste.—The Baptist.

A. N. A.

CONFERENCE AT CANNON-STREET HOTEL.

The Conference of members of the Church of England, announced some weeks ago to be held at the Cannon-street Hotel, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, has taken place. It was in its general tone and teaching a Mildmay Conference held in the City; but in addition to the elements composing that annual gathering, the subject of holiness, and that through faith, was set forth in more distinctly pronounced form than at Mildmay, while warnings against what is supposed to be the special danger incident to this view were also freely expressed. Yet from first to last, so far as we are aware, no collision, no jar, took place; no personal attack or innuendo, but an evidently general and harmonious desire to draw closer to one another in drawing nearer to God.

Many meetings on holiness and consecration are being held in London and the provinces, and there is perhaps a tendency in them, however undesignedly, to draw together those whose views, and sympathies, and experiences are similar, and to consider those who do not thus think and feel, and to lead them to regard themselves, as outsiders.

Now, the Church, as presented in the New Testament, is composed of all Christians whatever their experience may be; carnal Corinthians, legal Galatians, dwarfed Hebrews, are as much at home as heavenly-minded Ephesians, loving Thessalonians, and rejoicing Philippian. Of this elect body Christ is the Head, the Heart, the Life, the Light; but directly we propose any view however scriptural, any truth however important, as the basis of union, the centre of attraction, we have laid the foundation of a sect, and formed the nucleus of a party.

The old barriers are being removed; Calvinism and Arminianism have met together, Presbyterianism and Episcopacy have kissed each other, and the platforms of conferences of various kinds testify to a real evangelical alliance. But while the old tests die out new ones may arise. When even the most precious truths are made a ground of union they become the occasion of disunion, and it is possible that this might be the case even with the truth that Sanctification is by faith.

We need the cautious as well as the enthusiastic members of the body, and the truth that we are sanctified as well as justified by faith will be all the more securely held if our assemblings together to exhort one another, and to provoke to love and to good works, comprise men of varied character, experience, and attainment. There are twelve tribes, but only one Zion; and God loves Zion better than all the dwellings of Jacob, because there the tribes are seen as one undivided Israel.

We doubt not that it was such considerations as these which prompted Canon Ryle to propose this Conference, and we cannot be too thankful for the hearty co-operation and brotherly confidence exhibited throughout. We confess, a gathering of this kind is very much to our mind; we do not find fault with it because it was convened as a Church of England assemblage. It brought out men who, perhaps, would not have come forward in a more general convention, and it is undoubtedly one more move in the right direction, leading on to the closer union of Christians, not around a creed or a system, but around the Lord Jesus Christ Himself.

Our space precludes anything like a detailed report of these interesting meetings. The Record devotes six columns to the first day's proceedings alone, to which we refer those of our readers who desire a report of the addresses. The following names are enumerated as having been present:—

The Rev. Prebendary Auriol (Chairman), the Bishops of Melbourne and Goulburn, the Rev. Sir Emilias Bayley, the Rev. Canon Bell, the Rev. Prebendary Wilson, the Rev. Prebendary Cadman, Captain the Hon. F. Maude, Hon. Roper Curson, the Rev. Canon Hoare, Mr. Joseph Hoare, Gen. Sir Wm. Hill, Col. Elliott, Rev. W. H. Bathurst, Lydney, Mr. Haldane, Mr. Darley Hull, Mr. J. G. Sheppard, Mr. T. B. Andrews, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Rev. Mr. Bevan, Rev. J. W. Reeve,

Rev. Dr. Nolan, Rev. E. J. Speck, Rev. E. Garbett, Rev. E. C. Billing, Rev. Geo. Knox, Rev. W. O. Purton, Rev. L. B. White, Rev. W. B. Carpenter, Rev. E. Hopkins, Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, Rev. F. Bourdillon, Rev. John Richardson, Rev. Josiah Pratt, Mr. B. Hanbury, etc., etc. It was greatly regretted that Canon Byle was prevented by illness from being at the Conference.

The subjects for consideration were, at the four successive meetings respectively: The Believer's Standing; the Believer's Course; the Believer's Prospect; the Believer's Provision. In the opening address by Prebendary Auriol, the purpose of the Conference was defined to be, not controversy or discussion, but an increase of the spiritual life of the Church in general, and an increase also of the spiritual life in every one of us.

The Rev. Canon Hoare, Mr. H. F. Bowker, and Rev. Herbert James, were the speakers on Wednesday morning. In the evening Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley, Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, and Rev. John Richardson. On Thursday morning Canon Fremantle, Mr. Robert Baxter, Rev. Marcus Rainsford; and in the evening Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, and Rev. Filmer Sullivan.

The afternoons were occupied with meetings on missions, home and foreign, and Bible-readings in an adjoining room.

A "WOMAN'S CRUSADE" IN INDIA.

FROM A NATIVE INDIAN PAPER.

A blessed movement has begun in Calcutta, and may the Lord thrive and prosper it! The English woman has at last assumed her proper work, and may she be blessed! We in India do not lack men of the genuine and noble stamp who have devoted their lives to the good and well-being of our dear country. What Christian missionaries have done and are doing for us deserves to be written in letters of gold. But so far their work has been half done. Half India—by which we mean male India—has been reached by the missionary; but the other half—by which we mean female India—remains hopelessly beyond his influence, and it is here that a strong band of sisters is wanted to earnestly co-operate with the Christian men in the great work of the regeneration of this country.

We need not lose hopes. A movement has been begun which, we fervently hope, is an earnest of better days. Strange to say that none of our local contemporaries have noticed it, though it is an event full of significance and promise, and that we should find a detailed notice of it in an up-country journal. The following paragraph from the Lucknow Witness explains everything of the movement we are alluding to:—

"Calcutta has fairly won the honour of having initiated the 'Woman's Crusade' movement in India. For three Sundays past a small band of ladies have visited the drinking saloons in Bow Bazaar, and have sung, talked, and prayed with the sailors and others whom they found on the premises. The results have been most satisfactory. In only one instance has any rudeness been manifested by the saloon-keepers, and even in this case the ladies were not prevented from holding a service. The sailors listen to the singing and prayer, not only with respect, but with eager joy, many of them being moved to tears while listening to words which remind them of purer scenes and brighter days. Last Sabbath afternoon was a time of special interest in connection with this noble work. Three manly young fellows were powerfully awakened, and joyously converted to God; and two others were among those who sought the Lord in the Corinthian Theatre the same evening. We cannot too highly approve of this noble work. Nothing that we have ever heard of in India has seemed to bring us so near to the apostolic days. It no longer seems impossible to hope that our Indian Church may have Lydias and Priscillas, worthy to be named as successors of those who worked so nobly and so bravely for Christ in the early days of Christianity. We hear much of apostolical succession, and know many claimants to that heritage, but here is a new succession suddenly brought to light, and one, we think, which excels in honour every other known. May the blessed Master multiply this little band a thousandfold, until every Indian city is blessed by representatives of their sisterhood."

We say, Amen! No one who has not read the detailed accounts of the women's crusade against intemperance in America, inaugurated under the auspices of Dr. Dio Lewis, of Ohio, can conceive the immense success which those brave Christian ladies have achieved, or the immense power which a mighty engine thus constituted can wield. And if the work has been so successful and easy in America where wine-drinking is largely prevalent, how much more so would a similar movement be in India, where intemperance has not yet become general, but is daily increasing. That the British name is daily disgraced in the bazaars of Calcutta, where drunken sailors and soldiers are not an uncommon sight, who can deny? These unfortunate men are not only the scum of the metropolis, but a veritable terror to the poor natives. Yet the law has done nothing for them; on the contrary, the civil authorities have facilitated drinking by prolonging the hours of wine-shops to nine p.m. The success of the crusaders during three successive weeks has convinced us how easily the effects of the civil law can be counteracted, if only the amiable champions have the heart, the strength, and the faith to hold out long. We can assure them they have the sympathy and good wishes of every right-minded native. The improvement of the soldiers and sailors that run riot on Sundays in the streets of Calcutta is a great thing, and even the Government cannot shirk the responsibility which lies on them of helping the crusaders by every lawful means.

We earnestly draw the attention of our countrymen to this new phase of missionary enterprise. There is much in it that they may profitably imitate. If from its success they learn only one thing—learn to honour and respect the female sex, one great drawback in the way of employing female agencies in the work of regenerating native society will be removed. Let our countrymen, therefore, watch the movement, admire it, and whenever possible, help it to the best of their power.

WANTED—MEN!

Days of rapid living generate many and rapidly succeeding wants. This feature of constant appeal must be expected to become more rather than less prominent in the faithful records of spiritual life and work. It is, moreover, to be hailed with thankfulness, not acquiesced in with resignation, because it is the sign that we are in the last days, that our salvation is "nearer than when we believed."

Funds are needed everywhere, sympathy and co-operation are needed everywhere; but first of all, last of all, most of all, are needed men, who, like the Man Christ Jesus, can and will go about doing good, God being with them. Never, perhaps, was there a time when the Church was so ripe for sending out men from her midst, to work and suffer in the cause of Christ, and never were there more urgent cries of "Come over and help us!"

From Rio de Janeiro, Mrs. Kalley, wife of the well-known and energetic Dr. Kalley, formerly a labourer and sufferer in Madeira, writes:—

"Dr. Kalley is here alone. He is no longer young or strong, not able for the continuance of present labours, still less for the prosecution of the increasing work that opens up before him—work which appears to require the superintendence of experienced servants of the Lord.

"Whatever is done here inevitably reacts on Portugal, and her dependencies, also on Africa; and to train native workers for the West Coast of Africa, so fatal to Europeans, would surely be no small good.

"It has often appeared incomprehensible to us, that while Patagonia, with its scanty, unsettled, and, as many say, fast-disappearing population, interests Christians at home, this great empire is totally overlooked! Why is it?"

"We do not ask help in the way of money; of this the Master has given us as much as, at present, we can employ faithfully. If younger and more active labourers were here, more money would, of course, be needed; but we dare not now even undertake the superintendence of enlarged fields. Oh for holy, wise, single-hearted men of God, not only to enter into the wide, unoccupied fields of labour in this land, but to act as pastors and teachers where the gospel has already been successfully proclaimed."

The name of Dr. Kalley, in connection with events of touching interest some twenty-eight years ago in Madeira, and the fact of his residence now for twenty years in that most fatal climate of Rio de Janeiro, spite of advancing age, gives additional force to this appeal for men to divide the labours with him—and, let us not forget it, the harvest too. May the Lord of the vineyard at the eleventh hour send forth labourers into his harvest!"

Another communication from Hendaye, Basses Pyrenees, says:—

"Will you urge earnest prayer on your readers, that some devoted servants of the Lord may be constrained by his love, and sent by Him, to lift up the standard of the cross, to oppose the enemy who is indeed coming in like a flood at the Cape of Good Hope? In both dioceses there, Cape Town and Natal, the divinity of Christ is denied. In the cathedral at Cape Town, in the doxology, 'Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost,' the second clause is omitted, thus setting at nought God's will, that all men should 'honour the Son, as they honour the Father.'

"See, moreover, the sad state of Graham's Town, on the eastern frontier, as regards the leaven of Romanism, fully told out in the enclosed printed statement, cut out of The Times of the 2nd inst. :—

"The Eastern Star states that it is the intention of Bishop Ricards to bring out from England, if he can, a number of Jesuits, to take charge of St. Aidan's Seminary, and assist in the ministerial work of the diocese. It is reported that Dr. Ricards is likely to be made an archbishop. Before leaving Graham's Town, the children attending the convent school presented him with a purse containing £50, as their offering towards the object he had in view in visiting Europe. On Sunday, at a mass meeting of the Roman Catholics at Port Elizabeth, the Bishop was presented with £1525 collected in that town. He is receiving altogether £3000. But a few months ago he collected £1700 for the seminary."

"Surely it is a fearful reproach to our so-called Protestant country, that, when other countries, essentially Roman Catholic, seek by all and every means to extirpate the Jesuits, one of England's dependencies should be found giving her money to the Bishop, for the express and openly avowed purpose of importing, 'if he can,' members of that body to instruct in their schools, and 'assist in the ministerial work of the diocese.'

"May many in this day of gracious awakening hasten to the rescue of the rising generation, many of the scholars in these schools being the children of Protestant parents, who send them for the sake of the secular instruction, generally very good, regardless of their eternal interests. I know of one, the daughter of a Protestant clergyman, who entered the convent as a nun there."

MISSION WEEKS.

CORK.

A week's Mission has been lately held in the city of Cork by the ministers of the Church of England. The Mission preachers were Rev. Achilles Daunt, Dr. Murray, and Dr. Neligan, of Dublin. Services were held in the Cork Cathedral, and four neighbouring churches, and in all large and attentive congregations were gathered, and the intense interest manifested increased as the week drew to a close. Christ, and Christ alone, was preached powerfully, faithfully, and with manifested blessing. Clergy and laity seemed to be alike aroused and impressed and drawn closer to one another, as they drew closer to their common Lord. Several special meetings were held for men only, and children; of the former 800 were present, and 1200 little ones gathered together to hear "the message of love come down from above." There seems to be a universal feeling of regret that the Mission is over, and but one desire, that it should soon be repeated.

ROSS.

After some months of prayer, this Mission commenced on Sunday, Jan. 31. The Rector of Ross (Rev. R. H. Cobbold), in a circular address, explaining its objects, concluded by saying, "I am anxious to see you all in truth what you are already in name—Christians, lovers of Jesus Christ, followers of Him. I want that to be true in you which the apostle Paul writes, 'Sin shall not have dominion over you,' but how many are there who cannot yet with truth say this?" The Rev. H. Webb Peplow was missionary. The Mission was opened by the Bishop of Hereford, who preached in the morning from Exod. xii. 26, "What mean ye by this service?" The attendance was large. At night there was an immense congregation to listen to the sermon by the missionary, from Rom. vi. 23, "The wages of sin is death." Every night the church (which can seat some 1500) has been full, and numbers remained to the after-meetings. A great spirit of inquiry has been awakened, and large results may be expected. Many have declared themselves on the Lord's side. The writer in walking alone overheard much interesting conversation; but will only mention one instance. Two young ladies, returning from church, were conversing very quietly and earnestly; but the one startled me by an almost passionate exclamation, "I will not be a Christian until I can let my light shine." This seems to be the general feeling, to be accounted for no doubt by the "dead and live" existence of those who call themselves Christians. The work of grace is silently but powerfully exerting its influence. There is no excitement, the solemn, still silence of the meetings inspires a Christian with deep devotion, and must awaken a feeling of reverential awe to the most unconcerned. A Young Men's Christian Association has been established since Mr. Cobbold became Rector, and its members are making themselves useful in this time of harvest. Mr. Peplow concluded the Mission by a special address to them. Will God's people pray for Ross, that the work begun in faith and prayer may be carried on, that many, very many, "may have life," and that those who possess it "may have it more abundantly"?

PRESTON.

The great factory town of Preston has lately been the scene of a Mission. A local paper states that those who had engaged in the work of preparation—upward of fourteen hundred persons—assembled at the Corn Exchange on Sunday evening, for the purpose of holding a service, as preparatory for the work of the following day. The Rev. G. Alker conducted the proceedings. The Rev. D. F. Chapman explained the objects of the meeting. The first of the series of United Mission Services, held on the Monday evening, proved a most unexampled success. Scarcely less than two thousand persons were present. The majority working men and their families. The Rev. J. P. Shepherd conducted the proceedings, and several of the clergy in succession gave addresses or led in prayer. The first portion of the meeting concluded with the singing of one of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's special hymns. The clergy and a number of friends remained for some time afterwards to give instruction and advice.

HENDON.

A Correspondent of the Record writes:—A very successful Mission has been held in the scattered parish of St. Paul, Mill Hill, Hendon, showing that it is not only in the large centres of population that these special efforts are found useful in rousing the indifferent and stimulating the earnest. The missionary, the Rev. L. H. Wellesey Wesley, of St. Leonards, at once won the hearts of the tradespeople and the poor by his plain yet loving exhortations, and though in his sermons on both the Sunday mornings he told the gentry some home-truths as to the little they gave to God, they were compelled by his resistless eloquence to listen to him. He said men-servants often gave their five and ten shillings for church purposes as he left rich houses where their masters had spurned him. On the Sunday afternoons there were large congregations at a public-house kindly lent Mr. FitzRoy, the Incumbent, for service, in an outlying hamlet, till a more suitable building can be provided. Men who had not for years been in church came night after night.

LONDON HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

There has been undertaken in Manchester and Liverpool a house-to-house visitation, simultaneously with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to those places, for the purpose of reaching the whole population at their own homes. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who organized the work in the above-named places, has come to London for the purpose of arranging a similar visitation here. A Committee for the furtherance of the above object has been formed, and it is desired that the visitation shall be started at once, so that it may be well advanced before the arrival of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The map of London has been divided into districts, and the aid is now needed of several hundred Christian brethren, regardless of denominational distinctions, to take each the superintendence of one such district. Beside these, a large number of male and female visitors will be needed quickly. Will the Lord's people pray that suitable persons may offer themselves and that one and all may be endued with the Holy Ghost, and with power for this special work.

Any further information may be obtained at the central office of the work, addressed to Col. Field, secretary to House-to-house Visitation, 48, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

THE GOSPEL IN BARCELONA.

A correspondent has forwarded to us the following letter from Mr. Lawrence:—

In the morning, while in prayer, your letter and cheque came, for which I thanked the Lord, as also the kind donors, and the channel through which it came. Of that sum many poor sufferers have partaken, in and out of the hospital.

The poor woman who was a smuggler has departed; she was brought in in a fever, which ended in consumption. A singular feature in her spiritual history is that a priest once gave her a Bible, which she had read, and was in this way prepared to hear its vital truths. At first she wished to confess, but soon after sent word she would rather wait awhile.

Time went on, and Dr. T—, who ministered to her more than others, soon had the joy of seeing her rejoicing in a full salvation; and from that time to her last breath, nothing but praise and thanksgiving filled her lips. It was a pleasure to sit by her side and hear her intelligent remarks, as I unfolded the Word to her. Just a moment or two before her departure, looking up with such a radiant face, she said—

"Ah, Don George, there will be no more cough there. Oh what joy to see Him who died for a poor sinner like me."

Three days before her departure I said to her, "Well, Vincenta, do you wish to confess now?"

She looked up so solemnly yet happily, and said, "Oh, no; I have thought well of that: I want no one to come in between my soul and Him who bled for it. Jesus is mine, and I am his."

Last week we had a sailor brought in, who had been suffering from chronic diarrhoea. A two months' passage from New Orleans, and being compelled to work all the time, and often in water, has left him in a deplorable condition, a frame of bones. I am thankful that there are signs of improvement. Some men from her Majesty's ship "Invincible" spent some time yesterday with him, setting forth life and peace through the Saviour. It was pleasant to see men of his own class trying to save the lost.

Last Wednesday, an old man, who has been suffering from heart complaint, wished for the priest, to confess.

It is one of our rules that there is liberty for any so-called spiritual guide to visit, and liberty to follow any religious system, providing there is no public display. The wife of this old man asked if she might fetch the priest, which I told her she might do, but she must explain the conditions. She replied that the priest knew them. The vicar came, and I showed him into the man's room, and left them alone. I went down-stairs, and while putting up some medicine, he slipped away to fetch "Neustro Senor" (the host). The woman then told me of this, but said that he would come alone, and with no display. Not long after I heard a stir.

"What is that?" said I.

"It is La Campanella, the bell. The host is coming."

You know the terror this bell causes to a Spaniard. In the midst of work, or play, or blasphemy, or pleasure, down on their knees they must go, in mud or dirt, whether rich or poor, young or old, whether in coach or bus, it matters not.

I looked up to the surrounding balconies. The women were on their knees; some of the boys who were playing ran off, not being bold enough to stand the test; others remained firm. Nearer and nearer came the procession, with more than usual pomp; then a volley of pious mutterings, the vicar carrying "La Custodia," in which the wafer is kept, covered with a silken cover, which has the appearance of a child's doll. As he neared the door to ascend, I stepped up (of course, not pulling off my hat), and confronted him, saying—

"Excuse me, sir; there is some mistake in this. You promised to come alone, and without paraphernalia," etc.

He attempted an excuse—that there was liberty of worship now in Spain.

I replied, "It is just for that reason that I cannot permit your entrance."

Some further words passed, the people all the time on their knees.

He said, "Well, you will let me pass this once."

I replied, "If you will leave all this apparatus down-stairs."

He said he certainly could not, and he appeared as if he would force his way; but I looked him hard in the face, and I think he judged by my eye that he could not trust himself on that ground; and so he beat a retreat.

All this time the people were looking on; and as the procession went back so soon, you may imagine the effect. Some were as angry as Stephen's opposers; others were overcome with joy in seeing the priests defeated on their own ground. I do not think such a public rebuke has before been given to their idol practice, and at a time, too, when the priests supposed we should be under water, on account of the change in the Government, as just then prophecies and threats were very strong against us.

The day the king came to Barcelona, the Bible-coach was at its accustomed place, and close to the triumphal arch; and thinking that peradventure the time was short, and that, if we fell, we would have a good fall, I distributed over 400 Testaments to the king's soldiers, and remained there all the time, no one opposing.

From some cause, the sale of the Scriptures has been larger since than it was before the change. Still, we cannot tell what under-current may be setting in. We rest in the God who changeth not.

A few days later, Mr. Lawrence writes to another correspondent:—

Thanks for your offer of £5. I shall be glad to keep it till rent-day in March next, when I shall want £120. The Lord has been very good in supplying the hospital funds from time to time, just when we were brought low. If I look at the waves, I sink. GEORGE LAWRENCE.

DEPARTURE OF EVANGELISTS FOR AFRICA AND JAPAN.

Two interesting meetings were held last week, to commend to God five young labourers just starting to spend their lives in communicating to the heathen that knowledge which is life eternal. Major Malan's call from Kaffirland has, thank God, met a response, and before our readers glance over these lines, two earnest and devoted young men, and their truly missionary wives, will have left our shores to join him, "where Africa's sunny fountains roll down their golden sands." Who will not send up the prayer, God speed them!

Not only these two young couples, but Mr. Boag, who sails on March 1, for Japan, and Mr. Stevenson, of the China Inland Mission, who is to leave shortly (D.V.), to open up, if possible, some of the provinces of Western China, were present at the monthly meeting of workers, at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, on Wednesday last. Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, who presided, in a brief sketch of Africa, as the most needy of the four quarters of the globe, indicated some of the causes that contribute to make that vast continent what Livingstone called it, "the open sore of the world." He mentioned that Mr. Noble was the first of the helpers from that place who had consecrated themselves to foreign mission work—a fresh illustration that there is no antagonism, but the reverse, between these two branches of service; and also that, though the others had left for other dark parts of the earth, Mr. Clarke was the first student from the East-end Training Institute going forth to Africa—the first, but he hoped not the last. Mr. Clarke then, in a few simple sentences, told the story of his life, with a view, as he said, of encouraging "friendless boys and youths to "trust in the Lord and do good," and hope for great things. Mr. Noble gave a similar sketch of the way the Lord had led him; and earnest prayer was offered for these young men, and for the success of the new Gaelika Mission.

A very interesting letter was subsequently read from Mr. Wilton Hack, of Nagasaki, describing the sphere in which Mr. Boag is going to labour as a self-sustaining missionary, and mentioning most encouraging facts as to the preaching gifts and great success of the native converts in Japan.

Mr. Stevenson gave some details of the progress of the Lord's work in China, and exhibited some idols and ancestral tablets given up by those to whom they had long been objects of worship; and then, with Mr. Rudland, he sang a Chinese hymn.

The second meeting was held at Mrs. Malan's, on Friday, the 19th. Solemn words of parting exhortation were there addressed to the young missionaries by Mr. F. White, Mr. Guinness, and Dr. Gill, and much prayer offered in connection with the Mission. The "Walmer Castle" mail steamer, which conveys this party to the Cape of Good Hope, sailed on Saturday last. We hope our readers will remember them in prayer; and would remind them also, that Major and Mrs. Malan will gladly receive help towards the heavy outlay connected with starting this new Mission. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Malan, 40, Stanhope-gardens.

FOR THE YOUNG.

A DYING WISH.

In Russia's far-off frozen clime
There lived a lovely child;
The Lord to deeds and words of love
His tender heart inclined.

He loved to hear his parents read
In God's most holy Word,
And treasured up within his breast
The blessed truths he heard.

This little boy was very sick;
And when about to die,
He called his father to his side,
And said, "I want to buy

"Bibles to send to heathen lands,
Where they know not the Lord,
That they may all read for themselves
In His most holy Word.

"I cannot send whole Bibles there,
Perhaps not one short word;
But I would like to give some help
To spread its truths abroad.

"Those three bright pennies in my box
I think a type would buy,
To print in Christ's most holy name,
The dot upon the i."

That stricken father did not fail
Those little coins to send;
Oh, children, think how many coins
In wanton waste you spend!

Christ will receive the smallest gift;
When follies tempt your eye,
Think of the little Russian boy's
Small dot upon the i.

LYMINGTON.—Prayer was asked in THE CHRISTIAN a few weeks back for blessing in connection with special services, to be conducted at Lynton by John Johnson, from the Evangelization Society. We would now praise God for having abundantly answered prayer in connection with these services. As soon as the arrangements for the services were made by Mr. G. E. Garthorne, of Belvedere, Lynton, the town and neighbourhood was divided into districts, and with but few exceptions, every house was visited, and the inmates personally invited to attend the meetings. They were held in the lecture-hall of the Literary Institute, commencing on Sunday, Jan. 31, and continued until Feb. 14. Two meetings were held on the Sunday, at three and eight, and a meeting every week-night at half-past seven. The place was crowded at every meeting; the majority of the people who attended were those who are seldom seen in a place of worship. They listened with intense earnestness to the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," which was told with great power and simplicity by our brother. Many stayed to the inquirers'-meeting held after each service, and, praise God, many were enabled to cast their burden upon Jesus, and found "joy and peace in believing." There was also a daily prayer-meeting, and services for mothers and children. These meetings have stirred our town from one end to the other; truly there is "a shaking among the dry bones."

Service in the Hall on Thursday evening. Preachers—Feb. 25, Rev. J. H. Snell; March 4, Rev. Richard Roberts.

The young men's meeting, held in Moorgate-street Hall, increases in interest every week. Young men are being banded together, and it is expected that from this meeting will go forth a band of labourers into the harvest so soon to be reaped, the fields being already white.

Other Christian young men are invited to join the ranks. A meeting for prayer is held every Friday evening, at eight o'clock, to which all young men are welcome.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN SCOTT.

HASTINGS, ST. LEONARDS, AND BATTLE.—The Rev. J. E. Irvine, from America, has been conducting a series of special services, for the promotion of scriptural holiness, in the above towns, during a part of the months of January and February. They were seasons of great spiritual power and interest. Very many inquirers after Jesus, who came forward in the meetings seeking peace with God, professed to find it, and to rejoice in a sense of sins forgiven. Some cases were of a very pleasing character. The unconverted husband of a believing wife, being deeply convinced of sin, went forward to the communion-table as a penitent, seeking mercy, and found what he sought. So great was the joy of the now really united husband and wife, that the whole of that night, instead of being devoted to sleep, was spent in praise. In other instances, relations have remained up until midnight, and till one and two o'clock in the morning, pleading with God for power with their loved ones, until all could rejoice together. Not the least pleasing feature of the work has been the large number of children who have begun to pray, to own Jesus as their Saviour, and to rejoice in his salvation. Several classes for the shepherding of these converted children have been set on foot, and "the end is not yet." The cause of scriptural holiness has also received an impetus through these services, and we believe that greater blessings are yet in store for these parts of Sussex.

"AS CONCERNING GIVING AND RECEIVING."—PHIL. IV. 15.

Thurs., Feb. 25.—"This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance."—1 John v. 11; Rom. xi. 29.

Fri. 26.—"A gift is as a precious stone in the eyes of him that hath it: whithersoever it turneth, it prospereth." "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another."—Prov. xvii. 8; 1 Cor. iv. 7; 1 Pet. iv. 10.

Sat. 27.—"By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises." "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God."—Eph. ii. 8; 2 Pet. i. 4; Acts ii. 38; Rom. xii. 1.

Sun. 28.—"Christ hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us." "How shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" "They first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."—Eph. v. 2; Rom. viii. 32; 2 Cor. viii. 5.

Mon., Mar. 1.—"Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for his sake." "There was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me." "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna."—Phil. i. 29; 2 Cor. xii. 7; Rev. ii. 17.

Tues. 2.—"I have given them thy word." "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." "If that had been too little, I would, moreover, have given unto thee such and such things."—John xvii. 14, 22; 2 Sam. xii. 8.

Wed. 3.—"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and offerings... Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." "In a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality." "Give, and it shall be given unto you."—Mal. iii. 8, 10; 2 Cor. viii. 2; Luke vi. 38.

"ALL THINGS COME OF THEE, AND OF THINE OWN HAVE WE GIVEN THEE."—1 CHRON. XXIX. 14.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

DANIEL QUORM AND HIS RELIGIOUS OPINIONS. By the Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE. Mason, 2s. 6d.—Like all Mr. Pearse's works, this book is thoroughly readable. As was said of one of his former productions, "there is not a dry or uninteresting page in the book." The fact of Mr. Spurgeon's strong recommendation, with a whole chapter transferred to the pages of his Sword and Trowel, is in itself worth more than any recommendation of ours. The reader will find both pleasure and profit in perusing these interesting sketches, replete with brisk conversations and pithy sayings.

NEW ISSUES OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.—The Morning of Life: A Treasury of Counsel, Information, and Entertainment for Young People. 1d.—This used to be "The Bible-class and Youth's Magazine," and whatever it was then, it is certainly good of its kind and adapted to its object now. It answers to the description of itself well, save that a good many illustrations are found inside which are not notified on the title-page.—Kind Words. 3d.—Also an illustrated periodical for the young, or rather, for the grown-up young people. A Huguenot story, in the January number, promises to be interesting; and there is a very pretty story, with engraving, entitled, "The Chair of Peter Paul Rubens."—The Child's Own Magazine.—Very charming for the dear little people who love to have anything their "own."—Notes on the Scripture Lessons (New Series), and the International. Published a month in advance for the teacher's convenience.

MR. B. PEARSALL SMITH has accepted a call to Berlin for the latter part of March. He is to sail from New York in the "Abyssinia," Feb. 27, and, it is expected, will hold two or three meetings in passing through London about March 10. His address is, care of J. S. Morgan and Co., Bankers, Broad-street, London.

THE ALL-DAY MEETING at St. George's Hall last week was a very profitable time, gathering together Christians of all denominations. Some reports of evangelistic work were most encouraging, specially a letter from the brother of Mr. C. E. Hurditch, who has been evangelizing with great success in a Welsh mining district. Mr. Taylor, of Urbridge, on the other hand, stated some painful facts as to the utter destitution of gospel preaching in villages not a hundred miles from London. He and others had been labouring in some of these with encouraging results.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For wonderful improvement in the health of a Christian in a lunatic asylum, who was in despair, and tempted to suicide.—For a young lady, who requested prayer in THE CHRISTIAN of April, 1873. She is now trusting in Jesus.—For answers to prayer for blessing in Winchester.—For the manifested power of the name of Jesus in believers quickened, backsliders restored, and sinners saved during and since the Torquay mission.

PRAYER.—That an elderly lady in delicate health may be brought to Jesus.—That a good and faithful minister, of sound evangelical views, may be appointed to the parish of Market Deeping.—For a village Bible-reading, just begun.—For the children and young people attending the Hackney Juvenile Mission, that those who professed to find the Saviour last Sunday, may be led to show at home that they are Jesus' lambs.—For a lady who is passing through the furnace of affliction without a ray of hope.—That Christians generally may awake up to a sense of their responsibility regarding the Jews.—That a lady and her house may be fully blessed during a visit to Liverpool.—For a deeply-tried servant of God, who is led for a time into a dark, rough valley, and into the experience of Isa. vi. 5, and Job xlii. 5, 6.—Two young ladies ask prayer that they may be given strength and ability to study, and also that God may give success in a coming examination.—That the Lord of the harvest may raise up many labourers to carry on the work He has begun in Torquay, and that his Spirit may work in and by them mightily, for Jesus' sake.

PLACES.—For a very low district in the town of Maldon, and for its Sunday-school.—For Oulton, Suffolk, that the labours of John Johnson may be blessed there.—On behalf of a parish where the gospel has been preached for half a century, and where a Mission is being conducted at this time.—For Repton school, where there are many sons of Christian parents, the immense majority of whom, it is feared, are unconverted. Pray for those who are converted, that they may be endued with power to witness for God.—For Llanely, that God's Spirit may come with great power on church members.—For a blessing upon Broughty Ferry in all its religious interests, especially upon the children's Sabbath services, and Bible-lessons in the week-day schools.—For a mission week in Beccles, March 1-6.—For blessing on a service to be held in the Wesleyan Chapel, Wetherby, March 14, by Rev. Robert Stainton, of Sheffield.—

MR. MOODY AND MR. SANKEY.—I.

BY E. W. DALE, BIRMINGHAM.

[In the March number of The Congregationalist, the Editor occupies about twenty pages with an admirable article on the recent meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Birmingham. We heartily thank Mr. Dale for his in every way excellent and able paper, the greater portion of which we gladly reproduce in the following pages. We shall conclude our extracts from it in next week's issue.—Ed.]

I HAVE had some experience of popular agitation. I think I know pretty well what is likely to be effected by newspaper articles and advertisements, and these do not seem to me to explain the interest which the services created from the very first. They explain still less the deepening of the interest from day to day; they do not explain at all the effects which I believe have been produced.

Some people have said that it is easy to get crowds of women to "hysterical" religious services. But although the morning and afternoon meetings were largely attended by women, I believe that the majority of the evening congregation always consisted of men, and of men of all kinds—rough lads of seventeen or eighteen, working-men, clerks, tradesmen, and manufacturers. I happen to have on my desk a list of persons that came into Carr's-lane Lecture-room one evening, to tell me that they had "found Christ" during the fortnight that Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were here; out of twenty-one on the list, eleven are men. I have another list of persons who came to me the same evening, who had been quickened to earnest religious anxiety, but were not yet at rest; out of thirteen, eight are men. I believe that these lists imperfectly represent the proportion of men to women among those who were impressed by the services; for I generally find that men are slower to express religious decision than women.

Nor were the services at all "hysterical;" the first sign of hysterical excitement was instantly repressed by Mr. Moody, and although I attended a very large number of the meetings, I saw nothing of the kind again. It was very curious, too, that although the crowds were so enormous, very few women fainted. I do not remember more than three or four cases.

How, I ask, is the great interest of the people in these services to be accounted for? The truest, simplest, and most complete reply to the question which I can give is, that the power of God was manifested in an extraordinary degree in connection with them; but there were

CONCURRENT CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH DESERVE NOTICE.

(1) I attribute very much to the attention and expectation excited by the preliminary prayer-meetings; I attribute still more to the articles in the local newspapers, describing the impressions which had been produced by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in other parts of the kingdom. I also attribute very much to the reports of "revival work" which have appeared for many months in such newspapers as the Christian World and THE CHRISTIAN—reports which have convinced large numbers of religious persons that the services of our American visitors have originated a religious movement more remarkable than any we have seen in England since the middle of the last century. Thirty thousand copies of THE CHRISTIAN, containing an account of the services at Manchester, were distributed in the congregations of the town a week or two before Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey came to us.

(2) I attribute very much to a fact which is, perhaps, not sufficiently recognized by any of us. There are, I believe, a very large number of persons—many of them regularly attending public worship, many of them never crossing the threshold of church or chapel—who have had deep religious impressions, which have not issued in a clear decision to serve Christ, but which have left a dull aching of heart for God. The sense of dissatisfaction with their condition never wholly leaves them; it sometimes makes them very restless. But when they listen to the preaching of most of us, they feel as if we were moving in regions which are inaccessible to them. If they come to our places of worship, they come without any hope of receiving help. Many of them, having found that we do not help them, never come at all. When such people heard that within a very few months thousands of men and women had declared that, while listening to Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, they had passed from religious indifference or despondency into the clear light of God, they began to think that for them too there might be hope. I think it probable that many of the "converts" will be found to have belonged to this forgotten class.

(3) There must be large numbers of persons in Birmingham who have relatives and friends in the towns that the American evangelists had visited before coming to us; and I have no doubt that mothers, brothers, sisters, cousins, old schoolfellows, and old shopmates, wrote urgent letters to them, entreating them to attend the services. At one meeting for "inquirers," I met a young man who seemed quite careless about religious thought and duty, and I asked him how it was that he remained to that meeting. He told me he had promised his friends "to go to the Moody and Sankey meetings;" and he seemed to suppose that to remain to the inquirers' meeting was part of the process to which he was pledged to submit himself.

(4) After the first day or two, the services were "advertised" in a very much more efficient manner than by newspapers or placards: every evening, at the "after-meeting," a considerable number of persons received Christ as their "Prince and Saviour," and, judging from those with whom I conversed, most of them went home with overflowing joy. I had seen occasional instances before of instant transition from religious anxiety to the clear and triumphant consciousness of restoration to God; but what struck me in the gallery of Bingley Hall was the fact that this instant transition took place with nearly every person with whom I talked. They had come up into the gallery anxious, restless, feeling after God in the darkness, and when, after a conversation of a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, they went away, their faces were filled with light, and they left me not only at peace with God, but filled with joy. I have seen the sunrise from the top of Helvellyn and the top of the Righi, and there is something very glorious in it; but to see the light of heaven suddenly strike on man after man in the course of one evening is very much more thrilling. These people carried their new joy with them to their homes and their workshops. It could not be hid.

On the Sunday after Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had left us, I invited those members of my own congregation to meet me who had come to Christ during the services of the preceding fortnight. A few who were still out at sea longing to make their way to quiet water came with them. Nothing was easier than to tell the difference between the two classes; I think I could have separated them into two divisions without asking a question and with scarcely a mistake. Those who were still "inquirers," if they did not look anxious and troubled, looked like other people; the "converts" were bright with their new joy. It is as yet too early to obtain any general information about the extent of the influence which I have attributed to the converts themselves; but among the names that I have on several lists of persons that I saw myself, I find the names of two clerks who sat side by side at the same desk, three pairs of brothers and sisters, three husbands with their wives; and four brothers—rough working-men—all of whom have been awakened to religious thought by Mr. Moody's addresses.

(5) Nearly all the "living" and active members of the various Evangelical Churches hoped that the services would achieve great results; and many Christian people whose religious life was depressed and sad, trusted that they might find their way to the light.

(6) Direct efforts were made to induce those who had not been at any of the meetings to come to them. In one manufactory in which 600 people are employed, I believe that there was an attempt to induce all who were not in the habit of attending public worship to go to the special meeting that was held for that class of persons. Handbills were distributed from house to house in the poorer parts of the town. Very many persons of all ranks, who had become interested in the services, urgently pressed their friends to go with them to hear the American strangers.

(7) The services themselves were attractive.

MR. SANKEY'S SOLOS

evidently touched very many hearts; and the effect produced by the manner in which the vast audiences united in such songs as "Hold the fort, for I am coming," and "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and "The great Physician now is near," was sometimes very thrilling. The "songs" have been sharply criticised. It is very easy to criticise them; it might be more profitable to consider why it is that both the music and the words are so popular and effective. About their popularity there can be no doubt. There were sometimes ten or twelve thousand people in Bingley Hall for more than an hour before the service began. With intervals of a few minutes they occupied themselves with the more popular of the hymns and melodies; and the delight with which they sang them was obvious. Passing along the streets, I hear men whistling "Safe in the arms of Jesus." Mr. Sankey's melodies—whatever their demerits—are caught by thousands of people of all kinds, cultivated and uncultivated, men, women, and children, and are sung "with a will."

THE HYMNS.

Critics have said that the hymns are "childish," that they have no "literary merit," that there is something ridiculous in hearing a congregation of grown people singing with enthusiasm, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." Well, the fact that hymns which are simple even to childishness are sung by grown people with so much earnestness, that hymns with no "literary merit" kindle new fire in the hearts of men and women who know something of Shakespeare, Milton, and Wordsworth, is surely worth investigating. Is it the "childishness" which accounts for their power? Is it the absence of "literary merit"? I think not. Give the people a collection of hymns characterized by equal fervour, expressing with the same directness the elementary convictions and the deepest emotions of the Christian heart, and if they have also the literary merit which is absent from many, at least, of Mr. Sankey's songs, they will become equally popular, and their popularity will be more enduring. But our hymn-books are too stiff and cold. People want to sing, not what they think, but what they feel; and if they are asked to sing hymns in which there is no glow of feeling, and in which the thought is perfectly commonplace, they will not sing at all.

But it was not the singing only which made the services interesting: there was great animation and variety in them. In the evening they began with a hymn which the people sang together; but what would be the "order" of the service no one knew, and I suspect Mr. Moody did not know beforehand. Every man who is accustomed to conduct public meetings for any purpose can easily tell whether the people are interested: Mr. Moody has this instinctive perception in a remarkable degree.

OF MR. MOODY'S POWER

I find it difficult to speak. It is so real, and yet so unlike the power of ordinary preachers, that I hardly know how to analyse it. Its reality is indisputable. Any man who can interest and impress an audience varying from three thousand to six thousand people for half an hour in the morning, and for three-quarters of an hour in the afternoon, and who can interest a third audience of thirteen or fifteen thousand people for three-quarters of an hour again in the evening, must have power of some kind. Of course, some people listened without caring much for what he said, but though I generally sat in a position which enabled me to see the kind of impression he produced, I rarely saw many faces which did not indicate the most active and earnest interest.

The people were of all sorts, young and old, rich and poor, keen tradesmen, manufacturers, and merchants, and young ladies who had just left school, rough boys who knew more about dogs and pigeons than about books, and cultivated women. For a time I could not understand it—I am not sure that I understand it now. At the first meeting, Mr. Moody's address was simple, direct, kindly, and hopeful; it had a touch of humour and a touch of pathos; it was lit up with a story or two that filled most eyes with tears; but there seemed nothing in it very remarkable. Yet it held. A prayer-meeting with an address, at eight o'clock on a damp, cold January morning, was hardly the kind of thing—let me say it frankly—that I should generally regard as attractive; but I enjoyed it heartily; it seemed one of the happiest meetings I had ever attended. There was warmth and there was sunlight in it. At the evening meeting the same day, at Bingley Hall, I was still unable to make out how it was that he had done so much in other parts of the kingdom. I listened with interest; everybody listened with interest; and I was conscious again of a certain warmth and brightness which made the service very pleasant, but I could not see that there was much to impress those that were careless about religious duty. The next morning at the prayer-meeting the address was more incisive and striking, and at the evening service I began to see that the stranger had a faculty for making the elementary truths of the gospel intensely clear and vivid. But it still seemed most remarkable that he should have done so much, and on Tuesday I told Mr. Moody that the work was most plainly of God, for I could see no real relation between him and what he had done. He laughed cheerily, and said he should be very sorry if it were otherwise. I began to wonder whether what I had supposed to be a law of the Divine kingdom was perfectly uniform. I thought that there were scores of us who could preach as effectively as Mr. Moody, and who might therefore, with God's good help, be equally successful.

In the course of a day or two my mistake was corrected; but to the last there were sensible people who listened to him with a kind of interest and delight with which they never listen to very "distinguished" and eloquent preachers, and who yet thought that though Mr. Moody was "very simple and earnest" he had no particular power as a speaker. I do not intend to suggest any comparison between Mr. Moody and our great English orator, but I have met people who have talked in the same way about Mr. Bright, and who seemed to think that to speak like Mr. Bright was possible to nearly everybody.

One of the elements of Mr. Moody's power consists in his PERFECT NATURALNESS.

He has something to say, and he says it—says it as simply and directly to thirteen thousand people as to thirteen. He has nothing of the impudence into which some speakers are betrayed when they try to be easy and unconventional; but he talks in a perfectly unconstrained and straightforward way, just as he would talk to half-a-dozen old friends at his fire-side. The effect of this is very intelligible. You no more think of criticising him than you think of criticising a man that you meet in the street, and who tells you the shortest way to a railway station. I can criticise most preachers and speakers; I criticised Dr. Guthrie, though I was either laughing or crying the greater part of the time that I was listening to him; but somehow I did not think of criticising Mr. Moody till I had got home. Generally there seemed nothing to criticise; once or twice, in the simplest and most in-artistic manner, he said things which at the moment he said them I felt were of the kind to give a popular speaker a great triumph, but his whole manner threw me out of the critical attitude. Some men force you to be critical. It is impossible to take a single coin from them without ringing it on the table and looking to see whether it is properly "milled." From first to last, they provoke "watchful jealousy." It is clear that they are taking a great deal of trouble with their sentences; it is disrespectful not to examine their work. It is clear, too, that they are giving you their best thoughts, their best arguments, and their best illustrations, and they show them to you just as a collector of gems shows you his last triumphant acquisition. It is impossible—it is almost insulting—not to criticise. When a speech or sermon is plainly a work of art, criticism is inevitable. It is not necessary for anyone to paint pictures, to sing songs, or to deliver artistic addresses; but if a man insists on being an artist, and lets you know it, he forces upon you a critical examination of his performance.

Mr. Moody—so it seems to me—has an

but he is infinitely more than an artist, and therefore most people listen without criticising. This is an immense element of power. If our congregations came to hear us preach, instead of coming to hear how we preach, the effect of our sermons would be immeasurably increased. Now and then Mr. Moody quoted a text in a very illegitimate sense; now and then he advanced an argument which would not hold water; now and then he laid down principles which seemed untenable; and there was a momentary protest on the part of the critical faculty; but the protest was only momentary. I was not thrown out of sympathy with him.

It is objected that he is too "familiar" with sacred things. Generally—not always—the objection comes from persons who are extremely unfamiliar with them. The fault that is charged against him—if it be a fault—is perhaps not too common in these days. There are not too many people who live, and move, and have their being in the fair provinces of Christian truth, and Christian hope, and Christian joy. Mr. Moody is, no doubt, very "familiar" with the things about which he talks. He is like a man who keeps his mind does not put on Sunday clothes when he begins to speak about religion. Religious truth is the subject of his constant thought; he does not therefore assume the "Bible tone" when he begins to pray or preach. In one of Mr. Ruskin's books there is a very remarkable passage on ecclesiastical architecture, which has occurred to me very often while thinking of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. Mr. Ruskin says that the great builders of the Middle Ages never thought of building a church in a different style from that in which they built a house. There was no "ecclesiastical" style of architecture. And he maintains that we can never have good church architecture until our house architecture is sufficiently noble to be used for church purposes.

Now the architecture—if I may so speak—of Mr. Moody's discourses is not ecclesiastical. The windows, and the doors, and the furniture, and the decorations are of the kind with which we are familiar in our everyday life. He does not tell stories because they are amusing; but if an amusing story helps him to make a truth clearer, or to expose a common mistake, he does not refuse to tell it merely because it is amusing. The common things of common life are about him all the time he is speaking. He uses the words of the home and the street: the plainer they are the better he likes them. The gowns and bands which some of our preachers wear are the symbols of the special costume in which they think it proper to array religious truths.

MR. MOODY DOES WITHOUT GOWN AND BANDS, and speaks to men as he would speak to them at a meeting of the "United Kingdom Alliance," or at a political meeting during a contested election. He has given himself to God, all that he has, all that he is, and he uses every faculty and resource of his nature to prevail upon men to hate sin and to trust and love Christ. To him nothing is common or unclean. He has humour, and he uses it; he has passion, and he uses it; he can tell racy anecdotes, and he tells them; he can make people cry as well as laugh, and he does it.

Some people say that he is "irreverent." If he is, I must have been singularly fortunate, for which justifies the charge. But what people seem to mean is that he does not regard with religious respect every one that is mentioned in the Bible. Why should he? When he said that Bartimæus, after getting his sight, was eager to go home to "see what kind of a looking woman he had for a wife, for you know that as yet he had never seen Mrs. Bartimæus," some people who saw the report in the newspapers thought this was a proof of the irreverence of which he is said to be guilty. But I do not know that there is any reason for speaking reverently either of Bartimæus or of his wife. As a matter of taste most of us would prefer to describe the woman as the "wife" of the blind man; but why the "Mrs." should be thought irreverent it is difficult to understand. Reverence is due to God alone, and to Him in whom God is manifest in the flesh; of God, of our Lord Jesus Christ, there was never a word which was not inspired by fervent love, perfect trust, and devout worship. Of great saints, good men will speak with affection and respect; and it was thus that Mr. Moody spoke of them.

There was something in his way of

from which preachers may learn very much. The Oriental drapery was stripped off, and he told the stories as though they had happened in Chicago just before he had left home, or in Birmingham an hour or two before the service began. At times this gave the stories a certain air of grotesqueness, but it made the moral element in them intensely real. We are in the habit of making a double demand on our hearers; we ask them, first, to reproduce, by a strong effort of imagination, the Oriental circumstances of the narratives, and we then ask them to apprehend the human passions and follies and virtues which the narratives illustrate. I believe that they get so interested in the mere drapery that the substantial facts are often missed; or else the enduring human element looks so strange in its unfamiliar costume that its power is lost. I have heard men say that of late years the scenery and the dresses at the great theatres are wonderfully improved, but that the acting is very inferior to what it once was. Mr. Moody cares nothing for the scenery and the dresses. If he were a "manager" he might bring Julius Cæsar on to the stage in the uniform of an American general, and Hamlet might put on his "Ulster" when he was going out to meet the ghost, but he would insist on making the plot and passion of the play intensely and vividly real.

Of the aspects of truth on which he dwells it is not necessary to say much. His great topic is

THE INFINITE LOVE AND POWER OF CHRIST.

That Christ wants to save men, and can do it, is the substance of nearly all his discourses. I asked him, after one of the morning services, whether he never used the element of terror in his preaching? He said that he did sometimes, but that "a man's heart ought to be very tender" when speaking about the doom of the impenitent; that the manner in which some preachers threatened unbelievers with the wrath to come, as though they had a kind of satisfaction in thinking of the sufferings of the lost, was to him very shocking. He added that in the course of his visit to a town he generally preached one sermon on hell and one on heaven. That night he preached on the text, "Son, remember:" I greatly regret that I happened to be absent; I should like to have heard how he dealt on this difficult subject. As the readers of the Congregationalist know, I believe that in modern preaching there is too little said about the awful words of our Lord concerning the destiny of those who resist his authority and reject his salvation. The unwillingness of most of us to speak of this terrible subject ought to suggest very earnest self-examination. Christ's love for men, which was infinitely more tender than ours, did not prevent Him from speaking of "the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched," and it is surely presumptuous of us to assume that we are prevented from speaking of future punishment by the depth of our sympathy with the Divine mercy.

THE POSSIBILITY OF INSTANTANEOUS CONVERSION

was one of the points on which he insisted incessantly. I think I should prefer to speak of the certainty of Christ's immediate response to a frank trust in his love, and a frank submission to his authority. These, however, are only two ways of presenting the same truth; and the vigour and earnestness with which he charged his hearers to obtain at once the pardon of sin and power to break away from a sinful life were extremely effective.

THREE WEEKS IN DUBLIN.

My dear Brother,—I have just returned from a nearly four weeks' visit to Dublin, and have a desire to send you a few words respecting what I have seen and heard there.

The believers' meetings, held early in this month, were very largely attended indeed, as might have been expected. Considerable numbers of those present were, I was told, new converts who had received blessing under the recent ministrations of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. A very happy and thankful spirit pervaded the various assemblies. The Master was present, and made the gathering together of his people both delightful and edifying to their souls.

The blessing received in Dublin during the recent Mission was immense. I suppose all the Protestant congregations reaped their own individual shares of the great harvest. Dr. Marrable's Church, St. Andrew's, where I was privileged to preach a few times, was much blessed. It was most cheering to be in the midst of so much life as I found there.

Last Tuesday evening a thanksgiving meeting was held in the school-house, which was crowded. The praise offered was evidently earnest and heartfelt. A Sunday or two ago, when the Lord's Supper was administered, we were in church three hours in consequence of the large number of communicants present.

I can give a similarly encouraging report of the work in Kingstown, more especially in connection with the Mariners' Church, of which Mr. Windle is the rector. I was delighted and heartily rejoiced by what I saw there. God has, of a truth, done "great things" for that congregation and parish; blessed be his holy name!

I was most thankful also to find that the Christians amongst whom I have been staying during this very happy visit, are seeking to promote practical holiness in the various communions of the Church of Christ to which they belong. Two crowded meetings on this great subject have recently been held; the first at Kingstown, the second at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. At the latter some fifteen hundred persons were said to be present. "I want to live a holy life," seems to be the earnest desire of so many Christian hearts.

I heard of much blessing in connection with various Presbyterian churches, halls, etc. There has evidently been a great work also amongst the young men at Dublin, who seem to be very zealously working for the Master.

I must not omit to mention the unity which very generally prevails among the Lord's people in and around Dublin. May it mightily increase and extend there, and everywhere else, until sectarianism shall have utterly disappeared from the Church of Christ.

The daily (united) prayer-meeting is very fairly attended, 200 or 250 persons being present most days. Our friends, however, would do well, I humbly venture to suggest, to have more of the time spent in prayer. The engine fires must be maintained well and earnestly if the great ship is to be kept going at the "full speed" of God's willingness to go on saving souls.

Lastly, the work of God is rapidly spreading into the provinces. Men of God are carrying the lighted torch of Gospel grace into the towns and villages of Ireland. Dr. Marrable had a most encouraging Mission Tour in the counties of Wicklow and Wexford last week; and I heard of blessing in Mr. Arbuthnot's parish (Dowra, Carrick-on-Shannon), and in various other localities.

For all this, let English Christians join in the hallelujahs of their brethren in Ireland. A new era has dawned upon that unhappy, priest-ridden land. Let us hope and pray that "the beginning of the end" of Rome's baleful sway there has fairly commenced. Large numbers of Roman Catholics attended the recent evangelistic services, and not a few of them, it is believed, were enabled to perceive and embrace the truth as it is in Jesus. May the day of the nation's emancipation from superstitions thralldom soon begin. The so-called "patriots" cry "God save Ireland;" let Christians there and here in a different sense re-echo the cry. And let us all look for and expect the answer.—Believe me, dear brother, yours in Jesus, Newport, Feb. 26, 1875. J. TINSON WRENFORD.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA.—The Lord has blessed us in the work, so that the house we have taken as a temporary Home is already "too strait" for our need, and I am anxious to provide more ample accommodation for our soldiers and sailors, who so greatly require it. Several parcels of tracts and books have been sent me since my first appeal, but still more are wanted. I have opportunities of distributing large numbers where they will be really valued. In a few months, too, our harbour will be full of merchant shipping, and means are needed to enable me to carry on the Mission among them. Tracts, small books, and Scripture portions, in English, French, German, Portuguese, and Norwegian, will be especially welcome; and I hope my Christian friends will kindly help me in this, before the summer season sets in, so that no time may be lost. Spanish and Italian vessels occasionally visit the port, but the languages mentioned above are the ones most spoken. A number of German girls are expected to settle here, to work at the paper-mills, and I am very anxious to do something for them. Post-office orders may be made payable to Mrs. Hunt-Morgan, Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Halifax, N.S., and parcels sent to the same address.

ELIZABETH MARY HUNT-MORGAN.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN FRANCE.

Mrs. C. B. Alsop, who has for some time corresponded with Mons. Perreraud, desires to bring before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN some particulars of the labours of Mons. Perreraud and others. At the same time, she would state that the central place of his mission-field is of very easy access, Tonnerre being an important station between Paris and Dijon. Subjoined are extracts from the report of M. Perreraud for 1874. If any Christian friend would wish to contribute towards this good work, C. B. A. would be happy to receive and forward contributions. Her address is, 74, Clissold-road, Stoke Newington, N.

It was towards the end of 1868 that the Evangelistic Society of France called me to Tonnerre. There was at that time, in that Roman Catholic town, a small Protestant meeting, composed of a few persons. I began by announcing a series of Conferences on the doctrines of the Gospel, compared with the teachings of Rome. These Conferences attracted a crowd of people, who came from curiosity; but the Lord has been pleased to choose out of them many faithful witnesses, whose conversion to the gospel has produced an excellent effect on a population, till then, unaccustomed to religious impressions. The room in which we met, soon became too small, and I was obliged to hire a warehouse, and convert it into a meeting-room.

In 1870 I had the satisfaction of opening it as a place of worship, to be held every Sunday morning for the new converts. But it is especially since the war that this work has assumed remarkable proportions, both at Tonnerre and in the country thirty miles round. From the month of March, 1871, to the end of 1872, I opened ten new places of worship in ten different towns and villages, entirely Catholic. All these meetings are well attended at the present time (1874). In one of them, more than fifty families have connected themselves definitely and seriously with the evangelical worship, and they are expecting a pastor.

In another place, where the attendance is from eighty to one hundred persons, we have already inaugurated a chapel. In Tonnerre itself, the work has kept pace with that in other places. In 1872 I had the pleasure of constituting there a little church of eighteen members; these are now more than thirty. This young church meets every week for prayer, and it is from that intimate and brotherly communion that it draws the strength and the love which spread around by means of its members.

You will, perhaps, say, so much success must have brought upon you the hatred of the Roman Catholic clergy. It is true it has been so; and our church has been baptized with the fire of persecution—but it is this baptism which has sanctified it. As early as 1871 the clergy delegated two of their agents publicly to discuss with me; and, God be praised, the victory remained on the side of truth. Seeing that their attacks turned to their own confusion and loss, they denounced me as a profaner of their holy church, and a perturber of public order. It was then that seven hundred heads of families belonging to ten different towns and villages asked, as a right, for liberty to celebrate an evangelical worship in their respective localities. This popular demonstration disconcerted our adversaries for a short time; but in 1872 they began a new campaign. This time I was condemned by the "correctional tribunal," but the Word of God was not condemned, and now it exerts a more powerful action than ever, in spite of the obstacles raised against its dissemination.

The warehouse converted into a place of worship, which I have mentioned, had, for a long time, been insufficient for the needs of so great and so blessed a work. I therefore resolved, in the month of May last, to give to the town of Tonnerre, a chapel-school-room, and undertook a collection in the neighbourhood of Montbeliard, in Alsace, and in Basle; and in three weeks I collected £131 10s. On my return I published an appeal which brought me £79 17s., and with the sum of £211 7s. I began by buying a house, which, with the expense of alterations, came to £737 4s. There is, therefore, a debt of £526, which weighs heavily upon me. We have a school-room which has received the congratulation of the adverse authorities, and a home for the school-mistress. This is on the first floor. And the Chapel, in its noble simplicity, is admired even by our enemies. It is sufficient to accommodate with sittings 250 persons; there is besides, standing room for fifty more. And as three of its windows look on to the school yard, 300 persons may stand outside and hear, as well as those in the building. It was on October 15th last this chapel was inaugurated by the pastor Theodore Monod, in the presence of a serious and impressed audience of 500 persons. From that time it has been quite filled every Sunday, and on November 22nd 100 persons had to be kept out for want of room. Our late meeting-place accommodated from 80 to 90 persons; it is, therefore, a real increase of 150 who hear the word of truth every Sunday. This result, which exceeds the measure of my weak faith, authorizes me to bring these lines to a close, by making a pressing appeal to the friends of the Lord's cause in France and elsewhere. The workmen are expecting to be paid, and it is impossible for me to forsake a field which requires all the activity of which I am capable, to go and knock at your doors. I therefore ask the Lord to knock at the door of your hearts, so that the chapel and school-room of Tonnerre may not be forgotten in your Christmas gifts.

H. PERRERAUD, Pastor.

This Report was issued at the end of 1874; and by letters recently received, it does not appear that much has been collected to liquidate the debt; but at the same time the work is increasing in importance. The schools are in operation, with an increase of scholars, and numbers are received in the church. We, therefore, desire to commend this mission field to the liberality of Christians, who, perhaps, scarcely realize that there is only about one Protestant to thirty Roman Catholics throughout the country; and that of these many are of the poorer classes, and have but little to give, while many, very many, are either rationalistic or wholly indifferent. This gives an idea of the smallness of the number of those who are able, in any way, to labour for the Lord. So that we are often ready to say, "What are these among so many?" And yet, with the Lord's blessing, they may accomplish much.

THE IMPORTANCE OF LONDON IN ITS RELATION TO THE WORLD.

Dear Sir,—The effort about to be made for London should call forth the sympathy and prayers, not only of every Christian in London, but of all the Lord's people in Great Britain, and wherever the knowledge of the effort may reach; for nothing would more powerfully affect the religious condition of England and the world than a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon London.

As showing the importance of London in its relation to the world, I would commend to your readers the following quotation from an eloquent lecture on the British Empire, delivered nearly thirty years ago by the Rev. William Arthur.—Yours truly,
B.
Godalming, Feb. 15.

"Our Queen rules over more Roman Catholics than the Pope, over more Mohammedans than the Sublime Porte, and over more Pagans than there are in the whole Continent of Africa. If we ask, 'What is the religion of the British Empire?' judging by numbers, the unhesitating reply must be, 'Paganism.'" There are in it more Pagans than Mohammedans and Christians together, and there are more Mohammedans than Christians of both names. The numerical order of the four great religious distinctions prevailing in the Empire is—first, Paganism; second, Mohammedanism; first, Protestantism; fourth, Romanism.

"It is impossible to revolve these facts without receiving a deep impression that the moral state of England is of immeasurable importance to the whole human race. God has placed her in a position to advance or retard the highest interests of our species, such as nation never occupied before; such as involves a high and unappreciable trust..... The morality of Holland affects Holland; the morality of Belgium affects Belgium; the morality of France may affect Europe; but the morality of England affects the world.

"Now if such be the importance that the nation should fear God, you see the bearing of this on the metropolis. London is to the world as the tongue of England, the great expositor of its thoughts and principles. From London the world is constantly receiving illustrations of what we are. Ships are departing every day with cargoes indescribably various; but they all bear one commodity in common, they all carry to other lands a consignment of British morality. Whether their wares are received or returned, this commodity always gains an introduction, and is poured into the families of those countries, by conversation, by dealings, by recreation, and diversified intercourse. It depends entirely on the state of our home population whether these injections of our morality shall be so many vials of miasma to infect and accurse, or so much of the breath of heaven's grace to give health and blessing. Every seaman and every settler who leaves our ports carries with him, and holds up to the eye of foreign people, a pattern English heart. It is unutterably important that London should be holy."

FOR THE YOUNG.

A SCHOOL FEAST IN BASUTOLAND.

The young readers of THE CHRISTIAN will probably remember having heard of the Christmas teas, supplemented by gifts of warm clothing and toys, which the little children of the Basutoland Mission, in South Africa, have provided for the last two years for the poor little hungry matchbox-makers in the East-end dens.

The following extracts from letters from the wife of a missionary at Marija, telling first of the way in which the children of that far-off land help our little uncared-for ones, and next of Major Malan's visit to the station, and the return tea given by the white children to the black ones, will doubtless interest our little friends.

Home of Industry.

E. A. H.

"These past days I was thinking a good deal about you, and feeling that I was not getting much for you this year; but I was sure the Lord knew all about it, and that if He had money in this country for his work among the suffering poor of London, He would send it. And so He did; for this afternoon a letter was sent containing £1 for the matchbox-makers. Thus He encourages our weak faith. I have now in hand about £9 for you.

"One small donation from a little girl will, I am sure, both interest and amuse you. She is six years old, and her tender heart feels keenly for the suffering little ones. She sheds many tears over them, and can only be comforted by getting a piece of work to do, for which she can get a reward, and then it quickly finds its way into my pocket, with, 'For the poor little children.'

"One day she came running up to my house, out of breath, and brimming over with joy, saying in her own hurried little way—

"Oh, here is a sixpence for you!"

"But how did you get it, my child?"

"Oh, you know, when Uncle Casalis pulls out one of our teeth, he gives us a silver threepence, if we don't cry! To-day he pulled out two of mine, and I did not cry, not even a little bit; so he gave me sixpence, and here it is.

"The dear little one did not need to tell me the joy that was in her happy little heart, for it sparkled so in her bright eyes. She rubbed her hands, and kept hopping from one foot to another for very gladness that she had got a supper for another little hungry one. I feel as if the Lord must give a large blessing with such small but hearty offerings, given with such loving simplicity

"Major Malan arrived here on the 5th inst. What good he has done us! In him we have seen a living example of 'pray without ceasing.' We have been prepared for this very rare kind of visitor by reading of so many earnest workers for the Lord in THE CHRISTIAN. Without this and other books you sent lately, we should have been surprised. We thank the Lord from our hearts for this dear brother's visit. On Sunday he held two services, spoke in the Sabbath-school, joined us at the Lord's table, held a meeting with the normal school-boys. They were exceedingly impressed with his earnestness. Some of our people said, 'We can see that is a man of God, even though we do not understand his language.'

"On Tuesday Mr. M—— took him up to the 'Schoba' (a group of caves, formed by large masses of rock having fallen together from the top of the mountain on to a plateau), used as a retreat by about 400 Christians in the war and persecution of 1864-9—a wonderful stronghold and covert for the persecuted, where much prayer had gone up to the Lord.

"The Major had received some money from three little children in Scotland, to spend on those in Africa; so he said, as our children had helped to give a tea to the hungry children in England, he must give them one in return. So we gave a coffee-tea to about 145 children in our schoolroom. At one end of the room was a large table, covered with a white cloth. At the front edge lay a wreath of oak-leaves, on which, at intervals, were some pretty roses. Then there were six large Uruto (baskets), full of sugar-bread, on which were placed bunches of roses and oak-leaves. It did look so pretty. Down one side of the room were seated on benches three rows of girls, on the other two rows of boys; and quite a crowd of little things were seated on the floor. They sang, repeated Scripture, and the Major spoke to them. Then commenced the delightful enjoyment to a Basuto, regaling themselves with good things. (However, this, I think, is not peculiar to Basutos!) You should have seen how the buckets of coffee disappeared, and the Uruto also. There was plenty for all, and a share for our normal schoolboys, as well as the preparatory school. The children sang some pieces to tunes which the Major knew—'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' etc. After prayer, they formed in rank, and filed out, Major Malan standing at the door, holding a pretty basket, containing little parcels of bonbons, which he gave to each child as it passed; and they said, 'Thank you,' making a curtsy or bow. They then formed a line in front of the school, sang again, gave three cheers, and marched off as happy as any little children in the world. The Major was delighted. He entered with so much spirit into everything, ran about with kettles of coffee to fill up the mugs, then with a basket distributing bread; really he was the life of the little company. He took a sketch of the scene as the children came marching up with their banners. It was a pretty sight, they were all so clean, and neatly-dressed. Friday must have been a wonderful washing-day. I think the mothers' soap must have paid tribute, and to good purpose, for they looked so clean and nice."

LITTLE PANTOMIME PLAYERS AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—Since Christmas last a series of meetings have been held weekly for the children and some of the ballet-girls employed in the pantomime at the Crystal Palace. These young people, with the permission of their employers, were gathered, after the performance, in a room in the vicinity of the Bible-stand, where tea was provided for them by a few ladies, who at the tables freely conversed with them, seeking to lead them to the Saviour. Two of these meetings were especially interesting. Our friends Dr. Barnardo and the Rev. Frank White addressed these little ones in their usual winning manner upon gospel truth, and their unusual audience maintained the most rapt attention, and joined heartily in the simple hymns with which Dr. Barnardo especially interested them. From sixty to eighty, the greater part girls, were present on each occasion. We have reason to believe that real good was done. Will not believers remember these neglected ones at the throne of grace, exposed as they are to temptations peculiar to their calling?

J. ALEXANDER.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY AT LIVERPOOL.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

By an error of the telegraphic clerk, I was made to say at the close of my last week's communication that the numbers attending the young men's meeting in Newsome's Circus, on the evening of Sunday week, were seven thousand, instead of seven hundred. To any one who has seen the building, the error, of course, was a palpable one, but it may have misled some of your distant readers with respect to the dimensions of the work going on here among the men—it would be wrong to say young men, because there is no actual restriction in the admission, and all ages are represented.

The nightly gatherings in the Circus, from nine to ten, have been well sustained during the past week, and have been fraught with interest. Mr. Henry Drummond invariably presides, and conducts the proceedings with much tact and discretion. He throws aside all formalism, and endeavours to give the meeting as much of a family and social aspect as possible, in order to remove the natural diffidence that most young men feel in making any public statement about their conversion, which may be very recent, or their spiritual experience, which may not have been very deep or well defined. While the meetings are free to all who may feel disposed to speak, any attempt to raise controversy on disputed points of doctrine is vigorously repressed. Such a thing, however, seldom occurs, and would obviously be out of harmony with the object of these meetings, which is to encourage the young converts to make public confession of their faith in Christ, in the hope that the simple story of their conversion may lead others to the Saviour. Sometimes a few broken sentences from a young convert, telling how he lost his burden at the cross, have more effect on the hearers than could be gained by an hour's ordinary preaching. An ounce of testimony, modestly and truthfully given, is often worth more than a ton of theological disquisition.

Hitherto these meetings have been such as to warrant the belief that a solid and lasting work of grace has begun among the young men of Liverpool. In few, if any, of our large towns are the temptations to evil more numerous and more seductive; and I would ask for the earnest prayers of your readers that this movement may extend and deepen among this important section of the community.

Much testimony has been borne at the meetings to the good work that has been done in the past by the Young Men's Christian Association here, and I hope its borders will be greatly enlarged by accessions of young men gathered in during this special time of blessing.

The larger and more public meetings in Victoria Hall have been continued during the past week without any diminution in the attendance (except at one or two of the noon meetings, when the weather has been very severe), or the apparent results.

Many interesting statements have been made at the noon prayer-meetings with regard to the progress of the work in places which Messrs. Moody and Sankey have already visited, and in remote country districts which this wave of revived spiritual life has reached.

On Tuesday week, after a short address by Mr. Moody to those who sought to lead the anxious to Christ in the inquiry-room, the Rev. George Robinson, of St. Augustine's Church, related the following incident:—

He had had a gentleman staying with him from Dublin for the last few days, who narrated some interesting facts connected with the work in that city. He told him of a Roman Catholic lady who, while reading one of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hymns in a railway carriage, was startled by some one speaking to her, she having thought she was alone. The person said to her, "I see what you are about." She looked up and was startled to find it was her father confessor, a Roman Catholic priest, and he said to her, "Don't be startled; I have been myself to those meetings in Dublin, and I have reason to be thankful and bless God for them." Taking the book out of her hand he opened it at the hymn

"Jesus the water of life has given Freely, freely, freely," and said it was when that hymn was sung in the Exhibition building, Dublin, that God took away the burden of his sins, and he said, "Now I am going over to England to hear the services of those two good men in Manchester, and I shall never return again as a Romish priest to Ireland: God has burst the bond."

At the same meeting Mr. T. Matheson read a letter giving some cheering intelligence of a movement among the engine-drivers and stokers on the North Western Railway.

At the Wednesday noon meeting, the Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken stated that at the conclusion of the previous Sunday's service, a barman came to him and told him that he feared he could not go on with his occupation and serve God. Moreover, he said that he had his father dependent upon him. He told the man to trust in God, and recited cases in which God had not forsaken those who had so trusted in Him. After a few minutes' struggle the young man was able to throw himself entirely on the Lord, and he thought that he had left the church a believer in Christ. Mr. Aitken concluded with a prayer that God might give the barman and others who felt that they could not continue their occupations and serve God, strength and courage to face the world.

At the meeting on Thursday at noon, the Rev. Mr. Macpherson mentioned a circumstance that came to his knowledge showing that whole families had been recently led to the Lord. About ten or twelve days ago a young lady in the hall decided for Christ, and since then her only brother had given himself to the Lord, two sisters had become Christians, and five brothers-in-law, as well as others in the same circle, making fifteen persons who were now rejoicing in Him.

Dr. Owles said that they were aware that a house-to-house visitation was going on in connection with the services. They had heard some complaints of visitors only putting a tract into the letter-boxes, and not making any efforts to speak with the people in the houses. He hoped such persons would remember that that was not the primary object of their work, but it was desired that they should give some practical and verbal testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. He knew of an instance in which a visitor called at the residence of a wealthy lady in town. Contrary to her expectation the visitor was admitted, and the lady said that she thought the visits were to be limited to the poor. Before the visitor left, however, the lady was in tears about the state of her soul. Another case occurred in a poor district, the visitor being received by a woman who asked her to go in to see her husband, who would not go to hear the Word of God. But notwithstanding the invitation, the visitor went away without saying a word to the poor man. To those who were willing to undertake visitation districts would be readily assigned.

Mr. Sankey said that when they were in Glasgow they heard a great deal about their not reaching the lapsed masses. He did not hear much of similar complaints in Liverpool. That, however, was not their chief object. It seemed to him to be the duty of the Church to go after the masses. He hoped those Christian friends who had got themselves fired up at the meetings would make it their life-work to reach those people who were perishing in the lower places of the town. It would be better for such people to go into it than that Mr. Moody should do so, who, however, often did work of that kind in his own city.

On Friday some valuable testimony was given as to the tangible effects of the work in Liverpool by Revs. Dr. Harrison and C. M. Birrell. Mr. Birrell said that one class reached had been those who, though religiously trained, had, during these special meetings, seen a new meaning and power in the truths with which they were familiar. Many sailors, and ship captains too, had come to the meetings and been guided into the true haven of rest and peace. Then there were many working-men who had plunged into the depths of intemperance, and whose insulted and injured wives, after being driven from their homes, had been compelled to support themselves and their children for years together. These wives, in this day of grace, had sent letters to their husbands, extending their forgiveness and imploring them to come to Victoria Hall and seek forgiveness of the Saviour. Some of them had come and found that forgiveness, and gone back to lighten their homes again with a new lustre and joy.

"I would add another class," continued Mr. Birrell, "one much too large and full of strange and painful interest, consisting of those who have in past years made a profession of love to Christ, but have wandered and have been glad to take of the husks that the swine did eat. I have often been asked whether the converts connected with this revival would stand the test of time, and endure the temptations of the world. When the question is put to me, as it often is, by a Christian brother, I ask another. 'Brother, have all your converts stood fast?' I can only confess that, during the forty years but one that I have preached in this town, I have missed a great many from the fold; but I have found some of them in that inquiry-room. The first night the inquiry-room was needed, I lingered on the platform, not intending to go into the room, when a message came to me, 'You are wanted immediately; an inquirer wishes to see you.' I went, and I had not seen that face—I will not tell you whether it was man or woman—for twenty years; and I found that soul had wandered away, and had kept out of my sight with perfect success. The first conviction was to go and tell him by whose hands they had been received into the Christian Church. Many a wanderer has come, and Christ alone knows how many more He will welcome back to his all-forgiving arms, and fill our hearts with a gladness they have never experienced before."

'Away on the mountains, wild and bare,'

And so the great work flows on steadily, unhindered in the least, as I believe, by the newspaper opposition of the "carping critics." A great deal was made at the time about an incident (casually mentioned by Mr. Moody at one of the early meetings) of a man falling dead, after having strangely expressed his opposition to the meetings. Two of the daily papers stated that Mr. Moody laid the scene of the event in Liverpool, which was utterly false, although I will not say the error was intentional. As no such occurrence was known to have taken place in Liverpool, the opposers of the movement greedily caught at this erroneous report, and Mr. Moody's veracity was freely impugned. The flimsy accusation and reckless statement brought against Mr. Moody have since been altogether dispelled, thanks to his characteristic ingenuousness, but the incident serves to show how free the whole movement is from excess of any kind in the conduct of it, when unkindly critics are obliged to resort to such methods of expressing their hostility.

Mr. Moody's Bible-lectures last week, though (with one exception) perhaps not so full of interest as those of the week before, have been very largely attended and evidently enjoyed. The lecture on Tuesday on "How to Study the Bible," was most admirable, and I advise none of your readers in London to miss hearing it if possible. I venture to say it will be something like a new revelation to many of them respecting the grand old Book.

While on the subject of the Bible-readings, I may say that a friend, who is a prominent supporter of the movement here, suggests that, in saying that they were listened to by sixty to seventy thousand persons, I have overstated the attendance at the various meetings, held the week before last, at which the lectures on the "Blood" and "Heaven" were given. I am free to confess that I did not sufficiently make allowance for the fact that a considerable number of the same audience were present at several, if not all of these lectures, though they were specially desired not to attend the same lecture twice. The point I wished to bring out was, that it was matter for rejoicing to see such crowds of people coming to the Hall twice a day to hear these Bible truths presented as Mr. Moody presents them. This gentleman states at the same time, that your last week's issue contains a very fair and accurate account of the work here. Even with the very best intentions it is most difficult to gauge the approximate numbers in such vast gatherings, and perhaps the best way is to speak in general rather than specific terms.

One of the most interesting meetings of the week was the "children's service" on Wednesday afternoon, at which Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were both present. So many little ones it has never before been my lot to see gathered under one roof. Some of the daily papers put down the numbers in Victoria Hall at 12,000, with an overflow meeting of about 2000 in the Circus. I feel rather chary now in the matter of numbers, but I do not think this estimate much over the mark. Think of such a number of young, impressive natures brought at one time under the sweet sound of redeeming love! Mr. Moody's address, founded on the book with three leaves, black, red, and white, was a sort of running interchange of simple yet searching questions, and answers very promptly given. The singing by Mr. Sankey of some of his solos was greatly enjoyed by the youthful audience, and when they all joined in the chorus, or sang other of the hymns right through with great heartiness, and as with one voice, we had yet one more proof of how universally and, I trust, inalienably, these sweet gospel songs have become household possessions throughout the kingdom.

The evening meetings during the week have, as usual, been crowded for some time before the regular hour for commencing the service. The overflow meetings have been held in the Circus, and were addressed by Mr. T. Shuldham Henry and others. Mr. Sankey has generally been present in the course of the evening at both places. Mr. Moody's gospel addresses at the evening meetings have been characterized by much simplicity and power, and the result has been seen in the crowds of both sexes who pass nightly into the inquiry-room. In the words of one who has been closely associated with the work during the past week, they have been "flocking into the Kingdom by scores." I understand from the same source that several of our much-to-be-pitied fallen sisters have been reclaimed through the agency of the meetings. Would to God that every poor drunkard and profligate in Liverpool might "come to himself" and return to his Father like the prodigal of old. Let us thank God for what He has done, and ask Him in faith to bless this special agency yet more abundantly.

The Friday evening meeting was a time of the right-hand power of the Most High. Mr. Moody's theme was "Grace." He contrasted, in bold and striking colours, the action of "law," that condemns the sinner without remorse, and the "grace" that has brought salvation to the most helpless and hopeless. His words were truly magnetic in their effect, and the vast company was swayed under the power of this most glorious truth almost as one man. The inquiry-room was speedily filled with seekers after a knowledge of "grace abounding to the chief of sinners." Mr. Moody spoke to them in a body, and subsequently a number of Christians assisted him in holding up a present Saviour to those troubled ones. Many whose courage or convictions were not sufficiently strong to make them go into the inquiry-room, remained in the large hall for some time, where they were earnestly and affectionately pointed to Christ. Verily there must have been joy, beyond all human expression or comprehension, in the presence of the angels of God over many sinners repenting.

As the days and weeks roll past, and the same scenes are so often repeated, it is difficult to find fresh terms in which to describe "these wondrous gatherings day by day." The four meetings on Sunday last may briefly be stated as a repetition of those on the Sunday before. All crowded to the utmost capacity of the great hall, and, in some cases, especially at the afternoon and evening meetings, multitudes turned away for lack of room. Mr. Moody's address at the eight o'clock meeting for "Workers" was on "Daniel." It was a most striking account of the history of this "man beloved of God," whose wonderful and unbroken success in life Mr. Moody attributed to his power of saying "No!" at the right time. Mr. Moody was very severe on the spirit of compromise that is too manifest among professing Christians at the present day; and which is a source of much of the feebleness and failure of modern Christianity. The great impression produced by Mr. Moody's address was deepened by Mr. Sankey's singing of "Dare to be a Daniel."

The service for "non-church-goers" at eleven o'clock was a fresh illustration of the power of Christ's wondrous love, or "compassion," to melt the hearts of the most supine, and to move the consciences of the most sin-stricken. The arrows of conviction went home right and left, and there was a large ingathering of souls at the close. Mr. Moody used, by way of illustration, a very touching chapter of personal family history that brought tears to many eyes.

At the three o'clock service for women the hall was filled to overflowing an hour before the time. The women are quite as determined in their efforts to get in as the stronger sex, and some say not quite so well behaved under the trying conditions of a crowd. I suppose, however, there must be some allowance made at this special season, and if one could be certain that they are all as anxious (as Mr. Moody said he hoped) to press into the kingdom, a little roughness of demeanour may well be overlooked. To my mind, these Sunday afternoon meetings for women have been the most wonderful of all, and certainly not the least important, when we consider the power for good or evil that must be exerted by so many thousands of our mothers and sisters. I must say these meetings have proved that the women are not only quicker in their apprehension of the truth, but more honest and courageous in avowing their apprehension of it. At the close of Mr. Moody's searching address on "Excuses," a very considerable proportion of the audience promptly stood up to show that they wished to excuse themselves no longer from accepting the gracious invitation to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Mr. Moody spoke to the inquirers that filled the inquiry-room, in language and by illustration so beautifully simple and apt, that it is almost impossible to conceive any difficulty could have remained in their minds. At the same time Mr. Sankey addressed, in a very artless, homely, and touching way, a large body of anxious inquirers who remained in the hall.

Mr. Sankey's singing at this service was peculiarly appropriate and effective. At the opening, he sang that solemn and tender invitation to the feast, "Yet there is room," and when Mr. Moody had ceased speaking, and the whole assembly was hushed in silent prayer, he broke the death-like stillness, by singing, in subdued and pleading tones, "Almost persuaded." His rendering of this hymn, which in some parts could only be compared to a wail of sorrow at lost opportunities, sent a deep thrill through the hearts of those thousands of listeners.

The inquiry-meeting for men, at which Mr. Moody re-delivered the address on "Excuses," was another season of pentecostal power, and the Holy Ghost was present to wound and to heal, to kill and to make alive.

This week's services will possess a very special interest, being the last week of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's stay here, and including, as they do, the laying of the memorial stone of the Young Men's Christian Association's new premises, addresses to employers and young men, and the Convention extending over two days. May the rich blessing of God rest on this week's efforts in Liverpool!

FROM REV. PATRICK WHITE.

"What shall the harvest be?" is a hymn with which all who attend Victoria Hall are now familiar. The harvest promises to be very abundant and blessed in Liverpool; and is coming in rapid succession on the sowing of the "incorruptible seed" by these honoured servants of God. Daily the interest is deepening, and the influence for good more extensively felt and generally admitted.

Strangers are flocking to town from Wales and different parts of England. Some are found on the platform from Scotland and London daily. Many wait in the hall from the termination of the noon meeting until the Bible-reading at three, a service which continues to increase in attraction.

It is no idle curiosity which brings men of business, to whom "time is money," to wait for an hour, before a service commences, to secure a seat; yet this is of daily occurrence.

"Is this the work of God or the devil?" was a question asked by Mr. Moody on Monday, and well he might ask such a question, as he saw the eager, anxious throng pressing in to fill every available spot in the spacious hall, engage heartily in the service of praise, and listen with breathless attention to his plain, practical, and affecting appeals.

"This is not a right revival," a gentleman said to me. "Wherein is it wanting?" I replied. "It is not what the Word of God represents a revival to be." "I am glad," I said, "you appeal to the Word of God. By it we stand or fall. Here is a Bible, please let me have the Divine record, that we may test the present work." "Oh, I have not time to wait," was the answer. It is easy to cavil; but objectors must be able to adduce something more convincing than an empty cry, ere friends of this work of grace withdraw and oppose it.

Every genuine revival of religion affects three classes—the converted, unconverted, and backslider. Thank God, we have undoubted testimony from each of these classes in Liverpool, as to the character and results of the labours of our brethren, Moody and Sankey.

The drunkard is reformed, the blasphemer becomes a man of prayer, the formalist is delivered from his spiritual death, and brought into the enjoyment of the hidden life in Jesus; and the very fallen sister, like a penitent Mary, is led to seek a shelter from temptation and degrading vice. "Your heart will rejoice," said a dear friend, last evening, in the hall, "to know there is a Magdalene going to the Home."

But marked and numerous though the cases of awakening, apparent conversion, and return of backsliders may be, I am of opinion that the beneficial effects of this work of God in refreshing saints is equally manifest and extensive. Ministers of religion do not hesitate to acknowledge with adoring gratitude that their own souls are quickened, and all look with hopeful trust to the new life which shall be imparted to their church members.

How has this quickening come? I believe mainly through the instrumentality of Mr. Sankey's gospel hymns. Sung by that brother or joined in by the assembled multitude, they prepare for the gospel, contain the gospel, present it in its simplicity and purity, and accompany the gospel preached by Mr. Moody like a healing balm, or as a nail fastened in a sure place.

Music is a science and a power. When cultivated as it should be, it has charms inconceivable, holds the mind enchanted, and when set to tunes so lively and sweet, and in words so plain as those used in Mr. Sankey's collection, it is no wonder it sheds a hallowing influence over the singer, enlightens the mind, melts the heart, and inspires the soul with new life. Many of the most earnest and excellent Christians with whom I have the pleasure of being acquainted, have informed me these hymns have been blessed to their souls. "I did not sleep last night," said one brother, "that heavenly hymn sung by dear Sankey so possessed my mind and heart."

The services this week, in number and kind, have been very similar to those of last week, with the exception that arrangements were kindly made by Messrs. Moody and Sankey to hold a service for the Sabbath-school children on Wednesday afternoon at three. It was a sight to cheer the heart to see the large hall crammed in every part with these precious lambs of the fold. There were at the very least 12,000 in the hall, and nearly 3000 overflow in the Circus. This will not require to be divided, as some of your critics affirm of your representation of numbers, as I counted the hall by benches.

Mr. Moody endeavoured to get the attention of the children, but failed, the one-third not hearing a single word. Those schools fortunate enough to get near the platform (which they accomplished by being two hours before the time) heard the address, answered most intelligently, and joined very heartily in the hymns.

These devoted men of God seem anxious to reach every class. It was impossible not to love and admire them as one observed their countenances beam with delight and the efforts they made to benefit the dear little ones—the harbingers of the future hope of the Church.

BY A WORKER.

One great advantage gained in Liverpool is very evident—we see who is for us and who is against us. Large numbers of half-and-half professors have looked upon conversion as being something more sentimental than practical, more of a theory than a reality—its necessity not so much to be enforced as prayed for. The plain teaching of Mr. Moody has roused many from this dreamy position, and made them think and act with a fuller realization of the words, “Ye must be born again.” In many it has awakened a strong opposition, proving that the offence of preaching a crucified Christ has not ceased, but is as powerful as in days of old. They repudiate and reject the doctrine of immediate salvation by the acceptance of Christ, and the cross is to them foolishness and a stumbling-block.

One peculiarity of Mr. Moody’s preaching that gives great offence to worldly Christians, is his strong assertion of truth. It is called dogmatic, and they love it not. But experience proves, that like David’s sword, there is nothing like it; God uses the things that are not to bring to nought the things that are, so that none of us shall glory in or magnify the instrument.

Mr. Moody has a sledge-hammer, and when he wields it, does not stop to explain that it is a hammer, or who made it, or if it is a genuine authentic one, but with brawny words he brings it down on his hearers to break hard hearts and subdue stubborn wills.

If he has a knotty point he does not stop to unravel it, or waste his time in unpicking the threads, but raising the sword of the Spirit, he brings it down, cuts the knot, pierces the conscience, scattering the bond that Satan has tied round many a victim.

FROM THE “DAILY TELEGRAPH.”

The Daily Telegraph concludes a leading article with the following paragraph:—

People in the metropolis will soon judge for themselves how far the provinces have been justified in their emotion at the revivalists from across the Atlantic. It takes a great deal to move Londoners in any such manner, and many here will abruptly dispose of the whole business by the familiar phrase “religious hysteria.” This success, however, appears rather too complex, and, we may add, socially useful, to be explained so easily by the phrases of mad-doctors, materialists, or cynics. Wherever those people come they seem to effect at once that which archbishops and rural deans and curates from the universities cannot do: they “convince people of sin;” they wake hundreds of thousands of hearts to the consideration of “righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come.” Unless, then, we are to call all religious feeling hysteria and mania; unless St. Paul preaching on Mars’ Hill and Dr. Vaughan in the Temple are equally appealing to the excitable nervous systems of automata, we cannot clearly see why the churches should be scandalized at the work done by the two revivalists. No doubt it depends upon the faculty which large bodies of men and women exhibit to thrill with a common emotion which reacts upon the individual, and produces remarkable elevations of character. But if the orator, the general, the stage-player, the musician, and the advocate work—as they all do—with this magnetic influence of sympathy, why should those be charlatans who employ it to raise and quicken the spiritual side of life to which it naturally belongs? We cannot find any reasonable answer to this in the slipshod explanations given of such religious movements by people who call themselves scientific, and yet leave the region of the emotions and aspirations of man out of their anthropology. It rather seems to us that when Moody and Sankey come to London, the dignitaries and ministers of all the churches would do well to go and see what amazing things real genius and unselfish ardour can accomplish even in the present age. They will hear—people say—some “pieces” spoken about this life and the next, which, delivered with a nasal twang or not, go to the souls of people straighter than any sermon bought in Paternoster-row. They will see—if London reproduces what Dublin and Liverpool have witnessed—congregations stirred with the “old story” told newly, as the seas are raised by storm-winds. And notwithstanding all the easy talk about hysteria, epidemics, magnetism, nervous systems, and the like, the philosophers and divines have yet to explain to us why it is a bad thing for these Yankee itinerants to turn people by the thousand to right and virtuous lives, and a good thing when a bishop or a cardinal manages to convert half-a-dozen.

LADIES’ PEACE SOCIETY.

This society was formed last spring, for the purpose of bringing before Christian women their duty with regard to aiding in the abolition of war, and the establishment of International Arbitration. We heartily endorse the opinion of the promoters of the society that “all war is, in its very nature, opposed to the spirit of Christ, who is the Prince of Peace,” and we should rejoice to see this conviction more widely diffused among Christians. It may be doubted whether war will cease so long as evil passions and human pride continue to hold sway in the hearts of men and women, but we think all who love Christ and his cause, should labour for its extinction, and we therefore commend this society to the prayerful attention of our readers. Mrs. Southey, Tressilian-road, Lewisham High-road, S.E., will be glad to give any information respecting its working.

REPORT OF THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE, 1875.—A few copies of the above report are still to be had (at 5s. per doz.) on application to Miss Woolcombe, 11, York-place, Clifton, Bristol.

SERVICES AT THE FORESTERS’ NEW HALL, GOSWELL-STREET, E.C.—On Sunday, Feb. 21, Mr. Orsman, the voluntary evangelist to the costermongers, commenced a series of special services at the above hall. The Right Hon. W. Cowper-Temple, M.P., was present, and took part in the meeting. After reading the story of Nicodemus coming to Christ, the hon. gentleman gave a short address, setting forth the love of Christ as passing all human knowledge. Mr. Orsman’s text was chosen from Phil. ii. 9, “A name that is above every name.” Every seat was full, and nearly 300 remained to the prayer-meeting which followed the addresses.

THE HOPE OF THE CHURCH.—The hope of the church is in revivals; and the fairest hope of revivals is in teaching and preaching the gospel to the young. If I were to turn evangelist, I would enter this field. Let every pastor who desponds over the effect of his ministry on the world-hardened minds turn to the lambs of the flock. Pentecost will begin for him there. Let our Sunday-school teachers seek immediately and explicitly, not the entertainment or the instruction of their charge, but their conversion; and the question of the spiritual state of the church, the sanctity of home life, the peace and order of society, and the supply of Christian ministers and Christian missionaries, are all answered in words of hope and promise.—A. L. Stone, D.D.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S LONDON.

PREPARATORY SERVICES AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

The Committee who are arranging for Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services in London, having obtained possession of the great Agricultural Hall last week, it was decided to hold preparatory services there, commencing on Sunday last. The hall is not yet completed for the regular services, some of the temporary galleries remaining unfinished; but the preparations were sufficiently advanced to admit of the preaching on Sunday being from the platform erected for Messrs. Moody and Sankey, while the choir occupied the seats destined for Mr. Sankey's helpers. About six thousand chairs have been already placed, and these were fully occupied on Sunday night, while a very large number of persons were content to stand.

The first service was on Sunday afternoon, when there were upwards of 4000 persons present. The introductory portion of the services was conducted by the Rev. J. Thain Davidson, and a deeply impressive sermon was preached by the Rev. J. McConnell Hussey, of Christ Church, Brighton, from the words, "To-morrow shall be as this day." A leaflet containing a number of Mr. Sankey's hymns was freely circulated through the hall, and the heartiness with which the people joined in singing, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and "Have you on the Lord believed," showed that these hymns are already well known in London.

In the evening the Rev. C. B. Sawday preached on the "pure river of water of life," and riveted the attention of the great congregation throughout. Prayer was also offered by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Mr. George Williams. It was remarked that the Upper-street, in Islington, which has long been notorious for its Sunday-evening loungers, many of them rather boisterous, has not been so clear for years; and it was evident from the composition of the congregation that, whether out of curiosity, or for shelter from the extreme cold wind which prevailed, or from whatever cause, these loungers had come within the sound of the gospel. God grant that many of their hearts may be pricked!

There will be a service in the great hall every evening this week at eight o'clock, conducted by the leading ministers of various denominations in the north of London. These services are especially to supplicate a blessing on the approaching evangelistic efforts of our American brethren. From the experiment already made, it is evident that a vast number of persons can not only be accommodated in the hall, but can hear with perfect ease. The Committee anticipate being able to seat 15,000 persons within sight and hearing of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S FIRST MEETING

at the Agricultural Hall will be held next Tuesday evening. The Noon Prayer-meeting will be commenced at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, and Mr. Moody will preside on Wednesday—not on Tuesday.

Never since the commencement of these services, nearly seven years ago, has there been so much evidence of blessing attending them as within the last few weeks. Sunday after Sunday the minor hall, capable of holding 2500 persons, is filled both afternoon and evening; in the evening, indeed, for several Sundays, it has been found necessary to close the doors, and shut out hundreds who have been pressing in, and these, it is believed, almost entirely of the class who attend no place of worship. My earnest and devoted brother, Mr. Sawday, has most kindly given himself for several Sunday evenings to this work, and has found his reward in seeing numbers of persons anxiously coming forward with the question, "What must I do to be saved?" I have been asked by many correspondents how the approaching Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey will affect the services so long carried on at this hall; and my answer is, that we wish for the time to lose ourselves in the greater work, and to the utmost of our power advance it.

The great building, as your readers know, has been secured for some weeks by the committee of the Central Noon-day Prayer-meeting, and they have allowed me to place in their hands during that period the minor hall, so that there shall be but one organization directing the evangelistic work.

At the close of Mr. Moody's visit, the Sunday afternoon and evening services will, if the Lord will, be resumed as before, under my direction, either in the smaller or larger hall.

Preparatory services are being held at present in the Agricultural Hall, which is in process of being seated to accommodate thousands as will be within reach of the arrangements. Mr. Moody's arrival, the Sunday arrangements already made are, by the courtesy of the Noon-day Prayer-meeting Committee, allowed to stand good for the large number of persons who are so very earnest in pleading for the services. The meeting will shortly gather to the Agricultural Hall, and be brought to the feet of Jesus, and ushered into the glorious light of an accepted gospel?

March 1.

J. THAIN DAVIDSON.

P.S.—Notwithstanding the bitterly cold east wind of yesterday, which kept many within doors, there were large congregations at the Agricultural Hall; and it must have been cheering to the members of Committee present to find the acoustic properties of the building admirable. So far as could be judged, none failed to hear; and from the speaker's point of view, I can testify that there is nothing to be desired. The numbers at the afternoon service were reckoned at nearly 5000, whilst in the evening from 6000 to 7000 were present.

UNION.

Now that there are only a few days to elapse before the time fixed for the meetings of our American friends, it may not be inopportune to dwell on the fact of the very extraordinary way in which Mr. Moody has been used to bring together so many Christians, differing in minor points, but who felt they could heartily agree in the grand truths he has been proclaiming in Scotland, Ireland, and the North of England.

In all these places we feel convinced his labours have led, in multitudes of instances, to the commencement of Christian friendships which will never again be broken—and that between persons who, humanly speaking, could not have been brought together by other means.

Has not this been well-pleasing to the Lord Jesus? Yet we confess it may have been true in some places that the loving co-operation waned after the departure of our friends.

But now in London, we feel impelled to implore that true Christians of every name should be of one accord in breathing the Lord's own prayer, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 21).

Do let us, therefore, "look up" to our heavenly Father for love and forbearance, true and general, greater than has ever been seen here in our day. Who can tell how much the Holy Spirit has been hitherto grieved by our want of love, and how much the growth of Christians retarded? And who can tell, likewise, how far the conversion of sinners has been hindered by the same cause? Else what is the meaning of our Lord's words just quoted?

But see what mercy! God is not leaving us to ourselves, but introducing strangers, who, belonging to none of our churches, and appearing desirous to be ignorant of our divisions, can the more easily bring us together to co-operate in promulgating the great fundamentals of our religion.

Let us, therefore, in a spirit unanimous, look right up, up to our heavenly Father, to send straight down power from on high, both upon the coming preaching of these strangers, and upon all others who shall be uplifting Christ in this great city, that there may be a mighty quickening by the Holy Spirit. With regard to which passed Jonah-like through Manchester and Lancashire with the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and which is already commencing with cheering results in London, its superintendents and house-to-house visitors will, no doubt, work in the spirit of the foregoing remarks. Their meetings, as they will do, with multitudes of earnest, devoted ministers, readers, missionaries, Bible-women, etc., who have long been engaged in regularly-organized work, will be a source of great mutual encouragement. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 34, 35).

N.B.—This house-to-house Visitation has been undertaken by a Committee altogether independent of the Central Noon Prayer-meeting Committee. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

EVANGELIZATION OF THE BEDAWEEN.

Many causes are being pled for in these days, and, thanks to the grace of God, many are found to plead them, but so far as I know there is only one man in England who is attempting anything practical for the evangelization of the sons of Ishmael, who still roam as of old in the deserts of Syria and Arabia. So it would seem to be high time to make some effort to direct the thoughts of God's people to their sad and extreme need, and all the more particularly at the present moment, seeing that so many of the large towns of England, Ireland, and Scotland are being visited with such abundant showers of blessing from on high, and when, as a natural consequence, the renewed and increased life will be seeking new channels in which to develop itself.

According to Psa. lxxii., it was prophesied of King Solomon that "the inhabitants of the wilderness would bow before him." And how much more must this be true of Him who is "a greater than Solomon," and of whom Solomon was but a type, in the extent of his reign, and the vastness of his glory and power.

In the summer of 1873, Miss G—, my wife, and myself, paid a most interesting visit to several large encampments of a tribe of Bedaweens who spend eight or nine months of the year in the wilds of the desert, and three or four in the neighbourhood of Hesban and Rahob, on the east of the Jordan. We pitched close to their tents, and, in short, committed ourselves to them for protection and all else we needed, and were received by them with kindness, and even a degree of politeness and consideration not to be expected from the sons of the desert. What we experienced there helped me to realize what mission life in the wilds of Africa must be. I had a great desire to pay them a second visit this last summer, but God has interfered, and, by sickness, prevented our desire being gratified, so that we have been much disappointed at not seeing our friends of last summer as we had wished. But when we think of the unusual suffering there has been all the past summer among all classes and in all districts of this country, I cannot but own that God's hand has been working, and be thankful for his sparing mercy.

With all the other Missions that have been originated in these latter days, it is surprising that no special men have gone forth to the desert. Surely it is high time that some move should be made in that direction. Some may think that the missionaries who are already in a country like Syria, bordering on the desert, ought to be able to evangelize it; but they have already far more on hand than they can overtake, and such a vast work as the evangelization of the Bedaween needs a number of men specially devoted to them, with unwavering anxiety for their salvation, just as the centres of Africa and China do. Will not some of those who are now enjoying the blessed fruits of converting and reviving grace in so many of the large towns of England, Ireland, and Scotland, send forth, were it but half-a-dozen of their number as special missionaries for this special field? They must be men willing and able (willing in mind, and able in body) to endure such hardships as a migratory, desert life would entail, for the love of Christ. I believe if such a band would go forth among the tribes of the desert, there would be blessed fruits reaped—"the desert would blossom as the rose." And as far as I can judge, missionary life in the desert of Syria and Arabia, while it would be quite as hopeful and fruitful, would not be accompanied with such an amount of hardship as that in the wilds of Africa, so I cannot see why men, and women too, should not be found able and willing for the former as for the latter.

It is true that the inhabitants of the desert will bow before Solomon's antitype, and as an earnest of the complete fulfilment of the promise, firstfruits of them actually embraced him on the day of Pentecost, and till now whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But how shall they call upon Him upon whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?

I have heard of one or two Missions being started professedly for the "Arabs," which term would appear as if they were for the Bedaween tribes of the desert; but practically speaking, as far as I know, not one missionary, either foreign or native, has in good earnest given himself thoroughly to this work. Any attempt made has stopped short in some of the sea coast or inland towns. Visits to Bedaween encampments in the neighbourhood of villages and cultivated districts may have been made for a few days at a time, and five or six Bedaween boys have been taught, who belong to tribes that encamp near villages, and never go into the desert; but literally, the evangelization of the vast desert itself is as yet a work of the future.

Palgrave, and men like him, have travelled for months amongst Bedaween of the Syrian and Arabian deserts, stimulated by the love of travel, exploration, and novelty; and men like Captain Macdonald of the Sinai Desert, have lived among them for years, and found a pleasant home in their camps; so why should not men, stimulated by the love of Christ, go and do likewise? Up till now the example of worldly men in this matter puts to shame the followers of Christ, for the former have attempted and obtained results which the latter have scarcely dreamed of yet.

We should be delighted to hear soon of the Lord raising up and sending forth a band of strong, devoted, godly men for this field, and as Damascus would be one of the most natural starting-points, where it would be well to go through an introductory study of Arabic, we should hope to be able to welcome them, and help them on their way. On no account should less than two start together, either married or unmarried, and they must be strong spiritually and physically. Sir Samuel and Lady Baker are an example of what a couple can endure in unknown wilds. Are there no such couples who would go with the love of Christ into the retreats of the sons of Ishmael, and taste how much sweeter adventure for Christ would be than for any worldly object?

Undoubtedly, if such men went forth in faith, they would very soon obtain influence over the Bedaween; and by making themselves one with them, in migrating as they migrate, and living as they live, they would not only be able to preach to them the word of the gospel, but be able to guide them to the practical obedience of the gospel; so that, in time, by the effectual working of the Spirit of God, they would beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and learn the art of war no more.

Palgrave employed a partial knowledge of simple medicines as an introduction and means of safe passage for himself among the wastes of Arabia; and Captain Macdonald engaged himself and a tribe of Bedaween in digging up precious stones in the peninsula of Sinai, and was thus able, and that quite alone, to live among them for several years, and got so much influence over them, that they looked up to him as their chief, and his word became their law. And I need not say how serviceable even a limited knowledge of medicine would be to a missionary going forth into the same regions, in order that the word of Christ in him might become their law.

Until such a band of earnest spirits go forth among the roamers of the desert wilds, I have no hope of much being done for them, as the missionaries now in Syria have already more in hand than they can accomplish; and such as desire and are able to undertake this blessed work must put to their account beforehand that the gospel is not to be preached to the desert tribes by settling down in towns or villages of Palestine and Syria; men must be found who will go into their country, and live among them, as truly as Moffat did in Africa, Ellis in Madagascar, and Judson in Burmah.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."—I am, yours truly,

W. MACKINTOSH.

Damascus, Syria.

P.S.—While hearing with wonder and gratitude of the Lord's doings in grace in Great Britain and Ireland, I have refrained from referring to the ordinary work of the various Missions for old and young engaged in Damascus, and the surrounding country, on the principle of leaving the ninety-and-nine to search in the wilderness for the lost. At the same time, there is a good deal at the present moment to encourage in the way of movements of different kinds in a number of places, showing that the people are becoming more and more dissatisfied with a state of ignorance and oppression, and open and anxious to be taught the gospel. Indeed, we find the calls upon our time and strength much more than we can respond to, and could wish to see the work that cannot be overtaken by existing Missions undertaken by recruited forces. Individual cases of interest might be mentioned, but for the present we must forbear. Only suffer us to appeal to those who are enjoying showers of grace to remember this city and country. What we need here is just what you are enjoying now in the west—the mighty working of the Spirit of God.

AWAKENING AT SELBY.

This little Yorkshire town has just been the scene of a remarkable awakening. To God be all the praise.

"Revive thy work, O Lord, in the midst of us!" has been the cry arising from many a heart, as the glad news reached us, of showers of blessing falling in many different places. Special Services were accordingly arranged by the vicar of St. James, the Rev. H. Joy Browne, and the Evangelization Society was asked to send down one of their agents to conduct their services. This request was very kindly complied with, and William Taylor was sent.

Much prayer had been offered previously, that we might have a pentecostal shower, and He who is rich in mercy to all that call upon Him, granted us far more than we asked or thought.

On the first evening of these meetings, a large number gathered together. No special blessing, however, was manifested that night, so that when our friend prayed, "may the Lord save a hundred souls in this room before the week is out," unbelief whispered, "Can this thing be?" The numbers attending the meetings increased night after night, until the last, when there was scarcely standing room. Over 600 packed into a room built to contain 400. A large proportion of working men were present.

The second evening came, and ere it closed we had gracious tokens that God, even our own God, was about to bless us. The Lord enabled his servant to speak with great power. Numbers, night after night, pressed into the inquirers' room, deeply anxious to obtain rest for their troubled souls. And then began a work which angels might have envied; the work of pointing these weary, burdened ones to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." And who shall describe the joy that filled the hearts of God's children, as, one after another, these weary ones were able to rest upon the finished work of Jesus.

The whole course of these proceedings was marked by a complete absence of noisy excitement, and yet there was a mighty conflict going on. The enemy of souls was there, struggling hard to retain his captives, and forcing them to resist the loving appeals to surrender to the King. In some cases this struggle went on all the week, until at last, wearied and miserable, the helpless captives cried, "Lord save or we perish," and the King heard and set them free.

At the close of the last meeting, an invitation was given to all who had received Christ during the week to attend a special tea-meeting to be held two days later. Seventy-nine accepted the invitation, though many others were unavoidably absent. It was a remarkable gathering; the friends who had been privileged to point them to Jesus were there to meet them. Praise, joy, and love, seemed to fill every heart and shone in every face. Loving words of sympathy, counsel, and encouragement were uttered by the ministers of the parish, mingled with the voice of prayer and praise. It was indeed an affecting occasion, a foretaste of that blessed time when the redeemed shall sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

"VOICES."

ISAIAH LXVI. 6.

A voice of noise from the city,
From its haunts of sin and pain;
The groan of a mighty multitude,
Oh, shall they plead in vain?
A voice of the little children,
Beginning their life-long woe;
A voice of the lonely dying
Not knowing where they go.
Oh, silently appealing,
Is the cry of that mighty throng,
That voice of noise from the city,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice from the midst of the temple,
A voice of doubt and fear,
"How long shall evil triumph?
O God the Father hear."
A voice of wide-spread error,
A voice of those that say,
"There should be wider entrance
To this too 'narrow way.'"
A voice of the plenteous harvest,
That few men go to reap,
Though the enemy's softly sowing
Whilst the weary watchers sleep.
So through the lonely waiting
Of these years of care and wrong,
That ceaseless voice from the temple,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice of the Lord that speaketh
To those who watch and wait;
Toil on a little longer,
His step is at the gate,
See how the shadows lengthen,
Athwart the evening sky;
Lift up your heads, O children!
Your redemption draweth nigh;
And through the unknown distance,
In an echo deep and strong,
Is the voice of the Lord proclaiming,
"I will not tarry long."

THE GIPSIES.

Some five-and-twenty years ago, about seventy families of gipsies were encamped on the outskirts of one of the western suburbs of London. Some ladies residing in the neighbourhood, under the impression that this despised race were not so unapproachable for good as had been generally supposed, determined to visit them, and endeavour to instil some religious principle into their minds. They were rewarded by finding some of them willing to listen to the word of God, and thankful for their kind words of advice and instruction.

Two or three years later, a city missionary was appointed to the adjoining district, and afterwards a second. They followed up more systematically the work so auspiciously commenced by the ladies. Several of the women were convinced of the error of their ways, and abandoned fortune-telling, and other disreputable means of gaining their livelihood. In after-years, the tribe came under the influence of the various reformatory institutions which were established in the locality, and many gipsies have become true, sincere, and faithful followers of Christ.

It has been customary to invite them once a year to an entertainment, when, after partaking of a substantial repast, they have been addressed by friends who were acquainted with their mode of life. The twentieth anniversary was lately held. When we remembered the wretched condition of the locality, and the people who occupied it, twenty-five years ago, and now listened to some of the very same people earnestly entreating their comrades to turn to the Lord, and find that peace which they themselves had secured through faith in Christ Jesus, we were constrained to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" The closing address was delivered by a woman, who, at our first acquaintance, was gaining her livelihood by all manner of fraud and deceit, but is now a true Christian, and self-constituted missionary to her people.

A WORK OF GRACE AT BOGNOR.

God has begun a glorious work in Bognor. The death-like slumber that has for so many years prevailed in the town is at an end.

In November last the evangelical ministers and congregations assembled together, to hear from Mr. T. D. Marshall an account of the Oxford meetings, and an address on scriptural holiness and personal consecration to God. It was a heart-searching time, and several yielded themselves wholly to Jesus.

The next day a united prayer-meeting was commenced, and nightly evening cottage and drawing-room meetings have been held, in which all denominations have taken part, and in which definite, believing prayer has been offered, that the Christians of the town may be "filled with the Spirit," and that souls may be converted in every house in the town. These meetings have been greatly blessed.

On the 13th ult. Messrs. Opie Rodway and Somerset Mr. Marshall) consecration meetings for believers every Gardner commenced a series of services, holding (with afternoon, and preaching nightly in the Assembly-rooms and the different places of worship. The mighty power of the Spirit of God rested on and accompanied the labours of his servants. Scores were aroused, and went into the inquiry-rooms for conversation every night. At the end of a week, a meeting was arranged for the converts and the awakened, and about 300 persons of all classes and ages applied for tickets. There is great joy in the town. The proprietor of one of the principal houses of business closed his shop an hour earlier every night, that his assistants might attend the services, and has had the joy of seeing the whole of his household—among them two of his daughters—brought to the Saviour.

The work has only commenced. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN praise and pray that now the streams of blessing may deepen, and widen, and flow out to all the country round? "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

THE FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.

Dear Sir,—I have to report that, in answer to the appeal made in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN and elsewhere for the relief of the sufferers in Asia Minor, I have already received the sum of £500. I have therefore placed myself in communication with the Ottoman Consul-General; and finding that a committee, composed of the Hon. George Boker (United States Ambassador at Constantinople), Sir Philip Francis (British Consul-general and Judge), and A. Le Bat, Esq. (banker), were diligently at work distributing funds subscribed from other quarters, I entrusted them with £400 on account.

I find that, through the energy and devotion of our countryman, George Crawshaw, Esq. (who commenced the relief fund by his own gift of £500), arrangements have been made not only for the establishment of the above central committee, but also for the application, by telegraph, of whatever sums might be raised in this country; and altogether I felt well assured that the money subscribed would reach the starving people economically and promptly.

The effect of the energetic means employed by our countryman and others has been to rouse the Turkish Government to some sense of the responsibilities devolving upon them; and they are now endeavouring to check the famine. But in spite of all that they can do, and all that we can do, the mortality will be very great. Last winter, about 10,000 persons perished through the famine. This winter it is hoped that there may not be quite so many deaths; but the number, at best, will be frightful. In some districts matters are even getting worse, and all the attendants of famine, as disease and insanity, are sadly increasing.

Owing to the apathy or incapacity of one of the principal provincial governors, no effectual provision was made last year for saving seed-corn; but he has been superseded, and another governor appointed, who is taking active steps to avert a recurrence of the calamity, if possible. The Sultan has given some pecuniary aid to the sufferers, and about 8000 overcoats; for deep falls of snow, in some districts, have added to the miseries of the starving people. The editor of the Levant Herald and several of the American missionaries have nobly exerted themselves on behalf of the poor sufferers. But the need of more aid is very urgent. From a number of local reports I may quote one sentence. "Think of a strong man going down to the grave day by day by slow but sure steps, and all because he cannot get a few shillings with which to buy bread. Can any torture be worse than this? And yet tens of thousands of old men and women, of young men and maidens, and little children, are to-day suffering this very torture."

I shall be glad to remit any further sums that may be entrusted to me.—Yours truly,
JOSEPH BECK.

DAILY TEXTS.

"YE SEE YOUR CALLING, BRETHREN."—1 COR. I. 26.

Thurs. March 4.—"Them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called (to be) saints." "Not many mighty, not many noble, are called." "As He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation."—1 Cor. i. 2, 26; 1 Pet. i. 15.

Fri. 5.—"I have called thee by thy name; thou art Mine." "Thou shalt be called Hephzibah [my delight is in her] and thy land Beulah." "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God."—Isa. xlii. 1, lxii. 4; 1 John iii. 1.

Sat. 6.—"Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." "Wherefore give diligence to make your calling and election sure." "Whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified, them He also glorified."—Ephes. iv. 1; 2 Pet. i. 10; Rom. viii. 30.

Sun. 7.—Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." "By whom ye were called to the fellowship of His Son."—Heb. iii. 1; 1 Cor. i. 9.

Mon. 8.—"God hath called us to peace." "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body." "The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal kingdom and glory, by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you."—1 Cor. vii. 15; Col. iii. 15; 1 Pet. v. 10.

Tues. 9.—"Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty, only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." "For even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps." "Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing, knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing."—Gal. v. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 21, iii. 9.

Wed. 10.—"Art thou called, being a servant?" "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends." "They that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful."—1 Cor. vii. 20, 21; John xv. 15; Rev. xvii. 14.

"BLESSED ARE THEY THAT ARE CALLED TO THE MARRIAGE SUPPER OF THE LAMB."—REV. XIX. 9.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

The following are the subjects and speaker for the first week in March:—

DATE.	SUBJECT.	SPEAKER.
Mon. 1.	To-day, to-day! (Heb. iv. 7).	Rev. F. Tucker.
Tues. 2.	Neglected opportunity (Phil. iv. 10; Eccles. xi. 6).	W. Gibson.
Wed. 3.	"Prepare ye the way of the Lord" (Luke iii. 4).	Dr. McAulane.
Th. 4.	Suffer yourselves to be defrauded (2 Thess. i. 6, 7; Jas. v. 9).	Mr. R. C. Morgan.
Fri. 5.	"The refuge of lies" (Isa. xxviii. 16, 17).	Rev. Richard Roberts.
Sat. 6.	Unity (Psa. cxxxiii. 1).	Capt. Hon. R. Moreton.

A young man writes:—"As one who has been blessed and refreshed at the Young Men's Prayer-meeting held in Moorgate-street Hall, on Friday evenings at eight o'clock, I would add my humble testimony to the blessedness of that meeting, and the great work it will inevitably accomplish, by drawing together and binding into a compact band of workers the Christian young men of this great city. I am happy to state that every meeting has been better attended than the previous one, which I attribute to the notices you have so kindly inserted."

The secretary writes:—"The meeting is bringing together a large number of Christians (from different houses of business in the City) who are interested in the spiritual welfare of their fellow young men."

GOOD NEWS FROM SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Our eight days' Mission is over. It has been a most blessed time, and has far exceeded our most sanguine expectations. The Mission clergy were partly from other dioceses, and partly from our own. All were blessed in their work. The field seemed to be everywhere white, though not all alike abundant, and every labourer had his measure of reward. They had different modes of procedure, but the majority invited inquirers to remain; and in several churches from 200 to 300 saw and conversed with the Mission clergy in the course of the week. The results have been, considerable additions to the congregations, a great quickening of the Christian people, and of the clergy, and the salvation of many souls. Many believers, too, appear to have obtained a peace and joy they were not before possessed of. With all this, no excitement—a grave, earnest seriousness.

In one parish fifty working-men gave themselves to the Lord; in another fifty persons requested to be confirmed. In the same parish the school-children have been remarkably impressed, and also some girls of sixteen to eighteen, of hitherto hopeless character, who were in a reformatory. There have been weeks of prayerful preparation, and many diligent visitors. The first lady who opened her drawing-room for a prayer-meeting has received a blessing in the conversion of her daughter. Two young men have given themselves to the ministry. Altogether, we have been greatly blessed, and desire to be very thankful, and to profit thereby.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER. A Biblical and Educational Magazine.—A valuable help and companion to the thoughtful and earnest teacher. There is solid instruction for himself, and a variety of outline lessons and suggestions of new lines of thought, which may safely guide him in attempting more thorough and profitable work with his classes.

THE LAY PREACHER. A Miscellany of Helps for the Study, Pulpit, Platform, and School. Edited by the Rev. JAMES E. HARGREAVES and Rev. JOSEPH S. EXELL. New Series. Stock.—The first volume of this work under its new editorship. It contains a large amount of excellent matter, calculated to impart inspiration to thought and stimulus to research. The articles are mostly by ministers and leading lay-preachers of all denominations.

ALONE WITH GOD. By A. S. ORMSBY, Author of "The 'I Ams' of Christ." Yapp and Hawkins.—A good book for the busy, restless times in which our lot is cast, and into the spirit of which even the children of God so easily drift. The author takes the reader into perplexity, into sickness, into the mount of intercession, into the cleft of the rock, to see the salvation of God, into the broad field of testimony for God, and speaks as only one speaks who has proved the secret treasures of calm, peace, and power to be found "alone with God." May there be more ambitious seekers after this hid treasure!

THE OXFORD MUSIC HALL.—On Sunday evening last, the large hall and gallery were quite full, about 2500 persons being present. After a hymn had been sung, the Earl of Shaftesbury read 2 Cor. v. Mr. Russell Hurditch preached from "I have a message from God unto thee." At the close of a deeply solemn service an after-meeting was held in the side room, where many inquirers were found, and several professed to receive salvation.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—The pastor and church of the Congregational Church, Great Boughton, Chester, request praise for a good work now in progress in their midst, and prayer for a richer blessing on efforts yet to be put forth.—Will you earnestly thank and praise God for sending a faithful minister into a parish in Worcestershire, in answer to prayer?

PRAYER.—For a Bible-class of young men, which is in danger of being broken up.—On behalf of a beloved wanderer, that God may, in infinite mercy and love, watch over her, and bring her back to her sorrowing family, and, above all, to Himself.—For a minister in the prime of life, but laid aside for many months past, owing to nervous debility and physical weakness.—For a gentleman, who is suffering torture from neuralgia, that God may heal him, and reveal Himself unto him.—For an influential man of nearly eighty years, who has lived without Christ in hardness and rebellion, but who is now under affliction through the dangerous illness of his aged wife, who has recently found peace in Jesus.—For a servant of God, going on an evangelizing tour to Holland and Germany. Ask the Lord to use him as his messenger.

PLACES.—That an evangelist and fitting minister may be appointed to a small Cornish parish, surrounded by Ritualism.—For a Mission-week in Sittingbourne, from March 7 to 15.—Will the thousands of God's Israel who read THE CHRISTIAN unite to plead with God, in Christ's name, for a revival of the doctrine of holiness among ministers and members of all the different churches in Malbourne, which contains a population of more than 200,000 souls? Also for multitudes who never enter God's house.—For services by Mr. Henry Holloway at the Theatre Gospel-hall, Derby.—For services to be held in three country parishes in Suffolk by W. W. Martin, of the Evangelization Society, March 7 to 15.—For Exeter, that God would send one or more of His honoured servants there to lift up Christ.—For a blessing on five evangelistic services and gospel addresses given lately at East Dereham.—For special blessing on an evangelistic, undenominational Mission at Christ Church, Exeter, from Feb. 23 to March 7, to be conducted by H. M. Barnett, pastor of St. John's Free Church, Southampton.

—For a parish where the word of God is fully and faithfully preached, but where the people are cold and careless, set God at nought, and despise His Sabbaths.—For the parish and infant-schools of Biddulph Moor, Congleton, Cheshire.—For services at Oldham, being held this week by Rev. W. H. M. H. Arden, Mr. Shuldham Henry, and Dr. Mackay, of Hull.—For blessing on the young men's meetings in Prince of Wales Theatre, Glasgow.—For Ruyton, Wilcott, and Donaston Independent Chapels, Salop, that God would revive His work, and bless the ministry of the pastor.—For the parish of St. Michael's, Gloucester, where the Rev. W. Bradbury is labouring for a while, and conducting special services.—For special services at the Town-hall, Brighton, March 7.—For a small village in Norfolk.—For a series of meetings being held in Wilson Church, Dundee, from Feb. 23 to March 7.

CONVERSIONS.—For five brothers and two sisters.—For an uncle and cousin, both sadly given to intemperance.—For five grown-up ungodly children of Christian parents.—For a brother who is abroad, and exposed to great temptation.—For an officer; he has been for years a sceptic.—For a young man, who, through affliction and losses, is giving way to intemperance.—For a young man, who has been led away by bad companions, and is a slave to drink.—For my brother, who has been a great gambler, and is now very ill. He has been the subject of prayer for thirty years.—For two young men, one of them grievously addicted to the love of strong drink.—For a son, who seems to be in almost a hopeless state through drink.—That the wife of a Christian officer may be brought to Christ.

FORTHCOMING SPECIAL MEETINGS.

The Christian.

SELF-DENIAL.

MY BELOVED BRETHREN,—The deep need there is of self-denial, if the Church of Christ is to carry on with power the blessing it is now receiving from the Lord, has been pressed on my heart for this last year. The requirements of the present day, now that the world has been opened out, demand money as well as men for all extension of the gospel in foreign lands. The increasing poverty and misery in our large cities at home call for increased liberality from Christians who enjoy competence, and are, by God's great mercy, beyond the reach of need.

The present glory of the Lord Jesus in the world, and their own individual eternal glory, depend, in a great measure, on the self-denial of his people. I have been waiting these last few years for some articles in THE CHRISTIAN on this first duty of every follower of the Lord Jesus. A subject so practical, of such importance to the Church and the world, and which occupies so marked a position in the Lord's plainest commands, deserves the earnest consideration of every Christian.

"Let him deny himself." Deny self! "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself" (Luke ix. 23). Thus spoke the Lord Jesus. What his words mean is best explained by his own conduct: "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men" then "the death of the cross" (Phil. ii. 6). "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. viii. 9). This explains the words, "Let him deny himself." This was the example of the Lord Jesus. This is what He demands from each of his disciples. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me" (Luke ix. 23; Matt. xvi. 24; Mark viii. 34). Self-denial is personal negation, deprivation of personal ease, comfort, enjoyment, pleasure, for the good of others.

Fellow-Christians, has not the Church of Christ for the most part forgotten this injunction to self-denial? This is a deeply solemn subject. I know the Lord will judge me for this article. I am not thinking of man's criticism, but I expect His; and I write as in his presence, in the spirit of liberty.

Is self-denial practised by Christians of the well-to-do classes in Great Britain? Wherein are they denying themselves? Self must be denied, deprived, humbled, impoverished, for the Lord Jesus' sake. There is otherwise no self-denial. Are we doing this? Am I doing this? Oh, my brethren and sisters in Christ, forgive plain writing! Forgive what I must write, if by any means I can stir up others to deny themselves more, that so a more abundant entrance may be ministered to them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

What is self-denial? Is it any self-denial for a Christian who has £10,000 a year to give £5000, £6000, or £7000 a year to the Lord? No; he touches not himself. He can enjoy all his luxuries on the balance. He has no right either to hoard or waste £7000. If he believes that the coming of the Lord is near, or that He will provide for his children, he will not dare either to hoard or waste such a sum. He will "occupy" with it. There is no self-denial in his giving what he can afford to give, without personal inconvenience.

What is self-denial? The Lord Jesus has taught us by word as well as by example. "Fear not, little flock... Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves a treasure in the heavens that faileth not" (Luke xii. 32, 33). We are instructed by the example of the first converts, who, acting under the mighty impulse of the Holy Ghost, "sold their possessions and goods" (Acts ii. 45). "As many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices" (Acts iv. 34).

The Lord's exhortation, and His own and the Spirit-led converts' example, still hold good. But the state of that which is called the Church has changed. The grain of mustard-seed has become a tree. The fowls of the air, unclean birds, call themselves Christians, and lodge in the branches of this tree. Considering this, and remembering that God's Word commands a needful provision for our own, I do not believe that the Lord demands all from his servants in these last days. I do, however, believe and maintain that He does demand, as a requirement and test of discipleship, comparative poverty and careful self-denial from every one who comes after Him. I do believe that selling or parting with all unnecessary or superfluous wealth is binding on every Christian. I cannot believe that any who hoard their wealth can be blessed in themselves and their children. "Covetousness is idolatry."

Lord, help me to write! Thou knowest the heart. Thou knowest that there is a need for thy servants in these last days to stir up their brethren to self-denial. Thou knowest that I have long waited to see this first of thy demands brought forward in conferences and journals dedicated to thy gospel, and I have waited in vain. And now, Lord, lest I make this writing void, lest Satan tempt the reader to say, "Hast thou done this?" I must testify to the constraining power of thy love and grace. Forgive me, O Lord, wherein I may sin against Thee!

By mistake, an appeal was made in my name to THE CHRISTIAN for funds. I only requested that prayer might be asked. I repeat my request. I am going with the name of Jesus into as dark a part of heathendom as any in Africa. Pray that, in the name of Jesus, every knee shall bow. That mistake has led to my writing these lines. I would not make any claim on the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for funds, as I consider the claims of Miss Macpherson's, Miss De Broen's, Dr. Barnardo's, Mr. McAll's, and other Missions, far before my own. I would not take one penny from them, or from the Mission Training Institution, at Stepney. I have friends who, if they sympathize with me in the Lord's work, and will exercise the very least self-denial, can easily supply all my need. The Lord gives them this opportunity of serving Him by me, if they will.

But doubtless many who have read that request for help have read also my experience as a soldier.* They would have noticed that, some years ago, I inherited certain property. They would ask, "Why need he appeal for help?" If I now had the property I inherited, I could build schools all over Kaffraria. But the Lord had need of a good part of it. How could I deny myself if I kept from the Lord what I did not need? How could I possess this world's goods to an extent beyond my immediate requirements, and deny help to my own family, to the perishing poor at home, and the perishing heathen abroad, and be a faithful follower of the Lord Jesus?

Because I want a few hundred pounds now for the Lord's work, is that any reason why I should have kept back from the service of his gospel as many thousands for years past? Surely if you say yes, you have never yet taken account with the Lord in view of his judgment on your stewardship. Your pound is his, not yours.

The Lord permits me to write plainly. "Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and men-servants, and maid-servants?" No. "The time is short; it remaineth that they that buy be as though they possessed not" (1 Cor. vii. 30). We are commanded to exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Suffer, therefore, the word of exhortation. I have tasted all the pleasures of sin, and I have enjoyed all the better, holier, earthly delights; but I can testify from experience that there is no pleasure to be equalled to that of a Christian of comparatively small means laying hundreds and thousands of pounds of capital at the feet of Jesus. There is no joy deeper or sweeter than that which follows in the lifelong deprivation, "I cannot do this or that; I cannot be as my rich neighbour, because I have impoverished myself for Jesus' sake." Life cannot yield any truer pleasure than this to the disciple of Christ, and I humbly and affectionately exhort all who can to taste it.

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." "It is a faithful saying; for if we be dead with Him, we shall also live with Him." If we realize our death with Him, we shall also realize our life with Him. Looking at our wealth and possessions from the light of his glory, they become dross, and we esteem all we can give Him as less than nothing, and ourselves as unprofitable servants, when we have done all that we could.

Oh for a return of those glorious days when there was not any in the Church of Christ that said that "aught of the things he possessed was his own." Taught by the Holy Ghost, they acknowledged that they were Christ's, and their possessions his. Filled with the Holy Ghost, for the service of Christ they sold lands and possessions. When shall the first love again restore to the Church a single eye to the glory of Christ? When shall self-denial in personal expenditure mark the members of that body which should be without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing? When shall denial of self for Jesus' sake be the brightest ornament of a Christian? When shall Christ be seen to reign as King in the midst of his people? "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me."

A case of self-denial was mentioned during the Mildmay Park Conference, 1873. A poor woman lived on rice for weeks to save five shillings to give to some mission. Blessed sister, I thanked thee then, and I thank thee now, for thy encouragement and example. Thou hast climbed high up the lovely mountain of self-denial. I own myself a tumbler at the bottom. But I think of thee, and think of Jesus, and pray to Him, and take courage.

There is deep need for a revival of self-denial in these last days. There is much doctrine, much delightful truth taught, but are the life and practice up to the light received? Most earnestly would I remind those who are privileged to feast together on the delicacies of God's Word in all the fascination and delight of Christian intercourse at home, that that is not real consecration which is not based on self-denial. The consecration must begin with the offering up of personal comfort and ease, of wealth and possessions.

Well-to-do Christians in Great Britain and America must look at their tables. Can they not meet to enjoy a plain meal, and give the best part of the evening to God's Word and prayer, instead of to eating? The Lord is judging their luxury. Many are weak and sickly. What right has any Christian to have money to spend on luxury? Ought we not to keep up our position in society? No, no, no! Not in this world's society. Had the Lord Jesus kept up his position in society, He would have remained in heaven and you would have gone to hell. But He gave up his position, equal with God, and for your sakes became poor even unto death. He says to all who will come after Him, "Let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow Me." "The beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."—Your brother in Him. C. H. MALAN.

"AS THOU ART."

No spot, no stain, in all Thy wondrous beauty,
No cloud upon the summer of Thy love,
No ruffle on the ocean of Thy goodness;
Faithful and true, for evermore, above.

No spot, no stain, in all Thy wondrous beauty,
No shadow on the sunshine of Thy face,
No ebb or flow in all Thy loving-kindness;
Nothing but truth, and sympathy, and grace.

No spot, no stain, in all Thy wondrous beauty,
No waning in Thy clear, unshadowed light;
Nothing but sweetness, infinite, eternal,
And love, which holds us ever by its might.

No change, no shade, in what Thou art, Lord Jesus;
Thou art to us as Thou hast ever been:
Oh teach these wondering hearts to sing Thy praises,
And on Thine arm of strength for ever lean!

'Tis thus we see Thee when, from off our faces,
Falleth the veil of unbelief and sin,
Revealing Thee in Thine own changeless beauty,
Of these poor hearts the Comforter and King.

For Thou art with us in this world of sadness,
Thy presence is unutterably sweet,
And life is filled with sunshine and with fragrance,
Since in Thyself all joy and fragrance meet.

Entrance my spirit with Thy love, Lord Jesus, Unfolding its infinitude of might;
As at Thy feet I bow, and, veiled, worship,
Make known to me its length, and breadth, and height.

For in its ocean-tide of grace and fulness,
No want, no fear, no poverty, is mine;
My Father tells me, and I know He means it,
"All that My well-beloved hath is thine!"

MR. MOODY AND MR. SANKEY.—II.

BY E. W. DALE, BIRMINGHAM.

Almost invariably the preaching was followed by an after-meeting. Cards of admission to the

had been distributed among the ministers who co-operated with the movement, to be given by them to ladies and gentlemen to whom they could entrust the duty of conversing with persons agitated by religious anxiety, and needing sympathy and advice. The intention of this arrangement was to prevent inquirers from being left in the hands of unwise and incompetent people. How many of these cards were distributed I do not know; in my own church I gave away between a dozen and a score, and it was pleasant to me to see many of my friends at their work night after night. The arrangement broke down. The number of persons who remained for the after-meeting was so large, that a general appeal had to be made again and again to Christian people in the congregation to give their help. Some responded who had more enthusiasm than good sense. But notwithstanding this, the results of the after-meeting were extraordinary. I have already spoken of the number of persons with whom I conversed myself, to whom, while I was conversing with them, the light came which springs from the discovery of God's love and power, and from the acceptance of his will as the law of life. Testimony after testimony has reached me from converts, to whom the same light came while conversing with others. "I went up into the gallery," said one young man to me, a day or two ago, "and Mr. Sankey walked up and down with me, and talked to me as though he had been my own father, and I found Christ."

The preaching without the after-meeting would not have accomplished one-fifth of the results. It was in the quiet, unexciting talk with individuals that the impressions produced by Mr. Moody's addresses issued in a happy trust in Christ, and a clear decision to live a Christian life. The galleries were a beautiful sight. Mr. Moody's quaint directions were almost universally followed: "Let the young men talk to the young men, the maidens to the maidens, the elder women to the elder women, and the elder men to the elder men." Cultivated young ladies were sitting or standing with girls of their own age, sometimes with two or three together, whose eager faces indicated the earnestness of their desire to understand how they were to lay hold of the great blessing which they seemed to be touching, but could not grasp. Young men were talking to lads, some of their own social position, others with black hands and rough clothes, which were suggestive of gun-making, and rolling-mills, and brass-foundries. Ladies of refinement were trying to make the truth clear to women whose worn faces and poor dress told of the hardships of their daily life. Men of business, local politicians, were at the same work with men of forty and fifty years of age. And there was the brightness of hope and faith in the tone, and manner, and bearing of nearly all of them. Christian people who want to know the real nature of the work of our American brethren, and to catch its spirit, should take care to spend a few hours at the after-meeting. If they go twice, they will find it hard to keep away.

Separate arrangements were made for those of the young men who preferred an after-meeting of their own. A Presbyterian church in the neighbourhood of the hall was thrown open for them, and the attendance was generally very large. Mr. Moody does not approve of the publication of the number of persons who have declared that they have been led to begin a Christian life as the result of these services, and I therefore do not feel at liberty to publish in these pages the information on this point which is in my possession. A week after he had left us, he returned to hold a farewell meeting for converts and inquirers. Ministers sat at the office of the Young Men's Christian Association to receive applications for tickets from both these classes of persons. In every case I believe that there was personal conversation with the applicants. Their names and addresses were registered, and the congregations with which they were already connected, or with which they intended to connect themselves. One hundred and twenty names have been sent to me of persons who are already attendants at Carr's-lane, or who mean to attend there. These include eighty-five professed converts, and thirty-five persons who have been awakened to religious earnestness, but who cannot say that they have rest of heart in Christ. The large majority of them, so far as I have been able at present to analyze the list, are working people, and most of them young men and women. In some cases the young men told me that they had been in the habit of swearing and using bad language up to the night when the truth came to them.

"And never since then?" I have asked.

They smiled, as though I had asked a very unnecessary question, and answered, "Never, sir."

And when I talked to them about their conduct at home to their parents, and about their temper, it still seemed that I was going over ground that they had already gone over for themselves: "Things don't put me about now, sir, as they used," was the answer of a rough boy of seventeen or eighteen.

I heard through a friend, that a manufacturer, who had a violent temper, and who had been accustomed to swear a great deal at his men, was suddenly so much changed that the men noticed it, and, of course, inferred that he had been to "Moody;" for a whole week they tried, "for the fun of it," to get him to swear at them again, but failed.

I heard of another case that was very sad. A poor girl came to one of the meetings and was deeply impressed; when she got home, her father, who was half drunk, insisted on knowing where she had been, and when she told him, he was in a great rage and violently abused her. She bore this quietly, and went to bed. The neighbours, however, got to know it, and the next morning, as she went to work, they hooted at her and chaffed her in the street. When she reached the shop where she is employed, her shopmates began to tease her and annoy her; she bore it a long time, but at last gave way and turned upon them in a burst of passion, and poured out on them a torrent of curses. The deepest remorse came upon the poor girl, and she thought that it was impossible for her to be recovered from her fall. I have no doubt that the Christian lady who is caring for her told her of one who though he denied Christ with oaths and curses was forgiven, and restored to all the honours and joys of his apostleship.

The effect of this work has extended beyond those who were present at the services; and very much of the good that has been effected is never likely to be known. Since I began to write this paper, a son of one of the members of my own church, a lad of seventeen, came to me and said he wished to enter the church. I talked to him for a few minutes, and took for granted that Mr. Moody's services had led him to religious decision. He had all the brightness and joyousness which I have come to regard as characteristic of the typical "Moody convert." I asked him which of the services had had the greatest effect on him, and he said that his business engagements had prevented him from going to any of them. "How was it, then," I asked, "that you came to trust in Christ?" "Well, sir," he said, "I could not go to the meetings, but I heard a great deal of what these two gentlemen were doing, and I came to the conclusion that they could not be doing it themselves, but that God must be doing it; and then I came to see that I could look to God myself and get all the good."

Some of the most remarkable results of the visit of our American friends are to be found, perhaps, among those who have long been members of Christian churches. I hardly know how to describe the change which has passed over them. It is like the change which comes upon a landscape when clouds which have been hanging over it for hours suddenly vanish, and the sunlight seems to fill both heaven and earth. There is a joyousness, and an elasticity of spirit, and a hopefulness, which have completely transformed them; and the transformation shows itself in the unostentatious eagerness with which they are taking up Christian work.

If I thought it worth while, I could speak of some things in this work which are not to my taste, and some things which my judgment disapproves. But, before Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey came to Birmingham, I had arrived at the conclusion that what was said of the early evangelists at Antioch was the truest account of the work of these American evangelists in Scotland and Ireland—"The hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." This conviction has been deepened and confirmed by all that I have seen of them. When Whitefield and Wesley were renewing the religious life of England, there were learned, orthodox, and devout ministers who were distressed by "The Decay of the Dissenting Interest," and the low state of religion throughout the country, there were ministers who had written pamphlets on these subjects in the hope of re-awakening in the Christian churches of that time the faith and zeal of earlier and better days, but who regarded Whitefield and Wesley with a distrust like that with which Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey are now regarded by some excellent people. The very objections which are urged against Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were urged against the leaders of the great evangelical revival which saved England from sinking into atheism. The result was inevitable; these ministers and their churches missed the blessing for which they had been longing and praying. When "the power of God" is with men who preach what we acknowledge to be the great truths of the gospel, it is surely our clear duty to co-operate with them heartily and frankly. If in their methods, and if in their very conception of Christian truth and the Christian life, there are some things which we cannot accept, these may surely be borne with, and even forgotten. Those men especially who are in the habit of insisting on "breadth" of sympathy with all in whom there is genuine Christian earnestness, and who are always saying that rigid accuracy in doctrinal definitions is of inferior importance to a living faith in Christ, ought to be able to rise above the kind of objections which seem likely to alienate some of them from this work.

It is possible that, in some places, our American visitors may not achieve the kind of success which has hitherto followed them. Before they came to Birmingham, I felt very doubtful whether they would accomplish here what they had accomplished in Dublin and Belfast. I believe they will accomplish very little in any place where they are not sustained by the hearty sympathy of Christian people, and where Christian churches do not earnestly entreat God to manifest in connection with their work the transcendent greatness of his power and love. There were people among whom our Lord Himself "could do no mighty works, because of their unbelief."—Congregationalist.

MISSION SERVICES AT MORLEY, LEEDS.—Very successful Mission-services have this week been held in Morley, conducted by the Rev. J. James, Congregational minister. The evening meetings have been well attended, and very impressive sermons preached by Revs. E. H. Davies, J. H. Stanley, A. A. Ramsey, and J. Gregory, and Messrs. Mathews and Thorne. Mr. James has also visited and held mid-day services at a number of the cloth mills with which the town abounds, where the people have mustered in large numbers every day, in some cases all hands, with the masters, being present. These services have been highly appreciated both by the masters and work-people, and every possible kindness manifested in making the necessary arrangements for the accommodation of the work-people at the services. That much good has been done, both in the several churches, and among those who do not regularly attend any place of public worship, is already manifest by the increased attendance and interest in divine worship, and the number of men and women inquiring what they must do to be saved.

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

I WAS glad to see, in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN, an appeal to Christian ladies to dispose of their jewellery for the carrying out the printing of two millions of tracts, in connection with Mr. Moody's proposed visit to London. The writer of the article had realized fifty pounds by the sale of some of her own jewellery. Ten people following her example would raise a sum sufficient for this important object.

Mrs. Ranyard, in her last valuable work, "Nurses for the Needy," says, "People of all incomes walk in velvet, and lace, and furs, whose price was once considered only to befit high station. Our whole nation is become luxurious, and it is shown in the tone of common dress and showy costume, adopted alas! from the model of those who only glitter to destroy. Everything is in vogue that is unnatural, extravagant, and false. False gold! False pearls! False hair!"

"We sent home yesterday," says a fashionable shopkeeper, "a mantle, whose price was one hundred guineas."

Think what that hundred guineas would have done in the abodes of poverty this winter. Let us turn back one page in Mrs. Ranyard's book and see the reverse of the picture.

"In a cellar, where to recognize us, the poor mother was obliged to light a feeble little lamp, I saw, lying on a miserable bed, a man in the last stage of consumption. He was a French refugee, and his wife, an Englishwoman, wept at his pillow, with a baby in her arms, and two other children by her side. Poor little ones, living in gloom and silence in this asylum of suffering and destitution, all smiles had fled from their faces. The sick father, frightfully meagre, with long black hair and beard, hollow eyes, and face ashy pale, made us understand with signs (he was too feeble to speak) how hard he found his bed; a terrible pestiferous ulcer caused him cruel pain."

This is but one of a thousand cases to be found in this great city. Now Christ calls on Christian women to go and relieve all these sick and destitute ones. Oh, hear his voice to-day; harden not your hearts. The shades of evening are setting in, soon will the midnight chimes be heard, when the last opportunity to serve such a gracious Master will have gone for ever, and oh, what weeping will there be from thousands who when He called, did not hear. "Surely I come quickly."

TO EVANGELISTS AND VISITORS TO LONDON during the present month.—It is proposed to hold a great open-air meeting on Clerkenwell-green, on Good Friday, 28th inst., at eleven in the morning. Any preachers of the gospel who will come and help will be heartily welcomed. Please communicate with William Catlin, 55, Amwell-street, Clerkenwell.

HYMN-BOOKS ("SONGS AND SOLOS").—I am often favoured with bits of intelligence that make one's heart rejoice. I will just relate one. A cabinet-maker, whom I have known for ten years as an earnest Christian fellow, came this week to buy four penny "Songs." He said, "These are for four of my shop-mates. Until last month, they were drunkards and blasphemers of the worst kind. I gave them tickets for the service at Bingley Hall, Birmingham, on the Sunday morning, for non-work-shippers. They went; now all is changed. Last Friday night," said this man, "one of them asked me to come to his house to read and pray, and give them some advice, as they said I had long been in the good way. They all came, and all offered a short prayer, that God would make them holy men. We have agreed to meet at half-past eight every Friday night; so they told me to get one of Mr. Sankey's hymn-books for each."

OUR FARMERS.—An Independent minister in the county of Shropshire pleads the cause of farmers, and asks if anyone will send him back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, to distribute on market-days, etc., amongst them and their labourers. He adds: "No special effort that I know of is being made to reach them. If you ask, 'Do they need one?' I answer, I am sure they do. Will some of our townspeople try and reach them on market-days, give them suitable tracts, hold meetings for them, etc.? And will all God's people strive together in their prayers for their conversion?"

"SIGNS FOLLOWING."

THE SUBSTANCE OF AN ADDRESS AT THE EAST LONDON TABERNACLE, BY ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

When the first ambassadors of Christ went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord, we are told, worked with them, and "confirmed the word with signs following."

Perhaps there is no greater proof of the decay of faith in the Church of Christ, than the fact that to multitudes "signs following" the preaching of the gospel, instead of confirming the word, only give rise to clouds of doubt and suspicion. When no particular results follow the preaching of a minister for many years, it is never questioned that the man is called of God; but the moment a ministry begins to tell mightily, and hundreds of new-born souls bear witness that God is working with and by a man, then straightway scepticism begins to carp and question, grave warnings are uttered about the evils of excitement and enthusiasm, and we hear whispers of hysteria, delusion, and so forth. A fruitless ministry escapes unchallenged as all right, but a ministry of amazing power for the conversion of souls immediately excites suspicion and opposition! The man whose church is an oasis of empty pews, and to whom is never addressed the cry, What shall I do to be saved? is readily acknowledged an ambassador for Christ; but the man who preaches to thousands of eager hearers, and under whose words men are pricked to the heart and led to repentance by hundreds, that man must expect to be criticised, and suspected, and denounced. If one or two souls are added to a church in the course of a year, that is a work of God; but if one or two scores are converted in one meeting, most people have doubt whether an enemy hath not done this! Oh, horrible, God-dishonouring unbelief, that would limit to the miserable level of what we can understand and account for, the operations of the Almighty! They who expect no signs to follow their preaching shall assuredly see none, for according to their unbelief shall it be to them. But such a course be far from us. Friends, let me show you some reasons why "signs following"—signs of the most glorious character—may be expected to follow a faithful ministry.

THE PRESENT POSITION OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST WARRANTS THE EXPECTATION.

Had Christ remained on the cross, or in the grave, it would have been otherwise; a dead Master could afford no help to his servants. But "being by the right hand of God exalted," and having received of the Father the long promised Holy Ghost, He sheds forth that glorious converting Spirit. He has ascended up on high and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men. Yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God may dwell among them. Shall He not bestow the gifts He has received? If Christ were not alive, or not on the throne of God; if He had not received all power in heaven and in earth; if He did not possess power over all flesh, to give eternal life to all God's elect,—why, then we might indeed despair of seeing any saving results accompany our preaching of the gospel. But when a crucified Christ is preached in the power of a living Christ, then may we expect "signs following." A living Joseph sufficiently accounted for all the wonders Jacob saw; the waggons and the good things of Egypt were no marvel, for Joseph his son was alive and was lord of all the land. But, further:

CHRIST'S PRESENCE AND CO-OPERATION DEMAND OF US THAT WE EXPECT "SIGNS FOLLOWING" the preaching of his gospel. The promise recorded by Matthew, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the age," warrants the expectation—nay, more, makes it a traitorous dishonouring of Christ not to entertain it. Shall disciples, conscious that their mighty, ascended Saviour is working with them, not expect glorious results to follow their labours? If they thought themselves unaided and alone, their expectations could not be too modest; but with an Almighty ally, dare they anticipate less than victory? Did not signs and wonders attend the walk on earth of God manifest in the flesh? If Jesus Christ were to tread our streets to-day, would you wonder to see the blind receive their sight, or the lame man leap as a hart, or the dead spring to life, as He passed along? No, you say, such marvels were only meet indications of his Divine presence. Then, why should we be surprised, or stumbled, when such "signs following" mark the ministry of his servants? If they be true servants, really sent forth by Him; He is in them and with them; He is their fellow-worker; the Lord is "working with them," and we need not marvel if hearts and homes and neighbourhoods are moved and stirred as He passes along. We should expect wonders; for He whose name is Wonderful, He who is mighty to save, is our ally and co-worker. We dishonour Him, if we expect to accomplish but little.

THE VERY PURPOSE FOR WHICH THE GOSPEL WAS SENT INTO THE WORLD

encourages the expectation of signs following its proclamation. Why is the gospel given? Is it sent to enable us pleasantly to occupy an hour or two on a Sunday? Is it given us to sharpen our intellect, and to afford so much pabulum for criticism? Nay verily, the gospel is sent to save. Its mission is to turn men from darkness to light, from the power of Satan to God. What, marvel, then, if it saves? The only marvel is, that it should ever be preached without saving results.

Suppose that, strolling along the shore on a summer's evening, you come on a large boat-house, with its open gable end; its flagstaff with colours flying, and its trim lifeboat inside; you fall into chat with the old sailor on guard, and he begins to spin you a yarn about the good his boat has accomplished. Would you be surprised to hear him say, "Why, sir, one night, when it was blowing a hurricane, she brought off the whole crew of a brig that ran on yonder rocks; and soon after we saved, in her, nine out of ten from another wreck, that went to pieces on that sand-bank over there." Surprised? No! The tale would be just what you expected, for a lifeboat is built expressly to save lives in case of shipwreck. And is not the gospel sent into this world expressly that it may be the power of God unto salvation? Its very nature and object demand that we expect to see blessed, saving results follow its proclamation.

Nor is that all. The promises of God oblige us to expect magnificent "signs following" the promises, not to us, but, higher far, to Christ. God, who cannot lie, will never break a single promise given even to the humblest believer; but this expectation may base itself on a grand covenant engagement made by God the Father with his Son; heaven and earth may pass away ere that promise can fail. In Isaiah xlix. you find the Holy One of Israel saying to Christ, his servant, "Thou shalt be my salvation to the ends of the earth." "Kings shall see and arise, and princes also shall worship." Is it not certain that to Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess? Is it not foretold that "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord," and that "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied"? And have we not the assurance that God's word shall not return unto Him void, but that it shall accomplish his purpose? Why, then, do we not always expect "signs following" to attend a preached gospel?

The analogies of Scripture, too, all point in the same direction. God's servants are likened to soldiers, builders, husbandmen. When soldiers go forth to war, under a great general, we expect to hear of strongholds taken, forts laid low, victories achieved. When a builder sets to his task, we expect to see lofty walls and stately towers arise; if he never advanced beyond the foundation, if days and years rolled by and not one stone was laid upon another, should we not say, "He is no builder; he is a mere idler"? And when the sower has sown his seed, do we wonder to see in due season the fields covered with green blade or yellow corn? Nay, but we should greatly wonder to see them brown and barren.

Shall I be deemed too bold if I add that

SIGNS MAY BE EXPECTED TO FOLLOW IMMEDIATELY?

I say not that they always do, but that they may be expected to do so. God's operations know no limit of time. It is as easy for Him to convert in an hour as in a year; in fact, with the New Testament open before us, we may say, that sudden conversions are the rule, not the exception.

Let not unsuccessful workers chloroform their souls into a state of groundless self-satisfaction, saying, "results are with God," "after many days," and so on. No, let them rather be pained, and grieve, if no fruit appear of their labour. "One soweth and another reapeth," is a text too often twisted till it becomes a fatal opiate for ill-success. It may sometimes be so in the natural world, if the sower be removed by death, or by some other casualty. But do farmers in general sow, in the expectation that other farmers will reap? Not they. They sow, expecting soon to put in the sickle and reap; and little heart would they have for the work of spring, did they not look forward to the harvest of autumn.

Why should we labour without looking for present results? Christ preached to a poor fallen woman living in sin, by the well of Samaria, and ere nightfall she was not only converted, but she had become a missionary to the town in which she lived. The dying thief began the day a guilty and depraved blasphemer; he ended it, not only a convert, but a convert in Paradise with Christ. Saul of Tarsus was breathing out threatenings and slaughter one hour, and the next he was crying, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" We have no warrant in Scripture for doubting sudden conversions, or for despairing of present fruit of our ministry.

But we must never forget that

"SIGNS FOLLOWING" ARE TO BE PRAYED FOR.

Read the early chapters of Acts, and you will see that much continued and united prayer characterized the time when the Lord so marvellously worked with his messengers, and confirmed the word with "signs following." I pity from my heart the preacher who stands up unsustained by the prayers of believers. Poor feeble man! what can he hope to accomplish? No united supplications have ascended on his behalf; no intercessions are upholding him. Depend upon it, it is not always the preacher who is to be blamed for a ministry without saving results. Prayer, and wonders after preaching are inseparable.

And, lastly,

"SIGNS FOLLOWING" ARE TO BE ACKNOWLEDGED.

We must not treat our answers to prayer as Peter was treated. The Church had been praying all night, "Lord, deliver Peter!" And when God graciously answered the prayer, and Peter stood before the gate, and Rhoda said, "Here he is; Peter is come!" no one in the meeting believed her; they let him knock in vain, while they argued the girl was mad, or had seen a ghost. What! did they not expect their prayer to be answered? If Peter had not been delivered that night, it could not have been answered, for Herod meant to kill him next day. They ought to have been looking for a present answer to their prayer, and to have welcomed it with open arms and thanksgiving when it came. A father asks his son what he would like for a wedding gift. The son asks for a silver tea service. The father gives him one. The son takes up one of the articles, and examines it critically, saying, "I very much suspect it is only electro-plate; it doesn't look to me like real silver!" How would you feel if your son so treated you? Let us beware of withholding our grateful acknowledgments when we receive the blessings for which we pray.

I apply this to the present time, and to the expected visit of the American evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey. How long have we been praying God to send a glorious revival? How often have we pleaded with Him to bless the preaching of the gospel to the conversion of thousands? If God be pleased now to open the windows of heaven and pour us down a blessing, how are we going to receive it? With ungrateful questionings and doubtings? or with gratitude and joy?

Much, very much, may depend on the spirit in which we receive these evangelists, and regard their work. Let us banish all unbelief in the power and will of God to grant us marvellous results of blessing as "signs following" their ministry, and let us thankfully and trustfully receive them when granted.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE IN INDIA.

My dear Sir,—In a private letter I have to-day received from the Rev. A. N. Somerville, dated Agra, February, 5, he says:—

"I have now spent sixty-eight days in India; thirty-one were occupied at Calcutta, thirteen at Allahabad, thirteen at Lucknow, five at Cawnpore, two and a-half at Agra. The remaining three and a-half days have been passed in travelling. I have just returned from holding my one hundred and seventieth meeting. It has yielded me profound satisfaction to find that I have been able all along to secure the kind confidence of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Independents, Methodists, etc. I have been much assisted by American brethren, of whom there are many efficient labourers in India. There is a grand and glorious unity, after all, amongst the preachers of Protestant truth. How blessed it is when the disciples of the Great Master are enabled practically to evince that, in holding the doctrine of salvation, they are one, and that, amid all denominational distinctions, they yet love one another.

"My method of procedure in visiting any place, is to request prayer to be made previous to my coming. My first meeting is of a preliminary character. Ministers and Christian friends are invited to attend it, and I explain to them my object and plan of action. I give them to understand that, if the ministers and Christians will yield me their sympathy and co-operation, I shall hope, by God's blessing, to succeed; but, if these are withheld, there will be imminent risk of failure. Wherever I have gone, a daily prayer-meeting has been maintained during my stay. I have no hesitation in saying that the strength of my enterprise has lain in these prayer-meetings."

Mr. Somerville goes on to state, that it has afforded him great delight to preach the gospel frequently to large bodies of natives, sometimes through an interpreter, or in the English language. On these occasions, he was listened to with great attention; and at Agra, after the meeting, a native rose and thanked Mr. Somerville for coming so far to preach "salvation" to them.

Mr. Somerville is establishing Young Men's Christian Associations wherever he can, and he says that one he started in Calcutta is prospering.

It is not for Mr. Somerville to speak of the results of his mission; it is too soon to do so; but he adds, "A gracious measure of divine favour has been bestowed." He judges of this by the testimony of ministers, missionaries, and others, given in various ways; and he mentions one case in particular where, at the meetings at Cawnpore, thirty soldiers were awakened.

The hymn-book used at all these meetings is Mr. Sankey's, and the hymns are greatly prized.

Mr. Somerville closes his letter by saying:—"Next week, I shall proceed (D.V.) to Delhi and so on to Peshawur, but we look to the Lord to direct our steps. The records of our beloved friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, that we find in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN and Times of Blessing, stimulate and comfort us much. I am looking forward to a mighty religious movement in London. The Lord grant that it may lead to a movement in lands afar off.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, LOCKHART GORDON, Hon. Sec. Anglo-Indian Union.

PRISON MISSION.—A missionary clergyman is now attached to this Mission. Arrangements will be made with prison chaplains who are willing to admit him to preach to the prisoners under their charge, on Sunday, or holiday, or other lawful occasion. Address, Rev. P. E. Phelps, Chaplain, Princess Mary's Village, Addlestone, Surrey.

THE LIVERPOOL YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

APPEAL BY MR. MOODY ON ITS BEHALF.

In the afternoon of Tuesday week, Mr. MOODY delivered an address at Victoria Hall, to merchants, employers, and friends of young men, the meeting being in connection with a special appeal which is being made for funds on behalf of the new building which is being erected for the Young Men's Christian Association. Among all the great gatherings that have been addressed by Mr. Moody since his visit to Liverpool, perhaps none was so remarkable as this. Long before the hour of meeting, the doors were besieged with an eager crowd anxious to obtain admission. When the hall was filled, the sight which presented itself was one probably never before witnessed at a religious gathering in Liverpool, and will be long remembered by those who were present. Every inch of space in the vast building was occupied. The audience was one not to be seen out of Liverpool. There were men of very different beliefs and nationalities present: High Churchmen, Broad Churchmen, Low Churchmen, Orangemen, Wesleyans, Unitarians, Baptists, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Jews, Greeks, Spiritualists, and others. All the different phases of our commercial life, too, were represented—from the merchant cotton prince down to the marine-store dealer who deals in "damaged." There were present town councillors, Liberal and Tory; leading members of the dock board and the select vestry; millionaire shipowners, whose vessels are to be found on every sea; and merchants and dealers in every kind of produce—timber merchants, sugar merchants, tea merchants, corn merchants, provision merchants, and brokers, who buy and sell every conceivable article traded in on the Liverpool Exchange. The shop-keeping class also was well represented, and there were many ladies present. Throughout, the great assembly was most attentive and devout; and those who doubt Mr. Moody's power as a public speaker and his immense influence over large masses of people may take note of this—that throughout the whole of the proceedings he "held (to adopt the metaphor once used by a well-known orator) the audience in his hand." They seemed in his passionate enthusiastic passages to join in his enthusiasm; they were touched by his pathos, many of them at times to tears; and when he made some of his droll, dry asides, the laughter seemed to be irresistible.

When the audience had assembled, and just before the proceedings commenced, the Rev. T. MACPHERSON asked those present to sing the hymn "Hold the Fort." This hymn was never heard to better advantage, the glorious tune being taken up by the thousands present, who, thanks to the excellent leading of the well-trained and capably-selected choir, sang with a precision, time, and tune that were most marvellous. Then followed the hymn "The Home over there," equally well sung, and then Mr. John Patterson, J.P., offered up prayer, praying earnestly that young men's eyes might be opened; that they might despise all sinful pleasures; that they might faithfully discharge their duties as citizens and servants, and become faithful followers and workers for Christ.

Mr. SANKEY then said he would sing the hymn, "What are you going to do, brother?" explaining that the hymn had been dedicated to the Young Men's Christian Associations in America, and sang at all their meetings. The hymn (said Mr. Sankey) asked an important question, and he hoped they would all be able to answer it for the future of their lives.

Mr. ALEXANDER BALFOUR then stepped forward, and said that he was there in virtue of the office he had the honour of holding, that of president of the Young Men's Christian Association of Liverpool. He stood before them to plead for the Young Men's Christian Association, and pointed out the work that the Association had done, and the further field of usefulness that it might occupy if it obtained the assistance required. They had 180 members, associates, who had given satisfactory evidence of being Christian young men; and they had 600 or 700 young men who were members of the Association, but who were not associates. They wished to benefit the young men who joined the Association in spiritual and intellectual things, and they hoped to benefit them by good companionship. They had also, in connection with the institution, organizations for the distribution of tracts, and for the sale of Bibles and good books. But they wanted new premises, and these they were about to build. For this purpose they required £16,500, and they had now got £9000. He hoped that his commercial friends would assist in this work, and that the money would be given.

The audience then joined in the singing of the hymn, "O thou great Jehovah," after which

Mr. MOODY came forward, and said he was very often asked, did he believe in these Young Men's Christian Associations. He wanted to know that he did. He believed in them with all his heart. He did not know of any other Association for which he would have been willing to give up the time set aside for the Bible-lecture on Wednesday afternoon. He believed there were no Associations now in England and America which were so little understood, and for which there was so little sympathy, as these Young Men's Christian Associations. And this was for the very simple reason that there was not one man out of a hundred who took pains to inquire into their object. Because they did not have these Associations in the days of their fathers, a great many of the churches now thought they were not needed. But we were living in different days to those of our fathers. Fifty or a hundred years ago, men, young men, lived at home; they lived in a country home, and did not come to these large cities and centres of commerce as they did now. If they did come, their employers took an interest in them. "I contend (said Mr. Moody, with passionate vehemence) that they do not do so now," and at this sturdy utterance of opinion there was a subdued but perceptible "hear, hear," heard in various parts of the hall. A hundred years ago (continued Mr. Moody) when a young man went from home, and entered his employer's house, his employer became responsible for him and his conduct. Now it was altogether different. If a young man came up to one of our great cities now, who was to look after him? Addressing the merchants around him, Mr. Moody exclaimed, Most of you will admit that his employers do not, as a general thing. If the young man is not a Christian man, and does not go and introduce himself to some minister of a church, the church does not look after him, and the result is that our young men may go to ruin. This is a matter we must look in the face, my friends. Since I have come to Liverpool, there is hardly a night I do not meet, in walking from this hall to my hotel, a number of young men rolling through the streets. They may not be your sons. Bear in mind, my friends, they are somebody's sons. They are worth saving. How many young men come here, and, after a while, go home to break their mother's hearts, and send them to untimely graves! Have you thought of the way of reaching these young men? If you wish to reach them, you must reach them when they come to the city. That is the nick of time. A good warm grasp of the hand, a kind word, and a smile, will do more, the first week, to a young man who comes for the first time to Liverpool, than ten thousand of the most eloquent sermons ever heard. These young men who come to large cities want some one to take an interest in them. I contend no one could do this so well as a Christian Association. But ministers say these Associations are doing the Church harm—that they draw young men away from the church. That is a mistake. They feed the church; they are the handmaids of the church. They are not tearing down the church; they are drawing young men into the church. I was talking to a clergyman in Liverpool the other day, and he said, "These institutions belong to the Dissenters." I want to say that this Young Men's Christian Association is a child of the Church of England. Go to London, thirty-four years ago, and you would have found a young man going up to that great city. In an office, soon after, you would have found some clerks kneeling with him in prayer. In that chamber where these young men prayed these Associations were organized. Now they are spread round the world. There are thousands in America, and no institution is so much blessed as these. I want to say to our friends of the Established Church that "this institution is your child, and you should take care of it. Don't disown your own child; be proud of it. Let the Dissenters come in and help you." I know no institution which helps to draw churches so much together as these Young Men's Christian Associations.

Mr. Moody then explained how the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago (of which he was formerly the president) conduct their work; how when a young man arrived he was taken in hand, kindly treated, invited to church, his lonely hours made glad, and, if necessary, a situation found for him. Thousands of young men had been kept from evil by these Associations, and he did not know a place in the wide world which required a Christian Association more than Liverpool; for let them look at the number of strangers that came there. There was nothing they could do for the Lord that would bring so good a return as to build up such Associations in Liverpool. It took young men to reach young men; and he wanted to say to clergymen whose churches were not full, "Get a 'Yoke-fellows' Band;" that was, get a good Christian worker, and yoke a young one with him. That was the way they yoked cattle in his country; they got a good tame ox and a young one together, and then they drew well. Let them put an experienced Christian and an inexperienced one with him, and then they would have their work done.

Mr. Moody proceeded to describe in graphic language the work done by a young Swede in Chicago, on behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association in that city. The Swede did not understand a word of English, but he stood on the principal street with a lantern, inviting people to attend at the strangers' meeting. When the people knocked against him, some of them thanked, some cursed him; but it was all the same to the Swede, for he did not know the difference. He smiled and showed his white teeth all the same, and pointed the way into the meeting. These Young Men's Christian Associations, Mr. Moody said, were "the church in action;" and they became a great blessing to any community, and were of such a character, that every father and mother should take an interest in them. He knew of no institution that was so much entitled to sympathy as this. What could the business men of Liverpool do better than to give this Young Men's Christian Association their support? He hoped that the time was not far distant when they would have a dozen buildings for Young Men's Christian Associations in Liverpool, and that there would be similar institutions in every town in Great Britain. A great many persons in Liverpool were wanted to take an interest in these institutions. Would they do it then? Although it might not be in order to speak out then, yet he was willing to be interrupted, if they would come forward and subscribe. They spoke about what liquor was doing; but instead of speaking, let them be up and doing. Let them build up institutions that would beat back these dark waves of death and damnation. Let them save young men by the founding of institutions that would be beacon-lights to them on the way through life. Mr. Drummond, who had charge of the young men's meeting in the Circus last night, had told him that there were 100 young men inquiring the way of life at the close of the meeting. God was doing a great work here; would the money for this building not be subscribed at once? Let the business men give freely and with a cheerful heart. God loved a cheerful giver. Many men wanted to hand their names down to posterity and leave a record behind them; let them give liberally to this Association and it would be remembered of the Lord. Sometimes a man in his country would give £100,000 to build a public library in order to have the town called after his name; why, fifty or one hundred years afterwards they would not know whether it was called after him or after a mountain, but anything given for the Lord Jesus would be remembered. See how God is blessing these Associations all through the world. Look at this Liverpool Association; it was one of the best he had ever seen anywhere in Europe. When he was in Liverpool a few years ago he was invited to speak one Sunday afternoon, which he agreed to do. As he was walking down the streets he was met by a number of the young men belonging to the Association and invited to go and hear Mr. Moody from America, and he could not get rid of them. The building was crowded and there were a great many looking in at the window. When he came to Liverpool again they asked him to preach in the Circus, and the building was crowded to its utmost capacity. It pleased him greatly to see fifty young men scattered through the meeting getting hold of their brother young men and trying to lead them into the kingdom of God. God bless such an Association; it had his hearty sympathy and he would ask every father and mother to cheer it on and bid it "God speed." A mother, who lived near Liverpool, came to him yesterday and his heart bled for her. She gave him the photograph of a beautiful young man, and told him his history. He had some little difficulty and had left her two years ago, and she had not heard from him since. Now she gave him the photograph and wished him to carry it with him up and down the earth, so that if he should see or hear of the young man he might say she wanted him to return. I am not (said Mr. Moody) a man of wealth, but I will consider it a privilege to be allowed to have an interest in this new building for the Young Men's Christian Association of Liverpool. I hope the business men will send a cheque in; let everyone present send it right in now; let them send it in to-night before dinner. If they do, their dinner will taste all the better. I have been asked to lay the foundation-stone of the new building, and I must go. I hope you were all invited, and that you will go also. After a pause, Mr. Moody said: Some one has sent in a cheque for £50. I wish it were £1000, but do not let that discourage any one from giving £1000.

The audience then sang the hymn, "What shall the harvest be?" and the Rev. Dr. Harrison having pronounced the benediction, the proceedings terminated.

NEW PREMISES IN MOUNT PLEASANT.—LAYING OF THE MEMORIAL STONE BY MR. MOODY.

The premises in Renshaw-street having been found insufficient for the requirements of the members of the Young Men's Christian Association, and there being, moreover, a desire to enlarge the area of the operations of the association, steps were recently taken to procure more commodious premises, and the result has been the initiatory movement for the erection of a new block of buildings in Mount-pleasant, in all respects suited to the requirements of this flourishing and increasing body of young men. The estimated cost of the proposed new premises, all things included, will be about £16,500. Towards that amount £9000 has been already promised, leaving about £7500 to be provided to exonerate the building from debt. Mr. Henry Vale, F.R.I.B.A., of Central-chambers, South Castle-street, has been chosen the architect for the new erection, which will be in the domestic Gothic of the 18th century, carefully adapted to modern requirements. Messrs. Holme and Nicol are the contractors for the work, and Mr. Webster is the clerk of the works. A full description of the new buildings has already been published. The memorial stone was laid yesterday afternoon by Mr. D. L. Moody, in the presence of a large number of people.

The Rev. W. Lefroy, incumbent of the district, having offered up prayer asking for God's blessing on the institution,

Mr. ALEX. BALFOUR said—Mr. Moody, and ladies and gentlemen, I am requested by the members of the Liverpool Young Men's Christian Association to present to Mr. Moody this trowel, with which to lay the memorial stone of the Young Men's Christian Association; and it is with the greatest possible pleasure that I have now to discharge that duty, and to hand to him the trowel with which he is asked to lay this memorial stone.

Mr. MOODY, having received the trowel, carefully spread the mortar with it, and, the stone having been lowered into its place, said, "I declare this stone to be well and truly laid." (The stone bore the inscription: "This memorial stone was laid by D. L. Moody, of Chicago, 2nd March, 1875.")

The Rev. C. M. Birrell pronounced the benediction, and the proceedings terminated.

ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN.

The service in the evening in Victoria Hall was intended for young men under 35 years of age, and the immense hall was crowded, principally by those whom it was desired to gather together, long before the advertised hour of the commencement of the proceedings, although the admission was by ticket. The interval before the arrival of Messrs. Moody and Sankey was occupied in singing and prayer. Afterwards Mr. Henry Drummond, who has been so useful and successful in carrying on the Young Men's Meetings inaugurated by Mr. Moody, engaged in prayer, and Mr. Sankey, amid perfect silence, sang "The Ninety and Nine." Mr. Moody followed by reading a few verses from a chapter in Joshua, and after the singing of the hymn, "God loved the world of sinners lost," he delivered an earnest address, founded upon the text—"How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word"—or perhaps, he said, a better word would be "decision." He pointed out that the waverers in scriptural history, as in the present day, had gone down and been no blessing in the world. He asked the young men present, therefore, to decide that night either for or against God. The time was coming, he believed, when we were fast drifting either to out-and-out infidelity or to out-and-out Christianity. He himself was getting tired of these "border Christians," and he appealed to his audience to be red-hot either for God or for the world: the men who were trying to serve God with the one hand and the devil with the other, were the very curse of the world and the church. In describing the appeal of the prophets of Baal to their god, when Elijah mocked them, he caused what approached to a hearty laugh by saying that people talked about Methodists being noisy. "I tell you," he said, "that these men in Mount Carmel were about the noisiest you ever heard of." As the followers of Baal, after the fall of the fire upon their sacrifice, declared that the Lord was God, so he asked those present to decide instantly on the same side.

At the conclusion of his address he asked those who desired to become Christians to rise. A tolerably large number stood up, and Mr. Moody then prayed especially for the unsaved souls in the assembly. The singing of the hymn commencing "Come home, come home, you are weary at heart," concluded the service.—Liverpool Mercury.

TWO DAYS' CONVENTION AT LIVERPOOL.

This important gathering was held, as announced, on Wednesday and Thursday last week, in the Victoria Hall, where the bulk of the special services in Liverpool during the last month have taken place. These conventions seem to serve many practical purposes. They bring together large bodies of Christian labourers—clergymen and laymen—from widely-separated portions of the kingdom, so that the fresh ardour and accumulated experience that each visitor receives is as widely diffused and utilized when they return to their distant homes. Ascertained errors and defects in the past methods of work, as well as ascertained excellences, are brought out, and workers are thus enabled in the future to avoid or rectify the one and adopt the other. For another thing, the reports of continued success in the towns already visited by the evangelists, and places surrounding, must greatly cheer and encourage these indefatigable servants of Christ, and strengthen them for the work to come.

Mr. Moody presided at all the meetings during the two days, and, indeed, did the lion's share of the work. He might fairly have contented himself with performing the ordinary duties of a chairman; but then his modes of action are as far as possible removed from anything like routine, and his appetite for personal work seems insatiable. He never thinks of leaving the oars, and confining himself to the helm, even for a day. The first two hours on were devoted to reports on the progress of the work throughout the kingdom.

Dr. KNOX was the first speaker, and dwelt chiefly on the RESULTS OF THE MOVEMENT IN BELFAST, as shown in the additions to the membership of the various churches. One minister had admitted, at one time, 100, and another 300; 98 had been added to his own roll of membership within the last six months. He also stated the interesting fact, that some of the ministers who were adverse to the services had received considerable accessions to the strength of their congregations. In the great centres of industry in Belfast the results had been most cheering. In one factory, one young woman on an average was converted every working day. A factory girl had been the means of leading about a dozen of her companions to Christ. In one large factory about 40 young men had been converted; in another 87. These factory men are going to the lowest parts of the town, holding prayer-meetings, and distributing tracts. Even the street Arabs have taken to singing Mr. Sankey's hymns in place of profane and ribald songs. The recital of such facts ought to stop the mouths of cavillers, if anything will.

Rev. Mr. TARRANT gave details of the

and said, as to results, that one church had received 100 converts, another 200, and at St. James's Church, under the faithful labours of Mr. Aitken, 700 souls had professed to find the Lord. His own congregation had increased by some 400 or 500. He gave one striking case that deserves to be recorded:—

A young woman was observed at one of the meetings with a shawl over her head and a jug in her hand, deeply affected. She went into the inquiry-room. When asked if she wanted salvation, she said, "Oh, I cannot leave this place till I am saved." About half-past eleven o'clock, she ventured her all on Christ, and went home rejoicing. Next night a young man was observed trying to hide behind one of the pillars of the church. He was spoken to, and went into the inquiry-room, where he wept bitterly. He said, "I cannot leave the church till I have got salvation." The minister turned to a young woman who knelt by his side, and said, "Are you happy?" "Don't you know me? I came last night, with the jug in my hand, out of curiosity; the word reached my heart, and I went home happy. It was nearly midnight, and my husband was angry, as he was waiting for his supper. He thought I had been off with somebody. I said, 'Oh, no, John, I have been to get my soul saved, and I want you to be saved, too.' We never went to bed all night. We knelt down, and prayed all night long that God would save my husband, and now he is come here to be saved." About one o'clock the next morning the man said, "Now I have found Jesus," and the couple were re-married to the heavenly Bridegroom.

CONCERNING OTHER PLACES.

In testifying to the work in Liverpool, Dr. HARRISON said he believed a thousand people had been brought to the Saviour. Rev. Mr. Macpherson also spoke of the rich harvest of souls in Liverpool, and he was followed by Rev. W. Robinson, Manchester, who told of great doings at Preston and Salford.

Mr. SMITHSON testified to the

CONTINUED SUCCESS OF THE MOVEMENT IN DUBLIN, and said that, despite the anathemas of Cardinal Cullen, not a few Roman Catholics had been savingly enlightened. The saying had come true, that, "whom the Pope curses, God blesses."

Further testimony of a most undoubted character was given by Dr. Ziemann, Manchester, Rev. W. H. Aitken, and Rev. Mr. Jenks, Swansea. The latter speaker stated that large numbers had been added to nearly all the churches within ten miles of Swansea.

The closing item of testimony was given by a gentleman, in a letter received from Glasgow, and illustrated the widely extended influence for good of used. It was, briefly, to this effect. A few evenings ago, a little boy was walking up one of the Glasgow streets singing, "There is a fountain filled with blood." A policeman joined in the song. At the end of the policeman's beat, he asked the boy if he understood what he was singing? Yes; he had felt the preciousness of it. They parted, and a few evenings after, a stranger came up to this policeman, entered into conversation with him, and said, "Do you know that a woman standing where we are was awakened to serious, and, I believe, saving impressions, from hearing the other evening a hymn sung by a policeman and a boy?"

The usual hour, from twelve to one, was set apart for the prayer-meeting. After the requests had been read, and prayer offered,

Mr. MOODY gave an address on the necessity and importance of the daily union prayer-meeting being well sustained. He attributed the success of the movement largely to the prominence given to the noon prayer-meeting, which, he said, had gone on increasing in numbers. He condemned the stiff and lifeless method of conducting prayer-meetings that has been too common in past times, and gave an account of the rise and progress of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting of New York, and the power for good it had exerted for many years and in many lands. He considered it a master-stroke of the devil that, in most of our large towns, there is no building where union prayer-meetings can be held, and he called on wealthy Christians to erect halls for the purpose.

After the interval, the question of

was taken up. Mr. HENRY DRUMMOND spoke at some length of the special work among young men, which was commenced in Glasgow about twelve months ago, and has now become almost as extensive as this evangelistic movement itself. Referring to the young men's meetings in Liverpool, he said that for the last few evenings there had been a nightly average of one hundred young men seeking Christ. Interesting addresses were also given by the Mr. Hind Smith, of the Manchester Young Men's Christian Association, and others.

At four o'clock Mr. MOODY gave his Bible lecture on "The Holy Ghost," which was received with the greatest interest by the large audience, including many ministers and others from a distance.

The evening meeting was densely crowded, and Mr. Moody's gospel address on "Present Salvation" produced a most thrilling impression. There were a great many at the close who testified their wish to seek salvation "now," and as Mr. Moody has often said he never knew a seeking sinner and a seeking Saviour to be long before they met.

THURSDAY.

The first subject of this day's Convention was HOW BEST TO REACH THE MASSES.

The discussion was so full of interest and assumed at times such a practical shape, that it was prolonged beyond the two hours originally allotted to it into the hour usually given up to the prayer-meeting.

Dr. H. BONAR, of Edinburgh, reported on the efforts now in operation by means of weekly breakfasts to reach the lowest stratum of the population there, which had been most successful. They sought to imitate the Master in both attracting and compelling the people to come in.

Mr. T. MATHESON, of Liverpool, said that there was a large artizan class in Liverpool who would not come to a breakfast, and he advocated the planting of gospel halls in the midst of the people.

Rev. W. GARRETT, of Liverpool, spoke of the condition of the dock-men, of whom there are about 20,000 here. He attributed their moral and physical destitution to the absence of comfortable and cheerful resorts while waiting for work at the docks. They had no shelter but the public-houses. He strongly advocated the establishment of a number of public-houses without the drink, and suggested that a Company should be started for the purpose with a capital of £10,000 in £1 shares, and that all had benefited by these special services should take at least one share. He said there were hundreds of these men who would gladly shun the public-houses if anything else was open to them. He also gave an interesting account of what had been done in eight of the darkest corners in Manchester by some members of the Methodist Church there, in building gospel halls and engaging personally in the work at these places. As a result 500 of these hitherto degraded people had joined the class meetings. "I believe," he said, "that all the difficulties in the way in Liverpool would be overcome if the ladies would avoid dress and the gentlemen would avoid drink. This eternal attempt to shine is at the root of the poverty that exists in the Church."

Mr. Garrett's outspoken words on the question of dress and drink were greatly applauded by the vast congregation. Let us hope that they will not stop at applauding. It is really amazing to think how any well-disposed citizen of Liverpool—not to say any Christian citizen—can sit calmly by, in view of the frightful incubus that lies on the town, in the shape of the "hellish drink traffic," as Mr. Moody plainly puts it, without moving heaven and earth to have it removed, or, at all events, mitigated. A walk through some of the Liverpool streets on a Saturday evening is about the most heart-sickening pilgrimage that could possibly be imagined. If this movement does not in some way break up this traffic, the day of Liverpool's visitation will pass away with half its work undone.

Mr. HALFOUR, Liverpool, undertook to bear his part in the formation of the proposed company, and also spoke in favour of an organized system of visitation at every door, including Roman Catholics, if possible.

Mr. W. P. LOCKHART, Liverpool, urged them not to dwell too much on the means to be employed, but rather on the spirit in which we ought to do the work. Let there be more personal consecration and self-denial. Let the Church be on fire. He had heard Mr. Spakey sing—

"If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite."

And he would say—

"If you cannot reach your thousands,
You can reach a dozen souls."

There was about a million's worth of property in Liverpool in church buildings, and he would say, instead of building more halls, let them use what they had got. Why should not the churches and chapels be open at least every evening, free to all? There would be plenty who would come to hear.

After a few words from Mr. D. M. Drysdale, as to personal effort,

Rev. A. McAULAY said he despaired of the conversion of the masses until there was a revolution in the Church, and until it was as easy for a man to go into a church or chapel as it was to go into a gin-palace or public-house, and to feel that he was more welcome there than anywhere else, except in his own house. He spoke of the field in the East-end of London, where he worked in former days, and said that not one working-man in fifty went regularly to a place of worship.

Rev. M. TARRANT, Leeds, testified to the good results achieved by the "British Workmen" public-houses there.

Mr. CAMPBELL WHITE, of Glasgow, gave an account of the work in the Tent on Glasgow Green, and latterly in the Drill Hall, and also bore testimony to the power of sacred song on the hearts of the most hardened.

Rev. W. H. ARTKEN spoke of utilizing existing agencies, and urged the ministers present to press into action the dormant energies in their congregations.

Rev. Mr. LUNDIE said that sympathy with those in trouble was greatly needed. There were people in Liverpool who were almost as much alone as if they were living in a desert.

"THE QUESTION DEAWEE."

All the meetings on Thursday were most practical in their tone, and the hour, from three to four o'clock, was pre-eminently so.

The questions sent in, and answered by Mr. Moody in his unhesitating, emphatic way, were very numerous and varied. We have only space to summarize some of the answers:—

The best way to wake up a sleepy Christian is to set him to wake up another.—There is no good reason why women should not preach to women. Mothers can best talk to mothers.—Young converts should be set to work in the Sabbath-school.—At his own church at home he always asked converts who had been given to using "the stuff" to sign the pledge. Ministers ought to give it up themselves.—He would strongly recommend solo-singing as a means of drawing the masses; only, however, when engaged in by Christians, and for the love of souls. He used it regularly at the Gospel-meetings in connection with his church in Chicago.—Christians should dress so that people's attention should not be attracted by it.—He would sweep away these miserable pew-rents.—If you want to interest a Bible-class, get interested yourself.—He could not see anything wrong in advertising religious meetings. What were papers good for if not to make known the "good news"?—Have plenty of singing at cottage-meetings, and care less about the music than the words.—Have no chairman at a gospel-meeting, and only one speaker, if possible, for a week's services.—Special meetings should not last over an hour. Send the people away with a desire for more.—Indulgence in tobacco by ministers, Sunday-school teachers, etc., had a very injurious effect.—He would not teach his children to dance, etc., etc.

The next hour was taken up with a Bible lecture on "Work," by Mr. Moody. He quoted passage after passage, to show the Scriptural teaching on the subject, and gave a rule which he said he had adopted, and had only broken two or three times in the course of the last ten or twelve years, viz., not to let a single day pass without speaking to some one about their eternal welfare. In the evening, as usual, a Gospel address was given by Mr. Moody to an immense audience.

The Convention was largely attended by delegates from distant parts of the country. If every visitor has gone down to his or her home baptized anew with the spirit of prayer, wisdom, and consecration, who shall reckon up the "golden sheaves" to be gathered at the last great harvest day, from the seed sown during these two memorable days.

CLECKHEATON.—The Lord is greatly blessing the people here. The chapel is very large, and well arranged. It was well filled three times on Sunday—once for the children, once for consecration, once for the unconverted. At the close of the evening meeting between 800 and 700 remained for the after-meeting. And when the anxious were drafted off to the large schoolroom, it was quite full. I first talked and prayed with them altogether, and then individually, as far as I could, with the help of others, whilst the minister dealt with those who remained in the chapel. A large number, we have reason to believe, were saved. Truly the Lord is working all over England, and we have reason to praise God for the wonderful manifestation of his presence everywhere we are called to work.

CLOSING SERVICES AT LIVERPOOL.

The closing services were held on Sunday last, at eight a.m., for Christian workers; at eleven a.m., for young converts and inquirers; at three p.m., for women only; and at eight p.m., for men only. Each of these services was very largely attended. For two hours before the proceedings commenced hundreds of people besieged the building, eager to secure admission. Mr. Sankey was not present, but Mr. Moody delivered appropriate addresses, exhorting his audiences to perseverance, and commending the efforts of the ministers who promised to take his place in a series of services, to be held this month in the capacious building in which they were then assembled.

A correspondent writes:—We had a wonderful day here on Sunday.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S VISIT TO LONDON.

As our issue is sent to machine on Monday night, we are unable to give particulars in our present number of the opening meetings at the Agricultural Hall on Tuesday evening, or of the noon prayer-meeting at Exeter Hall. Our next number will, however, contain a full report of the week.

Meanwhile, it will be useful to our readers to have information on a few points.

The noon meeting at Exeter Hall, conducted by Mr. Moody, is held from 12 to 1; doors open at 11.

The meetings at the Agricultural Hall commence at 7.30; doors open at 6.30. No tickets are issued for the first week.

The building at the East-end is proceeding rapidly, and is to be ready by end of April. It is situated near the junction of the Mile-end and Burdett roads.

During the first month, the meetings will be held at the Agricultural Hall, Upper-street, Islington. Next (it is intended) at the West-end; then probably at the East-end; and lastly, on the south side of London, or vice versa.

The House-to-house Visitation Committee are making good preparatory progress. It ought, however, to be clearly understood that this movement is entirely distinct from, though working in perfect harmony with, the Central Noon Prayer-meeting Committee, which is the body charged with the management of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services. The address of the Visitation Committee is 48, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W. The address of the Central Noon Prayer-meeting Committee from this time will be Agricultural Hall, Islington, N. One very interesting result of the visitation in Liverpool is the addition already to the membership of one church of twenty-one persons.

The noon prayer-meetings during the past week at Moor-gate-street Hall have been more numerously attended, and there has been a decided increase of interest and of fervour in prayer. The evening meetings for prayer at the Agricultural Hall have been attended by numbers varying from 600 to 1500, and a growing expectancy of blessing is manifest. One woman was noticed there night after night, who exhibited great interest, and on being spoken to, she said that her son had been led to Christ through the meetings at Liverpool, and writes to his Christian mother encouraging her to pray that the father may be converted.

Last Sunday's services in the Agricultural Hall were largely attended. In the afternoon, Rev. W. Cuff gave a powerful address from the words—"Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence," that was well fitted to arouse expectation and quicken faith. Rev. J. Thain Davidson gave a gospel address in the evening.

DEALING WITH INQUIRERS.

I have been for some time accustomed to attend meetings where evangelists preach, my object being to speak to the anxious. I have found it most useful to take with me a number of slips of paper, each containing a reference to chapter and verse of various striking passages of Scripture, some of which are the following:—1 Chron. xxviii. 9; Psa. xxxiv. 8, 15, 16; xcv. 7, 8; cxlv. 18; Isa. i. 18; xxx. 18, 19; xli. 18, 14; l. 7; liii.; iv. 1-7; Jer. xxix. 11-18; xxxiii. 8; Lam. iii. 25; Micah vii. 7, 18, 19; Nahum i. 7; Matt. xii. 20;

xxi. 27; 2 Cor. xiv. 14-18; v. 24; Rom. x. 11-13; 2 Cor. xiv. 14-18; v. 24; Rom.

One of these lists of passages was read, and with a blessing on his own word before they were read, and with assurance that I will add my prayers to theirs for a blessing. I have been cheered from time to time by hearing from one and another of the happy results that have been experienced by directing in this special way the attention of the anxious to the Lord's own word. The Lord will magnify his word.
ONE OF THE LORD'S LABOURERS.

PRAYER FOR FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—May I once again remind your readers of the duty of praying for Spain, at a time when the freedom of the gospel in that land is so much imperilled as now? It appears that the ministers of various Protestant congregations in Spain "have memorialized the European governments to the effect, that the position of their co-religionists is in peril." It is, at any rate, quite certain—first, that the power of the clerical party there is not to be despised; and, secondly, that they will use their power, if they can, to suppress the preaching of the gospel and evangelical worship.

Surely the bare possibility of the extinction of the blessed light which has shined upon unhappy Spain, after so many centuries of almost total darkness, ought to arouse Christians everywhere to memorialize the King of Kings on her behalf.

On the other hand, the prospects of France call for prayer on behalf of her thirty-six millions of inhabitants, who seem likely now, in God's good providence, to attain such a measure of religious liberty as they have never yet enjoyed. Some of your readers may need to be told that M. de Pressensé has introduced into the French Assembly a bill for the increase of religious liberty, which has passed the second reading by a large majority, and which may, therefore, very possibly, with God's blessing, become law before the present session is ended.

"Brethren, pray for us," wrote Paul to the church at Thessalonica, "that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you." Surely it does not become British Christians, who rejoice in the free course which the gospel has among themselves, to look on with selfish indifference whilst the religious liberties of two great nations are passing through a crisis; in the one case, so hopeful; in the other, so alarming. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others," is a rule which surely applies to nations as well as individuals.—I remain, dear sir, truly yours,

White Rose Grange, Woking Station. HORACE NOBL.

CONFERENCE AT NIMES.

The Conferences here have been greatly blessed, both in individual cases of conversion and renovation, and in the general influence. A rich lady from Switzerland came, and paid the journey of several sad ones from thence, and all found a blessing. One was a young pastor in the Alps. He went back with new life, and radiant with sunbeams from heaven. Another was a dear old Christian lady of seventy-two, who had worked for fifty years with success in France for the Lord, and who for five years had fallen into sadness, and doubt of her acceptance. She was perfectly restored, and, after having prayed in anguish and being prayed for, rendered a joyful testimony to her Lord's love and faithfulness.

The women's meetings were largely blessed, the peasants came up from the villages to attend them, and so ardent were the women to pray, that only a few words could be spoken by us. Many found peace and rest on the spot, and the love they show is intense. Many were so anxious, that they could not sleep, and they came with dismal countenances, and such contrite prayers, crying not who heard their cries to God in confession. Some found peace while singing the French version of "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and pastors bore their testimony with a simplicity that melted hearts. The calmness of the meetings was remarkable.

Theodore Monod was deputed to attend from Paris, and was, of course, the mainspring of the meetings.

One dear Christian, who years ago had been longing for a higher life, and who had learnt English on purpose to obtain a better knowledge through that language than she could find in her own, read Mr. Boardman's "Higher Life," and expressed herself very grateful for the good she received, and also for the help given to others, among whom she has circulated it.—Yours in Jesus, S. S. BLUNDELL.

STATE REGULATION OF VICE.

TOTAL REPEAL OF THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.

Last week, no less than three large meetings were held in London of cordial friends of the Bill which Sir Harcourt Johnstone proposes to submit to Parliament for the Total Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts. The first gathering took place on Wednesday evening in St. James's large hall, under the presidency of Sir Harcourt himself. Amongst those by whom he was supported, were the Right Hon. J. Stansfeld, M.P., Mr. J. Holms, M.P., Mr. H. Richard, M.P., Mr. C. H. Hopwood, M.P., Mr. George Dixon, M.P., Mr. T. A. Dixon, M.P., Mr. F. Pennington, M.P., Mr. A. Brown, M.P., Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P., Mr. Banks, Mr. Shaen, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Mr. J. Stabb, Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mrs. Stansfeld, Mrs. P. A. Taylor, and upwards of a hundred representatives of the movement, both in the metropolis and in the Provinces. More than three hundred letters of apology had been received, expressing regret that the writers were unable to attend. Many London ministers were amongst the writers.

The Chairman said: It was not surprising that men and women were deterred from taking into their thoughts the subject they were met to consider. He himself, at one time, was as averse as any one to the question; but, having gone into it, the conviction had strengthened day by day, until he had no more doubt that these Acts ought to be repealed. They had three classes of persons to deal with—those who forced these Acts upon the country upon what was termed hygienic grounds; those who thought that such a business properly belonged to the State; and, lastly, the largest class of all, viz., people who will give themselves no trouble at all about the matter. He was quite sure that the information diffused throughout the country, through every town and village, would result in a public opinion that would tell most favourably on their movement. The Wesleyans were already working in a manner which could not be too highly praised. The Congregationalists, the Society of Friends, the Roman Catholics, by working with the same end in view, will be able to show the Prime Minister that this is not a subject to be trifled with. He himself believed that these Acts were deliberately framed on the supposition that sin is a necessity; that it is the business of the State to cure disease, and that disease must be stamped out. He would say in reply, it was not the business of the State to foster false ideas in the minds of the rising race; that we have facts before us pointing to quite another conclusion than the one which would make this a matter for the State, and that dependence can safely be placed upon the voluntary efforts of Christian men and women. For himself, he could not see that these Acts were ever intended to reclaim, and he could not help regarding them as inimical to morality, dangerous to constitutional freedom, and as having signally failed in their object of repressing vice.

Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD moved the first resolution, which affirmed that—the Contagious Diseases Acts, 1866-69, are unjust in their principle, oppressive in their operation, demoralising in their result; and, on these grounds, their immediate repeal should be demanded. He said that, perhaps, he owed them some apology for addressing them on this subject. He was no public speaker, and all his spare time was devoted to making Christ's gospel known to as many as he could reach. He had, therefore, no time for mere political meetings; but on the subject before them this evening, he felt so strongly that the Acts are opposed to all true Christianity, as well as subversive of true morality, and opposed to our liberty as British subjects, that he deemed himself only advocating the cause dear to him in another way. He held these Acts to be unjust in principle. An Act which says that one person shall be tracked and apprehended and punished without trial, while another is not tracked, but allowed to go free; an Act which punishes the weak and leaves the strong untouched, is manifestly unjust in principle. An Act which compels a poor woman to rivet yet more closely the chains which bind her, is manifestly an oppressive Act, which, instead of stamping out disease, stamps out womanhood. But, above all, these Acts are grossly immoral in recognizing, as a necessity, what is known to be opposed to the will of God. For himself, he would say that the women who had thrown themselves into the work in which they were engaged, were worthy of their hearty admiration and gratitude. He would not reverence an angel so much as he honoured those Christian women, who, at a cost which men with grosser natures and more hardened sensibilities were unable to appreciate, had nobly cast themselves into the breach with the brave hope of closing it.

The Right Hon. Mr. STANSFELD, M.P., in seconding the resolution, insisted that these Acts had been placed on the Statute-book not simply to meet, as some said, the requirements of a standing army, but to be extended to the population at large. A sure way had been taken to corrupt the youth of the country by surrounding it with an atmosphere of vice. If virtuous people will content themselves with being silent, and with turning on the other side in this matter, then conditions will be created which will be fatal to virtue and which must end in the degradation of society. He spoke of his own knowledge when he said that, before the first Act of 1866 was passed, a society had been formed consisting of a large number of persons for the very purpose of extending these Acts to the country at large. In Parliament and out of it, measures of this kind were very silently worked from fear of rousing into antagonism the moral and religious sense of the community. Whatever some might say that the immediate object of these Acts was to cure disease, such, however, was not their object, but to enable men to sin without danger of the physical consequences. It would be foolish to imagine that there would be less vice, for these Acts smoothed the path of vice, and said it was the business of the State to see that it might be safely and cheaply practised. One of the results of this legislation would be that mere boys, school boys with satchels on their backs, would be found frequenters of licensed houses. So at least it was in an Italian city where an examination took place every three days, and where it was said that the frequenters of these places were of every age, from thirteen to seventy. On the system they had met to oppose there was no need to license houses, they licensed their inmates, and made every garret to all intents and purposes a government licensed house of sin. The speaker entered upon a forcible argument to show that it was impossible that the immoral can ever be the true hygienic law, and taking his figures from army and navy reports, he also showed the laws they were met to oppose were an imposture and a fraud. They enabled men to conceal the diseases from which they were suffering. If these laws were extended to the whole country they would inflict an awful penalty on generations yet unborn. They had been a failure where they had been tried, as the best medical testimony went to prove, and by their repeal the standard of social purity would be raised throughout the land.

Mr. HOPWOOD supported the resolution, remarking that the evidence given before the Royal Commission testified strongly against the Acts which were a stain upon the national character.

As the resolution was about to be put, Mr. George Brown (Islington) attempted to move an amendment, but the resolution was carried by a large majority.

Mr. H. RICHARD moved the second resolution, which affirmed the pleasure of the meeting in learning of a bill being about to be introduced for the total repeal of the Acts, and requested the chairman to sign a petition to Parliament on behalf of the measure. In a brief but earnest speech Mr. Richard expressed his admiration of those brave men and braver women who had hitherto so nobly advocated this movement in spite of sneers and obloquy. He also congratulated the meeting on having so good a representative as their chairman, and he trusted that a public opinion would be formed that would make its power felt in St. Stephen's with such strength that the men who sat there could not disregard it.

Mrs. BUTLER, who seconded the resolution, was received by the entire audience upstanding, and with loud cheers. She said: I have very few words to say, and they will not be addressed to those who sympathize with us, but to that minority who may believe, in spite of all they have heard and read, that prostitution is a necessity. I have one question to ask of the men here this evening: Let us for the moment accept this so-called necessity, I then ask you, are you willing to devote to this necessity your daughter, your sister? Perhaps one or two might be found even to say "Yes" to such a question; but if so, they are not worthy of the name of men. I am quite sure that any man of right feeling would answer "No." I have another question to ask. I ask you, in the name of justice, how dare you ask other men to give up their daughters, their sisters, to minister to men's lusts and passions? If you do not answer this question honestly now, future generations will answer it for you. I beg you to take home the two questions I have asked, and honestly to answer them.

Mr. ALEX. BROWN, M.P., Wenlock, supported the resolution, which, upon being put from the chair, was carried with only two or three hands being held up against it.

Mr. DIXON, M.P., moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, which having been carried by acclamation, the proceedings terminated.

CONFERENCE AT WESTMINSTER PALACE HOTEL.

On Thursday morning, under the presidency of Right Hon. J. Stansfeld, M.P. (in the absence of Mr. Shaen), a conference took place, the most interesting feature of which, perhaps, was Mrs. Butler's paper, giving a deeply interesting sketch of her three months' efforts on the Continent. While in Italy, a lady of the country had written to her, that it would be difficult to describe the wrongs and sorrows connected with the system which their meeting of last night had protested against. Her own personal observation went to confirm this testimony. She had read many descriptions of slavery, but no picture however vivid could be placed by the side of the one which might be drawn of the horrors of prostitution, as it was to be seen in its State-protected temples; in other words, the prisons and hospitals. She could not tell them what she had seen in these hells upon earth, without filling every heart with grief. Still she could honestly express the conviction that there was some little hope of the beginning of the end, and that the testimony of those who had worked the system abroad was that it was a hygienic failure. There was not that general submission to the law abroad which some imagined. In Paris there had been a strong effort against the evil by a large body of the people. The working-classes there, especially, were groaning under it. In Milan she found that there were ladies and gentlemen, as well as working people, who, for years, had been resisting the system. In Naples there was still a resistance on the part of the people, and the system cannot be carried out, on account of the use of certain watchwords, on hearing which from the men the women disappear up courts like rats into their holes. In Florence the system has almost worked itself to an end, and not without bloodshed; on account of the resistance of the peasantry. In Rome, where she spent a few days, she spoke to several who had been waiting for years for a call to engage against the practice. She begged to say that she had originated no movement on the Continent; the time had not come when what was latent in many minds could show itself. In Geneva they have only had the system a few years, and there have been some who have been encouraging it. But there is an earnest opposition to it, nevertheless, under the Committee which has been formed to wage a crusade. If there have been all these protests, the question may be asked, Why not more success? The reason depends on the absence of sufficient publicity; but there will be more of that now, both in Italy and Switzerland. Then, again, there has been no knowledge of what was going on in other countries; and, lastly, the women have had no part in the business. All who share in the views of those now present were looking over here for sympathy and the right hand of fellowship. In the second portion of her paper, Mrs. Butler pointed out that when the State has once entered into a compromise with vice, it cannot stop.

About three hours were spent in conference, in which Mr. Fowler, M.P., Mr. Lydgett, Mr. Wheeler, Rochester, Rev. W. Guest, Gravesend, Rev. Mr. Trestrail, Miss Young, Chatham, and Alderman Rees, Dover, took part. A resolution before the Conference was as follows:—That this Conference approve of the proposal to institute an Association to be entitled "The British and Foreign Federation for the Abolition of the Government Regulation of Vice," and to consist of the executive committees of all associations having that object in view in all parts of the world; and expresses a readiness to join the same, and that all such executive committees be earnestly invited to join such Federation

HENRY MOORHOUSE IN AMERICA.

All who have heard Mr. Moorhouse have been greatly gratified. He completely disarms criticism from the beginning. One might as well criticize the outpourings of a mother's heart in addressing her child. All he is anxious to do is to get the great message fairly and clearly before the minds of his hearers; that is all. Consequently, all who love God's truth love to hear him. If the love of Christ has ever been shed abroad in their hearts, and they delight to hear his matchless excellences delineated and extolled, they hear Henry Moorhouse's preaching gladly. He has wonderful power over an audience, and it has its source in his own simple, childlike, affectionate disposition. He is earnest, direct, and all-absorbing in the passion to make you hear Christ and love Him. It is worth going a great way to hear Henry Moorhouse, especially for ministers. They can learn much from him, for they cannot hear him without gaining enlarged conceptions of the power of simplicity, and the advantages of so presenting the truth as to keep themselves out of sight, and simply let God himself speak. Henry Moorhouse's labours are kindling a fire which, it is hoped, will extend from heart to heart, and from congregation to congregation.—New York Evangelist.

MR. GUINNESS'S MISSIONARY TRAINING HOME.

We wish to call our readers' special attention to the advertisement on the last page of our present issue. It shows that this young work has grown rapidly, and is full of vigour and promise for the future. Yesterday there sailed from our shores, for Japan, Mr. T. L. Boag, the twelfth young missionary sent forth from Mr. Guinness's Home during the two years which have elapsed since its foundation. If God only grant these twelve some of the faith, courage, and success of the twelve who of old went out from Jerusalem, and turned the world upside down by preaching Jesus and the Resurrection, what a work lies before them in the nations where they are now scattered!

China and Japan, Bengal, Madras, and Burmah, Africa and the West Indies, each have received one or more young evangelists, resolved to spend their days in the glad work of carrying the light of life into the gloom of heathen darkness. We rejoice to hear that not only do suitable volunteers offer for the work in larger numbers than Mr. Guinness can receive them, but that openings for the students to go out present themselves more rapidly than he can prepare men to take advantage of them.

An urgent need of increased accommodation, for even the number of men who have been received into the Institute exists at HARLEY HOUSE, as every visitor to that busy hive must have observed. Mr. Guinness is, consequently, desirous of converting some adjoining outbuildings into class-rooms and studies, and also to furnish some new dormitories. We do trust the means required for these purposes will soon be put into our brother's hands, so that the efficient organization now at his command may be turned to full account. As will be observed by the advertisement, the very valuable practical co-operation of Mr. FRANK WHITE, and of Mr. ARCHIBALD BROWN, is now enjoyed by this work, and those who have no personal acquaintance with it, may judge of its character from the fact, that so many well-known and godly men of various denominations have heartily given their names as referees.

We shall gladly hand to Mr. Guinness any contributions sent to us.

THE LORD'S WORK IN CARDIFF.

We desire to praise God for a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit in this town. Some time ago a committee of ministers and laymen of different denominations decided to invite the Rev. J. E. Irvine, of America, and the Rev. J. Mountain, of London, to hold a series of union services for the promotion of Scriptural Holiness, which were commenced nearly three weeks ago, first in public halls, and then in some of the largest places of worship of different denominations. These services have been of great spiritual power as regards Christians, and hundreds of sinners who come seeking pardon have confessed Jesus, and given their names to the secretary as justified believers. The meetings are increasing in power and interest, and I believe the work is only commencing.

HOUSE OF REST FOR FEMALE MISSIONARIES.

8, CAMBRIDGE-GARDENS, KILBURN.

The annual meeting of this institution was held on Tuesday, Feb. 23, at the house of Mr. Ellis, Maida-vale. A large number of interested friends were present. Interesting particulars of the progress of the work entrusted to Miss Mason were furnished by herself, and addresses full of sympathy and encouragement were delivered by the Revs. Hay Chapman, and Charles Graham, and Mr. Campbell.

The Lord has certainly set his seal of approval on this effort to give rest and refreshment of body and soul alike to his servants who serve Him. It is a happy thing to know that if, under the high pressure of existing work for God, weak, disheartened labourers retire, often unnoticed, from the field, there is one corner where they may find a welcome, just because they are weary.

We heartily wish that this Home, and the seaside branch at Eastbourne, may grow and increase, and that other Christians may be stirred up to undertake a similar work elsewhere.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.

The annual meeting of the Sermon-lane Mission was held this year at Myddelton Hall, under the presidency of Mr. J. Curry. The report was read, and contained the very satisfactory item of news that the Mission was now entirely free from debt, owing to special efforts put forth at the commencement of last year. The day-school has been discontinued, owing to the establishment of Board-schools in the neighbourhood. The Sunday-school numbers about ninety. The Sunday evening services are largely attended, and during the months of January, February, March, November, and December, free breakfasts were given on Sunday mornings to 150 or 200 of the most indigent. The Bible-classes for adults, working meetings for adults, home visitation, penny savings'-bank, etc., are all exercising their slow but sure process of softening on these poor people; while many have found, through the preached gospel, the pearl of great price.

Mr. Fuller has for five years been superintendent of the Mission, and has, by untiring zeal and effort, greatly aided its prosperity and increase. The receipts for the year were £269 18s. 1d.; expenditure, £216 5s. 5d.

BRIDGEWATER.—For a long time past the hearts of many Christians in this town have been yearning for a share in the blessings God has been so freely granting to other places. In November last the pastors of the associated Nonconformist churches summoned a united meeting of their members at the Wesleyan Chapel, for conference and prayer, at which it was resolved to commence a daily prayer-meeting at the Friends' Meeting-house. These meetings were continued with much profit till after the week of united prayer at the beginning of the present year. That week of prayer was followed, as in previous years, by a united Communion-service on Lord's-day evening, Jan. 10, at the Congregational Chapel. It was felt to be a very solemn yet joyous service. Just at this time one of the pastors spent a few days at Sheffield, during Mr. Moody's visit there. The reports he brought back, and communicated to the churches, deepened the growing desire for larger blessings. A meeting of pastors and officers was convened, at which it was unanimously resolved to invite Mr. Vicary, whose labours had been much blessed at Chard and elsewhere, to hold a week of special evangelistic services. These were conducted at the Town-hall, from Feb. 22 to 28. God honoured faith, and answered prayer. Drops of blessing had previously fallen on the various congregations, but now a shower descended. In response to invitations taken to every house in the town, the hall was crowded each night by an increasing number, till at the last service, on Sunday evening, Feb. 28, it was computed in a local newspaper that 2000 were present, while hundreds could not enter. The simple, earnest addresses of our beloved brother were blessed by God to many souls. At the after-meetings large numbers remained for prayer and conversation. The souls of Christians were warmed and encouraged, and many felt it to be the happiest week in their lives. Neighbouring villages and hamlets shared in the blessing. At the various weekly meetings, on Monday, March 1, arrangements were made for gathering up the results, and giving further help to the new converts and the awakened. The reports given at the mid-day prayer-meeting next day were highly encouraging. Weekly united evangelistic services will be continued for the present, and various other special efforts will be made for the spread of the kingdom of Christ in the town and neighbourhood. It is believed that there is a very widespread awakening among various classes, and the prayers of "the Lord's remembrancers" (Isa. liii. 6) are asked, that his servants may be guided and prospered in the work which, they trust, is opening before them.

CONVENTION AT BERNE.

My dear Brother,—For a whole week (4th to 11th Jan.) the people of God have been gathered in prayer, and have been seeking the face of the Lord. Many souls who had come to Berne weeping and with a heavy heart, have gone back to their homes light-hearted, and with a song of thanksgiving. Some came from Germany, many from the Protestant cantons of Switzerland, and the people from the rural districts were seen to flock in numbers, especially on market days.

All, or nearly all, the denominations of Christians in this place have united during this week; men of the National and the Free Church, Wesleyans of the Apostolic community, Baptists, and Moravian brethren, worked together in harmony, and have learned not only to respect but to love each other.

The people thronged especially to the evening prayer-meetings, so much so that during the three last days of the week they had to take place simultaneously in the hall of the Evangelical Society and the Free Church; both places were as crowded as possible; also the Bible-lecture of the afternoon had to be removed to the Eglise Française, a large building, containing easily 1500 hearers. But perhaps the best of the meetings were the prayer-meetings in the morning; great blessing was poured on them from on high. On Sunday, a large public meeting took place in the above-named church, which was crammed, the passages and galleries being full of standing people. Their number have been estimated at about 2000, perhaps more, who listened with unabated attention for two hours.

Our dear brethren, Rappard and Stockmeyer, both of whom went to Oxford last summer, were much owned by the Lord. They and Pasteur Riggenbach, of Basle, who is fully in the movement, and has given up his place in the National Church for conscience' sake, were the principal leaders of the meetings. Many souls found rest, especially in the smaller meetings. The Lord's Spirit was often felt to work in the assemblies, and I cannot express the mighty feeling which pervaded all of God's holy presence.

You can have no idea of the blessing which rested on this season of prayer and thanksgiving and people in the town wonder what all this means. The Lord has visited his people, glory be to his name now and for ever! What a joy to know that this is only the beginning of the good things which are to come, and that the whole land is before us, to be taken for our dear Lord Jesus Christ.

Receive our thanks, dear brethren and sisters, both in England and America, for your prayers on our behalf; and now let us all thank Him for his goodness unto the children of men. Continue to pray for us.—Believe me, yours in Christian bonds,

W. DE B.

TO YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.—All young men are invited to the meeting held every Friday evening in Moorgate-street Hall at eight o'clock.

SOLDIERS' HOME, THORPE HAMLET, NORWICH.—Dear Sir,—In answer to the fervent and earnest prayers of his children, the great God and Father has given us a copious shower of blessing among our soldiers. The Bible-readings, meetings for prayer, and also for the preaching of the glad tidings, have been well attended, not only on Sundays, but also during the week. Several have professed to find peace in Jesus, and we believe that others have been awakened also. The efforts of these dear fellows to induce their comrades to attend our tea-meeting last Thursday were crowned with success, and the room was filled. Short addresses were given by various friends, and some of the old favourite hymns (which many of them had learned at Sunday-school) were sung with an earnestness which showed that the men knew them by heart. A most fervent prayer from brother Davidson (who resides at the Home, and who has been himself a soldier) concluded this interesting gathering. The meeting last Sunday evening was especially solemn, not with mighty words of man's wisdom, but with the earnestness of men who believed what they preached, and with hearts full of love to precious souls, the messengers spake of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. A hymn was sung, and then, in clear, soft tones, rang out the sweet chimes of mercy. The most marked attention was depicted on every countenance, and we have reason to believe that the arrow winged by faith has reached their hearts. To God be all the glory! Tracts, donations, etc., will be most thankfully received by Mr. Davidson, who resides at the Home, but the prayers of Christian people are especially asked for.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

The following are the subjects and speakers for the ensuing week:—

DATE.	SUBJECT.	SPEAKER.
Th. 11.	"Learn of Me" (Matt. xi. 29).	Rev. W. Hay Chapman.
Fri. 12.	Sympathy of Jesus (Matt. ix. 36-38).	Mr. W. W. Smyth.
Sat. 13.	Salvation in possession and prospect (2 Tim. i. 12).	Rev. Edward Brewer.
Mon. 15.	Fruitfulness (John xv. 8).	Asa Mahan, D.D.
Tues. 16.	Trembling with power (Acts iv. 31).	J. Allen.
Wed. 17.	Temptations, and how to meet them.—"It is written" (Matt. iv. 10).	Thos. Richardson.

At the Friday evening prayer-meeting for young men Mr. J. J. Jones gave a short address, urging the young men present to join him in besieging the theatres, music halls, and dancing saloons, during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Many present at once volunteered their services, and it was decided to commence this work on Monday evening next (D. V.) after a meeting for prayer that God's blessing may rest on this effort. It is proposed that bands of six or more take their stand at the doors of these places of resort, giving to those who visit them a suitable tract, with notices on it of the various meetings to be held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Will all Christians who read this pray that a special blessing may follow the labours of these young men.

The children's services on Saturday afternoons have now been held for seven weeks. On several occasions the body of the hall has been nearly filled, but the very unfavourable weather on the last three Saturdays has diminished the attendance. There is, however, cause for much encouragement. Several friends bear testimony to good results, and letters have been received from Sunday-school teachers stating that the services have led to the conversion of scholars whom they have brought with them from a distance. Other services have also arisen out of these. With brighter weather it is hoped that many friends living within an easy walk will bring children and young people to the meetings, so that the hall may be well filled.

NOTICES.

THE ARMY AND NAVY PRAYER UNION.

In 1851, the late Captain Trotter founded the Army Prayer Union, and in the same year Sir Edward Parry founded a similar institution for the Royal Navy. In 1871 the officers of the two Services joined in an annual prayer-meeting, which has been ever since, and promises in years to come to be, a happy and profitable occasion to its frequenters.

The meeting for this year took place at Cannon-street Hotel on Saturday, the 6th inst.

Upwards of 150 were present. General Alexander, the honoured veteran, who presided, in a stirring address, in which he alluded to the fact of his having served as an officer in the Royal Navy during the war with France, exhorted his younger brethren to be ready to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Many fervent petitions were offered by members present, and the reading of a number of special requests for prayer was followed by silent supplication.

Lieut. Owen Hay, R.A., at the request of the Chairman, gave a short address, in which he dwelt on the precious words in Dan. xi. 32, so appropriate to the need of Christian soldiers and sailors, "But the people who do know their God shall be strong and do." Lieut. Hay spoke also of the faith of Jonathan's armour-bearer, and of the victory given by God to him and his master as blessed encouragements to those who desire to follow the Lord fully.

This hearty gathering of Christian officers was concluded by an after-meeting, presided over by Captain Liebenrood, R.N., at which interesting matters connected with the Lord's work in the Army and Navy were discussed by General Barleley Wilton, Colonel Puget, Lieut. Dawson, 6th Dragoons, Rev. Mr. Hardy, Chaplain of Chatham, Captain Phipps, R.N., and Major Hutchinson, R.A.

The Christian TRACT FUND.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.

Wm. Brock, 189, Kentish Town-road, N.W.
W. Reeves, No. 6, Albert Cottage, Gartree-street, Leicester.
John Salmon, 4, 5, 6, Bell-alley, Goswell-road, St. Luke's, E.C.

As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers should be carefully read before being given away.

SPECIAL PRAYER FOR IRELAND.—The Council of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, invite Christians to unite in prayer for Ireland on St. Patrick's day, 17th inst.

"MOUNTAINS OF BREAD."—Miss Georgina Thompson, the author of this series of little books, will be glad to hear from any of her friends. Address, Parkgate, Cheshire.

CAPETOWN.—A statement made by a correspondent, that in the diocese of Capetown the divinity of Christ is denied, and that in the Cathedral there the second clause in the doxology, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost," is omitted, is contradicted by Rev. E. Glover, M.A., late an Archdeacon of George, Cape Diocese, and Canon of St. George's Cathedral, who writes from an acquaintance of twenty years with the Cathedral, and with every part of the Cape Diocese, and with every clergyman in it.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For great mental improvement in a dear brother, in answer to prayer.—For improvement in two of the three drunkards for whom prayer was requested.—That a husband who was a backslider, has been reclaimed during the late Mission services in Leeds, and is now happy in Jesus.—By a Christian mother, for signal answers to prayer on behalf of her two sons, delivered out of snares laid by Satan for their ruin.—For a believer, long troubled by Satan with deep spiritual depression, now graciously restored, strengthened, and established, and labouring happily and acceptably in the Lord's vineyard.—For a great blessing on the word spoken at Oulton, Suffolk. Many souls have found peace and joy in believing.—That during the week of prayer in Basutoland, South Africa, sixty-one souls at one station, and sixteen at another, were led to confess faith in the Lord Jesus. Pray for the Missions of the Church of France.—Praise the living God for a glorious work at Begnor. Hundreds have been awakened, and very many are rejoicing in their newly-found Saviour.

PRAYER.—On behalf of a children's special service held in the South of London, that personal help may be sent.—On behalf of a boys' and girls' daily prayer-meeting, which has been carried on over eighteen months, that the time spent in prayer, out of our dinner-hour may be a great blessing to the school.—That a young clergyman, occupying an important sphere, may be preserved from the errors of Ritualism.—For the father of a family, who is addicted to intemperance.—For a class of lads attending a Sunday evening Bible-class, the teacher of whom has just found that they are in the habit of going to a Messing for the rest of the evening after leaving her. They have now to decide between the beer-shop and the class.—For a beloved brother, who left home some years ago, and has not since been heard of, that he may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.—For the recovery of Richard Weaver, now Aerohopy, Ill.

For a beloved sister, in the last stage of consumption, much distressed with doubts and fears.—For a young Christian officer in India, in an ungodly regiment.—For one who once "did run well," now a backslider, and letting his fine family grow up in worse than forgetfulness of God.—For a lady, severely afflicted for more than twenty years, and often in acute pain for many hours.—For a daughter, who is grievously afflicted.—For an aged aunt of seventy-three, much under the power of intemperance.—For power to be given to a father, a church officer-bearer, who is easily overcome by intoxicating drink.—For a dear sister, that she may be restored to reason.—That an elderly lady in delicate health may be brought to Jesus.

PLACES.—For a revival of God's work in the town of Neath.—For the town of Ross, Herefordshire, during a united effort now being made.—For a series of meetings in the parish of Stonykirk, Wigtownshire, from March 14 to 28.—For blessing on meetings now being held at Over Darwen.—For God's blessing on the house-to-house visitation which is being carried on in the neighbourhood of Felsted.—For a Mission to be held in Cinderford parish, Forest of Dean, March 14 to 21; Mission preacher, Rev. James Turner.—For Stowmarket, Suffolk.—For the parish of Keinton Mandeville, Somerset, where special efforts are being made.—For a Mission in Nottingham, to be conducted by the Rev. J. Calvert, of Sheffield, and Miss Savill, of Bristol, commencing on March 11, and continuing ten days at least—longer, if the Lord will.—For Mission services in the parish of Ainstable, Cumberland, commencing March 14.—For special services to be held at Calne, by Mr. Somerset Gardner and Mr. Marshall, March 8 to 12.—For an awakening in the town of Nairn, N.B.—For the Mission next week at St. Andrews', Oldham, by Rev. G. J. Watts.—For the villages of Fifeshire.

CONVERSIONS.—For three husbands, five sisters, three brothers, two mothers, two fathers.—For a merchant and his wife, who scoff at the name of Jesus, and cruelly persecute their eldest son, who has been drawn to the Saviour's fold, and is working for Him.—For a father, lamentably self-deceived, that his eyes may be opened to see himself, and to see Jesus.—For two ungodly neighbours.—For a brother-in-law, who is the slave of drink; also for his wife.—My heart is hard and stubborn; pray that I may soon find peace in Jesus.—On behalf of a son, aged twenty-five, smitten with a very serious, most probably fatal, disease, unsaved.—For a husband and wife.—That an only brother, professing to be a freethinker, may be brought to Christ speedily.—For a young chemist, under deep concern for his soul's welfare.—For two brothers in London, three brothers in York, one brother in Manchester.

Requests must be accompanied by the name and address of the sender. Each request should be written on a separate half-sheet of note-paper. Those requests not inserted will be sent to one of the noon prayer-meetings. The number received is far more than we have space to insert.

FORTHCOMING SPECIAL MEETINGS.

MR. B. PEARSALL SMITH, on his way from Philadelphia, U. S., to Germany, expects to pass through London shortly, and will (D.V.) hold a Consecration Service at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross-road (C. B. Sawday's), on Thursday evening, March 11, at 7.30. Also at Y.M.C.A., 165, Aldersgate-street, Friday, March 12, at 3.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. Spiers at Frome till March 12; Bradford (Yorks), Mechanics' Institute, March 15 to 20; St. George's Hall, March 21 to 26.

Children's Evangelistic Band.—Mr. Rickards at Hemel Hempstead, March 11; Mr. Kerwin at Windsor, March 12, 13, 14; Mr. Hill at Wesleyan Schools, Sevenoaks, March 14, 21; Mr. Russell at Friends' Meeting House, Hemmings-row, St. Martin's-lane, March 15, 16, 17, at 7; Saturday afternoon, March 13, at 3, Moorgate-street Hall, Mr. Hill and Mr. G. The Christian.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

"What means this eager, anxious throng,
Moving with busy haste along;
These wondrous gatherings day by day;
What means this strange commotion, pray?"

Does it mean that, down deep in the hearts of men, there is "an aching void the world can never fill"? and that, making all allowance for curiosity, excitement, novelty, and every similar cause or motive, the creature made in the image of God, but deceived and ruined by His enemy, does still believe in God and Satan, in righteousness and sin, in heaven and hell, and, even in darkness and the shadow of death, feels after God, if haply he may find Him, though He be not far from every one of us? Does it mean that though men turn from the rapid and weary "performance" of divine service, they will crowd to hear the realities of eternity spoken of as though they were realities, and not pretences? Does it mean that when the people perceive that there is gold in the bank for all the notes issued, that the preacher has staked his all, not only for eternity, but for time, upon the truths he testifies, and that he speaks that he knows, and testifies that he has seen—the publicans and sinners will draw near; the common people will hear him gladly; the multitude will press upon him, through him to touch the Master, as many as have plagues; yea, that even scribes and Pharisees will come from Jerusalem to Galilee, though it be only to sit reasoning in their hearts while Jesus is healing diseases and forgiving sins?

Does it mean that when God's servants, owning and acting upon the laws of life and nature, and knowing how the human heart is soothed by minstrelsy and moved by song, give the gospel not only to the understanding but to the affections, the people will be very attentive for to hear? Does it mean that men only want to be reminded and assured that

"Our Father in heaven Tells of his love in the Book He has given," that Christ is indeed the Desire of all nations, and that when Jesus is presented as the Love-gift of God, when the Son of Man, lifted up from the earth in death upon the cross, and in resurrection and ascension to the right hand of God, is lifted up in the preaching of a crucified and risen Christ, He will draw all men unto Him? Does it mean that the almighty God "is a very meek and gentle Being," and that He will stoop to woo, by songs as simple as nursery rhymes, his loved, lost children, and to gather by the sound of tinkling bells his scattered sheep? Because, though

"Cursed by the Law, and bruised by the Fall, Christ hath redeemed us once for all."

Does it mean that Jerusalem has cried,

"Awake, awake! put on strength, O Arm of JEHOVAH!
Awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old!
Art thou not it that hath cut Bahab, and wounded the dragon?
Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep;
That hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?"

and that JEHOVAH is again replying as of old—

"Awake, awake! put on thy strength, O Zion;
Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem the holy city:
Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem:
Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion!"

Does it mean that Jehovah is speaking thus:—"This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste? Now therefore, thus saith Jehovah, Consider your ways. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house, and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified." Does it mean that notwithstanding our manifold and perpetual and increased backslidings, our just and merciful and faithful God still says, "Be strong and work: for I am with you. According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not." "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

Does it mean still more than this? Does it mean that not only the Gospel of the Grace of God, but the Gospel of the Kingdom, shall again be preached?

When the times of the Gentiles were ushered in, consequent upon the apostasy and captivity of Israel and Judah, the king Nebuchadnezzar and the prophet Daniel each had a vision of the course of empire. The king was seeing, and behold, a great image, the symbol of a kingdom fourfold but one—the world-power under four successive stages of downward development, from gold to clay. The glory of absolute power glowed in the royalty of Nebuchadnezzar, its golden head; for the God of heaven had made him a king of kings, and given him a kingdom, power, strength, and glory; whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive. The kingly prerogative degenerated into silver in the breast and arms which represented the Medo-Perian monarchy, whose kings were subject to the laws they made, and could not reverse the edict they had sealed, even to save a prophet from the fraud and violence of wicked men, though that prophet were Daniel in the lions' den. Still further did the kingly power wane in the belly and thighs of brass, which metal fitly represented the military character of the Macedonian empire. And lower still did it decline into the partly strong and partly brittle legs and feet of iron and clay which were the symbols of the Roman empire. Daniel saw the same fourfold world-kingdom under the figure of four beasts rising out of the sea. And both to king and prophet it was revealed that this kingdom of earth shall pass away, and be broken and succeeded by the kingdom of the Son of Man.

When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, who, having been baptized, and having in the wilderness defeated the tempter, the prince of this world, came preaching, as John, his herald had preached before, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" First the human voice, and then the Divine Word—first the dying dispensation crying in the wilderness, by the voice of its greatest because its last prophet, as it decreased and vanished away, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" and then the Everlasting Age, through the lips of the mighty God, the Prince of peace, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, "The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the Gospel."

The Little Stone has now been cut out of the mountain without hand; the Kingdom of God is among them as a people, and within them, as many as would receive it. Soon the multitudes gather round Him, and He goes up into a mountain, opening his mouth and teaching them the principles and laws of the kingdom of heaven. "Blessed are the poor in spirit; the mourning ones; the meek; the hungerers and thirsters after righteousness; the merciful; the pure; the peace-makers." How harmless a code! How unmolested these blessed ones will be. No: they are the salt of the earth; and because they are the salt they will be reviled and persecuted, and all manner of evil will be said of them falsely for King Jesus' sake—so long as the salt maintains its savour. They are the light of the world, and the world hateth them because the light shineth in darkness, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. Some men say they despise the doctrine of the blood—the religion of the shambles, as they blasphemously dare to call it; but they hail the Sermon on the Mount as the exposition of the religion suitable for man. Why, the very first beatitude is a lever placed beneath the foundation-stone of the kingdom of this world. If it be true that "blessed are the poor in spirit," all the pomp and pride and glory of man is, at a stroke, laid low; all the grandeur of courts, all the glory of battlefields, withers and dies beneath this breath of God. The meek and lowly Man who has opened his mouth and uttered this one brief sentence, has expressed the irreconcilable antagonism between the foundation principle of the kingdom of the world and the Kingdom of Heaven.

Soon this antagonism is made manifest; for a moment, the people, healed and fed, would take Him by force and make Him King; but He withdraws himself, his hour is not come. Three years bring the conflict to a crisis; the prince of this world will have no other kingdom established within his own; Satan cannot afford to have an imperium in imperio; God's King must die; God suffers it, and He himself consents; for now is his kingdom not from hence. The saints, the holy ones, are to possess the kingdom and to reign with Him; and they must be washed from their sins in his blood, and therefore He must die. Read his accusation. "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the KING of the Jews." Now, what Herod attempted at Bethlehem, Pilate has accomplished outside Jerusalem; he has put to death the KING of the Jews, for He is David's heir; the KING of men, for He is the second Adam.

The apostles went forth and preached the KINGDOM—The crucified Jesus is Lord and Christ—the rejected Stone is the Head of the corner. Being poor in spirit, they obey God rather than men, and at Philippi the magistrates complain that these men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city. At Thessalonica, the people and rulers, troubled because the apostles affirm that there is another KING, one Jesus, cry in alarm, "These that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also." At Ephesus, Paul spake boldly for three months the things concerning the KINGDOM of God, and those few weeks sufficed to show what the inevitable result would be: the temple of the great goddess Diana would be despised, and her magnificence destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshipped.

Our preaching of the Gospel has long failed to produce any such effects as these, though Jesus still lays his hands upon a few sick folk, and heals them. We ask again, What does this present movement mean? Does it mean the restoration of the former power with the preaching?

This will come with the restoration of the apostolic Gospel, preached by apostolic men, and witnessed by the love and unity which the Son of God declared was a prime condition of the world's belief that the Father had sent Him. Then will God also himself bear witness with signs, and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

As her Majesty's ships "Alert" and "Discovery" are fitting out here for this expedition, and are likely to leave in a few weeks, may I say how desirable it seems to me that the poor fellows composing the crews, who will be almost entirely cut off from the world for three years, should take plenty of good yet interesting reading with them? The kind most suitable would, I think, be bound parts of the British Workman (ten years), Sunday at Home, Herald of Mercy, and such like publications.

May I suggest that a fund be started, called the "Arctic Fund," and that you kindly receive any sums contributed for this purpose, so that within a few days of the ships sailing the money may be advantageously spent? I shall be happy to see any books, etc., placed on board.

A friend of mine, Mr. Tranham, 64, Broad-street, Portsmouth (holding an official position that brings him into contact with the merchant vessels calling here), is doing what he can to supply English and foreign vessels with Testaments and tracts, and will be glad of any assistance; as also my dear friend, Mr. Henry Cook, of Gosport, who is engaged in a similar work.—Yours in Jesus,

H.M. Dockyard, Portsmouth.

A TRIO OF EVANGELISTS.

Those in Britain who have been praying for the United States will accept it as an answer to their petitions from our ever-gracious God to learn that, in addition to native preachers, who open up the divine Word, and lead men to Christ, the feet of others have been directed to our country.

At this present date, that honoured evangelist, Henry Varley, is preaching in New York. Those who know Mr. Varley's power and faithfulness will rejoice that he has large opportunities in this great city of ministering the gospel of the grace of God.

Henry Moorhouse is in Chicago, the adopted home of Mr. Moody, where he hopes to labour for some weeks. Much blessing was granted him at Rochester, as in other cities already visited.

George C. Needham is again in the South. His present sphere of labour is the city of Augusta, Ga. Great indications of a deep and widespread work are already manifest. He hopes to labour in southern cities until May, when he returns to his home in Philadelphia, to carry on his tent-work in that city.

An interesting occurrence transpired recently, when this trio of evangelists met, without any pre-arrangement of their own. It was gratifying to each of them; and, after a moment of fellowship, they separated again for their respective fields, in good health and cheerful spirits, greatly encouraged with the results of Bible-readings and gospel services.

Dear brethren, remember these hard-working labourers very frequently in your prayers, and do not forget our side of the ocean.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.—The Lord is greatly blessing the labours of the agents of this society. One, writing from Dorking a short time ago, gives most interesting and encouraging details of his work there. He says, "Truly God is with me. If you could only see how my visits are appreciated, it would make you happy. Often it is, 'God bless you, Mr. B.; do come again as soon as you can.' And one neighbour sends me to see another." During the past year the colporteurs have worked in forty different districts, sold above a hundred thousand religious periodicals, and Bibles and sound literature to the extent of more than £3000. Funds are now pressingly needed.

OTAGO.—Since the news of the glorious revival in Scotland reached us here there has been a general desire and expectancy to share in the blessing. Prayer has ascended to the Lord from many hearts; special meetings have been held, and already we have been visited by special manifestations of the love and power of God in the conversion of some and the reviving of others. For myself I may state that I have seen more real fruit of my labours during the last six or eight months than for years before. And I hope we have seen but the earnest of a harvest yet to come. The institution of union prayer-meetings has resulted in the co-operation of Christians of different branches of the Church, which is a ground of thanksgiving. A. B. T.

FOR THE YOUNG.

FRUIT AFTER MANY DAYS.

About forty years ago, a young minister, on a mission to a distant village from the town in which he resided, was staying for a night at a gentleman's house. A little girl, about four years of age, was very much interested in this minister, and began to chat and play with him. By-and-by the little girl's mamma told her that it was time for her to go to bed, and so she would ring for the nurse.

In the meantime, the minister took the little girl upon his knee, and began to talk to her in a very engaging manner about Jesus.

"Now, my dear," he said, "I am going to tell you one thing which I hope you will never forget. Will you remember what I am going to say?"

She looked with her bright, clear eyes into his face, and said, "Oh yes; what is it?"

Then, putting his hands gently on her head, he slowly said, "My dear, if you don't love Jesus, you never can be happy. Now I will tell you that once more." He repeated the words, "My dear, if you don't love Jesus, you never can be happy." And again he asked, "Will you remember that?"

The child said, "Yes."

About thirty years after that visit, the minister was called to the same village. When they were seated at the breakfast table, the lady of the house, whose husband and children were also at the table, all at once looked very earnestly at him, and inquired whether he had ever been there before. He could not remember. She then mentioned one or two things, which brought the circumstance to his mind that he was in that village at the beginning of his ministry. Presently he remembered the house in which he was a guest for one night. The lady reminded him how he spoke these impressive words of counsel to a little girl, "If you don't love Jesus, you never can be happy." He saw the tears in her eyes. She said, "I was that little girl. Often your words came to my memory, and re-echoed in my mind, when I was giddy and thoughtless—If you don't love Jesus, you never can be happy." And these were the means of bringing me, years ago, to love my Saviour, since which time I have indeed been happy."

FLOWERS—FOR JESUS' SAKE.

Again the hedges, tipped with tiny coral buds, primroses, and daffodils peeping up amid the brushwood, golden-eyed celandines and daisies lifting their sweet faces with smiles of welcome, remind us of the near approach of the bright spring-time. But the heart is saddened, and the joy of seeing this fresh burst of resurrection-loveliness is clouded, when we turn to gloomy, stifling courts and lanes in the crowded cities, where gleams of sunshine scarce ever penetrate; the lives of whose miserable inhabitants are yet more utterly devoid of brightness; to whom the voice of spring is an unmeaning sound; to sick ones in these courts, who have no easier couch for the pain-filled limbs than a heap of shavings on the hard floor of a room filled with noisy children, and disorderly men and women; to other sufferers tossing feverishly in hospital wards, with nothing softer for the tired eyes to rest on than the endless stretch of whitewashed walls, the background of long rows of patients, whose sad pale cheeks vie in whiteness with the sheets and walls: and the cry ascends—

"Oh that a tithe of the wealth of fragrant, many-coloured flowers so lavishly spread over gardens, fields, and hedgerows, could be brought to cheer those who so dearly prize each separate bloom!"

And once more down, deeper down, into the haunts of vice, smiling so sweetly with the radiance of heaven-sent gifts, these messengers may go—ready-made missionaries—to open doors and hearts fast locked hitherto, but which must yield to their gentle influence; and thus prepare the way for the ministry of the word of salvation.

Oh that men and women surrounded by loveliness could see as the angels do!—strong natures, hardened by years of sin, whose stony hearts are melted at sight of the flowers, and weep (as only such can) when the deep hidden springs are touched, and memory recalls days of childhood's innocence, long, long past; lessons in that village Sabbath-school of the holy God; the story of the Son of his love dying in the stead of guilty sinners, to raise them to the bright, pure land above, where is no sin, no curse, no sorrow, but cloudless day and endless rest and joy; and the spotless flowers seem to beckon them onwards and upwards, to seek and find the way thither; for are not the flowers one of the first links in that chain of love which draws the poor, wearied, sinful heart up to God and heaven?

Ah! and would to God the country folk might hear! ay, and that the sounds could penetrate into the halls and castles of our land; the silent cry of hospitals with several hundreds of patients, and but rarely a flower—

"I should so like a little buttercup."

And the weary murmur of gladness that steals through the wards when a chance bouquet is brought in; and the heartfelt blessings from many dying lips on the flower-gatherers.

"Tell them we may never meet on earth, but we shall thank them in heaven."

"Oh! could the veil be lifted for a brief moment, and the dull ears quickened to catch the pleading accents of the blessed Lord—"Do it unto Me"—none would longer count their flowers and fruit their own, the Royal seal would be seen on each, whether growing wild in copses, or carefully nurtured in hothouse and conservatory, and these treasures would be poured out for those so sadly needing them. "For Jesus' sake!"

E. A. H.

N.B. It is hoped to establish a regular "Flower-Mission" among the poor of London, and two depots will be opened on March 30, for the supply of the missions and hospitals nearest to them. Contributions of flowers (or money for this object) will be thankfully received by the Secretary of the Flower Mission, at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spital-fields, E., or at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., if sent before eleven a.m. on Tuesday and Thursday mornings, during the spring and summer months. Flowers will travel best if placed in water for two hours before packing; and if tied in bunches and tiny bouquets would greatly facilitate the work of the Flower Missionaries.

FALLING SHOWERS.

"There is a sound of abundance of rain."

Oh, Christians of London, awake! awake!
For rich clouds of blessing around us break
In many a fruitful shower;
But there's a store untouched, so nigh!
The hand of Jehovah is lifted high
In Pentecostal power.

Oh, Christians of London, arise, and pray!
How thick is the crowd on the broad highway
That leads straight down to hell.
Can ye see them rush on that fatal leap,
And your soul in no "secret places weep,"
As ye hear eternity's knell?

Oh, Christians of London, arise, and plead!
At your family altars pour out the need
Of the mightiest city on earth.
Let your children see that God's kingdom lies
In your heart of hearts as the dearest prize,
Surpassing all else in worth.

Oh, Christians of London, go, panting, athirst
For the water of life, as ye came at the first
To the wells of salvation so deep!
For, as ye expect, shall your Father impart,
And faith, love, and joy shall spring up in your heart,
And perennial festival keep.

IS GOD IN ALL OUR THOUGHTS ?

A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIAN MEN OF BUSINESS.

I have before me at this minute three recent numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, bearing dates respectively, Jan. 28, Feb. 4, Mar. 4, in which four sentences appear indicating a most pressing, but, I fear, painful subject for the consideration of your readers.

As I have been led to look at and take some amount of determined action in connection with this matter during the past few years, bearing not a little consequent ridicule, I may perhaps venture a remark or two, not with the object of now discussing the subject, but of drawing attention to its importance to all those "who would live godly in this present world."

"Commercial Immorality,"—"Tricks of Trade,"—the two headings will at once indicate the subject to which I refer, and which has been laid upon my heart with daily increasing heaviness.

The numbers before me contain the following sentences:—

Jan. 28, page 5. This admirable article, entitled "Buying and Selling," by the Rev. G. Bowden, is full of heart-rending but by no means exaggerated statements about the root of the evil. A few lines towards the end are, alas, only too true, as many a broken-hearted mother can testify, who has witnessed the gradual decline of Christian life and holiness on the part of her son, who, lured on by the hope of success, has left the integrity of a quiet country home to obtain a situation in one of our large cities. Mr Bowden says—

"All who have to deal with consciences quickened by divine truth find this constantly, that a youth brought from the instructions of a pious mother, or from the earnest teachings of the Sabbath-school, is made to start, and question, by many a thing which is done in commercial life; he finds his love of truth and right subjected perpetually to a very severe strain; he is led into a conflict in which, too frequently, he is very weak."

Feb. 4, page 5. Article headed "Some Signs of this Time." The fifth paragraph contains the following words:—

"Another book is lying before us, 'Sins of Trade and Business,' by the Hon. and Rev. Canon Lyttelton, and 'The Morals of Trade,' by Herbert Spencer (Isbister). A great subject of inquiry is opened here."

Mar. 4, page 11. Your correspondent's graphic account of the work of the Lord in Liverpool has these words:—

"The Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken stated that at the conclusion of the previous Sunday's service, a barman came to him and told him that he feared he could not go on with his occupation and serve God. Moreover, he said that he had his father dependent upon him. He told the man to trust in God, and recited cases in which God had not forsaken those who had so trusted in Him. After a few minutes' struggle the young man was able to throw himself entirely on the Lord, and he thought that he had left the church a believer in Christ. Mr. Aitken concluded with a prayer that God might give the barman and others who felt that they could not continue their occupations and serve God, strength and courage to face the world."

From the same article, page 13, the following is extracted:—

"Mr. Moody was very severe on the spirit of compromise that is too manifest among professing Christians at the present day, and which is a source of much of the feebleness and failure of modern Christianity."

Now these short extracts, which are unselected examples, indicate an unrest which, I believe, prevails very largely amongst Christians who are seeking after a fuller consecration of self and service; and I also believe that they are indicative of one of the most hideous foes of the Christian man of business.

It is an admitted fact that much evil does exist in the detail-working of most businesses; but rare is the case in which men of good or even Christian principles are found to "suffer loss," rather than make compromises which, seen or unseen by fellow-men, dishonour Jesus Christ.

If it be thought that this is too bold a statement, let those witness who have passed through the "departments" of a house of business, from boy in the cashier's box to chief in the office, let the extract from Mr. Bowden's address confirm, and Mr. Moody's severe words, denouncing "the spirit of compromise that is too manifest among professing Christians at the present day," be accepted as further confirmation.*

These gentlemen are too considerate, and know too well the meaning of our Saviour's words, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," to make such assertions without evidence enough and to spare to corroborate their statements. No, it is the truth, and the truth must be stated at all costs. Too long already has it been concealed. A deceiver, bearing the counterfeit coin of "charity," has thrown the mantle over the viper which is sucking the Christian life-blood from the veins of the Church. Surely it is high time that men, Christian men, should "dare to do right, dare to be true," as our dear little children, in all the artlessness of their young lives, sing so enthusiastically, but with such little effect upon the lives of an appreciative adult audience.

The writer of the article, "Some Signs of this Time," suggests a conference of Christian men of business, "to consider how to harmonize the morals of commerce with the morals of the Bible." How pregnant the suggestion! How sad that facts should warrant such a supposition of need! †

Another religious weekly journal has just come to hand, containing a leader headed, "Commercial Immorality," two short sentences of which allow me to quote, as substantiating my foregoing remarks.

"Not a few thoughtful men among us look and speak with considerable alarm upon the present condition of the commercial world... Customs are tolerated and fostered, even by men who profess to be among the most honourable, which cannot be defended by any true code of morals.

"We are assured that there is no revival more needed at the present time than the revival of the Christian conscience in every-day transactions of commerce."

I must not trespass further. May the Holy Spirit of God shed light where darkness exists, and incline the hearts of all his own children to "trust in God, and do the right."—Yours in Him, C. EDWIN GOOD.

* Another correspondent writes:—"I have rejoiced to read your article 'Some Signs of this Time,' and especially the paragraph referring to 'Sins of Trade and Business.' It is high time some voice was lifted up to loudly call attention to this matter. There is another 'cleansing of the temple' needed, and none know this better than Christian men themselves. I am confident that I speak for thousands when I say, 'We, being Christians, are disgusted with and ashamed of many things we do in our business life. We know they are not strictly honest and honourable; our consciences tell us so; but we seem compelled to continue them, they have become such long-standing trade customs, that business cannot be done without them. Young converts, who are most likely to be startled by these questionable practices, are silenced when they find that older Christians make no protest. Deacons and elders, men high in the estimation of the churches, and influential in religious movements, permit them in their businesses, and do not scruple to make their fortunes by them. Oh, may it not be that, at the daily prayer-meetings for business men, God is saying as of old, 'When ye make many prayers, I will not hear. Your hands are full of blood: wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doing from before mine eyes. Cease to do evil; learn to do well.'?"

† Should any of our readers think the subject to be of sufficient practical importance for the suggestion to be carried out, we shall be most happy to be the recipient of their communications, with such a meeting in view.—Ed.

THE USUAL MONTHLY LECTURE to members of the Open-air Mission was delivered by Rev. J. Culross, D.D. The subject was, "The Preacher's Commission." A conference was held afterwards as to the duties devolving on the Mission during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

DORSETSHIRE.—A good work is going on in the villages of Dorsetshire, through the instrumentality of two evangelists, Messrs. Harris and Harrison. They have been labouring with blessed results during the month of February at Yetminster, Leigh, Thornford, and Melbury. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we rejoice. Many, we trust, have been brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus, and backsliders reclaimed. In a small class of children under my care, eight found peace in Jesus.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

ADDRESS BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE AT Y.M.C.A., ALDERSGATE-STREET.

A short time ago there came a converted Jew into the little noon meeting at Liverpool. He had been reading the charge of one of our judges. He is a successful preacher of the gospel, but as he read this charge he was profoundly impressed with the conviction that the public preaching of the gospel would never reach the brutality and other vices so prevalent in Liverpool and other large towns. He prayed at the meeting, and afterwards spoke a few words to the same effect—that there must be something in addition to public preaching—viz., going to the population at their own homes. The reply was made that the thing was perfectly feasible, as twenty years ago, in that very town, it was acted out, and every house was visited. So the matter was left. A few days afterwards, Mr. Moody had a meeting at Manchester for workers on a Saturday night, at which he asked me to say a word or two. I said that the public preaching could never reach our populations in England, and that there must be something in addition. What I said commended itself to him, and he asked me to go to Manchester and organize house-to-house visitation there. Manchester was visited from house to house from one end to the other, and there were some remarkable results. Just to encourage the ladies here, I may say that two ladies visited a public-house, and the publican vainly endeavoured to shake them off, by saying he was an atheist. The result was that he advertised his place for sale. Many souls that were visited in different houses were there and then led to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ.

It was attempted to be done in Sheffield, and an excellent clergyman of the Church of England wrote for 30,000 of Mr. Moody's leaflets. He happened, however, to be on Mr. Moody's committee, and some little difficulty arose among the Church of England clergymen on the committee as to distributing these leaflets in their neighbours' parishes without being requested. When we heard in Manchester of this little difficulty, we prayed that this apparent defeat might be turned into a great victory, and it was so. Though for the moment these clergymen withdrew from the committee, in about forty-eight hours they were all re-instated in their places. It was found, however, that it would be better not to have a visitation in Sheffield at that time, in consequence of this little difficulty.

In order to avoid in Liverpool what might be called this parochial or technical difficulty, it was determined not to ask any clergyman to be a superintendent of the work, but to ask him to recommend some Christian layman, or Christian woman to act, and so the whole difficulty was got over. It was also thought best under the circumstances not to ask any Nonconformist minister to act as superintendent, but that they should recommend some one in like manner. Mr. Moody asked me to come to London and arrange for the visitation here, and in London the same plan is being pursued.

We have been at the work now for some little time, and the Lord is with us in a very remarkable manner. Seven or eight hundred superintendents are required for the work, and we have only got between two and three hundred. Many have declined on account of other engagements, but we are persuaded that whether we get many or few, the Lord will go before us, and that the work will be accomplished if we do not get another single volunteer. If other volunteers do not come, then those that have come will have to do treble work; they must do what they can to finish one district, then turn to another, and finish that, and then turn to a third, and attempt to finish London. But I believe volunteers are coming in every day, and almost every hour.

Mr. Radcliffe requested those present who were to volunteer to obtain first of all a recommendation from their minister, so as to save the committee the labour of procuring these recommendations.

What do we want? he continued. We want persons as superintendents who would have some Christian acquaintances either amongst the rich or the poor, and who would gather around them from ten to twenty of these friends, and explain the thing to them, pray with and for them, and find a way of supplying the leaflet by Mr. Moody. The visitors would go out in couples,—we ask them to go in couples, though sometimes they go alone—and distribute these leaflets. Only just now I have come straight from Mr. Spurgeon's, where they have received us most kindly, and have taken fourteen districts. I told Mr. Spurgeon I reckoned on their taking thirty districts. Nearly the whole of their students, I think, will go out in couples. One of them happened to be a superintendent in another part of London, and when I was there he stood up and said, "In our district the visitors find that the doors fly open to receive them. The people have heard of Mr. Moody, and they want to hear something more about him." Here let me give you a caution. Do not be content with getting a promise, or twenty promises, to go and hear Mr. Moody, but take hold of the man and try to bring him there and then to Christ. We have found a disposition in London, as in Liverpool, for persons to come and say, "Oh, yes, I will provide one hundred labourers," or persons come and say, "We will take the bills round and invite the people to the meeting." That is not what we want. We want you to go calmly and prayerfully, in dependence on the Spirit of God, and endeavour, there and then to bring the people to Christ. It is far better to make six visits of this kind in a day than to invite one hundred people to the meetings. We need not be in any hurry. The work is not a large one when undertaken for the Lord, and it is in the Lord's name we are going. It is a very little thing for the Lord, if you will only have faith in Him; it is nothing to Him to move four millions of people.

Then there are other towns in England; we want the whole population of England to be visited at their own homes. A Londoner has told me that there is a district of London, with a population of 83,000, and having church and chapel accommodation for only 13,000; 70,000 unprovided for. I do not speak slightly of any of my dear brethren here, but I say this, that England is not to be evangelized by public preaching; it will not be done by galloping through the place and asking the people to come and hear any public preacher. The great meetings at the Agricultural Hall will only accommodate about 16,000 people. How can 4,000,000 of people go there? Besides, we are taking 30 miles across London,—15 miles each way from Charing Cross, and it is absolutely preposterous to think that all these people can go to the Agricultural Hall, or any of the other places in London where the meetings may be. We must go to them. After Stephen was stoned to death, there were five thousand men and women scattered abroad; they went everywhere declaring the good news of salvation. Without having another Stephen stoned to death, we want the Christians to be scattered abroad in this way. I wait on God in this matter with my whole heart. Shall our heavenly Father have us wait in vain? Whether you help us or not, we shall go through London, and works will be started in consequence, that will go on, and branch out in many ways, after some of us are laid low.

Those few that are working are going through London to blessed victory. At our meeting at Great Marlborough-street last night, some of our visitors could scarcely contain their feelings of joy at the way in which souls had been brought to trust in Christ. I could give you instances that would cheer you abundantly. There are friends here who have visited in the north of London, who have seen the tears running down people's cheeks from conviction of sin, but who have also seen them happy in trusting in Christ. They have found souls who have been anxious for years, and who have said that no one has spoken to them about their souls.

Admiral Fishbourne mentioned an encouraging fact. A lady who was excessively timid refused at first to take any part in the work. A friend told her that she must dismiss all her fears. Last night she went out, and on returning she said, "I have spent the happiest day I ever spent in my life." A remarkable blessing attended her work; she had been the means of leading persons to trust in the Lord. If there were any ladies who had the same difficulty, let them go forward, and they would be equally blessed.

MESSESS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

The special services to be conducted in London during the next four months by our American brethren have commenced. The time that has been looked, and longed, and prayed, for so earnestly these past months has arrived, and we trust it has brought with it the day of London's visitation. Jesus of Nazareth seems now to be passing by. Mr. Moody struck the right key-note on Tuesday evening, in his opening words, when he asked the great audience to "praise God for what He was going to do in London." If any good work is to be done, it will be God's work, not man's; and yet the measure of the work will be in proportion to the faith of God's children.

NOON MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

The first noon prayer-meeting in Exeter Hall was held on Tuesday, 9th inst. As it was known that Messrs. Moody and Sankey would not be present, the numbers were not large. Lord Radstock presided, and an address was given by Rev. W. Hay Chapman, on 1 Chron. xiv. 15, "And it shall be when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, then thou shalt go out to battle." The requests for prayer were read by Rev. R. D. Wilson, of Craven Chapel.

At the meeting on Wednesday Messrs. Moody and Sankey were both present, and the hall was crowded, many, we understand, being unable to gain an entrance. All the evangelical sections of the Church were represented on the platform.

Mr. Moody opened the proceedings by giving out the hymn, "Sweet hour of prayer," which was heartily sung by the vast company, led by Mr. Sankey and the large choir that has been for some time in training for these services.

The requests for prayer were read by Rev. W. H. Chapman; and, after a brief period of silent prayer, Rev. Mr. Miller offered supplication to God on behalf of the various special subjects mentioned among the requests.

Mr. Moody's short address was based on Jer. xxxii. 17, "Ah, Lord God, behold Thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power, and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for Thee." He said this had been their watchword in every town where they had gone during the last twenty months. It was a good thing to remember, as they came day by day bringing their requests to God, that nothing was too hard for Him. They were asked to pray for the drunkard, the sceptic, the infidel, and all classes of people, and they would become discouraged unless their eyes were lifted up to God. It was as easy for God to save the drunkard as for him to lift his hand. It seemed as if God were pleased with Jeremiah's faith, and in the twenty-sixth verse he answered the prophet, "I am the Lord, the God of all flesh; is there anything too hard for Me?" Then the second time the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, in chap. xxxiii. He said, "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." It was, said Mr. Moody, as if God came into the hall, and challenged the Christians of London now to call on Him, and He would do great things. God delights to do great things; He delights to give. He gave his Son to the world without the world asking for Him. It would have been considered blasphemy if a man had stood up on the other side of the cross, and prayed God to give his Son to die for the world, but God gave Him without asking. Let them get on a higher plane than that of sect, and ask God great things in the name of his Son, and for the honour and glory of Christ. Let every praying mother with a drunken son bring him to Christ; not to this man or that man, to this church or that church, but straight to the Master. Let us learn a lesson from the Shunamite woman, who was not satisfied with Elisha's servant, but clave to the prophet himself. Let us ask great things, and do not put any "if" in the way. No sinner ever came to Christ but the devil tried to trip him up, and cast him down. Away with the devil's "ifs." "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Mr. Moody closed his remarks by reading part of the first letter he had received after coming to London. It was written by parents who had lost three children within ten days, and who asked for prayer. The last one, a little girl ten years old, told her mother that she had been waiting for Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey to come to London to become a Christian, but she could not wait any longer. Jesus had died for her, and she was so happy. But she would like to get better, because she wished to make Mary (the servant) a Christian, and her dear little brother Charlie too. Her two little brothers had just died, and she repeated the following verse:—

"He has called for many a loved one;
We have seen them leave our side.
With our Saviour we shall meet them,
When we too have crossed the tide."

She prayed for a favourite relative, and shortly afterwards passed away. "She found Christ before we got here," added Mr. Moody; "may many find Christ to-day."

After Mr. Sankey had sung "The Ninety and Nine," the meeting was thrown open for prayer and remark; and four or five gentlemen in the body of the hall followed each other with brief and fervent prayers for a blessing on the work of the next few months.

Before the close of the meeting, Lord Cavan intervened with a few timely words on the need for sympathy and oneness of heart and spirit among Christians in order to success. With reference to a telegram received from Mr. Varley, who is preaching to vast congregations at the Hippodrome, New York, his lordship said he had lately seen the great blessing that God was pouring out in some parts of Canada, where the ministers and laymen had united as one man. He would ask every child of God to be looking simply to the Lord Jesus, and there would be a great blessing in London.

Exeter Hall was filled again at the noon meeting on Thursday. The requests for prayer were read by Mr. Moody himself, who said that they were so numerous they had to be abbreviated, but God knew each case. Mr. Moody spoke on the importance of the inquiry-room, against which he said many Christian people were prejudiced. Not long ago a man told him he liked all the meetings except the inquiry-meeting, and that they would be much better without it. He (Mr. Moody) believed the whole trip during the last twenty months would have been a failure without the inquiry-meetings. He believed also they were perfectly Scriptural. He quoted a number of passages to show that the principle was largely if not habitually recognized and encouraged by our Lord in his public teaching, and by his apostles and early disciples. If Christ encouraged people to inquire the way, and asked them whether they understood after He himself had preached to them, how much more necessary was it for merely human preachers to do so? Why should not ministers now-a-days say to the people after they had preached, "Do you understand?" If they did not, let them ask them into the Lecture Hall, where they could have a private talk about it. He was afraid if the audiences were to cry out like the people on the day of Pentecost, "What must I do to be saved?" some ministers would not know how to act. If a man's preaching did not awaken the spirit of inquiry, it would never accomplish much. If a man is going to be like his Master, he should be ready to talk to those who are inquiring the way of life. If people wanted a physician they would not think much of him if he only sent some pills, and did not come himself to inquire into the nature of the disease. So ministers ought to go and talk to sin-sick souls and tell them about the remedy. He would say to those Christians who objected to the inquiry-room, that they were making the great mistake of their life. The cream of this whole work would be in the inquiry-room. He had received numbers of letters from Christians asking him what they were to do. Let them come to the meetings and look out for inquirers, and invite them into the inquiry-room. Go to them in a loving, kind spirit, and if their hearts had been wounded by the word they would gladly listen. If they were not in this state they might be a little angry—it might "make them mad," but some word might be blessed to them for all that. It was a better thing to have people to be "mad" in that way than for them to be asleep. This slumbering city required to be wakened up, and often when a child wakes up it is very cross; so it was with sinners when God woke them up. John Wesley used to say to his students, "Is there anybody converted? Is there anybody mad?" If there were neither he considered the work had failed.

After mentioning other instances in Scripture where the hearers were led to inquire, Mr. Moody said Paul had a house for inquiry at Rome for two whole years. Every Christian house in London ought to be a house of inquiry. They didn't go to Paul's house to kiss his great toe, but to hear him "preaching the Kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." Mr. Moody said he was very much pleased on the previous night to see a boy about fourteen years old in the inquiry-room at the Agricultural Hall, with his Bible under his arm. He asked him if he was a Christian. Yes, since last May. Why had he come there? He thought there might be some little boy in the inquiry-room to whom he could speak of the way of life. He gave him a little boy to talk to, and there they might have been seen on their knees together, praying. Some people thought it should be left to the grey-haired men, the ministers, the elders, or the churchwardens to speak to the anxious. He thought any one who had been saved himself ought to be able to tell some one else the way of life. He told an incident of how a gentleman had failed to bring water out of a fountain, whereas a little bootblack touched the spring at once and the water flowed out. Better have a bootblack to tell of the water of life than have the Pope to do it if he didn't know the way himself. Let Christians, after they had drunk of the cup of salvation, pass it round to their neighbours. Let them go to the meetings watching for souls. A minister in Scotland objected to the inquiry-room, and said it was like sowing the seed and taking it up again to see if it was growing. He would rather say it was like "harrowing in" the seed after it was sown, so that it might take root and the devil should not carry it away.

After further prayer, Mr. Sankey made a few pointed remarks about ignorant objections to the inquiry-room. When they were in Scotland, a minister came one evening to discuss the propriety of the inquiry-meeting. They got him to talk to a strong man near by, who was weeping about his sins. After fifteen minutes' conversation, the poor man found light through the words of this man of God. He never came to discuss the propriety of it any more, but he was always there among the first, to speak to the anxious, and the Lord blessed his labours as much as any man in Scotland. Mr. Sankey entreated the ministers and others who had doubts about the inquiry-room just to go there, and their prejudices would soon be driven away, as well as their own hearts warmed up. Instead of complaining, let them go and gather some sheaves for the Master.

In reply to some remarks by a gentleman on the platform, Mr. Moody said, he wished it to be understood that they had not received any opposition in London, and that the meetings had never opened better in any place where they had been. There was everything to encourage them.

The noon meeting in Exeter Hall was largely attended despite the bitterly cold and stormy weather. The proceedings opened with the beautiful hymn "Sweet hour of prayer," after which Rev. J. S. Spurgeon prayed.

Mr. Moody spoke on "How to deal with the anxious," in continuation of his remarks the day before, about the paramount necessity of the inquiry-room. He pointed out the mistakes sometimes made by unwise or uninstructed Christians in leading inquirers to the Saviour, and enumerated various passages of Scripture which he had found to be eminently helpful in the work. The only sure footing for an anxious soul was the Word of God, which could never change, though our feelings might change fifty times a day. He counselled those who essayed to speak with anxious ones, not to be in too great haste, but to take pains that the work was done well. They were building for eternity.

Mr. Sankey sang "Nothing but leaves," a very telling sermon for fruitless and self-contained Christians.

Dr. Asa Mahan said that if these special meetings should be the means of saving only one soul, out of the four millions of London, it would be effort well spent, and would cause joy in the presence of the angels of God. And in order properly to engage in this sacred work, we must have a deep sense of the infinite value of a single soul. Let the love of Christ also constrain us. As Martha said to Mary her sister, "The Master is come and calleth for thee," so he would say to every Christian, He calleth for thee to engage heart and soul in this work.

A gentleman on the platform said that there was a good work to be done outside the inquiry-room, if Christians would distribute themselves among the congregation before the service. The majority of those who attended the meetings and were unsaved, expected to be spoken to. A spiritual work was already going on in their hearts, and they were in a receptive condition of mind. They not only desired to be saved, but they were willing to be saved, many of them, and were just waiting to be taken by the hand. Let every Christian be on the watch, and he would soon find out those who would be likely to go into the inquiry-room. The evening before he spoke to two young men on the outskirts of the meeting, not expecting perhaps that they were in a proper state of mind, but he found them quite anxious to go to the inquiry-room, and he took them there. He afterwards learned from the friend who had spoken to them, that they appeared to have received much spiritual good. He said he believed many who were partially deaf and could not perhaps hear Mr. Moody well, on account of the size of the hall, would be blessed by Mr. Sankey's solos.

Rev. J. S. Spurgeon said that if they would bring people to the meetings with them, and take them under their charge, they would be likely to do more good than if they were to deal with a perfect stranger. As the Master honoured the faith of the four men who brought the palsied man, so God would honour the faith of those who brought their friends and acquaintances to the meeting desiring them to be saved.

The noon meeting on Monday was of unusual interest and importance. Mr. Moody gave a short address on the good which had resulted in the extension of the work by spreading abroad reports of God's working in other places. He also spoke of the great lack of Christian workers in the inquiry-room at the Agricultural Hall on the previous day, and his appeal for more help was seconded by Mr. Quintin Hogg and others. Very weighty testimony to the reality and success of the work was afterwards given by Mr. E. Paton, Mr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, Lord Radstock, Rev. W. H. Chapman, and a gentleman from Leeds.

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

On Tuesday evening this immense building, seated for 15,000 people, and affording standing room for some thousands more, was full to overflowing, while thousands were turned away from the doors.

After the opening services of song and prayer by Rev. C. R. Billing, Mr. Moody stated that he had received despatches from many of the cities in Great Britain that the Christians were praying for London. He then prayed with great fervour and with evident emotion that a blessing might come upon London. He thanked God for the spirit of unity among the ministers, and prayed that there might be no strife among the herdmen.

Mr. Sankey's first solo was "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," the singing of which he prefaced with some remarks on the object he desired to attain in singing them. It was not for praise so much as for admonishing each other in song. Mr. Sankey's strong, clear voice and distinct articulation told well in the most distant parts of the hall, and we doubt not many hearts will be reached by Mr. Sankey's gospel songs which may be proof against the truth conveyed in Mr. Moody's more rapid utterances.

Mr. Moody's address was well suited to the occasion. Having read part of 1 Cor. i., he said: One thing he had feared in coming to London was, that many would be led to trust in the arm of flesh, and in great meetings, to the risk of having their eyes turned away from God. Those who had come to the meeting expecting to hear a new gospel would be disappointed, for he had the same old story to tell which the numerous ministers he saw before him had preached to them in their churches and chapels. One thing which the passage he had read taught them was, that God would do his own work in his own way; and another was, that He would choose his own instruments wherewith to do it. The passage showed that the weak, the foolish, the base, the despised, and things that are not, were used by God in order "that no flesh should glory in his presence." God's way of delivering the children of Israel was not as man's way would have been, neither was the building of his ark as man would have set about it. In the eyes of the world, those who would work for Christ, and who would be used by God for the accomplishment of his purposes, must be content to be the laughing-stocks of their day. They must be willing to be fools for Christ's sake. All through the Bible did not they who were used as God's instruments seem absurd and foolish in the eyes of the world? There were the taking of Jericho through the blowing of the rams' horns, the prodigies wrought by Samson with the jawbone of an ass, the feeding of Elijah by the ravens—these were all contemptible in the eyes of men, but nevertheless they were God's ways of bringing about the fulfilment of his designs. In more modern times there was John Bunyan, the despised tinker, in whom the devil found his match, who was chosen by God to write the immortal "Pilgrim's Progress." Similarly God could use the weak things of London to do his work. It was not good preachers that were wanted, for probably at no time had London possessed so many great preachers as now. The belief of every individual Christian should be, not that "God can use me," but "He will use me." What was wanted was that they should be out-and-out on the Lord's side, with heart and brain on fire for the Lord, and ready to use every power and every member for his service. He often wondered why God did not take his work on earth away from men and give it to the angels, who would be glad to do it. But God was the same God, and as ready and willing to give the power from on high now, as in the days of Elisha and St. Paul. He was always more willing to bless than we to receive the blessing, and he exhorted his hearers to keep close to Christ, to be faithful, and preach Him in season and out of season, for what London and the whole world wanted was more of Christ and Him crucified.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Moody spoke of the necessity for union in carrying on the work of God, and hoped that ministers, Sabbath-school superintendents and teachers, and fathers and mothers, would all be found working and praying together for the success of the movement; for he believed that when the Church, the pulpit, and the pew, were thus united, no power of earth or hell could withstand their efforts. As a watchword, before he sat down, he would give them the text, "Here am I, send me."

At Mr. Sankey's request, the hymn, "Hold the fort," was sung by the whole congregation, and the first meeting was concluded by the benediction, pronounced by Dr. Henry Allon, of Islington. Taken as a preliminary meeting, the object of which was to bind together the hearts of the Christians at the commencement of the great campaign, it was an unquestionable success.

The rest of the evening meetings during the week have been more strictly evangelistic, and, as far as man can judge, they have been powerful for good. On Wednesday evening the attendance fell considerably short of that of the night before, but the audience was nevertheless immense. As on the previous evening, many of the leading evangelical ministers and laymen of London were on the platform. The Lord Chancellor was also one of the audience. Mr. Sankey sang the "Ninety and Nine," and said he hoped many a wandering one would be brought back. Mr. Moody vividly depicted the lost condition of sinners, and told of the love of a seeking Saviour, and his fervent appeals to sinners not to hide away from God any longer, was aptly followed up by Mr. Sankey, who at the close, softly, and in tones of loving entreaty, sang the hymn, "Come home, come home."

Mr. Moody invited those who were anxious to meet him in the inquiry-room, and a goodly number responded. Mr. Blackwood took the conduct of the public meeting. He announced that there were pick-pockets in the hall, and took excellent advantage of the occasion to address a few very weighty words to the audience about the loss of their money or watches compared with the loss of their souls. He besought them not to be more careful about these trifles of earth than their immortal souls, and said that it was just as easy to lay hold on Christ for salvation, as it was to put the hand to the pocket to see that one's watch was safe. Prayer was offered that many whom Christ was "seeking" might be "saved" that night. In the inquiry-room Mr. Moody and others were busy telling the anxious how to get rid of their burden of sin and sorrow, and had the joy of seeing gathered in the first few sheaves of what, we believe, will be a glorious harvest.

On Thursday Mr. Moody continued his subject, and went on to enumerate many and varied ways in which Jesus seeks the lost. He had met a man in the inquiry-room the night before who was anxious to be saved, but who was waiting for Christ to seek him. He showed how groundless was such an idea, and said he believed there was not a man or woman in London whom Christ had not sought at some time or other. The truth was powerfully yet simply presented to every heart, and the numbers that found their way to the inquiry-room at the close of the first services, showed that many hearts had been touched. A second service was held in the large hall, presided over by Lord Radstock, to which thousands remained.

Friday evening brought another vast gathering to the Agricultural Hall. It was perhaps the best and most practical of any of the meetings of the week. A strange feeling of solemnity and prayerfulness pervaded the meeting, and an awe seemed to rest on the entire assembly.

After the singing of the hymn, "God loved the world of sinners lost," Rev. A. G. Brown prayed fervently and beseechingly for a present blessing on the truth to be spoken and sung. Mr. Sankey then sang to the hushed assembly, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Mr. Moody's text was, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found, call ye upon Him while He is near." It was a most urgent and affectionate appeal to sinners not to delay the great question of salvation. He contrasted strongly the eagerness with which men seek for wealth and worldly honour, and the careless indifference that prevails respecting the salvation of the soul. He drew a vivid picture of the danger of delay, and entreated those who felt their need of a Saviour to seek Him now. In contrast to the indifference shown by many respecting their own and their friends' salvation, Mr. Moody told of a mother, living in London, and who was then sitting before him with her son by her side, who was so anxious about the conversion of her two boys that she went all the way to Dundee, in the north of Scotland, to the meetings being held there, in the hope that they might be brought to the Saviour. Her hopes were realized, and she came to Mr. Moody the other day, when he was in London, to thank him for the solicitude he had shown towards her second boy, and to tell him that he had lately been taken home. What a striking rebuke to parents, many of whom, in these days, seem careful to secure for their children almost anything before the most important thing of all—salvation.

At the termination of the address, Mr. Sankey sang "Almost persuaded" in a very touching and effective manner. The first meeting being closed, Mr. Moody invited all the Christians who wished to see the work go on, and all those who were anxious to be saved, to gather in the body of the hall. The galleries were cleared after some delay, and those that remained almost filled the immense area of the building. Then came the sifting time. Mr. Moody asked those who were anxious and desired special prayer to kneel while the Christians continued in prayer in a sitting posture. A good many knelt, though, we believe, in consequence of the arrangement of the seats, this was in most cases a matter of great difficulty. Subsequently, the inquiry-room (St. Mary's Hall) was used for those who wished to be spoken with, while a great proportion of the meeting continued for some time in prayer and praise. It was felt to be a very solemn hour, and fraught with blessing to many souls. We have heard of some interesting cases of apparent conversion, especially among young men. The number of young men in Islington is exceedingly large, as it is situated at a convenient distance from the city, and it has been noticed that this class has greatly preponderated in the attendance at the meetings during the week.

It will be interesting to note the arrangements for the accommodation of the vast multitude thus meeting daily in the hall. In the body of the hall 12,000 new chairs have been placed, to reinforce 2000 already belonging to the establishment, in addition to room for 2000 on forms. The platform at the west end is arranged in steps, that will seat 1200 persons. In the centre of the north side is the platform for the choir organized by Mr. Joseph Proudman, of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, and for Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The accommodation here is for 220. The eastern platform is fitted with 900 seats, and in the south gallery are 3000 chairs. The addition gives a total of 21,320, not including the west and east end galleries, each capable of containing 600 more. The lighting of the hall is effected by means of large gas chandeliers, hanging from the roof, aided by lines of gas jets along the sides, straight, save at the centres, where they rise in three semicircular arches. The acoustic properties of the hall are greatly aided by an immense sounding-board over the speaker's platform. Mr. A. O. Charles, of the Home for Little Boys, is acting as manager at the hall, assisted by a number of stewards, known by their wands.

The perfect order which is maintained throughout the services speaks well for the completeness of the organization, and is very helpful both to the comfort and success of the meetings.

It seems almost like trifling with the occasion to occupy our columns with a description of the outward characteristics of the scene that presented itself in the Agricultural Hall on Sunday afternoon and evening. And yet there is something very impressive even in the sight of such a vast collection of human souls, each of them having such possibilities for good or evil.

The immense building was nearly filled with women in the afternoon. After Mr. Sankey had sung "The Ninety and Nine" with much force and tenderness of feeling, Mr. Moody read and briefly expounded the 51st Psalm, of which he made a very personal application. Mr. Moody then addressed the great audience from the first question addressed to man after the fall, "Where art thou?" speaking in turn to the Christians, the backsliders, and the unsaved. The after-meeting was a very hallowed time, and many flocked into the inquiry-room.

At the evening meeting for men the hall was crowded to the utmost, and the meeting was almost a repetition of that of the afternoon. The power of God was manifestly present to carry home the truth.

The meetings this week in the Agricultural Hall, from Tuesday to Friday inclusive, are at three and eight o'clock, admission by ticket only, which may be obtained at the places advertised. As the afternoon's discourse will be repeated in the evening, it is hoped that different audiences will be reached at each service. The noon meetings continue to be held in Exeter Hall each day from twelve to one o'clock.

The comments of the secular press have been very fair and respectful, and there has been no disposition shown to be censorious or even hypercritical. The orderly conduct of the services, though attended by such vast crowds, has disarmed hostile criticism, and the press has contented itself with giving sketches of the crowds, the speaker, and the singer.

WORKERS' MEETING ON SUNDAY MORNING.

In the north and north-east, as early as 6.30 a.m. the streets were sprinkled with a large number of Christians, all wending to one point. There was additional proof that these were indeed hungering and thirsting after righteousness, inasmuch as at that hour no trains, trams, or omnibuses were available; and many accustomed to an hour or two of extra rest on Sunday morning, forgot their need of it, and were seated by seven o'clock in the large and rather cold hall, waiting, and singing, and praising God. So novel was the scene, that the residents in the locality gazed out of the windows to see what was the meaning of this eager, anxious throng, at a time when London is, if ever, silent. The hall itself was full, and the platform also, ministers who were during the day to feed their own flocks, drinking in the tender stirring words, based on the passage, "They that be wise shall shine as the firmament." The privilege of service, and the power of sympathy, were two of the points enforced by Mr. Moody, and riveted on the minds of his hearers by illustrations of the most touching kind, and the whole heart of the large congregation found relief and expression in Mr. Sankey's solo, "Here am I, send me, send me." The preaching and Sunday-school teaching of those present yesterday must, we are convinced, have been a more hopeful, holy, powerful service than heretofore.

STONE, STAFFORDSHIRE. — For some weeks past there has been a growing disposition among Conformists and Non-conformists to unite together for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the town. This was very marked, previous to the visit of Mr. Spiers, March 1 to 5. The Rev. John Ford, incumbent of Christ Church, his curate, the Rev. J. T. Smith, Rev. H. Lawrence, and a committee of laymen, heartily assisted our beloved brother in Christ. During the visit eight meetings were held, with ever-increasing numbers, until the spacious hall was literally crammed with a delighted auditory. The Holy Spirit moved mightily among the young and old, and such scenes were witnessed that never in the memory of the oldest person were seen before. Many will have cause throughout eternity for blessing God that ever Mr. Spiers's steps were directed to Stone. And how could it be otherwise, when thousands in the Victoria Hall, Liverpool, and thousands of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, had been earnestly praying for the divine blessing to be with our brother. Some of the farther results, as the work goes on, I will tell to your readers.

THE EXETER MISSION WEEK.

A novel plan of reaching persons who could not easily be collected in a church was pursued in St. David's parish. The two chief railway stations happen to be situated in this parish. The employes at the London and South-Western Station were invited to the Northernhay room, which is not far from the station. But as there was no convenient room at the St. David's station, which is some distance from the centre of the city, permission was obtained to hold three services on alternate nights in one of the waiting-rooms of the station itself. An harmonium was placed in the room, the services of a volunteer choir were secured, and the Hon. and Rev. F. G. Pelham, Rector of Upton Pyne, officiated as missionary. Clerks, porters, stokers, and engine-drivers, congregated together to listen to his earnest and practical addresses, and appeared to appreciate much his kindly solicitude for their welfare. Wherever they went among the working classes the missionaries were well received. The Rev. E. Osborne, Curate of Kenn, held a short service and delivered an address in one of the iron foundries, and was solicited by the men to visit them on a second day—a request which he willingly complied with. At Comtess Weir, near Exeter, a special afternoon service was held for the workpeople at the adjacent paper-mills, which were stopped working for a time for the express purpose, and the Rev. J. A. Leakey, Vicar of Topsham, delivered an eloquent sermon to about one hundred. Nor were the less fortunate classes forgotten. The Bishop preached a sermon to the inmates of the city workhouse, the Dean did the same for the inmates of the hospital, and Prebendary Ackland addressed the unhappy prisoners at the gaol. And care, too, was taken that a word in season should be spoken to invalids in private houses, who were visited by the Rev. P. Miles, the well-known street-preacher of Bristol, who also acted as one of the missionaries at St. James's, and whose originality commanded the especial attention of the poorer members of the congregation.—The Guardian, quoted by The Record.

"SAILORS' REST AND INSTITUTE," DEVONPORT.

Dear Friends and Fellow-helpers.—As I look at what God has enabled me, principally through the kindness of readers of THE CHRISTIAN, to do, I can but thank Him who only doeth wondrous things. I purchased the lease of the house and compounded for the life remaining on it for £1600. I then found that the court behind was much too small for any hall; but God, who saw the need, arranged that a small house at the back should be offered to me. This was an invaluable thing, as it gave more space and allowed a side entrance in Dockwall-street, rooms for private conversation, etc.; also a space for the hall 85 by 50. I looked at this space, and I prayed about it. I felt that it was still small, with no possibility of enlargement. I wanted a large platform to hold thirty or forty, and comfortable sitting room for between three or four hundred persons.

The answer to my prayer came in a communication which informed me that the house beyond again would be put up to auction in a few days. I authorized its purchase, which has been just effected. Now we have a splendid site, on which we can build and enlarge, if the Lord sees fit to enlarge the work; but the purchase-money, instead of £1600, is £2000. This sum is in hand. He whom I desire to serve has always supplied my need, without my ever having been obliged to incur debt, or even authorize the spending a larger sum than I possessed. I much want to begin altering and building in a few weeks' time, and I wish to have £500 more in hand by the end of this month, in order to be able to do so.

A fine organ has been most generously offered to lead the many voices in "Pull for the shore," "Let the lower lights be burning," etc.; and I long to see it in its place, on the platform of the new Gospel-hall. Will my Christian friends help me, or endeavour to get others to do so? The late Duncan Matheson truly said that he "did not believe in the conversion of a man unless his pockets were converted." We hear of and rejoice in numbers added to the Lord, and I trust that no branch of his work will languish for want of funds.

If any will apply for collecting cards or circulars, I will gladly forward them; and should be very thankful to communicate with friends who would arrange drawing-room meetings, where I could give an account of the work and raise the necessary funds. Our Sunday meetings are crowded; no Sunday passes without spiritual blessing to some "blue jacket." Brethren, pray for us, praise with us.—Yours in Christ, AGNES E. WISEMAN.

LIVERPOOL.

The meetings in Victoria Hall continue to be well attended, and there seems to be no decrease in the interest manifested. A local paper states the numbers present at the noon meetings last week as varying from 2000 to 3000, and the attendance in the evenings as being 7000. The clergymen and others who were prominent supporters of the movement during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's stay conduct the meetings, and the preacher throughout the week has been Rev. W. H. Aitken. His powerful and stirring discourses have been fruitful for good, and many have been inquiring the way to Zion. Will our readers be instant in prayer to God that the great work in Liverpool may go on until the whole city is restored to its allegiance to the King of kings.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

These meetings at the Circus have increased both in interest and attendance since Mr. Moody left it. The numbers attending each evening have never been less than 1200; last night over 1800 were present.

The testimony given by the young converts, night after night, is really beautiful, and shows the success which has attended the efforts of our American brethren to reach the young men. This testimony is also especially gratifying and encouraging to those who have so long prayed and laboured on this behalf.

One young man, converted during Mr. Moody's visit, and who spoke at one of the first of the young men's meetings, has, since his departure from Liverpool to another large town not many miles distant, been instrumental in the conversion of seven other young men.

Several of the employes in the General Post Office (besides quite a number of the telegraph boys) have decided for Christ, and the work is still going on, these young converts bringing their fellow-clerks and others to the meetings. There are numerous requests for prayer each evening, and it is most touching to see a young man rise to his feet to request special prayer for his parents, another for a brother, another for fellow-clerks, another for himself, and so on.

Did space permit, many very pleasing incidents of the work might be given. Arrangements are being made for deputations of young men (chiefly new converts) to attend meetings in Liverpool, its suburbs, and places at a distance—similar to those emanating from Edinburgh and Glasgow—and we would ask the prayers of all God's people that the divine blessing may attend this effort, and that the whole of this part of the country may be stirred up and set on fire for Christ.

Y. M. C. A., Liverpool.

S. NASH.

"FLOWERING SUNDAY," NEWPORT, MON.—Again the Young Men's Christian Association ask for the prayers of Christians, that the effort to preach the word of truth, and sow the seed of truth among the thousands who crowd the Cemetery there on Palm Sunday (the 21st inst.) may be abundantly owned of God, and blessed to the salvation of souls. Contributions of suitable gospel tracts, especially pictorial ones for distribution, will be thankfully received by H. G. Lloyd, Kingmill-terrace, Newport, Mon., Secretary to the Association.

WINTER TENT.—A few weeks ago, a short account was given by Mr. Hambleton of a "winter tent" which had been erected at St. Helens for evangelistic work. The result has been that numerous inquiries, applications for plans, etc., etc., have been received, involving Mr. Hambleton in a very heavy correspondence. As it is quite impossible to furnish plans as quickly as asked for, I have had the architect's plans lithographed, and a copy will be gladly forwarded to anyone wishing to erect a similar wooden tent. The one in St. Helens will seat about 450, but from the same plans, a tent larger or smaller could easily be constructed. We have already been permitted to rejoice over souls brought to Christ. Will the Lord's people pray that this tent, and all that may be erected after its model, may be greatly used of God for the saving of sinners, and the building up of believers.

St. Helens, March 12.

STEPHEN J. MANLINS.

MR. E. PEARSALL SMITH.

On Friday afternoon Mr. R. Pearsall Smith was greeted, on his return to this country, by as large a number of friends as could be packed into the lecture hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, in Aldersgate-street. Mr. Smith is on his way to Berlin.

After a few introductory words by Mr. Shipton, the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Smith gave a lengthened address, making special reference to the successful meetings held by him in this country during last year. He looked forward, he said, to a double blessing in 1875. He alluded in very sympathetic terms to the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, for whom he asked continuous prayer. He entreated the Christian friends present to abstain from a spirit of fault-finding or criticism of those who differed from them. During his former visit to this country he had sought to direct their attention to the fulness of blessing and privilege they possessed in Christ. Now he would rather urge them to direct and practical work in the Master's vineyard. He cautioned them against indulging too much in the habit of introspection, and pressed home the necessity of thorough consecration to the service of Christ.

FIRST-FRUITS AT DEPTFORD.

I am sure you will be rejoiced to hear of the special meetings for converts which it was our privilege to hold in the afternoon and evening of Thursday, March 4.

About 350 tickets were applied for, and given to those whom we were satisfied in regarding as Christians; but even this large number is, we feel, but a very small part of the marvellous blessing which has been vouchsafed to this district since the opening of our hall twelve months ago. Those who have watched the progress of the work, in reading the brief accounts which we have had the pleasure of sending from time to time to these columns, will be able, in some measure, to understand the joy that filled our hearts to overflow as we gazed upon the happy faces of those who were rejoicing in the Lord, and heard from their lips such precious testimonies to the Lord's saving grace.

In the experience-meeting after tea, and before the evening gathering, a blacksmith, who had been turned out of every public-house in Deptford, his wife, and little daughter; a converted prize-fighter; an old man (who, over thirty years, had been going about, saying prayers and hearing preachers, and trying to make himself better); an old woman, over eighty; a working-woman, who burst into tears as she requests prayer for her unsaved husband; a young man, who confesses to having been "the greatest drunkard and blackguard in the East of London," etc., etc., told how they had been brought to the Lord.

Much encouraged by this first attempt, and feeling what great good such a meeting may do, we purpose holding them periodically.

We are much urged to increase our efforts in Greenwich, and have many converts there anxious to be at work, but are straitened for funds to take up this important work.—I am, dear friends, yours faithfully,
J. W. C. FEGAN.

DUDLEY.—For the sake of the Christian friends who have helped our Presbyterian Mission in Dudley and others who are interested, will you allow me to say that the past year has been blest of God. Our missionary, Mr. Hodges, and his wife have been labouring amongst one of the blackest quarters of the Black Country with patience and earnestness, and many of the absolutely sunken have been gathered into the bright Mission-hall and have heard the gospel there. Kitchen meetings have been held; nearly every house around the hall visited; eighty open-air services held in places where the careless most congregate for their coarse and brutal sports. A large class of nail-making girls, much neglected, and, as a rule, very degraded, has met every Monday evening. A sewing meeting for poor women is doing much good. There is every reason to think that the grace of God has triumphed in quite an encouraging number of persons hitherto regardless of religion, some of whom have already passed away, but the greater part have become members in the Presbyterian and other churches. The kind gifts of friends have enabled us to support the missionary and his work, and have a balance of £610s. The money is expended precisely on that for which it is subscribed, the evangelizing of the poor. The undersigned will gladly receive and acknowledge the donations of such as wish to help us.

D. D. ROBERTSON, Minister of Pres. Church, Dudley.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN THE WEST AND NORTH-WEST OF LONDON.

BY AN EYE-WITNESS.

As a resident in London, and one especially interested in the work there, the writer desires to draw attention to the services at a few prominent places of which he has some personal knowledge.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM-PLACE.

This hall, comfortably seating about 1000 persons, was engaged under interesting circumstances at a critical moment when it was on the point of passing into the hands of Spiritualists. This was eighteen months ago, since when the gospel has been proclaimed every Sunday evening, by a succession of able and approved preachers, to congregations which, always good, have often been even overflowing. That great blessing has followed is certain, and it is scarcely less certain that very much more will be apparent in the great day of account. But the after-meetings for inquirers have proved how much the Lord has already wrought for the salvation of souls in St. George's Hall, and the numbers that continue to attend, to hear not "the persuasive words of man's wisdom," but the simple gospel of Christ and Him crucified, are a sure evidence of the great importance of the work, and the necessity for its diligent prosecution.

OXFORD MUSIC HALL,

which is situated in Oxford-street, close to Tottenham-court-road, is about twice the size of St. George's, and was engaged early in the present winter because of the overflowing numbers at St. George's, and also of the different class of the population whose spiritual need it was hoped to supply by the new effort. The success here, not great at first, has of late been also very encouraging. The body of the hall is well-filled, and that to a considerable extent with the very class which habitually frequents the building as a temple of pleasure. Blessed results in individual conversions have also been realized; and there is abundant encouragement for perseverance in the gospel testimony in this important centre.

KILBURN HALL.

There for several years the gospel has been faithfully preached with abundant blessing to congregations mostly of a lower social grade than those above referred to. Strong ritualistic efforts are in progress in the vicinity, and it is needless to say that there is no deliverance for souls from the snare of "another gospel which is not another," but by the uplifting of Christ alone before the eyes of men. The preachers at Kilburn Hall are selected with as much care and wisdom as at the greater buildings before noted, so that there is no uncertain sound heard in the place, but a true appeal "to every man's conscience in the sight of God." A number of agencies of a very useful kind are also sustained in connection with the work at Kilburn Hall.

MALDEN HALL, KENTISH TOWN.

In this locality, far removed from the three first mentioned, Malden Hall, opened last year, is another centre of gospel testimony to a class generally of the same character as at Kilburn. Here also the success has been most abundant and encouraging, both as to the numbers attending and in the conversion of souls; and those who have the special responsibility are making efforts to complete the building, in order to provide the much-needed additional space. Kilburn and Malden Halls are not, like the other two, hired, and therefore may be considered as more permanent centres of labour; but all need very considerable help for the maintenance of the work, and these few observations are made with the hope of eliciting the large sympathy and support of Christians for works which are devoted to the sole object of "opening the eyes of men, and turning them from the power of Satan to God." Great is the joy of the believers in the awakening and conversion of souls lately witnessed in many populous cities, and great and just the expectation of mightier works than these in a city whose population exceeds that of all the others added together. But the present and permanent work is evidently far more important than the greatest occasional effort. The Lord would have his people "always abounding in His work;" never relaxing their testimony, never fainting or growing weary, never doubting of his willingness to bless his word, never foregoing opportunities or thinking of "a more convenient season." May, then, those who are persuaded of the necessity of a constant gospel testimony, unmixed and unadorned, to the conscience of every man be constrained to aid according to their ability the labours of their faithful brethren.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, whose name is so well-known among Christians in London, has the responsibility of all the services above noted, as well as others of a similar description in provincial towns and villages, and they who desire to afford their help or to obtain special information with regard to the work may communicate with him at No. 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

MISSION TO THE WORKING-MEN OF PARIS.

Dear Sir,—Last evening, through the good providence of God, we were permitted to realize our long-cherished purpose of opening a new mission-station (the twelfth) in what may be termed the eastern centre of Paris. The devoted efforts of Pasteur Armand Delille have long supplied an evangelistic agency for the western centre. Our new room, situated on a great artery of the city (Rue de Turbigo, 65), is very neat and convenient, and will seat 150 persons. Last evening, it was crowded by a most attentive audience, the majority being men. When we were singing the first hymn, it occurred to us that seldom or never before had the passers-by on that great thoroughfare heard the strains of a Saviour's praise falling on the ear as they walked: Our excellent friend, Pasteur Fisch, addressed the meeting on the great truths of redeeming love, and was listened to with the deepest interest. In the course of his remarks, he expressed the belief that the majority of those present had never before heard the simple declaration of the gospel! What a privilege it is to have some humble part, by planting these new centres of evangelization, in bearing the Divine message to those who may be described as already waiting for it!

I write these few lines in order to crave the earnest prayers of your readers, that a rich bestowment of Divine influence may rest on this enterprise in the midst of a city so much estranged from the gospel. For its pecuniary support we look to Him who has the hearts of his people in his hands.—Yours faithfully,
R. W. McALL.

28, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris, March 12.

DUBLIN.

A "Women's Association for United Christian Work" was formed in response to Mr. Moody's appeal to the Christian women of Dublin to come out as united workers for Christ, and seek to continue the meetings for women, and use any other evangelistic efforts for which, in God's providence, opportunities might arise.

In forming this Association, the objects contemplated were:—1. United prayer; 2. Increased study of the Word of God; 3. Training of young believers for the service of Christ; 4. The more entire surrender and consecration by Christian women of themselves, their time, abilities, and influence, to the service of Christ.

It was believed that the faithful carrying out of these objects could not but result in earnest united work, and blessing from the Lord. That this was no vain expectation was fully proved by reports given at the first quarterly meeting of the association, held last week in the Friends' Meeting-house, kindly lent for the occasion, and very largely attended. After the requests for prayer, portions of Scripture were considered conversationally with reference to our great Example in work for God. Reports of work were then given, first in Gospel and Bible-class meetings in the city and suburbs, five of which have lately commenced; that in Kingstown, connected with the Young Women's Christian Association, is prospering, and was greatly blessed during the recent revival.

Mothers' prayer unions, temperance meetings, visiting the sick poor, and rescue work, have also been inaugurated, we have reason to believe, with encouraging results. A strong desire has been expressed to open a branch, to reach women discharged from prison—a service greatly needed, but requiring a self-denying devotion of heart and untiring energy of character not often found—Christian women who will go after those who are lost, until they are found. An earnest appeal was made to those present to come forth to the rescue; womanly hands and hearts are wanting, who will go to the weary ones, moved by the Spirit of the Lord, "to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." Who will respond? Christian women of every age and denomination are earnestly requested to send in their names and addresses to the "secretaries of the Women's Association, Metropolitan Hall," stating the branch of service in which they have been engaged, or which they desire to enter on; as a register of all the branches of Christian female work thought desirable is kept, to facilitate the means of finding suitable employment for every variety of capability.

A weekly meeting is held in the Metropolitan Hall, open to all workers, for prayer, praise, study of the Scriptures, and conference, on Mondays, at a quarter past one o'clock, to which all Christian women are cordially invited.

A mothers' prayer-meeting is held in the Metropolitan Hall every Monday, at three o'clock, open to all Christian mothers.

AMONGST THE WELSH MINERS.

The enclosed, from a brother of Mr. C. R. Hurditch, indicates a real work of God:—

All I can say this morning is, praise God, praise God. We had such a time of blessing yesterday. I never can or shall forget; such a breaking down and praising God never was seen or heard at Tanybwllch before; I never was in a meeting where the cry of lost sinners was so touching. Husbands, wives, fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters, were all crying out at once—all belonging to the mine. After I had preached, I asked if there were any in the meeting that had been blessed, I would be glad for them to stand up and state the change before the people. At once a backslider came forward and said that he had returned to his loving Father, and he was happy to say the Father had received him into his arms, and he felt his love once more. "Lord, keep me, keep me, keep me near, yes, nearer than before. My blessed Jesus, I praise Thee." After this, I asked all that were anxious to stay behind; then the cry began, "Oh, my God, save me," from half-a-dozen young men at once; all the others were weeping. Some went out, but, blessed be God, they came in again crying out, "Lord, save me, save me." Then those young men that began to cry out first, began to praise God one after another—"Oh, my blessed Jesus, I have got Thee. I am happy, bless thy name. I believe in Thee; help me to praise Thee. Yes, Lord, I have got Thee, and now I feel Thee; I am happy in Thee." Then, two getting up from their knees, went over to their brothers, kissed them as they were weeping, saying, "Only believe, only believe, it's so plain." Then another young man got up and went over to his mother (a young man about twenty-five), "Mother, I am saved!" kissing her over and over again, until both were weeping in each other's arms, praising God. I went over to some young females, half-a-dozen together; three sisters of them had just received Christ into their hearts. On asking them if they were saved, they said, "Oh, yes, sir, yes, sir, for Jesus died for me: I am happy." Just at that time a young man, about thirty, in the corner of the room, stood up, crying out, "Oh, my God! All I can say, I praise—I praise—I praise—I praise; let me praise; Jesus is mine." I went over to him and asked him if he was happy, "Yes, sir. Oh, let me praise, let me praise my Jesus." In fact, dear brother, I cannot describe by pen or mouth; it is God's work. A dozen souls went away rejoicing in the Lord. Our meeting began with prayer for salvation, and ended with praise for it.

HUNTLY.—Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN may still remember accounts of a large and blessed ingathering of souls to the Lord in this place during 1873. The little band of workers which, in the Lord's hand, was the main instrument of blessing at that time, and which consisted of men and women from all denominations, has remained steadfast and almost unbroken to the present time. Ever since the great harvest in 1873 was gathered, a work of deep importance has quietly but persistently progressed, and gleanings more or less have been gathered ever since. For nearly three years believers have met, almost daily, for mutual exhortation, study of the Word and prayer, the result of which has been much increase of knowledge and joy and courage for work. A special evangelistic service has, for the same length of time, been held on the Lord's-day evening after hours of service in the churches, in a large hall, which has all along been well filled. Cottage meetings are also frequently held in the homes of the poor, freely opened for the purpose; and the gospel has been very much preached and sung by large bands of young converts in the open air in all corners of the town. Besides these, there are special classes for young men and women, meetings for the very poor and very aged, as well as services for children.

"HIGH TIME TO AWAKE OUT OF SLEEP."

On taking my seat a few days since in one of the carriages of the North London Railway, I was very much surprised to see a youth of about fifteen or sixteen summers passing from compartment to compartment, busily supplying each passenger with a ticket, as near as possible like those they had just purchased, but with this notification upon it, namely, that the best shop to purchase Valentines was at Messrs. B— and M—'s. His earnestness and zeal in the distribution of these tickets, to serve an earthly master, put me to the blush, while I, for whom the Lord has done such great things, was sitting idle, thinking that my efforts in working among policemen, cabmen, etc., was all that was required of me. But what does God say in his Word? "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

Should any read this who are saying, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" I would plead with them, in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to visit the following markets, from four to seven in the morning, namely:—Billingsgate Fish, Metropolitan Meat, Leadenhall Poultry, and Covent Garden; and at all the workmen's trains from 5.30 to 6.30. This will be found an unusually good opportunity for spreading the truth; and when I have visited these places, I am sorry to say I have not met with any workers in this needy part of the vineyard. And those who go would do well to take a large supply of illustrated tracts or small books, and they can rely on a thankful acceptance of them.

Oh how little do we realize that thousands on every side are rapidly drifting on to death and destruction, whilst we let opportunities slip! How often we neglect to speak of the Saviour's love to those whom we meet in our travels! Who can tell the number of souls we might be the means of rescuing if we used every opportunity? How truly, then, it may be said, "It is high time to awake out of sleep." Let the example of the youth referred to, who so diligently served his earthly master, stimulate all Christians who read this to greater earnestness; then we shall see more brought to the knowledge of the truth.

CHILD'S-HILL, HENDON.—Three nights of special evangelistic services were held at the Baptist Chapel in this village. Deeply interesting, soul-awakening sermons were preached by Mr. Joshua Poole, who kindly left the great work the Lord is doing by him in East London to be present. The congregations were large, and there were signs on every hand that great good was done.

NOON PRAYER-MEETING, CONFERENCE HALL, MILD MAY PARK.—On Monday the 8th inst., the first anniversary of this meeting was held, and was largely attended. Ten of the neighbouring ministers were present, including the Revs. Dr. Edmond, W. R. Morrison, K. B. Sidebottom, R. C. Billing, B. Ashton, M. Davison, and others. Captain Moreton presided. The meeting was hearty, and many took part. Though the attendance through the year has not been great, yet many marked answers to prayer have been received in the conversion of sinners, the restoration of backsliders, the quickening of believers, and the upholding of the sick and sorrowful. The meeting, in fact, is but the continuance, at another time, of the one established by the Rev. W. Pennefather at the opening of the hall.

OUR SAILORS.—A correspondent writes:—Can any of your readers help the Lord's work amongst our seamen by sending me parcels of books, magazines, or tracts for distribution amongst the thousands who visit this port? I make up canvas bags and fill them with books and tracts, and nail them up in the forecables of the ships which are bound on long voyages, and this is generally all the reading the men have (except it be a song book) while they are away. Sometimes as many as 500 vessels lie here wind-bound (vessels of all classes putting in to the Roads for shelter from south-west gales) and bound to all parts of the world. Will not some of your readers who have back numbers of the Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, British Workman, Old Jonathan, The Cottager and Artisan, Gospel Trumpet, Herald of Mercy, THE CHRISTIAN, etc., spare some for our sailors? Parcels may be sent to me, or to the office of the Society, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, and marked for Penarth Station. I should also be glad of some Bibles and Testaments, as I make it a rule to put one or the other in every bag. Who will help?

MEETINGS FOR BEGGARS IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly solicit the prayers of Christian brethren in England on behalf of two beggars' classes held in our room every Thursday and Friday afternoon? As many of your readers who have visited Rome are aware, there are a great number of poor who are continually asking alms, either at the doors of the different churches, hotels, or in the public promenades. Having for some time felt anxious to do something for them, and knowing it would be quite impossible to get them to attend our meetings, I invited a few to come to our house, promising them that, after listening for a little time to the reading and explanation of the Holy Scriptures, they should each receive four sous before leaving. It is now three months since my first meeting, which consisted of one poor woman. She was very ignorant, and quite thought her salvation would be secure, because she always carried in her bosom a little picture of the blessed Virgin.

The next week I had two women and a boy, the third five, and the fourth fifteen. Since then the number has so much increased, that we are obliged to divide the meeting, and take the women one day, and the men the following. The average attendance of the women is generally upwards of a hundred, the latter at least sixty, exclusive of children. Several Christian brethren and sisters have very kindly assisted in speaking to them. We believe the Spirit is working in the hearts of some, and that the name of Jesus is becoming precious to them.

Those who come are the very poor; the blind, the lame, the sick, are those to whom the words of consolation are spoken. One man, in health, said he did not wish to receive the money, but he would rather pay than not come. Another poor woman, whom I met at the Forum, said she was so pleased with the Gospel of St. John, which she had received at the meeting, she reads it every evening to her poor blind girl.

These poor people, many of them clothed in rags, come often two or three miles. One widow woman told me last time that she had been turned out of the cellar in which she slept with seven children, the two eldest both ill with the fever. Their only home now is a doorway. I am sure it would melt the hearts of Christians in England could they see the misery of these poor people in Rome. When we tell them of the love and sympathy of Jesus, their eyes brighten, and the tears are frequently seen running down their cheeks. It is in moments such as these that we feel the blessedness of the gospel. Never did I feel so much honoured as since the Lord has granted me the privilege of bringing these poor wandering sheep to listen to the precious invitation of the Good Shepherd, who came to seek and to save that which was lost.

Perhaps, if the suggestion were made, similar classes might be formed in England, in which case I would mention that lately, instead of giving money alone, I have divided the amount, substituting bread for one-half. Thus, while alleviating, in some measure, temporal distress, words may be spoken which, accompanied by the Spirit, may be the means of spiritual blessing to a class for whom very little is done.—Hoping the subject will commend itself to you, and that Christians will remember the poor Roman beggars in their prayers, I remain, yours in the service of Jesus,

EMILY JUDSON WALL.

Piazza S. Lorenza in Lucina, Rome.

P.S.—This afternoon we had a very interesting meeting, quite 120 poor men listening most attentively to the precious words of Jesus.

NED WRIGHT IN CLERKENWELL.—On Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, March 1, 2, and 4, Ned Wright addressed large congregations in Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road. The inquirers' meetings were fully attended, especially on Thursday evening, when, out of a congregation of from 1200 to 1500 people, 200 stayed behind as inquirers.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Another meeting in connection with this effort in the East-end was held at the Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, on Thursday week, and the large hall was nearly filled with those sisters who have wandered from the fold. Many of them joined heartily in the singing of the choruses of the hymns, showing that the copies of Mr. Sankey's hymn-book had not been given away at the last meeting in vain. The addresses were attentively listened to, and some hearts, we trust, were softened. Some interesting cases of reclamation have transpired, and we bid God-speed to this mission of mercy and love.

TO CHRISTIANS WHO LOVE ISRAEL.

The Rev. J. Wilkinson wishes us to announce that a special effort is to be made this week to induce the Jews of London to attend the meetings in the Agricultural Hall. Ten thousand copies of a leaflet prepared for the occasion are being printed, and there will be a meeting of Christian workers at the Mildmay Conference Hall, Room No. 6, on Thursday evening, 18th inst., at six o'clock, for the purpose of arranging for the distribution of these leaflets. All who are willing to help are invited to attend. The leaflets will be distributed among the Jews in Whitechapel and the East-end generally on Saturday next. We trust a rich blessing will attend this effort.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. MOODY AND MR. SANKEY. By R. W. DALE, M.A. Hodder and Stoughton. 2d.—We are glad to find that the article from which we quoted largely in our two last issues has been reprinted in extenso in a pamphlet which may be obtained at 14s. per hundred. We hope it will have as wide a circulation as it deserves.

THE GOLDEN CHAIN. By the Author of "The Memoir of the Rev. W. Marsh, D.D."—The links of this chain are mainly composed of touching and instructive incidents, gathered from the work of the Blackrock Convalescent Home; and in each case it is the love of a dying Saviour that reaches the dying soul. It is printed in large type, and suitable for sick-beds.

NOT YOUR OWN SAFE AND HAPPY. COUNSELS TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS. By Rev. G. EVERARD. Hunt and Co.—Safe and useful books to put into the hands of those just saved, who need more direct and clear instructions for their journey heavenward than are either given or thought of. The questions sometimes asked, with uncertain manner, about Sunday occupation, dress, associations, etc., show how conscious young converts are of the new world into which they have just stepped, and how they desire to know its laws and sanctions. For this class these little books are intended, and well adapted.

DAILY TEXTS.

"BEHOLD THE MAN."—JOHN XIX. 5.

Thurs., Mar. 18.—"Now to Abraham and his Seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but of one: And to thy Seed, which is Christ."—Gal. iii. 16.

LONDON TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

This institution has now been in active operation for nearly a year and a-half, and the results have fully justified the expectations of its founders. It has been shown that disease can be combated and removed without the aid of alcoholic liquors. If this principle were only to become universally recognized and acted upon, one of the greatest hindrances to temperance reform would be removed out of the way.

We earnestly call upon all Christian men and women to support and encourage this movement. We regret to learn that the efficiency of the hospital is being impaired through lack of funds. The building in Gower-street is too small for the necessity of the work, and it is very desirable to have enlarged premises, so that this experiment—it is now more than an experiment—may be carried out on a wider scale, and that the system may have a fair and lengthened trial. We understand an opinion prevails that this is merely a London hospital; but so far from this being the fact, we learn that a large proportion of the in-patients have been from the country, the most important surgical cases being those of country patients.

We commend this institution to the philanthropic support of our temperance friends. A special effort is needed just at present; but if all who desire to remove the temptation of strong drink from our sick folk will help, the hospital would be speedily placed on a more extensive and permanent footing. The address of the treasurer is, John Hughes, Esq., 3, West-street, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

THE SAILORS' HOME, BOMBAY.

We have had a blessed time in Bombay the last few weeks, receiving, I believe, the first drops of the "shower of blessing" we are so earnestly longing for. The Lord's work has begun among the inmates of the Sailors' Home. About the middle of December, a Christian lady was led to visit the Home, and "make friends" with the men. Finding that very few of them had Bibles, her first care was to provide each one who desired it with a copy of the Word of God. She made arrangements for holding meetings once a week, and about a dozen men gathered round her on Sunday afternoons. The first Sunday in the year, she invited them to evening service at the Church Missionary Society's Mission Church, where Mr. Sholto Douglas was preaching. Seven came, and remained for the after-meeting. We found, by conversation, that most of them were under deep conviction of sin, and that night we had the joy of seeing two "come into light." We recommended each of these seven men to bring another with him to the special service on the following evening. As we entered the church, however, we were accosted by one of them with the words, "There's twenty-five of us here to-night, me'm'n;" and there they sat, all together, at one end of the church. Again, there was an after-meeting, and again every one of them remained. Mr. Douglas was much moved at the sight, and when the other inquirers had dispersed, called the sailors round him, and spoke very earnestly to them. Then, turning to Mr. Weatherhead, he said it would be a pity not to follow up a work that had been so wonderfully begun, and asked if a meeting could not be arranged for them on the morrow. Mr. Weatherhead offered the hall in his house, and the men chose 7 p.m. as the most convenient hour. To this meeting forty came. Some Christian friends addressed them in simple, earnest language; the Spirit of the living God was present to carry home his own word, and the result was a large inquiry-meeting, at which several professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. We visited them at the Home the following day, and on the next after, we had another meeting for them at Mr. Weatherhead's, when eleven of their number signed the total abstinence pledge.

During the second week, the work made steady progress, and many more laid hold of the Saviour. We have now organized a regular system of "missioning" these sailors. On Sundays, they come to the Mission Church, Mondays and Thursdays Miss D— spends the evening with them at the Home, giving them Bible-instruction, and reading to them some interesting book; and an officer and his wife have promised to go to them on Wednesdays, so that they will only have Saturday-evenings unprovided for. They do appreciate the interest taken in them.

Of course there are constant departures and new arrivals, but an average of thirty-five continue to attend the meetings. Last Monday, eight of them "shipped" for various destinations. We have the joy of knowing that most of these are "born again." Poor fellows! DRINK seems the great hindrance with all of them. One man said to me, with tears in his eyes, "I lost a good place through drink, and I'd give all I am worth to be able to keep from it." A drinking-bar in the Home is a great snare to many, and they would be glad to have it removed, but there will be some difficulty in obtaining that, I fancy. Still, nothing is impossible with the Lord, and I would ask you to join with us in praying that He will take away this temptation from the midst of them. Since the beginning of this week, five more men have signed the pledge. Shall we not "praise the Lord for his goodness, and declare to the children of men the wonders that He is doing"? I hope you will find a place for the substance of this letter in THE CHRISTIAN, as an encouragement to our praying brethren and sisters at home to continue in prayer with and for us, for, "in due season, we shall reap, if we faint not."—H. THE MOVEMENT AND THE THEATRE.—The incident in the Dublin theatre in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work has had its echo in London. Last Friday, during the performance at a place of public amusement at the West-end, one of the performers alluded in a jesting way to the work. This was met by signs of strong disapprobation on the part of the audience, and resulted in their having rendered to them an ample apology. CHARLES DOBBIN. Hampstead.

LEEDS.—The "remarkable case of conversion" reported by me at the Liverpool Convention as occurring at the parish church of New Wortley, near Leeds, appears in your last number as if it took place at St. James's Church. I am glad to hear from the worthy vicar that the good work in his parish is continuous. New Wortley has never seen a work so glorious before. Wakefield, Ardsley, Halifax, Burley-in-Wharfedale, Harrogate, and other places in Yorkshire, are experiencing "showers of blessing." The effects of the Leeds Mission are spreading all over the town, and a "United Mission" will begin on April 11. On Wednesday last my deacons and I met nearly a hundred new converts for conversation and worship. It was a "time of refreshing." Brethren, pray for us. H. TARRANT.

CREWKERNE, SOMERSET.—The good work of grace which has shown itself in the North, and borne such abundant fruit, is now developing itself in the South. The town of Crewkerne, whose population, including villages around, amounts to about 8000, has been greatly favoured of late. In the beginning of November, a few friends from Chard, where special revival services had been held, came over to attend our weekly meetings: and such was the spirit of prayer, and fervency in the addresses, that not a few were stirred from their slumber, and became anxious about their souls. The good work first showed itself in the Sunday-school, when both teachers and scholars became decided for Christ. Previous to these meetings, there were in our school, as in many others, teachers who, though strictly moral and exemplary, were, we fear, no more than this; but now, in answer to prayer, and in response to kind but earnest appeals, have become enrolled as the followers of Christ. Others also in the congregation have followed their example, so that the pastor last Sunday had the pleasure of baptizing twenty-two, and will (D.V.) receive them into the church next Lord's-day. In addition to these, there are already seven more accepted by the church, besides others who will, we expect, put on the Lord Jesus by an open profession of his name. The good work seems to be reviving in other congregations in the town, for which we greatly rejoice, and will rejoice; for our motto is, "Grace, mercy, and peace be with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth." Crewkerne, Feb. 27.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—For blessing on the preaching of the gospel in the Masonic Hall, Wood Green. Prayer was asked in THE CHRISTIAN about ten weeks since.

PRAYER.—For a gentleman of wealth and influence, dissatisfied and inquiring, that he may be brought to the feet of the cross.—That the Holy Spirit may accompany a letter to two unsaved brothers in Australia, that the message may be blessed.—For myself, that the Lord would reveal Himself to me, and give me peace.—For a young man, totally deaf, that his hearing may be restored, if it be God's will.—For a gentleman, who, through drink and other indulgences, is now an inmate of a lunatic asylum.—Prayer is earnestly requested for a young man who has promised to leave off his drinking habits and give his heart to Jesus, that he may be converted, and enabled to do so by God's help.

PLACES.—That showers of blessing may fall on Melville Church during a week of evangelistic meetings, commencing on 21st inst., to be conducted by Messrs. Daniels and Stewart.—For Tutbury, that God would send some of His servants there to lift up the standard of the cross.—For a revival of religion in Irvine. Three-fourths of the people never enter a church.—For Bartonholme, a collier village.—Pray for Russia, and its eighty millions, specially for the believers, that they may be established in Christ. Pray that God would direct some of His servants in England, who seek His guidance about going.—For union and blessing amongst the ministers and people of the Free, United Presbyterians, and Established Churches of Greenlaw, Berwickshire.—For a series of meetings to be held at Ecclestone, Hann, and Foggamoor, Berwickshire, conducted by Mr. G. Robertson.—That God will bless and prosper the Mission just begun at Chorley.—For the town of Ulverston, Lancashire, that the ministers may be united.—For the Mission now being held at Stamford, and the daily prayer-meeting now going on there.—For Ayr and the special services to be held there from March 17 to April 1.—For Guernsey, that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord.—For Glen Urquhart, that times of refreshing may be granted from the presence of the Lord.—For Linnis College and Monaghan School.—For evangelistic addresses to be given by Col. T. Smith and others in Bentley, on the 17th, 18th, and 19th inst.

CONVERSIONS.—For me, and my husband and dear children, that we may all be brought to Christ during this time of revival.—For an unbeliever, now nearly fourscore years of age.—For the mother of eleven children.—For a whole family at Sheffield, some of whom are seeking Christ amid many discouragements.—For one who longs to come to Jesus, but does not feel her sins. I am dead and hardened, and often feel as though my mind would give way.—For my father, who has religion without Christ.—For a poor Roman Catholic priest, most fervent in error, that he may be turned from darkness to light.—For an officer.—For a poor dying woman, at present with no hope of heaven. Her cry is, "Is there any chance for me?"—For my fellow-servants, also for my mistresses and master and their little ones.—For my aunt in Brussels.—For my father, that he may be led to seek salvation. For two old schoolfellows, that they may be brought to Jesus.—For a young lady living with me, that she may be aroused and feel her need of a Saviour, that she may not rest until she hath found peace in Jesus.—For my eldest brother, a medical student in London.—For a dear sister now dangerously ill at Brighton, for whom prayer has been asked in THE CHRISTIAN before.

The Christian.

LEND A HAND.

A MEMBER of Mr. Moody's Committee tells us of the great number of backsliders met with in the after-meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in the Agricultural Hall. Now, is not the chiefest cause of backsliding amongst the working classes of this country strong drink, and amongst those who are wealthier the love of money and of position, together with the sad co-mingling of believers with the world?

We feel sure most precious results are accompanying these meetings. Oh, that such one-accord believing prayer would continue to go up from all parts of the land for such signs to follow these immense gatherings as would lead in not a few cases to the absolute abandoning of trades in London that cannot be carried on without defiling the conscience! "They brought their books together and burned them before all men." "So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed" (Acts xix. 19 and 30).

The house-to-house visitors bring in most cheering reports of persons being led by the visitation to the Saviour; but they too speak of finding very many backsliders. They have not only been favourably but gratefully received. Now is there any other way in which many of these cases could have been discovered and reached than by going to the homes of the people?

We are right glad that so many of the visitors commenced chiefly and first in the North, around the Agricultural Hall. There is yet much more to be done in that quarter; and now that Messrs. Moody and Sankey are at full work there, the visitors will be greatly encouraged, and the teaching of "Inquirers" will be spread beyond the great inquiry-room, into the homes of the people.

The visitors will find the need of taking down the number of many a house for the purpose of returning to some young convert, some anxious soul, or to carry help to some sick or distressed or dying one. There should therefore be no haste to leave this quarter whilst our beloved friends are preaching in the Hall, nor till long afterwards.

But though we must still direct special prayerful attention to the North, round the Agricultural Hall, the time has now fully arrived for other visitors to be at work simultaneously over the whole of London and throughout all the suburbs.

To do the whole work simultaneously requires about 800 superintendents, assisted by about 16,000 visitors. There are already nearly 300 superintendents who have accepted work. Let us thank God for this. About 500 more could now be set to work. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into His harvest" (Matt. ix. 28).

It is, of course, needful, in order to avoid the parochial difficulty referred to on page 9 in your last issue, that ministers should avoid being themselves made superintendents, but each superintendent should be properly recommended by a minister or private Christian known to the Committee.

A superintendent ought not only to be a Christian of consistent character, but one well able to point an inquirer to the Saviour; and one who will be very careful in prayerfully selecting similar persons to assist him as visitors. The districts of the remainder of London are now arranged, and the work is standing ready for the labourers. Volunteers would now be most welcome. If they should not come forward in sufficient numbers, then it will be needful to ask many of the present bands to do double work.

Now a word to our fellow-workers in the rest of Britain. Many of you have been, and now are, specially praying for London. But we venture to ask you to do more than this, even to co-operate with us in effecting a similar carrying of the gospel to every home in your own town or village, simultaneously with its being done in London. If the Lord can enable feeble couples of Christian women and men to go through the homes of Liverpool and Manchester, and London (five millions), He can enable you too. If, in addition to this, you can concurrently, and on an unsectarian basis, get ministers and laymen to preach in some neutral hall, as Mr. Moody has suggested, and as they are now doing in Liverpool in the hall Messrs. Moody and Sankey left, so much the better.

Will many a believer take this appeal right into his closet, and spread it before the Lord? Then get two or three of like mind to join in one-accord prayer. Have faith in God, and set to work. There is plenty of help, only get it straight down from heaven. Was not Elijah a man subject to like passions as you? If we can give any hints, we shall be too glad. If you want Mr. Moody's Manchester leaflet, you can get it at 6s. a thousand, the printer's charge, by applying to the Young Men's Christian Association, Piccadilly, Manchester; and the leaflet now being used in London may be obtained, for house-to-house distribution in the provinces, but not in London, at the same price, through the House-to-House Visitation Committee, 48, Great Marlborough-street, London. A remittance must accompany the order.

We question if our country were ever so ready to receive house visitation, and in London we find Moody's leaflet a wonderful door-opener. Do lend a hand to co-operate in your own place, and you may see the gospel spread thus, not only in our own country, but in America and other lands.

"Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised; it may be that the Lord will work for us, for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." (1 Sam. xiv. 6; see verses 20—22).

"So the Lord saved Israel that day." (1 Sam. xiv. 23).
REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.—From a superintendent of one of the North Divisions, we hear that their work has been prospered of God. That Unitarians, opposers of religion, and infidels, have been induced to attend the Agricultural Hall. A large number of anxious souls have been met with whose hearts the Lord had softened for the reception of full salvation. Many of these, it is believed, have found rest in Jesus. The ladies intend following up each case. In higher class houses, not in sympathy with the work, some entered into spiritual conversation and even requested a second visit. A great many anxious souls stated that for months they had been longing for some one with whom they might speak about their souls' interests. One burst into a violent fit of weeping, and said, "Oh! you cannot think what it is to meet with a Christian," and the same sentiment was echoed by many in different words.

REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I feel sure that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be gratified to hear of the blessing which has attended Mr. Somerville's evangelistic services in our station (Agra). His visit has been as reviving to us in India as a refreshing breath of old Scotland's mountain air. Our Indian life dries up all our Christian sympathy, and leaves our hearts parched as the desert sand. Everything tends to depress our spiritual fervour. The black cloud of heathendom sheds a dismal gloom over our religious life, and the thoughtless frivolity of Europeans chills our Christian enthusiasm.

Mr. Somerville's loving heart, earnest labours, and powerful appeals, have aroused the thoughtless, revived the indifferent, and startled the hardened. During the week of service, the Theatre and Havelock Chapel were crowded with all classes of the community. Our Commissioner, the Hon. A. R. Drummond, and Collector J. Simson, C.S., came in from camp on purpose to attend the Sabbath services. The General commanding the Brigade and the private soldier alike enjoyed and appreciated the fervent appeals which it was their privilege to hear. Mr. Somerville's services have been the talk of our station, the subject of discussion at the Badminton party, the mess-table, and the barrack-room; and we feel sure that the seed sown will find root in some good ground, and bring forth harvest-fruit. It is difficult to tabulate results, but of this we have satisfactory proof, that many found Christ savingly, and lukewarm Christians were aroused to a higher sense of their obligations and responsibilities.

The meetings at St. John's College were well attended by English-speaking natives. After the first, they requested Mr. Somerville to give another address, which he did on Sunday, although he had to attend three other services. One of the natives proposed a vote of thanks, and, in doing so, remarked that, although they might not all agree with the lecturer on the divinity of Jesus Christ, they could all agree in thanking him for the purity of his motive and good intention in coming so far to give them so excellent an address.

After the services at Havelock Chapel and the Theatre, inquirers'-meetings were held, and opportunities given to those who were anxious to seek salvation to speak with Mr. Somerville. One who had long neglected the means of grace, and altogether forgotten God, was brought to acknowledge his love to Jesus, and seek for his blessing; before the services were concluded, he was rejoicing in Christ. A little boy of twelve years of age told his father that he really desired to give his heart to Jesus; and after one of the meetings, he called him to his bedroom, and asked him to pray with him; and when he was going away, he threw his arms round his neck, and sobbed out, "I do want to love Jesus!" A day or two after, he told his father that he had found Jesus, and wondered he had never thought of it before. In his struggles to overcome rather a hot temper, he said that God had given him power to overcome it; and as a proof, he said, "I was going to call Fanny a cat, but stopped at c"—the other two letters were missing. May the earnest prayers of his father, who is a missionary, be heard, that this young convert may grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!

The morning prayer-meetings were very profitable and refreshing. Special requests were presented for those who desired an interest in the prayers of God's people, and in a remarkable manner were these prayers heard. Some of the friends were rather anxious about the attendance, and many wondered whether the services would be well attended; in fact, some had predicted that they would be a failure. On the Sabbath Mr. Vines felt very anxious about the English-speaking natives attending the second lecture, at St. John's College; and as the hour drew near, he saw no signs of an audience; so he and his wife went into his study, and read a portion of God's Word, and prayed for a good congregation; and his prayer was heard, for a larger audience assembled than on the previous occasion.

At the evening service in Havelock Chapel, extra benches and chairs had been provided, and some anxiety experienced that the chairs would be vacant, and the benches empty. Here again prayer and faith gave the answer. The recollection of one of Mr. Somerville's excellent morning addresses comforted the doubting mind, in which he drew attention to the fact that the widow's oil did not cease to run until the last pot was filled. And so it was that night at Havelock Chapel. The people did not cease to come until the last chair was filled, and that chair had to be taken out of the pulpit. The preacher had to give up his own, that the place might be filled.

At the close of the evening service the monthly communion was celebrated, and communicants of all denominations gathered round the common table of their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists, united together as brethren in Christ.

As well as evangelistic addresses to all classes, special addresses were given to ladies, and children, and young men. The farewell meeting will long be remembered, when Mr. Somerville gave his lecture on the Holy Spirit, which was a splendid close to a powerful series of gospel addresses. At this meeting the following subjects were introduced:—"Woman's Work in India," by Rev. H. Mansel; "How to bring the European and Native Communities into Closer Relationship," by Rev. C. Vines; "How to Develop a Truer and Higher Christian Life," by Rev. J. Gelson Gregson.

We have already referred to the happy results of these meetings, in the salvation of many who have attended them; and, further, record with thankfulness the formation of the Agra Young Men's Christian Association, which has for its object the spiritual improvement of young men. The Association has been well supported by all denominations, and has arranged to hold weekly meetings for Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, and evangelistic addresses.

The interest and attractiveness of the meetings were greatly increased by the spirited manner in which Mr. Somerville's son presided at the harmonium. He was well supported by a choir principally composed of soldiers. "Hold the fort," "Knocking," "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and many others, are now being sung in many Agra bungalows and barrack-rooms.

We thank our gracious God for putting it into the hearts of our brethren at home to send out to India such a faithful ambassador of the cross, and pray that his special mission may be productive of great and lasting good in Agra, and every station in Northern India.

It may be interesting to close by saying that Mr. Somerville's visit to Agra is in direct answer to prayer. Some months ago, before we heard of any such visit as that we have been privileged to enjoy, an officer and his wife called at my bungalow, and the conversation turned upon the sad condition of Indian society, and what means could be adopted to reach the thoughtless and worldly and cold sceptics of our station. Major — said, "Let us pray about it, and ask God to show us how to reach them." And the morning call was finished by kneeling down, and praying earnestly for divine direction. In answer to that petition, we have welcomed the servant of the Lord who has just visited us in our Master's name. "The Lord hath visited his people."—Yours sincerely, J. GELSON GREGSON.

Agra, Feb., 1875.

"GO YE OUT INTO THE HIGHWAYS."—Judging there to be an open door for the preaching of the gospel of Christ on Islington-green to the many hundreds, and even thousands, who are to be found on the Lord's-day at the present time within a short distance of the Agricultural Hall, and who belong especially to the classes that never trouble a place of worship with their presence or company, I feel led through your columns to solicit the help of some brethren who can sing and preach in the performance of a work which, I believe, will result in great blessing to many. I trust that the Lord, according to his will, may further this matter, for his own glory. B. DENING WHEELER.

LECTURE ON THE ARK OF NOAH.

In the New Hall, Wellington, Salop, Dr. J. E. Cranage recently delivered his first descriptive lecture on "The Structure, Dimensions, Use, and Typical Teachings of Noah's Ark." As in the case of the Tabernacle models, Dr. Cranage had been very successful in directing a Christian carpenter to build a model of the Ark of Noah, on a scale of half-an-inch to the cubit of Scripture, or one forty-second part of the length and breadth of the original, or one 74,088th of the full size, being twelve feet six inches in its length, with height and width proportionate. It contained stalls and compartments, arranged in and along the first, second, and third storeys, according to the Word of God, and made in two parts, so as to expose the interior sections when these are to be described.

The Ark was placed on the platform, so that one side of it and the glazed covering could be seen by the audience. From this side, and down the centre of the large hall, was erected a narrow table, raised on standards, three feet six inches high, and fifty-one feet in length, so as to bring all the model animals within the field of vision. The whole length of this table was covered with green baize, on which no fewer than 492 animals and birds were arranged in Scripture order.

Near the open door of the Ark stood the little model of Noah, followed by his three sons; then Noah's wife, and her sons' wives. No other human being went into the Ark (1 Pet. iii. 20). The next in the arrangement were the clean animals, in sevens, and clean birds in sevens, with some clean insects. Then were seen a long line of the unclean birds and animals, not in sevens, but in pairs, as God had commanded.

Dr. Cranage intends the lectures to be redemptive, humane, scientific, and sanatory, but especially to illustrate the way of salvation, and safety in and through the glorious person and finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

After the hymns and prayer, Dr. Cranage related how he had been told of a young man who traced his conversion to God to the things his mother had told him when in his infancy about his toy model of Noah's Ark. This it was that gave the first impulse to have a modelled Ark, that the children and parents of Wellington might learn what God did in old time. Referring to the instructions given to Noah, Dr. Cranage remarked upon the kind of wood to be used, namely, gopher (Gen. vi. 14), which means cover, reminding us of Psa. xxxii. 1 and 1 John ii. 2. He then showed how the forest had to be visited, its tall giants felled, their huge limbs sawn off; then the work of bark stripping and trimming, ready for the sawyers; then the cutting into planks, and beams, and girders. How the carpenters, though infidel, would work for wages, though the man who employed them was a mad preacher, who talked to them of things which could not happen, and in which none of them believed.

He then discoursed about the physical structure and proportions of the Ark, as intended to be a thing of use, and not of fanciful and foolish ornamentation, showing how thoroughly seaworthy it was—as, indeed, it could not be otherwise, God being its sole architect. Reference was here made to scientific ship-building, and to statements of eminent sea-captains, all of whom regarded the Ark of the Deluge as a pattern and sure guide to all who would wish to build ships to ride on the waters, and not to sink in them. Whatever Noah might have known, he could not know anything as to the seaworthiness of the Ark; hence the importance of his observing to do all the Lord had told him. Had he not done this, the consequences would have proved fatal to himself, family, and animal cargo. And so we see what is so often forgotten. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord (Gen. vi. 8), and so he and his house were preserved by obedience to the word of the Lord.

"Pitch it within and without with pitch." The pitch outside might prevent a leak, and would keep out damp; but why pitch the inside? Here is a lesson in sanatory science: It is known that unclean animals give off from their bodies poisonous acids; it is also known that pitch emits a powerful odour; may not, therefore, the pitch have been a strong disinfectant, intended to destroy the noxious properties of the animal gases? Besides which, Noah and his sons were not to be idle in the Ark (here an industrial lesson). There is much to be done every day to keep the stalls and nests clean. The interior of the rooms being pitched with pitch would contribute to make this daily work much more pleasant, and far more easy, than if this matter of the pitch had been omitted. We may surmise that the pitch fragrance was pleasant and healthful to the human being likewise.

"A window shalt thou make to the Ark." This came next to be considered. Dr. Cranage here pointed to the model, the roof of which was seen to be of glass, except the openings along the centre of the roof, intended to represent the "cubit above," in which it was finished (ver. 16), which openings were for purposes of ventilation, perhaps for additional light; or it may be that supplies of fresh water could be received through this medium during the many days of rain. But the main question was, if glass had not then been discovered, what did Noah have for the window—or, more proper, transparency? Here Dr. Cranage held before the gas-light a piece of talc, or mica, which had been given to him by a Christian gentleman, who, with his lady, had travelled in Bible lands, and had seen the district naturally paved with talc, or mica, which, when examined, was found to be beautifully transparent, and very durable. With such a transparent material the window of the ark was, no doubt, made.

"And take [thou] of all food that is eaten." Here the attention of the audience was directed to the care God took in the matter of the provisions. Not animal food (Gen. iii. 18); mostly dried fruits, grain, grass, and herbs. Even the lion was herbaceous, as he will again be when Isa. xi. and lxv. are fulfilled. The munificence of God was a charming theme for Dr. Cranage. Into this part of the lecture his whole heart was able to manifest itself. God might have preserved them in a state of hybernation, instead of which He arranged for them to live and to have the pleasure of living to keep them alive. Said God, "There must be no disease nor death in the Ark, or the type would be destroyed." The Ark is the place of life, the only place of life,—life, with food, drink, and joy. Dr. Cranage here stated that he wanted one thousand small sacks to represent the grain, one thousand trusses of hay, some other bags as if they contained oil and fruits, all to be made according to the size of model.

"Come thou and all thy house into the Ark." The modelled creatures at this stage of the lecture afforded illustration for further lessons. Dr. Cranage reminded us that Noah was first in procession and first to enter the Ark. His name, meaning rest, was significant. He rested in God, and the creatures saved found rest through him. His going first into the Ark showed how completely he committed all things into the care and keeping of God. His sons were the next to enter, man being first formed. Then came Noah's wife, followed by their sons' wives. This order being divine, suggested the separation of the sexes during the judgment of the waters, throughout the whole of which time there would be much exercise of faith, of filial fear, of heartfelt love, and of profound worship. What holy calm, what peaceful quiet! Reader, art thou in the living Ark of God, Christ Jesus? Hast thou in thy soul this blessed heavenly rest?

The clean animals were then noticed and discoursed upon. These went into the Ark by sevens. So likewise the clean birds by sevens. Why so many and why an odd one? So many because God intended to grant animal food to man after the flood, though, as Dr. Cranage stated, there are those who are weak in the faith and think that only herbs may they eat (see Rom. xiv. 2). The odd animals and birds seem to have been for sacrifices (see Gen. viii. 20). The clean birds were followed by unclean birds and beasts in pairs, and all these went in two and two unto Noah (Gen. vii. 9). They were not driven; they went. Thus were they more obedient than man. He had filled the earth with violence and flooded it with every evil work before the Lord sent the cleansing waters to wash the earth from its moral impurity. Dr. Cranage then read Matt. xxiv. 37, 38, alluding to the typical teaching of the Ark shadowing forth the evil character of the present age.

He brought his excellent lecture to a close by an appeal to the hearts and consciences of his hearers founded on the calamitous fire of the ship "Cospatrick," and the recent sad railway accident near Shipton. In either case if a God-sent messenger had been sent to warn of the fire or the accident, who would have believed him? God was sending men to warn sinners, not of a deluge, but of a fiery judgment, and men were exhorted to trust in Christ. The only way of escape was set before them in a crucified and risen Saviour. Who hath believed the report? Who heeded the preaching of Noah? Why so few in the Ark, and why so many drowned? As it was in the days of Noah (remember who said it) so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man.

Reader, where art thou? What art thou doing? Wouldst thou escape the fiery wrath of God? Flee! flee to Him who alone is the true Ark of God.

THE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

FROM MRS. BARBOUR.

On Saturday morning, the 13th inst., a great part of the population of Edinburgh were stationed along the line by which Gen. Sir Hope Grant was carried to the grave. It was not only the remains of a brave officer which were being laid in a grave which he had selected last summer; he had been also a good soldier of Jesus Christ, and wished that his ashes should rest near those of his beloved sister, Mrs. Graham Spiers, who, along with her husband, was one of the brightest ornaments of the Church in Scotland. Her early faith brought blessings down on others in her family. A correspondent of the Daily Review writes of Sir Hope Grant:—

"While returning home one evening, he came upon a few private soldiers, who were holding a prayer-meeting. He stopped to listen, and what he then heard was the means used by the Holy Spirit to lead him to accept of Jesus Christ as his Saviour. From that time, his whole influence was used for God's glory in his regiment (the 9th Lancers), where he conducted a Bible-class for years, which was largely attended by his men. As General Commanding in Aldershot, his influence was necessarily very great. He was always ready to countenance Christian work by his presence, and, although not an eloquent speaker, would bear his testimony in a soldier-like manner, with few words, but to the point. He largely, if not entirely, supported a staff of Bible-women to work among the soldiers' wives in the camp. In this blessed work he was much aided by Lady Grant, who personally superintended it, and who originated and conducted mothers'-meetings in the various regiments stationed at Aldershot. Sir Hope's life, private and public, was most consistent, to which all who served under him will bear testimony."

Many of the services on the following day were characterized by deep solemnity. That which was held in Southminster Theatre, as well as in the St. Giles Restaurant, were pervaded by marked attention. The Rev. Geo. Wilson spoke on "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." A stillness as of death fell over the audience, and many inquirers remained. Soon after ten o'clock, the theatre, where a concealed fire had been smouldering, became a prey to the flames. The glare, sparks, and colour of the flames were terrific. The theatre being chiefly built of wood, offered little resistance to the fury of the fire, and the streets to a great distance were seen as in daylight, and showers of stars seemed to be falling everywhere through thin sheets of flame. The people in Potter-row were turned out by the police, that the fire-engines might play upon the houses, and the poor little children stood shivering in the streets. From some parts of the town it was thought that it was the University that was on fire. A poor woman said to her neighbour, as she left the service that night in the theatre, that she had been praying for her son, who grieved her by spending every week-night there. It is not many weeks since the Theatre Royal was burned. The harmonium and the hymn-books, which had just been in use, were, of course, destroyed in the fire of Sabbath night; it is said that the fire was not caused by the neglect of those who arranged for the meetings, but by the imperfect working of a new heating apparatus, which might have led to much more disastrous effects, had it gone wrong, with a full house, on a week-night. The fire broke out so near the principal entrance, that escape would have been hazardous.

The breakfast in the morning was attended by seven to eight hundred, and was addressed by the Rev. J. H. Wilson, Barclay Church. We entreat prayer for Edinburgh by all who read THE CHRISTIAN. Just because the God of love still makes his voice to be heard among us, just because the well of life has steadily sent forth the flowing water of the Spirit's grace, since it was dug so deep by GOD's own hand eighteen months ago, would we stand in faith, hand-in-hand, expecting to see God's power put forth anew. We count on the continual remembrance of friends at a distance. We realize that we have it. Surely they will not become weary of remembering us, or of asking that our ministers and evangelists throughout Scotland may be clothed with power?

For the first time this winter, Mr. William Dickson was able to preside at the meeting for the young in the Assembly Hall, on Saturday. A poor girl in Shetland was converted some months ago. She was very anxious to work for the Saviour who had redeemed her. She was told to speak to those like herself, and so went to all the girls of her own age, who one after another believed the word at her mouth. She now has them gathered into a meeting at their own request, which they conduct among themselves. The noon meeting, on Monday, was led by Mr. Morgan, Lord Polwarth, and Mr. Robertson, Newington; and for power, simplicity, and brevity of addresses and prayers, was equal to any that has been held. The leading thought which each in turn expanded was the certainty of answer to every prayer presented on the golden altar with the much incense of the Lord's merits, the likelihood that such answer would be preceded, accompanied, and followed by the thunderings and voices of a wonder-working Providence, and the assurance that these would only usher in fresh manifestations of grace. One thanksgiving after another was read regarding the service at the Southminster Theatre the night before.

EPSOM.—The work of the Town Mission here principally consists in visiting from house to house, where God's Word is read, and prayer offered. Many have received these visits who can now say, "Once I was blind, but now I see." During the past year 2500 religious periodicals, and more than 200 copies of the Scriptures, were circulated. Good gospel tracts, and back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, British Workman, etc., for free distribution at the coming races, would be acceptable. Address, J. J. Brown, Town Missionary, Epsom.

MISSION AT EWELL, NEAR EPSOM.—The Lord has wonderfully owned and blessed the Mission services held here from Feb. 23 to March 7. On Sabbath evening, Feb. 27, the Mission preacher, Rev. S. C. Morgan, met a large band of workers in the chancel of the church, amongst them the Independent minister of the place. On Sunday the spacious church was filled in every part. In the afternoon a service was held in a hamlet near, and the room was crammed to the doors. On Monday evening again the church was densely crowded, and a large number remained to the after-meeting. Every evening the numbers kept up, and many were the souls brought into joy and liberty. On the last Sunday 200 partook of the Lord's Supper, many for the first time. Every morning Mr. Morgan gave addresses to believers, and in the afternoons to women, or children, or servants. There were some remarkable instances of conversion. Mr. Morgan also visited Cheam school, and the Grange, Ewell, giving addresses to the boys. Everybody affirms that such a flame has been kindled in Ewell that will not easily be put out. It now depends on the prayers and exertions of ministers and Christians to keep up the work. The prayers of all who love the Lord are asked for this place.

MESSESS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

FROM REV. FRANCIS TUCKER, CAMDEN TOWN.

In answer to your request, I send this line. I have been present at four of the services at the Agricultural Hall, a thankful hearer, a deeply-moved spectator. From the platform, day after day, I have looked down on a broad lake of humanity, its waves rippling under a mighty breath, and often breaking into a countless smile. Oh that mass of beating hearts and living souls! It was worth going far to see. And there, on the bank, stood a man—no scholar, except in the highest of all schools; no orator, except with the deepest of all persuasiveness—longing, striving, agonizing, to bring all these hearts to beat for Christ, and all those souls to live to Him. He proclaims himself a fool for Christ's sake, yet seeks to make men wise. He therefore looks right up to heaven, up to the Fountain of all wisdom, and lifts the eyes of the people there. He points man to God, the sinner to a Saviour, the wanderer to a home. The fastidious may notice what they think defective, in utterance, in illustration, in logical coherence; but none can deny the impassioned earnestness of the speaker, or the profound importance of the truth he speaks. For myself, I look for a large blessing on Mr. Moody's teaching, aided as it is by the sweet singing of Mr. Sankey—an invaluable help, especially in a hall so vast, and so unfavourable for public speaking.

FROM DR. CULROSS, HIGHBURY.

On the whole, the newspapers convey a faithful impression of the meetings. One exception I ought to make—no description in words can possibly enable one to conceive the "weight" that comes upon one's spirit from the presence of these masses of human beings in the great hall. To look out from the platform upon full twenty thousand people, hushed and still, waiting to hear the Word of God on the most solemn of all subjects, is inexpressibly and overwhelmingly awesome.

It is of the spiritual aspects of the case, however, rather than of the merely external, that I would write. Up to this date, the spiritual results have not been sufficiently manifested, or at least I have not come sufficiently within range of observation, to justify me in saying much; and, while I have my own expectations, I shall not venture in such a matter to hazard guesses.

Among the Christian friends whom I have happened to meet with since the meetings commenced, there is, I think, a general freshening of spirit—a reviving—a kind of glad interest—a renewing of youth—as if a gracious influence had descended from above; and good people seem drawn more closely and cordially together, without thought of denomination. There is a difference in the atmosphere—as if March had given way to early summer. I can speak only of what I have myself come across; but supposing it to be general, there is something to remind one of the old days, when the disciples were of one heart and of one mind. This is not only a good thing, but also a good sign. It is the Lord's doing.

In the first of the Agricultural Hall meetings, the right key-note was distinctly struck—to "cease from man," and to trust for the success of the movement in the living God. Very earnest was Mr. Moody's exhortation to this effect, and his appeal to Christian people to cry with one heart that God would make bare his arm and bring salvation to the millions of London. The friends who stand closest to the two evangelists, I believe, sympathize with them in this respect. Mr. Moody's pleading brought up to me what Peter and John said to the people, "Why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had done this thing?" This spirit will enable them to encounter any opposition that may arise without being greatly discomposed. As yet the press has not committed itself to anything distinctly hostile: indeed, as you will see for yourself, the notices are friendly; but as the work shows vitality, scornful opposition will almost certainly be evoked in various quarters—unless God puts on his muzzle; exactly as the Lord foretold, "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of his household?" The days of pillory and scaffold are gone; but the spirit that explained Pentecost by saying, "These men are drunk," and that kindled the fires of Smithfield, still lives; and it were perhaps easier to meet the old-fashioned persecution than to be crucified in a newspaper. A grand man, who in his day was made the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things, learned to hold up his head and say, "Nevertheless I am not ashamed;" and the spirit that was in him cannot die. Excuse this digression.

In those addresses to which I have listened, Mr. Moody has assumed the existence of a certain preparatory groundwork of knowledge in the vast majority of his hearers. He has stated the gospel, clearly, simply, fully, pathetically; to use his own language, he has "stood fair and square on the Bible truth of the atonement;" but the fact has been present to his mind, and has influenced his speech even unconsciously, giving force and pungency to many of his appeals, that the great majority of his hearers are acquainted with the gospel as to terms and statement, and that the thing specially required is, that it should become a real thing to them, and that they should be brought to decision. We know how men mistake an indolent assent or a little pleasant sentimentalism for the heart's submission to the righteousness of God, and how necessary it is to come to a distinct Yea or Nay. In conversing with different persons, it is not uncommon to be met in some such way as this: "I know it all already, but it makes no impression, and is quite inoperative." To this state of mind, which I fear is much more common than people think, the addresses to which I have listened are peculiarly adapted, by making it first of all a question of believing God. Running through them all is this note, "Let God be true;" understand that what He says He means; and let feeling come in its own order. The illustrations are homely and apt, sometimes provoking a smile; but I have noted once and again that the smile is instantly followed with an unexpected home-thrust by some earnest appeal or text of Scripture.

The most important part of the work is that which is done in the inquiry-room. I am not able to say anything as to the quality of the help which Mr. Moody receives there; but we trust that care and discrimination have been used in the distribution of tickets admitting friends to deal with inquirers, and that it will be help, and not counteraction. From all that I have observed and heard, there seems to be already a considerable measure of encouragement in this part of the work, not merely as to the numbers who enter the rooms, but as to their spirit. There is a fringe of the curious and the scoffing. From whatever subordinate cause, whether the moving tenderness of the singing, or the sympathy called forth by the addresses, those who find their way into the inquiry-room seem in many instances to be brought by the power of the Spirit out of the argumentative into a susceptible, receptive condition; and instances are occurring of the way of life becoming suddenly clear to the perplexed and doubting, and of persons entering through faith into the "feeling" which they had been vainly trying and struggling to attain otherwise. Some also who have been real Christians for years, but have been haunted with doubts, have seen the simplicity of the gospel as with a new revelation.

A very happy and hopeful feature of the work is the large number of young people who have been drawn in to listen. Looking round in the gallery at the close of the meeting, there were not more than half-a-dozen in the immediate neighbourhood who looked like thirty years of age; the great majority under twenty. I have seen young men in Exeter Hall, but never such a spectacle as at these gatherings. Doubtless not a few of them are already followers of Jesus, but many also undecided, and some of them sadly and sorrowfully led astray through being their own masters in London. It is difficult to understand how any of them could remain unmoved by the earnest and tender appeals again and again addressed to them. Pray that they may be won.

There is a younger class in the audience still—mere children, boys and girls just entering their teens; and one hopes that many of them may be gathered in, as the fruit of the present work. I think we have far too few children in our churches; and I feel satisfied that if elder people (specially fathers and mothers) are truly quickened, we shall have many of the children also, as the indirect but not less real result. And the Church of Christ will be all the happier, all the holier, all the richer, and all the stronger for it.

FROM ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

"London has not had such a shaking as this for a long time," was the remark made to me on the platform of the Agricultural Hall, the other evening, by a well-known minister in one of the northern counties. I believe he was right, for view the work from whatever standpoint you may, it must be allowed to be extraordinary.

However diverse the opinions about the matters of detail and manner, there can be no question about the reality of the movement. It is a gigantic fact. London is now presenting, in many respects, the same wonders as Jerusalem did in the days of Pentecost. Then the streets were filled with eager crowds, all pouring along to hear the preaching of Christ, crucified, risen, and exalted. Then the conversation of the multitude was all about the strange things which were coming to pass. Then the congregations were composed of the most striking contrasts possible, men of Judea, mingling with strangers from Rome, and Cretes and Arabians joining in the stream with Parthians and Medes. So is it now. Let any one walk along the Strand about mid-day, and he must be blind indeed if he does not see there is a steady tide of people flowing in one direction. He has but to follow the hurrying groups, and he will find himself in Exeter Hall, and at a prayer-meeting. Let him make his way to Pentonville-road at half-past two the same afternoon, and he will find the human stream setting persistently in one direction. He needs no other guide to lead him to a preaching service! Suppose at about half-past six the same evening he walks along Moorgate-street. He will find a crowd waiting where the "trams" start, and see that quickly as they arrive they are filled inside and out. Let him mount one, and he will find that the placard pasted on its side accounts for the rush to secure a place—"Moody and Sankey's Services at Agricultural Hall." He will find, along the road, lads doing a brisker trade in hymn-books than in evening papers, and inside the hall a sight will greet his eyes sufficient to overawe those most accustomed to look on multitudes. From the platform he will look down on a sea of faces, and on either hand will behold, what appeared to the writer as sloping hills of people. There are people everywhere, the dim distance is a crowd.

The congregations could hardly be more heterogeneous if composed, as those at Jerusalem, of strangers from all parts. Lords, honourables, captains, merchants, lawyers, artisans, and ministers of every section of Christ's church, not to speak of the thousands of women of all classes. What brings this multitude together? I believe the same that brought the multitude at Pentecost. The plain declaration of the wonderful works of God, spoken in language that is intelligible to every one, under the influence of a tongue of fire which is none the less real because unperceived. Like the preachers at Pentecost, our brethren utter "apophthegms," or weighty sayings, given them by the Holy Ghost, which were none the less weighty because given with a Galilean brogue.

I have used the plural and said "brethren," because I look upon Mr. Sankey as a co-preacher. His themes and aims are identical with those of Mr. Moody, and his "sermons sung" should be as earnestly prayed for as are the sermons preached. While Mr. Moody attempts no oratorical display, there is wonderful power and force in his style. Those who, from the good desire of showing the work to be all of God, seem to take a delight in saying that he is nothing particular as a speaker, make a great mistake, according to my judgment. His powers of description are remarkable, and it is wonderful how complete a picture he can draw with few touches. There is no waste of language, no useless "padding," and all he says is enlivened with flashes of mother wit.

All this, however, is only the human side of the question. The true answer to "What meaneth this?" is, God is with the men. It means that a crucified Christ is still alive and is looking after his own work. It means that the Holy Ghost is yet on earth glorifying Jesus. It means that millions of prayers are receiving their answers. It means that God is passing through Great Britain in a way of grace. It means that a fresh and immense responsibility rests on every saint and sinner in the country. Let the one keep in prayer and the other fly for refuge while mercy is on the march.

"THE TIMES" ON MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

"Revivals are not a novelty, and have not always proved in the end satisfactory, and a great part of the public are not a little anxious to know what is the kind of influence which has been collecting congregations of many thousands, and, as is said, influencing for good a great proportion of them, in the Northern towns. On the latter point, indeed, the balance of favourable testimony is very considerable; and if only it be true that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have roused numbers of people to a more moral and more elevated life, mere criticism of their methods is somewhat ungenerous and out of place. But the world is suspicious of religious enthusiasm, reasonably, perhaps, with respect to some modern instances of it, but certainly unreasonably on the whole. It is mainly by great fermentations of faith and zeal that the world itself has been lifted to its present level—a level, low as it may be, far higher than that of the past. Still, there are such things as spurious kinds of excitement, and when the London Clergy were invited a little time ago to meet Mr. Moody in a Conference they were, not unnaturally, rather irresponsive. Mr. Moody surprised them on that occasion by taking for granted their sympathy with the purpose of his mission, and discussing his plan of operations. He is, at all events, a man who takes his own line, and leaves you to follow or not, just as you please.

"What the majority of the audience are conscious of is that they are being told some very home truths by a very simple and earnest man, and that he is perfectly confident he is showing them the means of becoming better men and women, and of having a better hope in this world and the next. As the preacher last night, who was not Mr. Moody, put it very well, if you wake a man out of sleep and make him aware there is a fire in his house, it is a time for using the first fire-escape you may bring him, not for discussing which kind of fire-escape is the best. Mr. Moody tells his hearers that most of them need to be 'saved,' and that all of them can be saved if they will believe in a Saviour whom he proclaims. A vast number among them know that the first part of this statement is perfectly true, whatever may be its precise theological interpretation. They are very ill-satisfied with themselves at heart, and would be thankful to be assured of a means of becoming better. What wonder if they listen eagerly to a man who tells them that he has found this 'Salvation,' and who impresses upon them the conviction that he knows what he means, and is speaking out of a real experience? In the dim twilight through which an immense number of men and women are groping their way through life, not without many falls and much self-distrust, it is inevitable that a strong clear voice, however strange its tones, should attract confidence and win a following. Mr. Moody calls unhesitatingly to this struggling, confused mass to follow him, and to follow him in a direction which, on the whole, is guaranteed by an ancient and sacred experience, and he is obeyed.

"If there are those who are rather inclined to exhort Mr. Moody's hearers to caution than to give him encouragement, let them ask themselves one or two broad and simple questions. By all means let them be cautious in controlling and directing the results of such a movement, and do their utmost to obviate that worst of illusions that all the work of a new life is done when a man is "converted." But, in the first place, is any Christian Church in this Metropolis in a position to say that it can afford to dispense with any vigorous effort to rouse the mass of our people to a more Christian life? The congregations who are to be seen in our churches and chapels are but a fraction of the hundreds of thousands around them, of whom multitudes are living a little better than mere animal existence. If any considerable proportion of them can be roused to the mere desire of something higher, an immense step is gained; and if the churches are really a higher influence still, Mr. Moody will at least have prepared them a better material to work upon."

NOON MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

The Christians of London are rallying round the Noon Prayer-meetings in Exeter Hall. Every day the hall is crowded, and the spirit of prayer prevails. The requests for prayer that are sent in are so numerous, that they have to be grouped. They embrace all ranks and conditions of society, and all phases of mental difficulty. Surely the Lord has great things in store for London, when He is awakening such a spirit of impetuous prayer.

Monday was devoted, as has been the custom in other places, to reports of the Lord's work. Mr. Moody's brief address from the words, "Declare his doings among the people," was directed to the importance of spreading abroad the news of the Lord's work in different parts of the land and of the world. During the great American revival of 1857, the work was carried on in that way. The news was carried from one town to another, and the people said, "If God is working in other places, why not here?" So they got together, and began to pray, and God worked in every city throughout the land. What we want now, he said, is that those who are in the harvest-field should declare God's doings among the people. He went on to say how his heart was cheered the night before when a father came into the inquiry-room with a noble-looking young man. The tears were trickling down his cheeks, and he said, "Here is my son; I have long been anxious for him, and now he is anxious for himself." Shortly afterwards, a mother came into the room with her four daughters, whom she wanted brought to Christ. It was a beautiful sight to see that mother pouring out her heart in prayer for her children. "I have good news from Liverpool," continued Mr. Moody. "I have letters this morning to say that the work is only just commenced there." He referred to the young men's meetings, of which an account appeared in our last issue. He also read a letter stating that the Glasgow noon meeting of that day was to be devoted to special prayer for London. It would seem as if God were moving the heart of Christendom to pray for London. Let us take courage. Mr. Moody proceeded to speak of the lack of workers in the inquiry-room, and said, the night before, one worker sometimes had to talk to fifteen or twenty inquirers. Every Christian ought to be at work, doing what they could to bring others to the Lord. There were hundreds and thousands in London waiting for some one to tell them the way of life.

Mr. R. Paton gave several striking cases he had met with in the inquiry-room.

Mr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, urged the Christians to take up the work in the inquiry-room. They could know nothing at all about it until they went there. Many Christians, he said, had tried to speak to others about salvation, and found it a very hard thing, but they would find it easier now than in bygone days. He felt quite clear that the Spirit of God was moving mightily on the hearts of the people outside, to bring them to the feet of Christ; and if Christians would put themselves at Christ's disposal, did they suppose He would leave them unhelped? It would be contrary to the manner in which Christ treats his servants. Mr. Dale then made some remarks as to the results of the work in Birmingham, somewhat similar to those which recently appeared in our columns.

Lord Radstock spoke of the remarkable movement going on in Russia. There were hundreds, and probably thousands, of souls, who had been brought to Christ, and who were now spreading the knowledge of the Word of God by Bible-readings. There were many difficulties, and even persecution was not unknown; let there be prayer for that great country, with its eighty millions of souls.

Rev. W. H. Chapman related his experiences in the inquiry-room, and said that if Christians were to be used there to the conversion of others, they must have their hearts on fire with love to Christ and souls; then their tongues would speak.

On Tuesday there was again a crowded attendance, and the spirit of the meeting seemed to harmonize well with Mr. Moody's subject, "Prayer," founded on 2 Chron. xx. 3-21. If our aim is single, and our motive is pure, and we want to see God's Son glorified, He will answer our prayers, and bring deliverance. Mr. Moody told of a young man whom he had met in the inquiry-room who had been touched, not by anything in the sermon, but by a letter from his mother, who told him to go to the meeting, and she would be praying for him. He said this to encourage mothers to pray for the conversion of their children.

In the season of remarkably fervent and urgent prayer that occupied the last half-hour, one minister on the platform, in very touching language, offered prayer for "fathers as well as mothers," that God would visit unconverted, drunken, and dishonest fathers. He also pleaded with God for a blessing on fatherless children.

Special prayer was asked for, and offered, for Calcutta and India generally.

"Prayer" was again Mr. Moody's theme on Wednesday. He divided praying Christians into three classes—those who "ask," but do not wait for the answer, and are surprised when it comes; those who, when prayer is not answered, "seek" to know and find out what the trouble is; and those who keep "knocking" till the answer comes. A few "knocking" Christians in London would bring down a great blessing. The sweetest lesson he had learned during the last few years, as a Christian, was to let God choose for him in temporal affairs.

Mr. Sankey sang "Knocking, knocking, who is there?" which reminded the audience of the contrast between the patient, persistent, pleading with sinners "Of thy Saviour, waiting there," and the feeble, faithless, intermittent prayers of his saved ones.

Mr. Donald Matheson desired praise to be given to God for the way in which the door had been open in France during past years; and a gentleman in the audience added a word or two about the popularity of Mr. Sankey's hymn-book in Germany, whence he had just returned.

Mr. Grattan Guinness, who has had considerable experience of the Lord's work in France, offered thanksgiving for spiritual blessing vouchsafed to that country, and also besought a rich blessing on London at this time.

The meetings on Thursday and Friday were well sustained. Mr. Moody continued his remarks on prayer, referring on Thursday to the teaching of the Lord's Prayer, and especially the duty of Christian forgiveness. On Friday he dwelt on hindrances to prayer being answered.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING.

This was a delightful hour. The key-note of the meeting, and the subject of Mr. Moody's brief address, was "Praise," fitly following the subject of last week—"Prayer." The nearer a man gets to God, the more he sings. The bird does not sing on its nest, but on the wing. The Church has been on her nest, and therefore praise has been silent; she must mount up, and, like the rising lark, she will sing praise to God. What cause we have to praise God for all He hath done for us.

The audience having responded to Mr. Moody's request to "rise and sing right out of the heart," the hymn "Rejoice and be glad, the Redeemer has come," he called for reports.

Mr. Garthorne, who, some time since relinquished the wine trade as a matter of conscience, gave strong testimony as to the desire of many of his recent business friends to follow his example. He also dwelt on the encouragement he had lately received in speaking to business men about the things of God.

Rev. Frank H. White had heard from his friend Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East-end Tabernacle, that 2000 of his congregation remained the previous night to the after-meeting, and he believed a hundred left rejoicing in Christ.

Rev. J. Morgan, of Islington, as one of the ministers near the Agricultural Hall, testified that, so far from emptying the churches and chapels, this movement was filling them. On Sunday night he had intended to go to the Hall after the conclusion of his own meeting, but had been occupied with anxious souls, of whom fourteen professed to find salvation before they left.

Capt. Moreton spoke of the great success attending the house-to-house visitation in the northern district. The testimony of those engaged in it was, that they would be sorry when it was done. He gave some striking cases, which we reserve till next week.

Mr. R. Radcliffe told of the want of 500 superintendents for this part of the work.

A gentleman from Yorkshire said, for the encouragement of those whose localities could not be visited by their American brethren, that a great work had been begun in several of the small towns of Yorkshire, resulting from their ministers having gone to Liverpool, and on their return related what they had heard to their own congregations.

A friend from Liverpool said that the Young Men's Meeting there on Friday night was the best they had had. He urged as a motto a verse of twelve words, forty-eight letters: "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." It might be more reasonably doubted whether the Mississippi could wash the mud from a pebble over which it flowed, than that the blood of Jesus can cleanse a believing soul from sin.

Mr. R. Paton said the two inquirers'-meetings on Sunday afternoon and evening were of the deepest interest. It was quite a spectacle to see the hundreds of young men, who came anxious and went away rejoicing. Mr. Paton also stated that a reply had been received to the message sent to the Rev. Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, saying, "I dare not leave my own church. An awakening has broken out, such as to require my attention where I am." Deeply interesting accounts had also been received from Sheffield, showing that the work was permanent there.

Mr. Moody said intelligence had been received from Rev. W. Taylor, that he had left Rome on his way to London. Next week, he hoped, meetings would be started in all the divisions of London.

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Again and again one is obliged to ask the question, "What mean the eager, anxious throngs" that nightly crowd to this leviathan structure for an hour and a half or two hours before the time of service, and who linger, many of them, in the great hall and in the vicinity of the inquiry-room, as late as they are permitted? There is nothing in the manner or matter of the services to stimulate idle curiosity; there is nothing to afford amusement. Surely the Spirit of God is mightily moving on the hearts of men and women, filling them with a great unrest, and a desire to have it removed and replaced by the peace which the world cannot give or take away.

Tuesday evening's gathering was most wonderful, and the prayers and expectations of God's people were more than exceeded. Long, long before eight o'clock there was scarce an inch of standing room to be had in the hall, vast though it is. Numbers, we believe, remained in the hall from the conclusion of the afternoon service. How many went away from the evening meeting disappointed at being shut out, it would be hazardous to say. Report puts it at 10,000, but we should imagine that to be an over statement. Inside the spectacle was one that might arouse feelings of gratitude and wonder. The Rev. F. Tucker, that venerable servant of Christ, the very tone of whose voice and the beaming of whose radiant countenance have a strangely attractive power, expressed the feeling of every Christian heart in the assembly as he prayed that "that vast mass of beating human hearts might beat for Christ and live for Him." In touching words he invoked the divine blessing on the aged men now on the borders of eternity; on the men of business, who are bearing the burden and heat of the day; on the husbands and wives, that they might be fellow-heirs of the grace of God, and fellow-helpers towards eternal glory; on the young men and maidens, that God would take them to be his own friends and servants and rejoicing subjects before evil companionships were formed and evil habits fixed. "And now," prayed the good old man, "bless our dear brother Moody. All our hearts rise up to Thee in thankfulness and in prayer, and may this night be a night long to be remembered. One prayer in his presence we must offer—Lord bless Chicago; bless the Christian people there, those who are so dear to his heart, and the multitude of Sunday scholars that gather around him, as around a loving father. The fire that has burnt his sanctuary; dear Saviour, thy providence knew it, and thou art overruling it. May his ministry here, while his new sanctuary is rising, kindle a fire of divine love in the hearts of multitudes, melting down all selfishness and all sin." This prayer found an echo in many a heart, and we believe his petition, that that night would be one long to be remembered, was answered to a very marked degree.

Mr. Moody took for his subject "Regeneration"—the A B C, he said, of God's alphabet. Using for an illustration the fog that partly obscured the interior of the hall, he declared that both the Church and the world were in a greater fog on this important subject. As the truth fell from his lips in language almost severely simple, every word seemed to tell on the hushed and listening multitude, and salvation was brought very near. As Rev. A. G. Brown put it in a subsequent prayer—if he had not been converted before, he felt as if he must have been brought into the kingdom that night. It was truly a time of great searching of heart, and we are compelled to believe that the record on high contains many an entry—This man or that woman was born again in the Agricultural Hall on the evening of Tuesday, March 16th, 1875. St. Mary's Hall was filled with inquiring Nicodemuses at the close, who were addressed by Mr. Moody, while others were busy in the corridors of the hall speaking a word for the Master as they had opportunity, which was abundant.

The great gatherings of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday may almost be reported in the same language. Night after night, this great building (which will be for ever henceforth memorable in the spiritual history of London) has been filled with from eighteen to twenty thousand immortal beings, ostensibly drawn together to hear "the old, old story" of human sin and divine redemption.

What motley congregations! As has often been said within the past two weeks, such varied collections of all ranks and conditions of men, women, and children have never before been seen or known in the metropolis. Is it not an overwhelming proof that the time-honoured gospel of the cross is as potent to cure sin-sick souls and bring peace to troubled spirits as ever? As one mingles with the crowd in some distant corner of the gallery, it is impossible not to be struck with the almost unnatural quietude that reigns throughout the service. This is all the more wonderful when we think of the heterogeneous nature of the throng. Casting the eye around, you see here and there, those whose heads are white with the snows of age; the majority, however, are just entering on manhood and womanhood, or in the prime of life, while many groups of quite little ones complete the interesting and absorbing picture. Presumably there are hundreds on hundreds who do not regularly or even occasionally listen, on the Lord's-day, to the preaching of the gospel; but they have somehow been drawn into this informal gathering, and as Mr. Moody tells out, in bold but simple words, the universal ruin wrought by sin, and the unfailing remedy to be found in a crucified, raised, and ascended Christ, there is a perfect stillness on every side, and every head is bent to catch the rapid and thrilling words of the speaker. The rapt attention is more manifest still when Mr. Sankey sings. His vocal sermons are short, but they tell every one, and it is matter of doubt whether the speaker or the singer is the more effective preacher. Thank God for such a combination. It takes so many keys to unlock the human heart that all are needed; this much is shown by the result.

As a rule, opposition has not shown itself at the meetings, if it exists, to any extent. We have heard of a few exceptions, and once or twice we have seen the look of scorn and the smile of contempt at Mr. Moody's impassioned appeals. But much more to be dreaded than all latent or aroused opposition, is that hard crust of indifference which is, alas! so prevalent in society. Nine-tenths of the unconverted portion of the multitudes that crowd the Agricultural Hall would be shocked at the idea of openly deriding the offer of salvation; they listen respectfully, and it may be for the moment with trembling, but they are not prepared to give up all for Christ, and they go away, moved for the time, but no nearer, perhaps farther off, the kingdom of heaven than before. One can only hope and believe in the light of God's sure word, that some truth has been planted in the heart that, like an arrow, will rankle there till conviction leads them to the cross, and conversion sees their burden lost there.

As Mr. Moody has often asserted, "the cream of the work is in the inquiry-room." An earnest and judicious worker there will find plenty of scope for his zeal, and more for his wisdom and tact, in fishing for the Master. He will see, too, what a strong barrier to the cause of Christ the towering pride of the human heart is; he will find out what resources the devil has in putting difficulties in the way of a present, unconditional acceptance of the offer of salvation. But amidst these discouragements he will find much to cheer and strengthen in the work, and much cause to magnify the grace of God which aboundeth to the chief of sinners. In the body of the large meetings, as the audience is dispersing, many opportunities can be found by those who have a passionate love of the Saviour to speak a word in His name, and we think this is a part of the work which is somewhat neglected. During the past week there have been, as a rule, more workers ready to go into the inquiry-room than were needed. Let them disperse into the outskirts of the large meeting, and there they will find the fields white unto harvest, and the labourers, very often, few.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

A decided increase in numbers and in power marked the early meeting for workers. It was, indeed, good to be there, and to assemble with some 16,000 of the followers of Christ was in itself no small privilege. To Mr. Moody it was evidently a touching sight. He told us it was the most encouraging of all the meetings held as yet in London. From the subject of "The Talents," he drew thoughts that glowed and words that burned, till the gathering became as enthusiastic as the speaker. From such meetings, what may not result, to the honour of God and the eternal welfare of souls?

As to the afternoon and evening meetings on Sunday, for women and men, we have only space to say that the attendance was very large, especially in the evening, when the hall was quite filled with men only, and the power of God manifestly accompanied both the preaching and the singing. At the evening meeting when Mr. Sankey sang with much power and feeling, "Knocking, knocking, who is there?" the effect produced was most thrilling. It seemed as if the vast audience was holding its breath while each verse was being sung, and at the close it found a great and universal sense of relief in the loud hum of satisfaction which might almost have been mistaken for applause. We have scarcely ever before seen such a testimony to the marvellous power possessed by these simple hymns, as sung by this sweet singer, to sway vast multitudes as one man.

Both to the women and to the men Mr. Moody's message was the good news of the gospel preached to every creature. He spoke with great power, especially in the evening, when he varied his address somewhat to suit the different audience. His illustrations were many and much to the point; the way of salvation was made so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, could scarce err in his understanding of it. His closing words, when he pointed to the two texts in front of the gallery on either side, "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth from all sin," and "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," were a fitting termination to a most impressive address.

While the after-meeting was going on in the great hall, little groups of anxious inquirers were scattered all over the long gallery, some of them being prayed with, and others being earnestly besought to believe the gospel of which they had heard. At the afternoon meeting for women, the inquirers were not so numerous; the women of London, for some reason, appear less open to impression than those in Liverpool, where they responded to Mr. Moody's invitations with surprising and gratifying readiness.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

At the Sunday evening service Mr. Moody referred to the special meetings for young men, organized and successfully carried on in other towns, and expressed a wish that similar meetings should be commenced in London. Accordingly, at the close of the general service, St. Mary's Hall was well-nigh filled with (mostly) young men, for this purpose. George Williams, Esq., presided, and addressed some words of affectionate encouragement to the young men, to engage in this work. Mr. Moody entered the meeting shortly after it commenced, and having asked all those who wished to become Christians to rise, nearly a third part of those present did so, and afterwards followed Mr. Moody to the inquiry-room upstairs, while those who remained in St. Mary's Hall continued in prayer for a blessing on their anxious brothers. These young men's meetings will be held every evening in St. Mary's Hall from nine to ten, and it is expected that Mr. Scott, from Glasgow, as well as Mr. Henry Drummond, will assist in this part of the work.

FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Our readers will find full details of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's arrangements, as far as they are fixed, among the "Forthcoming Special Meetings," p. 20. It may be well to state here that the Rev. Wm. Taylor, late of California, has accepted the invitation of Mr. Moody and the Committee to come to London to assist in the evangelistic work, and he is expected to arrive in a few days, probably, he may be in London before this number of THE CHRISTIAN is published. The Committee have telegraphed to Rev. T. de Witt Talmage, Brooklyn, to know whether he can come over and help. With all these special instruments at work, we look for a mighty visitation from the Lord during the coming months. Will our readers continue in earnest prayer for this?

LIVERPOOL.

Mr. Thos. Matheson, Chairman of the Committee of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings here, has sent to the local papers a statement, thanking those who rendered aid in connection with the Victoria Hall services, from the architects downwards. We quote the following from Mr. Matheson's letter:—"But, above and beyond all, we desire publicly to acknowledge the goodness and mercy of God in preserving all connected with the undertaking from harm, if we except illness during the severity of the winter, so that we may truly say 'No evil has come nigh our dwelling'; and it will remain as a bright memory in the hearts of many as the place where they were made happy in Jesus."

"SIGNS FOLLOWING."

Rev. William Hubbard, of Manchester, writing to the Sheffield Methodist, in reference to the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, says:—"If their ministrations should be as useful to the pastors and preachers of Sheffield as they have been to me and others here, they will have abundant cause for gratitude. I have never been so blessed before...I have also learned the secret of successful preaching. I have found out at last that not my thoughts, or reasonings, or eloquence saves, but just Jesus Christ; and that all I have to do is to preach Him boldly, as I find Him in the Bible and in my own heart. Yesterday God gave me between thirty and forty of our young people at York-street, and nine the Sunday before; three more to-night, and the work is spreading into all our families."

The Birmingham correspondent of the Methodist writes:—"Whilst Messrs. Moody and Sankey were at work here, some Christians held aloof, urging as a reason that, as soon as the evangelists had left us, all the effects of their visit would vanish. Opponents of evangelical truth sought to nullify the success as much as they could by denying its practical results. Evidence of practical good, however, abounds on all hands. It is seen principally in the increased life in our churches, and the earnest efforts which are being put forth. Preachers are preaching better, and teachers are teaching better. Christian workers everywhere seem to have been aroused, and there is, as a consequence, increased zeal manifested in seeking to win souls. The churches in Birmingham were never so alive, I should think, to the great work designed for them as they are at the present time. There never was such a feeling of unity as now. The spirit of expectation has been awakened, and is being realised in the salvation of men and women. Our congregations are greatly improved. There is scarcely an evangelical church or chapel in the town that has not had its membership and congregation increased, and in not a few instances the recently reclaimed ones are in the front ranks of the forces engaged in the special work which the churches have now on hand."

The All-day Convention in Liverpool has already borne fruit. A committee has been formed, and steps are being taken to carry out Mr. Garratt's suggestion of dining-halls—after the fashion of the "British Workman" public-house without drink—for the dock-labourers.

A recent letter from Sheffield says:—"Doubtless you will have heard of the great accession to our church in — street, which took place last Sunday evening, eighty-seven members being then admitted to our fellowship. Nearly all these came to decision at the special meetings, or as the result of them. One of the number was my only son, a youth of seventeen. He had been deeply interested during the previous services, but it was about the fourth night, in the Albert Hall, after hearing Mr. Sankey sing 'Almost persuaded,' that he was led to thorough decision. It is needless to say how my heart was gladdened when he told me the good news."

A lady connected with one of the London homes for children, writes:—"My heart is full of praise and thanks to the Lord, as three children in the Home have given their hearts to Jesus to-day."

SHELTERING HOME, LIVERPOOL.

Dear Sir,—It is rather a long time since the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have heard from us of "The Sheltering Home, Byrom-street, Liverpool," but since we last wrote, many destitute and perishing little children have been admitted and cared for in the dear Master's name, and the Home has been filled and re-filled. We have crossed the Atlantic with our third band from this town, and are now expecting to go again just as soon as our brave sewing ladies in Liverpool and Birkenhead have put the finishing touches to the outfits of the dear little girls, and the jackets and waistcoats (which the committee commissioned me to buy in Manchester) have arrived—their "new suits" the trying on of which gives such wondrous delight to our Arab boys.

For the two hundred and thirty-two whom we have already placed out as adoptions and apprentices in Nova Scotia, we had no fewer than seven hundred applications, and greatly do we value the all-important aid rendered us by Colonel Lawrie, who has instituted such a safe and thorough mode of not only selecting the families into which to place these children, but of reporting quarterly on their progress. I was enabled to spend last autumn in visiting from county to county and from farm to farm, where our little ones were located, and saw, nearly every child I had taken out, settled in its new home of plenty, and although greatly pleased to show me their new-found possessions in the shape of horses, cows, sheep, lambs, ducks, chickens, and dogs, I failed in getting the consent of one to return with me to Liverpool. "No, no, Nova Scotia was better." In fact, Nova Scotia, with its good food, good clothes, farm work, splendid apples, and kind people, was paradise to them, and they were too wise to wish to leave it, remembering too well and too much of what they had seen and suffered in Liverpool.

It is with the greatest confidence and courage we go forward in this work, feeling the Master will provide not only the necessary ways and means, but what is even more important, the necessary strength and guidance, for truly we are caring for His poor little ones in caring for these children of our alleys, courts, and cellars, for whom no man cares. Oh, that Jesus may win bright jewels for his crown out of these perishing children, who seem left to wear out their little lives anyhow in these great commercial centres. The affectionate letters they send back home so lovingly show that the kicks, bruises, and curses are all passed over and forgotten, and the spark of love that may have remained is fanned into a flame. The following two letters from a boy and girl between thirteen and fourteen years of age, I have selected from among the many received as being good average specimens.

"St. John, Nov. 9, 1874.

"My very dear Friend,—It is with much pleasure I sit down to write you these few lines to let you know that I am well, hoping that they will find you the same. Dear Mrs. Birt, I left a kind friend when I left you; but when I landed in Canada I found very good friends, and also a comfortable home. I am now with Mrs. Daniel's daughter, young Mrs. Scofield. I like the country very much indeed. I would much rather be here than in the city of Liverpool. Dear Mrs. Birt, I hope that all the dear children in the Home at present are happy and well. I hope that if we shall never meet on this world, we may meet in that bright and better land where there shall be no more sorrow, pain, nor death. I hope that dear little May Flower is home and well, and will be able to come out with the next band of little pilgrims. I send my kind love to dear Mrs. Beaker; also to Miss Geldart, if she is at home; Mrs. Leach; and likewise to Mr. Arnold, our kind teacher; not forgetting your kind self. Give my kind love to all the dear children; tell them to come to Jesus.

Come to the mercy-seat,
Come to the place of prayer;
Come, little children, to His feet,
In whom ye live and are."

—Your affectionate scholar,

E. CARLOW."

"Amherst, Oct., 1874.

"Dear Mother I now sit down to write how happy I am. In my new home my new father and mother and they are so kind to me, and they have a little Ingliab girl in the family as they have no children. And i have a colt a pare of stires and a cow, and i woodent go back to eangland or Liverpool. And we have a lot of cattle and the meaning of stires is calf and a lot of herts. Dear mother i pray for you every night. I hope that you will never touch that nasty aney more, it will both ruin your soul and body, don't go crying to misses birt about us, you ort to thank her for brining us out hear, for she made a happy boy of me. So i must close my letter now.

"From your affectionate Son, HENRY COUSINS."
"God is love."

Two other most satisfactory letters [which we are obliged to omit] are from friends who have adopted two of the children; the first being from a well-to-do farmer, and the second from the Rural Dean of Ship Harbour, N.S. When this letter appears in type, we shall, in all probability, be upon the great waters; and I am so glad you called to see us when you were in Liverpool. Asking your prayers that the divine blessing may be upon us and our little ones—I am, dear sir, yours sincerely,
L. B.

TRADE MORALITY.

I have just read the article in this week's CHRISTIAN by Mr. Edwin Good, on "Is God in all our Thoughts?" I have been, as you know, a subscriber to your paper for many years, and I never, as a Christian business man, read anything in it which I consider of more importance than this subject. It is not an atom too strong, for I could not tell you, and if I could, your readers would scarcely believe me, of one quarter of the cheating which goes on in almost every business in the present day, whether carried on by Christian men or not—dishonesties which are called "trade customs," and which if we were not to do, most, if not all, of our business would go from us.

I am ashamed to say I am one of the principal partners in a large firm doing a foreign business, and by the orders of our customers we cheat and make false statements nearly every day, and if we did not do it our clients would cease buying from us, and our trade would go. I constantly protest to my partners against it, but I cannot stop it, and I cannot get out of the firm; if I could, I would go out to-morrow at a large sacrifice.

I should be thankful to attend a Conference of Christian business men, to consider how "to harmonize the morals of commerce with the morals of the Bible;" my present feeling is, that if this was done, I and thousands of Christian men having wives and children dependent upon us would, humanly speaking, be simply ruined.

I enclose my card (not for publication), and so anxious do I feel upon this matter, that if you like I would come to London especially to see as to how a Conference could be arranged.

You may publish this letter if you like, not, however, giving my name or address.—Yours sincerely,
C.

[We have received other articles bearing on this important subject, which for the present we are obliged to hold over.—ED.]

TESTIMONY OF A SHIP-OWNER.

The following is an extract from a private letter received from Liverpool:—

"The movement has grown immensely as the month has progressed, both in size, and in the attention and respect which it has commanded. A man was making game of it the other day in the tram, when one of our large steamboat owners said, 'Well, I am not connected with the movement, but I must say this, when the crew of one of my steamers knocked off work at the close of the day, one of them said, "Let's go for a lark, and hear Moody and Sankey." And there they went in a body for fun. They came away so much impressed, that they sent for one of the Scripture-readers whom Mr. Balfour maintains along the line of docks. They have had service on board the steamer in the docks every night since; and while before we had constantly men punished for absence and drunkenness, or something of the kind, we have not had a complaint since.' Such cases as these silence criticism."

MR. SPIERS AT FROME.

The following is from the Somerset and Wilt Journal:—

During the past week a series of special services for children and young people has been conducted at the Temperance Hall, by Josiah Spiers, Esq., of the Children's Special Service Mission, St. Jude's, Mildmay-park, London, under the auspices of the Frome Sunday School Union. Preliminary meetings to implore the Divine blessing upon the gatherings were held at Zion, Sheppard's-barten, and Badcox-lans Schoolrooms, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings in last week, all of which were largely attended.

The first service for young people was held on Monday evening. Long before the hour for commencing, the doors were besieged by an eager throng of juveniles and adults. Limited accommodation was provided for the latter in the gallery and on the platform, while the children were seated in the body of the room. Large numbers of both classes were unable to gain admission. The service conducted by Mr. Spiers was principally remarkable for a good deal of singing, an easy conversational style interspersed with frequent telling anecdotes, and the simple exposition of a portion of God's Word. They were mostly of a simple character, full of gospel truth, and set to popular tunes, in which the young people heartily joined. At the close, those who wished to remain for religious conversation were requested to do so, and from fifty to sixty responded to the invitation. It is in this part of the proceedings that Mr. Spiers' special powers are of great service; his tact with young people, his enthusiasm, and his strong faith, elicit the confidence of the children, and the co-operation of pastors, teachers, and other Christian workers. Spiritual results are looked for with the same certainty that the husbandman looks for the fruits of his labours in harvest time; and this probably explains Mr. Spiers' marvellous success. The meeting for inquirers was followed by a short prayer-meeting, at which brief supplications were presented on behalf of the seekers of salvation.

On Tuesday evening there was a much larger crowd of persons who sought admission to the hall than at the first meeting, and although additional seats had been procured, it was impossible to accommodate hundreds who crowded the approaches to the building. The service was conducted much in the same way as before. The passage expounded was Matt. ix. 6: "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." At the meeting for inquirers quite 100 young people remained, many of them being youths and maidens of sixteen years and upwards. The results were of a most encouraging kind.

The crowd on Wednesday evening was not so great, but still there were many more sought admission than could be accommodated, although, on each evening at least 700 were packed into the hall. The proceedings were of the same gratifying nature, the number of those who remained to the subsequent meeting being rather more than that of the previous evening.

On Thursday, there was a morning meeting of a very interesting character. The address was based upon the account of Christ's appearance to his disciples after the resurrection, as recorded in John xx. In the evening the plan was tried of excluding all children under nine or ten years of age; and yet the room, with the platform and gallery, was crowded to its utmost capacity. In lieu of a set address, Mr. Spiers narrated a thrilling anecdote of a little girl seeking the Saviour, and closed with texts; Job xxii. 5; Ezra ix. 5, 6; Psa. cviii. 4; xxv. 11. At the subsequent meeting for inquirers at least a hundred young persons remained, and the band of Christians who conversed with them was much larger than on any preceding evening. A deeply interesting feature in the meeting was the fact that several young persons, who were anxious about salvation at the commencement of the week, now sought to lead others to the Saviour.

We may add to this account that at the concluding meeting, on Friday evening, about 330 remained to the conversational meeting. So many were grown up young people that, in order to ascertain who were Christian workers and who were staying from a desire to be spoken with about their souls, Mr. Spiers called the former up to the platform, and 90 came forward; and the ministers present were glad to greet several now for the first time desiring to labour for Christ. At the close it was announced that any who liked might give in their names to friends stationed at the doors, in order that the teachers of their respective schools might pray for them specially, and gather them in classes for further Christian instruction. No less than 165 responded to this request, the greater number being young men and women from sixteen to twenty-five or thirty years of age.

"BRITISH WORKMAN" PUBLIC-HOUSES.

The deeply interesting movement to open "public-houses," with the novel and important distinction of "without the drink," attached to each of them, was last week the subject of three meetings in the Board-room of the United Kingdom Temperance Institution, London-bridge. Amongst those who attended were Mr. H. J. Atkinson, J.P. (Hull), Mr. T. B. Smithies, Mr. and Mrs. Hind Smith, Mrs. Atkinson, Mr. Sawell, Mr. G. W. Dodds, and several of the secretaries and managers of "British Workman" houses.

The first meeting was on Tuesday afternoon, and was intended for representatives of various committees, to compare notes and to report progress. Mr. H. J. Atkinson presided, and reported most favourably of the effort in Hull. No less than eighteen Benefit Societies or Clubs had been drawn from ordinary public-houses to meet in one "British Workman" house—a fact of no slight importance. It meant that it was the means of doing an immense amount of good negatively, and it also brought in an income of upwards of £20 per annum towards the working expenses of the house. He also stated that more than £20 per annum could be relied upon from the weekly subscriptions of the frequenters of the house. The house was numerously attended, and by the people for whom it was opened—working men—who took a hearty interest in its success. He strongly advocated the opening of similar houses over London, adverting to the good which had been done by those already started in or near to the metropolis.

Mr. Atkinson's remarks were frequently interspersed by inquiries from several gentlemen who had come from different parts of London to know more of the practical working of these houses. Their inquiries were answered by the chairman, and by Mr. G. W. Dodds, Hon. Secretary of the London British Workman Central Committee, and by Mr. and Mrs. Hind Smith.

Mr. Reid reported that two of the People's Cafés were now ready for opening, and that the Board were only waiting to find suitable persons to appoint as managers. One house was in Whitecross-street, in the heart of the poor population of St. Luke's, and the other was in Whitechapel. This Whitechapel house was more than eighty feet in length, and furnished with marble-topped tables throughout. The aim of the Board was to cater for the labouring population, and the success of the movement will depend on the co-operation of working men themselves.

The general feeling of the Conference appeared to be that these houses can be made centres of great usefulness in their several neighbourhoods if earnest Christian people of practical aims will accord them their support and sympathy, and prevent their drifting into the ordinary Working-men's Clubs. The essential elements of a true "British Workman" house are the ever open door, and the exclusion of all intoxicating drinks.

EVENING MEETING.

Mr. T. B. Smithies, who opened the meeting with reading the Scriptures and a few moments spent in silent prayer, said: The evil with which we are attempting to grapple is so great, the power of custom so strong, that the aim we had set before us might seem Utopian, if we could not lay hold upon the truth that God is with us. Notwithstanding all difficulties and discouragements, they were met to-night to hear of progress. In Manchester, and in Leeds, they had already gathered fruit, although they had yet to begin their work in London. Mr. Sawell had been labouring for some months for a café; and they could hardly help asking themselves how is it that on the Continent the rule was that a good cup of coffee was always to be had ready to hand; while in London you must go from one street to another before you could get it, and when you did, found it not worth having. Only within the last week, one for whom he had found employment in the suburbs, and whom he wished to preserve from the snare of the public-house, had written to him, saying that in the first coffee-shop into which he went, the tea was so bad, and the bread and butter so dirty, that he had to come out of the place. It was to be feared that this house was a sample of many such coffee-shops and it would really be a boon to working men to give them both a decent room and wholesome food neatly served.

Mr. Hind Smith expressed the pleasure it afforded him to meet so many co-workers in what he did not hesitate to call a grand enterprise. It was a grand work to save men who had been ruined, and to prevent others from falling. To any movement in either of these directions he was ready to accord his cordial sympathy and support. A minister of the gospel in Leeds, the Rev. H. Tarrant, had stated that he had watched the British Workman movement, and had seen it to be the means of reclaiming hundreds of drunkards, and of making hundreds more the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ. Thank God for such a testimony! Mr. Hind Smith said that as soon as it took root and form in England, it would become what he had seen it in the United States, where he had travelled 5000 miles without once seeing a wine decanter on the table. It was in Canada, where they prided themselves upon keeping up British habits, that he had been told that stimulants were necessary on account of the climate! In New York, in Brooklyn, Indianapolis, Washington, and Chicago, he saw those noble women who were daring to take the position they did, because of the sufferings their husbands and their sons had undergone. They were some of America's finest daughters, the élite of the land. They were daring to do battle for the Lord against the demon drink, lest their country should become as bad as ours. He had travelled throughout the country, and he had not seen six drunken men. He had never seen one in a railway carriage; and when he thought of scenes daily to be witnessed at home, he could not refrain from weeping. He believed that the movement in which they were now interested was one in the right direction; and he believed it would work mightily for good so long as they had the single eye to the glory of God.

Mrs. Hind Smith compared the opening of these British Workman houses to the tea-shops at the corners of the streets in China, which were frequented notwithstanding the quantity of opium that was consumed. It was necessary that we should have something to offer in place of what we ask people to renounce. A fortnight ago, continued the speaker, I went to Leeds, where, as you know, there has been a revival; a truly wonderful work going on. Mr. Aitken, of Liverpool, extended the services he had come to hold. The large town-hall was filled; a wave of blessing was showing itself in every British Workman house. I met some of the converts, and we had a room filled with those who had been brought to Christ. I asked them, "How do you trace the blessing you are now enjoying to the British Workman house?" One after another rose and said, "If it had not been for that house, I should not have been at the meeting." I believe that four-fifths of them had been thorough drunkards, spending every night in a public-house; and they said truly that if it had not been for the reclaiming influence brought to bear upon them, they would not have received the truth in which they are now rejoicing. The speaker now gave many interesting details of the good resulting from the British Workman movement, earnestly urging at the same time that we should aim to counteract the influence of those public-houses which, like unclean birds, picked up and devoured in the week the good seed which had been sown on the Lord's-day. It would be most desirable that the houses they proposed opening should be distinctly recognized as religious in their character, and they ought never to be allowed to degenerate into mere working men's clubs.

At the close of Mrs. Hind Smith's address, the secretaries and managers of several of the houses gave their testimony concerning their working and influence, and the meeting took the informal character of an experience-meeting.

The manager of the Sydenham "British Workman" said that working-men generally complained of the "bad stuff" they got in coffee-shops, and he had aimed to give them something better. Those who attended the house were orderly in their habits, and their conversation good. He had 136 names on the books. He could sell them coffee at one penny a pint. He opened at five in the morning, and until seven they were as busy as bees. Some of the men in the neighbourhood were so pleased at having such a place, that they had helped him to get the things in.

Mr. Harris (Sydenham) could speak from three years' experience, and he had been greatly encouraged. They had a benefit club of 232 members, who paid fourpence weekly, and received eight shillings per week in times of sickness.

In the library they had eighty-nine readers, and how many in the penny bank he could scarcely say. He had been struck with the improvement of the men in the neighbourhood of Sydeham. He had found Miss Jolly's Bible-class a great help. The average attendance during the winter had been fifty-four men. At a house he was visiting the other day a wife said to him, "My husband has begun to pray, and to read his Bible." They were taking £20 a week through the penny bank, and the receipts generally this year had been larger than any former year. They had been taking over £19 a week, which was a most encouraging fact. At least 500 men had been brought under the good influence of the house since it was started.

The Chairman incidentally remarked that they ought not to lose sight of the fact that there was a power for good in good music, and he gave an interesting account of a good work done in Highbury Vale through this instrumentality.

A friend from Fenge gave an encouraging report of the house there where he was able to supply them with first-rate coffee at the usual cheap rate.

Mrs. Hind Smith told of a house in Manchester where she had tried the experiment of having a place for omnibuses and casual visitors. It had succeeded, the expenses of the week being met by the provisions sold. About 500 omnibuses started from the point where the house stood.

Mr. Thompson (Sydenham) said he was opposed to the introduction of intoxicating drink in any of their houses. They had had great success already, and he believed they might fairly expect it to become greater.

The manager of the house in Crayford was able to speak in the most satisfactory terms of the success which had attended their efforts, and the inducements the house held out for the visits of schools for treats, etc. Already they had their list full of excursions for the approaching holiday months, and he believed their success was to be attributed to the fact that they did all to give their visitors a happy day.

The proceedings were then adjourned until Thursday, and the meeting closed with singing and prayer.

CONSECRATION MEETINGS IN FRANCE.

So many meetings have followed, one on another, in different parts of France, after the important one at Montmeyran in the Drôme, that long details respecting them is out of the question.

AT DIEULEFIT

(also in the Drôme), there was a manifestation of the presence of the Spirit, and permanent blessing; a thousand persons pressed into the temple at the evening meetings, earnest lively prayers and personal testimonies characterized them. Many Christians entered more fully upon the blessed path of a life of entire trust, and several souls found peace, whilst a good many pastors experienced the quickening and renewing of the Holy Ghost.

AT NISMES

there was a peculiar character in the blessing vouchsafed by the God of all grace during the days from Feb. 1 to 5. The spirit of prayer was pre-eminently felt in these meetings, as well as the spirit of liberty. The concluding meeting, when several hundreds rose to testify in singing of their personal experience, that "God was their strength and victory," was very moving. The requests for prayer were so numerous that they could not be taken up in detail. The reading of the Word of God was a marked feature in many meetings.

The more private meeting of ladies had an extraordinary place. The Holy Spirit moved over these meetings. Many famished souls came in, assured that there was deliverance for them, and each one assuredly received according to her faith. An aged Christian lady, and another, a pastor's wife, returned home filled with joy; they testified before 300 of the grace God had given them. We had there something like the "after-meetings" in England, but such embracing and bursting out with a newly-found joy. A Christian lady who presided, says, "We had in the morning meetings for humiliation and confession of the hindrances to progress, but 'the Advocate' had been in a measure overlooked, so I said, 'If you confess your faults without seeing them in the blood, they will come back again. We want the baptism of blood.' Oh, how this thought was seized in the prayers of these hearts, filled with anguish, who burst out in sobs. On calling to them, "Let those who wish for special prayer on their behalf stand up," several cried out, "For me, for me." One was obliged to be taken into the vestry, she was so overcome. On four successive days 300 met together, and at each meeting some were delivered. Other meetings were much blessed to conversion and deliverance of soul. Oh, such answers to prayer at my Sunday afternoon women's meeting! Many rose to testify that they had cast all their cares upon the Lord. The three last days the meetings were touching; such wonderful testimonies to the grace of God, M. Monod speaks so calmly that its effects astonish us people of the 'Midi,' but the Holy Spirit produces the work in each. The feeling of brotherly love was so sweet, so sensible."

THE MEETINGS AT STRASBURG

from Feb. 13 to 16 were attended in great numbers by brethren from Alsace, Baden, and Wurtemberg. Sometimes 1500 persons present. The brethren spoke out of a full heart, or rather the Spirit of God spoke by them. Songs of praise, prayer, and cries of joy from enfranchised souls, mounted up from every corner of the meeting. How many souls were apprehended, moved, transformed! and how many made a consecration of themselves entirely to the Saviour. All this is like a warm summer rain falling upon our churches. May the Lord keep what He has bestowed, and cause his fructifying Spirit to breathe on others likewise.

THE MEETINGS AT MONTAUBAN succeeded on Feb. 17 and 18, and at the same time at Nyons the brethren exchanged brotherly messages by telegraph. The movement proceeds on every side. It was most happy here for the students, many of whom are well disposed. The meetings were characterized by humiliation and consecration to God. The Bible spoke in these meetings so as it had seldom done before, and Bible truths in all their fulness and simplicity went home to many a heart, so as to call for a time of silent waiting upon God in prayer.

The ladies' meetings, though strange at the first, soon became most interesting, and prayers arose with freedom and a real blessing. Several conversions took place in the general meetings, and many pastors consecrated themselves afresh to God, and the voices of our dear students were heard in vocal prayer, and a blessing has rested on them.

THE MEETINGS AT NYONS

were truly blessed of the Lord, and the chapel was filled, and there were several conversions.

AT BOURDEAUX

in the Drôme there were excellent meetings for consecration and revival, which were remarkably blessed. It was difficult to break up the meetings for prayer. The Holy Spirit worked wonderfully in many hearts, sinners were converted, and many Christians were overwhelmed with the love of God.

THE MEETINGS AT DIE, DROME, were held from March 2 to 5. The meetings improved from day to day, and nineteen pastors were present. The spirit of prayer was given in the meetings for prayer. Many fainting Christians renewed their strength, and some souls passed from death to life, and praise arose from our hearts, and deep-felt gratitude for the manifestations of the God of all grace.

There was some doubt whether the meetings

AT GENEVA,

March 7 to 12 would succeed, but the first meeting disipated such thoughts, and all felt that God had ordered and arranged, and was present in a remarkable manner to bless. For the evening meetings no smaller place would suffice to contain the throngs which came, and the great Hall of the Reformation, holding, perhaps, 8500 persons, was filled. From Neufchatel and Vaud, and other parts, Christian people and pastors, national and free, flocked to the meetings, in order, at the feet of Jesus, to learn better to know Him and to love Him. The Lord assisted our beloved friend, Theodore Monod, and in the meetings for prayer, for pastoral conference, and in the public meetings he was powerfully helped and sustained. As early as seven o'clock in the morning a meeting was held for prayer in the Rive Droite. At nine was the regular meeting for prayer, the first half for intercession, when mostly fifty requests were presented, the latter half for prayer for a blessing on the exercises of the day in prayer and singing, and on the speakers. Many anxious souls found deliverance and joy. A person of much influence had travelled through the cantons of Switzerland with a burdened heart, begged earnestly for prayer, saying that if he only found Christ he would consecrate himself wholly, and all that he had, to the Lord. He was enabled to testify that he had found this blessing, and his song of praise resounded in the meeting. Many others experienced the renewing grace of the Lord, and many pastors were revived. Some who came with a prejudiced mind testified that they had found Jesus to be a present Saviour, and the Source of strength, of peace, and joy. Beginning with humiliation, then with consecration, they went on to enter into the current of benediction, and returned home with a light heart to commence their ministry afresh under the rays of the Sun of Righteousness.

On Friday, the last day of the meeting, 1200 came forward to partake of the Lord's Supper. It was a memorable season, when many expressed their desire to love the Saviour, and abide in Him. It was a solemn time of waiting in the presence of the Saviour. G. P.

THE MASTER'S VOICE.

When glory, like the sunrise,
Filled all my native land,
And grace, like gushing fountains,
Burst forth from strand to strand;

When times of sweet refreshing,
Like the balmy breath of spring,
Revived the weary heritage
Of Zion's heavenly King;

A voice came with the breezes,
From lands beyond the sea,
Where the Hindu sets his idol
Beneath the banyan-tree.

'Twas the voice of the Beloved;
Who hear it, gladly yield.
He's calling forth His reapers
To the world's great harvest-field.

I've seen the Christian heroes,
A small but noble band,
Who "hold the fort" for Jesus
In dark Hindoostan land.

I've heard the Christian converts
Their joyful voices raise,
And, in the name of Jesus,
The great Jehovah praise.

Like fruits that first have ripened
In India's balmy air,
Those precious souls are gathered
By men of faith and prayer.

But oh! they need recruiting;
They long have kept the field,
And toiled beneath the burning sun,
With hearts that cannot yield.

O Scotland, favoured Scotland,
Send forth thy true and brave,
To tell the dying Hindu
Of Him who came to save!

Our soldiers and our sailors,
At earthly monarch's call,
Bear forth the British banner,
With hearts to fight or fall.

And shall the friends of Jesus
Be wanting in the strife,
And leave the heathen nations
Without the bread of life?

From the times of sweet refreshing
Let bands of reapers come;
The Lord is now preparing
The Hindu's harvest-home.

Let every Mission-station
Sound forth Messiah's fame,
Till mountain, hill, and valley
Shall echo back His name;

Till glory, like the sunrise,
Shall o'er the nation fall,
And every idol perish,
And Christ be all in all!

WESTERN CHINA via BURMAH.

You were kind enough to insert in your number for January 21 an appeal for prayer on behalf of the China Inland Mission, that eighteen young men might be raised up this year to carry the gospel into nine provinces of China, which, with 150,000,000 people, have 100 Romish priests, but not one Protestant missionary. Many of your readers have remembered this in prayer; some have offered themselves for the work.

While again asking prayer for eighteen "willing, skilful men" (1 Chron. xxviii. 21), God-prepared, God-sent men, I would also ask that special request be made that God will guide us, first, in the selection from among those who offer of those whom He would have to go; second, in the arrangements as to when they should leave for China; and, third, to what part of the field they should be sent.

But I have another subject for which I desire the prayers of your readers. Ten years ago, it was a matter of correspondence between the late Rev. W. C. Burns and myself as to whether we should not together attempt to carry the gospel to south-western China via Burmah. We were led to see that then it was premature to attempt it. The thought, the prayer, has never been abandoned; and many of your readers are aware that Mr. Stevenson, who has served God in Eastern China with so much blessing for nearly nine years, is about (D.V.) to sail for Rangoon, with the immediate object of commencing work at Bhamo, on the Burman frontier, to be extended as and when the Lord may permit into several of the nearer provinces of China Proper. Mr. Henry Soltan has prayerfully concluded to accompany him, looking alone to the Lord for the needful pecuniary supplies, feeling that, as one of the secretaries of the Mission, it is better, to avoid all misapprehension, to receive none of the funds sent for the general purposes of the Mission, but only those specifically given for his personal use. I feel very thankful that he has been led to give himself unreservedly to the Lord for missionary work, and earnestly beg for much prayer, that these servants of Christ may be preserved from all evil, constantly guided, and abundantly blessed in their difficult but glorious enterprise. They sail (D.V.) from Glasgow on the 30th inst.

Pray also that the recent sad events, the repulsing of the Exploratory Expedition of the Indian Government, and the murder of Mr. Margary, with his five Chinese attendants, may be overruled for speedier and earlier blessing to the inhabitants of this region. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

6, Pyrland-road, Newington-green, N.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.—The open-air services in the Green-lanes, Stoke Newington, will (D.V.) commence on Easter Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, near the Highbury New Park Tavern, and continue each Sunday morning till the end of September. A prayer-meeting will also be held at 10.30 in Room No. 5, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. G. KIRKHAM.

THE CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION FOR ENGLAND.—The first annual meeting was held on Saturday at the residence of Quintin Hogg, Esq., Whitehall, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The report read by Mr. Brown the secretary, showed that the Association has already twenty colporteurs at work, besides three agents partially employed, and the results of their operations have been most satisfactory. Lord Cavan spoke of the benefit of colportage in the highlands of Scotland. Mr. McArthur, M.P., noticed that although the report was so satisfactory of one year's work, yet England was very far behind Scotland, which, with so far smaller a population, had a very much larger number of colporteurs. After brief addresses from Mr. Paton and Mr. Fordham, Lord Shaftesbury urged the great importance of this Association to counteract the enormous and increasing issue of the corrupting literature which teems from the press. Formerly vicious books were coarse and offensive, but now they were so fascinating and insidious that the moral sense of the reader was lowered or lost almost before he was aware. A subscription of £40 per annum will enable the Association to provide a colporteur for any locality. Could not very many of our readers obtain forty subscribers of a pound each, and thus confer upon their neighbourhood an inestimable advantage? Address, Mr. Brown, Secretary, 15, Hanover-street, Long Acre, London, W.C.

OPENING OF A BAPTIST CHAPEL IN ROME.

The correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that a new Baptist chapel was opened in Rome on Sunday last. Eleven Italian communicants were present, and 150 Bapts from England and elsewhere. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Wall, Deputy Mazzarella, Rev. Mr. Edwards, of Torquay, Signor Rossetti, Signor Grassi, etc. The premises were bought by the Baptists for £12,000, and were converted into a place of worship, and seated for 300. Rev. Jas. Wall will be pastor, with two assistants. Dr. Underhill of London, preached in the evening to a large congregation of English and Americans.

CENTRAL NOON PRAYER-MEETING,

MOORGATE-STREET HALL.

The following are the subjects and speakers for the ensuing week—

- Th. 25.—Pentecost (Gen. xxxii. 30). Mr. Donald Matheson.
- Fri. 26.—Prevailing prayer (Mark xi. 23—26). Rev. Charles Graham.
- Sat. 27.—“Perfecting holiness” (2 Cor. vii. 1). Mr. James Pearce.
- Mon. 29.—“What is that in thine hand?” (Exod. iv. 2). Rev. J. T. Davidson.
- Tu. 30.—Heaven’s law of increase and decrease (Matt. xxv. 29). J. Stephenson.
- Wed. 31.—Excellency of Christian character (2 Cor. ii. 18). R. H. Lovell.

NOTTINGHAM.—An All-day Conference of Christians will be held at the Co-operative Hall, Nottingham, on Easter Monday, March 29, at 11 a.m., and 3, 5, and 7 p.m. Subjects, “The Believer’s Life and Walk,” and “The Believer’s Hope, as affecting his walk.” Gospel Addresses in the evening. Information obtained from Captain Acton, Baker-street, Nottingham.

R. PEARSALL SMITH purposes, after the Good Friday services at three and half-past six o’clock at the West London Tabernacle, Notting-hill, to go at once to Brussels, the Hague, and Berlin; and to hold meetings on his way back to England at Haale, Stuttgart, Kornthal, Berne, Basle, Paris, etc. His address will be, 16, Hinderson Strasse, Berlin.

OLDHAM MISSION.—A great blessing has been poured out over Oldham during the last fortnight. Thousands have, night after night, been listening to the simple gospel of Christ, and day by day large bodies of working-men have been addressed in the open air during their dinner-hour. Many of all classes have been brought to the Lord, and many who were before walking with Jesus have been brought closer.

HENRY VARLEY IN NEW YORK.—It was the purpose of Mr. Varley to have returned to England by the steamer of February 27, but the great blessing upon his work in New York made it quite plain that it was the Lord’s will for him to remain. His afternoon meetings were very large, and composed of the best working Christians of New York, and I heard of one instance in which the attendance was nearly as large as the great gatherings now seen in the Agricultural Hall. R. P. S.

WEST LONDON TABERNACLE.—In these rich and wonderful times of blessing and expectancy, the Lord has not forgotten to be gracious to the work begun now many years since by his servant, Henry Varley, in Notting-hill. As most of your readers know, he is absent from his church and home, doing the Great Master’s bidding in Canada and New York, where believers have been quickened and revived, and many souls brought to lay their arms of rebellion at the all-conquering Saviour’s feet. The first two Sabbaths in the present month the Lord sent his honoured servant, J. Denham Smith. The first day was a day of rejoicing to many souls who have known and loved the Lord for years, and tearful anxious faces left that evening who were not able to be personally spoken to, as it was the night appointed for the Lord’s Supper. But last Sunday evening, at the close of the service, those who were personally anxious were invited to remain for an after-meeting. Some three or four hundred stayed, many of whom were seeking and found the Saviour. To Him be all the praise. This is written to plead with the Lord’s praying ones that they will join in praising Him for such a gracious revival amongst us, and pray that this may only be the beginning of a mighty shower of blessing on the West of London. DAILY TEXTS.

“BEHOLD THE MAN.”—JOHN XIX. 5.

Thurs., Mar. 25.—“Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.” “A Man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.” “Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.”—Isa. vii. 14; xxxiii. 2; John i. 29.

Fri. 26.—“Sitting down, they watched Him there.” “I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me.” “Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth.”—Matt. xxvii. 36; John xii. 32; Isa. xlv. 22.

Sat. 27.—“Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after Him!” “Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment.”—John xii. 19; Isa. xxxiii. 1.

Sun. 28.—“Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle Me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have.” “Looking unto Jesus.”—Luke xxiv. 39; Heb. xii. 2.

Mon. 29.—“Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me.” “Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow.”—Isa. viii. 18; Lam. i. 12.

Tues. 30.—“Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him.” “Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ.”—Rev. i. 7; Jude 21.

Wed. 31.—“I beheld, and lo! in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb, as it had been slain.” “They shall see His face, and His name shall be in their foreheads.”—Rev. v. 6; xiii. 4.

“LO! THIS IS OUR GOD; WE HAVE WAITED FOR HIM.”
ISA. xxv. 9.

GOSPEL-HALL, DERBY.—Three weeks ago, special services were commenced in this town by Henry Holloway, of Manchester. These services are well attended, and the interest seems to increase, the hall being full, and numbers staying to the after-meeting. The Spirit of God is indeed working mightily in our midst. The clear gospel is set forth in all its fullness, and with deep earnestness, and, as a consequence, the Lord’s word does not return unto Him void. The drunkard is broken down, men and women are deeply convinced of sin. One young man and woman, who would not stay to the after-meeting, and could not rest at home, went again to the Gospel-hall; found it then too late; the hall was closed. They went again the next night, remained, and found peace with God through the precious blood of Christ. Another young man, deeply convicted of sin, tried to drown thought at the ale-house. Still the Spirit of God strove with him; and though he was in that den of wickedness all day, he came to the Gospel-hall again at night, and there remained; and though he did not find peace at once, he is now happy in the Lord, and can rejoice in the finished work of Christ his Saviour. We are thankful Mr. Holloway is here. A WORKER.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—Prayer was asked some months since for a safe voyage of some Christian friends in the “Pleasides” for New Zealand. Now, praise for their arrival, and for the conduct of the captain.—For blessing on Bible-classes, for young hearts around drawn to love the Lord, and for abundant blessing to the soul of the worker.—That the Lord, in answer to prayer, has blessed the prayer-meeting amongst the non-collegiate students.—For an outpouring of the Spirit in Bardney, Lincolnshire, for which prayer was asked some months ago.

PRAYER.—That a man after God’s own heart may be sent to assist the vicar of a large manufacturing parish in one of the midland counties.—For a weak believer that has lost peace, and feels strongly bound by the devil.—That a young undergraduate at Cambridge may be guided aright in a perplexing situation.—Infidels, and others, who are trying to sow tares instead of wheat.—For two neighbours, father and son, both slaves to the same besetting sin.—For the members of two village Bible-readings.—For six Christian brothers and sisters, seniors in a large family, that they may receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

PLACES.—For gospel services to be held by Mr. John Vine in Bournemouth and neighbourhood, commencing 28th of March.—For the Lord’s blessing on a series of evangelistic meetings in a neglected district in Scotland.—For a revival in Magherafelt, Ireland.—For the little town of Conway, Wales.—For a village, near Guildford, where services are constantly held.—For Bukloo, a small station in India, that it may please the Lord to send one of his own devoted servants there.—For the town of Retford, in Notts, that the Holy Spirit may be poured down on its ministers, congregations, schools, and on its inhabitants generally.—For Burton, Somerset.—For the meeting about to be held at Carlruhe, that a blessing may descend on both speakers and hearers.—For a meeting at Alexandra Hall, Blackheath, to describe Messrs. Moody and Sanky’s work.—For evangelistic services to be held on Sabbath-evenings in the Theatre Royal, Paisley.—For services on Good Friday and Easter at Christ's Church, Forest Hill, by the Rev. W. Bradbury.—For an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on a small village in North Wales.—For gospel meetings in Brussels next week.

CONVERSIONS.—For one dear family of seven.—For a brother-in-law who, for many years, has been living a life of the most fearful wickedness, bringing a devoted wife and only child to ruin, and it is feared, an early grave.—For a cousin who has begun to reform, that he may be strengthened to fight against his besetting sin.—That a lad, about seventeen, dying of consumption, may be brought to Christ, and blest to those around him.—For a friend of mine to whom I have written.—For a father who is trusting in man's wisdom; also for five brothers and sisters.—For a widow who gave up drinking some years ago, when converted, but has begun again, and cannot give it up. For a poor old woman who is very ill, and in a very dark state.—For one in a serious state of health, that, before it be too late, he may become one of God's children.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

BY DR. CULROSS.

THERE is no better preparation for entering the inquiry-room as a worker than devout and joyful intercourse with God, and a freshened sense of his love. When we have chalked out a line for ourselves beforehand, and prepared the things we should say, we have utterly failed; whereas, going forward as those who were in communion with God, it has been given us in that hour what we should speak; the right words have come, unstudied and unbidden, to our lips, and the souls that we were dealing with have been blessed. Simplicity, tenderness, meekness and gentleness, patience, wisdom, persuasiveness, holy skill, will not be a-wanting to those who have come forth from the presence-chamber, with the atmosphere of the holiest about them, their spirit chastened and hallowed and cleared by intercourse with God. And so, when telling about Jesus, we shall not speak as if we believed, but (which is a very different thing) because we believe.

The condition of mind in which inquirers are found varies a good deal in different cases. Some exhibit comparatively little feeling, and yet are very truly in earnest; others are all excitement, and their very excitement hinders their apprehension of the gospel; others have difficulties of a speculative kind, which they scarcely like to state, lest they should be counted infidels, and which are best met, not by speculatists, but by those who have entered experimentally into the enjoyment of salvation; others are alarmed, but very ignorant; while others are in deep, quiet earnest. Anyone who has come into close contact, over a space of years, with those whom God's Spirit has touched, will easily recall cases falling under one or other of these heads. Obviously there must be an adaptation on our part to the case in hand—as Jude puts it, "making a difference," or using discrimination in our manner of dealing. An example of such discrimination is found in Matt. viii. 19—22. The man who was forward and self-confident was told to count the cost: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." To the lingerer, who would first lay his father's head under the turf, the summons is issued, "Follow Me, and let the dead bury their dead." Hence the importance of Christian common-sense, of sound judgment, combined with sympathy and genuine love, that we may get at the real condition of those whom we wish to help, and may deal with their real difficulties and perplexities, not as priests in the confessional, but as Christian brethren.

As to entering into argument with professed inquirers, there are two sides to the case. The most obvious is the danger of getting away from the matter of supreme importance, which is the submission of the heart to the righteousness of God. We must not be led away from this by discussion and striving about words. A merely argumentative mood is about the worst mood into which we can decline when the reception of the gospel is in question. On the other hand, some inquirers who seem to be in this mood (as it has been my lot once and again to discover, after a little patience) are really perplexed and bewildered by some speculative difficulty, which is a very serious one to them; and it would be a great pity to make short work of it by treating them as insincere, or disposed to quibble. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." These inquirers stand as much in need of intelligent, firm, tender treatment as any class that I know. In any case, however, the right thing is neither disputation, nor a demand for submission to our authority or better knowledge, but "manifestation of the truth to every man's conscience in the sight of God"—letting God prove his gospel in his own way.

Instead of mere abstract statement and human urgency, it is better to lead those whom we desire to help into the presence of the living Saviour himself. I would lay the utmost possible emphasis on this. We ourselves are nothing, and cannot convert men by any power or skill of our own. It is not even the Bible that we are to bring them to. It is not the Bible but Christ that saves; and our aim should be to lead souls into His presence, that there may be personal intercourse and personal dealing with the living Saviour himself. I would put the case in some such way as this, of course opening up according to circumstances what is here put briefly:—Do you really need Christ? Is that true? Do you think He can save you? Do you think He is willing? Are you willing to have Him as your Saviour? If you are both willing—He to be your Saviour, and you to have Him as Saviour—what hinders? Why not say yes to Him at once? If He were present in the next room just now, and if this moment He sent for you, inviting you to come to Him, would you have any difficulty in the case? Would you not go in, and cast yourself at his feet, and tell Him that you have come at his bidding? Well, but this is the actual case: Jesus has sent for you. He is not only in the next room; you are already in his presence. This very moment, by drawing down the curtains of the eyelids, you may make a closet for yourself, in which you are alone with Him. Do so, and at once speak to Him, and tell Him that you have come because He has sent for you, and that you trust Him for both worlds; and then say, "There is now no condemnation to me."—Let the words of the Bible then come in as words from the lips of Jesus. To bring inquiring souls thus into the presence of the Saviour himself is the practical solution of a thousand perplexities which verbal explanations fail to clear up.

Just one other hint I would throw out at present: do not lose patience or be discouraged because of the dulness of the inquirer, or because you seem to do him no good. Here is the testimony of one who died recently in the faith of the gospel: "Under God I owe my conversion to you, not through anything special that you said, but because you would never give up hope of me." It is wise not to say too much, for we may undo our own work, and bewilder souls, by not knowing when to hold our tongue; it is wiser still not to be disheartened by seeming failure. Even should the inquirer turn away from you, you may still reach him, as Mr. Moody strikingly put it the other evening, by the way of the throne.

APPEAL TO THE CHRISTIANS OF LONDON.

BY D. L. MOODY.

The following is the substance of the address at the Agricultural Hall, on Thursday evening last.

I would rather wake up a slumbering church than a slumbering world. The man who does the most good in the world is not he who works most himself, but who sets others to work. What we want is to get the Christian people to work. I mean to engage in personal and individual effort. If we could only have all the Christians ready to work, saying, "Send me to some anxious soul; let me have the unspeakable privilege of holding up the torch of salvation to light some one into the kingdom of God," there would be hundreds converted where now there are scores.

To-day, after the meeting in Astley's Theatre, I went down among the audience, and nearly every one I spoke to was anxious and ready for me to tell them the way of life. They told me right out the things that were troubling them, and in a few minutes I was able to help them more than I could do in the whole sermon. There are hundreds here that will not be gained by preaching. You have had enough of pulpit preaching, and very good preaching too; what we want is hand-to-hand work, personal effort, individual going to people and pressing on them the claims of Christ.

Let me say that what I think we want is a little more courage. I think there are a great many Christian people who want to work, but they are timid—full of fears and misgivings. They have not got the moral courage to speak to their friends or those near them. God cannot use a man or woman who is full of fear. In the first chapter of Joshua, God said three times, "Be of good courage," and if you read the Bible carefully, you will find that God never used men who were full of fears and doubts. We must lay these aside, and go out boldly to speak for God. We must not be ashamed to tell what God has done for us, and to speak to those who are perishing—to talk to them personally about their souls' salvation. If we would lift up our voice in season and out of season, and not be ashamed to speak for Christ, all London would soon be waked up, and there would be a cry, "What must we do to be saved?"

I have never found a church that was anxious for souls to be saved, but they always found souls inquiring the way of life. I do not care how dead other churches may be, there will be life in that church. I never saw a Christian really anxious for souls, but there were anxious souls to whom he could speak. It always follows. The world will soon be reached when the church is reached. If we can only get on fire and have our hearts, if I may use the expression, "red-hot" with love for God and souls, then the world will begin to tremble, and the fear of the Lord will come to the hearts of the people; men will be ready and willing for us to talk to them. The moment a church gets alive God begins to bless it. There is no power, earthly or infernal, that can hinder God from working; the only thing that will hinder Him is our unbelief. Let us lay this aside; let us lay aside our doubts and fears and come up as one man to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let our watchword be, "Here am I, send me. O God, use me; speak through me." He will take up the weakest disciples and use us in building up his kingdom, if we are only willing to be used.

But I can imagine some one says, "But my life is not right, therefore I cannot speak to my neighbour. I have not been living right myself." Well, my friends, let me just advise you to get right at once. Go right to God and confess your backslidings, your shortcomings, your wanderings. And if you know of anyone who is stumbling over you, go straight to them and confess it. There is nothing that God will use more than that kind of work—a man going to his neighbour saying, "I want you to forgive me; I have not lived right before you, or walked rightly and consistently, and I want to ask your forgiveness." That is the kind of preaching the world wants. One earnest Christian, living out Christianity, will do more to upæet infidelity than all the lectures on infidelity that were ever delivered. We want Christians to be living out the life of Christ. "Ye are my witnesses." He has left us here to testify of Him, and proclaim his love to a perishing world. If we have not got it ourselves how are we going to proclaim it to others? Water never rises higher than its own level.

In the last chapter of Acts, we read that Paul had been shipwrecked on the island of Melita. The people gathered some sticks to make a fire. I suppose his clothes were all wet, and he was cold. There came out a viper and fastened itself upon Paul's arm, and these barbarians said, "That is a very bad man; he has escaped the judgments of the sea, but they have followed him to the land;" and they watched to see him die. But Paul just shook the viper off into the fire, and when he ought to have died, he was perfectly well. Then they changed their mind, and they said, "He is a god." Paul could preach to them then; they would believe him then. What good would it have been for him to preach with that viper on his arm? They would have said, "You had better preach to yourself, you need not come preaching to us with that viper on your arm." So there are a great many Christians with a viper, not on their arm, but fastened at their heart, taking the very life out of them. And the world has got its eyes on the viper. May God give us grace to shake the viper off into the fire, that the world may not see the viper, but may see Christ in us.

Look at the viper of pride, that has taken nearly all the life right out of the church. You do not have to go to Paris to see the height of the fashion; go to the church on the Sabbath, and you will see it there. People say, "What will my friends think; what will they say at the next dinner-party, if I come out boldly and work for Christ, or if I am seen at the special meetings?" A great many professed men of God are just now trembling from head to foot; they dare not go out and speak boldly for Christ. My friends, the question is, Is this God's work or the devil's? If it is God's work, every man of God ought to stand by it; if it is the devil's, every man ought to do what he can to stop it. I hope the time is coming when the children of God will come together as one man; it will be a happy day for Christianity when we get together. These border men are doing more to retard the cause of Christ than the world is doing. It is this compromising spirit that is hindering the work of the Lord. May God sweep it out of the way! ("Amen, amen.")

Do not be ashamed, my friends; be of good courage. If God is with us we have nothing to be discouraged about. If God is with us He will bring it out all right. What we want is each one of us to stand in our place, and let God work through us. I remember a few years ago I got very much discouraged and cast down; for some time there had been no apparent fruit of my labours. One Sunday was a very barren day, and on the next morning a young man, one of the Sabbath-school teachers, called on me. He had a class of 100 young men, and his lesson was always well prepared; we used to compare notes. He said, "What were you preaching about yesterday?" I told him. "What kind of a day had you?" "Very poor day." He was away up on the mountain; he had had a splendid day. "What was your subject?" "I took up the life of Noah; did you ever preach on Noah? Did you ever study up his life?" Well, I thought I knew pretty much all about him, but I had never studied his life very much. "Well," he said, "it would do you good to give a little time to the study of that character." I took down my Bible and began to read, and the thought came stealing over me that Noah worked 120 years, and never got one convert outside of his own family, or if he did, he didn't let anybody know of it. I went out and walked down to the noon prayer-meeting. A man sitting behind me got up and said, "I am lost; pray for my soul." The thought came to me, I wonder what Noah would have given if he had heard that. There was a man sitting beside me who said he had come from Illinois, and had taken 100 young converts into his church the Sunday before. Well, thought I, I wonder what Noah would have given if he had heard that. I looked over the meeting, and saw there were several hundred had come together that day. What would Noah have given to attend a daily prayer-meeting of that size? He never saw such a sight. And so, if I am inclined to get discouraged, I think of Noah. All the men in the Bible whom God has used, have been men of great courage, men of iron heart and iron will, ready to do anything that God wanted them to do.

Another thing. If we are going to be used to win souls to Christ, we must have perseverance. A great many people take hold of the work for a few weeks, and that is the last you see of them. If we are going to be successful, we must work 365 days in the year. I have no sympathy with spasmodic efforts, and I can sympathize a good deal with those papers that are running down this movement, because they don't believe in people working at it for a few weeks, and that is the last you hear of them. A great many Christians are like a bundle of shavings; they get up in a great blaze, and in a few minutes there is nothing left, not even ashes. We want to be like the coal that burns steadily, and makes a good hot fire. It is the man who works 365 days in the year that accomplishes most for the Lord. What we want is, not to be passing through a revival, but to live in one. The prayer of my heart is, that when the revival spirit dies out of me, I may die with it; I do not want to live any longer. It is the privilege of the Church to be in a revived state all the while. If we take hold of the work, and make up our minds, God helping us, that we will win souls to Christ, we will succeed.

A great many come to these meetings, and get their friends here for one or two nights, and because they have not been reached the first night or the second, they become discouraged and disheartened. Let me give you a little advice, you young converts. Make up your mind that you will never give a man up until he is dead. Let him talk against the meetings if he will. When God awakes a man, he often wakes up cross. These men who are writing bitter things against the meetings are very hopeful men; the Spirit of God is troubling them. A great many bitter things will be said and written, and a great many lies told; never mind, let us work on. If they called Christ the prince of devils, what will they not call you and me? If this is God's work, of course we will suffer persecution. If it is the devil's work, we will be very popular, and the world will say, That is the kind of religion we like. Woe be to you when all men speak well of you. We must not court the applause of the world, or seek honour from men. What is highly esteemed of men is an abomination to God. God does not see as man sees. The moment you make an attack on the world, it will attack you, and begin to lie and abuse you. Never mind its lies and abuse. Our God is with us. The shout of a King is heard in the camp. If God be with us, who can be against us? Oh that God would wake up the slumbering Christians of London! If we could only get the pulpit and the pew united in uncompromising and determined effort for souls, Christianity would be like a red-hot ball rolling over the face of the earth. Thanks be to God, the gospel has not lost its power; the cross has not lost its power. What we want is, to give Christ to a perishing world, and God will stand by us, and use us, and bless us, and make us wise to win souls to Him.

Let me say to the young Christians, do not get discouraged. Persevere. If you do not succeed in bringing the soul you are anxious about to Christ the first year, try the next year; if you don't succeed the second year, try the third. Keep at him. In illustration of this point Mr. Moody related an incident in his own experience, which we do not reproduce in detail. It was to the effect that by persevering effort, spread over many months, he was able to be instrumental in the conversion of an atheist saloon-keeper and his family. They were now his best friends in Chicago, and shining lights in that city.

Some families I have been after, continued Mr. Moody, for ten, twelve, and fifteen years, and they are not converted yet. But there is no man in London so far gone but the grace of God can save him. We want to go to the hardest and vilest, and tell them of Christ and heaven. May God give us courage to go out and speak boldly for Him.

Mr. Moody addressed some words of encouragement to parents. He had been much cheered, he said, in the inquiry-room, to find parents coming, bringing some of their children to be spoken with. That afternoon, at Astley's Theatre, he saw a mother with her little boy. "Here is my son," she said, "I am anxious that he should be saved." Mr. Moody believed that the mother's prayers were answered, and the boy brought into the kingdom. If the mothers and fathers in the north of London would lay aside all their other engagements for the next few days or weeks, and bring their children to the meeting, or seek their conversion in some other way, there would be a great ingathering of children into the Kingdom of God.

Mr. Moody concluded by asking all who professed to be Christians to rise, that it might be known who were on the Lord's side. About two-thirds of the entire congregation stood on their feet, upon which he requested them to speak to those around them who had not risen, and invited those who wished to have private conversation, into the inquiry-room.

TWO YOUNG ENGLISH GIRLS IN LONDON.

Working, as usual, in our Whitefield Mission-house in Drury-lane, after our mid-day prayer-meeting, the two following narratives were related to me:—

"1. My parents are both dead; my father died first. My mother married again; then she died. My stepfather married again; his new wife and myself did not agree, and I had to leave the house. I went to service, went out for a holiday when my time came, became acquainted with a young man, lost my character and my situation. Went upon the streets, and lived with another young man, who locked me up in one room all day, only letting me out in the evening. I could not have come to you to-day, but I heard of you, and climbed out of the window. I must go back again before he comes home, or he will beat me dreadfully, as he has often done before."

"2. I lived at home with father and mother, till both died. I had no brothers or sisters, no one to care for me; but I got a little place; and though the work was dreadful hard (I had to work every day from seven till after midnight) I stopped at it as long as I could; but I got tired at last, and gave a week's notice, and left, thinking to get an easier place. I had a few shillings, and some clothes, and I went with some girls I knew, till my money and clothes were gone; then they wanted me to do as they did, but I could not. So I had to leave them, and go about to casuals and refuges till now. But I can't go any longer. I'm so sick, and weak, and filthy, I feel as if I should die in the street. Do take pity on me, and help me! Indeed, indeed, I have not done any wrong; only I'm nearly dead with hunger and cold."

This dreadful story was literally true. We took her in, fed her, sent her to a refuge; thence she was transferred to a hospital, and there the doctor said she was a good, honest girl, all but starved. Her garments were so filthy, as to be burned as they were cut away from her.

I choose to let these narratives stand for the consideration of English Christians, without note or comment of mine, adding only this:—We will gladly save others, as we have rescued these, and many scores like them; but the funds sent to us are exhausted, and must needs be replenished before we can resume our labours among these lost, ruined, and helpless wrecks in our giant city. The Mission-house, where these stories were told, is not half-a-mile from the great Central Noon-meeting in Exeter Hall.

EAST BRENT.—We rejoice to state that the reported perversion to Rome of a lady in this neighbourhood, which was alluded to by a correspondent in our issue of Feb. 11, is untrue.

FOR THE YOUNG.

WHAT KING SOLOMON WOULD SAY TO CHILDREN.*

I.

King Solomon was a great king and a wise man. He ruled over large territories, had vast treasures, and commanded mighty armies. His reign was one of unusual magnificence, and he himself was known and praised throughout the nations of the East. But, after all, the most remarkable thing about this splendid monarch, was his wisdom. He understood human nature perfectly, and God employed him to write down some short sayings for the guidance of his people in all ages; and these sayings we have in the Book of Proverbs.

Now I have been fancying what King Solomon would say if he were to come back and talk to you children. Imagine him without his robe and crown, and regal magnificence, just dressed in a simple dress, sitting down in a chair, with all of you gathered in a ring round him, all of you attentively listening to the wise words that would proceed out of his mouth. What would he say? what would he speak about? what advice would he give you?

Well, first, I think he would advise you to read your Bibles very carefully; in fact, to study them. He would tell you—at least the elder ones amongst you—that although it is a great advantage to have so much Scripture read to us, as is read in our services on Sunday, yet there must be private reading as well. He would say, "You must take pains about it; you must give time to it. There is treasure hid in the Scriptures; you must search for it." Those of you who are old enough, and the rest when they are old enough, will get into the habit, I hope, of reading the Bible regularly and carefully, and with prayer to God for the teaching of his Holy Spirit. Form such a habit, that if you should neglect your morning reading, the omission would make you feel uncomfortable all through the rest of the day.

Read upon a plan. Do not run about from one book to another, but finish what you have begun. Compare one part of Scripture with another. Do not allow yourselves to have favourite parts of the Bible, and neglect others. If God has thought fit to give us such a book, the least we can do to show our value for his gift, is to study it very carefully.

But why do I think that King Solomon would speak to you on this particular subject, and in some such way as I have been attempting to describe? Because he has so spoken in the Book of Proverbs. What I have said to you is all in the Book of Proverbs. Look at the beginning of the second chapter of the book: what a picture of activity it gives! There is a man, you see, listening attentively, and remembering all that is told him. Then you have him again, going about asking questions of everybody he meets; he wants to know, and he is determined to know. Then, again, he appears as one searching for hid treasure; he has bought a plot of ground, and he is sure that there is a vessel full of gold and silver coins concealed somewhere in it. Look at him! He takes his spade, and turns over every inch of earth; and if he does not find the vessel near the surface, he digs down below, deeper and deeper still, until at last he lights upon the hidden treasure, and makes it his own. What is that man doing? He is reading his Bible. Just listen to King Solomon's own words: "My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures, then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."

CONFERENCE AT MONTAUBAN.

The following translation of a letter, which appears in the monthly paper of the Young Men's Christian Association of France, signed "A Student" (of Theology), will give your readers a faithful idea of the blessing which accompanies our beloved brother, Pastor Theodore Monod, in his visits amongst the Protestant churches of France. J. G. A.

It is impossible for me to give you a report of our meetings for consecration; you will receive through another channel the text, almost word for word, of the addresses delivered. It is not an easy thing even to say what impression they have produced, and what aspect they have worn; for how can one measure the work of God in the heart?

These meetings were looked for with some impatience; the news we had received of those at Nismes had only served still more to excite it; we were eager to have, in turn, our spiritual feast, followed by the blessings which always accompany it. "What will these meetings be?" Opinions were divided, and the same individuals experienced both apprehension and hope.

It is the hope that has been realized; our meetings have been excellent. I will not speak of the programme, of the number of pastors, of the numbers in the congregation. In these particulars our meetings have been like the rest; whilst they lasted we had four meetings a day, and the "Temple de la Faculté" was constantly filled, even before the time for the services.

You know how these meetings are held; they are simple meetings for prayers and addresses, without any order being fixed beforehand. Nevertheless, there is a natural order which prescribes itself. Humiliation always comes first; so the first day was employed in humiliation and repentance. I don't know whether I express everybody's feelings, but one's heart was sad and ill at ease that day; happily, it was a sadness of which God approves, and which leads to repentance never to be repented of. I shall long remember the pastoral meeting. After the reading of the 24th chapter of Ezekiel, we had a long series of fervent prayers, which well expressed the humiliation of all hearts. In the afternoon, Messrs. Theodore Monod and Lelièvre (of Nismes) spoke to us on the Prodigal Child, and more than one present found in this well-known parable things which he had never before perceived. This is, indeed, one of the principal features of the meetings. The Word of God was read, paraphrased, and explained by our brethren in so simple and striking a manner, that it seemed quite new. Sometimes it seemed as if we heard for the first time passages which, nevertheless, we had read and re-read for a long while.

The second day, the subject of faith and of consecration to God was treated. I cannot describe to you the feeling pervading the whole meeting when, after reading and exposition of the two first chapters of the Epistle to the Ephesians by M. Th. Monod, and the powerful appeals of Messrs. Robert (of Sainte-Fog) and Bois (of Montauban), the chairman proposed our passing a few minutes in silent prayer. Then the assembly rose, and sang one of those hymns, the remembrance of which is inseparable from that of the meetings, and which greatly contributed to our edification. [The French adaptation of "My all is on the altar."]

Requests for prayer were numerous the following day—more so than before; the general meetings were occupied with the exposition of the doctrine of sanctification by faith, and we were shown the means by which to keep the blessings already received, and to make sure our consecration. Praise was in all hearts! Accordingly, the communion service was a very touching one. We felt as never before our Saviour's love, and our hearts burned to testify our gratitude to Him.

The meetings were over: it was so good to be thus in fellowship with God and with our brethren, that we would fain have said with Peter, "Let us stay here." But we understood that it was useful to descend from the holy mountain, and show forth in our every-day life what we had received during this religious retirement.

On Saturday evening, Messrs. Th. Monod and Le-lèvre kindly presided at the theological students' prayer-meeting. They addressed to us special admonitions and earnest exhortations.

And now what will remain of these meetings, and of the visit of these brethren, who came to remind us, in God's name, of forgotten truths? We can safely answer, Much good. Doubtless the work of God is hidden, but still we are permitted to see already real results of its influence. Several speak already of this week as "an historical one." Some, those who had already long known the Lord, have learnt to know Him better, have consecrated themselves to Him, and have already made very happy experiences. Others have learnt to know Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and are full of the joy of their first love.

These meetings have been blessed like all those which had gone before them. We have no longer to ask for a revival: it has come! Let us thank God for his patience, faithfulness, and condescension, and let us pray Him to bestow on the Church at large the blessings which we have received.

THE WORK OF GOD IN SLIGO.

Dear Sir,—You will, perhaps, remember, that I wrote to you about eighteen months ago, to ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray for an outpouring of the Spirit upon the people in this part of Ireland. I then wished you not to mention the name of the place, and you kindly did not, but simply asked prayer for a town and parish in the west of Ireland. That town was Sligo. And I now write to ask those who prayed for us to thank God for the work He has done among us in answer to their prayers.

About three months ago, the local ministers of all denominations agreed to hold a meeting for prayer and praise every day at eleven o'clock, and an evangelistic service every evening, in some of the places of worship, at eight o'clock, for a week, and to have one meeting in the Town-hall on Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. The meetings during this first week were so encouraging, the people so eager, and the number of anxious inquirers so far beyond all expectation, that the meetings were continued every night for seven weeks, and for five Sundays in the Town-hall. The number of those who professed to have found peace in Jesus at these meetings is truly astonishing. Truly the Lord has done for us far beyond what we could think to ask Him for; to Him be all the glory.

But the Lord's goodness to us did not stop here. He sent us, from the United Services Committee, Dublin, two gentlemen full of the Holy Ghost and of faith in their work, to confirm and strengthen our young converts, and to stir up and encourage his servants. These gentlemen, the Rev. W. Andrews, and Major the Hon. H. Rowley, arrived here on Saturday last for a week's evangelistic work. Mr. Andrews commenced his week's work in my church—the parish church of Caly—on Sunday morning. He preached a thoroughly evangelistic and very telling sermon from Acts ix. 11, "Behold he prayeth." Few of God's ministers are enabled to speak with such power as Mr. Andrews is. At the service in the Town-hall at four o'clock, the Hon. Major Rowley was the chief speaker, and without any attempt at what is called preaching, he delivered one of the most earnest and powerful addresses I ever listened to. Every inch of space in the large and beautiful hall was occupied, and the Major was enabled to hold the vast audience in breathless attention to the stirring and soul-saving truths of the gospel. In the evening Mr. Andrews had a thoroughly evangelistic service in Caly church. Hymns from "Songs and Solos" were sung instead of the usual church hymns, with marked effect. And there was an inquiry-meeting in the church after the service, and several friends assisted Mr. Andrews and the Major with the anxious.

There have been two meetings daily during the week, besides two meetings for young men, and one for women, at all of which the deputation were enabled to deliver most telling addresses. The meetings on Friday were held in the Town-hall. They commenced at noon. From twelve to one, prayer and praise; from one till two, address; from two till three, a conference. The service was resumed at half-past seven in the evening, when farewell addresses were given by Mr. Andrews and the Major. These true and earnest servants of God are now gone from us, but they have left a blessing behind them. They have stirred up the hearts of many of God's people, they have confirmed and strengthened many of our converts, and they have been enabled to bring some to Christ who had resisted all local effort. Thank God for their coming, and for what He hath wrought by them. Will those who read this pray for our young converts for one week, and for the local ministers and other Christian workers—pray that they may speak, preach, and work, in the power of the Holy Ghost.

R. MACWALTER.

THE GOSPEL IN LISBON.

The following letter has been received by the hon. secretary of the Portuguese Evangelization Society, and is forwarded to us for publication:—

I have just returned from L—, where I have been to accompany our Portuguese brother, and, I believe, faithful servant of God's grace, on his return journey to Oporto. I lose no time in giving you an opportunity of sympathizing with me in my joy, yea, and with others also.

The word at the mouth of Senor C— was accepted by a large number, as far as the hearing; and we cannot doubt that some of the precious seed will have found its way into the hearts of sinners.

He arrived on Saturday night or Sunday morning. We had our usual English service; at 3 p.m. our first Portuguese service began. I can give you but little idea of the number present, as the house of S— was literally surrounded, every window or place where there was a chance of hearing. A large number extended half across the road. The truth was most plainly put before them, from the fall to man's recovery.

At 6.30 p.m. the second meeting was held, and equally thronged, although wet and dark, the hearers consisting not only of the people, but the officials of the Government, a deputy of the Camara, the priest, and his assistant.

Seeing so much readiness to hear the word, Senor C— decided to remain over Monday night, and hold another meeting. He announced his decision, and asked the hour that would be most convenient. As many voices exclaimed, "From seven to eight, p.m.," this was fixed as the time. When the doors were opened, the room was immediately filled.

The subject on Sunday night was, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness," etc.; on Monday, "The satisfied worldling, with goods laid up for many years, and God's reply, 'Thou fool,' etc." At the close of the first meeting, he asked those who wished to remain for further prayer and praise to do so, and those who wished to retire to do so. Very few left, so we had a second meeting. He spoke of the present and future joys of the pardoned sinner.

At the close I cannot tell you how I felt, thus to see our prayers so answered. I could almost exclaim with Simon, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation" proclaimed to this people. I do rejoice and pray that the work begun may, by grace, be carried on. I am sure your heart would have leaped for joy had you been here, and now it will send forth praises for the Lord's grace. Surely this is encouragement to go on praying for Portugal. Such a gathering shows a spirit of dissatisfaction for the present. HENRY GOULD.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN COLCHESTER.—Arrangements were made a short time ago to hold a united prayer-meeting, the second Sunday in each month. The first of these meetings was held in the Town-hall on Sunday, 14th ult. The chair was taken by Rev. R. S. Cummins, Rector of St. James's, and at least 500 people were present, pleading the same "exceeding great and precious promises."

WORK FOR INVALIDS.—Christian invalids and others may greatly help in the Lord's work if they will copy out, prayerfully and distinctly, short papers containing a few references suited to the different cases of inquirers found in the after-meetings, to be taken away by them, and searched out at home. They often leave still in much darkness, and too ignorant of their Bibles to turn to the right passages for themselves. We suggest that the papers should be written out, rather than printed, in order that each one may be sent forth with prayer. Any wishing to help in this way, or any workers requiring such papers, may apply to E. T., Bult's Library, New Quebec-street, Oxford-street, W.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.

NOON MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

The noon meetings do not decrease in interest or importance as the novelty wears off. They are assuming a settled business-like tone, and on many occasions the spirit of prayer is so prevalent and manifest that two or three persons at the same moment start to their feet to pour out their desires to God. The prayers are remarkable for fervency and directness.

At Tuesday's meeting the public requests were very numerous and comprehensive. The final one was as follows:—"Two ladies, one of them almost an infidel, were prayed for ten days ago. Praise is asked; they have found Christ through the London meetings."

Mr. Moody's address was an exposition of the 23rd Psalm, and some of his thoughts were very fresh and fragrant. He showed how the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th Psalms were three links of one chain. The 22nd shows us a God of judgment, the 23rd a God of peace, and the 24th a God of glory. Speaking on the verse, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil," he said, all that death could do to the Christian was to throw its shadow on his path. Where Christ was there could be no darkness. "Goodness and mercy" were like two footmen that waited upon every child of God. All his sons and daughters were rich.

Mr. Sankey having sung, "Through the valley of the shadow I must go," the audience joining in the chorus, Mr. R. Radcliffe said he had just received a telegram from Liverpool, stating that a previous report of twenty being added to the communion of one church through the house-to-house visitation, was far beneath the mark. He went on to speak of the London visitation, and said the time had now come for visitors to commence in every part of London. The superintendents for the west had taken their districts, and they wanted now to commence in the south and east. There were multitudes of souls in the east who never entered a place of worship, and clergymen and others there had written for labourers. "We must bring labourers from the west and other parts of London," said Mr. Radcliffe. "Some of you can afford to drive or go by the trains and omnibuses; you must come out of the west and go into the poor districts of the east. You did so fifteen years ago, and God gave an amazing blessing; God is with you still, and in a mightier fashion than in days gone by, and He will be with you again." But the work was not to be confined to London; indeed, he was convinced it would not be confined to Britain. It would extend into Germany, and it might be to Paris. It would be taken up in America, and many thousands of souls would be gathered not only by the public preaching of the gospel, but by the church returning to their first works and learning the apostolic method. They would visit the house of the nobleman in the west and the dens of thieves and murderers in the east. Mr. Radcliffe renewed his appeal for volunteers, and counselled them to meet any opposition with the "soft answer that turneth away wrath." He looked for such a blessing to come down on the preaching and the visitation, and such signs following, in the closing up of trades in London that were not proper to be carried on, as London had never seen.

Mr. Sankey prayed that the spirit of kindness and love might be exhibited by the Christians in dealing with opposition to the work.

After further prayer Mr. Moody read an interesting letter he had received from Liverpool from a convert.

Among the requests for prayer at the meeting on Wednesday was one "for a clergyman, who has been backsliding for some years." Dr. Landels was the voice of the meeting in presenting the many special requests to "Him who sitteth upon the throne," and his prayer had in it a tone of reverent familiarity with God which seemed to make prayer a very real thing—a necessity of our spiritual life.

The opening hymn was, "Oh sing of his mighty love," and this paved the way for Mr. Moody to speak on human love, or "Charity," as strongly taught in 1 Cor. xiii. The chapter was one that it was good to read on our knees, and afterwards to see if our lives corresponded with what we had read. He exposed in very strong terms the too prevalent desire among Christians, ministers and others, to seek their own advancement, rather than the glory of Christ. He quoted passages to show that no less than three times, when Christ had been talking to his disciples of his approaching death, did they immediately begin to discuss among themselves who should be the greatest! This spirit is one of the greatest hindrances in the Church of God to-day. May God give us grace to rise above it! Many a man who is unsound in charity and in patience denounces a man whom they think unsound in the faith. We want our hearts to be full of love.

Rev. Mr. Jones, of Liverpool, said the word of the Lord was making good progress there. The previous Friday night there were 200 inquirers at Victoria Hall. Twelve months ago such a thing would have been deemed impossible. He read a statement made at a meeting of Unitarians in Liverpool on Monday last. The speaker at the meeting said he had regarded with interest the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. While he had not the remotest sympathy with their theology, and was inexpressibly shocked with their bad taste, yet he was compelled to say that, somehow or other, they had imported into the hearts of many wanderers and profligates a higher and better interest, which had carried them away from their own pursuits; and he believed they had done more good in a month than the Unitarian body had done in ten years.

Rev. J. Shillito, of Birmingham, reported the spread of the work among the places adjacent to that town. Last Saturday morning a minister came in from another town in the neighbourhood, and asked him to take part in special services there. Mr. Shillito expressed surprise, as, previous to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit, this minister had been adverse to the movement. The minister replied, "God is doing a great work in our midst. At one of our prayer-meetings we were all broken down. Two-thirds of the meeting were in tears. Fifty-two members of the congregation have decided for Christ, and a number of others are inquiring the way to Jesus. I was opposed to the movement, but God has exerted his power, and has broken down my people."

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

On Monday the attendance was thinner than on any previous night since the arrival of the evangelists. This was, it is believed, owing to a prevailing idea that Mr. Moody would not be present, as was the case on the previous Monday. If, however, the numbers were smaller, it seemed to us that the message from the preacher's lips was more than usually luminous and powerful. It did, indeed, penetrate, and, we are bound to believe, let light through to many hearts. His illustrations of the truth, that the law reveals sin, but does not justify, were so intensely appropriate, that the believers' hearts rejoiced at the crystal clearness of the presentation of this important truth.

On Tuesday the hall was crowded, and the doors were closed twenty minutes before the appointed time for the commencement of the service. The platform was unusually full of clergymen and ministers, and amongst the former were prominent Dean Stanley and Canon Conway, who offered the opening prayer. In the course of a homely but very powerful address on "Excuses," based on Luke xiv., Mr. Moody appealed first to the platform, and then to the congregation, whether God were a hard Master or no; and very abundantly the responses came from hall and platform, "No," "No." This power of getting his audience into sympathy with himself is an element of untold power in Mr. Moody's ministry, and may well point an exhortation to other ministers of the gospel.

The opening prayer was offered, on Wednesday evening, by the Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Vernon Chapel, who has been a very active worker in connection with these meetings, and also conducted for several nights with tokens of success, the meetings at Liverpool, two weeks since. Mr. Sawday prayed in the simple, bold, and earnest manner that characterizes all Mr. Spurgeon's disciples, that the net might be let down on the right side of the ship, and that the catch of fishes might be greater than on any night before. He felt that God had hardly begun to begin to give the blessing that was needed, and he implored God to "roll up his sleeve, to make bare his arm, and do mighty things."

Mr. Sankey sang alone, "Home of the soul," from Philip Phillips's "Hallowed Songs."

Mr. Moody's address was a continuation of the previous evening's, on "Excuses." It is almost needless to say that his burning words were as so many sharply-pointed and well-aimed arrows sent forth from God's quiver. He lifted the veil, and showed the utterly hollow and specious nature of the pleas that are so freely urged by those who do not want to accept the invitation to the gospel feast. He left the sinner without a single rag of excuse wherewith to conceal his spiritual nakedness; and in the days to come we hope to hear of many a poor soul, who, finding himself or herself that night in the sorry plight of being "without excuse," ceased the vain endeavour to hide themselves behind nothing, and came, "just as they were," to the banquet provided for "whosoever will."

Like every great and wise general, Mr. Moody is not insensible to the value of taking his audience by surprise. He knows the power of sanctified strategy, and uses it now and then with great effect. On Thursday evening we suppose most of the immense congregation expected to hear a stirring gospel address as usual. Mr. Moody, however, addressed himself to Christians instead, in a fashion that gave some clue to the marvellous success that has attended his ministrations for the past twenty months. In another column we give the greater part of this appeal to the Christians of London, although as printed, and with most of the illustrations omitted, it is shorn of much of the effect it produced when delivered. His intensity of feeling and expression was so powerfully brought into action, that he carried his audience completely with him, and if the impulse conveyed for the moment to the Christian hearts in the hall could be retained and properly directed, London, as Mr. Moody said, would very soon be "woken up" from its spiritual slumber or death.

As usual the hymns chosen were in harmony with the subject of Mr. Moody's exhortation, and Mr. Sankey sang "Scatter seeds of kindness," and "Here am I, send me." In his prayer before the sermon Mr. Moody prayed with his customary fervour, that the Christians of London might be endued with the courage of Jeremiah, the boldness of Paul, and the perseverance of Joshua. He also invoked God's merciful visitation on every man in London engaged in any unlawful business. We trust Mr. Moody will find time to give some special attention to the subject of Christianity in its bearing on trade morality. It is being agitated in our columns at present, and this seems a favourable time for something definite being devised and attempted by Christian men of influence in the world of commerce.

On Good Friday large meetings were held in the Agricultural Hall in the afternoon and evening, the latter being unusually crowded. Lord Shaftesbury was present. Mr. Sankey having sung "There were Ninety and Nine," Mr. Moody spoke on "What Christ is to us," a subject which was particularly suited to the associations popularly connected with the day.

We have elsewhere reported Mr. Moody's Sunday morning address, and the appeal that followed.

The meetings on Sunday afternoon and evening were, as usual, of special interest. The women's meeting was the largest of the kind yet held in London, and at the close of Mr. Moody's remarkably clear and forcible address on "What must I do to be saved?" the audience rose literally in hundreds, manifesting their desire to be saved. At the close of the men's meeting there were also a goodly number of inquirers.

Rev. W. Taylor conducted a service in St. Mary's Hall both afternoon and evening.

A good deal has been said and written of late about the numbers attending these special meetings, and the estimates given have been so widely different as to suggest the advisability of ceasing to give definite figures, which, after all, serves no good purpose, and often gives wrong impressions, though that, of course, is not intended. An estimate putting the present capacity of the Agricultural Hall at 21,000 odd appeared in many of the papers at the commencement of the services, and was in good faith copied into our columns. From an estimate we have just obtained from one of the leading officials at the Hall, based on a careful survey of the building, it would appear that the previous calculation must have been founded on a misapprehension or a misstatement of the facts. The official statement we have received shows the floor of the building as capable of seating 9000 persons; the raised platform for the choir, etc., 250; the eastern side gallery, 900; the western side gallery, 1000; the upper raised gallery in front of the platform, 1350; the balcony in front, 850; and the upper western balcony, 350; making in all a total of 13,700. The same official informs us that there have never been 15,000 persons present at any one of the meetings. We think it right to give publicity to this in the interests of truth.

PICKET WORK.

AGRICULTURAL HALL, OUTSIDE THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

March 15.—A kind, loving mother, anxiously longing for a blessing, but expecting it through patience—no idea of the atonement being necessary, but a general acceptance of truths regarding the mercy of God. Why she hung about she could not tell, but into the inquiry-room she would not go. Spoke to her of God's way as much as possible by reference to her own home feelings. Asked her what she would think of her child, expecting safety through patience, if a lion were in the street, and still refusing to enter the house whilst the door was kept open. Spoke as tenderly and faithfully as possible to this tried, but loving mother.

An old disciple hanging about the door of the inquiry-room, waiting for two young men who were inside. Forty-five years ago he had joy and peace in believing, but through unwatchfulness lost his "roll," and has had years of bitter self-reproach and unfruitfulness. Told us he could not forget "the years of the right hand of the Most High," and could he only believe that there was forgiveness for him, he would rejoice indeed. The work in which he was then engaged, in seeking the good of the two young men, was, we trust, the beginning of brighter days and fruitful work to our dear old friend.

Passed a group of three young women, and heard a young Scotchwoman pressing them into the inquiry-room. They urged want of time, and said to this pressing friend, "We believe in Jesus as you do, but we do not realize what you say you do." So many of this class are about; they seem unwilling to go away, and yet they hang off because the burden does not press. Workers need much wisdom and grace to deal with them.

March 16.—A wonderful night for picket work, so many inquiring, willing to be spoken to, and earnestly dealt with, the subject of address being "The New Birth." It is a matter for earnest thought to all workers, how, on this night, when all were shut up to the work of God in them, as well as the work of God for them, so many were impressed, and such power felt in the meeting. Is it to let us know that the work depends more on God being with us, though the gate be strait, than our own earnest and pressing appeals to let men know that the way is free and open? How much there is to learn in this work.

Whilst seeking to calm down a little controversy that arose from an injudicious remark made by a young usher, a young lady pressed in to hear, and, looking at her, I saw that the word spoken to Nicodemus had gone home. She would not go into the inquiry-room, but listened most attentively to what was said. "The kingdom of God" seemed to her then most desirable; but only the Searcher and Melter of hearts could reach her thoughts—so reserved, yet so anxious.

Many this night professed to see the kingdom of God, and seeing, to enter. Oh, blessed experience; oh, for more such nights!

March 17.—Found a young lady sitting in one of the galleries waiting for a friend who was in the inquiry-room. She was very sad. Asked her to read a few verses in the 3rd of John. She said there was no use, as the idea of mercy for her was past. The thought of one so young being burdened with so despairing a feeling troubled us, and we said to her, "Is it not unkind to think so of Jesus?" She always felt as if the unkindness was on His side, not on hers, but being thus brought face to face with the query, she burst into tears; poor dear child, may the blessed Spirit give her deliverance from so sad a burden!

A young man, waiting for his female friend, would not go in himself, but was anxiously waiting for her. Could not see the wisdom of all the work going on, but felt uneasy about it. When pressed for his reason of refusing to accompany his friend, said he would not hinder her; he would not go home without her, but would rather to be saved from such unpleasant trouble. He was urged to faith and repentance, and the full acknowledgment of God's claim on him as well as on his friend, and we parted from him with the sad thought, "One shall be taken and the other left."

C. Y.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETING.

This meeting continues to be held in St. Mary's Hall every evening from nine to ten o'clock. The attendance is not so large as one would wish and expect, especially on the part of those whom it is most desirable to see there—the unconverted. Probably as it gets better known it will fill up. Every Christian young man who goes to it, or knows of it, should tell his acquaintances, and warmly invite them to go.

Let us take Friday evening last as a sample of its proceedings. The body of the hall is perhaps a third part full. Mr. Scott, from Glasgow, presides, and George Williams, Esq., who stood sponsor for the meeting on its birthnight, and Captain Moreton, are on the platform to cheer on their younger brethren.

After preliminary praise and prayer, Mr. Scott reads the story of how Andrew found Christ, through the preaching of John the Baptist, and how the first thing he did after that was to "hunt up" his brother Simon, and bring him to Jesus too; also how the same thing was repeated in the case of Philip and Nathanael. In Glasgow, said Mr. Scott, there was a great fear that if young converts went to work at once for the Master, it would engender pride, and all kinds of evil results would follow, but a little study of this New Testament history settled the matter; they went to work, leaving the dreaded results to God. Mr. Scott then told a personal reminiscence about how a woman he met in his visits, had found Christ by a few words spoken to her at a small meeting, by which she was pointed to Christ as a personal Saviour. She had been looking to her faith and her prayer and her repentance instead of looking to Christ. Mr. Scott closed by inviting testimony from any one in the meeting, to be confined to three or five minutes each.

Captain Moreton intervened with a short account of a young men's meeting he had attended in Aberdeen, after Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit there, at which from ten to fifteen short pithy testimonies were given by as many young men within the time allotted for the meeting. What was wanted to make the meeting interesting and potent for good was the brief narration of direct cases of conversion; of difficulties met with and overcome. That would bring them together, would engender sympathy with each other in their troubles, and would stimulate them in the work.

A young Irishman was the first to break the ice. We were particularly struck at the young men's meetings in Liverpool with the readiness and heartiness displayed by Irish young men in giving testimony as to their own conversion and the spread of the work as witnessed by them personally. It would be a good thing in many ways if the young men on both sides of the Tweed had a little infusion of this geniality and open-heartedness possessed by their brethren from across the Channel. This young man from Belfast told us of a small prayer-meeting commenced there twelve months ago in an upper room, and that in a few weeks the result showed a list of about eighty who professed to have found Christ. His name was on that list, and he attributed the success of the meeting greatly to the fact that every one who went there did his utmost to bring another with him. Judging from the attendance at this meeting during the past week, he thought the Christian young men of London were not doing their duty in this matter.

Another Belfast young man followed, and said that the young men there were now holding cottage meetings in thirty different places. He spoke, too, of the wonderful success of the meetings conducted by the young men in the outlying villages and towns. He and a companion had lately had two meetings at a small country place: the first evening about twenty professed to be saved, and on the second sixty-two went into the inquiry-room to be spoken with about the things that pertain to salvation.

Yet another young Irish man, this time from the south of Ireland, told the good news of Christian sect being lost in Christian zeal, and signs following as the result.

One of the stewards of the Agricultural Hall then, in a few earnest words of entreaty, implored those who were in the meeting unsaved to decide for Christ without a moment's delay.

The next address brought us nearer home, and "told" in a corresponding degree. It was to the effect that one of the vilest sinners in London, for a young man, was brought under a deep sense of sin on hearing Mr. Moody's address in the Agricultural Hall, on "Where art thou?" The word followed him until he heard another address of Mr. Moody's, on "Whosoever will." That night he found the Saviour, and now he had commenced work in the right place—in his own home. "To-night," said the speaker, "I saw him stand on the stairs of the large hall, inviting other young men into this room. You should just hear him pray, with the hot tears running down from his eyes; it would do every one of us good. Let all the young converts follow his example."

Everybody must have been of Mr. Scott's opinion, when he remarked, at the close of this little address, "That is exactly the kind of thing we want to hear, something bearing on the work in London."

Some earnest prayer followed, and we all sang together, heartily, "Free from the law, oh, blessed condition!"

The hour was almost up, and punctuality is one of the inexorable practices at these young men's meetings. So Mr. Scott dismissed us with the injunction to make the meeting a matter of serious prayer, in order that the young men of London might be reached, and drawn to the Saviour. "A consummation most devoutly to be wished," and one, we feel disposed to say, that must now, or never, be compassed. Mothers and fathers of London, ministers and Christians of every hue, especially Christian young men of London—"lend a hand."

MEETINGS AT ASTLEY'S THEATRE.

On the afternoons of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last week, this popular place of amusement "showed another sight" than that which it usually affords. Instead of being filled with pleasure-seekers ready to applaud the meaningless, if not worse than meaningless, performances and spectacles of the circus, and to laugh at the foolish, mayhap irreverent and profane, jests of the clown, the amphitheatre was crammed from pit to ceiling with a motley crowd, which, whatever may have been the impelling motive for the attendance of each, listened with the most eager attention to the gospel preached and sung. Whether it was that the personal influence of the speaker was proportionately greater in the smaller building, or whether the congregation was more impressive than those that nightly fill the monster hall in Islington, we cannot say, but it was apparent that there existed a greater readiness to carry out Mr. Moody's earnest appeals and invitations to their ultimate results than was the case after the delivery of the same addresses in the evenings at the Agricultural Hall. Mr. Moody was evidently agreeably struck with the receptive condition of the people's hearts at Astley's Theatre, as he made special reference to it on a subsequent evening. We are inclined to think that the size of the building has not a little to do with the effect of the truth spoken. In the Agricultural Hall the effect seems somehow to be dissipated to some extent before it reaches the far-off corners of the crowd, and when smaller places are brought into use, we look for greater results in conviction and conversion, at least proportionately, if not actually.

MR. MOODY'S CALL FOR A THOUSAND HANDS.

At the close of Mr. Moody's address in the Agricultural Hall on Thursday evening last, he invited the Christians, to whom he had chiefly been speaking, to meet him at the early Sunday morning meeting for workers, when he would continue his remarks on personal effort. Accordingly on Sunday morning last there was the largest gathering of workers that has yet met at these early Sunday morning meetings.

Mr. Moody's address was virtually a strong plea in favour of the energetic and successful effort now going on in London to visit every house, and speak personally to the inmates on the great question of salvation. He said the mistake they had been making during the last two weeks was that of trying to move men and women in a body, without making it a matter of personal effort on the part of each man and woman to talk to some person and try to lead them to Christ. With the exception of the day of Pentecost, and a little while after, we would find that almost all the conversions recorded were the result of individual dealing. Andrew brought Simon to Christ, as Philip brought Nathanael. The most powerful sermon that Christ ever preached was preached to Nicodemus alone, and that discourse at the well of Sychar, which we could not now get along very well without, was delivered to a solitary woman. Christ did not despise the day of small things.

Mr. Moody referred to the case of Harlan Page, who was perhaps the brightest example of a Christian mechanic that history has recorded since the days of the Galilean carpenter. By his personal labours he was the means of the conversion of hundreds in America, and many of the best men now in the Church in that country were led to Christ by his instrumentality. There were thousands in London waiting for some one to go and lead them to Christ.

Mr. Moody said his heart had been greatly stirred, the evening before, on receiving a letter from a lady EIGHTY-FIVE YEARS old. When she heard that Mr. Radcliffe was coming to London, to arrange the house-to-house visitation, she said "I must do something; I am getting old, but I will take a district." Only think of that, said Mr. Moody, this old lady who has lived fifteen years on borrowed time; she has taken a district and started out. She went into one house where the people were Roman Catholics, and wanted them to take the leaflet, but they pushed it away. "Well," she said, "if you won't read it, I will read it to you," and she did. Of course they could not put out a woman eighty-five years old; nobody could think of doing that. It greatly stirred me up. It ought to shame us all; every young man and woman who is not at work ought to be ashamed.

A great many, he continued, were not willing to do little things for Christ; these were often neglected, and so God's blessing was not given. He gave some striking instances of great results flowing from apparently trivial circumstances. In drawing his address to a close, he said he had come to the meeting with one thought on his mind, and had been praying to God since the night before that his wish might be granted. It was, that there might be at this meeting a thousand men and women who would join him in an effort to win some soul to Christ during the week. Let them begin to-day, and go on till next Sunday morning, when they would meet again and see what the result had been. In answer to his question, "Who will join me?" the greater part of the congregation at once stood up. It was indeed a very solemn and momentous act; and we trust none of those who stood will forget to pay the vow thus made in the presence of God and of his people.

This question of personal effort so strongly bears at the present time on the house-to-house visitation, that we must revert to it for a little. We believe this work, which was commenced by Mr. Radcliffe at Mr. Moody's special invitation, is being vigorously prosecuted with many evident tokens of God's approval. A number of superintendents are still required, and we would venture to suggest to those in a position to undertake the work, that this presents an open door for the exercise of that personal effort for which Mr. Moody so loudly and urgently calls.

From a town in the west a friend writes with reference to Mr. Radcliffe's article in our last week's issue, that united special services are to be held for a fortnight, to be followed in all likelihood by a house-to-house visitation. A specimen copy of Mr. Moody's leaflet, and of the printed instructions used in the London visitation have been sent, and we hope that many other towns in the three kingdoms are applying for these leaflets. Communications should, in the first instance, be addressed to Mr. R. Radcliffe, 48, Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

As a striking testimony to the success of the Liverpool visitation, we give the following extracts from a letter just received per Rev. Patrick White, Presbyterian minister there:—

"I long felt it was the true way to reach the lapsed masses, and now from observation and experience I have not a doubt on my mind, if judiciously, regularly, and prayerfully carried out it would effect a spiritual revolution among the non-church goers and drunkards such as would astonish the most ardent friends of the movement. This conclusion I have arrived at from established and unquestionable results in my own sphere. As a result we have commenced meetings every night in our schoolroom. The visitors go and bring the people in. Every night God gave us souls. Last night I was overwhelmed with gratitude to God for his manifest glory. Many were moved to tears at the sight of the surrender of three men to Christ. For years they had not been in the house of God, although religiously brought up.

"If every minister of the Church of Christ, every congregation, and every Christian in the congregation gave himself and herself to the work, without overtaxation of either time or strength, Liverpool would be reached to its darkest court and street."

If Liverpool, why not London, and every professedly Christian city in the world?

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK.

As a painful, and, we fear, not an unusual commentary on the statements that have recently appeared in our columns with respect to the barriers thrown in the way of practical Christianity by existing customs in business, we publish the following letter, written a few days ago.

"Last Sunday evening I was at the Agricultural Hall, when the address on 'Where art thou?' made an impression on my mind which, I hope, will never be forgotten. When Mr. Moody called upon those to rise who felt convinced that they wanted a Saviour, I was about the last to rise, and should not have done so then, but some Christian young man sitting by my side prompted me to do it. I followed with many others into the inquiry-room, where I sat for some minutes, and no one spoke to me; and the devil said, 'What do you want here? All your good resolves will vanish by Monday, and your impressions also.' The latter certainly have not, for I have been truly wretched ever since. My great stumbling-block is money. I am, for a young man, in a decent way of business; but trade, as carried on in London, cannot be done, I think, without lying. If I could get over that, perhaps there might be some hope; and if I could only be taught how to pray. I have tried these two days, God knows, but do not seem to be able to ask or even know what I want. But of this I am certain, I cannot go on as I have hitherto done. Excuse this, as it is being written in my counting-house, in the midst of business. I do not sign my name; but if the writer finds that it is wanted, he will decidedly make himself known. Pray for me."

We are sure our readers will comply with this last request, and we trust light will be cast upon the path the writer ought to tread. Surely Christian men of business may well ponder this matter, and ask themselves whether they cannot devise some means of harmonizing the morals of trade with those of the Bible.

At one of the inquiry-meetings at the Agricultural Hall, I was directed to a young man, apparently about the age of nineteen, cool, collected, and evidently of superior education. He said, "If you can prove to me the divinity of Christ, I will embrace the gospel." I began with the New Testament, but he stopped me, and said, "No; it must be out of the Old."

The time for leaving had arrived, and he was still in unbelief, and said his future course in life depended on the issue; for if he was led to see it, his vocation would be that of a clergyman.

Taking him by the arm, I went a little distance with him on his way, and quoted Matt. xxii. 42-46, in connection with Psalm cx. 1. He himself finished the last verse, "And from that day forth," etc.

A momentary pause, and he spontaneously said, "I accept it."

"Thank Him, then," I said. And in a few pointed words he did so.

I should say that, during our conversation, I alluded to that passage in Luke xi. 13, and asked him to quote it in my hearing—a plan I have often found eminently successful. He was well versed in Scripture, but, with all his knowledge, needed a helping hand, though that hand might have been intellectually inferior to his own in fleshly wisdom.

But for the inquiry-room, this young man, just starting in life, would probably have pursued the opposite course to that I trust and believe he has now entered upon. C.

A correspondent, speaking of Mr. Sankey's hymns, says she has been teaching them to classes of singers with the happiest results. One in particular, viz., "Almost persuaded," has been instrumental in more than one conversion.

At one of the noon meetings Captain Moreton related the following incidents in connection with the house-to-house visitation:—One lady went to a house, and, after she had stated the object of her visit, she began to speak to the lady of the house. The lady fell on her knees, and praised God, saying, "I thank Thee, O God, that Thou hast gone out of thy way to find me." She was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and she got her husband, who is unsaved, to go to the hall last night. I hope to hear that he is also saved.

Another case. The visitor called, and the lady of the house said she was the wife of a minister. The visitor asked if she knew Christ. She said, "No, but my husband is praying for me, and I hope to know Him soon." "Let us kneel down and pray now." "I must go and give the children their lunch." "Well," said the visitor—and I admire her for it—"I will wait till the children have had their lunch." When the lady came back, the visitor said, "Let us kneel down, and ask the Lord to save you now." They knelt down together, and prayed; and the lady rose up praising God for his salvation.

One more case, about singing in hospitals. One of the ladies of the choir went into one of the hospitals to visit a sick person. She tried to speak to the patients concerning the gospel, but they would not listen. She said, "Let me sing a hymn." She began to sing, "Safe in the arms of Jesus." No sooner had she finished, than every head was uncovered, and she was able to preach the gospel to them.

At the same noon meeting Mr. Moody said there was a man who found peace at one of our meetings in Dublin. He went home, and called his servants round him, and told them what God had done for his soul. The first time he opened his lips to tell of Christ, two or three of the servants were inquiring, and all were in tears. Inside a week, the whole family was brought to Christ. "I do not know," added Mr. Moody, "why we should not have such results in London, if those who have been converted will speak out boldly."

MR. SPURGEON ON THE MOVEMENT.

On Sunday evening last, Mr. Spurgeon referred to the revivalist services now in progress in terms showing that while he rejoiced in it, he was anxious that the effects of it should be of a permanent and not of a transient character. Some of his hearers, he remarked, had probably been converted within the last few weeks under the influence of the services conducted by his dear friends, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, at the Agricultural Hall, and people were asking if their conversions were worth anything. He implored them, if they professed to have found Christ, not to make a sham of it, and said their salvation, if it were worth anything, should be a salvation from sin. Salvation from hell was not the salvation they ought to cry after, but salvation from sin, and that would bring salvation from hell. A thief would like to get salvation from going to prison, but the only salvation for him that was worth having was salvation from thieving any more. They must ask God to give them a new heart and a right spirit, and though there never were truer words uttered than "believe in Christ and thou shalt be saved," yet, for all that, as his friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey would tell them, if their believing did not save them from sin, it was not that sort of belief that would save their souls.—Daily News.

TWO DAYS' CONVENTION IN LONDON.

A Convention will probably be held in the Agricultural Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday, May 5 and 6. As this will most likely be the last Convention held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey during their stay in England, a large attendance of ministers and Christians of the United Kingdom is invited and expected.

READING.—Most interesting services of a special character have recently been held at Grey Friar's Church here, the mission preacher being Rev. W. Haslam, of Curzon-street Chapel, London. After each service, an inquiry-meeting was held, and from the number of those who remained, it is evident that the week of special effort has been productive of great good amongst the majority of those who attended. Mr. Haslam writes to us:—"We have since heard that the work is spreading and deepening all over Reading. The whole town is stirred; hundreds were turned away from the church on Sunday."

EXETER HALL.—It is considered unadvisable at this juncture of religious awakening to suspend the Sunday special services at Exeter Hall, as usual at this season. Mr. H. Grattan Guinness has been requested to continue them, and has consented to do so. Considerable expense is involved in the use of this large and central building. Will some of the Lord's stewards kindly send help for this object? We shall be glad to take charge of contributions, which should be marked "Exeter Hall Fund."

RESULTS OF THE WORK IN GLASGOW.

We have been favoured with an early proof of a Report to be issued of the numerous evangelistic agencies started in consequence of the revival movement in Glasgow. Our readers will find it to be of engrossing interest:—

Our work during the past year has been so varied, that we find it difficult to select and lay before you the more interesting points in what must necessarily be a very brief statement. Our existence as a Meeting dates from the 17th of February, 1874, when 101 young men stood up in Ewing-place Church and, before a crowd of witnesses, professed themselves seekers of salvation. Time has tested the genuineness of the quickening then given. Every night (except Saturday), for the extraordinary period of nine months, we had anxious inquirers at our gospel meeting, so that "Ewing-place" became a household word, not only among the young men of Glasgow, but amongst earnest Christians over the whole land. It was only when, in order to the more vigorous onerarrying of their congregational work, the trustees of Ewing-place Church who, all along, treated us with the greatest kindness and forbearance, were obliged to turn us out, that our meeting somewhat changed its character. We need not mention our ups and downs since. In the meantime, our evening meetings are held in Hope-street Baptist Church, on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday; in the Drill Hall, and Cowcaddens Free Church Hall on Saturday, and in the Prince of Wales Theatre, on Sabbath. Our experience makes it still more patent to the city, that a tremendous need exists for a Young Men's Hall in Glasgow, where those who are doing the Lord's battle can, at any time, meet and hold converse with their comrades in arms. One of the most pleasant and profitable of all our meetings is the started, at Mr. Moody's suggestion, that those recently brought to the Lord might meet for Bible study and mutual exhortation. Though at first attended only by a few, the Lord so blessed this meeting that, in a short time, the church could hardly contain the numbers attending. Monday after Monday we received fresh quickening and stimulus. The prayer, so often offered by Mr. Moody, that from it "Rivers of living water might flow forth," has been literally and abundantly answered. Had it not been for it, we believe few, if any, of the good works God has honoured us to carry forward could have been undertaken. In conducting this meeting, whilst aiming at edification, we have had variety in method. Sometimes we have had a night of reports, sometimes an address from an experienced minister or layman, frequently the meeting was open for the discussion of Practical Bible Themes. We have now learned to set a very high value on our nights of fellowship, when met in the name of a common Master, we can exhort one another to faith, love, and good works. The work took a new form when the United Evangelistic Committee, through the kindness of the Lord Provost and magistrates, were permitted to erect their

TENT ON GLASGOW GREEN.

Through it the working and lower classes were reached in a very effective manner. In connection with it and the Drill Hall, to which the meetings were transferred in winter, no fewer than 1500 have been spoken to at the second meetings in regard to their spiritual state. The fact that all denominations of Christians took part in the services, and that all preached "Jesus only," and not the doctrines of any sect, made a marked impression on the common people, who had been accustomed to regard all earnest efforts on their behalf as attempts to win them to a particular sect or congregation.

The Tent-meetings on Saturday evening and Sabbath morning were placed under our charge by the committee, and with these we now mainly deal. The Sabbath morning meeting was held at eight o'clock, and an effort was made to reach the outcasts who, all summer, spend their nights on the Green. On the first morning few came in, and those who did were so dejected, hungry, and wretched-looking, that it was impossible to preach to them with any degree of comfort. In a notice of this first effort the Daily Mail suggested that a little food should be given to those who were manifestly starving, before we offered them the bread of life. The carrying out of this led to the interesting series of which, under God, have been so fruitful of good. At first the members of the fellowship-meeting not only did the work, but also paid the breakfast, so that in every detail it was an outcome of the revival. By and by Christian people in Glasgow and throughout the country sent in the money, the young converts continuing to do the work.

The scene at the first breakfast is still fresh in the memory of those privileged to take part. It was a beautiful July morning; the sun had risen, and was shining softly and sweetly, when a few young men and women assembled in the Tent before six o'clock. After prayer, one or two remained to set the breakfast; the others, in order to gather in those who were lying on the grass or strolling about, began to sing, "Hold the fort." This plan did not succeed. We accordingly scattered over the Green, the High-street, Bridgegate, etc., telling all we met that breakfast was ready. In a short time, fully 300 of the most thoroughly degraded in our city were assembled, took breakfast, had the gospel preached to them, and were spoken to in a kindly manner by the workers and friends present. The meeting was a complete success; and though it was not our intention to give more than one breakfast, the Lord so manifestly set his seal to the work, and so marvellously sent us all the funds needed, that we have never seen our way to give it up. Before the tent was taken down, as many as 1600 sometimes breakfasted in it. Now, in the Drill Hall, we have always fully 2000 guests. God has spread a table in the wilderness for the poor and needy. To his name be the praise, and may all who have helped the work in any way receive the blessing of the man who considereth the poor! On removing to our winter quarters in the

the work was not only carried on more extensively and vigorously, but several new features were introduced. Passing over the Hogmanay Supper, when, through the kindness of friends, about 2800 were treated to plum-pudding, tea and cake, also the New Year episode, in which, during the exceptionally severe weather, through the kindness of the editor of the Mail, who generously opened his columns for subscriptions, we were able to give upwards of 50,000 rations to the starving multitudes, we would specially notice the

WORK AMONGST NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

The little ones, who, though sinning least, were suffering most, early pressed themselves upon our notice. An article by the Mail Commissioner, which appeared in the columns of that paper [this article appeared in THE CHRISTIAN], raised public sympathy very much in behalf of the suffering children.

MAGGIE.

On reading this, Mr. Moody was so touched by it, that he wrote a letter to the Mail appealing to the Christian fathers and mothers in Glasgow to build a home so that such as Maggie might be cared for. Mr. Quarrier, whose labours are so well known, offered to undertake the work if the money were forthcoming. Two ladies at once gave the £6000 needed, so that in a little we shall have in our midst a refuge for not a few outcast houseless children. Still it was found that a large class could not in this way be reached. Maggie's case was one in point. She has a mother to whom she is much attached, and they refused to be separated. At one of our Conferences held in Ewing-place, it was suggested that an after the model suggested and successfully carried out by Sheriff Watson, of Aberdeen, was best suited to meet the difficulty. The United Evangelistic Committee took up the matter. The school at the corner of London and Charlotte streets is now opened. It is capable of accommodating 250, and has at present an attendance of 70, which will be increased as soon as the Committee see fit. At the same Conference, it was suggested that an immense amount of good might be done by sending to the country those children whom it was considered advisable to separate from their parents for a longer or shorter period. The Committee were afterwards offered at Saltcoats a mansion house, with large garden attached, which they rented and fitted up as a HOME FOR NEGLECTED CHILDREN,

INDUSTRIAL FEEDING SCHOOL,

where they are fed, taught, and have Christian training. Already 28 are in this Home; it is capable of accommodating 40; by-and-by we expect to have it filled. Advantage has also been taken of existing institutions to the fullest extent—the Committee having avoided starting new organizations, unless when found absolutely necessary for the success of the work. Twenty-seven girls have been sent to the Institution at Maryhill, three boys to Mossbank, three to the "Cumberland" training-ship, four to the Shoeblack Brigade, two sent to sea, and several to situations in Glasgow; making the number of children thus helped 135 in all. A special service, under the superintendence of a joint committee of the Sabbath-school Union and Foundry Boys Society, is held for the children every Sabbath afternoon. A lesson on the black-board, listened to with marvellous interest, is given them, after which they receive a little soup and bread. No one who sees the sad state of those thus helped, can fail to rejoice that they are being cared for, temporally as well as spiritually. Another work of great interest is that carried on by the

the members of which—all young men—plant themselves near the singing saloon, theatre, and principal public house doors, giving Scripture leaflets to all who enter these places, or pass that way. Upwards of three quarters of a million leaflets have already been circulated in this manner. It is a matter for thankfulness that so many have thus had the gospel offer; in addition, we rejoice that many young men have been deterred from entering places which, in the light of recent revelation, are evidently doing the devil's work in our city, and ought, therefore, to have the vigorous opposition of all Christian young men. Whilst the band are at work on the streets, a large company is met in the Drill Hall, at pleading for blessing on the leaflets distributed, and that the Lord's people may be stirred up to more vigorous action against the drinking customs of our land, and that drunkards may be converted. At this meeting very many have signed the pledge. Some of them, known to us, are doing well; and, as many are young people, who are daily suffering the pains and miseries common to the drunkard's family, we trust that, from their ranks, an army may grow up pledged to increasing warfare with our national foe. Another party of the rescue band were induced to visit the

THE TEMPERANCE PRAYER-MEETING,

in order to get acquainted with, and, if possible, benefit the young men and boys, who, all through the exceptionally severe cold of the past winter, slept night by night at the kilns. The following letter speaks for itself, and explains why this step was taken:—

"Sir,—I have the pleasure of writing this letter to you for the purpose of stating sum facts to you which I think there is sum people don't seem to care much about. I have bean in the Hall every Sabbath-day since the Hall opened, and I have heard several prayers offered for people in great affliction; but there is a few young men comes here every Sabbath-day that would require a few words to the Lord to get them out of there affliction, and, sir, I am one of them. These men, sum of them, has not been in a bed this two month; we sleep in brick-fields, coke-ovens, and at coal pits, all through the dulness of trade, and they have got so far reduced that no one will give them employment. You can easily distinguish them in the Hall by the Blackness of their faces. I have known three or four that has passed to their Home all through starvation and exposure to the cold, and in a Cristian Nation, and no one to give a helping hand to those recked on the Ocon of Life; but if we can't find a friend in this World, we Hope that God will be a friend to us. There s good people comes to this Hall that has sum influence that would try and get them employment; we would do well if we could only get a helping hand. I know some that has resorted to crime all through their misfortune. I hope you will not be offended with this letter, that all we want is to offer up a general prayer for us to-morrow morning, if God Willing, and, Sir, you will greatly Oblidge your Humble Sorvant,

FROM ONE THAT WISHES TO DO WELL.

"Glasgow, December 26, 1874."

We are glad to say that many of the lads spoken of have got situations, and are seemingly determined to keep steady and do well. One, picked up in a dying state, was sent to the Infirmary, and, after a lingering illness, expired. He was a Roman Catholic, but listened gladly to the gospel story, and professed to trust in Jesus. To meet the case of the lads at the Kilns, and a number of others whose education was very deficient, an evening school was opened for lads upwards of 14 years of age. This is also succeeding well; the roll contains 180 names, with an average attendance of fully 100 scholars, and 30 voluntary teachers.

CONCLUSION.

We have purposely abstained from speaking of results in the highest sense, and from mentioning the numbers who profess to have been converted. The number of such is great, and in very many cases we believe the profession is genuine. On every side God is giving us encouragement. Let us still wait on Him, and be prepared to follow whithersoever He may lead. We expected ere this either to have been formally organized as a distinct Young Men's Association, or to have been united with the other Young Men's Societies in Glasgow. What Glasgow needs is one strong united vigorous Association of young men to do battle for the cause of truth, and rescue souls from going down to the pit. We are glad to say that we believe this object will soon be attained. Let us one and all be more zealous in the time to come than we have been in the past. When the Master has work to do, wheresoever that work may be, may He ever find us ready to do his will and follow Him fully.

The United Evangelistic Committee, having the conduct of these multifarious missionary agencies, have issued a circular, stating that they are very desirous of erecting a building of a more permanent character than the Tent and Drill Hall, where the services have been held for the last nine months. Their lease of the Drill Hall expires shortly, and will not be renewed; so that unless accommodation is provided elsewhere, the work next winter will either have to be discontinued, or will be seriously impaired. A suitable site for building, near the Drill Hall, can be acquired; and if funds are forthcoming, it is proposed to erect a hall capable of accommodating 2000 persons, together with committee-rooms, kitchen, etc., etc. About £7000 will be needed for the erection of the hall, of which £1500 has been subscribed. It is earnestly hoped the Christian community of Glasgow, and others throughout the world, who are interested in seeing this great and good work carried on, will liberally respond to the appeal of the Committee. Contributions will be received by Mr. Wm. Sloan, 73, Gordon-street, Glasgow, one of the members of the Executive Committee.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN HULL.

During the past week, a series of meetings have been held at Hull, with the object of promoting Scriptural holiness and personal consecration to God. They owe their origin, probably, to the weekly prayer-meetings at the Royal Institution, Albion-street, where the crowded attendances have witnessed to the increase of spiritual activity for some time past. Mr. T. M. Croome presided, explained the objects of the meetings, and enlarged on the subject of "Christ in You." He asked those present solemnly and earnestly to be prepared to receive what they might hear, but not without bringing it all to the test of the inspired Word. There was a far better religion, and a better experience, than many persons knew of, and to which a vast number of God's people were strangers. There was a way of living in their daily life, in their ordinary business, that was entirely above our own natural ability and intellect. The Rev. C. Graham, of Union Chapel, Shepherd's Bush, followed, with an impressive address in the same line of thought. The afternoon meeting was addressed by several speakers, and in the evening a conversational conference was held at the Public Rooms, where there was a closely packed attendance. Four different meetings were held on Wednesday, and the attendance in the evening was so large, that the Christ Church school-rooms had to be engaged to accommodate those unable to gain admission. On Thursday, the numbers increased considerably, Dr. W. P. Mackay presiding. Hundreds were obliged to go away from sheer want of accommodation. Earnest prayer was offered up for the conversion of souls, and praise for the shower of blessing which had fallen upon the town of Hull, as the result of this conference; and the meeting was in every sense one of deep and heartfelt refreshing. At half-past six o'clock, another overflow audience filled the Public Rooms, and the conversational part of the proceedings was intensely interesting.

There was a praise meeting at the Royal Institution, at half-past seven o'clock yesterday morning, to which all were invited who had received blessing at this series of meetings—which, we may add, have been the most remarkable for unity and earnest devotion that have been witnessed in Hull for a very long time in the past.

CAUTION.—We are requested again to warn our readers against a young man professing to have come from Edinburgh, and giving his name as James St. Clair.

WORK AMONGST THE JEWS.

My dear Sir,—We have had two most encouraging meetings at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on two successive Thursday evenings. About forty earnest Christian workers of both sexes have volunteered their services in the distribution of leaflets among the Jews all over the northern and eastern districts of London, on the two last Saturdays in March. The leaflet is headed, "Salvation for You;" then two passages of Old Testament Scripture in Hebrew, German, and English, "Why will ye die, O house of Israel," and, "For He was wounded for our transgressions," etc.; then a cordial invitation given to the Agricultural Hall, to hear Mr. Moody preach and Mr. Sankey sing words of love and salvation for Jew and Gentile. At the foot of the leaflet, "Come and Welcome."

At our second meeting, on March 25th, the volunteers "rehearsed all that God had done by them," and their account was encouraging and refreshing. After silently and audibly seeking blessing in prayer, we read a portion of the 18th chapter of the Acts. One converted Jew present found this a portion of meat in due season, for on the previous Saturday he had taken high honours in being counted worthy to suffer reproach for his name. His colleague, a Christian Gentile, got nothing worse than a gentle slap on the face, whilst the Christian Jew was mobbed by hundreds in the centre of the Jewish quarter. When hard pressed by the excited crowd, a Jew opened his door, gave these brethren protection, and encouraged them in their work; and stated further, that if Messrs. Moody and Sankey would give an address, on a Friday evening, to Jews alone, in some large hall in the Jewish quarter, he believed numbers of Jews would attend, even though the Rabbi might say they should not. Some few Jews refused the leaflets contemptuously; some refused courteously; some accepted them only to tear them in pieces, and trample them under foot; but the very large majority—poor or well-dressed—received them with thanks, and many promised to attend the services. Many of the leaflets were taken to houses and shops, and led the way for close conversation, and even prayer, in the name of Jesus. One of these was an old lady in her ninetieth year, who had never before heard of Jesus and his work for sinners. Tears ran down her aged cheeks as she thanked the lady and wished her to call again.

Another lady secured access to several Jewish families by getting their addresses: and gained acceptance for several other leaflets by meeting in the street a servant carrying some heavy parcels, and asking a moment's assistance. The lady assisted the servant, and then asked, "Do you know what I have in my parcel?" The servant said, "I live in a Jewish family, and know many Jews; give me some of your papers." The lady afterwards heard they were all kindly received. Another lady says, "I met with a few well-dressed Jews of both sexes who would not accept, but in general the people received them with expressions of pleasure and thanks; and in numerous instances I noticed they were read with interest. One man was greatly excited, and followed me some distance, trying to snatch the papers from those who had taken them; he succeeded in some cases, and then threw them on the ground in front of me. A Jew severely reproved him for taking his, and came and courteously asked for another. Each leaflet was followed by a petition to the Master of the vineyard. This lady's husband says, "I found in most cases the leaflets were gladly received; several Jews promising to attend the services at the Agricultural Hall. In a few cases the leaflets were firmly refused, and in two cases only was bitterness expressed both by word and action." One lady lost her bonnet for a little while in the crowd of Jews gathered round her; nevertheless, she does not think any violence, or even discourtesy, was intended. My own personal testimony, as also that of two of my dear sons, who gladly engaged in this work, is very similar to the testimony given by others. The very large majority received the papers kindly and courteously, a few refusing, and two or three treating them with contempt; one using his as a pocket-handkerchief, and another putting his on the ground and stamping on it, calling it rubbish. This young man followed, and opposing, and ultimately gave me a slight stroke on the back and ran away. Many of the ladies and gentlemen were asking frequently, "Who sent you?" "Who pays you?" "What do you get for this work?" We were all thankful to be able to reply, "Our Master and Saviour, Jesus, sent us, and we look to Him for our reward." "Well, but," says one Jew, "who pays the printer?" I suppose some society does." We were able to reply, "No, the work is voluntary, and is done from love to Jesus, and to souls for his sake.' We think it better to continue this work apart from societies as such, though accepting thankfully voluntary help from every quarter. Ten thousand of the leaflets are already out among the Jews; 5000 more have been accepted by the "House-to-house Visitation Committee." Will Christians all over the land pray earnestly and constantly for a rich blessing on the precious seed sown, and that the harvest of Jewish souls may be so abundant as to show the words equally true in this day, "I have much people in this city."—Yours in Jesus, JOHN WILKINSON.

Good Friday.

OUR FARMERS.

I beg most heartily to thank those kind friends who have so readily, in response to my appeal, sent me between one and two hundred of the "back" numbers of THE CHRISTIAN; at the same time, I wish to say that the current numbers—that is, the numbers as published—would be more suitable for me to give away to the unconverted; for, while those who love God find sweet pleasure in reviewing the work of the Lord in the past, yet the work of God in the present is more attractive to those who are not serving God, and who do not read much.

Permit me also to suggest how THE CHRISTIAN may be gratuitously put into the hands of the farmers and their labourers throughout the country. In almost every road, near to every town, there are turnpikes; now, let a gentleman or lady stand by each gate, and as the farmers drive out of town from market, when they "pull up" at the gate, give each one a copy of THE CHRISTIAN; not a "back" number, but a current one. And on market days, a respectable person may go to the railway stations, and give a number of THE CHRISTIAN to the country people as they go home by train; they may easily distinguish them by their appearance.

You will be pleased to hear that an anonymous friend, who sent me some numbers of THE CHRISTIAN, also said, in a note, "The cause for which you requested them could not but rouse the sympathies of any believing farmer's daughter, especially one whose relatives are all out of Christ, and have no desire for Him."

I fear there are thousands of farm-house families in our country with not one member, parent or child, in Christ. I hope that, before long, some well-organized effort will be made to fill every home in the country with the light, love, and glory of Christ.—I remain, my dear sir, yours truly, Ruyton of the Eleven Towns, Salop. L. WEAVER.

LIBERAL OFFER TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Last year a gentleman, who was interested in the circulation of Sunday-school works, offered to bear the loss of supplying 500 teachers with the annual volume of the Hive, at one shilling per copy. We understand that the same liberal offer has been made for the supply of the volume just issued. Those of our readers who may wish to obtain this helpful work should apply to F. L., care of Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row; and if the volume is to be sent by post, should enclose five stamps extra.

FORD, SCOTLAND.—With pleasure I bear testimony to this time of refreshing the Lord is pleased to vouchsafe to our land. I may say that we were afraid this neighbourhood was to be passed by. But no; the Lord sent his servant James Adam, who was joined by the ministers of the churches. Special meetings have been held every night for the last three weeks, when the attendance was all that could be desired. Souls have been saved, and God's people greatly refreshed. One of the oldest inhabitants says the like was never seen in this place before. I send you this note to stimulate those who may be despairing as being passed by. Plead in faith, the Lord will answer.
ALEXANDER GIBSON.

COW-CROSS MISSION.—The ninth annual report of this Mission, like its predecessors, is full of interesting facts and figures. Its six engravings lend an additional charm to it. Each branch of work appears to be well sustained. It is emphatically an aggressive Mission. Not only is open-air preaching a prominent department, but this is rendered attractive and effective by an harmonium, good singing, banners, and sometimes lime-light. Nor is the Mission without fruit, positive conversions to God being seen, to the joy of the workers. In addition to a record of its own work, the report contains valuable statements of the results of Missions in general, the magnitude of London, the homes of the poor, and other things interesting to the philanthropist and the Christian. Copies may be had of the superintendent, Mr. William Catlin, 55, Amwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

TRADE MORALITY.

Sir,—Under this heading, I have just read the letter signed "C." in your last number. I know, by experience, that, bad as his report is, the half of the truth is not told. I could state facts that would astonish many of your readers. I will only relate one, on a subject I have not seen alluded to in any of your articles on this matter. I refer to the bribing of buyers and managers of businesses generally. Some short time since I called on a house to offer an article which I knew they used very extensively, and was referred to the manager, who, after examining my sample attentively, said, "Yes, it would suit us very well, but," he added, "if you are to do any trade with my employer, you must allow me a commission of five per cent. on all sales." I was quite astonished at this remark, knowing that such an allowance would be greater even than his salary. Seeing my surprise, he assured me that the parties who supplied them allowed him this sum. I happen to know the firm he alluded to, and they stand as high, and are considered as honourable, as any in the kingdom. To such an extent is this system carried on in the present day, that the man who refuses to do this sort of thing may as well shut up his samples, and give up business altogether. There are hundreds who could confirm the truth of these remarks, I have no doubt, but who can suggest a remedy for a system that is almost universal? A COMMERCIAL MAN.

TO YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.—All young men are invited to the meeting held every Friday evening in Moorgate-street Hall, at eight o'clock.

A WORD BY THE WAY.—The following incident may encourage "in season and out of season" workers:—Upon a young man telling me that he could trust in Christ as his Saviour, I asked him by what means he was led to think about his soul. He said, "As I was coming from Scotland to London by train, a few weeks ago, and reading a novel, a gentleman kindly remarked, 'That kind of reading will do you no good; but if you come to Christ, and search the Scriptures, you will have that which will really satisfy for time and for eternity.' And I got no peace till I came to Christ." A CONSTANT READER.

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS.

Light after darkness,	Joy after sorrow,
Gain after loss;	Calm after blast;
Strength after suffering,	Rest after weariness,
Crown after cross;	Sweet rest at last.
Sweet after bitter,	Near after distant,
Song after sigh;	Gleam after gloom;
Home after wandering,	Love after loneliness,
Praise after cry.	Life after tomb.
Sheaves after sowing,	After long agony,
Sun after rain;	Capture of bliss:
Light after mystery,	Right was the pathway
Peace after pain;	Leading to this!

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MOODY AND SANKEY: The New Evangelists. Ward, Lock, and Tyler, 1s.—This is a friendly and appreciative sketch of the work of our American brethren. The two portraits of Mr. Moody are, however, quite unlike him.

THE HOLY LIFE. A Book for Christians Seeking the Rest of Faith. By Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS. Partridge.—One of the many books written to meet the increased and increasing desire after personal holiness. While some grow by the ministry of the Holy Ghost into the life of faith on the Son of God, others need clear and definite guidance into the green pastures and waters of quietness. The teachings of this little book lie, we believe, in the happy and scriptural medium between the objective and subjective. Chapter 3, "The Attitude of Faith in Relation to Holiness," is clear and helpful, and the book as a whole we cordially commend. We observe a distinction drawn, in the second chapter, from which it might be inferred that Christ was our Substitute as the Sin-offering, but not as the Burnt-offering. This, we are sure, is not the author's intention, and we hope the paragraph will be more definitely and accurately written in another edition.

BALEARIC ISLANDS.—A good work of awakening is going on in the Island of Minorca. The Lord has raised up a second whole-hearted Spaniard, named Tudury, in the place of Matorros, and already the hostility against him is very marked. Mr. W. Green purposes going over to assist him, and asks the sympathy and co-operation of those interested in Spain.

OUR ENGLISH SISTERS IN PARIS. — Our readers will be glad to know that in answer to a memorial numerously signed by city bankers, merchants, etc., the Lord Mayor has convened a public meeting at the Mansion House, on Thursday, the 8th inst., at three p.m., "to manifest practical sympathy and co-operation in this really good and noble work" of providing assistance for necessitous young Englishwomen in Paris. This philanthropic movement has received the sanction of Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris, and we trust the meeting to be held at the Mansion House will be fruitful in good results.

EVANGELISTIC TENT FOR EDINBURGH.—During the five months from October 18th to March 14th inclusive, services were held every Sunday evening in the Southminster theatre, Edinburgh. Many hundreds assembled from week to week to listen to the message of salvation from the lips of a number of the Lord's servants, both lay and clerical, and every Sunday there was joy both on earth and in heaven over repentant sinners. The services were very successful in attracting the class of persons for whom they were intended, viz., those who do not attend any ordinary place of worship. The number of young men who came was especially remarkable. On the night of the 14th inst., an hour after the meeting had finally closed, the theatre was burned to the ground, and that door of usefulness is consequently shut. The workers of Carubber's-close Mission, under whose auspices the services were carried on, are unwilling, however, to abandon their very promising endeavour to reach the heedless non-church-going people of Edinburgh, and as no other secular building of a suitable kind can be obtained for the purpose, and most of the persons whom it is desired to reach will not enter a church, it is desired by the workers to obtain a tent, in which to continue the services. At present the way is barred by the lack of funds, for it is estimated that from £200 to £250 will be required to thoroughly establish the work and set it going with fair prospects of success. There are many Scotchmen in London and elsewhere in England whom the Lord has prospered. Might I ask them to contribute a little of this portion of his work in the capital of their native land? Nor would I confine my request to them, but would ask all the Lord's stewards who can spare any sum, however small, to aid us in this effort. Subscriptions will be gratefully received by Mr. Win. Robertson (Treasurer to the Carubber's-close Mission), 3, Valleyfield-street, Edinburgh, or by the undersigned. C. N. B. MURTON.

DAILY TEXTS.

"FIRST THE BLADE, THEN THE EAR; THEN THE FULL CORN IN THE EAR."—MARK IV. 28.

Thurs., Apr. 1.—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for His name's sake."—John iii. 3; 1 John ii. 12.

Fri. 2.—"As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine;...but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."—1 Pet. ii. 2; Ephes. iv. 14, 15.

Sat. 3.—"I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." "Add to your faith virtue."—1 John ii. 14; 2 Pet. i. 5.

Sun. 4.—"The Child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon Him." "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man."—Luke ii. 40, 52.

Mon. 5.—"He looked up and said, I see men, as trees, walking. After that, He put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up, and he saw every man clearly." "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling."—Mark viii. 24; Ephes. i. 18.

Tues. 6.—"I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning." "Fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God." "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourishing, to show that the Lord is upright."—1 John ii. 14; Col. i. 10; Ps. xcii. 14, 15.

Wed. 7.—"Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ [the word of the beginning of Christ], let us go on unto perfection." "Till we all come, in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—Heb. vi. 1; Eph. iv. 13.

"CONFORMED TO THE IMAGE OF HIS SON."—ROM. VIII. 29.

TEXT POSTERS' MISSION.—We are requested to state that a mission, bearing this designation, and having for its object the spreading of Gospel truths by means of texts posted in prominent positions, has been instituted at Kingston-on-Thames. The mission there is indebted for its origin to Mr. Cooper, proprietor of the Bible Depot, in the Apple-market, who, being a working man, devotes his few spare hours to the task of displaying the texts, etc. Some suitable positions have already been gratuitously afforded by supporters of the movement, which it is hoped will be attended with good results.

TOWCESTER.—Mr. W. Fidler writes to us from this place of special meetings lately held there, and says, "There is at the present time a feeling of unrest in the minds of the people generally, and an anxiety and eagerness to hear the gospel, which is quite a new thing among us, and gives us hope that God is here preparing the hearts of the people for the good seed of his kingdom. There are many seeking Jesus, and some have found peace in believing in Him. We have been calling upon God and pleading his promises, and now that He is blessing us, we desire to praise Him, and tell of his faithfulness for the encouragement of others. Will the Lord's people pray for Towcester?"

WARNING AND ENCOURAGEMENT.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be interested in the following extract of a letter from a young believer of eighteen, for whom prayer was asked in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN, when he sailed for Australia on account of his health:—

"From first embarking I felt it laid upon me to speak to the apprentice midshipmen, so I took the first opportunity of making friends with them, and then talked to them about their souls whenever I could get them by themselves. They were all very frank but careless, except one named —, who was very much affected, and appeared anxious. I spoke to him as well as I could, and he said he had accepted Christ, but he did not look like it, and in an hour or two he was swearing and singing as usual. I spoke to him several times after that, and he always said he could not help swearing. He went on that way till January 5, when he was sent up to clear the vane, and fell from the cross-tree right down on the poop, about ten feet from where I was standing, and was killed on the spot. I spoke also to another apprentice, who was very frank, and told me he did not care whether he was saved then or not, as he expected to be saved before he died, but after —'s death he was more impressed, and about a week before we landed he told me he had found peace, and I believe in his case it is true."

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN will remember seeing, a few weeks ago, a short account of the work here, and also a request for prayer, that the labours of J. M. Scroggie, the Scotch evangelist, might be greatly blessed. This request has been granted, and for three weeks we have had a continual reaping of souls. Night after night, during the week, the Exchange Hall, holding between 2000 and 3000 people, has been nearly filled. The last Sabbath evening meeting which our dear brother Scroggie held was a time not to be forgotten. Over the immense audience which crowded every available space in the hall, the spell of the Almighty seemed to be cast; and at the close of the address, when the anxious were invited into the inquiry-rooms, sixty persons rose from their seats, and went to inquire the way of peace. Before leaving Stockton, Mr. Scroggie held a meeting for the converts; over 300 assembled in the Baptist Chapel, to hear the parting counsel of one who lives in the affections of thousands in our town. E. P. TELFORD.

WINCHESTER.—By the grace of God, for the last two months, a great and blessed work has been carried on in this city through the agency of the Evangelization Society. Services have been held, and gospel addresses given by the evangelists in St. John's Rooms every afternoon and evening to hundreds of people of nearly every class. Charles Edward's simple preaching of the cross has been graciously accompanied by the power of the Spirit, and, as far as man can see, the results are most encouraging. Moody and Sankey's hymns have been used, and are very popular. We are trying to start a "British Workman" public-house in Winchester, but have not sufficient funds to furnish. £140 is the extent of our means at present, but the rent being very high (£65), we certainly require another £100 before we could venture to open, even for one year. GEORGE A. COTTAM, R.N.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

PRAISE.—Thanksgiving is requested for blessing on the meetings for young men held in Paris and Bordeaux during the last week of February, and especially for some young men brought to conversion at Paris. Also for blessing amongst the theological students at Montauban, for whom prayer was asked in THE CHRISTIAN last May, on the occasion of meetings lately held there by pastor Theodore Monod. Ask that the work may extend and deepen amongst them.—For the house-to-house visitation now carried on by Christians at Bridgewater.—A young chemist thanks God for his infinite goodness in hearing the prayers of your Christian readers, offered up for his soul's welfare, the same being blessed to him on Saturday last, March 20th.

PRAYER.—Prayer is specially requested for the readers of last week's Figaro, that comic paper having reprinted verbatim the whole of last Tuesday night's service at the Agricultural Hall—hymns, prayers, and Mr. Moody's sermon on "Ye must be born again."—That God will bless the distribution of his own Word among the Portuguese, Spanish, and Italian sailors in London.—For a Christian in perplexity as to his future course, and anxiously desiring deliverance from besetting sin.—The clergyman of a country parish implores the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon himself and his people.—For a young preacher of the gospel who, almost alone, is contending for the faith with Unitarians and others who are openly attacking it.—Prayer is requested in THE CHRISTIAN for a family that seem to be all going wrong in consequence of one member's transgression.—That two Christian friends may devote themselves, soul and body, to the Master's service, and be enabled, in his strength, to bear an approaching trial.—For two of my dear boys, now lying in scarlatina, and my wife and baby laid up too. Pray that our great, blessed Master, may be pleased to bring us safe through this affliction.—That the door, now closed by opposition, may be again opened for our Bible-women to the military hospital in Paris, where aged men are crying out for instruction, and that liberty for tract distribution and gospel preaching in France may be freely granted by the Assembly.—For Mr. Richard Weaver, who is dangerously ill, and that his family may be supported under his affliction.

PLACES.—For Convention at Portsmouth on 7th inst. to consider how best to reach the masses.—For a congregation at Braintree.—For blessing on the services to be conducted by Mr. Josiah Spiers at Ipswich, from the 2nd to the 9th.—For a town in the Isle of Man.—That many may be born again during the week of special services to be held in the Congregational chapel, Heathfield, Sussex, to commence on the 11th of April.—For the locked-out miners in South Wales, that the Lord may get Himself glory by showing, in the failure of human intervention, what his grace can effect in subduing the wills of thousands of strong men. Pray that, at this juncture, some very earnest adapted evangelists may go and preach Christ to them.—For Girvan, N.B.—For five days' special services, by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Cransley, near Kettering. To commence April 3.—For Eastbourne, that the Christians may be drawn together in love, and that sinners may be converted to God.—For meetings for women at Melrose, N.B., on April 8 and 9. For villages in Strathmore, Scotland, that the Lord may revive his work.

CONVERSIONS.—For the immediate salvation of nine children of one family.—On behalf of my father, mother, and four brothers.—For my husband.—For an only daughter and two sons in India.—For a father and two brothers who are quite in different.—For a brother, who is hopelessly ill.—For a woman, who has reached the allotted space of life, but has not peace.—A believing wife for her husband, prayed for twenty-five years.—For a beloved husband.—For the conversion of a woman, who is dangerously ill.—For an only sister, long, long pleaded for.—And for self, longing, yea, fainting, for a blessing but seemingly held by some unbelief.—For a dear wife, who is deeply anxious to press into the kingdom.—For a young man, that he may be speedily delivered from the vice of drunkenness. He is on the brink of utter ruin.—For my three children.—For an aged man who says he cannot pray.—For a brother.—For a father, aged eighty-one, on a bed of sickness, very hardened.

FORTHCOMING SPECIAL MEETINGS.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MEETINGS.—Every evening this week in the Agricultural Hall, at 8 p.m., except Saturday. Bible reading on Wednesday, at 3 p.m., in Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. Admission by tickets, to be obtained at the Conference Hall. Bible reading in Exeter Hall, on Thursday, at 3 p.m. Tickets to be obtained at the Hall. Sunday next will probably be the last Sunday for the present of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's occupation of the Agricultural Hall. They will be there in the evenings of next week, and on Sunday, April 11, intend commencing in the new building erected at the conjunction of Burdett and Mile-end Roads. During the following week Mr. Moody will probably give Bible-readings in the afternoon at Her Majesty's Theatre, and preach in the East-end Hall at night.

The Christian.

"WHAT MEANEST THOU, O SLEEPER?"

TRULY these are blessed days. We hear of revival in almost all parts of the world. God's people are everywhere bestirring themselves, and beginning to live as those who believe in God and in the Bible, in time and in eternity, in heaven and in hell. God be praised for all the good work which is going on!

But even in the midst of such general earnestness and activity as we see all around, are there not yet a few who are sleeping? Lord, wake them up! If ever there was a sharp, clear ring in those words, it is in these busy days—"What meanest thou, O sleeper?"

A sleeping believer! How inconsistent! We are speaking of a sinful sleep, and what has the believer in the Lord Jesus Christ to do with that? It is inconsistent with his very name and character. We are "of the day;" we are not "of the night." Then "let us not sleep, as do others."

Is this the place for us to sleep in? Is not this the place where Jesus "went about doing good"? where Jesus was despised, rejected, crucified? How unseemly to rest here! And is not this the place, too, where the soldier of Christ fights, his battle-field? Who talks of sleeping on the battle-field? "Arise; let us go hence." This is not our rest.

And is this the time for us to sleep? The short "hour" is fast closing. Our Jesus is soon coming. "Yea, I come quickly. Amen." The hour has but sixty minutes; and what if fifty, what if fifty-five, of those minutes be already gone? "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." "The night is far spent; the day is at hand." "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!" Arouse, Lord, thy wise yet sleeping virgins! "What! could ye not watch with Me one hour?"

My brother, my sister, I have a message from God unto thee. Jesus is surprised at thee; young, earnest Christians are surprised at thee; the world is surprised at thee. Sleeping one, is it nothing to thee that Christ "died unto sin once"? Is it nothing to thee that thou dishonourest that holy name by which thou art called? Is it nothing to thee that thou art "an offence," a stumbling-block, to thy Lord, to his saints, to the world? "What meanest thou, O sleeper?" "Awake to righteousness, and sin not."

Shall I go into details? Lord, help me! You are sleeping in slothfulness and selfishness. What was Jonah doing for the Lord in that ship? Doing? He was asleep—taking it easy! There was a great storm. All on board the ship were frightened. They were heathens, who did not know the Lord. What a splendid opportunity was this for Jonah, the servant of the living and true God! How he might take advantage of the occasion for preaching to them, and winning those precious souls for his Lord! First of all he might preach to them by his own example—by his peace of mind and confidence in the Lord in the midst of the storm, and in the prospect of death. Then he might preach to them also the good news—tell them all about "the coming One," and invite them to look unto Him and be saved. And did not he do it? No. Why? Because he was asleep. Nay; so far from his preaching to them, it was they who preached to him. They were more in earnest than he was. They were praying hard to their false gods, but Jonah was not praying to his true God. Yes, and they had to compel and awake him—"What meanest thou, O sleeper! Arise, call upon thy God." Heathens rebuking Jonah, and telling him his duty!

What are we doing for Jesus? The flesh whispers, "Take it easy." The world says, "Take it easy." The devil chimes in, "Take it easy." Ay, and even Christians—or rather, Satan through them—will tell us the same thing. Perhaps we make excuses for our slothfulness and selfishness. Perhaps we find fault with others, so as to excuse ourselves. As a rule, criticizing Christians are lazy Christians. They have got nothing else to do. Would to God they went to work themselves instead of trying to set others right. Perhaps, too, we take so much time in making up our minds—in considering whether we approve of this or that sort of work—that meanwhile others do the work, and we lose our chance.

Let the Lord search us upon this point. Slothfulness in service proceeds from slothfulness in our own personal walk. Are the means of grace neglected? Have I given up maintaining a life of constant communion with God? Have I got to be drowsy, lukewarm, sleepy? Have I settled down into a compromising, half-and-half sort of state? Does the devil let me pretty well alone, because he sees I will not do much harm? Is this how it comes to pass that though there are thousands all around on their way to hell, some Christians are standing with folded arms and looking at them. Is this why they say, "Never mind; others will look after them, if we don't"? Poor, lazy Christians! They do not know the joy of self-denial for Jesus! They do not know the blessedness of being weary after a good day's work for Jesus! They do not know the thrill of gladness which comes when a soul is won for Jesus! Is it for lack of opportunities? No. If they were awake, they would not complain of having no opportunities.

Fathers, mothers, are all your children converted? Young Christian, are your brothers, your sisters, your friends, your acquaintances, all converted? Men of business, what are you doing for the souls of those whom you employ? Masters and mistresses, what are you doing for your servants, besides paying them their wages? It is no excuse to say that we cannot speak like some people. The Lord does not ask us to speak like some people. He wants us to do what we can, to speak like ourselves. Or, rather, He wants us to labour, striving according to His working, which worketh in us mightily. My heart groans to see one slothful Christian in these "times of refreshing." Why not give up ease and comfort? Why take such good care of our health? Is it for the Lord, and for his work? Or is it merely for self and self-indulgence? I have heard of Christians who could not take a class in a Sunday-school because there was so much draught in the room, or because the doctor said Sunday-schools were very bad places for breathing in! Some Christians would like to go and visit those poor dying creatures, who are sinking into hell, only they are infectious cases! And others would so enjoy going into the inquiry-room, and pointing anxious souls to Christ, if it was not for the night air, and they might take cold!

What is at the bottom of all this slothfulness? Wilfulness. Like Jonah, Christians will choose for themselves. The Lord sends them to Nineveh, but they say, "No, I won't go there." They have got their objections, their prejudices, their party-feelings, and so off they go, just in the opposite direction, to Tarshish, "away from the presence of the Lord." That is wilfulness—departing from the presence of the Lord. But the Lord's servant must abide in his Master's presence, and say continually, "The Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand"—"The God whose I am, and whom I serve."

Ah! wilful Christians have got to smart for it when they go to Tarshish. They lose their money, for one thing. Jonah paid his fare to go to Tarshish, but he never got there, and we do not hear of the money being returned to him. He never saw it again, to say nothing of his luggage. Money spent in departing from the presence of the Lord is always wasted money. The Lord knows how to touch his people upon that point.

Think, too, of the peace of mind which wilful Christians lose. I should not like to have been Jonah, sleeping in the sides of that ship. How wretched he must have felt. The wonder is how he could sleep at all. Perhaps he was hardened in self-will. At all events, he had not that best of pillows to lie upon—a mind at peace in God, and resting in the Lord, and I do not think he can have had pleasant dreams. Are not many of the worries and crosses, and disappointments of Christians, just simply the result of self-will? Is not half of the conflict of Christians a conflict with the will of God, and not with the world, the flesh, and the devil? And is it a wonder if they are restless, unhappy Christians? I am inclined to think it was a relief to Jonah, and to his troubled mind, to be thrown overboard into the raging sea.

But that is not all. Wilful Christians bring troubles upon others as well as upon themselves. The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake, because the Lord was with Joseph, and Joseph was with the Lord. Paul in his shipwreck was the mainstay of the whole company—cheering, advising, exhorting, comforting—preaching, both by example and by precept. Paul was the means of saving all on board of the ship on which he was. Ah! it is a good thing to be in company with Paul, standing in the presence of the Lord; but beware of being in company with Jonah, fleeing from the presence of the Lord. If you keep company with wilful Christians, depend upon it they will bring you into trouble with themselves. Jonah was a very expensive passenger. He cost those sailors that dreadful storm with all its anxieties, he cost them the loss of their cargo, and if they had not thrown him overboard he would have cost them their lives. And yet, Jonah was a free man, whereas Paul was a prisoner. But Jonah was tied and bound by the chain of his own will, whilst Paul was "the slave of Jesus Christ," bound by his loving will. Oh! let the Lord have it all his own way with us. Let Him send us wherever He wills, and do with us whatever He likes. Let self-ownership and self-governorship be handed over to Him and left with Him.

"What meanest thou, O sleeper?" It is the world which asks that question. The world itself, at times, condemns our half-heartedness, our slothfulness, our inconsistency. Are not those thousands gathering day after day in the Agricultural Hall a witness against lazy, selfish Christians? How such Christians can read the accounts of the wonderful things the Lord is doing without feeling ashamed, or being roused to earnestness, is difficult to conceive. Do not the eager throngs crowding into halls and inquiry-rooms, give sleeping Christians a good shake, and as good as say, "What meanest thou, O sleeper?" Ay, and I fancy they follow that up with inquiries, which must make inconsistent Christians blush and hang down their heads, "Tell us, we pray thee, what is thine occupation? And whence comest thou? what is thy country, and of what people art thou?" Searching questions those, dear child of God, but you must come out with it—"My occupation is to do the will of God. I am one of the Lord's servants, I come from above—born again of the Holy Spirit. My country is Heaven. I am going to spend eternity there with Christ in glory. My people are the people of God. I am a 'fellow-citizen with the saints, and of the household of God.' That is not telling you all, even then. If you were to hear me saying my creed, or singing hymns, or preaching, you would find out much more still about me and my glorious privileges." Ah! wandering one, but there is one thing more, which you dare not leave out—"I flee from the presence of the Lord." "I am an inconsistent, disobedient, self-pleasing Christian." "The men knew that he fled from the presence of the Lord, because he had told them." It is not very pleasant to be pushed into a corner, and asked searching questions by worldly people, who are, it may be, more in earnest than ourselves. But it is one of the best things in the world for sleeping Christians. God often uses the world to rebuke His own people. "Why hast thou done this?" "You, a Christian! Then what business have you got here? Is this the place for you?"

And now, Lord, wilt Thou restore any backsliding, any slothful, any wandering child of Thine who reads this. But how are they to be restored? Must it not be, by being thrown overboard, like Jonah, by separation, by death and burial? For, "as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," and so also must all who belong to the Son of Man and are in Him "likewise reckon themselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Yes, we must come to that like Jonah; we must be drowned to the world, drowned to self, drowned to sin. Are we willing to take the place of death and burial with our Lord? Self-will will be crucified then, and the Lord will send us to the old place where we ought to have gone before—to Nineveh. And, restored to fellowship, will not the Lord then use us for the salvation of many precious souls? "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." JOHN J. LUCE.

THE MORALS OF TRADE.

Sir,—I have read in utter amazement the letter of your correspondent "C." (THE CHRISTIAN, No. 269). I forbear a detailed animadversion upon it, in the hope that you may find room for one or two remarks.

There are and can be no morals of commerce for Christian men other than the morals of the Bible. Those who imagine that this statement admits of qualification are under a terrible delusion.

As a Christian man, and in the name of many whom I know, I repudiate the idea that the smallest dishonesty or untruthfulness is necessary in business. No wonder Christian life beats low when a Christian can propound, in sober earnest, that the fear of God would lose us most, if not all, our business. I deny that it would. But if it were so, how shall we serve God and mammon?

One word more. Surely there is no need for a conference on such a subject. It savours too much of "I'll give up cheating if you will, and then my profits won't suffer." Besides, who would attend it? Let every man confer with his God, his Bible, and his conscience, and we need not fear for the result.—Yours truly, A BUSINESS MAN.

P.S. I enclose my name and card, not for publication.

[We think our correspondent's letter is itself a proof of the need of conference on this deeply-important subject; it is his contribution to a Conference in print. If it is right to hold Conferences on Christian doctrine, why not on Christian conduct?—Ed.]

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.—A few men, of various evangelical churches, are banding together for the purpose of open-air preaching in and around the neighbourhood of Kilburn. Earnest Christian young men are affectionately asked to come and help in preaching Christ crucified. Address, Thomas Luff, 29, Palmerston-road, Kilburn-rose.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN NEW YORK.

Our beloved English brother has been among us now for five weeks, and the result of his labours has fulfilled the high expectation the Christians of New York entertained. He came laden with the spoils of victory in Canada, greatly triumphing in the glorious conquests the Lord had achieved by the preaching of the gospel of his Son in the cities and towns of the Dominion.

On Mr. Varley's arrival in New York, he was heartily welcomed by the Young Men's Christian Association, and a meeting of those most heartily in sympathy with evangelistic work was convened, to welcome him in a social and brotherly manner.

On Sunday evening, February 14, Mr. Varley commenced his work by preaching in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, and two meetings a day were arranged throughout the week, viz., a Bible-reading, at 4 P.M., and the preaching of the gospel, at 7.30 P.M. The meetings steadily increased in numbers, until the hall, which is capable of holding 2000, became too small for the numbers of persons who pressed to hear the word of God from Mr. Varley's lips.

The distinctive character of his preaching has special attractions for Christians. He dwells especially upon the truth that Christians are indwelt by God the Holy Ghost, and that every Christian should, in the confidence of faith, declare with St. Paul, "Christ liveth in me." When the possession of the Christ-life was consciously realized, then life here on the earth became a magnificent possession. "I tell you, sirs," said Mr. Varley; in his own striking way, "the joys of heaven must be beyond our present highest conception or anticipation of them, to make up for the joy of living down here. Thus knowing that 'Christ liveth in me,' it is no longer easy to do wrong, but the indwelling Christ makes it for the Christian 'easy to do right, and hard to do wrong.'"

The effect of preaching like this was to kindle an enthusiasm in the breasts of the Christians of New York which set hundreds of them seeking out their friends and acquaintances, and begging them to come and hear the gospel preached by Mr. Varley.

For Mr. Varley's Sunday services it soon became apparent that there was no church in New York capable of containing the throng who came from all parts of the city to hear him. It was therefore resolved to ask the widely-known Mr. Barnum to grant him the use of his great Roman Hippodrome, situated almost in the centre of the city, for a mass meeting on Sunday evening. The application was made, and Mr. Barnum, with characteristic liberality, laconically telegraphed from his country residence, "Welcome to the Hippodrome." Arrangements were made to add to the 9600 fixed seats upwards of 3000 chairs, for which room was found in the arena.

The Sunday evening for which the first meeting in the Hippodrome was convened proved to be one of the stormiest character, for the snow came down without intermission, rendering travel exceedingly difficult. Nevertheless, the interest of the people of New York was superior to the discouragements of the storm, and the Hippodrome was filled. Our beloved brother Mr. Varley made his powerful voice heard from one end of the great building to the other. There were not less than 15,000 entered the Hippodrome, and of these from 12,000 to 13,000 persons listened to the proclamation of the truth.

Encouraging as was this first meeting in the Hippodrome, on the following Sunday, March 14, there was far deeper interest, and a denser multitude. Before the hour at which the preaching was to commence, there was a necessity to shut the outer doors, because the multitude outside was so large. Observers estimated that at least five thousand persons were disappointed of finding admission, although twenty thousand must have entered the building. Mr. Varley's sermon was of engrossing interest, his subject being "The rich man and Lazarus," in the exposition of which the preacher declared the whole counsel of God, boldly stating the dread alternative of rejecting the gospel of Christ. With the exception of a little moving at the extreme end at the preacher's back, the attention was most profound, as evidenced by the solemn stillness of the vast assembly.

At the conclusion of the sermon, an after-meeting was held, to which about three thousand remained, who listened to Mr. Varley's delightfully plain teaching of the gospel in its simplicity, with engrossing interest. When those who wished for prayer were asked to rise, not less than two hundred simultaneously arose. Mr. Varley himself, as well as the Christians who are sustaining him, are filled with joyous thanksgiving for the manifestations of the Lord's blessing on the simple proclamation of the gospel in New York. It is a theme of devout thankfulness that so many in this mammon-worshipping and pleasure-loving city—this Paris of the New World—should be so attracted by the preaching of the word. In deepest reverential joy we can say, "It is the Lord."

Mr. Barnum has granted the use of his Hippodrome for a third Sunday, on which occasion we trust we shall see greater things than before. During the week our brother, with mighty strength and zeal, is preaching two or three times a day. On Tuesday, March 16, he held two meetings in Dr. Stephen Tyng, jun.'s, Protestant Episcopal Church, at which his father, the venerable Dr. Tyng, now in the fifty-fourth year of his ministry in this city, was present, and expressed to Mr. Varley his hearty appreciation of his presentation of the truth.

F. TWINCH.

New York, March 20.

We learn by a letter dated March 22, that on the previous day in the Hippodrome was a tremendous gathering of fully 20,000. The Americans want to send for Mr. Varley's family. The drawing-room meetings gather from the slits of the city, and there is a widespread hold on all classes. I believe hundreds of the churches will be mightily revived. How wonderful that the two great capitals should be shaken in this way. About a hundred ministers of the city met Mr. Varley on Saturday afternoon (March 20), and there is a great desire for him to remain another month in New York. The cry is everywhere, "Come over and help us," and from Boston and Philadelphia especially, they are most importunate.

THE FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.

Dear Sir,—I desire, as treasurer of donations sent me in answer to an appeal through the columns of your paper, on behalf of the sufferers from famine in Asia Minor, to give an account of my stewardship. I have, up to the present time, received £739 5s. 11d. Of this amount I have remitted, through the Ottoman Bank, £700. I have published no list of subscriptions, as this would have involved expense. All the expense of correspondence, postage, stationery, etc., I have defrayed myself. There will be great need of help for two months more, and I am still in hopes that some others who desire to assist will do so. I shall, therefore, continue to receive any sums that may be intrusted to my care.

There are sixty towns and villages in the afflicted districts. The following returns are samples of the sixty in general. At Karajeh, out of a population of 800, 355 have died. The survivors have subsisted largely on untanned skins, boiled down with wild herbs. At Akali, out of 1200 people, 500 have died. Unburied bodies lie about putrefying. The goats and sheep, which formerly abounded, have all disappeared. At Hassandaidi, out of 400 persons, 200 are dead. Suicide, infanticide, and madness from suffering and fever, are common in many places. And now, to crown this terrible visitation, disastrous floods have occurred during the last month, especially in the western provinces. The country is strewn with the carcasses of sheep and oxen, and those animals that have escaped starvation and drowning are mere bundles of skin and bone.—Yours, etc.,

JOSEPH BECK.

THE TWENTY THOUSAND.*

No Gothic arch allures the eye,
No fair Italian dome;
And yet must this a temple be,
To which the people come.
No consecrated ground is here,
Where priests may play their part,
But purest consecration may Rest on the human heart;
And angels bright, from realms of light,
To earth may wing their way,
To gaze upon that wondrous sight,
Where twenty thousand pray.

Let Balaam come to curse the host;
The spirit dark shall flee;
Unwonted lips shall now declare
Him blest that blesseth thee.
And curséd he that dares to mock
Where God resolves to bless;
And weak the arm that would defy
The might of holiness.
The angel-pow'rs that watch the Church
Bend o'er the silent string,
And hush their own sweet melody,
While twenty thousand sing.

There comes a flood to sweep away
The refuges of lies,
And on that great spring-tide of grace
The Church of God shall rise.
Above the hills of unbelief
The ark of God shall sail,
While living waters o'er the earth
Exceedingly prevail.
O mighty London, bow thine head
In this thy gracious day!
Go, worldling, scoffer, gay one, go
Where twenty thousand pray.

O ye despisers, now beware
Lest that should come on you—
"Lo! in your day, before your eyes,
A wondrous work I do—
A work which ye shall not believe,
Whate'er a man may say!"
Beware lest, wond'ring, ye shall fade,
And die, and pass away,
While souls redeemed by love divine
Salute their sov'reign King,
And under yonder iron roof
The twenty thousand sing.
"The King shall have His own again."
The world is twice His own;
He made it, and redeem'd it too,
The country and the town.
And o'er the broad and swelling sea
Dominion He shall have;
The blood-red banner of the cross
O'er every land shall wave.
Like morning on the mountains spread,
There comes the gospel-day:
"Thy kingdom come," Thy servants cry,
And twenty thousand pray.

It is not new, it seems not wise,
It is not bought with gold;
'Tis free to all, it nothing costs,
It is a story old.
But never yet could man conceive
Aught richer or more rare,
So fraught with joy to broken hearts,
So strong against despair.
And as the preacher trumpet-tongued,
The mighty host controls,
The power of that transcendent love
Thrills twenty thousand souls.

Anon, the voice of minstrelsy
Enchants the list'ning throng;
The heart's deep feeling welling forth
In consecrated song.

That song shall sound on many tongues
For many days to come,
In many a street, in many a lane,
And many a humble home.
The city's stones shall echo forth
That song so sweet and clear,
Which floats along the vast arcade,
Where twenty thousand hear.
A season brief there's silence deep,
And, drooping ev'ry eye,
They bow the head in silent prayer,
Most eloquent on high.
Then bursts aloud the glory-hymn,
With thunder in its tone,
Like songs that burning seraphs sing:
Around the great white throne.
No organ-peal, no trumpet-blast,
No artificial thing;
But such a song as angels love,
The twenty thousand sing.
Pure light has enter'd this dark world,
So says the written Word;
And all the earth shall surely see
The glory of the Lord.
O Lord of Hosts! divinely near,
Now at the throne of grace,
Thy people plead for friend and foe,
And all the human race.
If "two or three" may win Thee down,
With them on earth to stay,
What depth of blessing shall there be
Where twenty thousand pray!

JOSEPH PITTER.

THE REV. SHOLTO DOUGLAS IN MADRAS.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Ever since the accounts reached us of the London "Mission" in February last year, and of the abundant blessing vouchsafed to the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Great Britain, there has been a growing desire among Christians here for a similar blessing among ourselves. This wish found expression in a week of special services held last year at our two Hill stations, Coonoor and Ootacamund, which were very successful so far as they went, and it was felt that if an experienced evangelist could be induced to come out from England, accustomed to conduct missions in our own country, a very great blessing might be looked for. An invitation was accordingly sent to Mr. Douglas, who felt himself providentially set free to accept the call, by the closing of his own church—All Saints, Derby—for repairs.

He landed in Bombay on the last day of the old year, and after taking part in two or three meetings which he found going on there during the Week of Prayer, and preaching in the church belonging to the Church Missionary Society, at the request of the incumbent, the Rev. T. K. Weatherhead, with marked tokens of blessing, he reached Madras on the 9th January.

He began his labours at once on the following day, preaching twice at Christ Church, of which the two secretaries of the C. M. S., Rev. J. Barton and Rev. D. Fenn, are the joint ministers. After the morning sermon, the general congregation having dispersed, Mr. Douglas spoke from the lectern for about a quarter of an hour to workers, and explained that the main end and object of a "Mission" is to secure personal dealing with souls during the "After-meeting."

At the close of each sermon, after a solemn appeal to wavering ones to decide at once for Christ, Mr. Douglas invited all those who desired further prayer and advice to remain in their seats.

The after-meeting usually lasted about an hour. As the week wore on, the blessed results of the services were increased. Some who had been struggling after peace for years, found it, and returned to their homes rejoicing; while many careless giddy ones were arrested, and led to consecrate themselves to God. About thirty individuals, it is estimated, came out decidedly for Christ during this Mission week, who never made any profession before; while many others, who were believers before have been able to testify joyfully to the blessing they received.

The Bishop was present more than once, and on one occasion stayed quite to the end of the after-meeting, evidently wishing to show his cordial sympathy with this effort to win souls. The Archdeacon also, and several others of the Madras clergy, were to be seen night after night amongst the congregation. The Mission lasted nine days, and closed with a thanksgiving service on the Monday evening, followed by the administration of the Lord's Supper, to which those who had received a blessing during the past week were specially invited.

On the last evening blank forms were distributed through the church, which all who desired to attend Bible-readings, for the closer study of the Word of God, were invited to fill up with their names and addresses. The result has been the formation of no less than ten weekly classes of from six to fifteen members each, in connection with our own congregation alone.

On January 29th a very remarkable meeting was held in the Memorial Hall, at which a large number of native gentlemen, many of them occupying high positions in native society, were present. A native gentleman present thus writes of that gathering: "The meeting consisted of a large majority of respectable and highly educated Hindus. I know of no instance in which a meeting so interesting in its character was ever held on account of religious subjects." Mr. Douglas was greatly stirred at addressing for the first time in his life an assembly of some 500 intelligent English-speaking heathen; and spoke with unusual power. After saying that he could not proceed to speak to them without first praying to his God to help him, and asking them meanwhile to address their god, whoever he might be, he knelt before them all on the platform for some moments in silent prayer, during which time a pin could have been heard to fall. It was very impressive. The subject of his address, which lasted quite an hour, and was listened to most attentively throughout, was the same "old, old story" which had been the theme of most of his previous addresses, Man's fall and God's remedy, the broken Law and the perfect Substitute; in fact, as he said himself, he had but one message to deliver to his own countrymen and to them. At the close of the address, which he ended as he had begun, in silent prayer, a number of native gentlemen testified to the interest they felt in what they had heard, by remaining behind to speak to Mr. Douglas. So many, indeed, there were who were anxious to converse with him individually, that a day was fixed for any who wished to call on him privately; an invitation of which many availed themselves.

Besides the addresses already alluded to of a more directly evangelistic character, Mr. Douglas met several gatherings of believers, in which he insisted most strongly on the fruitlessness of all work for God which does not aim at direct dealing with souls. The last of these, on the night previous to his leaving Madras, was a meeting of the Missionary conference held at the Church Mission House; this was the thirtieth address delivered during thirty-one days.

As some indication of the interest which he excited it is worthy of mention that for a whole fortnight the daily secular papers made him the subject of their frequent criticisms, some bitterly hostile, others of a more or less appreciatory character, but all showing the deep interest which for the time at least his preaching had excited.

BLACKHEATH.—Christian friends willing to help in the house-to-house visitation work are invited to call on or communicate with the Superintendent, 11, Langton-terrace.

A MISSION will be held in the Churches of Dudley, from April 10 to 19; and in Newport (Mon.), at St. Paul's, Rev. W. Haslam will be the missionary from April 18 to 25.

JOSHUA POOLE IN THE EAST OF LONDON.

BY EDWIN H. KERWIN.

In the Foresters' Music Hall, Joshua Poole has been preaching to a "full house" for the last fifteen weeks. The locality in which he is labouring abounds with dog-keepers, pigeon-fliers, bird-catchers, and it is a strange sight one sees on Sunday in taking a stroll into this colony of "pet animals," strange to hear the rural chirpings and twitterings and full burst of song in one of the most squalid districts of the East-end. Men may be found loafing about with the spotted pocket handkerchief, tied over a birdcage, and held by the knot, and the air resounds again and again with the familiar "toll-loll-loll-chick-weed-oh." Butchers abound everywhere, and their cry, of "Buy—buy—buy," is heard above a continual hum of human voices. It seems that few of the inhabitants make any purchases on Saturday, as the whole neighbourhood presents itself as on a busy market-day, and anything but like Sunday. It is in the midst of this that Joshua is drawing over 3000 people every Sabbath to hear the gospel proclaimed in his own peculiar fashion. I have several times paid a visit to this hall, and not later than Good Friday evening I had the pleasure of hearing the "fiddler" speak to a large audience. He is gifted with a marvellous power of influencing those of his own station of life, and I do not know of another preacher who can draw such large numbers of the working men together to listen to the truth. Once they have heard him, the probability is they will either come again, or recommend some of their mates to go and hear the "man who talks to 'em straight."

Joshua does not mince matters; he shows a wonderful power of holding his listeners from the commencement; he feels, as it were, the pulse of the meeting, and soon, in terms not to be misunderstood, he tells them what their present mode of living, if continued in, will lead them to, and how they may escape the penalty of a coming judgment.

In listening to his quaint and sometimes awful stories, one is constrained to say, "Truth is, indeed, stranger than fiction." I remember in days past seeing at the Princess's Theatre "The Streets of London." After the curtain had dropped, the lessee came forward, and in thanking the audience for their presence, said, "You have only seen in miniature to-night what can be seen on the streets of London every day of your lives." I well remember the solemn way in which those words fell upon my ears, and brought tears into my eyes; but to hear Joshua relate some of those thrilling stories which have come under his notice while travelling up and down the country, not only since his conversion, but while he was, to quote his own words, "a drunken, blaspheming fiddler," often brings tears from the eyes of many who have strong, stout hearts, and it is by such a method that Joshua grasps the hearts of the people.

Sunday after Sunday, long before the opening of the doors, small groups of people are to be seen waiting about, and as the time wears on the pathway is blocked by those assembled at the doors, and soon the large building is crowded from floor to ceiling. The order kept is wonderful for the class addressed, and while he is vividly picturing some disgraceful behaviour of a drunken man or woman, the silence is often broken by a cry of "Shame! shame!" from the audience.

Few men can keep such an audience for an hour and a half in perfect order while he denounces their sins in the strongest terms, and then points them to the only remedy that can relieve them and make them whole. The after-meetings prove the effect upon the listeners, and not a few are the letters of thankfulness received from those to whom he has been made a blessing.

HALIFAX.—The first of a series of open-air services, specially designed for the benefit of those who generally do not attend any place of worship, was held in Caddy-field, on Sunday, March 21, and was, in respect to numbers and interest shown, a decided success. It is intended by the promoters of these services that they be continued during the ensuing spring and summer months in various parts of the town. The hymns sung by Mr. Sankey with so much success were used on the occasion. Short addresses, of a plain and pointed nature, were delivered by Messrs. W. O. Walls and J. Jowett, who at the close also distributed a large number of tracts, which were cheerfully received by the audience. Tracts, etc., for distribution will be gladly received by either of these gentlemen, addressed to 19, Holden-street, Stannary, Halifax.

MESSES. MOODY AND SANKEY IN LONDON.NOON MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

There was no lack of interest at the noon meeting on Monday week, though Mr. Moody was absent at Liverpool. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and read Matt. xxix., which contains the account of the feeding of the multitude with loaves and fishes.

The usual period of prayer was followed by testimony as to the progress of the work.

Mr. Hogg said, among the requests for prayer, many were received asking that thanks might be given. One had been received from a lady who had brought ten servants to the women's meeting at the Agricultural Hall on Sunday week, of whom she had cause to believe seven had been brought to find and believe in Christ. A short time ago he was in South America, and he found there a gentleman who was doing a good work for the Lord. Upon questioning him, he ascertained that he had found Christ while singing in Mr. Sankey's choir.

Admiral Fishbourne said that, at a church at Cleghaton, out of a congregation of 2500, about 500 or 600 people had been under conviction of sin at the same time, and that was done quietly, with not the least excitement. At another place, too, not far distant, a minister had sent to him for assistance, saying that for whole days, from early morning until eleven o'clock at night, they were occupied in pointing the way of inquirers to Christ.

Mr. Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare, said he had come 140 miles to take part in the good work which was going on in London. At a church near Forest-hill, for the first time since it was built, twenty-six souls had just been into the schoolroom to make inquiries as to the way of salvation, and many of them went away rejoicing. That very morning, as early as eight o'clock, some more came, and at nine others came in, so that the work was continuing in full vigour.

Mr. Sankey said yesterday (Sunday) was the most blessed day he had yet had the privilege of spending in London. It was a day of refreshing to his own soul from early morning until ten o'clock at night. He traced much of the blessing to himself and to others with whom he came in contact to a little portion of the Word of God, which he read one evening after he went home from the Agricultural Hall. That part was in the eleventh chapter of John, which referred to the raising of Lazarus. When they came to the grave, there was a stone there, which Jesus could have removed Himself. But He said to those who were about Him, "Take ye away the stone." After Jesus had raised him, He said, "Loose him, and let him go." He could have done it easily Himself, but He chose that his disciples should do something, thus inculcating the example that, while his followers were to work, it was the voice of Jesus alone that could bring life into the dead soul.

Mr. Radcliffe, the superintendent of the house-to-house visitation, said many were receiving the visitation with joy, and numbers of backsliders had been brought back again to the fold through their exertions. One lady wrote to him that they had sixty-four workers, thirty-eight men and twenty-six women, but they were nothing to the numbers needed. She was sending to the country for help, stating she could return the help when the country visiting commenced. He concluded with an earnest appeal for more labourers.

Prayer having been offered by Dr. Ellis, Mr. Sankey sang "One more day's work for Jesus," the congregation joining in the chorus, after which the benediction brought the meeting to a close.

Mr. Moody was also absent on Tuesday, and Mr. Thomas Stone, Chairman of the General Committee, presided. The address, given by Rev. Adolph Saphir, of Notting-hill, was indeed a feast of fat things to any soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Having read John xv. 9-17, he said the burden of the Saviour's teaching in the passage was, "Love and obedience"—first love, then obedience. But before love came faith, and, first of all, came the grace of God, which bringeth salvation. While thus laying down the distinction between faith and works, he urged strongly the inseparable and blessed connection between the two. Christ says, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Christ's commands were so easily understood and remembered. They were like the pure light from heaven. Conscience and reason told us they were true; we needed to have our hearts enlarged, so that we might love to do them as well as to approve of them.

Dwelling on the simplicity of Christ's commands, Mr. Saphir showed how they were almost always summed up in one word. The source of our spiritual life was, "Abide in Me." We are to abide in Him "in secret." The command with respect to our sinful inclinations is, "Death." With regard to our life and conduct the command is, "Follow Me." With regard to our friends and relations the word of Christ is, "Mission." The object of our hope is, "Heaven," and all might be summed up in the one word, "Love."

"Now, dear friends," said Mr. Saphir, in closing, "let me ask you, do you love the commands of Jesus? Do you love them as much as the promises of Jesus? Are we not all apt to take hold of everything that is sweet, and comforting, and consoling in Scripture, like so many flowers out of a garden, and weave them into a garland, but to look on the precepts and injunctions as so many thorns and briars that we wish to avoid? What a mistake!"

"Take His easy yoke, and follow;
Love will make obedience sweet."

Mr. Sankey sang a new hymn, telling of the Saviour's love. He imparted fresh interest to the service of song by reciting an appropriate passage of Scripture between each verse. He followed with earnest prayer for Mr. Moody, then on his way back from Liverpool; and Mr. Radcliffe prayed for Mr. Taylor, who was on his way to Liverpool.

Mr. J. W. McGill, of Glasgow, gave some cheering accounts of the various Mission-works in Paris (all of them known to our readers) carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Pearse, Miss Leigh, and Mr. McAll, and asked special prayer on their behalf.

On Wednesday, there was a full attendance, to welcome Mr. Moody back, after his brief absence. After "Wondrous Love" had been sung, Mr. Moody said there were 180 requests for prayer sent in, and they had to be condensed. He requested the Christians to write out their requests as shortly as possible, so as to save time in reading and arranging them. Some of them occupied eight or ten pages. After the requests were read, Mr. Moody himself prayed for the special objects mentioned.

His address was founded on the stories of the leper and the palsied man, in Luke xii. He spoke in terms of great admiration of the four men who brought the sick of the palsy, and pointed out that it was when Jesus saw their faith that He cured the men. They got more than they asked for.

The lessons he wished to draw from the passage were, if we could not bring a soul to Christ, let us get our neighbour to help us. Nothing would wake up London quicker than to have four men after one soul. He drew the picture of a careless man being visited at breakfast, dinner, tea, and supper, by four separate persons, anxious about his soul. The man would not sleep much that night. Another and opposite lesson was learned from the conduct of the leper who went straight to Jesus himself.

Rev. T. Thomas referred to the "Personal Appeal Society," established in London three years ago, and urged the formation of similar societies throughout London.

After a few words from the Rev. D. Bill, of Nova Scotia,

Mr. Moody said he had just found out how London was to be reached; he referred to the thousands who responded to his invitation to try and bring one soul to Christ during the week, on the previous Sunday morning, and stated that several thousands more in Liverpool had agreed to do the same. Speaking of a service for children, he said it would be utterly impossible to conduct one successfully in the Agricultural Hall, on account of the size of the building; but he advised the parents to bring the children to the ordinary services, which he tried to make interesting even to the youngest.

The noon meeting on Thursday was a most interesting one. Mr. Moody spoke from the words, "Be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God; and the peace of God, which passeth understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds, through Christ Jesus." The reason why our prayers are not answered is often because we are not thankful for answers received. It would be a good thing to have a thanksgiving-meeting now and then. He had been very much encouraged during the last few days at receiving so many letters from parents and friends, giving thanks. He received yesterday a letter from a mother in the north of Scotland. Her son had visited the Agricultural Hall, and been converted, and though unable to write herself, she got her daughter to write, informing him of her joy. He read other most interesting letters, and defended the practice of giving out the requests for prayer publicly; we are told to bear one another's burdens.

Rev. F. Tucker related a striking case of conversion at the meetings in Dublin, which had come under his personal observation. "Fathers and mothers," he concluded, "there are plenty of you here to-day, and you are thinking about absent sons. Do not despair; bring them again and again upon your hearts to Him who is mighty to save." Mr. Tucker then prayed with great fervour for Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, who, he said, were as dear to Englishmen as to any in their own country.

Mr. Radcliffe mentioned the case of a lady who was awakened at one of the meetings, and had been disappointed in her desire to speak to Mr. Moody, but had found peace through conversation at Great Marlborough-street, and yesterday she came to say that she had engaged in the house-to-house visitation. Mr. Radcliffe once more appealed for superintendents, otherwise those who had already volunteered would have to do double work. He specially wanted some who could speak German to take a district not far from Exeter Hall. A clergyman of the Church of England, who had gone to a new parish, had written to him for superintendents and a band of visitors, whether Churchmen or Nonconformists he did not care, as long as they could speak for Jesus. Mr. Radcliffe also appealed for some who were accustomed to speak to Jews, as the work among them was abounding.

EVENING MEETINGS, AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Events have singularly falsified the prediction of one of the worldly-wise prophets of the Saturday Review that "Messrs. Moody and Sankey would be a nine days' wonder at the most." They are now, as we write, well on in the fourth week of their services, and there is not the smallest sign of any falling off in the attendance at the meetings, in the interest awakened, or in the number of anxious inquirers. Mr. Moody stated the other day at Exeter Hall, that some of the evening meetings of the past week were the best they had seen, and he is not in the habit of making such statements rashly, or without good foundation. Let us thank God and take courage. He has graciously visited London with the precious droppings of his love and saving power. Is not this an encouragement to his children to ask for and expect greater things still, to give Him no rest until the dry bones all around shall be turned into an exceeding great army, that shall fight, under the banner of the Cross, against the remaining vice and unbelief.

Mr. Moody was at Liverpool on Monday evening last week, speaking to the young converts there, and his absence doubtless accounted for the somewhat smaller attendance at the Agricultural Hall. The Rev. Wm.

Taylor supplied Mr. Moody's place as the preacher. Mr. Taylor's preaching, both as to the matter and manner of it, forcibly contrasts with that of Mr. Moody, and for this very reason we think it was remarkably suitable to the occasion. Mr. Moody chiefly appeals to the affections and the heart, and his success shows, no doubt, that the shortest way to reach a man's whole being is by way of the heart. At the same time it is most essential, we think, not to overlook the fact that God's plan of salvation is intended to subdue the understanding as well as awaken the emotions, and coming after Mr. Moody's solemn and heart-stirring appeals of the past week, Mr. Taylor's address was one of immense value. He chose for his text the words of St. Paul, "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight." No man, he said, could be acquitted before God by the deeds of the law. Why? Is God's law so high and so severe that we cannot be acquitted before Him, or attain a justified relation by the law? Let us see. Mr. Taylor proceeded, in terse and striking language, to examine and expound the law, as contained in the Decalogue, and proved that these commandments were holy, just, and good. They could not be lower, and be just; they could not be modified. Yet if we have never broken any of these laws, we will be justified before God after all. But that is just the point. Mr. Taylor then reproduced each commandment in turn, and showed how in the spirit, if not in the letter, no one could say he had kept any of them. Having thus cut the ground from under the sinner's feet, he urged the acceptance of Christ as a Saviour. The only court in the universe that could righteously acquit a guilty man was the court of immutable justice, because it had been satisfied in the finished work of Christ. Some of his illustrations were extremely forcible, and to the point; and the discourse, though longer than Mr. Moody's usually are, was listened to with eager interest.

Mr. Sankey was present as usual, and sang, "What shall the harvest be?"

A novel and striking feature of the service was Mr. Taylor's repeating from memory, instead of reading, the first fourteen verses of John i., commenting as he went.

Tuesday's evening service in the large hall was preceded by a prayer-meeting in St. Mary's Hall, at seven o'clock, at which Mr. Moody urged the Christians to disperse as much as possible among the audience, so as to be in a position to speak a word of counsel and encouragement to any who were impressed during the service.

A buzz of satisfaction passed through the crowded building as Mr. Moody passed to his seat, accompanied, as usual, by Mr. Sankey.

Mr. Moody's text was, "Son, remember," and from these words he pictured, in vivid and realistic language, the anguish of those in the lost world. He did not preach of hell to terrify people; at the same time he must declare the whole message of God. If there is no hell, let us burn our Bibles. He believed "the worm that dieth not" would be the memory of opportunities lost and gone for ever. The truth, so faithfully though lovingly spoken, seemed to find its way to many hearts in the congregation, and the heart of the preacher was rejoiced to see numbers at the close inquiring how they might escape from the wrath to come.

Mr. Sankey's sermons in song were addressed both to the Christians and the unconverted, "Nothing but Leaves," and "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

As the time allotted for the stay of the evangelists at the Agricultural Hall swiftly glides past, the anxiety to attend the meetings increases. The hall was densely crowded both on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, and the doors had to be closed some time before the proceedings commenced. On both evenings Mr. Moody discoursed on "Heaven." His addresses on this subject have been usually termed "Bible-readings," though they are, strictly speaking, a mixture of exposition and appeal. From many passages of Scripture Mr. Moody proved, in his first address, that it is rational to look upon heaven as being "above," that it is the dwelling place of God, of Christ, of the angels, and of the redeemed saints. This latter thought naturally led him to make a most affectionate and effective appeal to all his hearers who had loved ones in heaven, to make sure of their entrance into that abode of light and happiness. Such an appeal, carried home in Mr. Moody's striking language, could not fail to stir to their heart's depths many a careless one, and the responses to the speaker's invitation to rise were more than usually numerous. The inquiry-room was the scene of many a grave and often tearful conversation about the greatest realities of life, and to all human appearance there were numbers who, then and there, made up their minds to start for the better land.

On Thursday evening Mr. Moody, continuing his remarks on heaven, discoursed to a congregation that crowded every corner of the Agricultural Hall, of the folly and virtual insanity of laying up treasure on earth, without making any provision for the possession of treasures in heaven. At the commencement of the service he prayed that heaven might be nearer and dearer to every Christian than ever it was before, and if one is entitled to judge from their own experience, his prayer was abundantly answered. The pearly gates and golden streets, and the all-attracting presence of Christ in the new Jerusalem, were brought so vividly before the mind, that we could share the desire of Paul to "depart and be with Christ, which is far better." It struck us that Mr. Moody dwelt somewhat too strongly on the reward or crown to be received by the Christian as an impelling motive to service and suffering, but, be this as it may, his pictures of the grand old warrior apostle, Paul, as he fought the good fight, and finished his course, in spite of his many and sore persecutions, were calculated to inspire the drooping soul, and cast into dark relief the feeble Christianity of the present day.

The Agricultural Hall was literally packed on Friday evening; many were under the impression, we believe, that it was to be the last week evening service. The platform had been largely extended on both sides, and if the building will really hold 15,000, there must have been that number present.

Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine," in that wondrously touching way which has caused his hymns to reach so many hearts, and made his solos an integral part of the service.

For the third time within the last month Mr. Moody propounded to his hearers the momentous question, "What must I do to be saved?" and answered it so clearly and unmistakably that when he pulled up the gospel net which he had been casting out during his address, many were not unwilling to be caught. He afterwards met the inquirers alone, and "expounded unto them the way of God more perfectly." The after-meeting for prayer was rather marred for a time by the departing crowds.

BIBLE READINGS.

On Wednesday afternoon at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, and on Thursday afternoon, at Exeter Hall, Mr. Moody gave to crowded congregations, a Bible-reading on "Works," not, perhaps, one of his best, but as the subject indicates, one of great practical value. He gave prominence to the truth so well expressed on a previous day by Mr. Saphir, that faith and love must come before obedience, and counselled the young converts to betake themselves to the study of God's Word, to work, and to prayer.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

"Thou hast kept the good wine until now." Mr. Moody, in his addresses to Christian workers, may be said to act on this principle. His earlier Sunday morning addresses could not, we think, be excelled as rousing and soul-stirring exhortations on such abstract subjects as Love, Courage, Perseverance, or Service. What impulses for good they have communicated to the thousands who listened both with eyes and ears—and mouth, I was going to say—eternity alone will reveal. Still, we think and believe there is nothing that can awaken the dormant energies of easy-going Christians, and prompt them to action, so much as the presentation of these truths in a concrete form, and, for this reason, we doubt not Mr. Moody's address of Sunday morning last on "Daniel" will continue to exert a powerful influence for good, after his previous sermons to workers have been well-nigh forgotten.

"Daniel" is palpably a very congenial topic of discourse with Mr. Moody; he seems to revel in it, and it brings into action all the burning enthusiasm of his being, and affords him an opportunity of making many a homethrust at the follies and foibles of the present day. He might very profitably cut the subject in two, as he does many of his others. We have noticed that in order to compress all he wishes to say about Daniel into one address, he has to hurry along with breathless haste, and at a speed sufficient to terrify the swiftest phonographer extant. Now and then he glances un-easily at the slowly, but too swiftly moving hands of the clock, and he invariably brings the address to an abrupt and somewhat unfinished termination, with the expression of a regret that the time will not allow him to say more about this "man beloved of God." Many of the audience must have been astir betimes—he spoke to some who had come many miles—but the prevailing sentiment must have been that they would rather not have slept at all than have missed hearing the well deserved eulogium that Mr. Moody pronounces on "the prophet Daniel," who is now, as we used to sing in the days of our childhood, "Safe in the promised land."

Mr. Sankey closed the lecture at Mr. Moody's request, by singing "Dare to be a Daniel," the audience taking up the chorus. As this last Sunday morning gathering in the North of London slowly dispersed from the great building lit up with the clear shining of the morning sun after the rain, "Dare to be a Daniel" was the watchword that passed from friend to friend, and we are surely right in believing that "Daniel's band" received a large accession as one result of this intensely interesting and memorable service.

The afternoon service for women was by far the largest of any that has been held in London for that class. Every seat in the building was occupied and numbers stood in the further passages. As an aged man of God on the platform said, the sight was simply overwhelming, and, he added, "What shall the sight at the judgment be?" Fifteen thousand of the mothers and daughters of London, with one accord, in one place, to hear "The Gospel!" That was Mr. Moody's subject, and as he told out in glowing words, and with heart and tongue on fire, of the Saviour's unfeeling power to heal broken hearts, to set the devil's captives free, and to bring peace to the troubled spirit, it was once more abundantly clear that the truth struck home and we believe proved to be the power of God unto salvation. As usual, Mr. Moody called upon all who requested prayer on their behalf to rise, and countless numbers of women in all parts of the audience stood upon their feet. The afternoon was far spent before Mr. Moody and some of his untiring assistants were able to dismiss the inquirers to their homes, we trust taking with them a new-born love to Christ, the anointed One, and faith in his power to save to the uttermost.

Last week we referred to Mr. Sankey's singing of "Knocking, knocking," and the same terms might be used to describe its effect on this occasion.

The evening hour brought with it another "wondrous gathering" of men, to whom Mr. Moody re-delivered "the gospel" message, in terms nearly similar to the afternoon address, and with marked tokens of success.

At this service, Mr. Sankey sang that most touching, perhaps, of all the hymns in the collection, "Oh, Christ, what burdens bowed Thy head!" It is almost inconceivable that any one in the audience, whose conscience was not altogether asleep, could have listened to the recital of Christ's woes, told out in tones of passionate feeling by the singer, and yet remain unmoved.

Altogether, the last Sunday's meetings, to be conducted personally in the Agricultural Hall by the evangelists, were a fitting rebuke to those time-serving writers of the secular press who have asserted that the movement has gone into decline.

After this week, Messrs. Moody and Sankey will remove to the New Tabernacle in the East-end, which is now almost ready for occupation; but Mr. Moody announced that the services would be continued in the Agricultural Hall throughout the month of April. He appealed to the ministers and Christians in the locality to support them, and hoped the month of April would be a better one than that which had gone before.

PICKET WORK

AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

This work deepens in interest, and so many are now told off for it that it rejoices old hands to see them taking to it, and finding their work and joy in it.

Nicodemus came by night, and but for that visit, though it was under the shelter of darkness, we should not have had the third of John, and many like him, who will not now pronounce, may yet, as he did, come forth in the dark and cloudy day, when others, who are foremost now, may hang down their hands.

A gentleman made the following statement:—"I have not Christ, either by profession or possession. I admire the character given of Him, but I see so many who profess lead such inconsistent lives, that I cannot come to Him and live so." We urged on him the necessity of coming in order to have genuine coin, as counterfeit coin impoverished the King's treasury, and pointed out the possibility of a deeper objection lying hid away from present view—"The carnal mind, which is enmity against God." He admitted it might be so, and left the hall, promising when he got to his home in the country to consider the matter.

A widow lady in deep anxiety, with another younger, were walking about. They could not speak out. We spoke to them of the name "Jesus," and what it cost the Father to give Him the name. We asked the widow lady if she remembered the trouble it was to her when her children had to get a name. On both sides of the house names were to be found that had a claim; but here was God giving his Son a name which involved, from the manger to the grave, a life of sorrow, shame, suffering, and at last death; and truly such a name was a refuge and a tower of strength. They were both deeply touched by the thought of God giving this name to his Son in order to reach them.

There are many met with outside who have a Christ in the Collect, and in the morality and integrity of their life and the approval of their minister, and when they are disturbed by rousing and burning words, they are very uneasy. One of these interested us much. He said, "Mr. Moody tells us to take Christ, same as I would ask my child to take a piece of pudding." It puzzles them sorely, the free and abounding offer of Christ in the gospel. We pressed the acceptance of that offer, on the authority of God's word, and the terrible alternative, if the offer was rejected, of making "God a liar."

May the blessed Comforter anoint all workers, so that those even at the skirts may get the precious oil. O.Y.

FACTS AND INCIDENTS.

How many souls not far from the kingdom are there in every congregation met in the Lord's name? The Lord knows if we do not, but every disciple may, on every occasion, ask the Master to introduce him to, at least, one such.

At one of the noon-day meetings at Exeter Hall, a middle-aged woman sat next me, and whilst singing the hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," I whispered, "Are you safe in the arms of Jesus?" No sooner were the words uttered than down came the tears, and before the meeting had begun she had accepted the gracious gift, and returned thanks to Him. At the close of the same meeting the Lord introduced me to an elderly woman, whom He likewise set at liberty.

On another occasion, seated next me, was a man about thirty-five; paid marked attention during the meeting, could not say he was born again—a helping hand, the Lord standing by, and he passed in. One of the stewards, meanwhile, was speaking to another man, his duties prevented him from following up this case; I therefore walked with him a little way, and he passed, as I believe, from death unto life. On another occasion two little boys, apparently about the age of twelve and nine, were seated next me; inquiring of the eldest if he had given his heart to Jesus, he replied he didn't know. The meeting over I spoke to him of Jesus, with illustrations suited to his capacity, and he embraced Him as his Saviour, but in the midst of his giving thanks he burst into a flood of tears: his younger brother, who also confessed the Lord, was broken down likewise. Instead of the mother being glad, she appeared to be displeased; I rejoiced to know that the unbelief of a parent in this respect cannot make void the faith of the child. In contrast to this, at the inquiry-meeting at the Agricultural Hall, a Christian man brought his little boy, age about nine, and asked me to speak to him.

One interesting case at the Agricultural Hall was that of a sailor, age about eighteen; had run away from home, knew not if his parents were dead or living, thought himself too great a sinner to expect forgiveness, but 1 Tim. i. 13—16, applied by the Spirit, set him at liberty. This took place in the hall after the inquirers had adjourned. He was to sail for Brisbane three days after. Another case was that of an elderly woman of the "hoping sort." Putting the gospel before her as a gift to be definitely accepted or rejected, possessed or not possessed, she was led to accept it, and found rest, after (as she subsequently told me) forty years' vain endeavour.

Another case was that of an aged woman about seventy, in the inquiry-room, crying like a child, and brought to me by a convert a week old. She said she believed Jesus died for her, but did not feel happy. I said, "There is one thing you have omitted to do, and that is, to thank Him for his unspeakable gift." The old lady did so, the spell was broken, and peace was given her.

Another case was that of a sailor, age about twenty-two, brought to the hall by his mother. He had intended spending that evening at a public-house in Ratcliff Highway, and from thence to a dance. Impressed with the address, he was taken to the inquiry-room by his mother, fully prepared to receive the truth. I saw him the next day, he had of his own accord signed the pledge. Told the captain what had happened, who thereupon said, "If you conduct yourself well during the voyage" (to Melbourne, for which he set sail the next day) "I'll make you third mate." The crew, he told me, numbered over thirty, not one of whom was on the Lord's side. On our parting, to use his own words, he said, "I feel as though I had had on a heavy suit of clothes and heavy boots, but have took them all off, and put on light ones." C.

Many persons have written or spoken of the personal effort they have been enabled to put forth for the Master, in answer to Mr. Moody's appeal on the morning of Sunday week. The following, from a worker, tells its own story:—

"I am one of those who stood up last Sunday morning, in answer to Mr. Moody's appeal for Christians to try and win a soul for Christ each day last week. By the grace of God, I have been enabled to speak to thirty-one persons, and have every reason to believe that eight of these have been led to Christ. To his name be the glory!

"One night, I had not spoken to anyone all day. I was seek-

"By some one in the street, and, while praying for direction, a beggar woman came and spoke to me, attracted by my Bible, as she told me afterwards. She did not beg, and I was able to clear her mind of all doubts, I trust. I called on her afterwards, in a cellar, and found her husband, seventy-three years old, talked and prayed with him; but he said he could not and would not decide till Wednesday. I ask prayer, that he may decide long before, and that he may be spared till he does."

At one of the Noon Meetings Mr. Moody said: I have here a letter I should like to read. No doubt many people might have taken friends to the hall, anxious that they might be blessed, and their friends have gone away disappointed. I have received this letter to-day from a man in Liverpool, and it will explain itself:—

"Sir,—I was led by idle curiosity to attend one of your services in Victoria Hall. When I returned home, my wife inquired how I liked the service. I told her I was sadly disappointed, and said I should never return again to hear you. My wife was grieved to hear my report of the sermon, as she had expressed a desire to hear you. On the Monday I reported to my shopmates, which prevented many from hearing you that week. On the Sunday evening following I was impelled by a strange uneasiness I could neither understand nor control ['Thank God,' said Mr. Moody, 'for prayer; some one was praying for that man'] to pay another visit to Victoria Hall. Oh, sir, that evening I shall never forget! The emotional element of my inner man was aroused. If angels in heaven rejoice over one sinner that repents, my two children in heaven would rejoice over their father at the close of that sermon. You asked all those who desired to become Christians to stand up; I was one of the first to stand up in the presence of ten thousand men. Afterwards I went into the inquiry-room. I was spoken to by a Christian person, who directed me to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and my sins would be forgiven. I had heard the same old old story for years, but yet I was not saved. At this point, sir, you entered the inquiry-room, and told us to change the word 'faith,' and substitute instead the word 'trust' in Christ. I left that meeting impressed with solemn thoughts, but yet with my sins on me. I returned home, and my wife was anxious to hear my report of my second visit. I told her that my prejudice was all removed, and it was a glorious meeting, and that she might arrange to go and hear you often, which she did, and is now rejoicing in Christ. I retired earlier than usual to rest that night, to engage in private prayer with Jesus, which I had not done for years. My youngest boy of eleven years stole quietly into my room, and knelt beside my bed. He would often get his arms round my neck, and ask me to pray. The following morning, at breakfast, the boy told his mother he was glad God had sent Mr. Sankey and yourself to Liverpool, because they had taught his father to pray. 'He was praying last night,' said the boy. Sir, imagine my feelings when I was told this. On the Monday I advised all my shopmates to go and hear you, which they did. I have been greatly blessed under the ministrations of Mr. Sawday. I have been led to abandon the belief that there is no eternal punishment. Sir, men's minds, talents, and money have been expended in endeavouring to remove a great moral evil—strong drink; but if such talents were directed against a greater sin, if all would accept of God's act of mercy in giving his Son Jesus Christ to die for our sins, we would require no Act of Parliament to stop drinking. Since I have found Christ, I have not entered the public-house ['Thank God for that! I hope the young converts will keep out of the public-houses; I cannot help thinking they are the gate of hell'], nor tasted alcoholic liquor ['That's better yet']. I cannot enter the public-house, and take Christ with me. I pray for you, and desire your prayers, and the prayers of your congregations."

LETTERS FROM CHILDREN.

As an instance of the almost innumerable ways in which the influences of the present movement are being ramified throughout society, we quote one or two extracts from the letter of a very young lady of twelve or thirteen, written from school, the other day, to her mother:—

"We are requested to write on Wednesdays on any subject we may think proper, so I chose for mine, 'The universal fame of the great revivalists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey.' Miss I—reads to us of the great meetings held at the Agricultural and Exeter Halls. I truly believe that ere long the inhabitants of our far-famed and mighty London will become really Christian; many who have lived in darkness until now have received a new light, and know what it is really to live.

"Some people say that the great congregation is gathered for the purpose of hearing Mr. Sankey sing. I can assure you it is not on this account, as when Mr. Moody was detained elsewhere the hall was only half filled, which proves that the people go for the purpose of hearing the word of God, and not alone to hear the singing of Mr. Sankey.

"The work, in my idea, bears some analogy to the preaching of Paul in Athens, only that the latter, I was going to observe, laboured in the midst of a more hard-hearted people; this, however, is a question. You must agree with me, dear mother, in saying that those who inhabit the low streets and neighbourhoods of London and other large towns, require as much missionary work amongst them as do the savages in Africa, Asia, &c.

"Surely these two great evangelists, and others like them, are worthy of interment in our great Abbey; when generation and generation shall have passed away, may their names be revered and loved. I fancy I hear you saying, 'My little Emily has Moody and Sankey on the brain.' Well, perhaps I have, for I am in raptures with their hymns, and will not be contented until I go to the great meeting and judge for myself of the work these men, with the assistance of the Divine Spirit, are doing towards the extension of God's kingdom."

Since she wrote the foregoing, "Little Emily" has been to the great meeting, and her next letter to her parents will, we are sure, be in warmer terms than this. In how many varied ways is the good seed being scattered abroad! May we not expect God to bless such a letter, written in simple faith by one so young, and likely to fall into the hands of many friends who "care for none of these things."

The following letter, read by Mr. Moody at Exeter Hall, and by a still younger writer, is very touching:—

"I want to know if you will be so kind, at your prayer-meeting, as to pray for my dearest mamma, who is ill in London, that God may be pleased to make her better again, for I do love her so. I have no father, for he died when I was born. I am seven years old. Mamma is a real Christian, and has taught me to love Jesus. I like your hymns very much, and am learning the ones that are easy. Some of them seem made for children like me. I remain, your little friend," etc.

MONDAY'S NOON MEETING

was devoted, as usual, to reports. Mr. Moody read the story of the leper who was cured and returned to give thanks. He was thinking yesterday, he said, of the great cause they had to praise God for what He had done in the month of March. Yesterday (Sunday) was, he thought, the most remarkable day of his life—there were thousands inquiring the way of life. He mentioned one case of a lady whom he spoke to in the afternoon, down in the body of the hall. He asked if she was a child of God? With tears in her eyes she said, "No, but I would like to be." He talked to her with others, and afterwards went to the inquiry-room and spoke to about 200 together. As they passed out he saw the lady weeping, and asked what hindered her from taking Christ. She replied, "I have; when we were on our knees, light burst into my soul, I am crying for joy." She then spoke of her father and two brothers who were unaved, and said she was going home to pray for them while they attended the meeting in the evening.

Mr. Sankey also told of the good cheer he had met with in the inquiry-room, in talking to about 35 men, business men, aged men, young men and boys. He urged the Christians who were in doubt and fears to engage in the work, and their hearts would be made glad.

Mr. Sands gave a striking instance of a young lady whom he had met lately at the meeting. She knew God's Word thoroughly, and was the child of Christian parents, but did not feel. Mr. Sands drew her attention to John v. 24: "Whosoever heareth and believeth, etc., hath everlasting life." As the light dawned on her mind she said, "My father never told me that." She trusted in spite of her want of feeling, and was now a rejoicing Christian.

Rev. S. Harring related many interesting cases, one of which was remarkable. A young man went to the hall with a companion, intending to write the bitterest and cruellest articles against Messrs. Moody and Sankey. In a short time Mr. Sankey's song touched his heart, and the preaching moved him still further, so that when going out he said, "Do you think this right hand dare write anything against these two holy men? No! If it writes anything it will be to bless them and their work."

Mr. A. O. Charles recited quite a string of cases of conversion, told at a prayer-meeting lately held by the stewards of the hall, many of them resulting through Mr. Sankey's songs. In one case, a gentleman of fashion and leader of society in his country home, was induced to go to the meetings, and the result of several conversations was that he went to the country for his Easter holidays, as he said, "to be the leader of a very different society to that in which he had hitherto moved."

An old man in the body of the hall said he had been in London about 50 years, and had seen all kinds of crowds, but none so patient and orderly as those that nightly attended the Agricultural Hall. On Sunday morning he was in the crowd waiting for the doors to be opened, and though they got wet outside with the rain, they did not mind it, as they knew they would get a better kind of shower inside the hall. He had got so warmed up at the meetings yesterday, he was hardly cooled down yet.

Another speaker in the hall, told how some of his friends, when standing outside waiting for admission, conversed with an old gentleman who said, "I am going inside, but I do not believe in any God, or devil, in heaven or hell, or the soul. How old do you think I am?" They thought he might be 70. "I am 81." He had not been long listening to the gospel before he began to weep like a child. He said to these friends at the close, "Are you going home?" "Yes, we must go as we live at Kingston." He said, "I am not: I never heard anything like this, or felt like this. I must go into the inquiry-room." Further than that, added the speaker, I know not, but surely that was a great thing to praise God for.

This very cheering hour was closed with "Hold the Fort" and the benediction.

On and after Monday next, 12th inst., the noon prayer-meeting will be removed from Exeter Hall to Her Majesty's Theatre, at the foot of the Haymarket. For other arrangements respecting Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings see "Forthcoming Meetings."

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

LONDON.

As it is expected that Messrs. Moody and Sankey will commence labouring next Sunday (April 11) in the East-end, may I request special prayer for them in connection with the East, and not for them only, but for the many earnest ministers there.

The visitors connected with the house-to-house visitation of London will also now naturally be specially active in the East, and prayer is earnestly desired for them; but only for them as part of the 'great army of city missionaries, Bible-women, visitors, and other labourers there. Let us all seek our brothers' weal, and have a general advance with thorough one-heart accord in the East, in the West, and all over London.

There has been great blessing in the North and in the South. One of the superintendents sends some striking facts, and says:—"Oh for more tongues, hands, feet, hearts, and souls to go forth in this mighty victory to gather in the spoil."

COUNTRY TOWNS.

Since the appeal, "Lend a Hand," in THE CHRISTIAN of 25th March, and "Mr. Moody's call for a thousand hands" in the number of April 1, I am glad to say the applications for his leaflet, and for hints as to commencing the visitation in towns and villages, have been very many. They have come from England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. They are full of cheer, but so numerous, and likely to be so, that I must—in justice to London, the visitation of which cannot be relaxed, and in order, too, that all parts of the country may readily be supplied—request friends in the country hereafter either to order direct of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, or to order of them through any bookseller, as indicated in a footnote which is appended to this.* I have asked them, in sending out the leaflet, to enclose also a copy of the printed instructions for superintendents and visitors, which have been used in London.

If any friends in the country should think they stand in need of further hints from us, we shall have pleasure in either replying by post, or by a general word in THE CHRISTIAN. I would ask that any such questions may be as pointed as possible.

* The London leaflet may be obtained from Morgan and Scott, 13, Paternoster-buildings, direct, for 7s. 6d. per 1000, or by post, paid, 9s. per 1000; or the leaflet may be ordered through any bookseller, at 7s. 6d. per 1000. If a less number is desired, 500 can be had for 3s. 9d., or post-paid for 4s. 6d. But sample packets, containing several copies, may be had for two stamps, and, except in the case of these sample packets, no smaller number than 500 will be sold. The price previously named for these leaflets was the bare cost paid by the Committee for paper and printing. The price now named of 7s. 6d. as the rate per 1000 is to cover all the labour and expenses of despatch, and to allow also of their being sold by booksellers throughout the country.

SOUTH WALES.—Blessing has come to souls in trouble through the strike. The presence of God overshadowed us while we read to fifty poor women part of 2 Kings vi., vii. The tears ran down their faces while we explained to them that it was the love of God in Christ that had opened kind hearts to send them help. We are getting hold of the outside neglected classes, I ask an interest in the prayers of all sympathizing friends, for wisdom to win souls for Jesus. K. W.

CURRAGH CAMP.—As the place at Major Manning's, at the Curragh Camp, which has been the birthplace of so many soldiers during last summer and until a few weeks ago, has been closed, we purpose (God willing) to rent the Courthouse in Newbridge, or some other large room, where the gospel can be preached during the summer. Any of the Lord's children, or any evangelist wishing to visit Newbridge or the Curragh (or to share in the expenses which will be incurred), are earnestly invited to communicate with Major Manning, Control Quarters, Curragh Camp; or M. Hewitt, Newbridge, County Kildare, Ireland.

SPAIN.—We regret to say that, owing to severe and continuous suffering for some months past, Mr. Faithfull has been obliged to leave the sphere of his labours in Madrid, and seek entire rest and quiet in his own land. He, with his wife and three children, arrived in England on Jan. 28th last. He is now, we are thankful to say, somewhat better, and expects to be going shortly to Leominster, Barnstaple, and other places, as strength may be given, and the Lord may guide him. His mission in Chambers and other places is kindly cared for in his absence by our dear brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Penn. Letters may always be addressed to the care of E. W. Faithfull, Esq., Hoptonlands, Winchester.

STUDLEY, WARWICKSHIRE.—The feeling of most of the Christian people in this large village just now is, "Oh magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together!" Since the beginning of the present year, united prayer-meetings have been held week by week in the Wesleyan and Baptist Chapels alternately, the ministers presiding. A spirit of earnest, believing prayer was given, and great desire was felt for a thorough revival. A young gentleman, who was visiting in the neighbourhood, suggested daily prayer-meetings on neutral ground, and an application to the Evangelization Society, 57, Charing-cross, for an evangelist to conduct a series of special services. A local committee was formed, consisting of Churchmen and Nonconformists, arrangements were made, and the Society sent Mr. John Wood, who has preached twice daily, with great power, to crowded audiences, in the Assembly-rooms, and with such a measure of success as never was witnessed in Studley before. More than eighty anxious souls have stayed to the inquirers' meetings, many of whom, we trust, have "passed from death unto life." "What hath God wrought!" To Him be all the praise, for we are alike unworthy of the blessing, the honour, or the joy.

THE WORK IN LIVERPOOL.

The wave of blessing still rolls on here, "full and free as a river." Many rills from many sources flow into it. Men and women, boys and girls, nightly come to "drink and live." They persuade their companions and fellow-workmen to accompany them where they got their new-found peace and joy, and in not a few instances these also find them at the Fountain of Life.

The nightly meeting of young men at Newsome's Circus becomes more and more a sweet refreshment, and solace after the toils of the day—an oasis in the desert of hard work and earthly selfishness—a wayside house, where, in love and brotherhood, the children meet, on their road to the Father's home—a rallying-point for comrades, "by his grace" to "hold the fort," and cheer each other on to Immanuel's land—a training-ground, where babes in Christ first feel their feet, and lift their voices in their great Redeemer's praise—and where they find encouragement and sympathy in maintaining a good profession of faith in the rough outside world of labour. There, in love and equality, in fellowship and courtesy to one another, and in humble, childlike dependence upon God, earnest yet joyous young men and lads, lately so rough and worldly, now so changed, congregate night after night, sometimes bringing an anxious companion with them, ever ready to welcome those who do, to confess Christ openly, and declare themselves his for ever—to sing, his praises with such deep, concentrated feeling, that these songs of joy are the most beautiful music we ever heard—to join with one heart in prayer for needed blessing—to thank God for mercy to others, as if bestowed on themselves, and to listen with grateful hearts to every warning or direction given.

The chairman of these deeply-interesting meetings, which number on an average 1400 nightly, has been Mr. Henry Drummond, so well known wherever Mr. Moody has laboured, and whose gentleness is only surpassed by the earnestness with which he carries out and controls this most successful service of grace. Individually we grieve much that the greater needs of the youth of London have called him for duty there; but we have no fear for the Mission itself, for it is of the Lord, and He will provide a leader to carry on his own blessed work.

On Easter Monday Mr. Moody paid us a visit for the purpose of meeting once more the young converts. Upwards of 2000 obtained tickets, most of whom were conversed with before the tickets were granted. The remembrance of this delightful visit still continues. Mr. Moody is with you in body, but we have him in our minds, and carry him and London on our hearts to the throne of grace. His burning words, which read so frigidly in the newspapers, are ringing in our ears. Our opinion is of the strongest that the mighty power of God will yet be felt through his instrumentality from one end of London to another. How pleasant it would be to all her devoted subjects who are in Christ if our beloved Queen should have the privilege of hearing him!

The Rev. W. Taylor, of California, who is now with us, and preaches nightly to thousands in the Victoria Hall, is a different man from Mr. Moody. While the latter made his own name and mark in the land last year, as he went through it like the fiery column, Mr. Taylor's reputation preceded him, and we have heard for years of his success as an evangelist and missionary from Polynesia, India, and the Western States. We do not doubt or wonder at the great good he has accomplished, under God, in these countries. His appearance, manner, and bearing, stamp him as a born pioneer of truth. That he should carry his standard into the darkest places of earth unflinchingly, and "dare to be a Daniel," in its worst places of horrid cruelty, is no more than we should expect of him; and though coming immediately after Mr. Moody, the difference in their respective styles may be too apparent, yet we are sure that no Christian will fail in affectionately regarding one who has reached and been blessed even to savages living beyond the joyful sound of salvation.

A large gathering of young men crowded St. James's Hall on Sabbath afternoon, 4th April, at 3 p.m., to hear the beloved Henry Drummond give his farewell address, preparatory to leaving for London next day. The large building was filled to the door, and numbers thronged the passages, and stood on the platform all round the speaker. The service was very solemn, and tears stood in eyes unacquainted with softness. Mr. Drummond spoke on the text, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and struck home with great power and earnestness, yet with winning gentleness. A deep impression seems to be made.

At 4.30 p.m., Mr. Drummond inaugurated in the Circus a new movement which, under God, is calculated to be of immense importance here. A meeting of Christian working-men in their every-day clothes took place, and the attendance was encouraging for a beginning. What grand results are not in store for this crowded hive of bees, if Christian workmen unite, and shoulder to shoulder go forth to carry Liverpool for Christ!

At 9 p.m. our brother again, and for the last time, presided over his favourite gathering of lads and boys, who meet nightly at the Circus, and it was a great trial for him, as well as sorrow to those whom he has benefited so much, and worked so hard to rescue. We join in casting him on the loving Father, and we trust that his lines in London will be laid among young men there, capable of appreciating him half as highly as we do.

ANSWERED PRAYER.

A MISSION WEEK IN KENT.

The past month has been rich in blessing in many places where special services have been held. The death-like slumber which prevailed has been disturbed; the Lord having sent showers of grace upon his servants, they pass, through their instrumentality, to thirsty souls brought within their influence.

A few weeks since, some Christian friends agreed to meet in spirit daily to seek for a blessing on a country town where much indifference prevailed; the young people there were made special subjects of prayer. Mr. Denham Smith held several services, and it was a delightful sight to see ministers of different names uniting in brotherly love to further the spread of the gospel. As the meetings were held at different places in the neighbourhood, it is difficult to judge of results, but "the day will declare it." Those who had previously professed themselves believers, were bowed down under a sense of sin, quickened souls were revived and established, and a blessed work in the salvation of souls was vouchsafed of God. Many advanced in life testified to the blessing received, but chiefly young people had the joy of finding "a present salvation."

One child says, "I know Jesus as my own Saviour now." A young boy exclaims, "I have found my mother's God now. I too am saved." A Sunday-scholar, "My teacher's prayers are being answered for me." A girl in a Bible-class, "I do love Jesus; He is my Saviour. I see it clearly now. I must give up doing, and trust only in Jesus. I feel I am saved through the death of the dear Saviour."

Two servants were brought under conviction of sin at the meeting, and found peace whilst about their daily work. The son of a devoted minister found his father's God at these meetings, and many young men were roused to greater earnestness in speaking for Jesus. A young girl, writing to a friend, says, "My heart was so hard towards Jesus, but He broke it at the first meeting, and He gave me faith to accept Him as my Saviour." Another testifies, "My sins have been such a burden; now my heart is relieved: Jesus has forgiven even me; I do believe it; I will believe it." A little motherless child, "Through God's grace I can say I am saved; Jesus is mine; what can I do for Him? oh! He is so precious." One who had often heard the truth, said, "Before last night I could not say I was a Christian; at the meeting it was all made clear; I had not taken God at his word; now I see the way, even Jesus, and I ac-saved. How could I have lived so long without Him?" "How different," said another, "since these meetings! Now I can truly say, Jesus is mine; my sins are nailed on the cross. Two years since I was impressed; but, alas! I again became careless; I mixed with worldly companions, who laughed at my seriousness, and in a little time I was more giddy than ever." May these "babes in Christ" be fed with "the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby!"

Gen. xviii. 17—19 stamps Christian training with divine approval; let parents go on seeking wisdom from above, and the Lord by his Spirit will bless them. There must be sowing before reaping. What harmony between the eternal, divine purpose, and prevailing prayer! May this record stimulate all engaged in Christian labour to go on lifting up Jesus only!

P.S. Mr. Denham Smith has been preaching in the Woolmer Forest this last week. Every service souls professed to have found the Saviour. Many were under divine awakening. One remarkable case may be noted. At an after-meeting a young wife was found weeping under a sense of her sins. Outside her husband was found doing the same, quite ignorant of each others' state of mind. He was invited in, when the first thing he saw was his wife rejoicing in her newly-found peace. Both are now rejoicing in the Saviour. Surely a time of blessing is passing over the land.

"ONE SOWETH, AND ANOTHER REAPETH."

The gospel preached by Mr. Moody and sung by Mr. Sankey is listened to with an eager interest, and a grave and earnest attention; while the results, seen in the inquiry-rooms, and other parts of the city, as well as of the provinces, prove that the power of the Lord is indeed present to heal. "Pray ye that the Lord of the harvest may send labourers into his harvest." In this great field, labourers for every division of Christian work are needed—those who can speak, or pray, or attract by the power of song, or give their means to the work—those who can fill the blessed position indicated by St. Paul, in 1 Cor. xii. 8, as "helps." For this humble but deeply important sphere of labour may we not enroll a vast multitude of those who diffidently say, "We have no special gifts"? Will you not throw your efforts into the helping channel, and so cement with a brotherly and sisterly warmth of love this vast fabric now rising day by day before our eyes, even the spiritual temple of our God? Hands and hearts are needed—willing hands and earnest hearts; and God will bless even more abundantly the re-dedication of life, and time, and power, feeble and poor though it may seem, to Himself, who gave all for us. Our little life was his gift; shall we not give it back to Him?

At the daily prayer-meeting on Monday we heard wondrous tales of God's mighty work in London—yes, and in the provinces too; for, blessed be the name of our great Giver, while He supplies one, He need not stint another! No; the storehouse is always full. The "cruse of oil," and the "barrel of meal," for the sustenance of his little ones, are never empty.

Happy is the lot of the store-carrier—of the one who carries the seed-bag, and drops the precious grain, even by the wayside!

IN A LOVELY DISTRICT OF SURREY, not many weeks ago, a few poor mothers were gathered into a village schoolroom, one wintry afternoon, to hear the tidings of a Saviour's love. Many miles round the little hamlets and wayside cottages they were scattered, whence had been invited to the place of meeting. In spite of the rain and mist which had collected over the hills, at the appointed hour the little room was quite full, and the Lord was indeed in our midst. The message was given, and the little party separated. Except an occasional line from the devoted wife of their pastor, in which no special results of the meeting were alluded to, nothing was heard of the poor mothers who had braved the storm, and then lent so attentive an ear to the story told, till a few days ago, when a young man, traveller for a draper in the little neighbouring town, was driving his chaise over the same rocky road that passes the little schoolhouse. At some distance from any habitation, he passed a little girl, carrying a bundle, and kindly offered her a seat beside him. As they drove along, he took from his pocket the little blue hymn-book, now so well known by every Christian heart; and he said to the little girl, "Will you read me the 25th hymn?"

"And the little dear read it right through," he said afterwards, in telling us the story.

A few earnest words followed, in which the young man spoke to the child of Jesus, that best theme for human hearts.

"Oh, sir," responded the little listener, "mother lives just here; there's our cottage. She has always been talking of the Bible ever since, one afternoon, she went to a mothers'-meeting at C—. Do come in and see her."

Springing from the chaise, she now ran into the house, to tell her mother a visitor had come, who could "tell her about the Bible."

The stranger received a warm welcome. The horse was soon fastened to the gate, and the young man was comfortably seated by the cottage fireside; and then was opened to him a tale of sorrow. A poor heart-stricken woman, a heart it was bowed down with a load of sin—a load, she told him, freshly gathered that afternoon on the hill-side at the mothers'-meeting. "I can get no peace," she said, "and there are many more like me."

"Now," said the young man, "I have heard that same message, and it has been of use to many; but I'll tell you how it is of use to us. We just 'believe and receive.' She can only give the message; we must take it; and then we are so happy."

While the young man refreshed himself with the cup of tea provided, he opened to the poor woman the gospel plan—a present salvation, mercy and love in Jesus.

Thus, beloved friends, "one soweth, and another reapeth." But let us all labour; He "giveth the increase."

DEPTFORD GOSPEL MISSION.

In continuation of the services held in the Tent during the summer, and in the Theatre during the last six months, and as an inauguration of the permanent work now undertaken in Greenwich by the above Mission, two all-day Conferences of Christians were held, on Wednesday and Thursday last, in the large Lecture-hall, Royal-hill. The mornings were occupied in praise and prayer, many deeply-interesting requests having been sent in from various parts of the country.

On the first morning, Mr. Angel read 2 Chron. xiv. 9—15; Ezek. xxxvii. 1—10; Acts vi. 1—8; and Captain Liebenrood spoke on definiteness in prayer; and on Thursday morning Mr. Fegan read Mark ii. 1—12, as bringing out some important elements of success in Christian work. On Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Dudgeon spoke on Rom. vi., and Mr. G. A. Macnutt, on "The Evidences of True Conversion, as shown in 1 Thess. i." At the evening gathering, Mr. J. E. Hawkins dwelt on the believer's oneness with Christ in four aspects—Life, Love, Testimony, Glory (John xv.); and Mr. C. E. Harditch with much power on Eph. iii. 15, 21.

On Thursday afternoon, Mr. H. W. Taylor spoke on Solomon's desire for "an understanding" (marginal reading, "hearing") heart, in 1 Kings iii. 3, 14; and was followed by Mr. Bland (of Derryquin), who read to the end of the same chapter, connecting it with Exod. xxxii. 28—29 and Heb. iv. 12, on which a very solemn message was based, some Christians impenetrable to "the sword of the Spirit" being compared to tortoises, and the difference between our trying to find out things in the Word, and the Word finding us out—our mastering the truth, and our letting the truth master us, being very powerfully brought out. In the evening, when there was a most encouragingly large attendance, Mr. Macnutt spoke searchingly on the clean and unclean animals in Leviticus xi.; and Mr. H. W. Taylor, on Psalm cxiv.—a most establishing word, fitly bringing to a conclusion meetings, the result of which will be found, we trust, in abundant fruit unto holiness and in mighty blessing to the town of Greenwich, and especially to this newly-established evangelistic effort.

MISSION AT SITTINGBOURNE.—An eight days' Mission has been held at Sittingbourne, and the adjacent villages of Murston and Milton. The Rev. J. E. D. Colston, of Liverpool, was the Mission-preacher, and was largely blessed to the congregations at St. Michael's. A weekly prayer-meeting, as well as a Bible-class, have been started, and new vigour is manifested in the spiritual life of believers. At Murston the Rev. E. Clark undertook the work, and was assisted by H. Jenks, Esq., of Deptford. Three services were held for children, and the sick among the parishioners visited. The Rev. Mr. Tindall, of Margate, was the labourer chosen for Holy Trinity, and rich blessing followed his services, both in the church, and in the factories and tanyard where he preached. Both here and at Milton non-church-goers have been induced to attend in large numbers, and a spirit of inquiry and seeking after God aroused amongst the most careless.

LORD RADSTOCK IN RUSSIA.

There is a cry of need coming up from the Christians in Belgium, and the pastors and evangelists from the provinces meet together here, on March 29 and 30, for a Conference. I propose (D.V.) to leave for Berlin and St. Petersburg on March 30, which I hope to reach on April 3. Will you pray that the Christians may be specially revived and strengthened, and that many unsaved may be brought to Christ, and that, by the prayers of the Lord's saints, I may receive power from on high, so that I may minister out of the fulness of Christ ministered to my own soul? Also that my body may be strengthened against the climate.

"STREAMS IN THE SOUTH."

Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord have at last dawned upon us. Everywhere there are signs of aroused activity and increased earnestness. A spirit of prayer is visiting the churches, and its paths are dropping fatness. So signal and surprising is the present awakening, that we are like men that dream a pleasant dream. "Now is our month filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." As streams in the south, after mighty rains of refreshing, return to their deserted channels, so, in numbers of towns and villages around us, once almost destitute of power and life, there is a river of salvation, the waters of which make glad the city of our God.

I have recently returned from a five weeks' evangelistic tour in Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, a brief report of which I send you, in order to draw forth the praises and prayers of your numerous readers on behalf of the work and workers in these different towns.

The first place I was invited to visit (with Dr. Mackay, of Hull) was TORQUAY.

A week of special evangelistic services had been arranged to be held in nearly all the churches and chapels in the town, from February 1 to 8, preceded by several months of united, believing prayer. Bills were in most of the shop-windows, announcing the fact that, at seven o'clock, business would be suspended, to give an opportunity for the employers and assistants to attend the meetings. Other bills were also to be seen, kindly requesting the inhabitants not to engage any cabs or midgets for the Wednesday evening, so that the drivers might have an opportunity of being present.

There were three and four services held each day, most of them being crowded to excess. The mighty power of God was manifested. In addition to the many interesting cases of conversion that took place, the children of God were greatly revived, quickened, and encouraged.

We held the services in Upton-vale Baptist Chapel, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Abbey-road Congregational Church, and Torr-hill Chapel, the pastor of each throwing his whole heart, sympathy, and interest into the work. The general feeling in the town was apparent as one and another were heard exclaiming, "We never saw it in this fashion." We next visited where Dr. Mackay preached on the Monday evening in the Presbyterian Church. It was a most instructive and edifying season, his subject being, "The Name of God." Many regretted his stay was so short, as he had to leave for Hull the following morning.

On Tuesday a few Aarons and Huns gathered for prayer at the Gospel-hall, from twelve to one; and in the evening I gave my address on "Bells and Pomegranates," with illustrations, at the Mechanics' Institute. The sight of so many hundreds of well-known faces, numbers of whom were my own children in the gospel, revived old associations. Many who felt the word with power remained to the after-meeting, for conversation and prayer, which was brought to a close with difficulty about ten o'clock, by a song of thanksgiving and praise. My steps were next directed to where, two years previously, my leg had been broken. I preached in the Alexandra Hall and the Baptist Chapel, each building being very full; and, better still, many hearts were filled with the love, the spirit, and the truth of Christ. Ebenezer-house, Dalrymple-road, Bristol. J. A. VICARY.

[Notice of the visits to other towns will be given in our next.]

THE FLOWER MISSION.

We need 50,000 text flower-holders, written in clear hand, on stiff paper or card (old visiting cards do well for this purpose). One hospital alone takes up 500 weekly. We shall be glad of a few hundred text-holders, written in French, German, or Italian. Who will help? A pattern flower-holder will be sent on application to the secretary at either of the depots, Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Spitalfields, or Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

In the hospital a nurse told how one day, feeling very tired and downcast, she went up to a patient's bed, and her eye fell on the text which surrounded the flowers, "Be not weary in well-doing," etc. It was God's message to her soul, and as a cup of cold water refreshed her, to go on in her arduous work for the Master's sake.

In the back courts of Spitalfields an ever-increasing crowd of the lowest persons followed the flower-basket. It was wonderful to look up from the pure flowers into the terribly sin-stricken faces pressing eagerly round and pleading for a flower. The contrast was so painful, and yet the hope so strong, of what God's silent missionaries should effect. A policeman stood silently by, gazing in amazement at the scene. Suddenly a woman's voice was heard, and a poor lost girl edged her way through the crowd, and, pointing to the text round her violets, said, I can read this—"I am He that comforteth you;" and, bursting into tears, exclaimed, "Oh, I need that!"

It would save us much time and labour if the friends who send flowers would kindly tie them up in tiny bunches of not more than six or eight flowers and a few leaves; and will they send a post-card, telling us on which day we may expect their contributions? Our warm thanks to the friends, especially little children, who have sent us flowers without name or address, and to whom, therefore, we could not write.

We shall be happy to supply Christian workers amongst the sick poor with flowers, if they will call at the depots, either on Tuesday or Thursday mornings, between twelve and one o'clock.

ABERGAVENNY.

It will interest your readers to know that for some time past a good work has been going on in Abergavenny (Mon.). The Lord has graciously visited our town during the past week, in blessing the efforts of his dear servant, Mr. Marack Day, of Leamington, who has been holding special evangelistic services in the Town-hall, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The young men turned out after business hours, and thoroughly worked the town with invitation-slips, which, backed up by a hearty personal appeal, were soon successful in drawing many to the meetings.

All the meetings were well attended, and at the close of each many were found in the inquiry-room broken down under the Spirit's power, anxiously seeking Christ as their Saviour. But the Sunday services were specially marked as a season of great refreshing to God's own children, and of mighty convincing and converting power with the word. The poor people were looked up by an evangelistic band from the back streets and courts of our town, and it might be truly said of them that the common people heard Him gladly. The hall, which is capable of holding 800, was packed in every part.

One young man fairly trembled under the Spirit's power until the light broke in upon his soul, and he lay at the Saviour's feet clothed and in his right mind.

Another, who had been a great drunkard, confessed, with tears in his eyes, that he was sick and tired of the drunkard's life, and trembled in view of the drunkard's end. The question was put to him, "Are you willing to make a sacrifice for the Saviour's sake?" and he said, with a firmness which meant reality, "I am, sir, and by God's help I will. I have," he continued, "been a dreadful fellow for the drink, but the word has been blessed to my soul to-night, and I want to find Christ." He was pointed to a seeking, waiting, loving Saviour, and before he left he was enabled to sing, with joy beaming in his countenance, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," etc.

There were several cases which were bright trophies of redeeming grace. Many anxious souls are trembling upon the border-line, ready to take the last step and enter the kingdom, with hearts full of bitter anguish on account of sin, waiting for a word from God's people, and woe be unto us if we go not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM. By Rev. J. A. WYLLIE, LL.D. Cassell.—Parts 5 and 6 of this profusely illustrated and excellent work have just reached us. We hope our readers will add this opportune publication to their family library.

THE FIRESIDE HYMN-BOOK. Compiled by MARIA BRAITHWAITE. Hamilton.—A small volume of selected and original poems, which contains a large number of the best hymns in the language.

MINISTERS WORKING TOGETHER WITH GOD, and other Sermons. By F. W. BOURNE. Hamilton.—A series of sound and evangelical discourses on foundation truths, of which the first was an official sermon delivered before the Bible Christian Conference of 1866.

DICK'S FIRST SCHOOL-DAYS. By Mrs. HENRY BARNARD. THREE LITTLE BROTHERS. By EMMA MARSHALL. Nisbet.—Two excellent illustrated stories for little boys.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PATHWAY OF POWER, amongst other excellent matter, has a second article on "The Laws of Life," by Mrs. Gordon, and one by Mrs. Pearsall Smith on "God's Side and Man's Side of the Higher Christian Life." Though we increasingly dislike the last-mentioned term, we commend these able and useful papers to our readers.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION MAGAZINE. Morgan and Scott. 1d.—This record of Evangelistic work among the people, chiefly in connection with the agencies under the control of our brother, Rev. W. Booth, contains much of present and practical interest. An excellent paper on "Dealing with anxious souls," by Mrs. Booth, opens the current number.
